TO THE READER.

I Gladly call to minde the time, when being yong, I heard, worthy Master PERKINS, so Preach in a great Assembly of Students, that he instructed them soundly in the Truth, stirred them up effectually to seeke after Godlinesse, made them fit for the kingdome of God; and by his owne example shewed them, what things they should chiefly intend, that they might promote true Religion, in the power of it, unto Gods glory, and others salvation:

And amongst other things which he Preached profitably, hee began at length to Teach, How with the tongue of the Learned one might speake a word in due season to him that is weary, out of Esai. 50. 4. by untying and explaining diligently, CASES OF CONSCIENCE (as they are called.) And the LORD found him so doing like a faithfull Servant. Yet left he many behinde him affected with that study; who by their godly Sermons (through Gods assistance) made it to runne, encrease, and be glorified throughout England.

My heart hath ever since been so set upon that Study, that I haue thought it worthy to be followed with all care, by all men. Since also (Gods good providence so disposing it) that I lived out of mine owne Countrey, I did obserue that in divers Churches, pure both for Doctrine and Order, this Practicall teaching was much wanting, and that this want was one of the chiefe causes of the great neglect, or carelesseesse in some duties which neerely concerne Godlinesse, and a Christian life. My minde was set on, as it were by violence, to try at least in private, whether I were able to prevaile with some young men that purpose the Ministry, more to apply their mindes to this kinde of handling of Divinity; whence no small fruit was to bee hoped for. Being afterwards called to a publike charge of Teaching in the Vniversitie, I esteemed nothing better, or more excellent, then to goe before those that were Students for the Ministrie, in this manner of teaching.

This part of Prophecie hath hitherto beene lesse practised in the Schooles of the Prophets, because our Captaines were necessarily inforced to fight alwaies in the front against the enemies to defend the Faith, and to purge the floore of the Church; So that they could not plant and water the Fields and Vineyards as they desired; as it useth to fall out in time of hotte warres. They thought with themselues in the meane while (as one of some note writes) If we haue that single and cleare eye of the Gospel, if in the house of our Heart the candle of pure Faith be set upon a Candlesticke, these small matters might easily be discussed. But experience hath taught at length, that through neglect of this husbandry, a famine of Godlinesse hath followed in many places, and out of that famine a grievous spiritual plague; insomuch that the counsell of Nehemiah had need be practised; namely, that every man should labour in this worke with one hand, holding in the other a Speare or a Dart, whereby he may repell the violence of the enemies. The same Experience hath likewise taught, that these small matters (if so be that so necessary things may bee so called) are despised with no lesse madnesse, then if one would suffer the fingers and toes of his hands and feete to bee cut off, as some small things, without which he hoped to walke and use his hands well enough. All things therefore being rightly weighed, I haue taken in hand (God also liking it, as I am perswaded) these instructions touching the power of Conscience. Not that I hope that any perfect thing, in this kinde, can come from me: (for there are more kinds of things this way, then that certaine answers can be given (by me at least) to every one) but that I might doe something, whereby the unlearned, and such as are destitute of better helpe, might somewhat be helped; and that the more learned might bee excited to set forth some more perfect and exact thing. Of which duty the godly, learned, graue ancient Preachers are properly the Debtors, whose dayly labour it is to deale with the Consciences of men; who through their experience haue learned much better, what those questions are, in which the Conscience useth most to doubt, and out of what grounds they may be best unfolded; then can easily be vnderstood by one that liues privately in an Academicall profession. And indeede, if such things were handled in the meetings of Preachers, according to the variety of Cases that fall out; and the more remarkeable decisions set downe in writing; the children of Israel should not neede to goe downe to the Philistims (that is, our Sudents to Popish Authors) to sharpen every man his Share, his Matrocke, or his Axe, or his weeding Hooke, as it fell out in the extreame necessity of Gods people, 1 Sam.

Furthermore if such as are addicted to the Ministry, were first instructed in these things, and were seriously tried science doth alwaies suppose an assent that is firme and settled.

3 By the definition of Conscience, it appeareth that Conscience is not a contemplatiue judgement, whereby truth is simply discerned from falsehood: but a practi-call judgement, by which, that which a man knoweth is particularly applyed to that which is either good or evill to him, to the end that it may be a rule within him to direct his will.

Whether Conscience be a Facultie, Habit, or Act.

Seeing that this name of judgement, is sometimes taken for a power and facultie, sometimes for an habit, sometimes for an act; this question ariseth, to which of all these Conscience is properly.

4 The most graue Divine, William Perkins, who onely of our Countrey men hath set foorth a peculiar Treatise of Conscience, doth place it among Faculties, and he doth so define it, as he putteth for the generall nature of it a part of the Understanding, that is to say, as he explaines himselfe, A naturall power or facultie. He giues this reason of his opinion, namely, because the act of Accusing, Comforting, Terrifying, &c. cannot bee ascribed to the Conscience, if it selfe were an act. But this reason is weake: because in the Scripture such kindes of effects are attributed to the thoughts themselves, which undoubtedly are acts. Rom. 2. 15. Their thoughts Accusing one another, or Excusing. The reason is, because things done, are the effects not onely of the Mover, but also of the motiō it selfe. Besides, Master Perkins maketh Conscience, Understanding, Opinion, Knowledge, Faith, and Prudence, to be of one kind or sort; but none would define these so, as that they should be taken for distinct faculties of the soule.

5 Some of the Schoolemen will have Conscience to be an habit : as Scotus, Bonaventure, Durand. Which though it might be granted of some part ; or of the principles of Conscience : yet it cannot be granted simply of all that which is signified by the name of Conscience ; for the onely office of an Habite, as it is an Habit, is, Inclinare ad prompte agendum, to make one doe a thing readily : but Conscience hath other operations, which belong properly to it, as to Accuse, Comfort, &c.

6 By Judgement therefore, in the definition of Conscience, (I understand most properly with the best Schoolemen) an act of practicall judgement, proceeding from the Vnderstanding by the power or meanes of a habit.

7 The acts of judgement are, either a simple apprehension, or a discourse. Whence it may be asked, to which of these belongs Conscience.

Judicium.
Noeticum.
Dianoeticum.
Quest.

It belongs to judgement discoursing, because it cannot doe its act of Accusing, Excusing, Comforting, unlesse it be through the meanes of some third argument, whose force appeareth onely in a Syllogisme, by that which is deduced and concluded out of it.

Ans.

8 The force and nature of Conscience therefore is contained in such a Syllogisme.

He that liues in sinne, shall dye :

I liue in sinne ;

Therefore, I shall dye.

Or thus.

Whosoever beleeueth in Christ, shall not dye but liue.

I beleue in Christ :

Therefore, I shall not dye but liue.

9 Conscience in regard of the Proposition is called a Light, and a Law ; in regard of the Assumption and conclusion a Witneſſe; but in regard of the assumption it is most fitly termed an Index, or a Booke, and in regard of the conclusion, most properly a Judge.

IO That which doth dictate or giue the proposition is called Syntereſis, by the Schoolemen Syndereſis. The assumption especially and peculiarly is called Syneidēſis, the conclusion is the Kriſis, or Iudgement.

II There be many other Syllogismes which belong to Conscience, as either they doe prooue the proposition of such a principall Syllogisme, or illustrate the conclusion it selfe: but in that Syllogisme alone is contained the whole nature of Conscience. The Proposition treateth of the Law, the Assumption of the fact or state, and the Conclusion of the relation arising from the fact or state, in regard of that Law; The Conclusion either pronounceth one guilty, or giveth spirituall peace and security.

CHAP. II.

Of the Syntereſis, or storehouse of Principles.

THat Syntereſis out of which the proposition of this syllogisme or the Law of Conscience is taken, is most properly a habit of the understanding, by which wee doe assent unto the principles of morall actions, that is, such actions as are our duty, because God hath willed, or commanded them; whence it hath the name in Greeke from conserving, for through the goodnesse of God, the knowledge of many things which wee ought to doe or shun, are still conserved in mans mind, even after his fall.

That exposition of Durand who dreames that the Greeke word Syntereſis signifies a Collection, is too harsh and absurd.

2 Because this Synteresis is an habit, therefore many doe call Conscience, an habit : but it is onely the principle of conscience, neither doth it make up any part of conscience, but only as conscience is in its exercise.

3 This Synteresis is termed a naturall habit in respect of the light, whereby the understanding of man is fitted to give assent unto Naturall principles ; it is likewise called an acquired habit, in regard of the Species, or of the fuller understanding, of that whereunto the understanding is naturally inabled, and can (as it were) understand presently.

4 This Synteresis differs onely in respect or apprehension from the Law of Nature, or from that Law of God, which is naturally written in the hearts of al men; for the law is the object, and Synteresis is the object apprehended, or the apprehension of the object.

5 This Synteresis may for a time be hindred from acting, but cannot be utterly extinguished or lost. Hence it is that no man is so desperately wicked as to be void of all Conscience.

6 To Synteresis being taken after a large sense, ought to be referred, not onely generall conclusions touching right or Law, which are deduced by good consequence out of naturall principles, but likewise all practicall truths, whereunto wee give a firme assent, through the revelation wee have by faith.

7 From hence ariseth the distinction of Conscience into that which is Naturall, and that which is Inlightened. Naturall Conscience is that which acknowledgeth for law the principles of nature, and the conclusions arising from them. Inlightened is that which doth beside those, acknowledge whatsoever is prescribed in the Scriptures. The Scripture sometimes speaketh of this last : as Rom. 6. 3. and sometimes of the other as

I Cor : 6 : 8.

8 From hence it appeareth that the perfect and only rule of Conscience is the revealed will of God, whereby a mans duty is both showne and commanded. For Synteresis in a more large sence consisteth, partly of morall principles that are naturally in us, together with their conclusions; and partly, of those which God besides them hath enjoyned. But the revealed will of God whereby man knowes his duty, containeth both these.

9 Hence it is that the Law of God onely doth bind the Conscience of man. By the Law of God wee understand that revealed will of God, whereof we haue made mention: viz. as it doth also containe those things which are commanded in the Gospell.

10 To binde (in this morall sence) is to haue such an authority, as the Conscience ought to submit it selfe unto : And it were a sinne to doe any thing contrary to it.

11 Hence it is, that though men be bound in Conscience by God to observe in due and iust circumstances the lawes of men, yet the same lawes of men so far as they are mans lawes, doe not bind the Conscience.

12 The Conscience is immediatly subject to God, and his will, and therefore it cannot submit it selfe unto any creature without Idolatry.

13 God onely knowes the inward workings of the Conscience; he therefore onely can prescribe a law unto it, or bind it by one.

14 God onely can punish the Conscience when it sinneth; he therefore onely can forbid any thing to it.

15 Even a promise (which in it selfe is sacred) though science. ;

Why mens laws doe not bind the Conscience.

though it be confirmed by an oath: as it is an act of man doth not properly bind the Conscience, for the former reasons; though men are bound in conscience by God to a strickt and faithfull keeping of them. For as it hath beene said before of the lawes of men, it may also in some sort be affirmed of all covenants and other conditions, which being made, a man is bound to keep out of Conscience to God; as for example, the sicke person is bound in Conscience to obey the counsell of Phisicians for his health: But the receipts prescribed by Phisicians, doe not binde the Conscience. So againe, Parents and Children are bound to mutuall duties; he that hath received a benefit is bound to shew himselfe thankfull, (and the like may be said of many other things) yet none of these, either Parent, Benefactor, relation, or benefit, doe of themselues binde the Conscience, but the will of God in them.

CHAP. III.

Of the Office of Conscience.

THE office of Conscience, (if we speake with respect to the Synteresis or Lawes of it,) is one in Necessary things; Another in things of middle and indifferent nature. In necessary things Conscience hath two acts. 1. To binde, 2. To inforce to practise.

2 Conscience bindeth according as it is informed of the will of God: for in it selfe it hath the power of a will of God, and so stands in the place of God himselfe.

The acts of Conscience above things necessary.

3 Gods will as it is understood, or may be understood, binds the Conscience to assent; As it is acknowledged and received by Conscience, it binds the whole whole man to obey and doe it presently.

4 Conscience bindeth a man so straitly that the command of no creature can free a man from it.

5 Hence man, as he maketh Conscience of the will of God commanding him some duty, is in that regard called a Debtor, Rom: 1 14. a servant, Rom 6. 16. is said to be bound, Acts 20. 22. constrained, 2. Cor. 5. 14. to have a necessity laid upon him. 1 Cor. 9. 16. so that he cannot doe otherwise. Acts 4. 20.

6 Conscience inforceth to obedience by vertue of this its act of Binding. For that is to the will an impulsive cause to make it carry it selfe conscientiously.

7 This inforcement is signified in the fore-named places and phrases : the strength and power thereof is declared, Ier. 20. 9. Wherefore I thought from henceforth not to speake of him, nor to preach any more in his name, but the word of the Lord, was a very Burning fire in my heart, and in my bones : Amos. 3. 8. The Lion hath roared, who will not be afraid? the Lord hath spoken who can but Prophecy? Acts. 17. 16. his spirit was stirred in him.

8 If there be a constant disposition of will in a man consenting to this instigation of Conscience, they doe together make up a Conscience morally good.

9 In Indifferent things the Actions and Duties of Conscience are likewise two. 1. To discern. 2. To Direct.

The acts of Conscience about indifferent things.

The discerning of Conscience.

10 To Discerne is to shew and declare the differences of things what is necessarie, what is free, what is lawfull, and what is unlawfull.

The direction of Conscience.

11 To Direct is with regard had to circumstances, to order lawfull actions unto a good end.

12 The ends which are alwayes to be aimed at, even in in indifferent things also, are the Glory of God, the Edifying of our Neighbour, and the Helpe of our necessarie Actions.

13 The power of this direction is so great, that it makes an action to be good, which in its owne nature is but indifferent; as on the other side, not onely an evill direction, but the want of a good direction, makes the same action to be bad.

CHAP. IV.

Of an erroneous Conscience.

Touching this doctrine, of the first acts and offices of Conscience, divers questions are moved, which being of great weight and moment, for the directing of our Actions aright throughout our whole life, ought of necessitie to bee heere expedited, though briefly.

Quest. The first question is, Whether an erroneous Conscience doth bind?

Ans. TO unfold this question rightly, these five things are briefly to be opened: 1. What an erroneous Conscience is. 2. About what things it is conversant. 3. Whence the error of Conscience commeth. 4. The generall differences of these errors. 5. The severall waies of binding.

1 An erroneous Conscience is either opposed privatively to a good Conscience, so it comprehendeth every Conscience that judgeth not rightly when it ought, even the doubtfull and scrupulous Conscience also: or positively, so it signifieth onely that Conscience, that judgeth otherwise then the thing is. This kinde of erroneous Conscience, is distinguished from a doubting and scrupulous Conscience, by the firme assent it giveth, though it erreth in giving it. In this question we speake of a Conscience positiuely erring.

2 There are some principles so cleare, and written in the hearts of all men, that they cannot erre to obey and practise them : such as this is, That God ought to be loved; Perjurie ought to be eschewed: no mans Conscience can erre in such like things as these, or doe them against Conscience. A man cannot loue God against his Conscience, &c. Conscience therefore doth erre properly about conclusions that are gathered from such principles.

The cause of the error of Conscience.

3 The error of Conscience comes, either because that the particular conclusions are not rightly drawne out of the generall principles : Or because those things which God in the Scripture hath commanded us to beleue, are not sufficiently understood : Or finally, because the assent of Faith is not given to those things which ought to be beleued, though they bee understood. The cause of this (besides Gods secret judgments) is either the not considering of those things which ought to be considered, or some evill disposition, which either keeps the minde from due inquirie, or averts it from judging rightly.

Error Facti et Iuris.

4 The error of Conscience is either about the Act, or the rule of it. The error which is about the rule, is either after the action done, or before it. The error about the rule before the action be done, consists, Either in that it judgeth that to be lawfull, which is unlawfull; Or in that it judgeth that to be unlawfull, which is lawfull; Or in that it judgeth that to bee bounden duety, which either is unlawfull, or but lawfull.

Obigare & Ligare.

5 To binde to a thing, and to binde, are distinguished shed by some; Conscience is said to bind to a thing (Obligare) when its not onely a sinne to doe any thing against it, but also not to doe according to it. Conscience is said to bind (Ligare) when one cannot lawfully doe a thing, whilst he maketh such a Conscience of it. One shall sinne in doing against it, and sinne though he doe according to it. The sense and meaning of this distinction is to be approved; as for the termes of it, let the Authors thereof answer.

To binde to a thing, (Obligare) is by some in regard of the object, or thing bound to, distinguished thus. One is either bound to doe according to Conscience erring, or to lay aside that Conscience. But this distinction is not exact, because Conscience bindeth not, but so farre as it doth dictate, or declare a thing: now no Conscience while it erreth doth declare, that the error thereof is to be left, Or that it selfe is not to be regarded, because it is erroneous.

Others put a difference betweene that Obligation, whereby one is tied to doe what Conscience commandeth, and that wherby one is tied not to do the contrary. But neither is this distinction alwaies good. For if a mans Conscience told him he might lie to saue his life, he must either lye, or of necessitie goe against his Conscience.

6 Out of these grounds the question may bee thus answered: First, conscience, though erroneous, bindes alwaies so, that hee that doth against it, sinneth. The reason is, because he that doth against conscience, doth against Gods will: though not materially, and truly; yet formally, and by interpretation: because what the conscience doth declare, it declareth as Gods will. As for example.

The Conscience
erring bindes.

He that useth a private man contumeliously; taking him for the King, & not to be a private man, he is interpreted and judged to haue done it to the King himself; so likewise, he that contemneth Conscience, contemneth God himselfe; because that which Conscience doth dictate, is supposed to be the will of God. Hence it is that he alwaies sinneth who doth any thing against Conscience: but if the conscience doth not erre, but the thing is as erroneous conscience supposeth, then he sinneth doubly. First, in doing that which is ill in it selfe, and secondly, in doing it after an evill manner: evill it is in its owne nature, and evill because of the despising of conscience: but if the conscience doth erre, that which it doth is not evill, but it doth it after an evill manner; so that the evill is onely this, namely, the contempt of Conscience.

Why he alwayes
sinneth who goes against his Conscience?

Error of Conscience is sometimes blamelesse: sometimes worthy of blame.

7 The error of conscience which is about an action (that is, the error which is about the object or matter, about which an action ought to be exercised) is either unvoluntary and blamelesse, or voluntary and worthy of blame. If it be unvoluntary and blamelesse, then conscience binds to do a thing as much, as if it did not erre. For example, If a man should verily beleue something to be his owne, which is an other mans, he may, and ought in conscience to make use of it as his owne. If one doe verily beleue hee is his Prince, that is in truth a Tyrant; or that he is a lawfull Magistrate, who indeed usurpes the title; he is bound to yeeld due obedience unto him. We haue an example hereof in Iacob that went in to Leah that was none of his wife, whom he verily thought was his wife Rachel.

8 If the error be voluntary, then it is to be judged of, as an error is which is of the law or rule.

9 Conscience erring touching the Lawe after the fact, (in beleeving that which it hath done well, to be sinne; or contrariwise;) hath no power to binde in regard of that action which is past : because binding and obliging haue ever a regard to future actions : and a morall action (as the will it selfe) is alwaies guided and informed by a foregoing apprehension, and not by that which followes after. Hence no action is made better or worse, for that conscience which is after it. Yet doth this conscience so farre binde (through occasion of that which is done) that one cannot lawfully goe on to doe the like againe, so long as he hath such a conscience: viz. That hee hath sinned (though he hath not) in doing so before.

10 Conscience through error, judging that to be lawfull which is unlawfull; as that it is lawfull for one to lie, to saue his owne, or his neighbours life; bindes indeed, but doth not binde to doe so. It bindes; because he that hath such a conscience, can neither lie, nor abstaine from lying, without sinne. Hee cannot lie, because this is simply unlawfull. Hee cannot abstaine from lying, with such a conscience, because such manner of forbearance is forbidden by God, though forbearing it selfe bee commanded: for God requires not only that we doe good, and abstaine from doing evill; but likewise that wee performe both these with a good conscience, and not with a bad one. Such a conscience doth not binde to doe what it saith. First, because their is no obligation to unlawful things. Secondly, because Conscience bindeth not to doe, but by vertue of some command of God; but such a conscience is not grounded upon any command: for the Law of God can neither incline nor bind any man to

finne. Thirdly, because this error is alwaies a sinne, but a sinne doth not bind to practise it. Fourthly, because such a Conscience hath never so sure a ground, as that there needeth not further examination and inquiry into things. Fifthly, because man is bound to lay downe such a conscience; for although that be not exactly enough spoken which some doe affirme, namely, That such a Conscience bindeth a man to lay downe it selfe; yet it is most certaine, that a man is tied to lay downe such an erroneous Conscience, for it is a part of that old man, whom we are commanded to put off, Ephes. 4. 22.

11 Conscience iudging that which is lawfull to be unlawfull, bindeth to abstaine from the practise and use of it. Rom. 14. 23. The reason is, because one may abstaine from lawfull things without sinne.

12 conscience iudging that to be bounden duty which is unlawfull, binds, but not to the practise of it, for the reasons set downe in the ninth Thesis.

13 conscience Iudging that to be bounden duty which is onely lawfull, bindeth to the practise of it; as for example, If any mans conscience tell him that it is necessary to uncover his hands alwaies when he prayes publicquely; He must pray so, because lawfull things may be observed constantly without sinne.

Object. If an erroneous conscience doth so binde that we may neither foilow, nor not follow it without sinne, then there lies a kind of necessity of sinning on those that do thus erre, which cannot stand with the equity of Gods Law.

Answer. This necessity of sinning when one is entangled by his owne erroneous conscience, is not the same both wayes: viz. whether one do, or do not, according ding to conscience; for if one do according to his erring conscience, the sin is in the action done; If he doe what is not according to it, the sin is in the manner of doing.

2 It is not an absolute necessity, but upon supposition; namely, if he keepe still such a conscience, which he both may, and ought to lay downe.

3 This necessity doth not flow from the nature of Gods law, but is contracted and continued through mans sin, for no man is thus intangled without his owne fault.

Quest. Whether is it a greater sinne to doe against such an erroneous conscience, or to doe according to it.

Whether it be a greater sinne to doe with, or against an erroneous Conscience.

Ans. We ought to iudge of the greatnesse of sin according to the quality of the thing which is to be done or omitted, as it is in its owne nature, and as it is apprehended by us. If any man through error of conscience should hold it to be an unlawfull thing to goe to the Church, and serue God there (which otherwise he is tyed to doe) because he knowes the Preacher to be a lewd and naughty man, and thinks that he shall be partaker with him in his wickednesse; his sinne is greater in staying away, then if he were present there: because it is a greater sinne, to neglect Gods service, then to communicate with an others personall wickednesse in that service. But if he should thinke it unlawfull to be present at holy duties for Idolatry, which he iudgeth will be committed there, he should sinne more hainously if he should be present there: because the sinne of Idolatry, is greater then a neglect of true worship. In the first instance; he sins more that followes his conscience, then he that doth against it; but in this, his sinne is greater that doth contrary to it:

it : No certaine and generall rule therefore can bee set downe in this matter.

CHAP. V.

Of a surmising and doubting Conscience.

Opinante.
is?

Quest. I. WHETHER a man may content himselfe with a doubting Conscience?

Answ. For the unfolding of this question, it is to be noted, that Opinion sometimes signifies a certaine and settled judgement without all doubting. A certaine judgement nor arising from Sense, Knowledge, or true Faith, but Reason. Sometimes it is taken more strictly; For that judgement whereby indeede we assent to the truth of a thing, but not without suspicion, feare, or doubting of its being otherwise.

Upon this distinction, I answer: First, in such things as are necessarie to salvation, and Gods worship, no opinion can be sufficient, though it haue never so great certainty of reason; because Faith is required to these, and Faith takes onely the infallible word of God.

2 In such things which are more remote from their principles, diligent care is to be had, that we also get a certaine perswasion, or beliefe of them, out of the Scriptures; but if that cannot be obtained, it is lawfull in our actions to follow some such opinion, as is certaine and tried by the rule of Scripture.

3 Using also all diligence to bee certaine (though we be not) it is lawfull in many things to follow that opinion, which is most probable.

4 It is never lawfull to doe against our owne opinion, whether it be certaine, or probable, for respect to other mens authority.

5 No man can at the same time haue two contrary probable opinions, concerning the same thing; so as he may lawfully leaue the one, and follow the other.

Quest. 2 What shall one doe when his Conscience is doubtfull?

Answ. For the declaration of this question, wee must obserue: First, Conscience is said to be doubtfull in a large sense, as when the assent even of Faith, or Opinion preuaileth; yet there is some doubting joyned. But strictly, and properly, that Conscience is named doubting, which yeeldeth to neither part of the question in hand, but stickes and staggers betweene assent and dissent, not knowing which to doe.

Touching the first sort of doubting, it hath partly beene spoken in the former question, and shall partly be spoken of in the question following. Heere wee treat of that Conscience, which in a proper and strict sense, is called doubting.

Secondly, doubting is either Speculative, or Practical. Speculative is that, which is not immediately conversant about a practise or action: as when one doubteth, whether this or that thing be his or not. Practical, is that, which immediately is conversant about some particular action.

A speculative
practical doubt.

Answ. These things being laid downe, it is answered;

First, in all those doubts which doe any way belong to our practise, diligent enquiry is to be made, that we may clearly perceiue the truth and not doubt; because while the minde remains in doubt, the action must of necessity want that perfection which it would haue, if it were done with Knowledge, and certainty of judgement.

ment. For the more certaine our knowledge is, touching those things which we doe, the more confident we are in doing, and more ioyfull when wee haue done them.

2 Oft times it is lawful to do a thing, though a speculative doubt remaine, because he that doth so, doth not necessarily doe either against a doubting Conscience, nor without a perswaded Conscience; for notwithstanding that speculative doubt, he may assuredly conclude with himselfe; that, that which hee doth, ought to be done. As for example, A man possesseth a peice of ground lawfully, and begins to doubt whether it be his owne or not; yet if he know not, that it belongs to any other body, he may lawfully keepe the same still, because other things being considered, possession is a better ground to keepe it, then doubting is to leaue it.

3 It is not lawfull to doe any thing against a Practical doubt; that is, a doubt whether the thing to be done be lawfull: The reason is, 1. Because a man cannot doe it of faith, Rom. 14. 23. 2. Because, he that doth so, doth not sufficiently abhorre sinne: for willingly and wittingly he exposeth himselfe to the danger of sinning. 3. Because he is not fully enough addicted to Gods will, for as he that doth that willingly, whereof he doubts, whether it be acceptable to his friend or no, doth against the law of friendship; so he that doth that, whereof he doubts, whether it be acceptable to God or not; doth against the law of loue to God. 4. In things doubtfull, the safest way is to be chosen; but that is the safest part, which if we follow, it is certaine we shall not sinne. As for example, A man doubteth whether Vswry be lawfull or nor? the safest way is to abstaine; for herein is no danger of sinning.

Some

Some of the Philosophers had some knowledge of the equity of this rule, whose Iudgement thereof Tully relates, and approoves : Office : Lib. 1. Those giue good counsell (sayeth he) who forbid to doe any thing whereof one doubts, whether it be iust or uniuert: the equity thereof is apparant in it selfe, because Doubting imports, thought, or feare of being hurt.

CHAP VI.

Of a Scrupulous Conscience.

Quest. WHAT is to be done when the conscience is scrupulous ?

Answ. For the understanding of this question, wee must consider;

1 That a Scruple is a feare of the minde concerning its practise, which vexeth the conscience, as a little stone that cannot be discerned in a mans shooe, paineth his foote.

2 Every feare is not properly a Scruple, but that which ariseth from slight, or no arguments.

3 One is scrupulous either in examining what hee hath done, or in ordering what he is to doe.

4 Scruples doe arise, ( God so ordaining ) to the end he may either punish, or try men : sometimes out of the suggestion of the Devill, somtimes from want of knowledge, sometimes from Melancholy, or some such like constitution of body; sometimes from the society of scrupulous men.

5 A Scrupulous conscience differs from a Doubtfull one, in this, that a Doubtfull conscience doth assent to neither part of the question; but the scrupulous conscience doth assent to one, but is sollicited to the other part, by a kinde of feare.

These things being set downe, it is answered to the question. 1. (God being instantly called unto for grace,) one must labour dilligently to remooue these scruples, which reason can take away by due triall of the grounds of them. For then is the conscience most quiet, when it hath most certaine knowledge. 2 It helpeth much (if it may be conveniently) that the thinking upon those things be shunned, from which scruples may rise; for the fancy being once stirred, many thoughts arise, which cannot be suppressed againe, without greate difficulty. As we see in Tyles, that are linked together in order, if one happen to fall downe, the rest will follow: and from hence are scruples multiplied in timorous consciences.

3 Many scruples when they cannot well be taken away by some contrary reason, ought to be laid downe as it were by violence, refusing to thinke or consider of them. For so long as scruples are not actually applied, they are not troublesome: And some be so troublesome that the weaker and more unskilfull sort, can by no other meanes be ridd of them. The bending of the mind attentiuely to remooue a scruple by reason, doth often either ingender or encrease a scruple: as for example, All people know that the name of God ought to be called upon dayly: yet one may bee so vexed with impious thoughts, that this scruple may arise in a man, whether he ought to pray or not? Here it is not alwayes a safe way to examine these thoughts, nor yet to dispute about this question long, but to throw away this feare, as it were with violence, and to fall upon the duty of prayer so well as one can. 4 If they cannot be so removed, but that they doe still molest, it is lawfull, and the best course, to do a thing against against such scruples. As for example, If there be any man that is so molested through the consideration of his unworthinesse, that he dare scarce be so bold as to come to the Lords Table, though he finde in himselfe true Faith and Repentance; he may and ought notwithstanding this scruple come to the Lords Supper. Neither is this to doe against Conscience, but according to Conscience. For a scruple is a rash feare and without any ground, and so cannot binde to doe according to it; yea through custome of doing against such like scruples, Conscience it selfe is made more strong and settled.

CHAP. VII.

Of the attention of Conscience to its Facts.

Hitherto we have spoken of that Synteresis, or Proposition, whence Conscience telleth what is Law. Now follows the second part of the judgement, whereby a mans conscience bears witness of his fact according to that Law. By reason of this act Conscience is named a witnesse, and in the common Proverbe, a thousand witnesses: It is likewise called a Booke, Revel. 20. 12. because it is left written in mans minde, at it were in a register, what he hath done, and with what intent, and at length is read and spoken of by Conscience.

The Assumption of that practicall Syllogisme wherein Conscience consists, is nothing else, but the recognizing, or considering of our action, or estate, as it hath respect to that Law which Conscience giveth. For the better understanding of the nature hereof, some things must bee made cleare concerning the action which is recognized; and some things concerning the recognizing it selfe.

The action is either agreeable to that which Conscience teacheth, or is contrary to it.

The dictate of Conscience, whereunto an action is to be conformed, doth sometime goe before and accompany the action, and sometimes follow it. Against the dictate of Conscience that goeth before, or accompanieth the action, we haue an example in those, of whom the Apostle speakes, Rom. 1. 32. Who knowing the Judgement of God, that they which commit such things are worthy of death, not onely doe the same, but haue pleasure in them that doe them. Wee haue an example of an action committed against the judgement of Conscience, following the fact, in those Iewes which put Christ to death through ignorance, Acts 3. 17. 1 Cor. 2. 8. yet being afterwards better taught, they judged far otherwaies of their fact, then when they did commit it, Acts 3. 37.

How a man sins
science.

Quest. From hence ariseth a hard question, how a man can do any thing against the dictate of Conscience which goeth before, or accompanieth his action? the Question ariseth thus.

The Will, as it seemes to many, cannot will or nill any thing, unlesse Reason haue first iudged it to bee willed or nilled; neither can it choose but follow the last practicall judgement, and doe that which Reason doth dictate to be done: and by consequent, the Will cannot moue against the determination of Conscience.

Answ. For the unfolding of this matter, these conclusions are to be laid downe. It is so cleare that no man can question it,

I. That many both may doe, and doe against Conscience, as it is an habite, or * Summary of Principles: and and in so doing, they doe in some sense, goe against Conscience.

2. Against Conscience as it is an act, all those doe, who do any thing against that Iudgement which they had actually, and yet haue virtually or in the principle, though actually they judge not as they haue done formerly.

3. The Will cannot will, desire, choose, or follow after any thing, without a speculative apprehension of it, because the object of the will is knowne Good. No man was ever knowne to desire what hee no waies knew.

4. A bare and simple apprehension of the object, without any practicall judgement, that forthwith it must be prosecuted, or avoided, may be sufficient to draw forth the Act of the Will. This appeareth sufficiently in Mad men, Infants, and in every undeliberate motion of the Will. The reason of this is, because a Good, apprehended or knowne, hath all those Conditions, which are required to the Object of the Will. The Will is as able about its Object, as the sensitue appetite is about its: But Sense is stirred up at the apprehension of its object, as the Eye at sight of Colours, the Eare at Sounds, &c.

5 The Will can at pleasure suspend its act about that which is apprehended and judged to be good, without any foregoing act of judgement, that it should doe so; for if to suspend an act, and to leaue of acting, an act of judgement, bee necessarily required; then to suspend that judgement, another judgement is requisite; and to suspend that, another; and so in infinitum.

6 The Will can turn away the understanding frō the consideration of any object, which at present it apprehendeth hendeth and judgeth to be good, to the consideration that it hath formerly apprehended and judged to be so. By reason of this commanding power, the Will is the first cause of unadvisednesse, and blame-worthy error in the Understanding. When the Will doth first begin, to draw away the understanding from that, which it hath judged to be good, it doth it, by its owne inclination without any judgement that it should doé so; otherwise these two judgements should bee together; namely, this ought to be followed, and this ought not, which were absurd.

7 The Will can moue it selfe, towards an object that is apprehended and iudged good for profit or pleasure in some respect, though reason iudge that it is not lawfull but sinfull. The reason is : 1. Because whatsoever good the understanding propoundeth to the will, in this life, it propoundeth it with a kind of indifferency of Iudgement, as not having any necessary connexion, with the universall good. Upon which the will is naturally set and determined. Hence it is that freedome or liberty in an action, is said to bee radically in the iudgement and reason. 2 Though the will bee determined by the understanding in regard of the specification or kinde of thing to be willed, because it willet nothing but that which the understanding hath first apprehended, yet in regard of exercise or act of willing, it mooveth both it selfe, and the understanding with the rest of the faculties. And hence it is that liberty is in the will formally, which should not be true, if it were necessarily determined by the understanding. 3 If the iudgement being right, the will could not but will aright; then before the first sinne of Angels and men, (which was in the Will) there must necessarily bee an error in the Vnderstanding : and if so, then the punishment of sinne should be before the first sinne ; for all Practicall error in the Vnderstanding, is either sinne, or the punishment of it. 4. If the Will doe necessarily follow the judgement of the understanding ; then there should (in proper speaking) be no sinne of malice, distinct from those sinnes, which are committed through ignorance, or passion. But it is manifest, that this kind of sinne is found in Devils, & likewise in some men. 5. If the Will doe necessarily follow the Vnderstanding, then in Regeneration the will it selfe neede not bee internally renewed by grace : for the inlightening of the Vnderstanding would be sufficient. But this is repugnant to Faith and godlinesse.
in

8 Though the Will doth not alwaies follow the Judgement, yet doth it ever follow that command whereto it is subject ; and that agreeth oftentimes with Iudgement. But this command though as touching the direction, it doth belong to the understanding ; yet as touching the power and efficacy, it belongeth to the Will. From hence we speake truely, and by the consent of all Nations, say, I will Will.

CHAP. VIII.

Of Conscience examining and reviewing actions.

WE are to treat next of that reviewing, which is conversant about our actions and state.

I I call this a Reviewing, rather than a knowledge, First, because a bare and naked knowledge is not sufficient for this act of Conscience, but things must bee weighed over and over. Secondly, because there is a knowledge which goeth before, and accompanieth the action, but this Reviewing followeth it.

2 This Reviewing is a reflect act of the Vnderstanding, whereby a man understandeth, and with iudgement, weigheth his owne actions with their circumstances. It is commonly called, Cōsideration, or meditatio on our wayes. It is called in the Scripture, A respect or beholding by the mind, Psal. 119. 15. Considering, Psal. 50. 22. Thinking, or thinking againe, Psal. 119. 59. Laying of the heart. Hag. 1. 5. a Saying in the heart, Ierem. 5. 24. Saying to the heart, Hos. 7. 2. Returning to the heart, 1 Kings 6. 47. a Laying to heart, Jer. 12. 11. Mal. 2. 2. and lastly, a Proving or examining of our selues, 2 Cor. 13. 5.

3 The cause of the Reviewing of our actions ought to be, First, a care to please God in all things. Secondly, a feare of sinning: For if we review our actions upon other grounds, it is not an act of Conscience: because it respecteth not the iudgement of God; which without doubt, it is necessary an act of Conscience should doe.

4 The manner of this Reviewing doth consist in these two things: First, that wee consider our owne actions, not materially onely, but formally also, that is, that we consider not onely, what we haue done, as it is an action, but likewise what, and after what manner it is done, as it is good or evill. As for example, It is not an Act of Conscience, for a man to thinke, whether he hath overcome his adversary, or not; but whether in so doing, he hath committed murder or not? whether it be just, or unjust, that he hath done? 2. The actions and the rule must be compared together. For as he that speaketh the truth, knoweth not that he speaketh keth truth ; unlesse he compares his speech with the thing it selfe : So hee that doth well or ill , cannot know the same, unlesse he compare the fact with its proper rule. The rule of this triall or judgement, must not be our natural reason, the custome of others, or the like ; but the Law, or revealed will of God ; For otherwise Gods judgement is not respected (to which Conscience looketh) but mens.

Natura

In ordine

5 The time which is to be allotted to this Reviewing; In regard of evill deedes, is in Scripture noted, sometimes to be before some threatning of God, 2 Sä. 24. 13. sometimes after a threatning, but before the Judgement be executed. Mal. 2. 2. and sometime after that God hath inflicted his Judgements, Hag. 1. 5. but the sooner we goe in hand with it, the more acceptable it is unto God, and more profitable it is unto us. Hence it is, that this Meditation of what we doe daily, is reckoned amongst the dayly exercises of the godly, Iob 1. 5.

6 Through want of this Reviewing, comes 1. Impenitencie in the greatest finnes, Isai 44. 18. Eccles. 4. 8. Presumption in greatest misery, Reu. 3. 17. and so great a Stupiditie, that those which know many other things, are altogether ignorant of themselves, and what they doe. Hence it is, that some after they haue sworne rashly, and are admonished of their sinne, almost with the same breath affirme with an oath, that they did not sweare.

7 The peculiar effects of this Reviewing of our waies, are 1. in regard of God, A right judgement of our waies. Ezek. 19. 25. and thankfulnessse. 2. In respect of our selves, Humility: and 3. In respect of others, Equity and Gentlenessse, Tit. 3. 3. 4.

CHAP. IX.

Of the application of the Law by Conscience to the person, upon the Reviewing of the Action.

1 THE third act of Conscience followeth, whereby the conclusion is gathered from the premises. This conclusion is an act of Conscience, whereby a man applyeth unto himselfe the Law of God, which concerneth either his Action or Condition.

2 This conclusion therefore dependeth partly on that generall Law, which is pronounced by the Synteresis, in the major Proposition; and partly, on that Reviewing of the action or condition which is contained in the minor Proposition. So that it gathereth together the strength of the former acts of Conscience, and maketh the Judgement thereof perfect.

3 Like as therefore Conscience is a Law in the major Proposition, Rom. 2. 14. and in the minor a Witness, Rom. 2. 15. So in this conclusion, Conscience is most properly a Judge, 1 Ioh. 3. 20. For as in the Proposition Gods Law is declared, and in the Assumption, the fact or condition of man is examined, according to that Law; So in the conclusion, the sentence concerning man is pronounced according to his fact, or condition, by vertue of the Law that hath beene declared.

4 It is well defined therefore by Application, because in such a conclusion, Gods Commandement and mans fact are mutually joyned together, and as it were linked with man, whilst both passe sentence on him.

5 This Application, though in its owne nature it follow the former acts of Conscience, like as the conclusion

The flowness of Conscience in

clusion of a syllogisme is sayd to follow necessarily from the premisses yet through mans fault it falleth out often, That Conscience doth not doe it for a time. Both propositions are granted, yet the cōclusion is not made : as for example; A man may in generall know and grant that every man that worshipping not God, is cursed : and may also be conscious to himselfe, that he is no true worshipper of God : and yet not Iudge himselfe accursed. One may also understand sufficiently, that God is ready to pardon him who repenteth of his sins; He may likewise haue witnes in himselfe of his owne repentance : yet cannot presently apply to himselfe pardon, and the mercy of God.

6 This Staying, or Hindring, the Conclusion is more usuall in passing Iudgement upon evill actions, but happeneth sometimes also in such, as are good.

7 Wee haue an example of the first sort in those Jewes of whom the Apostle speaketh. Rom. 2. 18. 20. 21. And in David himselfe. 2. Sam. 12. 5. 6. who knew well enough, what his most evill fact deserved by law, and likewise could not be ignorant of that which he had committed : but halted in the application of the conclusion.

8 An example of the latter kind, wee haue in all those Believers who repent truly, yet for a long time cannot apply Gods mercy to themselves. The causes why Sinners doe it not, are; 1 Because they doe not consider seriously enough, Gods law, and their owne facts; for the conclusion proceedeth from the power & efficacy of the premisses. 2. Because they haue flat contrary conclusions in their Iudgements to the Law of God. Deut. 29. 19. 3. Because they are afraid of, and avoid these conclusions of Conscience, as most opposite to themselves and their purposes, Ioh 3. 20. 4. Because they are carelesse and forgetfull of such things, Iam. I. 23. 25. From such like causes wicked men use to gather false conclusions, and deceiue themselves, Iam. I. 22.

9 The causes why beleevers, and godly men, oft-times doe not conclude for their owne consolation, are 1. Some prevailing temptation. 2. The remnants of unbeliefe, which remaine even in those that are regenerate. 3. The greatnesse of that mercy which they ought to apply unto themselves. And 4. the Conscience of their owne unworthinesse, especially after they haue committed some grievous sinne.

10 Because of this slownesse in men to conclude, and apply, there is a necessity laid on all Ministers, not onely to declare Gods will generally; but likewise so farre as they are able, to helpe, and further, both publicly and in private, the application of it, so farre as mens condition and consciences require.

CHAP. X.

Of the effects of this Application, in the Conscience it selfe.

1 FROM the conclusion of Conscience, some effects follow, according as the judgement thereof is.

2 These effects are either Acts of Conscience, which are virtually contained in the conclusion, or Affections and Acts of the Will, which arise from those acts of Conscience.

3 Amongst the acts of Conscience, some there be that respect that which is well done: some respect sin.

4 Those that respect what is well done, are Excusing, sing, Absolving, and Aprooving, Rom. 2. 15.

5 Excusing is an act of Conscience, whereby a man is freed from the guilt of sinne in what he hath done: For Excusing heere is not taken in that stricter sense, whereby it signifieth a lessening or extenuating of the fault, but in that sense which importeth, a perfect taking away of the fault, and guilt.

An Excusing
Conscience.

6 Absolution is an act of Conscience, whereby it pronounceth a man need not feare punishment for what he hath done.

Absolution of Conscience.

7 These two acts are tyed so closely and fast together with a bond that cannot be loosed, that they differ onely in our apprehension not really. For Excusing doth most properly respect guilt, and Absolution the punishment; but neither is the guilt taken away so long as the punishment remaineth; neither doth the guilt remaine, the punishment being once taken away.

8 Aprooving is an act of Conscience, pronouncing that a man in his action hath pleased God.

Approbation of Conscience.

9 Absolution and approbation differ from Excusing in this, that in Excusing, Conscience doth the part of the Law, and hath respect unto God, as he is a Iudge, before whose judgement seat it excuseth a man as a witnesse; but in Absolving and Aprooving, Conscience properly doth Gods part, and hath respect unto man, whom like a Iudge it absolveth, and approveth.

10 The acts of Conscience, which respect sinne, are Accusation, and Condemnation.

11 Accusation is an act of Conscience, convincing and proving a man to be neere unto punishment, because of his sinne.

Accusation.

12 Condemnation is an act of Conscience, judging a man that is guilty, to the punishment of eternal death Condemnation.

13 Accusation and Condemnation differ in the same degree and manner, that Excusing differeth from Absolution and Approoving.

14 Accusation and Condemnation sometimes follow presently upon the fact, as in David, 2 Sam. 24. 10. Sometimes a little while after it, as in Judas, Matt. 21. 3. Sometimes a long time after, as in Iosephs brethren, Gen. 42. 21. 22. For a man is not free from them by length of time, but by repentance onely.

CHAP XI.

Of the affections which arise from the judgement of Conscience.

1 THE first affection that riseth in the heart, from Excusing, Absolving, and Approoving of Conscience, is Joy, whereby a man taketh delight in that he hath done well, as in a true good that is come to him, Prov. 15. 15. 2 Cor. 1. 12. Now this Joy differeth much from laughter, and vaine joy: 1. Because it maketh the heart glad. 2. Because it is a serious disposition of the heart, not a light stirring of it. 3. Because it hath a good ground, and therefore growes stronger by right meditation. 4. Because it bringeth foorth found and good fruit. None of which things are to be found in common and ordinary laughter and joy, Eccles. 2. 2.

2 The second affection is Confidence, whereby the heart is settled and strengthened against the feare of evill, and the weake hope of good, Prov. 10. 9. & 28. For all miserie springeth from sin, and to those that do well, all good things are promised, 1 Tim. 4. 8.

3 The first affection rising from the accusation and condem-

Joy,

condemnation of Conscience, is Shame, whereby a sinner is displeas'd with himselfe, in and for that sinne hee hath done. For sinne alwaies changeth a man from better to worse, Gen. 5. 7. This shame if it be because of sinne, and if it make a man forsake it, it is one of the signes of repentance, Rom. 6. 21. as impudency in sinne, is alwaies a token of an impenitent and lost man.

4 The second affection is Sadnesse, or Sorrow, whereby the heart is troubled, because of the evill that is come upon it, 1 Sam. 25. 31. Acts 2. 37. For the accusing and condemning of Conscience, doth not onely make the sinne, and the guilt thereof to be in a manner present, but likewise the punishment.

5 The third affection is Feare, whereby the heart flyeth from the evill that hangeth over it, and from God himselfe, as from a severe Iudge, Gen. 3. 10. Prov. 28. 1. Revel. 6. 16. because the fulnesse of misery is expected. The great degrees of this feare, are called Trembling and Horror.

6 The fourth affection is Dispaire, whereby the Soule casts away all hope of escaping, Heb. 10. 27.

7 The fifth and last, is Anguish and vexation of spirit, because of the misery, which lyeth on it. This is that spirituall worme, that perpetually tormenteth the damned soules in hell. Mark. 9. 44. Jfai. 66. 24.

CHAP. XII.

Of a good Conscience.

Hitherto we haue spoken of the nature of Conscience, according as it was laid downe in the definition: Now followeth the distribution of Conscience, according to its adjuncts.

1 Conscience is either good or evil :

Quoad honestatem.

Conscience honestly good.

2 Conscience may be called good, either for its honesty and integrity, or for its quietness and peace.

3 That Conscience is honestly good, whose judgement is Right and Powerfull.

3. Things make
nest.

4 That the Conscience therefore be honestly good, it is required: 1. That it uprightly and sincerely judge that thing to be good, which God judgeth so; and that to be evil, which God judgeth evil. This uprightness must first be in the judgement, of what is to be done, which belongeth to the major Proposition; and 2. in the judgement of what hath been done, which belongs to the minor.

5 To a Conscience honestly good, its 3. required that it excuse, absolve, and approve a man in what is well done; and accuse and condemne him, for what is evil.

6 Concerning the first office, which consisteth in Excusing, Absolving, and Approving, there is no controverſie amongst Divines: But of the second, which consisteth in Accusing and Condemning, some doubt, and thinke that the goodness of Conscience doth no waies consist therein, but in Excusing onely.

7 They bring two reasons: 1. Because Adams conscience by creation, did onely Excuse, and not accuse: 2. Because a good Conscience is troubled and wounded when sinne is committed, and occasion is ministred to accuse. But the first reason is not good; because though Conscience in state of Innocency, did not accuse actually, yet had it a power to accuse, if there had beene occasion. Neither could the Conscience be more blamed for accusing and condemning justly, then the Law selfe, and the chiefe Judge, who did so after sin had once entred, and not before.

8 So farre is the just Accusation of Conscience from being to be blamed, that Sinners haue most need of it, as the onely way to make them repent them of the finnes which they haue committed. For to the end a Sinner may escape Gods judgement, hee must judge himselfe: that is, doe justice and judgement upon himselfe, as in Gods roome, whom he hath offended, 1 Cor. 11. 31. He doth this, by pleading Gods cause against himselfe, that is, by accusing himselfe, witnessing, alleging, and confessing, or by acknowledging Gods Law against himselfe, by revealing the secrets of his heart, and his hidden filthinesse, to his owne ignominy and shame. Then by condemning himselfe, that is, by declaring what torment and punishment God may justly inflict upon him; or by Proclaming of himselfe guilty of everlasting death. Unto this judgement of Conscience, stirring up futable affections; if God of his great mercy adde a change of minde, with an appealing by Faith to the Iudgement Seat of Gods mercy in Christ; then is that true (which some use to say) that the Judgement of repentance maketh voide the judgement of punishment; that the accusation, witnessing, and condemnation to wrath to come, are prevented by these Actions which supply there roomes; Yea, that God himselfe, in Christ shall be an Advocate, a Witnesse, and Judge; for those that haue pleaded against themselves, in the court of Conscience by repentance.

9 Neither are we bound onely to this Accusation and condemnation of our selues, as to a meanes of Salvation, but by naturall justice also. For if wee sinne against a man, wee ought to doe him justice on our selues, by Accusing, Condemning, and Acknowledging our offence ; much more then are we bound to doe this to God. Besides, we are related to God as his servants, by which we are bound to take his part in all controversies, debates, or quarrells, that he hath against sinne, and chiefly against our owne sinne, which doth us most hurt, and against which we are able to doe much more, then against other mens. Adde to these, the consideration of the equity of it, if we be bound (when it will be no hurt to us) to assist a brother, in any of his lawfull and iust suits, or judgements, either in appearing as a Witnesse, or as an Accuser, in his behalfe : how much more are we bound to do the same for God ? for without comparison, each person is more bound to sticke close to God, then to himselfe : and to assist God by accusing, testifying, judging, though it be in the controversy which he hath against himselfe.

Guliel. Tarif.

These particular illustrations (which upon another occasion are propounded and urged by G. P.) I haue thought good to relate, both for the light w<sup>ch</sup> they giue to this present question, and for the excellent use, that they haue in exhortations to the practise of repentance.

10 The second reason (wherein the trouble of conscience upon accusation, was brought to prooue that an accusing Conscience, could not be good) is also of no strength : Because that trouble and wounding, is either the accusation it selfe, or an affection following it. The same Iudge that condemneth rightly and iustly, may, and useth to be sorrowfull; that he hath occasion to doe so: for he absolveth more willingly those that are good, then he condemneth malefactors.

11 To speake home to the Matter ; The act of Accusation followeth indeed from sinne, not as a sinne, but a punishment; Conscience therefore accusing, so farre as it accuseth rightly, is honestly good, though in respect of the trouble it bringeth, it useth to be called evill, as all other punishments are. It may also be called evill, because the ground of it is alwaies some sin committed.

12 Thirdly, that the Conscience be honestly good, it is requisite that by this upright judgement, it stirre up strongly to doe good, and draw backe strongly from that which is evill, Heb. 13. 18. but this cannot be done by Conscience alone, there must be also an honest disposition, and bent of the Will, answerable to the judgement of Conscience.

13 A Conscience peaceably good, is that, which Excuseth, Absolveth, Comforteth, Acts 24. 6. Hence also unto a good Conscience, in this respect, doe belong the affection of Ioy, Confidence, Security, and Freedom.

14 A Conscience that is both honestly and peaceably καθαρά. good, is that, which by the Apostle is called pure and καλή. cleane, 2 Tim. 1. 3. Beautiful, Heb. 13. 18. Without of- απρόσκα- fence, or not offended, which is the consolation and re- π π. joycing of the faithfull, 2 Cor. 1. 12. To keepe which they are content to suffer all sorts of trouble unjustly, 1 Pet. 2. 19.

15 Conscience since the fall, or after sinne, is made good againe : 1. By the blood of Christ applied through Faith, whereby the guilt, accusation, and condemnation of it, are taken away, Heb. 9. 13. 14. and 10.

How Conscience is made good.

22. 2. By the vertue of the same blood, in repentance and sanctification of the spirit, 1 Tim. 1. 5. Acts 15. 8. 9. whereby beleevers haue a settled and constant purpose to serue God. 3. By the witnesse of the Spirit, whereby we are assured of the grace of God, not onely for the present, but also for the continuance of it, to the doing of every good worke, Ephes. 1. 18. 14. Rom. 9. 5. & 1 Pet. 1. 5. 6.

16 A good Conscience is maintained by that exercise, whereof the Apostle speaketh, Acts 24. 16. Now this exercise doth chiefly consist in these things: 1. That the feare of God bee alwaies liuely and fresh in our hearts, Psal. 36. 2. For this maketh us looke what Gods judgement is, in all things, Psal. 119. 6. 2. That we meditate on Gods Law both day, and night, Psal. 1. 2. For by this the Major Proposition or Rule whereby Conscience judgeth, is established. 3. That we examine our owne waies with quicke and sharpe judgement, Psal. 4. 5. For this inferreth the application in the Minor Proposition. 4. That by dayly repentance and renewing of Faith, we wash off the filth that we contract, 1 Iohn 3. 3. For therein lyes the strength of the conclusion or judgement of Conscience.

CHAP. XIII.

Of a weake, and of a strong Conscience.

1 A Good Conscience admits of degrees, for which cause it is by the Apostle distinguished, into a weake and a strong Conscience, Rom. 15. 1.

2 A weake Conscience is that which is purged by unfained Faith, but is troubled with these imperfections, which all beleivers, for the most part, doe outgrow by time.

3 True Faith is supposed to be in a weake Conscience, for he that is weake, is a Brother, Rom. 14. 15. 21. not to be condemned or set at nought, vers. 10. One for whom Christ hath dyed, 1 Cor. 8. 11. This Conscience therefore being good, differeth in kind from that which is weake through malice, Presumption, or Superstition.

4 The imperfections wherewith this weake Conscience is diseased, are, 1. Lacke of knowledge, because as yet it understandeth not well what is lawfull and pure, 1 Cor. 8. 7. Rom. 14. 14. This weaknesse of Conscience, is called the weakenesse of Faith, Rom. 14. 1.

The imperfections of a weake Conscience.

5 The second imperfection which dependeth on the first, is in Affection, because it easily is made sorrowfull, and disquieted, when it seeth others doe that which it selfe approoveth not, Rom. 14. 15. Because of meat thy brother is grieved.

6 The third imperfection is in Iudgement, because it quickly Iudgeth and condemneth the liberty of others, 1. Cor. 10 29. Rom. 14. 3. 15. Why is my liberty iudged by an other mans Conscience? Let not him that eateth despise him that eateth not.

7 The fourth imperfection, is in the purpose and settlednes of heart, being easely drawne to what is evill. 1. Cor. 8. 10. For if any man see thee which hast knowledge, sit at meate in the Idols temple: shall not the Conscience of him which is weak, be Emboldned to eat those things, which are offered to Idols? From this, a man is most properly said to bee Offended, Scandalized, wounded, destroyed. Rom. 14. 21. 1 Cor. 8, 9. 12. Rom. 14. 15.

8 A strong Conscience, is that which is established in the truth. Rom. 14. 5. Perswaded in his owne minde. 2. Pet. 1. 12. Ye know and are established in the present truth.

9 This stability consisteth in knowledge, yet not so much in the clearnesse thereof, as in the certainty. 1. Cor. 8. 4. 7. Wee know that an Idoll is nothing in the world, but there is not in every man that knowledge, and they their Conscience being weake, is defiled. For certainly belongeth more to Faith, which wee are here to understand by Conscience, then Evidence or Clearenesse, which belongs to knowledge, taken in the proper sense. 2 In such an affection, whereby it is alwayes willing to beare with, and beare the infirmities of others. Rom. 15. 1. Wee which are strong ought to beare the infirmities of the weake. 3. In Iudging so, as that nothing be set before a brother, at which he may stumble or fall, Rom. 14. 13. but judge this rather, that no man put a stumbling block, or an occasion to fall in his brothers way. 4. In such a resolution and setlednesse of heart, whereby it is so strengthened in truth and godlineesse, that it cannot easily be remooved, Heb. 13. 9. It is a good thing, that the heart be established with grace.

CHAP. XIV.

Of an evill Conscience.

1 CONSCIENCE is said to be Evill, either because its Acts are sinnes, or because it brings trouble and sorrow.

2 A Conscience Evill because of sinne in its Acts, is that which giveth not a right and powerful judgement; such is the Conscience of all men that are unregenerated, for it is in men according as Originall corruption is. Of this a polluted Conscience is not the smallest part. Tit. 1. 15.

3 The first fault of an evill Conscience is Blindnes, whence it judgeth of Good and Evill no otherwise: then one that is bodily blinde useth to judge of colours: He calleth good evill, and evill good, Esai. 5. 10.

4 The second fault, is a kind of spirituall dulnesse, whence whence it neither stirreth up powerfully to that, which it seeth is good, nor draweth backe from that which it acknowledgeth evill, Rom. I. 18 Which withhold the truth in unrighteousnesse.

5 The third fault, is false-witnesse-bearing, which principally appeareth in Excusing, and Accusing falsely.

6 An Evill Conscience doth Excuse falsely, either when it doth not accuse where it ought, or absolveth and approoveth where it ought to accuse and condemne.

7 The former fault is esteemed as a piece of Religion, by the dangerous Sect of Libertines, who place their chiefe happinesse and perfection to haue the sense of sinne extinguished.

8 It prevaieth also in all those, who being free from great and grosse sinnes, doe seeme unto themselues to be as it were perfect, and not to be blamed for any sin, Luke 18. 20. Marke 10. 20. All these things haue I observed from my youth.

9 The second sort of Excusing falsely, when an evill Conscience approoveth, where it ought to condemne; is chiefly to be found in those that are superstitious. They think to be heard through their much babling. Ioh. 16. 2. The time commeth that whosoever killeth you, will thinke that he doth God service, Rom. 10. 2. I beare them record that they haue a zeale of God, but not according to knowledge.

10 A false Accusation of an evill conscience is, when it accuseth and condemneth, where it ought to excuse: viz. For well doing: Rom. 14. 22. Happy is he that condemneth not himselfe in that thing which he alloweth.

Conscience Evill, through trouble and sorrow is that, which accuseth and condemneth: 1 John 3. 20. If our heart condemne us.

13 This Conscience is honestly good, if it accuse iustly: it is sinnefully evill, if it doe it unjustly.

14 A Conscience evill through trouble, and honestly good, is to be found both in beleevers and unbeleevers. In such as beleeve not, it is a preparation unto true repentance and Faith. Acts 2, 3 7.

15 A Conscience Evill, both through trouble and sinne, is common also both to beleevers, and those who beleeve not. But in those that beleeue, there is a principle of grace, by strength whereof they are upholden, they wraastle and withstand, and by little and little are healed of it.

CHAP. XV.

Of divers degrees and sorts of an Evill Conscience.

1 AN Evill Conscience may bee distinguished into divers degrees: 1. In respect of defect, into a benumbed, stupid, and feared. 2. In respect of excesse, into a troubled and desperate one.

2 A benumbed Conscience is that, which is so dull and heavy in its Acts, that there followes no strong stirrings of heart after it; nothing to purpose comes of it. Those that haue such a conscience, are oppressed with a kind of spiritual sleepe, wherein the sense of conscience, is so bound, that it is no more moved, then a man that sleepeth is by his owne dreames.

3 This dulnesse appeareth, 1. In a dull or faint pricking on to good: We haue an example in Agrippa, Acts 26. 28. thou almost perswadest me.

A benumbed
Conscience.

4 It appeareth secondly in a dull accusation for the evill that is committed, we haue an example in Saul,
1 Sam. 24. 18.

5 The cause of this benumbednesse in many that are not apparantly wicked, is a certaine carnall security, which creepeth secretly upon them, from long peace and prosperity, Ier. 48. 11.

6 A stupide Conscience is that, which doth not its office in accusing and condemning, unlesse it bee for the greatest finnes, and when it is forced by most grievous Judgements. For like as men sicke of a Lethargie or Drowsinesse, are not wakened commonly, unlesse it be through some great noise: so likewise this Conscience is not mooved, unlesse it be by the thunder of Gods Judgements. Wee haue an example in Pharoah,

A stupide Conscience.

7 The cause of this stupidity is unbeleife, and custome in sinning, which taketh away the sense of it.

8 A seared or cauterized Conscience, is that which no waies can be mooved, no not by greatest finnes, 1. Tim. 4. 2. Which haue their Consciences seared with an hot Iron: This sort of Conscience is found chiefly in those, who after they haue been enlightened, against their Consciences, doe giue up themselues to a wicked life.

A cauterized Conscience.

9 In these the Synteresis it selfe, or Law of Conscience, hath its course stopped, & for time is in a manner extinguished, Iude. 10. Whatsoever they know naturally, as beastes which are without reason, in those things they corrupt themselues. This suppressing of the naturall practicall knowledge, which is ingrafted in all men, is by the Philosophers called απολίθωσις because such kind of men are changed as it were into stones, as in the Scripture they are said to have a hard and stony heart, by other Philosophers it is called θηριότης and θηριωδεία, because such men become altogether brutish. 2. Pet. 2. 12. Or rather put on the nature of the Divell. Ioh. 8. 44.

10 The signes of such a kinde of Conscience are,
1. If one reioyce in sinne. Prou. 2. 14. 2 If after he hath sinned he will not bee reformed, Prou. 27. 22. 3 If hee giue up himselfe to commit knowne sinne, with all his might striving to sinne more then others. Ephe. 4. 19.

11 Contrary to this evill Conscience, or hard heart, is a tender Conscience which is easily moved by the word of God, whereof wee haue an example in Iosiah. 2. Kings. 22. 19. Because thine heart did melt and thou hast humbled thy selfe before the Lord, when thou heardest what I spake.

12 A troubled Conscience, is that which accuseth in such a manner, that it suffereth not the Conscience to be at rest.

13 It bringeth with it an astonishing feare, and oppressing grieffe.

14 It is called in the Scripture, sadnesse, a casting downe, affliction, or disquieting of the minde, a broken spirit, Prou. 18. 14.

15 A troubled Conscience is sometimes honestly good: and sometime sinnefully evill.

16 Honestly good it is, when it accuseth justly. This is properly in those which yet beleue not in Christ: but happens sometimes to be in those, who haue true Faith.

17 In those which yet beleue not, the Conscience evill indeed through trouble, but honestly good, doth make

Si certat in se de-

science.

A troubled Conscience.

make this kinde of Syllogisme.

He that beleeveth not in Christ, is subject to the wrath of God:

But I beleeeue not in Christ:

Therefore, I am subject to the wrath of God.

This whole argument is to be granted; The onely way to pacifie such a Conscience is, to bring him that is so troubled, into another state, by true conversion and Faith. For then the Minor of that Syllogisme, which before was true, will be false, and may lawfully be denied.

18 In such as haue true Faith, After grievous sinnes, which waste the Conscience, the Conscience Evill through Trouble, but honestly good, maketh this kind of Syllogisme.

He that hath sinned grivously, and hath not duely repented of his sinne, cannot by true Faith finde comfort in God.

I am such a one.

Therefore, I cannot by true Faith comfort my selfe in God.

Here likewise must Conscience accusing be beleevd, and true Repentance be gotten, that he who is so troubled, may at length rightly deny that Assumption.

19 A troubled Conscience, Evill through fault, or faulty in being troubled, is most properly in those that are true beleevers. For although unbeleevers doe sinne most highly, in not seeking after the true remedy in Christ, when Conscience accuseth justly, (but either fall downe under the burden, or through hardnesse of heart keepe out trouble, or seeke ease from things that are most vaine, as it were from the leaves of the Figge tree) yet the sin properly is not in the judgement of conscience, or in conscience so judging them, but in the Conclusions, which are deduced and drawne from it.

20 The Conscience of Beleevers is sinfull, in being troubled, many wayes. In such a case the reasoning of Conscience is diligently to be examined. For the major or minor may, and ought alwaies to bee denied and confuted, that Conscience may bee healed. As it is in those Accusations which come from want of sense of Gods favour, from the sense of Gods wrath, from outward afflictions, from horrid temptations to sinne, and from divers kindes of finnes.

Conscience.

21 A Desperate Conscience is that which so accuseth and condemneth, that it taketh away not onely quietnes and peace, but hope also of any quietnesse, or remedy.

22 That manner of Despaire, that taketh away all such Hope as may come from our merits, or strength, is honestly good.

23 But that kinde of Despaire, which in this life taketh away all such hope as commeth from the free mercy of God, is not onely Evill in respect of trouble and vexation, but of sinne.

24 The Despaire of the damned, which utterly rooteth out all hope of remedy, is the bottomlesse pit of misery.

25 Hence it is, that a Desperate Conscience (fully representing all finnes, together with their exceeding great and unpardonable guilt, and Gods feareful wrath abiding upon Sinners, with the endlessse misery that followes thereon) is Gods most powerfull meanes to torment the Reprobate; like unto a worme, that most sharply biteth and gnaweth their hearts for ever: Mar. 9. 46. their Worme dyeth not.

26 To Trouble and Despaire; Full Peace, Tranquility, and the joy of a good Conscience are contrary: which properly riseth from perfect hope in God, whereby the unchangeable enjoyment of happinesse, is apprehended.

27 Hence it is, that a good Conscience, that is perfectly peaceable, and joyfull (as it representeth to the soule, a full deliverance from the Evil, both of sinne and punishment: Such a life to be led with God, as is without all trouble or end; consisting in union and communion with him in peace, and greatest joy) is the formall and essenti all happinesse of the Saints in the life to come: Matt. 25. 21. 23. Enter into thy Masters Ioy: Joh. 15. 11. That my Ioy might remaine in you, and that your Ioy might be full; 1 Pet. 1. 8. Rejoyce with Ioy unspeakable, and glorious.

COLLECTION OF THE FORMER Treatise, according as it was set foorth in a publike Disputation, to encourage and stirre up to the study of Practicall Divinity.

DIVINE POSITIONS concerning Conscience.

1 Knowledge puffeth up; Loue edifieth: But greatest conscience ought to be made of edifying the Conscience, 1 Cor. 8. 1. 10.

2 Conscience is a mans judgement of himselfe, according to Gods judgement of him, Isai. 5. 3.

3 There is a certaine inclination of the will, whereby it can naturally both stirre up the understanding to this kinde of judgement, and also follow it: This inclination by some is named Conscience, by others a part of Conscience, but not truely; For neither the name of Conscience, nor the acts thereof, which are mentioned in the Scriptures, import any other power or faculty, then the understanding, Rom. 2. 15.

4 Yet every act of understanding is not Conscience, but onely those which make up such a Practicall judgement, as was before handled in the second Position.

5 By Iudgement, is most properly meant the act of judging, and not the habit or faculty onely, Rom. 2. 15.

6 The whole nature of Conscience is contained in no other judgement, but what is Dianoëticall, or Discursiue; because Accusing, Excusing, Comforting, and such like acts of Conscience, cannot be, but by some middle or third argument, whose strength appears in a Syllogisme, onely by the consequence, Rom. 6. 11. The word translated, Reckon λογίζεσθε. your selfe, signifies Reason out.

7 The Major of that Syllogisme, wherein the whole judgement of Conscience is layd open, treateth alwaies of the Law, the Minor of the fact and state; and the Conclusion of the relation that ariseth from our fact or state, by reason of that Law; which is either guilt, or spirituall Ioy. For example, He that liveth in sinne, shall dye,

I live in sinne:

Therefore I shall dye.

Or thus, Whosoever beleeveth in Christ, shall not dye,
But I beleeeue in Christ:

Therefore I shall not dye, but live, Rom. 8. 13. 33.
34. 1 Ioh. 3. 19. 20.

8 Conscience in regard of the Major, is called a Law: in regard of the Minor and Conclusion, a Witnesse; but in regard of the Minor most properly, an Index, or Booke. and in regard of the Conclusion, most properly a Iudge, Rom. 2. 14. 15. Reu. 20. 12. 1 Ioh. 5. 10.

9 The Major is given by the Synteresis, which the Schoolemen call Synderesis: the Minor is peculiarly called Syncidesis, or Conscience, the Conclusion is the Kritic, it selfe, or Iudgement.

10 Synteresis is properly an intellectual habit, whereby we give our consent to the principles of morall actions. It differeth not therefore from the Law of nature which is naturally written in the hearts of all men: but in respect onely.

11 Though therefore Conscience may be hindred from working for a while, yet can it not bee fully extinguished or lost. No man is so desperatly wicked, as to bee without a Conscience altogether: No not the Libertines, who place their deadly perfection, in putting out the Conscience of sinne.

12 To this part of Conscience Synteresis being largely taken, belong all Practicall truthes whereof wee are perswaded; whether they be drawn out of naturall principles, by consequence, or communicated by Divine revelation.

13 Hence ariseth the distinction of a naturall and an inlightened Conscience. The Scripture sometimes doth appeale to this, as Rom. 6. 3. sometimes to that, as 1 Cor. 6. 9. and II. 14.

14 Hence the adequate or full rule of Conscience is the revealed will of God, which both declares and prescribes mans duty.

15 Conscience therefore is properly subject to Gods will and authority alone, Iam. 4. 12. Neither can it be subject to any creature, without Idolatry.

16 Hence also it is, that though men be bound in Conscience before God, to obey and keep the iust Lawes of men after a just manner, Rom. 13. 5. Yet those Lawes of men, as they are mens Lawes, doe not bind the Conscience.

17 Conscience so bindeth man, in al those things which it judgeth are his duty, by the will of God; that he cannot be free from it, by the authority of any creature, Act. 4. 19. In this respect it is, that he that knoweth Gods will, is said to be debtor, Rom. 1. 14. a servant, Ro. 6. 16. bound, Act. 20. 22. constrained, 2 Cor. 5. 14. to haue necessity laid upon him, 1 Cor. 9. 16. so that he cannot do otherwaies, Act. 3. 20

18 The power of Conscience is so great, that it ma-

keth an action, which in its owne nature is indifferent, to be either good or bad: and that which in its owne nature is good, to be evill: although it cannot make that become good, which is evill in its owne nature.

19 Yet no action is better or worse, for that Conscience that one hath after he hath done it.

20 An erroneous Conscience bindeth alwaies so far, that he that doth against the judgement thereof, sinneth. For formally, and by interpretation hee doth it against Gods will.

21 If the error of Conscience about the action (that is, the object or matter about which the action is) bee not sinnefull, the Conscience erring, binds as much as if it did not erre.

22 Conscience, through error, judging that to be lawfull, or necessary, which is unlawfull, doth so farre binde, as that a man sinnes, who doth contrary to it; and sinnes also, if he doe according to the direction of it.

23 Yet this necessity of sinning, wherein some are intangled, is not contrary to the equity of Gods Law: 1. Because the sinne is not the same on both handes: on the one hand a mans sinnes in doing what is unlawfull; and on the other, in doing it unlawfully: viz. without or against Conscience. 2. Because it is not an absolute necessity, but upon supposition onely, viz. if they keepe still such a Conscience, which they ought to lay downe, Ephes. 4. 22. 3. Because it doth not flow from the nature of the Law of God, but both is contracted and continued by mans sinne. For no man is thus intangled but by his owne fault.

24 Conscience judging that to be unlawfull, which is lawfull, bindeth to refraine from that lawfull thing, Rom. 14. 14. 15. He likewise that judgeth that to be necessary, which which is but lawfull, is bound to the doing of it: because a man may abstaine from lawfull things: and may also constantly practise them without sinning.

25 Nothing may bee done whereof the Conscience doubts, Rom. 14. 23.

26 Indoubtfull cases, the surest part is to bee chosen; now that is the surest part, in doing which, its sure there is no sinne.

27 It is lawfull, and the best sometimes, to doe against some scruple of Conscience.

28 The reviewing of our actions, or estate, as it respects the Law, which Conscience dictates, maketh up the minor of that practicall Syllogisme, which the Conscience maketh. It is called in Scripture, a beholding of the mind, Psal. 119. 15. Vnderstanding, Psal. 50. 22. A casting up ones waies, Psal. 119. 59. A laying of the heart, Hag. 1. 5. Asaying to the heart, or in the heart of them, Hose. 7. 2. A turning againe unto the heart, Ier. 12. 11. Mal. 2. 2. And lastly, a proving and examining of our selues; 2 Cor. 13. 5.

29 In the conclusion of that Syllogisme, a man applieth to himselfe the Law of God, which concerneth his Action or condition, and passeth sentence on himselfe: whence there followeth necessarily, either an Excusing, Absolving and Approbation; or an Accusation and Condemnation, with affections answerable to them, Rom. 2. 15.

30 Though this application in its owne nature follow the former acts of Conscience, as a conclusion doth the premises: yet through mans wickednesse, it falleth out oftentimes, that though the Major be fully and firmly acknowledged, and the Minor also in a sort; yet the Conclusion and Application is not made, Rom. 2. 18. 20. 21. 2 Sam. 12. 5. 6.

31 Hence it is, that a necessity lyes upon all faithfull Pastors, not onely to propound Gods will in generall, but according to their abilities, to helpe men, both in publike and private to apply it, according as their understandings, and consciences shall require, Rom. 12.7. Matt. 14.4.

32 A Conscience honestly good is, that which judgeth rightly and powerfully, Heb. 13.18. that which doth otherwise, is sinnefully Evill, Isai. 5.20. Rom. 1. 18.

33 A Conscience peaceably good, is that, which excuseth, absolveth, comforteth, Acts 24.16.

34 Conscience since the fall, is not both honestly and peaceably good, but by the sprinkling of the bloud of Christ Heb. 9.13.14. and 10.22. and the vertue of him in the sanctification of the Spirit, 1 Tim. 1.5. Act. 15.8.9.

35 A Conscience peaceably good may be sinnefully evill, and that which is evill through trouble and accuseth, may be honestly good.

36 A weake Conscience differeth in kinde from that which is acted, either by malice, or arrogance, or Superstition.

37 There is but this one way, to pacifie a Conscience troubled upon good grounds: to bring him that is troubled into such a state by true Faith and repentance, that the Minor of that Syllogisme which troubleth him, may upon good grounds become false, and proove such as may be lawfully denied.

38 When the Consciences of Beleevers are sinnefull in being troubled, the Major or Minor of that reasoning which caused the trouble, may alwaies be denied and confuted. And this is the onely way to heale such a Conscience.

Corollaries.

1 The greatest violation of Conscience is the greatest sinne.

2 The greatest anguish of Conscience is the greatest punishment.

3 That uncertainty of Gods favour, which the Papists hold, and that uncertainty of Persevering in grace, which others teach, is cleane contrarie to that solid joy, and strong confidence, which proceedeth from a Conscience truly good.

3 The interpretation of the Scriptures, or a judgement to discern Gods will for a mans selfe, in his owne Conscience, belongs to every man.

CASES THEREOF
The Second BOOKE.

In which those Cases are handled, which concerne the state of man.

CHAP. I.

Of a case of Conscience, and the state of man in generall.

Hitherto we have spoken of the Nature, now we are to intreate of the Cases of Conscience.

1.  Case of Conscience is a practi-call question, concerning which, the Conscience may make a doubt.

2. It is said to be a question, because it is not an axiome or proposition that is manifest of it selfe, but hath need of illustration and prooffe, by some third argument.

3. It is a practi-call question, because of the doubts which doe not immediately belong to practise, doe not immedatly

mediatly pertaine to the judgement and act of Conscience, which thing is not well observed by them who under the name of cases of Conscience doe handle many things, which do no more belong to Conscience then any other head of Divinity, purposely omitted by them.

Casus quia dicitur cadere solet.

4. It is called a case, because it is wont to fall out, or to happen in the course of mans life, and a case of Conscience, because when it falls out, the Conscience ought, with all possible care, to give judgement about it.

5. Of this sort are all those questions wherein (supposing the generall doctrine of Faith and Obedience) wee enquire what our duty is, upon any particular occasion.

6. Of these questions one saith well. Because that Law which is written and ingraven in nature, containing the rules of honesty and naturall justice, is in a manner wholly buried by originall corruption, and almost totally overwhelmed by custome in sinning, as it were with some heape of evill lusts laid upon it; and because also the light of the understanding is involved, and obscured with manifold darkenesse, so that neither those rules of honesty, which are within the booke of the mind, are fully and perfectly legible, nor can our understanding read any thing therein, distinctly and plainly: Hence it is, that God, in his mercifull providence hath given us three helps, viz. The light of Scripture, the assistance of his Grace, and the helpe of teaching. About this last, we are now to intreate.

7. Now every question, or case of Conscience (as the nature of the thing it selfe, and experience sheweth) is either about the state of man before God, or about those actions which in that state he doth put forth, and exercise.

8. The state of man belongs to the first part of Divinity, which is about Faith, and the actions to the second part which is about obedience.

9. The state of man before God, is that relation which man hath to God, as he is the originall of spirituall life, and happinesse.

10. Concerning this state, the Conscience ought 1. to declare and determine what it is. 2. to judge, that it is to be eschewed if it be evill, and to be preserved, and increased if it be good.

11. Concerning the state of man in generall there be three questions : The first is whether a man can certainly know in what state he is ?

Ans. He may, 1. Because without this knowledge he cannot have an accusing, or excusing Conscience in respect of his estate, But such a Conscience men both may and are wont to have, Rom. 2. 15. 2 Because no man can either eschew or desire an unknowne state : But one of these states a man ought to eschew, and to labour for the other, Mat. 7. 8.

12. Quest. 2. Whether men ought to make inquiry into their estates.

Ans. Yes, and that with all diligence possible, for 1. This is a thing that God requireth, 2 Cor. 13. 5. 2. without this knowledge a man cannot have peace, or tranquillity in his Conscience, Rom. 5. 1. & 8. 1. 3. Otherwise a man cannot performe worship to God, with that preparation which is requisite, 1 Cor. 11. 28.

13. Quest. 3. By what meanes comes a man to the knowledge of his estate?

Ans. 1. By consideration of those actions externall, and internall, which proceed from him, Mat. 7. 17. 2. By the inclinations, and dispositions, from whence those actions flow, Rom. 7. 15, 16, 17. 3. By that reflex act. which is proper to man, whereby he hath a power, as it were to enter into, and perceive what is in himselfe, 1 Cor. 2. 11. 4. By a kind of spirituall sense, Luke 24. 32. Rom. 7. 21. 28.

How a man may come to the knowledge of his estate.

14. Quest. 4. what is it that hinders this knowledge ?

Ans. 1. Wicked and prophane thoughts in many, Psal. 14. 1 2. Presumption, Apoc. 3. 17. Mat. 7. 21. 23. 3. The overcharging of the heart by the lusts of the flesh, and care about the things of this life, Luke 21. 34. 4. An evill Conscience, Iohn 3. 20. 5. Spirituall sloth, and idlenesse, Esay 64. 11, 6. Ignorance, Rom. 6. 11.

The hinderance of this knowledge.

CHAP. 2.

Of the state of sinne.

F. The state of man since the fall of Adam is twofold. A state of sinne, and a state of grace Acts 26. 18. 1 John 3. 10. 14.

2. The state of sinne consists in the privation of spirituall life, and happinesse. From this estate therefore we are to fly, as from death and the greatest evill: Concerning this state of sin the first question is, how a man may discern, whether he do still continue in it?

3. Ans. The signes, or arguments, whereby this state may certainly be discern'd, are in generall, all those which are opposite to a state of grace, and spirituall life. For if a man be not in the one state, he must necessarily be in the other.

4. The first signe is a grosse ignorance of those things, which belong to spirituall life, Ep. 4. 18. for hereby, men are strangers to the life of God. The reason is because it is impossible that any man should please God without faith, Heb. 11. 6. And for Faith it is impossible to be had without the knowledge of the will of God, which comes by the preaching and hearing of the Word. Rom. 10. 14.

5. The second signe, is a perverse disposition of will, whereby it is in subjection to the rule, and dominion of sin, Rom. 6. 12. The reason is because those who do yeild themselves servants to obey sin, are in a state of slavery to sin, unto death Rom. 6: 16.

6 Now the signes of raising sinne, are first if a man do not seriously, and in good earnest, make opposition against the lusts of sinne, but rather yeild up himselfe unto them. Rom. 6. 13. Secondly, If in delibreate countell either profit, or pleasure be preferred by him, and prevaile more with him, then either honesty and piety, Phil. 3. 19. Thirdly, if the committing of sinne stir him up rather to pleasure, then grieffe, Pro. 2. 14. Fourthly, if he take delight in the company of the wicked, Pf. 50. 18. 2 Cor. 6. 14.

state of sin.

raising sin.

7. The third signe, whereby it may be discerned whether a man be in the state of sinne, is the disposition of will, whereby a man opposeth himselfe, to the will of God, Rom. 8. 7.

8. The signes of this perverse disposition are, 1. To reject the knowledge of Gods wayes, Iob. 21. 14, 15. 16. 2. To hate correction, and instruction, Psal. 50. 17. 3. To contemne the threatenings, and judgements of God, Psalme 36. 1. 2. Deut. 29. 19.

9. The fourth signe, is perversnesse of the affections whereby men, turne away from God, and wholly cleave, and adhere, to worldly things, 1 Iohn. 2. 15.

10. The avernesse of a man from God, is wont to be seene, 1. By his alination from the Word of God, especially when it is preacht to him powerfully 2 Tim. 4. 3. 4. 2. By a neglect of prayer, and other parts of Gods worship, Psal. 14. 3. 4. Psa. 79. 6. Jer. 10. 25. 3. By an alienation from the servants of God, Pro. 29. 27. 1 Iohn 3. 10.

11. The signes of a man cleaving to, and as it were drownd in the things of this world are, 1. If he imploy his chiefest care, and diligence about these things Mat. 6. 25. 31. 32. The reason is given Verse 21. & 24. for where your treasure is, there will your heart be also. 2. If he be ready rather to forsake God and his righteounesse then these worldly things, Mat. 37. 38. 3. If he do in his heart judge those men to be happy which have an abundance of these worldly goods. Pro. 11. 28. & 18. 11.

12. The fifth signe is the corruption of a mans life; or of the works of life Rom. 8. 13. This corruption of life doth not consist in those sins which even the godly sometimes through infirmity fall into, but in a continued course, and tenour of sinning. It is called in Scriptures the way of sinne, Psal. 1. 1. A working of iniquity, Mat. 7. 23. A walking in sinne, Psal. 1. 1. Pro. 1. 15. A walking asier sinne, Jer. 9. 14. And a custome in sinne, Jer. 13. 23 These works of the flesh are manifest by themselves, Gal. 5. 19.

13. The sixt and the most desperate signe is, obstinancy in evill, whereby a man shuts and stops up the way to all amendment, Esay. 6. 9. 10. Jer. 6. 10.

CHAP. 3.

Of deferring or putting off ones Conversion.

Quest. The second question is, whether a man may safely, rest for any time, in a state of sinne, especially if he purpose with himselfe to reforme and amend his life afterward.

1. Answer, it is not lawfull to make the least delay at all in our conversion unto God. The reasons are, 1. Because God requires this for the present, Psal. 95. 7. Heb. 4. 7. And seing sinne is a debt, and an injury done to God, it is manifest, that repentance for the same ought not, unlesse God consent and like of it, to be defer'd for one moment. As soone therefore as God shall require us to correct our lives, and to be converted, so soone ought this duty to be perform'd; besides this, no subject can keepe and receive atheife, and murderer, or a publike enemy, against the will of the magistrate, but he shall be guilty of a hainous crime. Now sinne is a theife, a murderer, and an enemy to Gods glory. Whosoever therefore shall keepe and nourish sinne against Gods Will, although he determine to do it but for a certaine time, he thereupon doth bring upon himselfe a very grievous guilt.

2. Because all delay of Repentance increaseth hardnesse of heart, Heb. 4. 7. It doth produce a custome of sining, and makes the worke of repentance to be harder and harder Ic. 13. 23. The reason is, because thereby evill habits are more strengthen'd and confirm'd, the understanding becomes darker, Ep. 4. 18. The will growes more obdurat, and addicted to sinne, Heb. 4. 7. All the faculties are more bound, and tied, as it were with chaines, and knots, Aels 8. 23. A yong plant is more easily pluckt up then that which hath taken deepe roote. A nayle the oftner it is beaten with a hammer the more firmly it is fastned, and the more hardly drawne cut.

3. Because continuance in sinne doth increase the number of sinnes, our guilt, and the wrath of God, Psal. 95. 10.

11. For that sinne which by repentance is not taken away, hath hath through its owne naturall inclination, the curse of God something in it like to the which in Gods things proceed from Gods blessing, that is, it increaseth and multiplies, and it doth, with its owne waight draw unto other sins, even as the deepe is said to call unto the deepe.

4. Because the duration of our life is altogether uncertaine, Iam. 4. 13, 14. Delay breeds danger. Thou soele this night shall thy soule be required of thee and then where will that conversion be, which thou hast defer'd? when therefore we have opportunity, let us set upon this businesse.

5. Because repentance is the gift of God, which he bestowes at his owne appointed times, not at our pleasure, 1 Tim. 2. 25. 2 Cor. 6. 2. Luke 13. 9. We must therefore let slip no occasion, but convert to day; And it is just with God that (if we neglect our duty, in this point, and refuse to fall to it, while we may) through his judgement and leaving, and forsaking of us, we should not be able to do it, when we would.

6. Because the purpose of deferring repentance cannot stand with a sincere purpose to repent, 1 Peter 4. 3. It is a point of dishonesty, and fraud, and a signe of a debtor that never meanes to pay what he owes, when a man because hee is not minded to pay, defers, and puts it of, from one day unto another.

7. Because late repentance is very seldome true, and almost alwayes suspitions. The example of the theife which we read, of in the Scriptures is onely one, neither yet do we reade of him, or of any other that was afterward converted that did defer and put off his repentance. Yea, the cleane contrary is threatned to such a man, Mat. 24. 48.

8. Because though we could be certaine that we might afterwards repent truly, yet it were a base and unworthy part to deale so with God, as it is not fit we should deale with men, Lev. 19. 13. Ro. 3. 28. And as we would be loath God should deale with us, Pf. 13. 2. 8. & Cor. 3.

9. Such kind of delayes may be convinced of folly, and of madnesse, even by common sense, and experience, for all men would account him for a bedlam, that should when his house were on fire, defer the quenching of it, though but for one houre. Or that having received some poyson into his body, should not indeavour instantly to expell it; or the having received some greivous wound, should not with all possible speed seeke for remedy. But in neglecting the burning, the poyson, and death of sin, as there is more danger so the folly is much more pernicious.

CHAP. 4.

Quest. 3. What ought a man to do, that he may be translated out of a state of sin, into the state of grace?

Ans. Of those things which are necessarily required to this purpose, some pertaine to the pulling a man out of the state of sinne, and some to the setting him in the state of grace, Those things which pertaine to the pulling a man out of the state of sinne, are such as serue to shake a man out of that carnall security, in which he slept before, and to worke in him a carefulnesse of his salvation above all things else Act. 2. 37. & 16. 33. That this may be done, many things are necessary.

1. For it is first of all required, that a man seriously looke into the Law of God, and make an examination of his life, and state according to 1. Iam. 1. 23. 24 25.

2. It is required, secondly that upon that comparing of our state with Gods Law, there do follow a conviction of Conscience which in Scripture is call'd anagnorisa a being without excuse, Rom. 1. 20. And a concluding one under sin, Rom. 11. 31. Rom. 2. 20 & 7. 7.

3. Thirdly, after this conviction of Conscience, there must follow, a despaire of salvation, both in respect, of all strength of our owne, and of any helpe which is to be had from the Creatures, Rom. 7. 9. 11. 13.

4. Fourthly, after all these; there must follow, a true humiliation of heart, which consists in griefe and feare because of sin, and doth bring forth confession, Mat. 9. 12.

5. For the procuring of this humiliation, it is alwayes necessary that there be a distinct consideration of some particular finnes : for a generall apprehension of sinne, causeth a confused astonishment, but no right and true humiliation. Rom. 7. 7.

6. This humiliation is oftentimes occasioned by the sight of some one sin, Act. 2. 23. 37.

7. It is helped forward oft times by some heavy affliction, as in Manasses. 2 Chro. 33. 12. The degrees of this humiliation are not the same, in all that be converted : for some seele greater trouble, and some lesse. But all those that are truly converted are also truly humbled. So put a man in the state of grace, it is required, that there be 1. Such an apprehension, upon the Gospell as whereby a man judgeth it possible that his finnes should be forgiven, Rom. 12. 23. Psa. 130. 4. 2 An earnest desire to obtaine that mercy, which in Scripture is called a spirituall hunger, or thirst, Esa. 55. 1. Iohn. 7. 37. Luke 1. 53. 3 An actual union with Christ, which consists in Faith, that is wrought in us by effectuall vocation, Iohn 15. 1. 4. True repentance, whereby forsaking all sin, we give up and consecrate our selves wholly to God in Christ, Acts 2. 38. & 3. 19.

CHAP. 5.

Of the effectuall Vocation.

BY effectuall vocation, we have the first entrance into the state of saving grace ; But here (in generall) arise foure questions, which doe neerely belong to Conscience, . The first question is, whether he that hath Faith, may by ordinary means certainly know, that he is effectuallly called of God and in the state of grace ?

Ans. He that hath Faith, may, and is wont to know certainly that he is in the state of grace. Divers reasons of this assertion, (besides those which before were, delivered in the questions of the state of man in generall) may be produced. The Faithfull may be certain of their vocation.

1. It is the office and the worke of the spirit of God which the faithfull have received, to certify and assure them of those things which God of his free grace hath conferrd upon them, 1 Cor. 2. 12. Ro. 8. 15.

2. The faithfull are commanded to make their calling and election sure, neither is this a legall precept but an evangelicall, 2 Pet. 1. 10.

3. That grace which we have received hath the nature and force of an earnest, in respect of that inheritance which is promised to us, Es. 1. 1. 4. & 4. 30. 1 Cor. 13. 14. 2 Cor. 1 21. 22. For asmuch therefore as it serves for the assuring us of the certaine of something which is to come, it ought not it selfe to be uncertaine: for no certainty can be groundd upon an uncertainty.

4. A certaine knowledge of the grace of God is required, as a necessary foundation for that joy and thankfulness which God requires of us, in regard of that grace, 1 Peter 1. 6. 8.

5. A Conscience purged from dead works doth necessarily bring with it a certaine knowledge of grace, Heb. 10. 20. Rom. 8. 16. & 9. 2.

6. The faithfull are expressly said to have had this assurance, and that by such arguments as are common to all believers, 2 Cor. 13. 5. 1 Iohn 3. 14. & 4. 16. & 5. 20.

The second question is by what signes the certainty of this effectuall vocation, and grace may be confirmed.

7. Ans. The first signe is, a constant inclination of the will towards God, as towards the chiefe good, Psal. 119. 57. For there is no man that can indeed place his chiefe good in the injoying God, but such a one as is called by God out of the world, and converted from his idolls, which before he had set up to himselfe in his heart.

8. The second signe is a purpose, and readinesse of mind to hearken unto God in every thing, 1 Sam. 3. 10. Acts 9. 6. Psa. 40. 8. 9. For in so doing a man answers to the call of God, and becomes call'd, Psa. 27. 8.

9. The third signe is, a vehement longing after the word of God, 1 Pet. 2. 2. For by this word the faithfull are call'd, and regenerated, 1 Pet. 1. 23.

10. The fourth signe is a singular love towards them which are are borne of the same seed, and bloud, 1 Iohn 3. 14.

The third Quest. is, what a man ought to do that he may be partaker of this grace? The duties of a man call'd to helpe forward his vocation & to make it sure unto himselfe.

11. Ans. Although God of his unspeakable Grace be often times found of them that seeke not after him, yet there be diverse duties, which ly upon a man about his vocation, and which both ought, and are wont ordinarily to be performed before the certainty of this grace can be gotten.

12. He therefore that desires to apply himselfe to Gods Call ought to settle in his mind an estimation of the Word of God, above all riches, Psal. 119. 14. The reason is, because a man will never seeke the Kingdome of God to purpose, unlesse he esteeme it so highly that he judge all other things to be set after it, Mat. 10. 37. Luke 14. 26.

13. Secondly, hee ought to imploy his greatest care labour and industry, about this businesse, Iohn 6. 27. Pro. 2. 4. & 8. ver. The reason is because there can be no serious, and solid estimation of a thing, where there is not an answerable endeavor to obtaine it.

14. Thirdly, he ought with all diligence, care, and constancy, to apply himselfe to the use of all those meanes which God hath sanctified for the communicating of his grace. Pro. 8. 34. The reason is, because God only who is the author of grace, can appoint meanes, and make them effectuell. He ought therefore to imitate those sick persons which lay at the poole of Bethesda, waiting for the moving of the water, Iohn 5. 3 4 7.

15. Fourthly, he ought to bring himselfe to that passe that he may sell all that he hath to buy this pearle, Pr. 23. 23. Mat. 13. 45, 46. For although God doth freely bestow life upon us, and receive nothing at our hands in lieu of it, Esa. 55. 1. 2. Yet we ought to forsake all unlawfull things actually, and all externall and naturall goods also, in the purpose, and disposition of our minds, else we cannot obtaine the grace of God.

The fourth Question is by what motives a man may be stird up to embrace the call of God.

16. Answer, first if he do seriously, and much consider with himselfe, who it is that calls him: for it is an omnipotent God to whom we ought to hearken and give eare; although we should not know what the event would be, Heb. 11. 8.

17. Secondly, if he do consider attentively often what it is to which God calls him: For it is no small matter, or light thing, but even eternall happinesse, and glory, 1 Pet. 5. 10. Ep. 1. 18.

18. Thirdly, if he do also waigh what that is out of which he is call'd: For he is perswaded to forsake nothing, besides sin, and death, Acts 26. 18, Luke 3. 7.

19. Fourthly, if he doe also consider what the cause is that moves God to call him, which he shall finde to be nothing else but Gods incomprehensible mercy towards his enemy. Rom. 8. 10. 2 Cor. 5. 10. He must have a heart of Iron, that is not moved with such goodnesse as this, as we may see by Saul, 1 Sam. 24. 17. 19.

20. Fifthly, if hee doe humbly compare himselfe with others, to whom this grace of vocation is denied. 1 Cor. 1. 26.

21. Sixtly, if he doe call to mind how hainous an offense it is to neglect this call of God, much more to despise it, Mat. 22. 7. 8. Luk. 4. 24.

22. Seventhly, if he do also consider of that misery, which he doth by the Law of equity bring upon himselfe by this sin, Pro. 1. 24. -- 32.

CHAP. 6.

Of Faith.

THe worke of effectull vocation, is to worke in man a true Faith in Christ, and repentance towards God.

Concerning Faith, the first question is what a man is to doe that he may obtaine true Faith in Christ.

1. Ans. Besides those things which were propounded before, it is further required, 1. that a man do go altogether out of himselfe, renouncing his owne righteousnesse, Rom. 10. 3. Phil. 3. 9. The reason is because no man will seeke righteousness out of himselfe by Faith, unlesse he do first acknowledge himselfe to be destitute of all righteousnesse in himselfe.

2. Se-

2. Secondly, hee ought to propound unto himselfe the righteousness of Christ, as his chiefest aime, and scope, so that he doth contemne all things in respect of that, Phil. 3. 9. 12. The reason is, because Christ is never sought as he ought to be, unlesse he be prefer'd before all things else, as the onely meanes of eternall salvation.

3. Thirdly, he ought to fasten the eyes of his mind, upon the promises of the Gospell; For the Gospell is the Ministry of the spirit of righteouinesse and of life, 2 Cor. 3. 6. 8. the reason is, because Christ is neither offer'd of God, nor can be apprehended by man, but onely in the promises of the Gospell.

4. Now in fastning our eyes upon the promises of the Gospell, we must consider first, that Christ onely is propounded in them, and that crucified, 1 Cor. 1. 23. 34. & 2. 2. 2. Secondly, that in Christ there is a perfect sufficiency of redemption, and salvation, provided for them that be in him, Iohn 3. 16. Whence also in Scripture it is call'd a rich, and plenteous, abundant, and plentifull grace, Ep. 1. 6. 7. & 2. 4. Rom. 5. 10. 1. Tim. 1. 14. Thirdly, that this grace is particularly offer'd to all those to whom it is preacht, Marke 16. 13.

The second question is by what motives a man may be stirr'd up to believe in Christ.

5. Ans. First, if he consider that this is the Commandment of God, that he doe believe in Christ, 1. Iohn 3 23. Secondly, if he meditate of that misery, to which all those are subject which believe not, Iohn 13. 18. Motives to Faith.

6. Thirdly, if he do meditate of the happinesse of those which do truly believe, 1 Iohn 3. 16.

7. Fourthly, if hee consider that there is no other way whereby hee can escape that misery, or obtaine that happinesse but onely by Faith in Christ, Acts 4. 12. Heb. 11. 6.

8. Fifthly, if he doe consider the injury which is offer'd to God by the man that believes not, 1 Iohn 5. 10.

9. Sixtly, if he waigh with himselfe how much they do honour God, which believe in him, Rom. 4. 20. Iohn 3. 33.

10. Seaventhly, if he looke upon the cloud of examples, which he hath of those which have believed and have beene saved by Faith, Heb. 12. 1. For they were for patterns to them which should afterward believe, 1 Tim. 1. 16.

The third Question is by what signes true Faith may be discern'd?

Ans. Faith in respect of the adjuncts, may be distinguished into a sick Faith and a lively.

A languishing
Faith.

11. A sickly Faith is that which is oppressed and hindered so by temptations, and corruptions, that it cannot put forth it selfe in those Fruits, which bring to the Conscience the sense of peace, delight and joy, Ep. 4. 30. an example hereof we have in David, Ps. 51. 14.

A lively Faith.

12. A lively Faith is that which doth freely exercise its acts, so that it is felt of the believer himselfe with a great deale of comfort, 1 Pet. 1. 8.

13. Faith also in regard of the degrees is distinguished into a weak and strong Faith.

14. A weak Faith is that which is easily hindered in its course, Ro. 14. 1. Ga. 6. 1. It is call'd in Scripture ὀλιγοπιστία little Faith, Mat. 16. 8.

15. A strong Faith is that which overcomes all difficulties, & proceeds freely in its course, it is call'd in Scripture πληροπία a full persuasion, Rom. 4. 24. Luke 1. 1. 1 Thess. 1. 5. Col. 2. 2.

16. A lively and strong Faith is easily manifest and known to them in whom it is, first because they have the testimony thereof in themselves, 1 John 5. 10. viz. the Spirit of God bearing witness with their spirit that they are the children of God, Rom. 8. 16. Which spirit they have as the earnest of their inheritance, 1 Ep. 13. 14 and by it they are seal'd till the day of redemption, Ep. 4. 30. 2 They have the Love of God shed abroad in their hearts by the same spirit, Rom. 5. 5. Whereupon it is that they have peace, and joy unspeakable, and full of glory, 1 Pet. 1. 6. 8. Rom. 5. 1. 2. 3 They have and bring forth those Fruits, whereby true Faith is wont to be manifested, and perfected, Gal. 2. 18. Gal. 5. 6.

17. A languishing, and weak Faith may be discern'd to be true, and sincere, principally by these notes.

true Faith.

First, if there be a sincere desire of Union, and Communion with Christ, 2 Cor. 8. 12. This desire is distinguished from that which may be found in the unregenerate, 1. because it is not a conditionall desire, or a kinde of wishing, which even

even many wicked men have after these spirituall good things, if they might also enjoy and still keepe their sinnes, but it is an absolute choise, Heb. 11. 25. 2 Because it is not caried after these spirituall things, onely as beneficiall unto a mans selfe, but as simply, and in themselves good, and things for their owae sake to be desired of all, Psal. 73. 25 & 43. 3. 3 Because it is caried after all choise that is as well after the sanctification, as after the justification and redemption which are in him, 1 Cor. 1. 30. 4 Because such a man more esteemes of Christ then of all things else, 1 Pet. 2. 6. 5 There is alwayes joynd with this desire, a sense of sinne, and a serious sorrow for it, Mat. 11. 28. 6 This desire is not vanishing, and fickle, but constant, Luk. 18. 1. 7 It is not slothfull but industrious, Pro. 21. & 26. 15.

18. The sincerity of Faith appears also, if it hath been begotten, and is preserved and stirred up by the powerfull Ministry of the Word, Rom. 10. 14. Whereupon it comes to passe, that a man is affected towards the Word, as towards spirituall Food, 1 Pet. 2. 2. The reason is because such a kind of desire being a motion of spirituall Life, must needs presuppose life it selfe which consisteth in Faith; for carnall presumption both consisteth without the Ministry of the Word, and can by no means indure the effectuall application, and setting home of those things which belong to the power of godlinesse, 2 Tim. 4. 3. But Faith cleaves unto the word as its principall and foundation.

19. The sincerity of Faith appears in the third place from hence, that although it seeke justification in Christ, yet it embraceth, with a sincere assent, and subjection of heart, the whole Word of God, that is every precept, prohibition and threatning, which comes from God, Psal. 119. 6. Lam. 2. 10. 14. Herod did assent unto many things, Marke 6. 20. The reason is because Faith doth unite a mans heart to God, and deliver it, up unto him, simply without any exception.

20. Fourthly, it appears by this, because as touching the purpose of the minde, and his uttermost indeavor, it purifies a mans heart from all sinne; Acts 15. 9. Mat. 5. 7. The reason is because Faith doth principally, and singularly seeke in God the utter abolition or sin.

21. Fifthly, it appears by this, that it stirs up in the heart a sincere affection of love towards God, whereby it comes to passe, that we prefer the glory of Gods Name above all things else, 1 Iohn 4.19. Hence it is that the faithfull in the Scriptures are wont to be described by this property of their love towards God, Rom. 8.28. 1 Co. 16.22. Ep. 6.23,24. The reason is, because they place and apprehend their chiefe good in God.

22. Sixtly, it appears by that sincere love which it works in a mans heart towards his fellow Brethren, 1 Iohn 3. 14. & 5. 1. The reason is because the Image of God appears in them.

CHAP. 7.

Of those temptations which fight against FAITH.

BEcause the whole spirituall life of a man doth depend upon his Faith, Heb. 10.38. And by Faith as by a shield, a man is preserv'd safe against all the temptations of the Devill, the World and the Flesh, Ep. 6.16. 1 Pet. 5.9. Heb. 11.25. Therefore it is that these three enemies doe bend their forces principally against Faith. It will be profitable therefore to be acquainted with the principle assaults in this kind, as also with those means whereby through the grace of God, we may repell them, that they do not overmuch weaken our Faith.

Of the want of the sense of grace.

The first Question then is, how the believer may support himselfe against those temptations, which are drawne from hence, that there are no notable Fruits of his Faith to be seene and discern'd.

1. Ans. first he ought to consider that Faith in its owne nature is of those things which are not seene or felt, Heb. 11. 1. And in this it differs from vision, Rom. 8.24. 1 Cor. 13.12. And therefore there is no more required to the being of Faith but that man do with his whole heart make choise of Christ for his Saviour, and with his whole heart adhere unto him. Other things belong to the well being of Faith, not absolutely to the being of It, Col. 2.7.

2. Secondly, he ought to consider, that the want of many fruits may argue Faith to be languishing, or weake, but it cannot argue that there is no Faith, 2 Pet. 1. 8.

3. Thirdly, he ought to consider that the Conscience is often supported much by the remembrance of what is past, though for the present grace appeare not, Psal. 77. 6. 7. 12. And by the judgements of others that are godly, and wise concerning us, when our own judgement is troubled, Heb. 6. 9. 2 Cor. 2. 7. 8.

The second Question is, how a man may support himselfe against those temptations which are drawne from hence, that he feels upon him the signes of the Wrath of God? Of the sense of the wrath of God.

4. Ans. First, he ought to consider, that many signes of Gods wrath may stand with his love and favour. Psal. 99. 8.

5. Secondly, he ought to remember that Christ himselfe who was the Sonne of Gods love, did tast the wrath of God in this sort, Mat. 27. 46.

6. Thirdly, he ought to consider that it is required of the Faithfull that they believe against hope under hope, Rom. 4. 11. And that they do, and they wrestle as it were with God, by Faith, Gen. 32. 24. Hos. 12. 4. 5.

The third Question is how hee may hold up his head against those temptations, which arise from hence, that his Faith increaseth not, Rom. 1. 17. Of the want of growth and progresse in Faith.

7. Ans. He ought to consider first that it is with Faith, as it is with plants and living Creatures, which wee may more easily perceive to have growne, then to grow. Secondly, that the increase of Faith is not to be expected at every moment, and at all seasons of our life, Heb. 5. 12. But then especially when the Sun of righteousness approacheth nearer to our Horizon, by a more mercifull communication of his grace, Acts 9. 31. 2 Pet. 1. 2. 3. Thirdly, that those temptations which do hinder the increase of Faith for the present do advantage it for the future, like the winter to the Plants, and like diverse sicknesses to the bodies of young Folke.

Fourth Question is how a man may comfort himselfe against those terrors which arise from the guilt of his sins, especially if they be greivous?

8. Ans. He ought to remember, 1. That such temptations as these, do proceed from a defect in Faith, Rom. 6. 11. Ep. 6. 16. 1 Pet. 5. 9. And therefore that we are not to cast away our Faith because of such sins, but rather so much the more to strengthen it, Lu. 22. 32.

9. He ought secondly to consider that it is the duty of the faithfull not for sinne to fly away from God, but rather for God to fly away from sinne, and to adhere to God in Christ, that sinne may be remitted, and abolisht, Iohn 3. 14. With Num. 21. 19.

The fifth Quest. is how a Christian may sustaine himselfe in time of affliction?

10. Ans. He ought to consider, 1. That such kind of tryalls are fruits of Gods love, Heb. 12. 6. 2 They shall worke for his good, Rom. 8. 28. 3 The grace of God in all these ought to be sufficient to him, 2 Cor. 12. 9. But of afflictions more hereafter.

CHAP. 8.

Of Repentance.

CONCERNING Repentance the first Question is, what a man is to doe that he may repent?

1. Ans. He ought, 1. attentively and seriously to consider his finnes, according to that nature which is most detestible, Esa. 1. 4. Apoc. 3. 17. For as the consideration of sinne under some false shape as a thing lovely, and desirable, doth draw a man to sinne: so the true consideration of sinne, as a thing abominable, and by all meanes to be eschew'd, doth withdraw the minde from sinne by true Repentance. To set on this consideration it will be profitable, 1. To meditate upon the Majesty of God, which is by our finnes most grievously offended. 2. Weigh well the infinite and manifold obligations whereby wee are bound to please God, which yet we have not ceast wickedly to violate. 3. To thinke upon the terrible wrath of God, which like a consuming fire, remains upon impenitent sinners.

4. To set before our eyes, those supernaturall good things of which our finnes deprive us. 5. To call to minde those great evils which by our finnes we bring upon our selves, and others, and the dishonor which we do to God. And to this purpose it will be exceeding profitable religiously to meditate upon the unsufferable torments, death, and curse which befell Christ for our sins.

2. He ought, 2. to set before his eyes, Obedience towards God, as a thing absolutely to be sought, necessarily to be followed after, Luke 13.3 & 10. 42. They which are caried after any other thing, as absolutely necessary, are by that very affection by which they are so caried, drown'd in perdition. 1 Tim. 6.9.

3. He ought, 3. to confesse his finnes before God, 1 Iohn 1. 9. Psal. 32. 5. & 51. 5. For confession of sinne makes a man take all the guilt, and shame unto himselfe, and ascribe all the glory to God, Daniel 9.

4. He ought, 4. by Faith in Christ to expect, and pray for the change of his heart according to that promise which we have, Ez. 36. 26. 32. For those which go about the worke of conversion leaning upon their owne strength, do nothing to the purpose in this businesse, 2 Cor. 3. 5.

5. He ought, 5. in the power of God, to turne himselfe with all his heart from that which is evill, and to convert himselfe to that which is good in the sight of God, Psalme 34. 15. Now turning from evill, consists primarily in the hatred of evill, Psal. 45. 8. Which hatred in respect of those finnes which are past, doth necessarily bring forth an unfeigned sorrow, Zach. 12. 10. Together with a shame, and dislike, Rom. 6. 21. And conversion to good, doth primarily consist, in a desire, and purpose to doe well, Psalme 119. 33. 106.

The second Question is, by what motives a man may be stir'd up to true repentance?

6. Ans. Let him consider, 1. That this repentance is a thing very pleasing to God, Psal. 51. 19. The force of the argument lies here, because he which hath given himselfe up to God by Faith, cannot but indeavour after all those things, by which God is well pleased. 2. That it is absolutely necessary necessary to salvation, Luke 13.3. The reason of the consequence lies here, because he which desires the end, desires also those means, which hee sees to have a necessary connection with that end, 3. That sinne is the cause of our separation from God, Esa. 55.2. This reason holds because the believer by his Faith doth adhere to God, and therefore turnes away from all those things which worke a separation twixt God, and him, 4. That there is an utter opposition betwixt sinne, and our vocation and Faith and Life, 2 Cor. 6.15,16. 1 Thess. 4.7.1. The argument is strong because he which affirmes one of the contraries denies the other, 5. That the mercies of God towards him, (by all which he is lead unto repentance) are exceeding great, Rom. 2.4.5. Jer. 84.5.12.6. That Christ suffered most grievous anguish for our sins. Zac. 12.12. By which we may learne how horrible they be, and how much to be detested, 7. That impenitency in it selfe is the most grievous sinne, and that it is the continuation, the sealing up, and the amplification of all finnes besides, 8. That there are great promises made, and that the Kingdom of Heaven stands open to all such as repent, Esa. 1.18. 1 Kings 8.48 49,50.

Signes of Repentance.

The third Question is, what bee the signes of true Repentance?

7. Answer, First a griefe for sin in respect of the offence done to God by them, and not onely in respect of punishment; the reason is because repentance doth turne a man from sinne as it is sinne, now it is siane as it doth transgresse the reveal'd will of God, and so offendeth him, and provokes him to anger. This griefe ought to be the greatest of all griefe, Zach. 12.10,11. At the least intellectually, in regard of the displeas'dnesse of the will, although in respect of the sense other griefes may sometimes appeare more vehement. Griefe, or sorow is an offense of the soule, arising from hence that it suffereth something which it abhors as being a thing whereby it feels it selfe to be hurt. Griefe therefore for sinne doth necessarily accompany true conversion, for the mind while it converts it selfe from sinne, beginneth to nill sinne, or to abhorre it, It perceiving therefore that somewhat sticks to it which it doth abhorre, cannot chuse but be troubled.

led. And because the chiefe reason why the converted soule doth abhorre sinne, is that repugnancy which siane hath to the will of that God, to which the soule being converted is now joyned, hence it is, that grieft for sinne if it be right ariseth rather from this ground, because God is thereby offended, then because any misery is brought upon our selves.

8. Secondly, a hatred of sinne, as a thing above all others most detestable, Apocal. 2:6. This hatred if it be sincere, 1. Is caried against all knowne sinnes without any exception, 2. It is constant without intermission, 3. It is implacable without reconciliation, 4. It is vehement without toleration.

9. A third signe is an earnest desire, and setled purpose to avoyd all sinne, and to live after Gods Law for the future; The reason is because he which doth detest, and hate sinne, for this reason because it is sinne, and offends Gods Majesty, will as well abhorre future sinnes, as those which are past, for these do every whit as much offend God as the other: and no man can avoid future siones unlesse hee do purpose and determine with himselfe, as strongly as he can that he will never, upon any condition commit sinne againe. This purpose if it be sincere, 1. Doth cause a separation as far as possible may be from present sinnes, and from occasions of future sinnes, 2. It intendeth every thing that it is good, 3. It seekes for it effectually in a diligent indeavour and use of the meanes, 4. It carefully labours to remove all impediments as well internall, as externall.

The fourth Question is how a man can repent of such sins as he cannot come to the knowledge of? Repentance for sins unknown.

10. Answer, He which formally and distinctly repents of all his knowne sinnes, hath a virtuall, and confused repentance even for those sinnes which hee knoweth not, Psalme 19. 13.

The fifth Question is, whither it be sufficient for a man to repent once? Of the continuation and renovation of Repentance.

11. Ans. First, past sinnes are not to be forgotten, Deut. 9. 7. No not those which were committed in youth, Psalme 25. 7. 2. This remembrance of former sinnes is profitable, 1.

to humble us, Deut. 9.6.7. 2. To stir up thankfulness towards God, 1 Tim. 1.12.& 3.10. 3 To make us pitifull and gentle to other sinners, Titus 3. 2. 3. But as oft as our finnes come to minde we ought to be affected with shame, and sorrow for them, Gen. 41.9. Ez. 16.61,63. 1 Cor. 15.9. It is true that horreur which is wont at ones first conversion to ceize upon the soule, returnes not to the faithfull by the remembrance of their old finnes, because of the Mercy of God, which thorough Christ they have obtained, but yet shame, and blushing is a thing that doth become Saints very well, Rom. 6. 21. So that it is made a note of a wicked man that hath not yet repented of his finnes if hee can thinke on them, and call them to minde with pleasure, Iob, 20. 12. Pro. 2.14.

12. Secondly, Repentance is to be renewed dayly, as finnes are renewed, 2 Tim. 1. 6. Ier. 8. 6. For as a Candle newly put out, and yet smoaking, is kindled againe and reviveth by a small blast, so the soule is freed from ordinary straights and dangers by a seasonable, that is by a dayly renewing of Repentance. A member out of joynt is to be set as soone as may be. 3. After extraordinary finnes extraordinary repentance also is necessary, Psal. 51. 1. 1 Corin. 5. 2. 2 Cor. 7. 9.& 12. 21.

C H A P. 9.

Of Adoption.

VPon Faith in Christ followes justification and adoption, but because justification doth properly consist in relation therefore there is no peculiar thing about it that belongs to Conscience, besides those which either were spoken of before, in the Questions about Faith, or are hereafter to be spoken of, amongst those things which belong to Sanctification, Glorification, and Obedience.

If any one be certaine of his Faith in Christ, and yet do doubt in Conscience whether he be justified before God, this happens through want of wisdome to infer the conclusion clusion out of the premises. This defect therefore is remedied by a right information about the nature of justification. For all the promises of the Gospell concerning remission of sinnes, justification, and life eternall, do as well belong to every particular believer, and may and ought as well to be apprehended, and applied by him unto himselfe, as if his owne name were written in the Scriptures. The reason is, because whatsoever is promised to Faith, or to the faithfull in generall, is promised expressly to all and every true believer in particular.

There is the same reason for adoption also, save onely that to this benefit, there is attributed as an adjunct a certaine operation of the spirit in respect whereof he is called the spirit of adoption. For although it be the same spirit, which doth, 1. convince men of sinne, and of righteousnesse, and judgement, Iohn 16.8. 2. Illuminate them with the saving knowledge of Christ, 1 Corinthians 1.10.13. Ep. 1. 17. 18. 3. Ingraft them into Christ, Ep. 3. 6. & 4. 4. 4. Quicken them being ingrafted, 2 Cor. 3.6. 5. Lead them into all truth which is necessary to salvation, Iohn 14.17.& 16.13. Iohn 4.16. Yet because adoption hath a primary place among those benefits which are seal'd to us by the holy spirit, hence it is that he receiveth a singular denomination there from, and is cal'd the spirit of adoption, Romans 8. 15. Concerning this spirit the first Question is, what a man ought to do that hee may obtaine the lively act, and sense of it? Meanes to obtaine the spirit of Adoption.

1. Ans. Hee ought, 1. to give diligent attention to the preaching of the Gospell, 2 Cor. 3.6.8. The Ministers of the new testament are call'd the Ministers of the spirit, and the Ministry thereof the Ministry of the spirit, because by that meanes God doth offer, and communicate his spirit, Gal. 3. 2. Yee have received the spirit by the hearing of Faith, Ep. 1.13.

In whom yee also trusted after that yee heard the word of truth, the Gospell of your salvation, in whom also after that yee believed, yee were seal'd with the holy spirit of promise.

2. He ought, 2. to beg this spirit of God, Luke 11.13. Your Heavenly Father will give the holy spirit to them that aske him.

3. He

3. Hee ought, 3. To open the doores of his heart that the spirit may enter in, Psal. 24. 7. Apoc. 3. 20. That is to call off his minde from earthly things and to raise it upwards and to prepare himselfe, by all means to entertaine the motions of the spirit.

Signes of Adoption.

The proper Question is, what be the signes of the spirit of Adoption.

4. Ans. The first signe is a spirit of Prayer, whereby we call upon God as a Father. Zach. 12. 10. Rom. 8. 15. 26. Gal. 4. 6. For no man can have a true filiall affection toward, and confidence in God, but by communion of the spirit.

Now this is in that regard proper in a sort to the time of the Gospell, or new Testament, because God hath declared himselfe principally, fitly, and in a more excellent manner then formerly to be our Father.

5. The second signe is an high estimation of the dignity of Adoption, Iob. 1. 12. 1 Iob. 3. 1. For the spirit doth not onely seale unto us our Adoption, but doth also shew us how great a blessing it is, and how much to be prized.

6. The third signe is the feare and honour of God, 1 Pet. 1. 17. Mat. 1. 6. For true reverence followes upon an apprehension of great love and kindnesse mixt with great power.

7. The fourth signe is filiall obedience, 1 Pet. 1. 14. Which proceeds not so much from hope and reward, as from love and desire to please God, Rom. 8. 14. For obedience springeth from a religious reverence.

8. The fifth signe is conformity to the Image of God our Father, and Christ our elder brother, Mat. 5. 48. Ro. 8. 29. 1 Iob. 3. 9. For the Son is begotten after the similitude and likenesse of his Father.

9. The sixth signe is a firme hope of the eternall inheritance Ro. 8. 17. For the inheritance and the expectation thereof is proper to some, not to peccants or strangers.

The third Question is how the testimony of the spirit may be preserved?

8. Ans. 1. If we extinguish and quench it not by contempt or neglect of the meanes of grace, 1 Thess. 5. 19. 20. The reason is, because the word with the like meanes of grace are the force of the spirituall life, by the use of which the spirit is strengthened.

ned within us, and in the want of which the spirit in regard of its inhabitation failes in us, and is said to be quenched.

11. 2. If we grieve it not by the filthinesse of sinne, Eph. 4.30. The reason is because as naturall griefe ariseth from the presence, or representation of some repugnant, and unwelcome object, which is incumbent and prevailes against us, so that spirit is in a sort grieved by the prevailing of sinne, a thing to him most odious and repugnant.

12. 3: If wee stir it up by holy exercises. 2. Tim. 1.6. The reason is because as fire in greene wood burnes not but by the help of bellowes and blowing, so neither doth any spirituall heate continue in the hearts of sinners, unlesse due meanes be used for the stirring it up.

CHAP. 10.

Of Sanctification.

CONCERNING Sanctification the first question is, what a man ought to doe that he may be sanctified?

1. Ans. He ought, 1. wholly to submit himselfe to the word of God. For the word of God is that truth which sanctifies us. Ioh 17.17. Ier.31.33. And it is effectually to worke sanctification, 1. Because of that utter opposition which it hath against sinne, by reason whereof it repells sinne out of the heart, where it is seated; 2. Because it is the powerfull instrument of God to regenerate men, 1. Pet. 1.23.

2. He ought 2. By Faith to apply Christ unto himselfe, as in Sanctification, 1. Chr. 2.30. Hee ought therefore, 1. To suck as it were holinesse out of Christ, that is, Considering that Christ is the Fountaine of all spirituall life and Sanctifying grace, Ioh. 1.16. Col. 1.19. & 2.9. He ought to rely & put his confidence in Christ for the obtaining of Sanctification, and to draw it ought of that Fountaine, Efn. 12. 3. He ought, 2. To provoke himselfe unto it by the meditation of Christ, that is, seriously weighing and considering the blessings of God in Christ; he ought to stir up himselfe to such an endeavor after Sanctification as becometh such benefits.

How to obtaine Sanctification.

3. Now because there are two parts of our Sanctification, namely mortification, whereby sinne or the old man is put off, and vivification, whereby grace or the new man is put on, Eph. 4. 2. 24. Col. 3. 8. 10. Therefore there are two parts of the application of it for Sanctification, the first is the application of his death, the second of his Resurrection and life, Rom. 6.

4. The application of the death of Christ to the mortifying of sinne, is when Faith doth effectually collect this mortification of sin, from the death of Christ, Rom. 6. 11.

5. By this application sin is said to be crucified, Romans 6. 6. Gal. 5. 24. To be killed, Romans 6. 2. And to be buried, Rom. 6. 4.

6. The Nailes whereby in this application sinne is fastned to the Crosse, are the very same with those, whereby Christ was fastned to the Crosse. For there is nothing more effectual, then if one would consider seriously, 1. The nature and desert of his finnes. For he which seriously considers that his sins doe deserve, and will procure his death, and destruction, he cannot but seeke by all meanes to prevent it, by the mortification of sinne; for either sinne, or the sinner must needs die, Rom. 8. 13. 2 The love and mercy of God the Father toward him a sinner, in sending Christ to take away his sin. For the love of God will constraine us to seeke that for our selves, which God so earnestly sought for us, 1 John 4. 11. 3 The love of Jesus Christ in undergoing, and fulfilling all things that were required for the taking away of our finnes. For this grace and love of Christ, if it worke but upon us as it ought, will constraine us to set about this worke, 2 Cor. 5. 14, 15. Those were the very Nailes whereby Christ was fastned to the Crosse, and not those materiall ones, which his murtherers did use for this purpose.

7. The application of the resurrection and life of Christ unto vivification, is when Faith doth effectually collect this life of grace, from the resurrection and life of Christ. Rom. 6. 11. Now it is effectually collected, by a meditation of the efficient cause, and end, and fruits of the resurrection of Christ, Col. 3. 1. The meditation of the efficient cause affordeth this argument; If the said spirit which raised up

Christ from the dead, dwell in me, it will also raise up my soule from the death of sinne, to the life of grace, Rom. 8. 11. The meditation of the end, this; As Christ was raised up, that sinne might have no more dominion over him, but that he might for ever live to God, so also must we, Rom. 6. 9. 10. The meditation of the fruits yeilds this argument: As Christ being raised up sitteth at the right Hand of his Father in Heaven, so ought we also to live as Citizens of Heaven, Phil. 3. 20.

8. He ought, 3. by a lively Faith, not onely to apprehend the generall promises of salvation, but those particular ones also, which doe in a singular manner pertaine to sanctification Ex. 30. 24.

9. He ought, 4. To yeeld up himselfe wholly to the holy Ghost, to be acted and led by him in all things. Ro. 8. 13. 14.

The second Question, by what motives may a man be stir'd up to labour for Sanctification? Motives to Sanctification.

10. Ans. If he consider, 1. That without holinesse no man shall see God. Heb. 12. 14. Mat. 5. 20. 2 That holinesse is the Image of God, and that perfection, wherein we were created at the beginning. Eph. 4. 24. 3 That holinesse is the end of our election, redemption and vocation, Eph. 1. 4. 1 Tim. 4. 7. Tit. 2. 14. 1 Cor. 1. 2. 4 That it is not the least part of glory and eternall blisse. Eph. 5. 27. 5 That there can be no true Faith, or justification, or adoption without sanctification, Jac. 2. 26. 2 Pet. 1. 10. 1 Cor. 6. 11.

The third Question, what are the signes of true sanctification. The signes of Sanctification.

Ans. 1. A reformation of all the powers, and faculties of the whole man, 1 Thess. 5. 23. 2 A respect to all the Commandements of God, Psal. 119. 6. James 2. 10. 3 A constant care to avoid all sinne, Pro. 28. 14. 4 A walking before God, Gen. 17. 1. Acts 24. 16. 1 Cor. 10. 31. Col. 3. 23. 5 A combat betwixt the flesh and the spirit.

C H A P. II.

Of the combate of the Spirit against the Flesh.

Question; how may the combat of the spirit against the flesh which is in the regenerate, be distinguished from that fight which is oft found in the unregenerate when they sinne?

First, Ans. 1. They differ in the causes. For, 1. the reluctation which is in the wicked proceeds either from horreur, and a slavish feare of punishment, or from some evill disposition, which is easily overcome, but the spirituall combat ariseth from a certaine new nature, which of its owne accord, is carried after those things which are pleasing to God, and doth firmly, and constantly shun, and make opposition against whatsoever is contrary, 2. That fight and reluctation, which is found in wicked men, takes place onely in such grosse sinnes, as either are condemned by the Law of nature, or are wont to be abhor'd by all such as are in any small measure illuminated: but the spirituall combat of the regenerate is exercised against all sin, though it never come to be perfected in any grosse crime.

Secondly, 2. They differ in the objects: For that fight which is found in the wicked, is either betweene the dictate of their Conscience and the inclination of the will, or between some light inclination of the will to some morall good things, and heady affections which rule, and beare sway: but that combate which is in the regenerate, consisteth in the opposition and strife of a certaine new and supernaturall quality of spirituall life, which hath its seat principally in the will, against corrupt inclinations, which dwell indeed within them, but beare no sway over them.

Thirdly, 3. They differ in the effects. For 1. that fight which is in naturall men, may and is wont to consist with a dayly and ordinary course of sinning: But the combate of the spirit, doth alwayes cause that (although there may be many slips, and infirmities) the course, and tenour of a mans life be squared, and ordered according to the will of God, 1 John 3. 9. 10. 2 That opposition in naturall men, although it may sometime be a cause, why some good is done by them, yet it cannot make a good principle, a good end, and a good manner of working: all which the combate of the spirit against the flesh doth bring along with it, 3. The fight of naturall men, doth ordinarily admit such actions as are for the substance of them evill: but the spirit doth so prevaile for the most part that it admits not a sinne in the fact it selfe although there may be a failing in the degree, and manner of doing, 4. For those evils which the unregenerate man doth commit, this fight that is within him hinders not, but that the sinne may be, in all respects consummated, in regard of the precedent consultation, and purpose, the concomitant pleasure, and delight, and the following obstinaey and impedientcy: but the spirit by its combate with the flesh doth abate the power of sinne, partly before the commission, partly in the commission, and doth afterward utterly breake it, 5. That reluctance which is in naturall men seekes onely to repress, and keepe sinne under, but the spirit in its combate contends alwayes for the very mortification of sin, and the highest perfection of grace, although before death it be not attainable.
God

CHAP. 12.

Of growth in Sanctification.

THe fifth Question is whether wee ought to content our selves with this, that wee have some beginnings of sanctification?

1. Ans. No, there are two duties to be performed yet by us, in either of which if wee be negligent all our labour is lost.

2. The 1. Is a care to keepe that holinesse we have, 1 Tim. 1. 19. The reason is because that many have escapt in some degree the pollutions of the world, and yet have bene intangled therein and overcome, and so the latter end hath bene worse with them then their beginning, 2 Pet. 2. 1. 22.

3. Now wee shall hold fast our holinesse, 1. If wee be mindefull of the Covenant which wee made with God, Job. 31. 1. And of our redemption, 1 Cor. 6. 19. 20. 2 If we take diligent heed, that we never repent of any repentance, Ier. 34. 11. That is if we be carefull that we never fall in love with that sin which we have hated, or slight any duty which our Consciences have approved, no not in those things, which the world counts small and as nothing.

4. The 2. duty is a study, and care to increase in holinesse, with the increase of God, Col. 2. 19. 2. Peter 1. 5. Phil. 1. 9. 1 Tim. 4. 15.

5. The reason is, 1. Because such is the nature of grace that it alwayes stirs up them in whom it is to an earnest desire of a larger fruition of it, 1 Pet. 2. 2. 3. So that although that thirst which is a thirst of totall indigence or want be excluded by grace, John 4. 14. Yet that which is for a more plentiful fruition is no taken away but increast, 2. Because as the vitall heat of our bodies doth never continue in one state, but is either increasing, or decreasing alwaies, so in this life of grace, unlesse we do give all dilligence that we may be on the growing hand, it cannot be avoided but there will be a consumption through that opposition which the spirit meets with from the flesh.

6. Now we shall make a progresse in Sanctification, 1. If we exercise our selves dayly to a more perfect denying of sinne, and of the world, and of our selves, and to a more earnest and serious seeking of God and his Kingdome, 2. If we have our end alwayes in our eyes, Pro. 4. 23. 3 If we keep our hearts with all dilligence, Pro. 4. 23. 4 If we watch to the holy use of all those meanes which make to sanctification, and joine earnest prayer with them.

CHAP. 13.

Of the first fruits of Glorification consisting in the sense of Gods Love.

AMongst the first fruits of glory which are granted to the faithfull in this life, the apprehension and sense of Gods Love is the chiefest, for as the procurement of our salvation, had its beginning, and first foundation, in the election, and love of God, so the beginning of the perceiving thereof is in the perceiving of the same love; now concerning this love; the first Question is how a man may obtain the apprehension and sense of the love of God?

1. Ans. The proper cause of this apprehension is the holy Ghost, who sheds this love of God in the hearts of believers, Rom. 5. 5. That is, certifies them particularly that this love of God is extended abundantly to them. But yet there are many meanes whereby this worke is promoted, and whereby also beleevers come to bee rooted, and grounded in this love, Ephesians 3. 18. The principle of them are these that follow.

How to obtain
Gods Love.

2. First, if the beleever do apprehend that (God in regard of that relation wherein he stands to him and the rest of the faithfull is merely love) 1 Iohn 4. 8. For so that phrase is to be understood, not of God considered absolutely; but in relation unto the faithfull, because all things which God doth, to and about beleevers, proceeds in some sort from his love, for the love of God is to be sought for, and to be considered in the effects thereof.

3. Secondly, if he consider how admirable all the circumstances be in the love of God, Iohn 3. 16. 1 In respect of the person loving. For God who hath in himselfe all good, all sufficiency, and perfection, that could receive no profit, either by man, or by mans love and besides that was grievously offended with man, this God notwithstanding loveth man 1 Iohn 4. 10. 11.

4. Secondly, in respect of the person beloved. For God hath loved man, that deserved no such thing from him, man his enemy, man unthankfull, Ro. 5. 8.

5. Third-

5. Thirdly, in respect of the gifts which are the fruits of this love. For God out of love hath given man his owne Son, and in his son himselfe, 1 Iohn 2.24. And with him all good things, Rom. 8.32.

6. Fourthly, in respect of the manner of the giving, which was out of meere and abundant grace, without mans request, and beyond his expectation, Rom. 10.20.

7. Fifthly, in respect of the continuance, for this love of God was from eternity, and shall remaine immutably unto all eternity, Ep. 1.4. Jer. 31.3. Iohn 13.1.

8. The third meanes to promote the sense of Gods love in the heart of a believer is for him to labour with all his might in the use of those meanes which tend to this purpose to get a more plentifull taste of this love, Psalme 34. 9. 1. Pet. 2.3.

The second Question is how a man may know that God loves him?

9. Ans. 1. If he be certaine that Christ is his, Gal. 2.20. that is, if he be certaine that he hath a true Faith in Christ. For Christ is the Son of Gods love, by whom his love is derived unto others:

10. 2. If he be certaine of his love to God, 1 Iohn 4.10. Pro. 8.17.

11. 3. If he follow after righteousness, Pro. 15.9. For God cannot but love his own Image.

12. 4. If the love of God do constaine, and effectually stir him up, to all duties of piety towards God, and of love, and Justice towards men, 2 Cor. 5.14. 1 Iohn 4.12.

A third Question is, whether a man may not collect the Love of God, from the common good things which he bestowes?

13. Ans. All the benefits of God, of what sort soever they be, do bring with them an obligation, to love and obey that God which is the donor, but it is proper to some of them to bring besides that, solid and spirituall comfort to the receiver, by a demonstration of the singular love of God, which is made by them. For nothing that is common, can demonstrate any speciall love. Creation therefore, and preservation, and earthly and naturall good things cannot cannot by themselves be any signes of a supernaturall love, Eccles. 9. 2. But yet these common good things, when they are received by Faith, as given in Christ, are (in respect of the manner wherewith they are then clothed) proper to the faithfull, and are secondary signes of Gods love to them, Psal. 22. 10, 11, 12. For Faith maketh such a kinde of arguing as there the Psalmist useth, to be of force, whereas without Faith there could no such consequence be drawne from them.

C H A P. 14.

Of the hope of eternall life.

FROM the apprehension, and sense of Gods love, followes a confirmed hope, or confidence, and undoubted expectation of eternall life. Now concerning this hope, and certainty, the first Question is whether a believer may be infallibly be assured of his salvation?

1. Ans. There is not onely a possibility for the believer to come to this certainty, but it is his duty also, never to rest contented till he have obtained it, Heb. 6. 11. & 10. 22. Rom. 4. 21 & 8. 35. — 39. For

certaine.

2. First, God hath confirmed this to every believer by promise, by oath, by earnest, by seals, Iohn 3. 16. Ier. 31. 40, 41. Heb. 6. 17. Eph. 1. 14. Mark. 16. 16.

3. Secondly, Faith ought to receive all that which God hath thus confirmed, Heb. 4. 2.

4. This certainty is perfected in us by three Acts, 1. by an act of Faith properly so called whereby we rest upon God by Christ, for the certaine obtaining of salvation: 2 By an act of βπιγνώσεως of knowledge, whereby we believing understand that God hath certainly adjudged this salvation unto us. 3. By an act of confidence or of hope, whereby we certainly looke for this salvation, which is thus adjudg'd to us and made ours. But yet for all that the whole application is attributed to Faith, because it dependeth first, and chiefly on faith.

5. Thirdly, salvation, and life eternall is contained in the object of Faith. For we believe life everlasting, 1 Peter 1. 3, 4, 5.

6. Fourthly, true grace (of the certainty of which we spake before) is never separated from life eternall, Heb. 6. 9. For the grace of justification is a more certaine cause of life, and the grace of sanctification is a part of eternall life, Iohn. 17. 3. Gal. 2. 20.

7. Fifthly, God the Father hath decreed to bring to eternal life all those that believe, for Faith is a fruit of election, Acts 2. 47. & 13. 48.

8. Sixthly, Christ our Saviour doth perpetually intercede for the faithfull, that they may be preserved from evill, Iohn 17. 15.

9. Seventhly, the holy Ghost doth direct, and keepe the faithfull to life eternall, Iohn 16. 16. Ez. 36. 27.

10. Eighthly, by the power of God, and Christ, the faithfull are preserved, Iohn 10. 28, 29. 1 Peter. 1. 5. And strengthened, Eph. 3. 16. Col. 1. 10. Pil. 4. 1.

Motives to in-

The second Question by what motives a believer may be stirred up to seeke for this certainty of hope with all diligence?

11. Ans. 1. God requires this, Rom. 15. 13. Col. 1. 23. Heb. 6. 11. & 10. 22. 1 Peter. 5. 9.

12. Secondly, this hope is as necessary for a believer in time of temptation, as a helmet is for a Souldier, and an anchor for a Ship, Ep. 6. 17. 1 Thess. 5. 8. Heb. 6. 19.

13. Thirdly, it brings with it freedome, and strength and courage, and constancy, in every worke of the Lord, Heb. 3. 6. 1 Cor. 15. 58. The reason is because the end, and fruit of a mans worke doth allure, and whet him on to industry, and constancy in working. For although our salvation be not the chiefe, and last end of our obedience, yet it is the fruit of it, and in that respect, partaketh of the nature of an end, Rom. 6. 22. So that it is not only lawfull but very expedient also, for the helpe of our infirmity to set about the worke of piety, with an eye upon the recompence of reward, James 5. 7. Gal. 6, 7, 8. Heb. 12. 2. Ps. 19. 12.

14. Fourthly, it is the end of the calling of the Faithfull, whence whence also it is stil'd the hope of their calling, Eph. 1. 18.

15. Fifthly, this hope maketh not ashamed, because it is never vaine, neither doth it deceive, Rom. 5. 4, 5. Rom. 8. 24.

16. Sixthly, it is hope by which a beleever is saved, Romans 8. 24.

The third Question is what a beleever ought to do, for the obtaining and preserving of a lively hope.

17. Ans. He ought, 1. to preserve his Faith firme, and lively. For hope flowes from, and depends upon Faith, and that not only, the being of Faith, but the degree, the measure, and the sense of it. Heb. 11. 1.

18. Secondly, he ought with all care to keepe a good conscience: for such a Conscience doth make much for the confirming of Faith and hope, 1 Tim. 1. 19. 2 Tim. 4. 7, 8.

19. Thirdly, he ought diligently to observe the experiment which he hath had of Gods love towards him. For experience causeth hope, Rom. 5. 4.

20. Fourthly, he ought oftentimes to set before his eyes the examples of those, who have with happy successe placed their hope in God, Iames 5. 10, 11.

21. Fifthly, he ought to be frequent in the exercises of piety, Rom. 15. 4.

The fourth Question is what are the signes of a true and lively hope? The signes of true hope.

22. Ans. 1. True hope is carried upon God onely, who is therefore cal'd the God of hope, Rom. 15. 13. And the hope of Israel, Jer. 14. 8.

23. Secondly, it rests upon that free mercy of God which is manifested in justification, and not upon any humane merits, or strength, nor upon any externall and common blessings of God, Rom. 5. 1.

24. Thirdly, it doth expect not only happinesse, but sanctification also, Gal. 5. 5.

25. Fourthly, it is begotten, and preserved by holy exercises, Rom. 15. 4.

26. Fifthly, it brings forth patience, 1 Thess. 1. 3.

27. Sixthly, it causeth spirituall joy, Heb. 3. 6.

28. Seventhly, it begetteth a constant care of holynesse,

1 Iohn 3. 3.

C H A P. 15.

Of Consolation.

FROM Christian hope or confidence, ariseth consolation, which is, a confirmation of the soule, against the griefe and feare that doth oppresse it, for it is not properly a re-joycing of the soule (as some thinke) but rather a repressiō, or a mitigation, or an allaying of griefe, feare, or sadnesse. For that man is said to receive comfort and consolation, when he hath in some sort put away griefe, although joy be not yet come in the place, or if his sadnesse, and sorrow, be at least in some sort mitigated, and lessend. For sometimes there may be a mixture of sorrow and consolation together. Neither are men either perfectly well or perfectly ill, when they begin to receive consolation, Esa. 40. 1, 2. Now concerning this consolation

The first Question is, whether a believer may attaine unto solid comfort against all kinds of evill?

1. Ans. He may. For, 1. God the Father in respect of the faithfull is the God of all consolation, comforting them in all afflictions, 2 Cor. 1. 3, 4.

2. Secondly, Christ is the principle, or fountaine by which the comfort of the faithfull doth flow, 2 Cor. 1. 5.

3. Thirdly, the holy Ghost is the comforter of all believers imparting unto them all consolation, John 14. 16. 26. & 15. 26. & 16. 7. 13.

4. Fourthly, the whole Scripture maketh for the consolation of the faithfull, Rom. 15. 4.

5. Fifthly, this consolation is made strong by the immutable counsell of God, and by his strengthening of believers, Heb. 6. 17, 18.

6. Together with this consolation God doth joyne the confirmation of his grace, which consists in a repairing of their strength, and in a fortifying of them against troubles. For whereas the faithfull oft times like weake women, through the apprehension of some terrible evill, doe fall as it were into a swoond, and all their strength is dissolved, God on the other side in this defect makes a supply by his grace of confirmation: we have a notable example of this, Dan. 10. & 8. There remained no strength in me, & 10. And behold a hand touched me which set me upon my knees, and upon the palms of my hands, and he said unto me, stand upright, and 18. Then there came againe and toucht me one like the appearance of a man, and he strengthened me and said, O man greatly beloved feare not, peace be unto thee, be strong, yea be strong, and when he had spoken unto me I was strengthened, and said let my Lord speake for thou hast strengthened me. And this is a grace which we are commanded to seek for, Heb. 12. 12.

CHAP. 16.

Of Afflictions.

THe second Question is, what those evils be against which the faithfull ought to seeke consolation?

Ans. They are either corporall, as the afflictions of this life and death, or spirituall, as spirituall temptations and sins.

The third Question is, by what arguments, a believer may be confirmed, and comforted against the afflictions of this life? Consolation for the afflicted.

1. Ans. First, such kinde of afflictions are common to man, 1 Cor. 10. 13. And are wont to be accomplisht in believers while they live here, 1 Pet. 5. 9. Act. 14. 22.

2. Secondly, without Gods Providence not so much as a haire of our head shall perish, Mat. 10 30. Lvk. 21. 18.

3. Thirdly, the fatherly love of God is wont to be manifest in the afflictions of the faithfull, Heb. 12. 6.

4. Fourthly, Christ himselfe hath suffered, and overcome all the afflictions of the World, to the intent he might succor us; Heb. 4. 15.

5. Fittly, God together with the temptation, will strengthen by the spirit, and make a way to escape, 1 Cor. 10. 13.

6. Sixthly, the time of affliction is but short, 2 Cor. 4. 17. 1 Pet. 5. 10.

7. Seventhly, the fruit of afflictions is saving. For every chastening yeildeth the peaceable fruit of righteoufnesse, unto them that are exercised therewith, Heb. 12. 11.

The fourth Question is whether we are to comfort our selves after one sort in all afflictions?

Diverse kinds
of afflictions.

8. Ans. There be diverse kinds of afflictions, so there be severall wayes of consolation. For some afflictions are brought upon us by men for righteoufnesse sake, for the cause of Christ and his Gospell and Kingdome, Mat. 5. 10. & 11. Marke 10. 29. Luke 18. 29. These afflictions are commonly stiled by the name of persecution, or the Crosse, because of the resemblance which they have to, and participation with the Crosse of Christ, Phil. 3. 10. In these kindes of afflictions, consolation is easy and at hand, for we ought even to account the afflictions of this nature, and for such a cause to be themselves an argument of great comfort, Mat. 5. 12. Acts 5. 14. James 1. 2. 1 Pet. 4. 14. 16. The reason is because in these persecutions which wee suffer for righteoufnesse sake there is the nature of a testimony, martyrdome, and example whereby we glorify God before men. And so out of the eater comes forth meat according to Sampsons riddle, Ind. 14.

9. Some afflictions are laid upon us by God, to prove us, and to trie us, Exo. 15. 25. & 16. 5. Deut. 8. 2. 16. These are properly call'd tryalls and temptations. In these kinds of afflictions our consolation is not to be fetcht from the temptation it selfe, but from our manner of bearing it, when we through the grace of God in such a condition, do sanctify and glorify his Name, Iob. 1. 24. Our principall care therefore ought to be to frame and compose our selves to a right bearing of these afflictions, and the comfort will follow of its own accord.

10. Some afflictions are laid upon us, as punishments and corrections, Iob. 36. 9. 10. He. 12. 6. For these although there be some comfort contain'd in Gods Fatherly manner of chastening, Heb. 12. 7, 8. Yet this comfort cannot be solidly apprehended, but onely in making right use of the afflictions themselves, Ibid. 6. 11. Here therefore our first care must be to make right use of these visitations before we seeke after comfort.

11. These kind of afflictions are not so different but that they may meete together, in one, and the same trouble. For in persecution the faithfull are alwayes tried, sometimes corrected, but yet there may be trials and corrections often times without persecution, and when they do meet together some of these kinds may more appeare in some then others.

The first Question is what a man in afflictions ought to do to the end that he may obtaine true and solid comfort? The duties of the afflicted.

12. Ans. First, he ought to acknowledge the hand of God afflicting him, Esa. 26. 11. Iob. 5. 6. 8. Amos 3. 6. For this consideration is the foundation of patience, 1 Sam. 3. 18. Psa. 39. 10. And of all those saving truths, which are received by afflictions, Esa. 9. 13.

13. Secondly, he ought to search his wayes and acknowledge his sinnes, Lam. 3. 39, 40. Iob. 36. 9, 10. For although all afflictions are not alwayes sent directly and principally for sinne, yet sinne is the fountaine, and foundation of all afflictions, Rom. 5. 12. It is therefore a course most equall, most safe, and most pleasing to God, that in our afflictions, we behold our sins, which either have directly procured them, or at least deserved them.

14. Thirdly, he ought to submit himselfe in the presence of God, and under his mighty hand, Iames 4. 10. 1 Per. 5. 6. 2 Sam. 15. 20. Levit. 26. 41. Otherwise the chastening of God is contemned, and men shew their security and vaine confidence, Pro. 3. 11. Heb. 12. 5.

15. Fourthly, he ought by humble repentance to seeke the face, and favour and mercy of God. Psa. 57. 2. Lam. 3. 41. Amos 4. 12. Hos. 5. 15. & 6. 1 & 14. 2. There are three seasons wherein we ought to seeke God by repentance, 1. presently after sinne committed, 1 Cor. 5. 1. 2. after some teare of punishment, or some threatning of God, Eph. 2. 1. 2. 3. After that the wrath of God hath in some sort broke in upon us Dan. 9. 13. Those Christians are the best which lay hold upon the first opportunity, for they declare that they do hate sinne simply for it selfe, those that make use of the second season come next to them. For such believe although they see not, but those that repent not in the third season are altogether desperate.

16. Fifthly, he ought to see that he profit by his affliction in all the parts of new obedience. 2 Cron. 28. 22. Esa. 26. 9. Iob. 36. 10. Hebrewes 12. 10. Esay 27. 11. Leviticus 26. 18. 21. --- 28.

17. Sixthly, he ought patiently to expect what end the Lord will make, 1 Cor. 10. 13. Jam. 5. 7. 8. 11. 2 Sam. 15. 25. Mica. 7. 9. He that seekes freedome by unlawfull meanes doth offend God more, 2 Kings 1. 3. Neither yet is he free but by an exchange of a lesse evill for a greater, Esa. 24. 18. Amos 5. 19.

CHAP. 17.

Of Death.

CONCERNING Death the first Question is whether it be a thing to be contemned?

Of the contempt of Death.

1. Ans. Death is not simply to be contemned, 1. because it is in its own nature a grievous judgement of God against the sinnes of men, and so doth represent, both our desert and Gods wrath. 2. because it is in its owne nature, a passage to an eternall separation from God, so that it is a point either of desperate security, or affected wisdom, and valour, to contemne death after that manner that some of the heathen have done, who have been prais'd for so doing. But yet comparison being made betwixt death and those things which after death are prepared for the faithfull, death may, and ought in some sort to be contemned by all believers, Heb. 12. 2.

The second Question is whether a believer ought to desire and pray for death?

Ans. Death is not simply and absolutely to be desired, 1. Because it is in it selfe a evill, 2. Because God as a Generall hath placed us in our station of this life, and without his Commandement we ought not to forsake, nor simply to desire to be dismiss before the time that hee hath appointed, 2 Cor. 5. 4. 9. But yet the faithfull may and ought so to expect the life which is to come after death that they do account it much more pleasing to them then this present life, 2 Cor. 5.8. And to tend thither, with the desire that is moderate, and subject to the will of God, as being a condition much better, Phil. 1.13. Ro. 8.23. 2 Tim. 4.8.

The third Question is, by what arguments the mind of a believer may be strengthened against the feare of death?

2. Ans. First, if he seriously consider, and by faith apprehend that Christ hath by his Death destroyed the power of Death, Heb. 2.14. and taken away its sting, 1 Cor. 15.56. So that death hath bene swallowed in victory by Christ, and that victory is imparted to beleevers, Ibidem & 54.57.

How to diminish the feare of death.

3. Secondly, if he consider also that this was one end of Christs death, to free us from the feare of death, as being a great bondage, Heb. 2.15.

4. Thirdly, if he consider also with faith, that the love of Christ and of God in Christ is so firme and constant that no death can seperate us from it, Ro. 8.35.

5. Fourthly, if he consider with himselfe that for Christ the death of the faithfull is pretious in Gods eyes, Psal. 72.14. And be also fully persuaded that the good hand, and fatherly providence of God, is present with, and watcheth over the faithfull for good both in life and death, Mat. 10.28, 29, 30, 31.

6. Fifthly, if he well consider from how many, and from how great evils hee shall be freed by death, as, 1. From sin, 2. From those miseries that follow sinne, Esay 57.1.2.5. Which cause others often times to seeke for death, Apoc. 9.6. 3 From the temptations of the Devill. Apoc. 12.8. 4 From the opposition and vexation of the World and the flesh, Apoc. 14.13. Eccles. 4.1.2. Hence it is that death is cal'd a rest and a sleepe, Esa. 57.2.6. 1 Thess. 4.13, 14. Thus much the Devill himselfe in the shape of Samuel did acknowledge 1. Sam. 28.15.

7. Sixthly, if he cast his eyes alwayes upon that happinesse to which we shall come by death, For after death, 1. The grace of God shall be perfected in us, 1 Cor. 13.10. 2 We shall be with God, 2 Cor. 5.8. With Christ and the blessed spirits, Phil. 1.23. 3. We shall enjoy a firme and immutable estate of heavenly life, 2 Corinth. 5.1. Heb. 11. 10.16. Luke 16.9.

8. Seventhly, if he seriously set his minde to consider the vanity of all those things which depend upon this present life, and which we forsake at our death, Eccl. 2. 18.

9. Eighthly, if he perswade himselfe that Gods providence without him is sufficient to provide for all those things concerning which he can be careful, and do know withall that without it, no good can be done, though he should continue in life.

The fourth Question is what a beleever ought to do that he may enjoy this consolation?

10. Ans. First, he ought to labour that he may have a speciall faith in God through Christ, and that this faith be lively, and strong, Luke 2. 28. 2 Tim. 1. 12. 1 John 5. 4.

11. Secondly, he ought with all care to preserve his Conscience pure and without offence, Acts 24. 15, 16. Heb. 10. 22.

12. Thirdly, he ought with this faith and Conscience to live in a continuall expectation of the coming of the Lord, so carying himselfe here as becomes a Citizen of heaven, Phil. 3. 20. 2 Pet. 3. 12.

13. Fourthly, he ought alwayes to thinke the hower of his death to be neare and at hand, Psalme 19. 20. Esai. 28. 15. 2 Tim. 4. 6.

14. Fifthly, he ought alwaies to exercise himselfe to a deniall and forsaking of the world, 1 Cor. 7. 29, 30, 31. Gal. 6. 14.

15. Sixthly, he ought to make death familiar in a sort to himselfe both by a frequent meditation of it, and by those exercises to which God calls him, 1 Cor. 15. 31. 2 Cor. 1. 9. & 4. 10, 11.

16. Seventhly, he ought to labour that as the outward man drawes to corruption, so the inward man may be renewed more and more, 2 Cor. 4. 16.

17. Eighthly, he ought not to thinke so much upon death itselfe, as upon Gods grace both in death, and in those things which follow after, 2 Tim. 4. 8.

18. Ninthly, he ought in all humility to commend his soule unto God as unto a faithfull Creator, 1 Pet. 4. 16.

CHAP. 18.

Of Temptations.

Concerning temptations the first Question is by what Arguments a beleever may strengthen himselfe against their assaults ?

1. Ans. First, if he consider seriously that these temptations are part of that warfare to which the faithfull are called, Eph. 6. 12. and unto which they have given up their names in baptisme, and have bound themselves by oath.

Of resisting temptations.

2. Secondly, if he consider that Christ is our Captaine and Generall in this war, Apoc. 12. 7. That he is every where present and beholds the combate with his eye. This must needs be a strong incitement to provoke us to do valiantly. For he doth exhort us to fight, helps us to overcome, aids us when we faint, and crownes those that conquer.

3. Thirdly, if he consider that the direction of the temptations themselves doth depend wholly upon the providence and disposing of God, Mat. 6. 13. 2 Thess. 2. 11. 2 Cron. 18. 21. Ro. 4. 1.

4. Fourthly, if he meditate upon the fruit and the use of temptations, Lu. 21. 31. 2 Cor. 12. 8, 9.

5. Fifthly, if he propound unto himselfe Christ who was tempted, overcame temptations, and succors them that are tempted, Heb. 2. 18 & 4. 15. Col. 2. 15.

6. Sixthly, if he distinguish betwixt the evill of temptation, and temptations themselves.

The second Question is, what a beleever ought to do that hee may apprehend this comfort in the hower of temptation ?

7. First, he ought to account all those temptations which intice him unto sin as his utter enemies, 1 Pet. 2. 11.

8. Secondly, he ought to abhor and detest those very suggestions themselves which lead unto sin, Rom. 7. 15.

9. Thirdly, he ought to arme himselfe diligently against his spirituall enemies, Eph. 6. 13.

10. Fourthly, hee ought to resist them with all his might, James 4.7. 1 Pet. 5.9.

11. Fifthly, he ought in this combate not to trust unto his own strength, but to implore the helpe of God, and to rest upon him, Mat. 6. 13.

12. Sixthly, hee ought in foule temptations to abstaine from all disputation, and speciall deliberation about the thing suggested, resting himselfe satisfied in that he doth detest them, Mat 4 10. For such temptations are vile and do easily cleave to us.

13. Seventhly, he ought to avoid all those occasions which may further the temptation, Pro. 4 14, 15.

14. Eighthly, he ought to repell and extinguish with all possible strength troublesome suggestions, Eph. 6. 16. Yea, and sometimes to contemne them also, when after all means used they cease not to be troublesome.

15. Ninthly, he ought (if they returne againe and againe with new assaults after that they have beene oft repeld) to remember that it is the part of a valiant Souldier not onely to suffer, and come cleare off from assaults and skirmishes of his enemy, but also to indure the tediousnesse of a long sledge when there is occasion.

The third Question is, how a man may discern whether a temptation have prevailed against him yea or no?

16. Ans. First, this is not to be judg'd from hence that a man is either troubled in his mind, or doth retaine his calme-nesse. For a vexation of mind for the most part, which folowes upon foule temptations, is not onely no signe of their prevailing, but is also a demonstration of a sanctified heart, and a quiet security doth often times shew that the temptation hath prevailed. The reason is because the opposition, which is apparent in this perturbation, is a signe that there is some thing in the soule contrary to the temptation, and a quietnesse doth betray some consent. For water is not troubled by the powing in of water but by the casting in of fire. He which finds least trouble is in most danger, Luke 11: 21. So Ananias and Saphira were quiet, Act. 5. 3. 8. But Paul found a great deale of inward trouble, Ro. 7. 24. 2 Cor. 12. 7, 8.

But

Signes of a
temptation.

But if this trouble be such that it drives away a man from God, and doth not rather stir up to seeke him, it is not to be allowed or cherished, for then the temptation is, ( although not directly and of its owne nature ) yet indirectly and through the perversnesse of our nature; effectually, and the tempter hath obtained his desire.

18. Secondly, a manifest signe of a prevailing temptation is the commission of that sinne to which the temptation did provoke, Mat. 6. 13. But here it is to be observed that this falls out not onely when the sinne is fully acted and committed, but also when there is even the very first degree of it, in the consent of the will, or in the least delight in the evill thought of, although there be no purpose to commit it. Jam. 1. 14, 15. And this is so much the worse if the delight be as they say Morosa, that is, if it continue for any while, and be not presently repeld.

19. Thirdly, although we give no consent unto the temptation, yet if the temptation arise from our selves, there is a sinne of ours in it, even in its first conception, because it flowes out of our flesh and from our corruption, although it may be kindled and blowne up to a flame by the Devill, Mat. 15. 18, 19. Gen. 6. 5. & 8. 21. James 1. 14. But this degree of sinne is such that though it requires perpetuall humiliati- on, yet it ought not to deprive us of comfort, because it is the common condition of all the faithfull, who this notwithstanding are in Christ beloved, and accepted of God. But if the temptation proceed meerely from the Devill we ought to detest it, as much as possible we can, but are not to acknowledge it for our own sin, Mat. 4. 36. 9.

20. Now a temptation is then to be judged to proceed from the devill alone and not from our selves, 1. when it is repugnant to the light of nature, or to reason it selfe, and to our naturall inclination, 2. when it ariseth not as other ordinary thoughts, but ceaseth upon, and invades the minde suddenly, and with a kinde of vehemency, after the manner of flashes of lightning.

21. Fourthly, so long as by fervent prayers and such like spirituall weapons we do resist and wrastle with any temptation we may be sure that it hath not yet prevailed over us, and that it hath not as yet gotten us within its power, 2 Cor. 12.7, 8, 9. James 4.7.

desertions.

The fourth Question is how the Conscience of a beleever may be supported in a temptation of God, that is, in some spirituall desertion upon which there followes much anxiety?

22. Ans. First, we must remember that even the best of Gods servants have had experience of these desertions, as Iob. 6.4. 9. 13.26. & 16.9. David Psalme. 6. & 77. And even Christ himselfe the beloved Son of God, Mat. 27.46.

23. Secondly, we must know that these desertions are not so much reall and in very deed, as in our sense, and apprehension, Heb. 13.5.

24. Thirdly, we must know that God doth not forget his people, no not then when he seemes to have forsaken them, Esa. 49.15, 16. But doth for his own glory and their good only seeme to do so.

25. Fourthly, we may be sure by Gods Word and Covenant that this desertion shall be but short, especially if it be compar'd with the time and continuance of his mercies, Esa. 54.7, 8. & 57.20.

26. Fifthly, we must make inquiry in our Consciences with all diligent examination whether our owne finnes have not bene the cause of Gods so dealing, Esa. 57.21. Which if we shall finde to be so, we must confesse them humbly, inreate for mercy, and seriously forsake them me Psal. 51.

27. Sixthly, we ought to live by Faith, Heb. 2. 4. waiting for the Lord which hideth his face from us, Esa. 8. 17.

28. Seventhly, we ought to stir up our selves to lay hold upon God, Esa. 64.7.

29. Eighthly, we ought alwayes to remember that although God do seeme to be absent from us a long while, yet he doth only wait for a fit time to shew mercy, Esa. 30.18.

C H A P. 91.

Of the Conscience of sinne.

CONCERNING finnes the first Question is, how a Christian may be comforted when his Conscience doth reprove him for, and accuse him of diverse sins?

1. Ans. Sinnes are of two sorts, For some be properly call'd infirmities, or fautes which do comonly cleave to the best and most vigilant of the faithfull, 1 Cor. 6. 7. Others are more hainous wickednesse which neither are to be found in all the faithfull nor in any of them at all unlesse very sedom; and by reason of some violent temptation, Romans 6. 13. Gal. 6. 1.

2. An infirmity is when a purpose to do well is present, but power of performing it is absent, Rom. 7. 18. A wickednesse is when the purpose it selfe at least in some particular fact is impious, 2 Sam. 12. 10. Now in case of infirmities these following arguments may serve for consolation.

3. First, even the best and most perfect of Gods Children while they live here are subject unto these failings, James 3. 2. 1 John 1. 8.

4. Secondly, God doth pittie his servants in their infirmities as a loving Father pitties his little children, Pf. 103. 13. Mat. 3. 27.

5. Thirdly, Christ himselfe is touched with the sense of our infirmities, Heb. 4. 15.

6. Fourthly, Christ himselfe is such a propitiation for such kinde of finnes, that he offers us consolation for them before they be committed, John 2. 1, 2. Ro. 6. 14.

7. Fifthly, by Christ we have accessse with boldnesse to the Throne of grace, that wee may obtaine mercy, Heb. 6. 14.

8. Sixthly, God at our prayer will cure our infirmity, Esa. 40. 29. Pf. 103. 3:

9. Seventhly, the spirit helpeth our infirmities, Rom. 8. 26.

10. Eighth-

10. Eighthly, these infirmities shall not be imputed to us for sins, Rom. 7. 17. 10.

11. In more hainous finnes, there can be no solid comfort had, till they betaken away, 1 Cor. 5. 2. 6. The reason is because such kind of finnes make even beleivers themselves subject to the threatnings of the Law, and do in a great degree, exclude them from the promises of the Gospell, wast the Conscience, Heb. 10. 22. And expose them to the wrath of God, as being partakers with the wicked and unbeleivers. Eph. 5. 6, 7. Gal. 6. 17. And therefore have in them a cause of terror not of consolation. Heb. 10. 31. Yet a beleever may in some sort susteine himselfe even in the greatest finnes with the possibility and hope of mercy, Romans 11. 23. Luke 22. 23.

The second Question, what a beleever is to do that he may have consolation, in case his Conscience accuse him for his finnes?

12. First, he ought to be affected with sinne, and to groane under it as a burden, Mat. 11. 28, 29.

13. Secondly, hee ought continually to detest all sinne, Ro. 7. 15.

14. Thirdly, he ought evermore to have a care that he fulfill not the lusts of sinne, Gal. 5. 16.

15. Fourthly, he ought to indeavour the mortification of them, Ro. 8. 13.

16. Fifthly, he ought looking upon the promises to fly unto Christ and to cleave unto him more and more, Rom. 7. 25. Phil. 3. 9.

17. But grosse finnes must first be removed and taken away before a man can be fit to receive solid consolation, Esa. 1. 16. 27. 18.

Certaine collections out of the Booke of William Paris concerning temptations, and the resisting of them, which I thought good here to set down for the further illustration of the Doctrine of temptations, because they are not read in the Author, except by a very few.

First, Temptation in one sense is nothing else but a triall, and to tempt is nothing else but to make a triall or experiment of any thing, that we may know it, that is, that it may be discover'd, and become manifest, and this is all that the Devill can doe, hee cannot with strength conquer us, or cast us down. For unlesse we of our owne accord trust him, and deliver our selves into his hand, he can have no power over us. He can prevaile no farther against us, then we give him leave or permit him. All that he can do therefore is to tempt us, that is to make an experiment what we are, whether weake or strong, whether we be such as will yeild to him, or whether such as will resist him valiantly. And if in the beginning of the temptation, he finde that we make valiant resistance, he despairing of the victory, and being overcome and confounded, for the most part departeth presently. And this is the property of a tempter when hee hath made his argument, and found what he sought for, to surcease the work of temptation.

II. In another sense temptation signifies, a fighting against one, or a war, or a battell, and it is very likely that whatsoever the Devill attempts against us is by way of such a fight, if we consider the matter but diligently. For he doth all that he doth with a purpose and desire to conquer, whether he lay snares for us, or whether he make tryall of us, or whether he pretend some good things to deceive us, or whether he smite us with the staffe, or sword, whether he undermine the wall of our defense, or whether he take from us our spirituall food, or procure it to be taken away, for he doth do all these things with a desire to do us a mischief. And in very deed, all these are parts of that war, or combate, wherewith hee fights against us.

G

Thirdly,

- III. Every sinne hath its temptations, and against the mind of man doth the devill fight, besieging it, in a circumventing way, and ordering his armies, and forces, against the armies of vertues, and against the Castle of mans soule.
- IV. The fightings which arise from the faculty of reason within our selves are these, 1. Curiosity, that is a lust to know things not necessary, and things the knowledge of which tend nothing to, nor helpe forward at all salvation, 2. Slownesse to believe, 3. Levity in believing every thing, 4. Doubtfulnesse, 5. Suspiciousnesse, 6. A spirit of blasphemy which is a spring and fountaine of abominable thoughts, and of thoughts so horrible and troublesome, that such a kind of temptation is like a martirdome, and there have beene some that have rather desired to suffer Martyrdome then to endure such thoughts.
- V. Any one may resist any temptation of the Devill, if he do simply and purely will it, without any mixture of unwillingnesse. For no man is overcome, or yeilds to the temptation utterly against his will, for so his will remains unconquered, and victorious and uninclined to consent unto the temptation, and so a man should both yeild, and not yeild. But that a man may, simply, and purely be willing to make resistance it is not from man himselfe, or from any naturall power in him but from the gift of God, and the helpe and assistance of his grace.
- VI. Now wee must observe that when the question is, whether a man may have a will to resist temptation? this word may doth admit two significations; For it signifies sometimes a possibility which is passive, in respect of capacity, and sometimes in regard of vertue or power, or efficiency, now it is manifest, that no man can resist any temptation by way of efficiency, but by way of possibility, or passibility.
- VII. Besides the gifts of graces and of vertues the providence and protection of God is necessary for believers, that they may resist temptations, and so are those manifold helps wherewith God succors his elect in the combate.
- VIII. The first of these helpes is a driving away of the enemies whereby they are sometimes not suffered to tempt the Elect, Job. i.

- I X. The second helpe is a bridling of the enemies that they cannot tempt so much as they would, Job, 2.
- X. The third helpe is from the tempter himselfe, when even that very shape under which he tempts affords us some helpe and instruction, so the forme of the Serpen: might have caused Eve to have suspected his temptation.
- X I. The fourth helpe is from the temptation it selfe, when it either stirs up feare in us, which is the best keeper, or stirs us up to fight, and encourageth us against the enemy.
- X I I. The fifth is, anew grace, or an increase of the former. For to those that imploy their talents well God gives an increase either in the greatnesse, or number, Mat. 25. Luke, 19.
- X I I I. The sixth is a cessation, or peace, or rather a truce from the temptation.
- X I V. The seaventh is a refreshment in the heate of temptation, which is a mitigation of it, as when the tribulation is turned into a sollace.
- X V. The eighth is a comforting, that is a strengthening, and lifting up of the heart by a promise of strength and victory, and by a demonstration of the weakenesse of the enemies, and the lightnesse of the fight.
- X V I. The ninth is consolation, that is a chearing of the heart, in troubles, in sorrow and griefe.
- X V I I. The tenth is a bestowing of Faith and Hope, and a confirmation of the same, against the shaking of feare, which ariseth from our own defect and infirmity.
- X V I I I. The eleventh is an upholding of them that are set upon that they faill not, that is, that they receive no hurt. Now they are oft times so assaulted that they are ready to fall, and that for this end that they may acknowledge their own infirmities, and may ascribe it to Gods mercy and not their own power, that they are kept from falling.
- X I X. The twelfth is, Gods receiving of them that fly unto him, in respect of which he is called, the hiding place of the Elect.
- X X. The thirteenth is Gods fighting against and overthrowing the enemies.
- X X I. The fourteenth is outward tribulation of which there are many profits helping this way.

- XXII. The fifteenth is the remembrance of the last things, Death, judgement, damnation and happinesse.
- XXIII. It is very difficult to overcome temptations because that in this corruption of our nature no man fights with all his strength against any temptation, but partly for it, and against himselfe. A believer in temptation is as a Kingdome divided within it selfe, like an armed Horseman that sits upon a winching, unruly, and unbroken Colt, like a House well built, but upon a weak foundation, like a stout warriour standing upon a slippery pavement, or he is partly armed, and partly without armour, or loaded with a grievous burthen.
- XXIV. Amongst the most hidden treacheries and most subtil temptations of the devill, whereby the most wise, and valiant Christians are often times brought under: the first is a long tediousnesse, whereby he wearies him, by which he indeavours, not only to bring him whom he tempts into the temptation, but into desperation also, to make him believe that he belongs not to God, and that God cares not for him, And from hence comes this folly and mischief because men know not what a great deale of advantage ariseth from a long and often combating with temptations, how it serves for the breaking of pride which is rooted within us, for the discovering of other infirmities which would else have never been seen, and for the preservation of humility.
- XXV. The second craft of the devill is, the strangenesse of the temptation, for he oft times sets upon many of the elect with unusuall temptations, whereupon it happens that they become very fearefull that they belong not to God, because they cannot heare of any that have bin tempted in the same sort.
- XXVI. The third subtilty is, when the devill goes about to make a man change that state wherein he is, and wherein he is well, even as Birds and Fishes, are often times, by noise, and vehement stirring, driven out of those places in which they were safe from the nets and the snares of the Foulers, and Fishers.
- XXVII. The fourth subtilty is when he invites a man to those things that are above his strength.
- XXVIII. The fifth subtilty is when under the presence of some good, he drawes man into danger.

- XXIX. The sixth subtilty is when under the pretence of vertue e perswades a man to some vice.
- XXX. The seventh and most dangerous subtilty of all, is a peace, and cessation from temptations, whereupon followes security, sloath, pride, contempt of our brethren, hardnes of heart.
- XXXI. A man may resist temptations three wayes, 1. He resists that consente not. The tempter is overcome, if he overcome not us, 2. He resists temptations that flies from them and shunns them, 3. He resisteth which beateth them backe & makes oppositiour.
- XXXII. With a shunning of temptations we must joyne an indignation. For even as a Marchant that hath some pretious commodity, will scorne to looke after, or to hearken to such a chapman as shall offer him for it a great deale under the worth, and some times falls into an indignation against him, so he which loves God inirely will not vouchsafe to looke after or hearken to the Devill, wharsoever he offer him, that he would forsake him, yea and he cannot but have an indignation when he offers him that which is infinitely of lesse worth and even nothing at all in comparisou.
- XXXIII. And here it is a point of wisdom, and spirituall skillfullnesse, so to cleave unto vertue and to preserve and defend it that the darts of the tempter may not come at us. So many which love God fervently, do so cleave unto him and bend themselves to do his pleasure, and do imploy themselves so diligently therein, being fixed in such kind of excercises immovably, that the Darts of the temptation do not touch them.
- XXXIIII. A temptatiou is best of all beaten back by its owne weapon, now every vertue doth so, as oft as in the temptation its beauty and pretiousnesse is seriously thought upon, for by such a kinde of meditation, both the finnes that do tempt us, and the thoughts and darts that proceed from them, are alwayes as it were wounded, and weakned, and sometimes also they vanish into nothing, even as darkenesse vanisheth, and flyeth away, where light approacheth; for this cause onely doth vice, and the pleasures and profits thereof seeme to us in the honer of temptation to be of some moment worth, because

CHAP. I.

Of Obedience in Generall.

herto we have spoken of those things that belong to the state of man, now it follows that we inquire into the actions, and conversation of his life.

And here in the first place we are to intreat of obedience to God in generall, where

The first Question is what are the signes of true obedience?

1. Ans. First, if we make more account of Gods will then any commands of men, or any pleasure of our owne, Acts 4. 19. & 5. 29. Mat. 26. 39. The reason is because obedience properly consists in this, that we do simply, and absolutely apply our will to the will of God.

Signes of true obedience.

2. Secondly, if our hearts bee flexible, and easy to be wrought upon by Gods persuasion, Ep. 2. 2. & 5. 6. Col. 3. 6. where of disobedience,

where the υιαι τῆς ἀπειθείας; children as I may say insuasibilitatis, that are not to be perswaded. For they are opposed to those which 1 Pet. 14. are call'd τίκτα ὑπακούον; obedient children. Opposite to this disposition is a hard, and stony heart.

3. Thirdly, if we do prepare our selves to follow the will of God in all things, Deut. 5. 33. Even in those which seeme to be opposite to, and to crosse our profits, so that the flesh apprehends them to be evill, Ier. 42. 2. Heb. 11. 8. Phil. 2. 8.

4. Fourthly, if we do apply our selves to the obedience of Gods will, even then when we see no reason for it, Iohn 13 7, 8. 1 Sam. 5. 9. 15. Otherwise we follow not simply Gods will, but the reason of it.

5. Fifthly, if we be ready in regard of the disposition and bent of the heart, to obey Gods will not only in those things wherein we know his pleasure, but even in those wherein for the present we are ignorant of his will, Ex. 10. 27.

6. Sixthly, if we desire most of all, to know that part of Gods will that concernes our selves, and our own duty, Pf. 119. 33, 34. Acts 9. 7. Job. 21. 13, 14.

7. Seventhly, if the feare of God be continually before our eyes, so that we take heed of diligently, and shun carefully the offending of him, Heb. 12. 28. 29. 1 Pet. 1. 17.

8. Eighthly, if we depend not upon that succeſſe, and event of our obedience which we find in this world, but resolve to hold on, though our obedience procure us never so many afflictions, 1 Pet. 2. 19, 20, 21. & Dan. 3. 17.

9. Ninthly, if wee exercise our selves in the use of those mercies whereby our hearts may be framed to obedience, 1. Cor. 29.

The second Question is, by what motives a man may be stir'd up, to yeild obedience unto God?

Motives to obedience.

10. Ans. First, If he apply his mind to consider of Gods Authority, Matthew 1. 6. Ieremy 35. Romans. 6. 18. 20. 1 Cor. 6. 19.

11. Secondly, if he consider also Gods power, Ier. 18. 6.

12. Thirdly, if he consider that the obedience that God requires of us, tends not at all to his advantage but to ours, Iob. 22 2. & 35. 6. 7.

13. Fourth-

13. Fourthly, if he consider, the benefits of God bestowed upon him, what and how great they be, Rom. 12. 1. Ex. 20. 2. And upon this point our soule should settle as upon a consideration most effectuall; for it is manifest, that the obligation of debt, towards a benefactor is augmented and increased, according to the greatnesse of the benefit. For there is no Question, but that every benefit doth bind him that receives it to the benefactor, and the greater the benefit is the greater the bond. Well therefore doth William Par, urge this consideration after this manner: if any man should give to another a 1000 marks; questionlesse he which receives such a kindnesse should be much bound to the giver, and if he should give him 2000 marks, the bond would be doubly greater, and so on infinitely. If therefore he should give him any thing which were infinitely better, or more precious, the receiver would be infinitely more bound. Now a mans eye, or his tongue alone, (much more his whole body) is incomparably better, then a 1000 markes, therefore every one is infinitely more bound to God, for his tongue, or eye alone, then he should be for the gift of a 1000 marks. Againe let us suppose that God should give to one man, a 1000 marks only, and to another a 1000000 it is manifest that the obligation and debt of thankfulness, and service, from him that received the greatest benefit infinitely, is infinitely greater then the bond, and obligation of him that received the lesse; seeing therefore the obligation whereby a man is tied to God for his tongue, or eye alone is infinitely greater then the other, it is manifest that this obligation is infinite. Now then that obligation, wherein a man is tyed to God, for his whole body is after a sort more infinite, and that for his soule is yet greater, and that againe for eternal & everlasting life, must needs be much greater, and so in the rest, it is manifest therefore that our obligation and debt to God, of thankfulness and service is in many respects infinite.

13. Fifthly, if he consider that the end of Gods greatest mercie is obedience, Luke 1. 74 1 Pet. 1. 18.

15. Sixthly, if he do attend how he is called upon by God continually to obedience, Titus 2. 12. 1 Thessa. 4. 7. 1 Pet. 1. 15.

16. Seventhly, if he remember how we are bound by a most firme covenant to serve God, Iob. 31. 1. Heb. 8. 10.

17. Eighthly, if he consider the misery of those, that obey not God, for hee is the servant of sinne, to death, Rom. 6. 16. 21.

18. Ninthly, if he meditate of the promises that are made to obedience, 1 Tim. 4. 8. 2 Cor. 7. 1. Heb. 5. 9.

19. Tenthly, if he alwayes set before his eyes the threatenings against, and the vengeance which is prepared for the disobedient, 2 Thess. 1. 8.

The third Question is by what meanes a man may be made fit, to yield obedience unto God?

20. Ans. 1. He ought to have a speciall care that his Faith be solid and lively. For all the obedience which is acceptable unto God, is obedience of Faith, Rom. 1. 5. & 16. 26.

21. Now faith brings forth obedience foure wayes, 1. because while it cleaves unto the Word of God, as the Word of eternall truth, it makes all those motives to obedience, which are found in the Scriptures to be forcible, and effectual, 2. Because it doth obtaine all grace from God, 3. Because it doth joyne us to Christ, as to our head, without whom we can do nothing, and in whom we can do all things, John 15. Phil. 4. 13. 4. Because it doth as it were drive such a spirit of life out of Christ.

22. Secondly, he ought to yield himselfe up to the spirit 1 Pet. 1. 22. that he may be in the spirit, Rom. 8. 9. And that the spirit may dwell in him, Ver. 2. that he may be moved by the spirit, Ver. 14. walke in the spirit, Gal. 5. 16. be led by the spirit, Ver. 18. Live and go in the spirit, Ver. 25.

23. Thirdly, he ought to apply his mind to receive the word of God in the power of it 1. Thess. 1. 5. 2 Cor. 10. 4. 5. Rom. 6. 17.

24. Fourthly, he ought to use all his indeavour to present himselfe obedient unto God, according to his Word Rom. 6. 13. 19.

CHAP. 2.

Of Knowledge.

BECAUSE to the performing of Christian obedience there is necessarily required some knowledge. Concerning knowledge therefore

The first Question is, what a kind of study of knowledge ought to be in us?

1. Ans. First, wee ought in this study to take heed of all affected ignorance, 2 Pet. 3. 5. Pro. 2. 22. 29. 7.

2. Secondly, we ought alio to avoid all curiosity, Deut. 29. 29. Pro. 25. 1. 1 Tim. 6. 20. 2 Tim. 2. 23. Titu. 3. 9. Iohn 21. 22. Acts 1. 6. 7.

3. There is a fivefold curiosity of knowledge, 1. when we would know those things that God hath not reveal'd, 2. when we seek to know those things which belong not to our selves, but to others, 3. when we spend most study about things least necessary, 4. When we desire to know the hardest things, and neglect the principles, and fundamentalls, 5. When we rest not simply in the Will of God, but would see a reason of it.

4. Thirdly, we ought to study for the knowledge of those things especially which are most necessary for us in our life, Pro. 9. 12. 1 Tim. 6. 8.

5. Fourthly, we ought to labour for a growth in knowledge, not contenting our selves to be children in understanding 1 Cor. 14. 20. Heb. 5. 12. Cor. 3. 16.

6. Fifthly, we ought to take heed of all pride, which is wont to spring from knowledge, 1 Cor. 8. 1.

The second Question is what a man ought to doe that he may obtaine solid knowledge? Meanes to obtaine knowledge.

7. Ans. First, the mind is wholly to be devoted unto plety, Pro. 1. 7. 9. 10. Psal. 25. 14. Iohn 7. 17. For as knowledge is easy to the godly, Pro. 8. 9. & 14. 6. so to the wicked it is impossible, Pro. 24. 7.

8. Secondly, we must deny our carnall wisdom, 1 Cor. 3. 18. Pro. 26. 12.

9. Thirdly, the lusts of the flesh are to be avoyded, because they blind the mind, Eph. 4. 18. By abusing, disturbing, alluring, and pressing it down.

10. Fourthly, Heavenly wisdom is to be highly prized and to be sought with proportionable care, Pro. 2. 4. & 3. 14. & 4. 7.

11. Fifthly, it is to be desired of God by earnest prayer, Ja. 1. 5.

12. Sixthly, humility and modesty and sobriety must be observed, Pro. 11. 3. Rom. 12. 3.

13. Seventhly, we must confer and consult with those that God hath indowed with a larger measure of this knowledge, Pro. 15. 12.

14. Eighthly, we ought to glory in a holy manner in the possession of Heavenly knowledge, Ier. 9. 24.

15. Ninthly, this wisdom is to be sought, in a daily and religious heeding and hearing of the Word of God, 2 Tim. 3. 16.

16. Tenthly, that knowledge which we have obtained must be turn'd into use and practise, Matthew. 25. 29. John 13. 17.

The third Question is by what arguments a man may be stir'd up to seeke this Divine knowledge?

Ans. 1. Because knowledge pertaines to the naturall perfection of a man, as appeares by the temptation of our first parents, Gen. 3. 5. 2. It is that which makes a difference betwixt man and the brut beasts, Psal. 32. 9. 3. They which are destitute of this knowledge are in some sort more stupid then the brut beasts, Esai. 1. 3. 4. Knowledge brings along with it a certaine singular, and honest delight, Pro. 14. 13.

14. 5. Without knowledge the heart of man cannot be good, Pro. 19. 2. 6. Knowledge is the key of the Kingdome of Heaven, Luke 11. 52. 7. Knowledge is the spirituall food of the soule, Ier. 3. 10. 8. This knowledge is necessary to make us partakers of the covenant of God, Heb. 8. 11. 9. The faithfull are all of them children of light not of darkenesse, Ephes. 5. 8.

10. The want of this knowledge, and avernesse to it is foolishnesse, Pro. 1. 7. 22. 11. It is the cause of all wickednesse,

1 Cor.

Motives to labour after Knowledge,

1 Cor. 2.8. 12 It doth so corrupt good affections that it makes them become evill, Rom. 10.2. 13 It is a cause, and note of perdition, Hof. 4.6. 2 Cor. 4.3.

CH A P. 3.

Of the Feare of God.

THe feare of God, hath very neare affinity with the knowledge of God, P<sup>sal.</sup> 119. 79. Concerning this feare therefore :

The first Question is whether all kind of feares of God be good?

A good and evill feare of God.

Ans. There is both a good and evill feare of God, Ex. 20. 20. And hence it is that feare is sometimes generally commended, Pro. 28. 14. Sometimes againe it is generally found fault with, Apoc. 21. 8.

The second Question is what is that feare of God that is to be found fault with?

2 Ans. 1. That feare which scarres men away from God, or which drives them to fly away from him, Ex. 20. 18. Gen. 3. 8. Apoc. 6. 16. 2 The feare of them also which are onely affraid of Gods anger. Ia. 2. 19. Ro. 8. 15.

An evill feare.

The third Question is what is that feare of God which is commendable?

Ans. 1. When we reverence the Majesty and Power of God, so that the principal cause of our feare is not any evill which we are in danger of, but the excellent perfection of God, Gen. 28 17. & 31. 42. 53. Eccles 5. 2. 2 When we are most affraid of offending God, Eccles 9. 4. Pro. 13. 13. 3 When we are affected with trembling upon the sight of Gods wrath, P<sup>sal.</sup> 90. 10.

The fourth Question is whether the feare of punishment be not a servile feare?

4 Ans. If it be only in respect of punishment it is meerly servile, and vitious, 2. If in punishment we have a chiefe respect unto our own misery, so far it is servile 3. But if punishment be respected only secondarily, and be fear'd especially for this cause that it separat's from God, and tend's, to this end to make us more wary in waiting before God, such a feare is laudable. 4. If the Minister of God, and the revenger be to be fear'd for wrath, Ro. 13. 4. much more is God himselſe, Heb. 12. 29. Amos. 3 & 8.

The fifth Question is what be the signes of the true feare of God?

5. Ans. 1. If we seriously and carefully avoid those things that are displeasing in Gods sight, Pro. 3 7. & 14. 16. & 16. 6. 2. If out of Conscience to God, we abstaine from those sinnes that are most secret and those which in respect of men, we might with safety enough commit, Lev. 19. 14. Gen 42. 18. Job. 31. 21. 22, 23. 3 If we not only abstaine from sins but even hate them and that for this cause especialy because God doth detest them, Pro. 8. 13. 4 If we be most carefull to take heed that we depart not away from God, Ier. 52. 40. 5 If we not only abstaine from evill but study to do that which is good Ecclesiastes 12. 13. Deut. 5. 20. 6 If wee labour after perfection in every part of Sanctification, 2 Cor. 7 1. Phil. 2. 12. 7 If we neither feare men nor any creature so that they can scarre us from doing our duty, Mat. 10 28. Esa 8. 12. 13. 1 Pet. 3. 14, 15. 8 If we imploy our selves in the Word of God, and other holy things with feare, 1 Cor. 7 25. 9 If we use the very name and attributes of God with reverence, Deut. 28. 58.

re God.

The sixth Question, by what motives a man may be stir'd up to feare God?

6. Ans. 1. By a consideration of Gods Omnipotency, Ier. 5. 22. Job 37. 23. 24. Psal. 76. 4, 7. 2 By a consideration of the Kingdome of God Psal. 99. 1. Jer. 10. 7. Dan. 6. 26. 3 His powerfull government of all things, Esa. 25. 1, 2, 3, 4. 4 His particular judgements against sinne, Psal. 119. 11 8, 11 9, 120. 17, Heb. 3 16. Eph. 3. 5. 7. 5. His universall judgement of the whole World, Eccles 12. 13, 14. 1 Pet. 1. 17. 6 His threatenings 2 Kings 21. 19. Heb. 3. 16. 7. The punishments that lie upon us, Luke 22. 4. 8 The mercy of God, Psal. 130. 4. 9 His benefits, Ier. 5. 24. Psal. 72. 5. 10 The promises that are made to them that feare God, Psalms: 25. 12, 13, 14, & 34. 9. & Proverbs 10. 27. & 13. 13. & 19. 23. & 22. 4. Eccles 8. 12.

C H A P. 4.

Of humility towards God.

BECAUSE the nature of obedience stands in subjection, therefore in the next place we must treat of humility towards God in which there is a submission, 1a. 4. 6, 7. which is joyned with the feare of God, Pro. 22. 4.

The first Question is what are the signes of true humility towards God?

1. Ans. First, A serious acknowledgement of our owne imperfection before him, Psal. 30. 2. 3. Esa. 40. 6. 1 Pet. 1. 24. Sins of humility.

For pride stands in an imagination and affectation of excellency;

2. Secondly, an acknowledgement of that same great guilt which lies on us by reason of our sins committed against him Rom. 3. 19. For pride doth exclude the serious confession hereof, Luke 18. 11.

3. Thirdly, a submission with silence to the judgements of God, Psal. 39. 5. 1 Rom. 3. 18. Job. 1. 21. & 39. 37. For a proud man answer: againe, Rom. 9. 20.

4. Fourthly, an amplification of the grace and mercy of God in all his benefits, 1 Chron. 29. 14. For a proud man doth in some sort thinke himselfe worthy of all good things, and that they are no more then his due, Deutri. 8. 14. 17. & 9. 4.

5. Fifthly, an holy admiration of those wayes of God which are past finding out, Job. 42. 3. Rom. 11. 33, 34. Psal. 13. 1. For a proud man thinks himselfe able to comprehend all things, and that all things ought to be communicated to him.

6. Sixthly, a laying aside all our dignity and excellency above others, in the presence of God and duties of his worship, ship, Apoc. 4. 10. For a proud man hath his thoughts upon his owne excellency, and doth contemne others even in the presence of God. Luke 18. 11.

7. Seventhly, an apprehension of our owne meaneffe and basenesse in the presence of God, and a trembling because of of his Majesty, Gen. 18. 27.

8. Eighthly, an holy modesty in the worship of God, Eccles 5. 1, 2, 3.

9. Ninthly, a voluntary undertaking of those taskes which God puts upon us although they may seeme to be but men and base, Phil. 2. 8. Iohn 13. 14.

The second Question is by what arguments a man may be stir'd up to the study of humility towards God?

Motives to humility.

10. Ans. First, if he set before his eyes the majesty and power of God, 1 Pet. 5. 6.

11. Secondly, if he consider of the nature of this humility to wit that it makes the soule of man fit, that it may become an house or temple of God, Esay .66. 3. That it may be a sacrifice for God, Psal. 51. 19. that it may be a receptacle for the grace of God, pro. 3. 3. 5. that it may be capable of wisdom, pro. 11. 2. For this is the mother of all other virtues, and is also it selfe a singular ornament of the soule, 1 pet. 5. 5.

12. Thirdly, if he consider of the promises which are made to the humble. God will respect them, Esay 66. 2. He will give them his grace, Iam. 4. 6. 1 pet. 5. 5. He will exalt them, Iam. 4. 10. 1 pet. 5. 6. Luke 18. 14. He will reward them with all kind of good things, pro. 22. 4.

13. Fourthly, if he consider that humility is necessary to the end that we may seeke God and turne away his anger, Eph. 2. 3. 2 Chron. 12. 7.

14. Fifthly, if he consider that humility is required in every duty that we performe to God, Mica. 6. 8.

CHAP. 5.

Of Sincerity.

BECAUSE sincerity is a proper quality of obedience. concerning it therefore.

The first Question is, wherein consists the sincerity of obedience?

What sincerity is.

1. Ans. First, that it be not only externall, but chiefly, and principally, internall, psal. 51.8. Mat. 23.25.

2. Secondly, that it respect God especially, and not men. Col. 3.23. Mat. 6.1.

3. Thirdly, that there be a shunning of all mixture of corruption, and by-respects, 1 Cor. 5.8.

4. Fourthly, that nothing be omitted, or neglected, which belongs unto perfection.

5. Fifthly, that it expect its fruit from God, and not from man, Rom. 2.29.

The second Question is, what are the signes of sincerity?

Signes of sincerity.

6. Ans. First, if a man love the light of the Word, and come to it that his deeds may be made manifest, Iohn 3.21.

7. Secondly, if he be obedient in the absence, as well as in the presence of lookers on, in secret as well, yea and more, then in publike, phil. 2.12. Mat. 6.6. Not only when God makes his presence manifest by his judgements, but even when he seemes to be absent, psal. 78.34.

8. Thirdly, if he cleave fast unto God in adversity, as well, as in prosperity, Iob. 1. 8, 9, 10, 11.

9. Fourthly, if he have a care of all Gods Commandements, even of those which seeme to be least, Mat. 5.19.

10. Fifthly, if he abstaine from all appearance of evill, Theff. 5.22.

11. Sixthly, if he neither cover, nor excuse his sins, but confesse them, and forsake them, Pro. 28.13. 2. Cor. 7.11.

The third Question is, by what Motives a man may be stir'd up, to endeavour after sincerity?

Motives to sincerity.

11. Ans. First, because God is the searcher of the heart and reins, Pro. 16. 2. & 31. 2. Psal. 7. 10. & 26. 2. Apoc. 2. 23. Ib. 31. 4.

12. Secondly, because it is the means to procure true peace, joy, and security, Pro. 10. 9.

13. Thirdly, God is delighted in sincerity, psal. 51. 8. pro. 10. 20. And will bless those that be upright with all sorts of blessings, pro. 28. 10. 18.

14. Fourthly, a double heart is a base, monstrous and abominable thing.

CHAP. 6.

Of Zeale

BEcause the highest degree of our obedience towards God, consisteth in zeale. Therefore concerning this zeale.

The first Question is wherein the nature of zeale doth consist.

1. Ans. It consisteth in that, that the affection of pleasing God, and promoting his glory be, in the highest degree, Apo. 3. 15. 19. Now because such a kind of vehemency doth principally shew it selfe in the resisting of those things which oppose the will and glory of God; Therefore for the most part it is referred to that opposition, which is made against evill.

The second Question is, what be the signes of true zeale?

2. Ans. First, if it be according to Knowledge, Rom. 10. 2.

3. Secondly, if a man be ready to performe whatsoever duty may be enjoyned, according to his strength yea and above his strength, 2 Cor. 8. 3.

4. Thirdly, if he be diligent in the execution of his duty, Act. 18. 25.

5. Fourthly, if hee put no other limits and bounds to his obedience, then those which God himselfe shall set, Exod. 36. 6.

The nature of zeale.

true zeale.

6. Fifthly, if a man be milde in his owne cause, and in those things which concerne himselfe, and fervent in those which concerne God, Numb. 12. 3. with Exod. 32. 19. Galati. 4. 12. with Acts 13. 9. 12. For true zeale is therefore called the zeale of God, because it is principally carried toward God; Whereupon one saith, it is an affection to revenge the injuries of God, or to root out the enemies of God, or a jealousy persecuting the adulteries of Christs Spouse, together with the occasions and signes of Adulteries; or a vehement love which doth by a close and strait guard seclude the Spouse of Christ from the World.

7. Sixthly, if that fervour and heat of it lie not principally in contentions about questions and controversies, but in the Rudy of good works. Tit. 2. 14.

8. Seventhly, if a man be affected in greater matters more, and in smaler, lesse. Mat. 23. 23.

9. Eighthly, if he be no more indulgent unto himselfe then he is to others, Matt. 7. 4. An example of the contrary wherof we have, Gen. 38. 24. 2 Sam. 12. 5.

10. Ninthly, if he cannot beare with such as are evill, Apoc. 2. 2. though they be such as in other respects are neere unto him, 1 Reg. 15. 13.

11. Tenthly, if his indignation against sinne be joyned with griefe and pity in respect of the sinners, 2 Cor. 12. 21. For so, as well that dull remiffenes which is opposite to zeale, as that fury which looks like the heat of zeale, will be with equall care avoyded.

12. Eleventhly, if it be constant and the same in every condition, Gal. 4. 15. 18.

The third Question is by what motives a man may be stirred up to a zeale of God?

13. Ans. First, because zeale is the property of the people of Christ, and one of the things which Christ intended to our redemption, Tit. 2. 4.

14. Secondly, because those things which belong to God, to our duty toward him, are (above all things) most worthy to be gone about, and done with zeale, Gal. 4. 18. Although we should be even as it were eaten up with it, psal. 69. 10. Joh. 2. 17.

Motives to zeale.

15. Thirdly, because there can be no true religion without zeal, Ap. 3. 15. 16. 19.

16. Fourthly, because if zeale be wanting, sinnes and scandals are not taken away, but nourished in our selves, and others, with the offence of God, and dishonour of his name. 1 Sam. 2. 29. Apoc. 3. 19.

17. Fifthly, because the want of zeale provoketh God to inflict heavy judgements, Apoc. 2. 5. & 3. 16. 2 Theff. 2. 10.

18. Sixthly, because there is a singular promise of Gods presence and communion with Christ, made to such as are zealous, Apoc. 3. 20.

19. Seventhly, because zeale perfecteth, and maketh more acceptable all the duties which we performe unto God. Jam. 5. 16. Rom. 12, 11.

20. Eighthly, because that is the way and fittest manner of seeking the Kingdom of God, Mat. 11, 12.

21. Ninthly, because that many that make only a shew of Religion, are zealous persecuters of Religion. Matthew 23. 15.

The fourth Question is, what is to be done of us, that we may get, confirme, and excite the true zeale of God in our selves?

22. Answer, We ought, 1. to take heed of all those things which are enemies to zeale. Such are, 1. Sundry speculations, and questions, which tend not to the edification of men in Faith, and obedience. 1 Tim. 1. 4. & 4. 7. 2 Tim. 2. 14. 23. Tit. 3. 9. For the intention of the mind about those things which are meerly speculative, although it may be a means to find out the truth, yet it hindreth the intention of the affections about things practisall. And this is the reason why there is more true zeale often found in poore simple Christians, then in our Doctors and Masters, 2. Intention of the affections about worldly things, Luke 8. 14. 3 A spirituall satiety or fulnesse, that is, a presumption of our own sufficiency, and a resting in that degree and measure to which we have attained, Phil. 3. 13. 14. 4 Sloth, Feare, and carnall wisdome. Ind. 1. 19. 21. 27. 28. 29. 30. 31. 32. 33. 5 Familiarity with the world, or the commonesse of sinne abounding in others. Mat. 24.

22. 6 The practice of such things as our conscience alloweth not, Rom. 14. 20. 21. 7 Indulgence to our selves in our own corruptions, 1 Cor. 5. 6. 2 Corinthians 7. 11. Ephes. 4. 29. 30.

23. Secondly, we ought often and seriously to meditate upon the love and mercy of God toward us, Pro. 25. 21. 22.

24. Thirdly, we ought to meditate daily of our imperfections, Phil. 3. 13, 14.

25. Fourthly, we ought to be diligent in the use of all those meanes, which God hath appointed for the begetting of grace in us, 1 Thess. 5. 16. 20.

26. Fifthly, we ought to associat with them, that have the zeale of God, Pro. 22. 24, 25. & 27. 17. Among such we must especially desire those Ministers whose tongues have beene touched with a coale from the Altar, Esay 6. For by notorious and lamentable experience (even in reformed Churches) that is found to be true, which the author (heretofore praised) writ long since. The words of life in the lips of many Doctors & preachers are dead, in regard of the vertue, and efficacy; For they doe so coldly and dully preach the words of God, that they seem even to be dead in their lips: Whence it comes to passe, that as they themselves are cold and dead, even so doe they leave their bearers cold and dead, and I would to God they did not make them so. I knew a man that for this cause left the City Paris; For he said that he was made colder, and colder daily, with the Lectures and Sermons in Paris: And that he was affraid if he should stay longer there, he should be quite frozen to death Spiritually. Wherefore he got him to certaine zealous persons, as unto hot coals, that conversing among them, he might nourish and increase his heat.

The fifth Question is whether zeal is to be judged according to the sence thereof, and the manner of exercising?

27. Ans. Not alwayes; For zeale is greater essentially, in regard of the things about which it is conversant, or accidentally, in regard of some circumstances which happen, and doe not alwayes remaine the same. For example, married folks loving one another dearly, are sometimes more affected upon the very marriage, then in that constant society of life, which afterward followes. But this is by

must judge of zeale

accident, because of the novelty of the thing; But in very deed they may afterward rejoyce as much, or more.

28. So also the faithfull in the first conversion may finde often greater motions of their affections, then afterward; because of the novelty of the thing, though there be afterward an increase in the true zeale of God. Some such thing is affirmed even of the Angells, Lu. 15. 7.

29. In old age, or in some such like decay of strength, although there may be the same zeale, or more then was before, yet it is not put forth in some, in the same manner, that it was in, in their younger dayes.

30. Variety of education may bring a great diversity in the manner of exercising ones zeale, when yet there may be an equall zeale in respect of the essence of it.

How zeale
doe agree.

The sixth Question is whether one and the same thing may be lawfully a matter of zeale and laughter?

31. Ans. That this may be, appeareth in the example of Elisha, 1 Kings 18. 27. with 19. 10. 14. But yet not in the same respect. For zeale hath for its object something either honest, or filthy, but laughter is caused by the apprehension of an unexpected thing that lightly pleaseth, without the consideration of honesty or filthinesse.

C H A P. 7.

Of peace and tranquillity of Conscience.

BEcause the concomitant object of obedience is a quiet Conscience. Concerning peace of Conscience.

How peace
of Conscience followeth upon obedience.

The first Question is how peace of Conscience doth depend upon our obedience?

1. Ans. It depends not upon our obedience as upon the principall cause, but rather upon that justification which we have by Christ Jesus, Romans 5. 1. Heb. 10. 22. 1 pet. 3. 21. 1 Cor. 4. 4.

2. They which goe about to rest in themselves, or in their own works, can never finde any solid tranquillity in their

Con-

Conscience, both because of the diverse falls, and because of the manifold imperfections, which adhere to the endeavours of the best men, while they live in this World. And hence it is that those that are popish must needs be vexed with perpetuall doubts, both in life, and death, because of the opinion which they have of the Righteousnesse, and Merits of their works, which are yet by their owne confession uncertaine.

3. Secondly, it depends upon our obedience, as upon that whereby the contrary is removed, or as upon that which removes the impediment, 1 Sam. 25. 31. 1 Job. 2. 18. 21. 2 As upon the predominant cause, or secondary reason thereof, 2 Cor. 1. 12.

4. Now this is to be understood, as that the tranquillity of Conscience in regard of those actions which are agreeable to the Law of God, is to be conceived to depend upon obedience in regard of the thing it selfe: But that tranquillity which respects our state before God, is to be ascribed no otherwise to our obedience; as to the cause, but only in respect of the certainty of our perceiving of it, and that our obedience respecteth the thing it selfe, as the signe and effect thereof: hence that phrase so oft used by Ioh. By this we know, and such like, 1 Ioh. 2. 3. 5. 29. 1 Ioh. 3. 10. 14. 19. & 4. 13.

5. Peace of Conscience also depends upon obedience, as upon the conservant cause. For righteousness (not imputed, nor inherent) but of the life and conversation, is the breast-plate of a believer, whereby he is guarded, and defended, and is perfectly safe, and quiet. Eph. 6. 14. 1 Ioh. 3. 7. 1 Cor. 4. 3. Hence it is that that righteousness which consists in obedience, is called the righteousness of a good Conscience, Acts 24. 10.

6. Now obedience doth, preserve and maintaine peace of Conscience, not only as a signe of our reconciliation with God, but also as a continuation and an exercise of that life which is acceptable, and pleasing unto God, Col. 1. 10. Theff. 4. 1. Heb. 12. 28. Not that there is any such perfection in our obedience, as can satisfy the Law of God, but because that after our persons by faith in Christ, become acceptable to God,

God, then by vertue of the same faith, for Christs sake, our obedience though weake, and polluted, is accepted before God,
1 Pet. 2. 5.

What kinde of obedience is requisite to make the conscience peaceable.

The second Question is, what is that obedience, by the presence whereof the Conscience may enjoy peace?

7. Ans. First, an absolute perfection is not required to this tranquillity, for then it were a vaine thing to seeke for it in this life, Jam. 3. 2. 1 Iob. 1. 10.

8. Yet such a porportion is necessary, as by Gods own testimony in his holy word is acceptable to him, Heb. 11. 2.

9. Thirdly, this perfection consisteth properly in this, that all our studies, and endeavours be good: and the imperfection be only in the manner of performing, Ro. 8. 4.

10. Fourthly, all those imperfections which adhere to our obedience, are with all humiliation of soule to be acknowledged, and pardon for them is to be begged in Faith, Pet. 5.

The third Question is, what kind of tranquillity it is which doth arise from such obedience?

11. Ans. First, Such as the obedience it selfe is, that is, various, and imperfect. 2 Cor. 1. 24.

12. Secondly, it doth not therefore exclude motion from evill, unto good, but only that perturbation which ariseth from the apprehension of Gods Anger.

13. Thirdly, Yet notwithstanding it doth as with a guard keepe the soules of the faithfull, Phil. 4. 7. And govern them. Col. 3. 15.

Difference
twixt the peace of the godly,
& the wicked.

The fourth Question, how may the peace of a good conscience be distinguished from that peace, which is in wicked men?

14. Ans. First, the peace of the wicked is not founded upon the Word of God, but upon vaine words, and imaginations. Ier. 23. 17, 18. 1 Thess. 5. 3.

15. Secondly, the peace of the wicked is not wont to be constant, but is interrupted with many gripes, and pangs, that come between; and is wont to vanish, when the judgements of God begin to light upon them.

16. Thirdly, the peace of the wicked continues, whether ther duties of piety, and righteousnesse be done or omitted, so that only those crimes be abstained from, which their natures, abhor.

CHAP. 8.

Of Vertue.

Question. 1. Whether it be not enough for a man to doe that which is good, unlesse we labour also for an habit of vertue, whereby our hearts may be inclined to that which is good? The necessity of vertue.

Ans. We ought to give all diligence to adde to our Faith, Vertue, 2 Pet. 1.5.

1. Because the Word of God, whereby we are in speciall manner called upon for the performance of our duty, ought to be ingrafted within us, Iam. 1.25.

2. We ought to deliver up our selves unto the same Doctrine, as to a pattern, or mould, the likenesse of which is to be expressed in our hearts, Rom. 6. 17. Now this inward image and likenesse, is vertue.

3. As we ought to put off the old man together with his members, which properly are internall vices, Col. 3.5. So we ought to put on the new man with his members, which properly are vertues.

4. We ought to be framed and fashioned after the Image of Christ, Col. 3.10. In whom did dwell all the fullnesse of vertues. Esay 11.2. Col. 1.19. And that for this end, that of his fulnesse we may receive grace for grace, Joh. 1.16.

5. If the habit of vertue be absent, although we should doe some good works, yet we are not rooted and grounded in good, but are rashly carried away with evill, and that goodnesse soone vanisheth. Mat. 13.21. Col. 1.23.

6. That good which we doe without vertue, we doe it not with an honest and good heart, which yet is required to make it pleasing unto God. Lu. 8.15.

7. Such kind of works, are not the obedience that is acceptable to God. Mat. 7.18. & 15.8.

Meanes to caine vertue.

Question, 2. What ought a believer to doe, that he may grow and increase in any vertue?

8. Ans. First, he ought seriously and in a speciall manner to acknowledge his failings, and weakenesse, 2 Cor. 3. 5. 1 Cor. 3. 18.

9. Secondly, he ought in Christ to apprehend that grace especially, which he wanteth, that in time he may be strong, and compleat, Phil. 4. 13. Col. 2. 10.

10. Thirdly, he ought diligently to take heed of all such things, as are contrary to that vertue, which he labours for, Pro. 4. 14, 15. Eph. 4. 29. 31.

11. Fourthly, he ought to employ himselfe in those things, wherby that vertue may be promoted, 2 Pet. 1. 12. 15.

12. Fifthly, he ought to seek the same vertue at Gods Hand, by daily and earnest prayer, Iam. 1. 5. Act. 4. 29.

13. Sixthly, he ought frequently and diligently to exercise himselfe in those things, which are proper to his vertue, 1 Tim. 4. 7.

Signes of vertue.

Question, 3. What be the signes whereby a man may know that he hath gotten, any vertue?

14. Ans. First, a propension and readinesse in a manner naturall to the exercise of that vertue, 2 Pet. 1. 14. 1 Thes. 4. 9.

15. Secondly, firmenesse and constancy in that exercise, Eph. 4. 14, 15.

16. Thirdly, a joy and delight arising from that exercise. Pro. 21. 15. 2 Cor. 8. 2. & 9. 7. 13.

17. Fourthly, an abomination of the contrary vice, 119. 163.

18. Fifthly, an alienation from those which are given to that vice, Pro. 29. 27.

19. Sixthly, universality, whereby it comes to passe, that a man doth not only in part, and in some respect follow that which is good, and oppose that which is evill ( admitting a limitation, and measure according to carnall wisdom ) but simply, and absolutly. 1 Cor. 13. 7. Col. 1. 10.

C H A P. 9.

Of Prudence.

AMong those conditions which are necessarily required to vertue, after that generall justice, which notes out its essentiall rectitude, followes in the next place, Prudence, or spirituall wisdom. Concerning it therefore.

Question, 1. In what thing doth true prudence consist?

The nature
of Prudence.

1. Ans. First, spirituall wisdom doth generally consist in such a discerning, circumspect looking to, considering, and ordering those things which belong to Gods Glory, and our duty, and salvation, that as much as may be, they may be brought unto perfection. Pro. 14.8. 15. & 15.24. & 22.3. But in a more speciall manner it belongs to wisdom, 1. To propound a right end evermore unto our selves, and to be endeavoring after it: Jeremy 4.22. 2 Tim. 3.15. 32.29. For, that mans wisdom is in vaine, who is not wise for himselfe, and for his own good.

2. Secondly, to make choice of such meanes as do tend certainly to that scope, Pro. 2.9.

3. To walke accurately, and precisely in the use of those meanes, Eph. 5.15.

4. To take hold of, and to redeem every opportunity, for the advancing, and helping forward of this study, Col. 4.5.

5. Carefully to take heed of, and avoid all such things, as do hinder this study, Iob. 28.28.

6. To forsake all things else, for the attaining of this chiefe good, Mat. 13.44. 45.

7. Not to trust to a vaine hope, but to lay a solid foundation in all things, Mat. 7.24.

Question, 2. By what meanes may this wisdom be gotten?

Meanes to get wisdom.

8. Ans. First, it comes from none other then God alone, by the Holy Ghost, Iob. 28.12, 13, 14. 20. 21. 23. Esay 11.2. 3. Eph. 1.8. 17. Jam. 3.15.

9. Secondly, that we may obtaine it from God, we must seriously acknowledge and confesse our owne foolishnesse.
1 Cor. 3. 18.

10. Thirdly, we ought to seek it in the Word of God. Psal. 119. 7. & 119. 98. 99 104. Ier. 8. 9.

11. Fourthly, we must seek it of God in a due manner. Iam. 1. 5. 2 Cor. 1. 10. 11.

12. Fifthly, we ought to direct all our observation and experience to the getting of wisdom, Pf. 90. 12.

Motives to seeke for Pru-lence.

Question, 3. By what arguments, we may be stir'd up, to labour after this spirituall wisdom?

13. Ans. First, because therein lies the perfection of man above other Creatures, Pf. 32. 8. 9.

14. Secondly, because it is a maine part of Gods Image, Col. 3. 10.

15. Thirdly, because it delivers from all evill, Proverbs 2. 11. 12.

16. Fourthly, because it conduceth to all good, Proverbs 3. 13. 14. 19.

Now because in Scripture there is mention made of an humane wisdom, or prudence, opposed to this spirituall wisdom: therefore the Question is wisdom.

Question, 1. Whether all humane wisdom is to be condemned?

17. Ans. Humane wisdom is considered, 2. wayes; either as it is simply an humane perfection, or (as they call it) an intellectuall vertue, whereby the busineses that a man hath to doe, though they be many and great, are easily conceived, judged, and directed; or as it is a corruption and abuse of that faculty, and hath some sinne adhering to it, or mingled with it. In the former sense it is a thing good in regard of nature: and so to be commended and labour'd for: although in respect of any morall goodnesse, it is a thing of an indifferent nature, neither good nor evill, as all other naturall perfections also are. Civill wisdom therefore considered in it selfe, is not opposed to spirituall wisdom, but only as a disparate. But in the latter sense, it is a thing evill in regard of the morality of it, and to be condemned, and avoyded.

For

For it is opposed to spirituall wisdom as a thing adverse: For which cause also it is called fleshly wisdom, earthly, sensuall, diuvelish, Jam. 3. 15.

Question, 2. When is humane wisdom carnall, and in that respect to be condemned? Carnall wisdom.

18. Ans. First, when it opposeth it selfe directly to the wisdom of God, in devising any euill, Exod. 1. 10. Pro. 21. 30. Pro. 6. 13. That is, when it becomes an instrument of any impiety, or injustice. For wisdom when it is joynd with ungodlinesse, is nothing but wickednesse armed. And to be wise to do euill, is not to be wise, but to be unwise.

19. Secondly, when it contemneth the wisdom of God, and accounteth it foolishnes, 1 Cor. 1. 23.

20. Thirdly, when it will by no meanes be subject to the wisdom of God. Ro. 8. 7.

21. Fourthly, when in some sort it yieldeth to the wisdom of God, in regard of the thing it selfe, which it seeketh; but in regard of the meanes and manner of seeking, trusts to it selfe, 2 Reg. 5. 11. 1 Cor. 2. 14.

22. Fifthly, when it makes a man more uncapable of those things which are of the spirit of God, 1 Cor. 2. 14.

23. Sixthly, when it is made a matter of boasting, Ier. 9. 23. Ez 28. 17.

24. Seventhly, when trust and confidence is placed in it, Pro. 3. 6. & 26. 12.

25. Eighthly, when it is separated from innocency, and sincerity, Rom. 16. 19. Mat. 10. 16. 2 Cor. 1. 12.

Question, 3. By what means may a man be brought to contemne this carnall wisdom?

26. Ans. 1. Because it sets men further off from the Kingdom of God, then simple foolishnesse. 1 Cor. 1. 26, 27. Mat. 11. 26. 2. Because God doth use to infatuate, and bring to nought such wisdom. 1 Cor. 1. 19, 20. 3. Because it is serpentine, and diabolicall, Gen. 3. 1. Iam. 3. 15. 4. Because it destroyeth those in whom it is. Pro. 11. 3. 5. It overthroweth all humane society, and takes away the comfort of life, 2 Sam. 16. 22, 23.

C H A P. 10.

Of Watchfulnesse.

BEcause the exercised force, and (as I may say) activity of patience is usually in Scripture set forth by the name of watchfulnesse. Concerning it therefore.

Question, wherein doth it properly consist?

1. Ans. Watchfulnesse is nothing else but an heedfull attention, whereby a thing is gone about with diligence, Luke 2.8, Heb. 13.16. But this spirituall act of vigilancy, which is required of all men, is in Scripture referred to three objects.

1. To the watches themselves, that they keepe a watch over themselves, Pro. 4.23. & 2 To their duty, that they watch unto that, Eph. 6.18. 3 To the future, for which they by this duty prepare themselves, Mat. 24.43.44.45. The first may be called the object over which, the second the object for which, The third the object to which. But although for teaching sake we doe distinguish these three, in practice they ought always to be conjoynd, so that we alwayes observe our selves, watch to those duties which ly upon us, and prepare our selves for the future. Eccles. 5. 1.2,3,4,5.

2. Watchfulnesse over our selves in generall is nothing else, but a vigilant observation of the Will of God, Psalms. 119.4, 5,6.

3. Particularly, there is required in it, as in the watching of a City that is besieged, or any other way in danger, that we observe, and inquire, 1. Into all commers in, whence they come, and whither they tend; and to all those things which come in by our senses, as by the City Gates, that if they be hurtfull, they may be excluded, Psal. 119. 37. Iob. 31. 1. 2 Into all that goe out, as into all our thoughts, words, and actions, which proceed from us. Pro. 4.23,24. Pf. 39.2. Eccles 5.1. Iam. 3.2.

4. Vigilancy as it respecteth our duty, is nothing but a carefulnesse about those things, which God hath commanded, commanded, how we may please him in them, 1 Cor. 7. 32.

5. Vigilancy is particularly required, 1. Before the duty is performed, that the matter be duly weighed, Pro. 14. 15. That all impediments, (whether they be things in themselves lawfull, or unlawfull) may be removed, 1 Pet. 2. 11. 2 Tim. 2. 4. That we may be fit and prepared for the doing of our duty. Lu. 21. 34. 36. And that we may layhold on the occasions of doing it, that are offered, Gal. 6. 20. And the contrary be avoided. Pro. 4. 15. & 5. 8. 2 In the very duty, that it be done in an exact, and accurate manner. Luke 8. 18. 3 After the duty, that it be not marred by any following corruption. 2 Joh. 8. Because it is easily wont, either to be corrupted by pride, 1 Cor. 4. 7. Or by inconstancy, and levity to be overthrown, Ier. 34. 11.

6. Watchfulness as it respects the future, which we are to have before our eyes, is a due preparation, such as that, which we expect, doth require, whether it be good, that it may be received, or evill, that it may be avoyded. Mat. 24. 42. 44. Particular here is required, 1. That this preparation be made in time, Mat. 25. 3. with 11. 2. That it be used constantly, and without ceasing, Lu. 21. 36.

Question 2. What is principally required for the observing of this watch?

7. Ans. First, sobriety in the use of worldly things, 1 Thess. 5. 6. 1 Pet. 4. 7. & 5. 8. For the heart is overcharged, not only with sursetting and drunkeness, but also with the cares of this life, Lu. 21. 34. 36.

8. Secondly, a frequent consideration of Gods owne presence, and beholding of our wayes, Pro. 1. 20. 21. Psal. 119. 168.

9. Thirdly, a frequent examination of our wayes, with a just censure, and judgement passed upon them, Pf. 4. 4. Pf. 119. 59. 1 Cor. 11. 31.

10. Fourthly, the fellowship, and society of them, which will be to us in this care, Phil. 2. 4. Heb. 10. 24. 5. frequent prayer. Mat. 26. 41.

Question, 3. By what arguments may we be stirrd up to this watchfulness?

11. Ans.

watchfulnesse

11. Ans. There is one essentiall reason, which is taken from that danger, in which both we our selves are, and the Name of God by reason of us, 1 Tim. 6. 1.

12. Now we are subject to that danger. 1. Through the infirmity of our flesh, Mat. 26. 41. 2 Through the deceits of the divell, and the world. 1 Pet. 5. 8. 3 Through the uncertainty of the time of Christs comming to judgement, either generall, or particular. Mat. 24. 42. & 25. 13. Mar. 13. 33. 35. Lu. 21. 35. 36.

CHAP. II.

Of Fortitude.

BEcause next after prudence, fortitude is requisite to the perfection of vertue: concerning it therefore.

Question, 1. Wherein doth Christian fortitude consist?

1. Ans. It is not to be confounded with animosity, or stoutnesse, which is to be found not only in men voyd of all vertue, but also in the bruit Creatures, the Lion, the Horse, the Bull, the Dog. Pro. 31. 29. 30. 31.

2. Secondly, yet courage or greatnesse of mind, hath the nature of a Genus, or Generall, in respect of true fortitude: which therefore consists not so much in the moderation of boldnesse, or hope, as in the moderation of feare, and desperation, Iob. 6. 11. 19.

3. Thirdly, it doth not only consist in adventuring upon dangers, or undertaking hard things, but also in suffering, and bearing evils, and adversity, Hebrewes 11. 34, 35. 36. 2 Tim. 2. 1. 3.

4. Fourthly, but true fortitude adventures upon dangers, and suffers adversity, for vertues sake, and for the performing of his duty, 1 Pet. 3. 14. & 4. 14, 15.

5. Fifthly, fortitude therefore is that courage, whereby we are ready to performe our duty, even because it is our duty, what difficultiēs soever happen. 1 Cor. 15. 58. & 16. 13.

6. Sixthly, he cannot be said to be truly courageous, which offers himselfe to dangers, not once considering what they are, or why to be attempted, or intangled in them by chance, or compell'd by necessity, and not led thereto by vertue. It was not from fortitude, and courage, that the Demoniack, Mark. 9. Often leap't into the water, often into the fire, but through the violence of the evill spirit; so it is not from the vertue of fortitude, that many are strong to powredowne drinke, Esa. 5. 22. Yea, many attempts, by which men are judged valiant and couragious, by foolish A&ts, are nothing but made furies.

7. Seventhly, neither hath he this vertue, who is scarred, or doth desist from doing his duty, through any feare, or danger, Pro. 24. 10.

8. Eightly, yet it is here to be remembred, that the courage of the faithfull in this life, is joyned with infirmity, and so some momentany shaking, wherewith the godly sometimes are made to stagger, may consist with the fortitude of vertue. Ier. 20. 9. 2 Cor. 4. 8.

9. Ninthly, and although in regard of purpose of mind, and preparation of heart, the faithfull doe arme and fortify themselves against all such things, as may hinder them in their duties. 2 Cor. 6. 4. Yet notwithstanding they are not alwayes equally prepared to the suffering and undergoing of all kinds of molestations, as Satan observed, Iob. 1. & 2. And the event in Iob in some sort proved. For that which experience teacheth in corporall fortitude in a due proportion, holds also in spirituall; Some are strong to suffer labours; others to exercise warfare; others to carry bartbens; others to repell things that are hartfull; and many which are strong in one or other of those things, are found infirme, and weak in the rest.

Qu. 2. By what meanes may this Christian fortitude be stirred up in a man?

Meanes to stir up fortitude.

10. Ans. First, if he acknowledge his owne weaknesse, Rom. 5. 6. 2 Cor. 3. 5.

11. Secondly, if he consider that he is chosen and called of God to perform that duty, which he goes about: 1 Chron. 28.

12. Thirdly, if he perswade himselfe that God will be present with him in that which he hath commanded him, Deut. 20. 3. 4. Pf. 27. 12. 2 Reg. 6. 16.

13. Fourthly, if he expect and looke for all sufficiency of strength from God. Eph. 6. 10. Phil. 4. 14. Pf. 73. 26.

14. Fifthly, if he call to mind, how the victory hath bene long since gotten for him by Christ; and that nothing is required of him, save onely, that he adhering unto Christ, become a conquerour with him, and in him. John 16. 33. Rom. 37.

15. Sixthly, if he stick close to that promise, which testifies, that all things shall work toge her for good to them that love God, Rom. 8. 28.

16. Seventhly, if he have the recompence of reward, which is laid up for him, alwayes before his eyes. 1 Cor. 15. 58.

C H A P. 12.

Of Boldnesse which is contained under fortitude

BEcause under fortitude is contained boldnesse, or confidence, perseverance, and patience; of these therefore briefly.

Qu. 1. What is this boldnesse of fortitude?

1. Ans. First, by it we understand not here properly that confidence of Faith, whereby we rest upon God by Christ, unto salvation; Nor simply that confidence of hope, whereby we expect the things, which God hath promised: but that confidence, whereby we being full of Faith, and hope, doe cheerefully and boldly set upon the duty laid upon us by God. Ier. 1. 7. 8. 19. Act. 4. 13. 29. & 9. 29. Ephes. 6. 19. 20. Phil. 1. 14. 20.

Qu. 2. What are those adverse evils which are properly overcome by this confidence?

2. Ans. Two especially, 1. The difficulties which hinder us in the performing of our duties Pro. 22. 13. & 26. 13. Eccles. 11. 4. Cor. 16. 9. (2) The uncertainty of the successe or event, event, which will follow upon the performance of the duty, Daniel.3.17.18.

Qu. 3. By what means is the mind confirmed against those vexations?

3. Ans. First, by the fervour, and heat of the spirit, or zeal Act.18.25.26. Act.4.8. with 13. Amos 5.24.

4. Secondly, by a true trust placed in God, Pro.16.3. Ps.37.5. & 55.22 1 Pet.4.19. & 5.7. Esa. 58.11.

5. Thirdly, by faithfull prayers, commending our selves to God. Phil.4.6. Esth.4.16.

6. Fourthly, by a right judgement concerning the terrors, whereby we are astonished. For sometimes the things which terrify us, are utterly to be contemned, as the speeches of vain men, &c. Sometimes they are meere figments, which if we passe an exact judgement of them, vanish presently, and they are such always, that if they be compared with the dignity, fruit, and necessity of our duty, they are of no force at all.

CHAP. 13.

Of Constancy.

Question, 4. Wherein doth perseverance, or constancy of vertue consist?

1. Ans. First, In a perpetuall continuation of the same purpose, and disposition of well-doing. Gal.4.18. Psal.106.3. Rom.2.7.

2. Secondly, in a frequent iteration of the same kind of actions, with fervour, and zeale. 1 Thess.5.17.

3. Thirdly, in a care to proceede and goe on in a way of vertue. Phil.3.13,14.

Qu. 5. Which are the evils which are opposed to this Constancy?

4. Ans. First, declining out of the right way. Iob. 23.11. 12.

5. Secondly, wearisomnesse, and fainting, Gal.6.9.

6. Thirdly, a desultory lightnesse whereby men are changed every houre, and become unlike themselves. It is called childishnesse, Eph. 4. 14. And madnesse, and bewitching, Gal. 3. 1.

Qu. 6. How are men stirred up to constancy?

7. Ans. Because the reward is not promised, save only to them that persevere, Apoc. 2. 10. 26. And therefore it is vaine for a man to begin, unlesse he hold on, and goe through with it. Gal. 3. 4.

CHAP. 14.

Of Patience.

Question, 7. What is the nature of patience?

1 Anf. Christian patience hath reference to a three-fold object. 1. To God, according to whose pleasure all adverse things, are ordered. Iob. 1. 20. & 2. 9. 10. In which respect, murmuring against God is opposed to patience, 1 Cor. 10. 10. 2 To men, or those means which doe directly afflict us. 2 Thess. 1. 4. with 6. 1 Pet. 2. 20. & 3. 9. In which respect desire of revenge is opposed to patience. Rom. 12. 17. 19. 3 To that office, or duty, which by the molestations of adversity, we are tempted to forsake. Heb. 10. 36. Lu. 12. 19.

In which respect faintnesse of mind is opposed to patience, Heb. 12. 5. And drawing back, and departing out of the right way, which followes there, Heb. 10. 36. with 38. 39. & 12. 7. with 13.

2. In the first consideration, patience pertaines to Religion towards God; In the second to charity toward our Neighbour. In the third, it is a part of fortitude, and a generall affection of vertue. Yet to the third consideration, may the other two be referred, so far as our duty, either towards God, or man, is considered in them: Although besides this generall nature, they have speciall difference, by which they may be profitably distinguished from this, and betweene themselves.

Qu. 8. How is this patience, and sufferance, to be distinguished shed from that, fortitude, which consists in confidence, and Constancy?

3. Ans. Those three are alwayes joyned together in true fortitude; but confidence or boldnesse doth properly respect the setting upon a duty, constancy the continuation of it, patience, the defence of it.

Qu. What be the signes of this patience?

4. Ans. First, if we neither utterly contemne the difficulties, that we meete with, nor faint under them, Heb. 12. 5. But doe overcome all oppositions duely weighed in a right judgement.

5. Secondly, if we be prepared in mind for righteousnesse sake, not onely to suffer those troubles, which are lesse, but even those which are most fearefull, Acts 21. 13.

6. Thirdly, if we do not only, not quite forsake our duty, because of difficulties, wee meet with, but not so much as remit, or lessen any thing of our zeale, Hebrews, 10. 35. & 12. 13.

7. Fourthly, if we undergoe these troubles not as by constraint and unwillingly, but with spirituall joy and exultation, Mat. 5. 12. Col. 1. 11. Heb. 10. 34.

Qu. 10. By what motives may we be confirmed in this patience?

Motives to patience.

8. Ans. First, because without this patience no good thing can be perfectly accomplished, 1am. 1. 4.

9. Secondly, because without patience we want the possession of our own soules, Luke 21. 19. Neither can we attaine to have our hearts established in any thing that is good, 1am. 5. 5. 10. Pro. 24. 10.

10. Thirdly, because by these troubles we are brought into triall by God who takes a prooffe of us by the Devills temptations, Heb. 10. 32. Wherein unlesse by patience we get the better we must needs to the dishonor of God, and our own hurt be overcome by the Devill, Rom. 12. 21.

11. Fourthly, because in this triall God himselfe will give both a supply of strength and a happy issue, 1 Cor. 10. 13.

CHAP. 15.

Of Temperance

BECAUSE to the constitution of vertue there is required (besides the uprightnesse of justice the direction of prudence and the firmenesse of fortitude) the custody also or the guard of Temperance, therefore some thing must be said of Temperance.

Qu. I. Wherein lieth the nature of Temperance.

1. Ans. First, As fortitude doth arme vertue against those things, whereby men are wont to be deterred and made afraid of doing their duty: so Temperance doth defend it against those things which are wont to allure, and entice men away from the same.

2. Secondly, although in that victory which Temperance obtaines over flattering Temptations (in the resistance of which there is oft times much molestation) and in that constancy also which is properly a fruit of Temperance, there be to be found a magnanimity and height of mind neere of kinne to fortitude: yet there is a difference betwixt it and fortitude because of the difference of the objects.

3. Thirdly, because every object, that doth allure and intice, hath some shew of good; and the appearance of an honest good, as such, doth not allure to sinne, but to honesty: therefore the object of Temperance are things that have a shew of profit and delight; or profits and pleasures.

4. Fourthly, also love, desire, and delight are conversant about such kind of good things; therefore temperance properly is occupied about the moderating of these affections, about such objects.

5. Fifthly, Temperance doth not utterly take away these affections, as being naturall, but doth govern them, that is, takes away their inordinatnesse, in regard of their degree, extent, and manner.

6. Sixthly, this inordinatnesse, because in beleivers, it is taken taken away onely in part, therefore these affections are in some sort, but not perfectly mortified. Hence it is, that Temperance is said to restrain, and keepe under the remainders of them, and to abstain from them.

Qu. 2. What are the signes of Temperance ?

7. Ans. First, if a man be not led with carnall and worldly affections, but keepe them tamed under the yoke of reason and Religion, and do, as it were, deny them. Ti. 2. 12.

Signes of Temperance.

8. Secondly, if he abstaine especially from those lusts, to which (either by reason of the condition of hisoife, or by evill custome, or by the example of those amongst whom he lives) he is most inclined. 2 Timorby 2. 22. 1 Peter 4. 2, 3, 4.

9. Thirdly, if he abstaine, not only from the outward works, whereby such lusts are wont to be fulfilled, but also study to roote out, and mortify the very inward inordinate affections, Col. 3. 5. 8. Rom. 8. 13.

10. Fourthly, if he be neither listed up inordinately in the fruition of the commodities and pleasures of this World, nor troubled in the want of them, but when he hath them, be as if he had them not; 1 Cor. 7. 29 30. 31. And when he hath them not, be as if he had them. 2 Cor. 6. 10.

Qu. 3. What is to be done by us, that we may attaine Christian Temperance.

Meanes to attaine Temperance.

11. Ans. First, we ought to endeavour by all meanes to diminish and resist the love, desire, and delight of the World and of worldly things, 1 Iob. 2. 15. 16.

12. Secondly, to this purpose it will be profitable to turne away our thoughts, and senses from things perversly beloved: lest the appearance of good which seemes to be in them prove to be an incentive, and nourisher of perverse love, Iob. 31. 1. For it is remarkable that the two first perverse loves w<sup>ch</sup> we read of in the Scripture, are said to come by the sight, Gen. 3. The Woman saw that the Tree was good and pleasant to the Eyes, and Gen. 6. & 2. The Sonnes of God saw the daughters of men that they were faire.

13. Thirdly, it is profitable also seriously to ponder of the fading vanity of all worldly things, 1 Iob. 2. 17. Eccl. 1.

14. Fourth-

14. Fourthly, to the end that we be not taken and carried away with the shew of pleasures, it is good to behold them not as they come flatteringly, but as they goe away, that is full of shame and sorrow, Ro. 6. 21.

15. Fifthly, we must be watchfull that the motions of concupiscence get not strength by long delay, but we must doe our endeavour that they be presently and in the beginning repressed, Ro. 7.

16. Sixthly, we must often and seriously revolve in our minds how all those that ever were wise and godly here, not without just cause despised these pleasures, and judged them fit to be despised and eschewed by others.

17. Seventhly, the minde is to be occupied in other things; and our love, desire, and delight, are to be turned to those things which are Spirituall, and Divine, that so evill love may be driven out of the mind by good love, as one naile is driven out by an other.

CH A P. 16.

Of Drunkenesse.

1. AMong the sinnes which are opposite to Temperance, those are most remarkeable which are conversant about the delightes of touching, as Gluttony, Drunkenesse, and such like, because such kinde of abuses have most manifestly in themselves, and of themselves a morall badnesse as appeares by the Law of nature, of God, and of man, all which do condemne them.

2. In all those kinds of excesse, the inordinatenesse is commonly found to be either in regard of the substance when more pretious things are desired, then doe agree to a mans state; For in regard of the quantity when more is consumed then reason requires, or in regard of the quality when too much curiosity is used for the fatisfying of ones lust, or in regard of the manner when a just decorum is omitted, or lastly in regard of the time when men give themselves unto such things oftner then they should or when they ought not.

3. Now of drunkenesse there is something in speciall to be considered before other sinnes of the like nature, because of that singular opposition which is betwixt it and the offices and works of vertue.

Qu. 1. What is drunkenesse?

4. Ans. First, drunkenesse is oftentimes taken for the privation of reason which followes upon immoderate Drinking. And so it is not properly a sinne by it selfe, but rather an effect and punishment of sin.

5. Secondly, as it doth note either a desire of immoderate drinking, or the voluntary drinking it selfe so far immoderate, that a man by it is violently deprived of the use of reason, so it is a greivous sin. Pro. 23. 30. 39. Esa. 5. 11. Hof. 4. 11. Luke. 21. 34. 1 Cor. 6. 10. Ephes. 5. 18.

6. The deformity and filthinesse of this sin doth appeare from these grounds, 1. Because the Drunkard doth for a contemptible pleasure sell that which is the excellentest thing in the nature of man whilst he deprives himselfe of the use of reason, 2. Because by this meanes he makes himselfe unfit not onely for the duties of piety. Luke 21. 34. But also for all honest actions, Hof. 4. 11. 3 Because he exposeth himselfe to the danger of almost all kinds of sinnes, whilst he deprives himselfe of the power to avoid those things which otherwise he knowes to be grosse sins. For which reason, and that which went before it is apparent that Drunkenesse is not so much a speciall sin, against any one Commandement of God, as a generall breach of the whole Law, 4 Because he doth so deforme the Image of God in himselfe, that he doth in a sort cast himselfe below the Beasts. 5 Because he doth bring hereby many mischiefes to his body, name, and outward condition, 6. Because he which is accustomed to this sin proveth in a sort incurable. For a Drunkard is seldome or never reclaimed either from Drunkenesse, or any other sin because his heart is taken away. Hof. 4. 11.

7. Drunkenesse is voluntary not only when it follow's from a direct intention, but also when it commeth of a notable negligence in preventing it.

The outrages which a man committeth in Drunkenesse are so far to be imputed to him for faults, as the Drunkenesse was voluntary; Now then especially, they are both voluntary, and accounted faulty, when (all circumstances being considered) a man might, and so ought to have fore-seene, that he would commit such things in his Drunkenesse, either because he had tryed it by experience before, or because in the like case of Drunkenesse, or upon the like opportunity, drunken men are wont to commit such things, or at least doe expose themselves to the danger of committing them.

9. Now, although compleat Drunkenesse doe consist in the losse of the use of reason by Drinking, whereby a man is made altogether unfit for the duties he hath to doe; Yet all perturbation of the phantasie by Drinke whereby a man is notably made lesse fit, for the ordinary exercise of piety (as prayer and reading) is a degree of the same sinne, Lu. 28. 34.

10. Those also which are strong to drinke, so that though they drinke above measure, they find no perturbation of their forces, yet if they like to sit at their cups, to stay at the Wine, and to extend and prolong their drinkings, they are not free from this sin. Esai. 5. 11.

11. He is a partaker in this sinne, who doth wittingly and willingly give wine or drinke to another, to make him drunk. For he doth cooperate to his sin.

12. But much more are they guilty, who induce others to make themselves drunke, whether they intend it directly, or indirectly, by inviting them to drink, by calling for greater pots, by striving, by urging them without all reason, to drink as much, and take their turne, as they call it.

13. We ought to abstaine, not only from the imitation, but also from the fellowship of such kind of sinnes, according to that of the Apostle: if any that is called a brother, be a Drunkard, with such an one no not to eate, 1 Cor. 5. 11.

14. We are to abstain therefore (even from this ground, if there were no other) from those rites, whereby drunkenesse is artificially wont to be brought about: of which fore are the adjuving of others to drinke by the names of some that are great, or deare to them; the sending of cups about, that all and every one in his order may drinke them off; that abuse of lots (as it is in some places used) to impose a fained and (unwritten) Law and necessity of drinking upon the guests, and such like mysteries of Bacchus, and introductions to the excesse of drinking.

CHAP. 17.

Of Good Workes.

BEcause from vertue proceed good Workes; concerning them therefore.

Qu. 1. What is here to be understood by a Worke?

1. Ans. A worke in this place ought not to be distinguished from an action, as it is distinguished by them, who doe account those only for good works, which produce something, that is good and profitable unto men; such as are almes, the building and endowing of Temples, Colledges, Hospitalls, &c. For although among men, which are affected with their owne commodities, such workes are in a singular manner above others extolled. Yet such workes may be so done, that that action from whence they come, maybe in many respects evill; although the things done may be usefull and good unto other men.

2. Againe, even when in such workes, not the workes only, but the actions be truly good: yet they cannot be equalled to some other actions, which carry not so great a pompe
1 Tim. 3. 1. Iam. 5. 20.

3. This thing ought so much the more diligently to be observed, because it pertains much to the comfort of the poorer sort of believers, who have hardly any power to doe any thing, that may tend to the externall good of others. It serves also to abate the insolency of certaine rich Men, who thinke that they onely doe good workes, and none but they.

Q.2. Concerning the efficient cause of good works, it may be demanded, whether the works of men unregenerate, (whereby they doe in some sort the same thing which the regenerate doe in their good works) be good works, or no :

4. Ans. In such kind of works, we are to distinguish betweene the substance (as I may say) of the worke, and the fault of the person, wherewith it is defiled: the substance of such works is good, because they are the things of the Law. Rom. 2. 14. Now, every worke so far as it agreeth with Gods Law, is good. But for all that, there be some vices cleaving to them, which come, partly, from the person that doth them, partly, from the manner of doing, whereby such works are so defiled, that though in their owne nature, and in respect of others they be good, yet in respect of any spirituall obedience yielded by them unto God, they are not good, Esa. 1. 13. Esa. 66. 3.

Qu. 3. How then can the works of the regenerate be good, seeing they are many wayes defiled?

5. Ans. Although evill doth alwayes cleave both to the persons and the actions of the godly, Rom. 7. 21. Yet this evill in their holy duties takes not away the essence of a spirituall duty, but hinders and diminisheth the degree and perfection thereof; because all the causes of such works are good, and only the adjuncts evill: and so the imperfection being covered in Christ, the works are for Christs sake acceptable, and pleasing unto God 1 Pet. 2. 5.

Qu. 4. Concerning the matter of good works, it may be demanded, whether it is not lawfull for us at our owne pleasure to make choice of something, in which to yield honour and obedience unto God?

6. This is expressly forbidden, Dent. 12. 8. 32. Num. 5. 39. Mat. 15. 9. Mark. 7. 7.

7. Secondly, it doth imply a contradiction that we should yield obedience to God in those things, whereof he hath given us no Commandement: Neither without obedience can we give any honour to God, that may be pleasing to him. All works therefore of our owne chusing are only good before men through a fained and vaine persuasion, but not before God.

8. Thirdly, yet there is some difference to be observed in good works, in regard of the matter; for some are expressly and immediatly enjoyned to all, as the duties of the morall Law; others are not commanded to all, but to some only, and that is not expressly and immediatly, but consequently, and upon the supposition of certaine circumstances, by which it comes to passe that (hic & nunc) in some particular case, they partake of the nature of precepts.

9. In such things, the will of God is to be gathered and collected by a syllogisme, whose generall proposition is contained in the Scripture; the assumption dependeth upon gift, call, or such like speciall circumstances; and the conclusion is out of the proposition so derived by the assumption, that in respect of this or that man, such or such a time, it hath the same force of binding, with a generall Commandement. For example, all ought to cut off occasion of calumny and scandall, and to take that course which makes most for the furtherance of the Gospell, and the edification of the Church. This is the proposition. 1 Cor. 10. 31. 32. 33. Now Paul, considering all circumstances, did thus assume, I Paul, if I shall freely preach the Gospell, shall cut off occasion of calumny. 2 Cor. 11. 12. I shall further the Gospell, 1 Cor. 9. 23. And edify the Church, 1 Cor. 9. 19. Hence this conclusion followes, therefore I Paul ought to preach the Gospell freely. 1 Cor. 9. 15. Againe, all ought according to the gifts which they have, and their vocation, to promote the Gospell, 1 Cor. 7. 17. I have the gift of continency, and the present necessity makes the single life more fit to further the Gospell, then marriage, 1 Cor. 26. Therefore I ought to continue in that single estate.

10. If this explication be duely observed, it will easily without any longer dispute, overthrow the Doctrine of the Papists, who make distinction betweene Evangelicall counsells, and the Lawes of God.

Qu. 5. Concerning the end of good works, it is demanded, what force intension hath to make an action either good, or bad?

Ans. A good intention by it selfe cannot make a good action, action, because goodnesse is a perfection, and doth arise from the perfection and integrity of all the causes. Neither is there any action so wicked, but may be committed out of some good end: the incest of Lots Daughter was upon a good end. Gen. 19. 32. And many doe kill Christians, thinking thereby to doe God service. Ioh. 16. 2.

12. Yet an evill intention doth make an action evill, because evill, is a defect, and doth arise out of any defect, Mat. 6. 1. Take heed yee doe not your almes before men to be seene of them, &c.

Qu. 6. What kind of intention is necessarily required to make an action good?

13. Ans. First, it is absolutely necessary that it be done with a respect to honesty, and in reference to the pleasing of God, and obeying his Will. Acts 24. 16. For an action cannot be good, unlesse it be don under the notion of goodnesse; Now to doe a good thing under the notion of goodnesse, is to have a respect to honesty and goodnesse in the doing of it. For hee that doth a thing that is honest, because it is delightfull, or profitable, may be said to doe rather a thing profitable, or delightfull, then honest. 1 Tim. 6. 5.

14. Secondly, a secondary intention of profit, or pleasure doth in no sort take away the honesty of an action, but adorn it rather, Rom. 1. 12. & 15.

15. Thirdly, it is also absolutely necessary, that there be a reference of the action to the glory of God, 1 Cor. 10. 37. This is done vertyually in the intention of our doing our duty: but the more distinct and direct respect is unto God in action, the more perfect it is, Pf. 16. 8.

16. Fourthly, it is meet also there be a secondary intention of setting our own salvation. 1 Cor. 9. 24.

17. Fifthly, in such works as come to the notice of others, it is requisite also that we thinke of stopping the mouths of the wicked, 1 Pet. 3. 16. And of furthering others in the way of salvation. Mat. 5. 16.

18. Sixthly, the cause is otherwise in evill actions; for to make an action evill, it is not required, that there be any respect respect to evill, or expresse intention of dishonouring Gods Name, or of bringing death, or giving offence unto others: because as the nature of sin consists in privation, so the want of good intention is an evill intention, and (as it is chosen by the will) interpretatively is reckoned for the intention of all those evils, which are opposed to good intentions: and hence it is that the sinner is said to love death, Pro. 8. 36.

Qu. 7. Of the forme of a good action wherein it doth consist?

19. It consists properly in the manner of doing, when the agent is not onely well disposed, and that thing which he doth is approved of God, but also the action is so ordered in respect of all the circumstances, as God prescribeth, what and of what nature this is, appeareth by the defect. 1 Cor. ii. 27. 28. 29. Comande. 3.

Qu. 8. Because the information and force of Conscience doth neerely pertaine to the forme of doing, concerning it may be demanded, whether the Conscience of man be a sufficient and absolute rule to worke by?

20. Ans. The Conscience of a man since the fall is defiled, Tit. 1. 15. And so by it selfe cannot be a perfect, and pure rule, yea: if we simply follow it as a leader, we shall be brought oftentimes into vile wickednesse. Ioh. 16. 2. Acts 26. 9. Phil. 3. 6. It is therefore only a subordinate rule, so far of force, as it is directed by the Word of God. Hence an erring Conscience hath not that power to bind, that we are simply bound to follow the judgement of such a Conscience. For we ought never to content our selves, till our Conscience be certainly informed in those things which concerne our duty; although in this sence it may be said to bind, because against such a Conscience, while such, we are to doe nothing.

Qu. 9. What is to be done when the Conscience is in doubt?

21. Ans. If the Conscience doe doubt whether the action be lawfull we ought to abstaine from that action, till we be certain concerning it. Ro. 14. 23.

Qu. 10. What if the Conscience be in a perplexity, so that it thinks it a sin aswell to abstaine from the action as to doe it?

22. Ans. Out of the nature of the thing it selfe, and of the Conscience considered by it selfe, such a case cannot fall out: for it cannot be that the judgement of the Conscience should at the same time assent to both parts of the contradiction.

Qu. 11. What is to be done when the Conscience is troubled with scruples?

23. The conscience is then said to be troubled with scruples when it doth give assent to one part of the question, being hereunto induced by sufficient arguments, but yet in some sort troubled with the objections of the other side, which it cannot easily answer. Such kind of doubts (if it may be) ought by a certaine judgement to be laid downe; but if this cannot be such an imperfection of judgement (in asmuch as it doth not hinder assent by a doubtfull wavering, but only make that assent to be more weake) is no iust cause to make us forbear that, which such an assent leads us unto. Deut. 13. 1. 2. 3. 1 Kings. 13. 21.

Qu. 12. How ought a man to carry himselfe between contrary opinions, when he is uncertaine of the truth?

24. Ans. First, it is not enough for a good conscience to adhere to the authority of men, though they be learned and godly; because the conscience is not by it selfe to be subjected to the judgement of man: Neither hath any humane testimony, sufficient strength to argue Gods approbation of a thing, or to excuse in Gods presence. Rom. 14. 12. 1 Cor. 8. 10.

25. Secondly, every one ought to follow that opinion, which (after due diligence to search the truth) he judgeth to be improbable out of the nature of the thing and the Law of God compared together, whether that probability appeare to him by his owne search, or by the helpe of others. 1 Cor. 8. 4. with 7.

26. Thirdly, if after due inquisition made the minde be wholly in suspence, whether the action be lawfull or unlawfull full, then that doubtfullnesse remaining, the safer part is to be chosen. Now that is the safer part in which there is no danger of sinning, and in this case he sinneth not, who simply abstaines from such an action, so that he condemnes not another which doth it, Rom. 14. 5. with 4. 23. We are therefore to abstaine from all such things, about which (after due diligence used) the conscience is in doubt, whether they be lawfull or no. They which doe otherwise, doe not only expose themselves to the danger of sinning in the very action it selfe, but without doubt doe sin in the very manner of doeing.

Qu. 13. When a man doth apprehend, that, of two sins he must needs commit one, which is he to choose?

27. Ans. The precepts of God doe never so jarre of their own nature, that it is necessary to break one of them by sin: For when a lesse Commandement is neglected, that a greater may be observed, that lesse Commandement doth cease for the while to bind; so that they who upon such an occasion neglect it, are altogether blamelesse, that is, sin not. Math. 12. 5. 7.

28. For that usuall saying, that of two evils we must chuse the least, it is meant of evils of punishment, not of sin.

29. A man ought therefore alwayes to have a fixed resolution to eschew and avoid all sin.

30. There is no necessity of feare, danger, or outward constraint whereby a man can be excused, if he doe upon that pretence commit the least sin.

31. Neither indeed is there properly any constraint, when any thing is done with certain counsell, and the will (which cannot be compelled) induced by feare, consenteth to the actinn.

32. Thirdly, if any through weaknesse be brought to those straits, that he thinks he must needs of two sins commit one, the conscience cannot give judgement in such a case, because that deliberation is made against the conscience. Yet it cannot be doubted, but he sins lesse, which commits the lesser sin.

CHAP. 18.

Question, 1. Wherein consists the nature of a thing indifferent?

1. Ans. First, adiaphorum (for so it is called) according to the interpretation of the word, is that which hath such a respect to two extreames, that it is inclined no more to the one, then the other, and in the same sense is called an indifferent thing, or a thing of a middle nature.

2. Secondly, now although according to this large acceptation of the word, any middle thing may be called indifferent or adiaphorum, yet the word doth commonly signify only such a thing as is in the middle betweene morall good and evill.

3. Thirdly, the middle betweene good and evill is either, 1. of meere deniall (as they terme it) in which there is neither good nor evill to be found; and so all substances, whether they be things naturall or artificiall, are middle things or indifferent: or it is, 2. a middle of participation, which doth so far agree with both extreames, as the extreames agree betweene themselves; and thus no substances are properly things middle and indifferent by themselves, because none of them are either good or evill, but only actions, and dispositions to actions.

4. Fourthly, such actions therefore as are neither commanded nor forbidden, and that be in their owne nature neither points of obedience; or disobedience, are indifferent or middle.

Qu. 2. Whether there be any actions indifferent in regard of their kind?

5. Ans. First, this may be understood two wayes: either that indifferency be of the specificall nature of any action, which is false: or that the common nature of an action should have an indifferent respect to good or evill, which is true.

6. Secondly, there is therefore no action of its own nature so indifferent, but by circumstances it may be made good, or evil; but there be divers actions which in their common and bare nature, before they be as it were clothed with circumstances, doe include in themselves no goodnesse or badnesse; as, to eat, to drink, to take a journey, to walke, &c.

Qu. 3. Whether indifferent actions differ nothing among themselves, but are all equally distant from good and evil?

7. Ans. In their owne intrinsecall nature they differ nothing at all; but yet there are some which for the most part have evill circumstances annexed to them, and so bend more toward evill, and have an evill name, as to doe the worke of an accuser, the office of an hangman, &c. Some there be also which for the most part have good circumstances, and so bend toward good, and have a good name, as, to till the ground, to follow our study diligently, &c.

Qu. 4. Whether doe things indifferent make any thing for order and comlinesse?

8. Ans. Whatsoever it is that of its owne nature serves for order or comlinesse, or edification, is not indifferent: for when they doe participate the nature of goodnesse, they are not in the middle betwixt good and bad. And when they produce good, they must needs have some good force and efficacy in them: every thing brings forth its like.

Qu. 5 Whether do indifferent things cease to be indifferent when any certain thing is set down concerning them, by such as are in authority?

9. Ans. Nothing ought to be commanded, but that which is good, nor to be forbidden, but what is evill; That which is indifferent cannot simply, absolutely; and for ever be either injoynd or forbidden; but commanded, as it drawes neer to good, forbidden, as it approacheth to evill.

Qu. 6. Whether any singular and individuall action be indifferent?

10. Ans. First, there be some actions which though they be actions of a man, yet they are not humane actions; such are those which proceed from imagination only, and not from deliberate reason, as the rubbings of mens hands, to scratch the head or beard, to take up a straw, &c. while we are thinking of something else: these actions are not morally good or evil, they want that which is required to make them so, namely counsell and deliberation. For although a man may sin by those actions, as if in time of Prayer he suffer his imagination to wander; and do give way to such toyings as those. Yet these actions considered in themselves are neither good nor evil. It is true these motions are subject to the command of mans will, but yet they are so subject, that they may be exercised without any precedent act of reason: Neither are we bound any further by reason to prevent them; but only so far that they hinder not the duties we are about. So for moving of the eye-lids, reason and the will have power to moderate them, but it is not worth the while to take notice how-often we winke, if so be we take heed that in such things nothing be done which is undecent, or against our duty.

11. Secondly, every action which proceeds from deliberate reason, and is properly called humane, considered singularly and in the individuall, as it is an exercised action, is either good or evil. For such a kind of action is either ordered to a good end, or it is not; If it be, then it hath the nature of a good action, if other circumstances be correspondent; if it be not ordered to a good end, it is an evil action because it wants the perfection, which ought to be in it, and is not according to its rule.

12. Yet is not required to the goodnesse of naturall action, that it be alwayes actually and explicitly referred to the due end, so that this be done implicitly and vertyually; because reason in that exercise of such kinde of actions, may often with more profit be conversant about those objects.

13. Thirdly, some one or two circumstances of an human action may be indifferent, as if one scholler be speaking with another, it is sometimes indifferent whether they use the Latine tongue, or any other. But their talke taken with all thee circumstances is necessarily either good or bad: the reason is, because the determination of an action doth not depend upon one circumstance apart, but upon all jointly together.

14. Fourthly, there may be some singular action in which there is no goodnesse speciall to be found, which may not be found in another, and so, that at this time we doe this or that, rather then another thing, therein is oftentimes neither good nor evill. Opportunity, or the suggestion of our minds without any respect of morall goodnesse, may be of weight sufficient to make the determination:

15. Fifthly, although therefore there be no singular actions humane, that is neither good, nor evill; yet there are divers, which singularly and in comparison of others are neither necessary nor unlawfull. For as the Carver hath oftentimes no certain reason, why he rather makes this image, then that: yet if he make any, it is necessary that he either follow the rules of his Art, and make a good one, or faile and so make a bad one. So it is in many singular actions of men, which in respect of the exercise, have no proper reason beside the inclination of the mind, but in the doing they are either good or bad.

CHAP. 19.

Of a voluntary Act.

Quest. 1. Whether in a good or evill act there be necessity required an inclination of the will?

1. Ans. First, the will is the principle and the first cause of all humane operation in regard of the exercise of the act. For we therefore doe this or that rather then another thing, because we will; As God himselfe is said to do all things of his owne Will. Eph. 1. 11. So also doth man who is made after the Image of God. The first cause therefore of the goodnesse or finfulnesse of any Act of man, is in the Will.

2. Secondly, liberty also of election is formally in the will: that therefore any one doth yield obedience to God, or refuseth to do so, proceeds from the will.

3. Lastly, our obedience stands in our conformity to the will

Will of God: and the disobedience, in our unconformity thereunto. Now our conformity with the Will of God is first and principally in our will, Apoc. 2. 6.

Qu. 2. What are those things which make an action to become not voluntary.

4. Ans. Nothing at all but either absolute violence of constraint, or chance which could not be foreseen, or prevented. And for such things as are done through absolute violence or meere chance, they have neither the nature of Obedience or sin. As if one should be forced to offer incense, or bow the knee before an Idoll, or should meere by chance kill another, Deut. 19. 5, 6, 10.

Of actions done through ignorance.

Q. 3. What are we to thinke of those actions which are done through ignorance?

5. Ans. First, that ignorance which is in some sort a cause of the action (so that if a man knew what he did he would not Doe it) if it be involuntary both in it selfe and in its cause, that is, not affected, nor procured, nor tolerated, doth make the action meere casuall and involuntary and so excuseth from sin.

6. Secondly, ignorance of the Law doth never wholly excuse, because all men are bound to know the Will of God: but yet it doth somewhat lessen the fault if it be not affected, 1 Tim. 1. 13. Iohn 4. 41. Acts 3. 17. But if it be affected it is of it selfe a sin and so doth not diminish but rather increase the guilt of other sins, 2 Pet. 3. 5.

7. Thirdly, an Ignorance of the fact if a man hath used such diligence as he ought, doth excuse him, because by such an ignorance the fact is made casuall. So Jacob being deceived lay with Leah whom he tooke to be Rachell, Gen. 29. But if due diligence have not beene used, ignorance of the fact, doth not altogether excuse although it do somewhat lessen the fault. And this seemes to have beene the case of Abimilech Gen. 20. 5.

Of actions
done through
feare.

Q. 4. What are we to judge of those actions which are done through feare.

8. Ans. First, feare doth not simply make an action involuntary: but doth considering the circumstances of time and and place, &c. impell a man to will this or that. As appears in that knowne instance of the merchant, who is induc'd through feare of death to throw away his merchandize into the Sea. Feare therefore doth never wholly excuse from sin: yea more, feare it self is oft a sin forbidden, and a cause too of most grievous sins. Mat. 10. 26. Phil. 1. 28. 1 Pet. 3. 14. Apoc. 21. 8. Although therefore a great feare or terrour such as is wont sometimes to trouble even a man of good courage before men, be accounted for a good excuse, and is of force to make contracts done through feare void, yet before God such an excuse will not be taken.

9. Secondly, yet that sin which is committed through some strong terrour, is not so grievous (if other things be alike) as that which is committed of the voluntary inclination of the will without any such feare of danger, because in feare the temptation is stronger: and such a fall, if repentance follow, doth proceed not so much from malice, as from infirmity and perturbation. And this was Peters case when he denied Christ.

Qu. 5. What are we to judge of those actions which are done through concupiscense.

Of actions done through concupiscense.

10. Ans. Concupiscense doth not make an act cease to be voluntary, neither doth it indeed diminish the voluntariness of it in respect of the act, but increaseth it rather. For he that doth a thing out of concupiscense, hath a will strongly inclined to that which it doth, as is appears either delightfull or profitable to him, if therefore the concupiscense be fixt the sin is the greater. as it was in Indas, who betrayed Christ out of covetousnesse of monies.

Qu. 6. What are we to judge of those actions which are done through inadvertency, or through not minding of what we doe?

Of actions done through Inadvertency.

11. Ans. Inadvertency or mindlesnesse is of the same nature with ignorance: because it differs not from it, but only as the privation of an act doth differ from the privation of a disposition. Inadvertency therefore is it selfe often a sin and is opposed to watchfulnesse. At such a time therefore as wee are bound to watch and attend, if we watch not and

and attend, not we may be rightly said to will this watchfulness, not to will it, yea to will our inadvertency, Esa. 1. 3.

12. Again this inadvertency is sometimes voluntarily chosen in it selfe. Amos 6. 10. Sometimes it is voluntarily chosen in its cause. Mat. 13. 22.

Qu. 7. How are we said to will a thing in its cause?

How a thing is willed in its cause.

13. Ans. When we doe wil something upon which an other thing followes. He which will be present at immoderate drinkings may be said to will drunkenness. He which willingly gives himselfe to sleepe, and idleness, may be accounted guilty of a willing neglect of the duties of his calling. He which will please men, may be said with his will to displease God. Gal. 1. 10.

CHAP. 20.

Of the sins of the Heart.

Question, 1. What are the sins of the Heart?

1. Ans. The sins of the heart are partly thoughts, partly delights, and partly desires.

Qu. 2. What thoughts are to be accounted as sins?

2. Ans. Ther's a threefold thought of the heart about that which is evill. 1. In the bare and simple apprehending of evill. 2. When with that apprehension ther's joynd some motion of the heart to consent to the evill. 3. When there is a full approbation of and consent unto the evill. In the first of these there is of it selfe no sin. For it was in Christ. Mat. 4. 1. Hence it is rightly said to know evill is not evill. But the other two kinds of thoughts are not without sin. For the third alone makes question, and for the second the Scripture is plaine. James 1. 14. Where we are also taught how to distinguish those thoughts which are evill from others, namely when some thought about an evill thing begins in the least manner to draw us towards it, when we begin to nibble upon it and are tickled with it. The reason is because then it begins in some sort to be received by us, and stick in all, so that that the evill of which we thinke becomes in a sort ours whilst we begin to be moved towards it as towards an object betwixt which and us ther's some agreement. For although we stop heere and proceed not, to a full consent: yet eventhis fasten's some blot and defilement upon us (now we ought to have such a care of our soules which were made after Gods Image, that we keepe them pure from all even from the least pollution and defilement. For it is well observed by a great author that every man is appointed by God to keepe, and defend his owne heart as Souldiers are sometimes appointed to defend a Castle, or Towne against the enemies. If therefore without seeking of any aid, and without expecting succour from GOD hee should upon the first attempt of the enemy yield up this Castle, hee commits manifest treason. What then shall we say, if he should give up the Keyes of this Castle before there be any assault made? now the Keyes of the Castle are the thoughts. For these open the heart, and let in the devill. Certainly, he which voluntarily gives this Key to the Devill shall never be able to cleare himselte from guilt of treason. Now a man delivers this Key to the Devill, as oft as he gives up his thoughts into the Devills hands, or frames his thoughts to the Devills will. The roling of the thoughts in the minde is like the turning of the Key in the Lock to open it.

Qu. 3. What delight about evill is to be accounted as sinfull?

3. Ans. Not that onely which comes from evill in the commission of it, or after the Commission or while we have a purpose to commit it, Pro. 2. 14. 10. 23. But even the simple, bare, and ineffectuall complacency in an unlawfull thing, although there be no purpose ever to commit it. This delight is usually called delectatio morosa not from the length of time, but from the stay of the understanding which stayes, and prolongs the time in the contemplation of an unlawfull thing with some pleasure. Now the reason why this delight is a sinne, is because that delight is a conformity of the affection with the thing thought upon, and doth containe some approbation of it. Ro. 7. 22.

How the heart sins by delight.

Qu. 4. Is all delight in an unlawfull thing sinfull?

Whether some delight in an unlawfull thing may not be lawfull.

4. Ans. Yes, if 1. It be in an unlawfull thing or an evill action as its unlawfull and evill, 2. If it proceed from an affection tending and inclining towards such things, or from any unlawfull provocation, 3. If it be such a delight as in its owne nature may have the force of a cause, or an occasion to stir up evill affections. In these three cases it cannot be doubted but such a delight is a sin. But if one be delighted in the thought of an evill thing not as it is evill, but as there is some naturall perfection exercised, and put forth in it, without any danger of consenting to the evill, such a delight is not simply, and of its selfe a sinne. As when one takes delight in that cunning dexterity, constancy, and courage, which appears in another, in an unjust duell: the reason is because this delight is not properly, and formally conversant about an evill thing but about a good thing.

What desires be sinfull.

Concerning absolute desires ther's no doubt but if they be carried to things that are evill they are sinfull; but concerning such desires, as are only with a condition there may be some question made.

Qu. 1. Whether is it lawfull for a man to wish any evill of punishment, or misery to himselfe upon any condition?

5. Ans. That this is in some sort lawfull appears, 1. By the example of Paul Rom. 9. 3. Who wished himselfe accursed for the Iewes sake, 2. By the thing it selfe, because actually to undergoe and suffer such a kinde of evill is not onely lawfull, but expedient often upon some condition, Gen. 44. 33. 3. By reason, because to suffer evill is not of it selfe an evill, or a sin: if therefore the condition under which it is desired be good, the desire is good also.

Qu. 2. Whether can the desire of an unlawfull thing upon a condition become lawfull?

6. Ans. First, in those things which are only unlawfull by mans Law such kinde of desires may be lawfull, because such things have no intrinsecal evillnesse in them; As if I would go out of the City over the Walls when the Gates are shut, unlesse it were forbidden.

7. Secondly, in some things also that are forbidden, even by by Gods Law which have no such intrinsecall evill annexed to them, but that it may in thought be abstracted & separated; such desires may be lawfull by themselves, if there be no danger of an absolute consent. As if a man should say I would take such a Woman to be my Wife, if she were not too neere of kin to me.

8. Thirdly, The desire to doe that which is plainly, and intrinsecally evill upon condition, if it were lawfull and not forbidden, cannot be excused from sin. As if a man should say I would commit fornication if it were not forbidden. For our desires ought to stand at as far a distance from sin as from any thing in the World, and to abhor it utterly: but in such kinde of desires there doth appeare some inclination, and propension to sin.

9. Fourthly, the desire to doe any thing which is in it selfe evill, unlesse the singular condition and state of ones life hindred it, is a sinne. As if a man should thinke I would be revenged upon such a one if I were not a minister. Or I would keepe company with such and such boon fellowes, if I were not towards the Ministry. For such men doe not abstaine from evill simply because it is evill, but because it becomes not men of their callings or may tend more to their prejudice then to the prejudice of others,

10. Fifthly, when the condition is such an one as doth not except the evill in the action, but the danger of punishment onely, then the desire is a grievous sinne, and a signe of much inward wickednesse. As if a man should say I would kill such an one if I might doe it, and it never be knowne. I would play the Fornicator, or adulterer if there were no Hell: for although such a condition, or wish puts nothing in esse, (as they say) that is, in being, in respect of the thing it selfe, yet in the will it doth suppose an affection towards such a sin, and shewes also that he which is so affected would commit those sins, if he might escape punishment.

11. Sixthly, all such conditionall desires in a manner are temptations of the devill, which we cannot admit without a great deale of danger.

CHAP. 21.

Of the sins of the Mouth.

Question. 1. Whether if a man have conceived a sin in his Heart, is there no evill added to it by the uttering of it?

1. Ans. If one doe refraine from uttering with his mouth that evill which he hath in his heart, that he may the easilier commit it without being hindred, then the silence it selfe is a sin, and tends to the aggravation of the evill which he hath conceived in his thoughts: and a much greater sin is it if he should in his words make a shew of the cleane contrary. Pro. 26. 24. 25. & 10 18. But if one doe therefore abstaine from uttering the evill which he hath thought, because it is evill and shamefull, such an one stops the course of sin and doth well. Proverbs 30. 32. And if he should when he hath thought evill, proceed to utter it with his tongue, he increaseth his sin by making it more compleat then it was before the speaking.

Qu. 2. Whether is an idle word a sin?

Of idle words,

2. Ans. 1. An idle word properly and strictly is an unfruitfull word, or a word of no use, fruit, or profit. Now such a word can hardly ever proceed from deliberate reason: because reason and the will of man doth alwayes propound unto it selfe some end, and some good either morall or naturall: so that of necessity every word proceeding from deliberation must be either good or evill, and so no word properly and rigidly can be said to be idle.

3. Ans. 2. This notwithstanding, those speeches in Scripture are called idle Mat. 12. 36. Which are little or nothing regarded by the most, and of which they thinke they shall never give account. Now of these words our Saviour saith ther's such an account to be given before God, as that even in them there will bee found matter enough, and desert desert enough for the inflicting of eternall Condemnation.

Qu. 3. Whether are all words uttered in jest or sport, or by way of merriment, idle and sinfull? Of words spoken in sport, and jest.

3. Ans. They are not alwayes idle because they have sometimes their use, at least for recreation and to make mirth. Neither are they alwayes sinfull: because they may have a lawfull and honest use, Pro. 29. 9. 1 Kings 18. 27. Such kinds of jests therefore may be both good and evill as they may be used.

Qu. 4. Whether are those words sinfull wherein men doe make profession of some good, without any intention of performing it, James 2. 16.

5. Ans. They are sinfull, and that not onely in regard of the defect, because a due intention is wanting, but also in regard of the deceit and fraud which doth accompany such words and hath in some sort the nature of a lie.

Quest. 5. Whether is multiplicity of words a sin:

6. Ans. It is not of it selfe a sin for a man to use many words: but it is often an occasion of sin, Proverbs 10. 19.

C H A P. 22.

Of sins of Works.

Quest. 1. Whether the externall Work of sin joyned with the internall doe increase the evill of it?

1. Ans. 1. If one have an effectuall will of sinning, viz. be so affected in regard of his will towards sinne, that nothing hinders him from the eternall Worke, but onely that the occasion is wanting, such a man before God is accounted as great a sinner, as if hee had performed the outward action; this appears by the contrary acts of obedience. 1 Cor. 8. 12. Heb. 11. 17.

2. Ans. 2. And yet such a sinne in regard of the extension of it is made great by the externall worke. For as sancti-tion is great when it hath renewed the spirit, soule and body, then if it should reforme any one part alone, 1 Thess. 5. 23. 1 Corinthians 6. 20. 2 Corinthians 7. 1. So also sinne in the like manner is greater when it hath as it were invaded the body, then if it should keepe possession onely of the soule.

3. Ans. 3. In regard of that hurt and mischief which is done to others, either by reason of scandall, or by reason of some reall discommodity, sin is made greater by the externall work. 1 Sam. 25. 32. 33.

4. Ans. 4. Hence it is that some punishments are justly inflicted for the externall act of some sinnes which are not inflicted for the internall. As a divorce is made for the act of adultery but not for the intention.

Qu. 2. Whether doe those discommodities which fall out in the event of an evill work increase the sin.

5. Ans. These kinds of events may have a fourefold respect unto the will of the sinner. 1. Sometimes they are directly intended, and then they doe increase the sinne, in the internall nature of it whether they follow or follow not, 2. Sometimes they are foreseene, although not directly intended, as, when one seeth an innocent person like to be much indamaged by the theft which he intendeth, and then interpretatively, and indirectly they are said to be increased, and likewise aggravate the sinne, 3. Sometimes they are neither intended nor foreseene, but yet they ought by some meanes to be foreseene and prevented: and then also they aggravate the sin, because they are in some sort presumed to be foreseene, 4. Sometimes the ignorance of them is void of sinne, and then they are not imputed as sins.

Qu. 3. How is the act of sin broken off?

6. A. 1. Not by every physicall interruption of the act: for if it be in a morall sence continued, the sin it selfe remaineth.

7. 2. Not by a simple cessation of the act of the intention or will: for that may come to passe through inadvertence, and distraction about other things.

3. The morality therefore of it is onely broken off by a contrary will and resolution : and yet that breaking off is imperfect; unless there be withall such a change of the will, as is required to true Repentance.

FINIS.

It is hereby declared that the said contract is null and void, and the off is hereby declared null and void of the will, it is hereby declared null and void.

OF CONSCIENCE.

Concerning the dutie of man towards God.

CHAPTER I. Of Religion.

Quest. 1.

Hether religious honour be due to God onely?

W 1. A. 1. All that honour which Religion doth enjoyne, or is yeilded unto any, because religion commands it, is sometimes called religious. And in this sence that honour which is required in the fifth Commandement may be called religious honour, which yet is due to divers creatures.

2. A. 2. There is also a civill honour, which hath a certaine singular likenesse to that honour which is given to God, and because of that Analage is sometimes called religious honour, such as is pietie towards parents.

3. A. 3. But that honour which is the proper act of Religion ligion as respect unto God onely as the object which is to be honoured. For 1. the greatest honour is due to God onely : but religious honour is the greatest, 2. That honour which is due unto the Authour and Lord of life, and eternall blessednesse can be given to none but God : but such is religious honour. 3. The soule and conscience of man is directly subject to God onely : but this is done in religious honour. 4. God onely is our absolute Lord, and hath an unlimited power to exact Obedience at our hands : but this is supposed in religious honour. 5. Every where in Scripture such are condemned as give religious worship to any but the true God.

Quest 2. How may religious worship be knowne ?

4. A. 1. If confidence and trust be properly placed in any.

5. A. 2. If the Conscience be subjected unto any.

6. A. 3. If those things which are proper to God be attributed to any.

7. A. 4. If there be a going beyond the usuall bounds of civill honour.

Quest. 3. In what externall acts doth religious honour, or the worship of God consist ?

8. A. 1. All lawfull acts which men do exercise directly towards God, are acts of honour and religious worship. For we can doe nothing out of dutie towards God, besides the giving of honour to him with submission and reverence.

9. A. 2. Yet there are some acts in which this affection is more expressly signified then in others, namely those in which wee have almost respect to nothing but the honour of God, as falling prostrate, bending of the knees, or submissive bowing of the body before God, by which acts the externall worship and adoration is set out unto us in the Scriptures.

Quest. 4. What honour is due to men, and to the holy Angels ?

Of the honour due to holymen and Angels.

10. A. 1. If they be present with us, civill honour is to be given to them, according to that excellencie which is in them.

11. A. 2. But if they be absent, or appeare not unto us, there is no act at all of adoration to be exercised towards them.

12. A. 3. Whether they be absent, or whether they be present present, there is no religious honour due unto them, because although they have a singular respect to the excellencie of God yet that excellencie is to them extrinsecall, and so the honour which is due unto that excellencie is not to bee given unto them. Acts 10, Apoc. 19, and 22.

CHAP. II.

Of Faith.

Quest. 1. How is divine Faith distinguished from opinion, and from humane faith.

1. A. 1. Divine Faith is grounded upon Gods Testimonie, 1 Iohn 5, 9, 10.

2. A. 2. It hath alwayes joyned with it a pious affection towards God, Heb. 11. Rom. 4. 20.

3. A. 3. It overcomes the world, 1. Iohn 5, 4, Rom 4. 18.

Quest. 2. What things are of necessitie to bee beleaved of salvation.

Things of necessity to be beleaved.

4. A. 1. We must implicitey at least beleeve all the things which God hath propounded to be beleaved, Acts 24 14.

5. A. 2. Wee must beleeve with an explicite Faith, those things the knowledge and apprehension of which is necessary to it as a meane to salvation, Iohn 6. 53 & 17. 3.

6. A. 3. The things which are necessary to be knowne and beleaved, for the conceiving and apprehending of those, Rom. 3. 19, 20.

Quest. 3. What measure and degree of knowledge is necessary in those things which are explicitey to be beleaved.

7. A. Those things may be knowne three wayes; First, according to the substance of the sence or sentence in which they are contained. 2. According to that declaration whereby they are distinctly explicated in the Scriptures to the edification of Faith. 3. According to the difficultie which usually are, or may be raised about them. Now it is sufficient to salvation to know the fore mentioned things, according to the substance of the matter, and the necessary declaration of it. For example, it is sufficient to salvation, if one understand that that the Father, Sonne, and holy Ghost, is one God in essence, distinguished into three Persons: that Christ is the true Sonne of God, and true man also, in one Person, although he understand little or nothing of the subtile disputations about these things.

Quest. 4. Whether can that man be saved, which beleeves any thing opposite unto the things which are necessary to be beleeved to salvation.

8. A. If he doe understand that they are repugnant, hee cannot beleeve both. But if through error, and want of instruction, he thinke that they may both stand together, such an error, doth not exclude a man from salvation. For there is no mortall man, which is not subiect unto error: neither is there any error in Religion, which is not in some sort repugnant to the foundations of Religion.

Quest. 5. Whether such men can be saved, as make no matter at all of those things which are not absolutely necessary to salvation.

9. A. It cannot possibly be, that those should have true faith about things necessary to salvation, which doe slight and neglect all the rest. For hee which is carefull about his salvation, will seeke the most certaine, and the most distinct knowledge thereof. 2. Those which by true faith adhear unto God, doe make high account of Gods will and commandements. 3. Hee which hath true faith, will seeke not onely his owne salvation, but Gods glory. 4. True Faith as all other things, will seeke the preservation and increase of it selfe. 5. It takes delight in all things like unto it, and agreeing with it.

Quest. 6. Whether a man may by divine Faith beleeve a falshood?

10. A. 1. Divine Faith neither by it selfe, nor by accident, neither directly, nor indirectly, is the cause of a false assent, as it is false, for so God, and the truth of God should be the cause of fashood.

11. A. 2. Yet it may concurre as a cause in regard of the substance of the act of assenting to that which is false, by reason of an ill accommodation, Acts 21. 11, 12. So the case stands in such a Syllogisme, whose proposition is true by Divine Faith.

Faith, and the assumption is admitted by an humane faith or false opinion. For example, whatsoever is revealed in the Scriptures is true: but in the Scriptures it is revealed that the holy Martyrs shall rise from the dead a thousand years before other men, therefore it is true.

Quest. 7. Whether may a man make an ill use of Divine Faith; namely, by referring it to some evill end, as vaine-glory, or such like?

12. A. Divine Faith it selfe, cannot by it selfe be referred to an evill end: but some kind of knowledge that is gotten by it, may be thus perverted, 1 Cor. 8. 1, 2. 2 Cor. 1. 2, 7.

Quest. 8. What kind of certaintie is there in Divine Faith?

13. A. 1. In respect of the object, there is a greater certaintie of Faith then of any naturall knowledge.

14. A. 2. In respect of the subject also, it workes of its owne nature a stronger assent in us then naturall knowledge doth, because it is grounded on a more certaine cause.

15. A. 3. Yet because the understanding of man hath a greater proportion to naturall things, and doth comprehend them more fully, therefore it doth not alwayes use the Light of Faith with that certaintie with which it useth naturall knowledge.

16. A. 4. Hence it is that such waverings and doubtings, as be involuntary and indeliberate, may stand with true Faith, because of the imperfection of Faith, and the infirmity of the understanding.

Quest. 9. Whether a beleever may be infallibly certaine that he hath Faith?

17. A. 1. According to the nature of the thing, and in common course, he which doth beleve, knowes that he doth beleve: For the understanding reflecteth upon its owne action, and as it were by an evident experience perceiveth what it doth, as also what to will, willeth. And as by naturall knowledge wee not onely know a thing surely, but are sure also that we know it. And we know also whether the will be carried after such an object or no, so also it is in Faith. Otherwise no man could say as that blind man did, John 9. 38. Lord I beleve.

18. A. 2. All the faithfull are commanded not onely to beleve.

believe, but also to make this iure unto themselves that they doe believe, 2 Cor. 13.5.

19. A.3. No man can doubt of the certainty of his owne assent which doth not doubt also of the truth of the object: He which doubts whether he do certainly believe that Christ is God, he doth doubt in some sort whether Christ be God.

20. A.4. This experimentall certaintie may bee had not onely of the substance of the act, but also of the formall nature of it, that the Faith which a man hath, is truly Divine Faith. Because the understanding by its owne reflex we act doth not onely perceive the act it selfe, but also the kind and nature of it, which it hath from the object, as also it perceives the affection from whence it doth proceed.

21. A.5. Besides, this experimentall certainty, there is also another certainty of Faith from the testimony of the holy Ghost, Rom. 8.6. For when the holy Ghost testifies that we are the children of God, it testifies likewise that we have that Faith which is proper to the children of God.

22. A.6. There is also a certainty of Faith which ariseth from the proper acts of it distinctly perceived, as when one knowes his owne readinesse out of a pious affection wholly to deny himselfe, and all carnall reason, that so hee may adhere unto God, according to his will revealed in his Word.

23. A.7. Yet for all this, there may be such a defect in the reflection of the understanding upon its owne action: such a discretion of the Holy Ghost, such an intermission of the acts of Faith, that a beleever for a time may not be able to know that he doth believe that which he doth believe; yea, he may falsely judge himselfe to be an unbeleever.

CHAP. III.

Of the externall profession of Faith.

Quest. 1. WHether is externall profession necessary.

I. A. It is necessary for many reasons.
1. Because God hath commanded it, 1 Pet. 3.15. 2. Because it hath promise of salvation made unto it, Mat. 10.32. Rom. 10.

10. 3. Because there is a grievous threatenng made against the neglect of this duty, Mark. 8. 5 8. Luke 9. 26. and 18. 8. 2 Tim. 2. 12. 4. Because this profession makes for the edification of other men, and the neglect of it is a scandall to them, Phil. 1. 12. and 2. 15, 16. 5. Because this profession of Faith makes for the glory of God, Phil. 1. 20. and the deniall of it is a great reproach to the name of God, as if it were a thing to be ashamed of, Luke 9 26.

Quest. 2. Whether is this profession alwayes, and every where necessary.

2. A. 1. It is alwayes and every where required that wee deny not the Faith, or make any profession, or shew contrary to the true Faith. 2. Yet it is not either necessary or convenient every where without difference to proofes what we beleeve, Math. 7. 6. As if some furious fellow should rise up, and pull out his sword, and say he would kill whosoever he was that should confesse himselfe to be a Christian, it were no wisdom at such a time, and before him to make profession of ones Faith. But then onely this profession is to be made when there is some hope at least, that it would tend to the glory of God, and the edification of our neighbour. For the necessitie of the meanes is judged by that relation which they stand in unto the end.

Quest. 3. Whether is a man bound to make confession when he is asked publickly concerning his faith, by one that is set in authority.

3. A. In common course he is bound so to doe, 1 Pet. 3. 15. Because it pertaines to the glory of God, and the salvation of others, Mat. 10. 18.

Quest. 4. Whether a man may not being compelled by necessity be present at a forbidden worship, if he keepe his mind in a dislike of it.

4. A. If he be present without any difference carrying himselfe there after the same manner that those doe who professe that worship, he sinnes grievously. 1. Against his neighbour, 1 Cor. 8. 10. 2. Against God, 1 Cor. 10. 20, 21; 22.

Quest. 5. Whether is it lawfull for the avoiding of danger, to use the Ceremonies which belong to such a worship.

5. A. It is not lawfull: for the proper end of Ceremonies is profession, hee therefore which doth use an idolatrous Ceremonie dothin some sort make a profession of idolatry.

6 Although therefore it be lawfull, to use any civill garment of idololators, yet no man without sin under that pretence can use such a garment as is the proper badge of religion, and is of its own institution religious.

Quest. 6. Whether is it lawfull to fly in time of persecution, especially for a Pastor?

7. A. 1. That it is lawfull in some case to fly appeareth; 1. By Christs direction, Mat. 10. 16. 23. 2. By Christs owne example, Mat. 12. 14. and 14. 13. Iohn 10. 39. 3. From the example of the Saints, as of Moses, Heb. 11. 27. Of Elias, 1 Kings 29. 3. Of divers Prophets, 1 Kings 18. 13. And of the Apostle Paul, Acts 9. 25. 4. By reason, because by the Law of nature men are bound to preserve their owne lives, till it doe manifestly appeare that the God and Lord of Life doe require them, to lay them downe, that is till some necessitie or advantage for the glory of God, for the good of the Church, doe perswade the contrary.

8. A. 2. It is not lawfull for them to fly, whose presence is necessary for the edification of the Church. For this would be, not so much a declining from persecution as a shaming of the dutie.

9. A. 3. In such a persecution as is common, and not personall, it is a shame for a Pastor to shew himselfe more afraid then others be, who should be an example of Christian courage, and constancy to the whole Church.

Quest. 7 Whether may one that is caught, and put into prison for the confession of the truth, lawfully breake the prison, or deceive his Keepers?

10. A. He may not; 1. Because hee is now called to make confession. 2. Because this were to offer violence to publike authority. 3. Because the Apostles, and other holy men, whose examples are commended unto us, never practised any such thing.

Quest. 8. Whether is it lawfull for a beleever in such a case to redeeme his liberty with a price.

11. A. 1. That this is not alwayes lawfull appeares by Pauls example, Acts. 24. 26.

Of flying in time of persecution.

12. A. 2. Yet it seemeth sometimes to be lawfull by the nature of the thing; For if hee which hath power to set one free being covetous and delirous of gaine, should seeke a reward for so doing, and the circumstance bee such, that a man might lawfully accept of liberty gratis, then it is as lawfull to procure ones liberty by the losse of some money, as to redeeme ones life at the hands of a theefe.

13. A. 3. In this and the like cases the honour of God, the edification of the Church, and the disposition of a mans owne conscience, this way, or that way, is chiefly to be heeded.

Quest. 9. Whether ought Infidels to be compelled to the profession of the true Faith by such as be their governours?

14. A. 1. They ought not to be compelled to it. 1. Because Faith it self cannot be wrought by constraint. The act of true Faith proceeds alwayes from a free will, not from feare or force, Psal. 47 10. Acts 2. 41. 2. Because externall profession without internall Faith, is nothing but hypocrisie. 3. Because the Church by this meanes is corrupted, whilst those are thrust upon it as members which are not fit.

15. A. 2. Yet they are to bee allured with favours, and if that will not doe, to be moved by losse of favour, seriously to consider with themselves of Faith, and of the imbracing of it.

16. A. 3. They may also be compelled to come and heare the Word preached. For this preaching takes not away their heresie.

17. A. 4. They may also be compelled that they blasphemame not the true faith, nor hinder the propagation of it.

CHAP. IV.

Of Heresie.

Quest. 1. VV Ho is to be accounted as an heretique?

1. A. To make a man an Heretique in that sence in which the word is taken, in the Church it is required; 1. That he be such an one as makes some profession of Christianity, viz. that he either be baptized, or at least-wise a Chatechist, for Heresis is a Greeke word signifying Election, so that an Heretique is such an one as leaves in some part the truth which he did professe, and afterwards chooseth to himselfe a contrary opinion, to which he adhereth. But he which never professed the truth, although he may be of the same judgement an heretique is of, yet such an one is not called an heretique, but an Infidell.

2. It is required secondly, that the error which he holds be not onely contrary to the doctrine which is contained in the Scriptures, but that it be contrary to that doctrine which belongs to the summe and substance of faith and manners. Such a distinction as this is betweene doctrines principall, and lesse principall, is delivered to us by the Apostle, 1 Cor.

3. 10, 11. Now although heresie be properly opposite unto Faith; yet it ought also to bee extended unto manners: for some error in Faith is alwayes the foundation of error in manners, 1 Tim. 4. 1, 2, 3, 4. And moreover, heresie is alwayes so against Faith; that it doth necessarily overthrow it; For otherwise it is rather to be called an error in Faith, or about Faith, and not an heresie against Faith.

3. It is required thirdly, that the error which he holds bee joyned with stubbornesse and obstinacie, Tit. 3. 10.

4. Such an one is to be accounted stubborn, as when the truth is not onely manifestly revealed in Scripture, but is also sufficiently propounded, and manifested unto him, yet doth so adhere to his error, that he either opposeth himselfe to the plaine Scripture, and will not through the naughtinesse of his mind perceiue the fence of it; for he is obstinate which is not ready to captivate all his understanding and reason unto the Scripture.

5. Therefore a man may be an heretique materially whilst he gives assent to some pernicious error through simple facility, likenesse, and rashnesse in beleeving heretiques who were wont to deceive under a colour of piety, or through ignorance, who is not yet to be accounted formally an heretique, because he is not stubborn nor obstinate in his mind, and so cannot goe simply for an heretique.

Quest. 2. Whether are Papists Heretiques?

6. A. 1. Papistry as it was confirmed by the Councell of

Trem is a pernicious heresie. 1. Because it doth directly overthrow true and saving faith, whilst it teacheth to place faith and confidence in the creatures, and thrusts upon men works and humane Traditions in the roome of Faith, and the Bishop of Rome and his creatures, in the roome of Christ. 2. Because it doth divers waies by false worship and idolatry overthrow the principall part of piety. 3. Because it useth such stubbornesse in the defence and propagation of these errors, that it doth even accuse the Scripture it selfe many waies, takes it away from the people of God, and makes it subject to their authoritie and pleasure.

7. A. 2. Yet it is not wont to be reckoned amongst the Heresies. 1. Because it is not any one singular heresie by it selfe, but as it were a certaine body made up and produced of many heresies. For as Mahumetisme is a mixture of former heresies which had been in the East and South, so Papistrie though under another colour is the very sinck of divers heresies, that pestered the West and North. 2. Because it did not arise altogether and at once, but grew to its strength leasurably and by little. 3. Because for many pernicious errors it doth not so much openly professe them in words, as really nourish them in a misterie. 4. Because it hath not publikely impugned the Church, but hath invaded and possessed the Church it selfe, and hath challenged the title of the Church unto it selfe.

8. A. 3. And yet because there are many amongst the Papists who understand not the mystery of poperie, but do adhere to it partly through feare of danger, and partly through custome and simply: therefore all the Papists without exception are not to be accounted such heretikes as of whose salvation ther is no hope, although we cannot affirm, if we judge by their profession, that they are in a way of salvation.

Quest. 3. Whether are Anabaptists to be accounted as Heretiks.

9. A. They are not properly heretikes as they simply doe deny the baptisme of children, although that be an error not to be suffered in the Church, because by this error they overthrow not the foundation of Faith. But as they deny Originall sinne and the humane nature of Christ to be borne of the bleſſed Virgin, in theſe and ſuch like they are Heretiques.

Queſt. 4. Whether be the Arminians Heretikes?

10. A. The opinion of the Arminians, as it is received of the moſt that doe favour them, is not properly an heresie, but a dangerous error in the Faith, and tending to heresie: but as it is defended by ſome of them, it is a Pelagian heresie; becauſe they deny the effectuall operation of internall grace to be neceſſary for the working of conuerſion and Faith.

Queſt. 5. Whether are Lutherans Heretikes?

11. A. Thoſe amongſt them which do pertinaciously defend the ubiquity of Christs human nature, cannot be excuſed from heresie, becauſe that opinion doth directly overthrow the humanitie of Chriſt. But becauſe many amongſt them are free from that opinion, and others amongſt them do defend it rather through contention, then becauſe they beleeeve it ſincerely; therefore they are to be accuſed rather of ſtupidity and fury, or of Schiſme, then of Heresie.

Queſt. 6. Whether are Heretikes to be puniſhed by the civil Magiſtrate?

12. A. 1. That Heretikes are to be reſiſted by every one that is godly, according to the calling and power which he hath received from God, it appeares ſufficiently from the nature of the thing: becauſe all the godly are called to a chriſtian warfare, and are in their ſtations every one to oppoſe themſelves to the kingdome of darkneſſe.

13. A. 2. The place and office of a Magiſtrate requires, that he repreſſe wicked men that trouble the Church, even with the ſword, or with publike and externall power if there be need, Rom. 13. 4. 1 Tim. 2. 2.

14. A. 3. If therefore Heretikes be manifeltly knowne and publikeſly hurtfull, they are to be reſtrained of the Magiſtrate by publike power.

15. A. 4. And if they be manifeltly blaſphemous, and pertenantious, and ſtubborne in thoſe blaſphemies, may ſuffer capitall puniſhment. For that Law Lev. 24. 15, 16. although it bind not Chriſtians as it is a Law, yet as it is a doctrine coming from God, it doth belong to the direction of Chriſtians in caſes of the like nature: When therefore the glory of God, and the ſaſe of the Church requireth ſuch a puniſhment, it may, and if other remedies have been used in vain, it ought to be inflicted by the Christian Magistrate.

CHAP. V.

Of Apostacie.

Quest. 7. VV Ho is to be accounted as an Apostate?

1. A. He is properly an Apostate which having formerly professed the true faith, is wholly departed from it. For an Apostate signifieth a Forsaker, or a Runaway: such a one was Iulian, who therefore was surnamed the Apostata: and such are those, as of Christians doe become Iewes or Mahumetans.

2. But by an Analage, those also are so called, who doe in the most things fall off from the true faith: as those that fall from the truth of the Gospel to Popery. Apostacie therefore containes all in it that heresie doth in respect of the Essence: but it adds also somewhat to it.

Quest. 8. What difference of degrees is there betwixt Infidels, Heretiques, and Apostates, viz. which of them sinne the most grievously.

3. A. 1. Defection is a greater sinne then the deniall of subjection; for in defection God is more rejected, more bonds of conjunction are broken: and God himselfe is silently accused as unjust, Mich. 6.3, 2. Other things therefore being like the sinne of Apostates is most grievous, 2 Pet. 2. 21 especially if besides the deniall of the known truth, there be an opposing and resisting of it, Acts 26. 11. 1 Tim. 1. 20.

4. A. Next unto Apostates come Heretiks, because they doe with them fall from the known truth, and from the faith which they were tyed to hold by many bonds. But Apostats fall away from more things.

5. The Iewes and Pagans in regard of the extention of infidelity doe sinne more then Heretikes, because they do live in more error: but intensively the sinne of the Heretike is greater, because he was more bound by the law of Faith, then such an one as never received it.

6. There's the like reason between the infidelitie of the Iewes and Pagans. For the Pagans doe erre in more things then the Iewes, but yet the Iewes doe sinne more grievously, because they received the truth from the Prophets, and do in some sort professe it, and so are more subject to the Law of Faith then the Pagans be.

7. There's the like proportion to be observed betwixt Christians themselves, who doe either in word or in deed deny the truth of Christ, for the more perfectly any one hath been instructed in the truth, the more grievously doth he sinne when he falls from it.

Q. 9. How is that to be understood 2. Epistle John 10. doe not say unto them God speed?

8. A. It is spoken principally of Apostates and Heretiques, for of such as were without, the Apostles iudged otherwise, 1 Cor. 5. 12.

9. Yet even towards Heretikes and Apostates themselves, we are not forbidden to doe the necessary offices of humane, but are commanded constantly to manifest our detestation, and are forbidden such a commerce with them as cannot stand with a due detestation.

CHAP. VI.

Of Hope.

Quest. 1. What are the signes of true Hope?

1. A. 1. If it be grounded onely upon the grace of God, and his free promise, 1 Pet. 1. 13.

2. A. 2. If it work in us a care of pleasing God in all things, 1 John 3. 3.

3. A. 3. If it put us on to use those meanes which are ordained of God, and to abstaine from others, Hebr. 10. 23. 24. 25.

4. A. 4. If it depend not upon the meanes but upon God, who worketh either with them or without them, Hest. 4. 14.

Quest. 2. Whether doth not Hope leane in some sort upon our own indeavours?

5. A. 1. It doth not lean upon our own indeavours, as causes of, or as deserving the thing hoped for, but as upon signes and arguments whereby it is strengthened and confirmed in the certaine expectation of the grace of God, Heb. 10. 22. 23.

Quest. 3. Whether Hope be certaine?

6. A. 1. Divine hope in regard of the certaintie of the object is most sure, because it leanes upon the power and faithfulness of God, by which he hath revealed that he most undoubtedly both can and will alwaies performe his promises, Rom. 4. 21. 2 Tim. 2. 13.

7. A. 2. In regard of the certaintie of the subject it ought to be most certaine and firme, Heb. 6. 18. 19.

8. A. 3. Absolutely and in it selfe considered, it is also infallible and certain, Psal. 25. 2, 3. because it leanes upon the same certaine and infallible foundation that Faith doth, Rom. 4. 18, 19. Heb 11. 1.

9. A. 4. Yet because of our imperfection and the divers temptations with which we are assaulted, it is oftentimes accompanied with some doubtfulness, which makes it seem to our sense not alwaies to be certaine, Psalm. 73. Lament. 3. 18.

Quest. 4. Whether is Hope conversant with the same certaintie about all things it expecteth.

10. A. 1. The principall object of divine Hope is eternall blessednesse, about which there ought to be the same certaintie of Hope, as there is of Faith, viz: the greatest. Hence it is that blessednes it selfe is called Hope, Ephes. 1. 18. Colass. 1. 5. Titus 2. 13. And beleevers are said to be saved by hope whilst they live heere. Rom. 8. 24.

11. A. 2. The secondary objects of Hope, are all those things which are essentially necessary to blessednes, as the affording of grace, and perseverance in grace: which are to be apprehended with the same certaintie we apprehend blessednes it selfe with, Rom. 8. 38.

12. A. 3. Externall and corporall good things also, have the nature of secondary objects of divine Hope, as they serve to promote the glory of God, and our happines: But because this oftentimes is not apparent unto us in the particular, therefore we neither can, nor ought absolutely to hope for particular particular good things of this nature, but with that limitation with which they are promised by God, 2 Tim. 4. 18. Phil. 1. 20, 25.

Quest. 5. Whether may spirituall grace in particular be certainly hoped for, for the performance of this or that duty, or for the overcoming of this or that temptation?

13. A. 1. It may and ought for the thing it self: because God hath promised that he will make a supply of these spirituall things which have a certain and essentiall connexion with life eternall, Phil. 4. 13.

14. A. 2. But in regard of the degree or manner which is not essentiall, it cannot, 1 Cor. 12. 8, 9. because divine hope of its own nature is not carried to such circumstances as to its object, but is applied to them by humane election which is subject to error.

Quest. 6. What certaintie of hope may any one have concerning other men?

15. A. 1. As the signes of true Faith do appeare in them, so it is meet that we do hope of them, Phil. 1. 6. 7.

16. A. 2. But because these externall signes which appear in others, cannot worke so certaine a faith in us concerning them, as that inward experience which we have in our selves of the grace of God: and because the holy Ghost doth seale to beleivers their own adoption, not the adoption of others; therefore this hope conceived of others in particular, is not in the same manner and degree infallible, as is the hope which we have concerning our selves, for it leanes in part upon humane credulity, 1 Pet. 5. 12.

17. A. 3. Yet because this certainty which we often have of the inward affections of others is morally certain, as children may be certainly perswaded that they are sincerely and truly beloved of their parents, and friends may certainly judge the same of their friends; therefore we ought to nourish a good hope without any actuall doubting, concerning such as shew foorth the signes of sincere Faith, Heb. 6. 9, 11.

18. A. 4. If such a hope conceived of others do sometimes deceive, we must not therefore thinke that divine hope is uncertain, because this hope is only so farre frustrate, as it doth in the application or determination lean upon humane conjectures, 2 Tim. 2. 19.

CHAP. VII.

Of patience towards God.

Quest. 1. WHat are the signes of this patience?

1. A. 1. If we neither contemne the chastisement of the Lord, nor murmure against God howsoever he deale with us, but blesse him in all, Heb. 12. 6. Iob 1. 21, 21.

2. A. 2. If we doe constantly continue in the doing of our duty, what ever the successe be, Iames 5. 8. Heb. 12. 12.

3. A. 3. If we doe expect from God himselfe the end which we hope for, Iames 5. 11. Heb. 10. 36.

4. A. 4. If we make not too much haste, either flying to unlawfull meanes, or being out of heart, Heb. 10. 38. Esay 28. 16.

5. A. 5. If lastly we seeke counsell and direction from God in all our streights, Iames 1. 4, 5.

Quest. 2. By what arguments may the minde be strengthened to this patience?

6. A. 1. Because our finnes doe deserve greater miseries Lam. 3. 39. Mich. 7. 9.

7. A. 2. Because God in his chastisements offers himself to us, as a father to his children, Heb. 12. 7.

8. A. 3. Because he doth not forsake his, but will give a good issue, Lam. 3. 25, 26, 27.

9. A. 4. Because the time of our expectation shall be but little, Heb. 10. 37.

10. A. 5. Because by this way Christ himselfe, and all the Saints have gone to glory, Heb. 10. 1, 2.

11. A. 6. Because God himselfe is patient towards us, 1. Pet. 3. 9.

12. A. 7. Because this patience is necessary to salvation, Heb. 10. 36.

CHAP. VIII.

Of Feare.

Quest. 1. VWhether ought men to feare eternall damnation, and other punishments of God?

1. A. 1. Impenitent sinners ought whiles they are in that estate, to feare these things and to expect them. Rom. 13. 4. Iohn 3. 36.

2. A. 2. The faithfull ought not either to expect eternal damnation, or simply to doubt whether such an estate doe remaine for them or no? Rom. 8. 1. Heb. 2. 15.

3. A. 3. Yet the faithfull ought to feare, to tremble at, to take heed of, and to fly from the wrath of God and damnation, as due unto them for their sinnes, Heb. 12. 29. 2 Cor. 5. 11. Ephes. 5. 6. Col. 3. 6.

4. A. 4. When they do offend God hainously, they ought also to feare some heaue and sharpe correction from God, 1 Cor. 11. 29.

5. A. 5. While they doelic in any enormous sinne, without renewing of their repentance, they ought also in a singular manner to feare the wrath of God, and eternall damnation it selfe, because they are now in the very way which leads to condemnation, and if they should goe on, they would undoubtedly come unto it, Gal. 5. 21. and 6. 8.

6. A. 6. But this feare is suspended upon and mitigated with a condition, because condemnation is feared unlesse it be prevented by repentance: it is not therefore a feare of mere incredulitie, but of languishing Faith: it is not the feare of a slave, but the feare of an undutifull sonne.

7. A. 7. The faithfull, as such, are called to confidence, not to the feare of punishment, Eph. 1. 18. But they are things done as it were to the feare of punishment, as sinne doth prevaile in them.

CHAP. IX.

Of Desperation and Presumption.

Quest. 1. WHether it wholly takes away the nature of hope, if one despaire in some of these things which we ought to hope for?

1. A. Desperation hath almost the same respect in regard of Hope, which Heresie hath in respect of Faith. For as everie error about those things which are to be beleaved, doth not take away Faith, nor is to be accounted heresie: so neither doth all diffidence about things to be hoped for take away hope, and bring into a state of Desperation: But as a pertinacious error about the foundations of Faith doth make an heretike, so a pertinacious diffidence about the principall objects of hope, viz: eternall blessednes, and those things which are necessarie unto it doth make a man desperate.

Quest. 2. Whether are all those to be accounted desperate, which doe say they doe despaire?

2. A. In no wise: For as either through some strong perturbation, or through ignorance, or through infirmicie of judgement, a beleever may for a time seem to himselfe to be void of faith; so also upon the same ground, he which hath true hope may thinke that he is altogether destitute of it. There are certaine swoonings, as it were, of hope and faith, in which the acts of them doe not appeare, when yet the internall vertues of them are not extinguished. It may therefore come to passe, that a man in regard of his owne feeling and conceiving, may seem to himselfe to be in the state of damnation, who yet in truth is in the state of salvation.

Quest. 3. In what thing doth presumption consist?

3. A. He properly doth presume, that doth perswade himselfe that he shall obtaine eternall happinesse, although hee use not the meanes which God hath ordained for that end. And such men are said to presume, because they take up that unto themselves which God no where in his word hath either given them, or promised them.

Quest. 4. Whether there is as much danger in presumption, tion, as there is in desperation?

4. A. The danger of him that presumes is oft-times greater then of him that despaires. 1. Because he that presumes doth not see or perceive himselfe to presume: but he that despaires sees and perceives his owne fault. 2. He that presumes pleaseth himself in his condition, not doubting but that already he is in the best way, & so he seeks not a better: but he which despaires is weary of his miserie, and wisheth he were in an other condition. 3. He that presumes desires not to follow any better counsell, hee that despaires desires if hee could. 4. More men doe perish by presumption then by desperation. Better hope therefore is to be conceived of those which seeme to themselves to despair, then of those which doe presume. The lesse presuming men doe despair, the more desperate is their condition.

CHAP. X.

Of love towards God.

Quest. I. WHether is God to be loved for his goodnesse and perfection in it selfe considered, or for his goodnesse towards us, and benefites conferred upon us?

1. A. I. The most perfect kind of love stands in this, that we love God for himselfe; that is, that the formall reason of our love, being (as the Schoolemen speake) the lovely nature of God; and that our love be carried towards him, as towards the last end. 1. Because that love is most perfect which is wont to be called the Love of friendship. 2. Because if we love God onely for his goodnesse towards us, then we love him for our selves, and so we love our selves more then God. 3. Because such is the divine love that is betwixt the Father, Sonne, and holy Ghost, Pro. 8.30. 4. Because such is the Love of God towards us, forasmuch as there is no good can acruer properly to him from us.

2. A. 2. Yet because we are so imperfect that we cannot immediately raise up our minds to the contemplation of Gods perfection, but by those means by which the goodnes and perfection perfection of God is made known unto us : and because it is principally made knowne by the communicating of good things, and we are most affected with these good things which are communicated to our selves ; therefore the benefits of God to our selves, are also a reason, and as they call them, motives of our love towards God, and in regard of the order are the first, though in regard of dignitie they are not the principall ; the last and highest, but such as from which, and by which, we ought to ascend to the divine nature of God it selfe, which is in it selfe, and for it selfe to be loved, and where we must lastly rest, Iohn 4. 8, 9, 10, 11, 16, 19.

Quest. 2. What are the signes of love towards God?

3. A. 1. As it is a love of union, it appeares, 1. In the affection of desire towards all those meanes by which God doth offer himselfe unto us, Psalme 4. 8. 2. In an aversnesse from, and shunning of all those things which separate us from God, that is, of sinnes, and that for this cause because they doe so. 3. In a desire of true and spirituall union and conjunction with the Church and people of God, 1 Iohn 3. 14. 4. In our griefe conceived for the failing, or the diminishing of the sensible efficacie of the Spirit of God in us in any sort. 5. In our desire of a perfect fruition of the presence of God in the life to come.

4. A. 2. As it is a love of complacencie, it appeares, 1. In that delight which we feele upon our union and communion with God, when it is perceived by the inward grace and operation of the Spirit. 2. In the sweetnesse and the ioy which we feele in the exercises of godlinesse, Psal. 122. 1. Thereason is given, Prov. 13. 19 3. In the great account we make of the societie of the Saints, Psalme. 16. 3. 4. In an hatred and abomination of all those things which are opposite to the will of God, Psal. 119; 128. 136.

5. A. 3. As it is a love of benevolence it shewes it selfe, 1. In zeale for Gods glory, 2. In obedience, Iohn 15. 10.

Quest. 3. In what manner is God to be loved above all things?

6. A. 1. We ought so to love God, that we preferre him before all other things, both in affection and will, and in effect or deed, Deut. 6. 5. Now God is preferred before all things in affection, 1. When no affection to any creature can entice or draw us to be willing to offend God, Matt. 10. 37. 2. When we do more esteeme of the love of God then of any other, so that out of that affection which we beare unto God, we are ready for his sake to leave all the things which are most deare unto us amongst things created, Luke 14. 26. God is preferred before all things in effect, when that affection doth powerfully shew it selfe in our life, and externall conversation, 1 John 5. 3. 2 Cor. 5. 14. John 21. 15.

7. A. 2. We ought so to love God, that this love bee stronger, firmer, and more rooted in our heart then any other affection whatsoever that wee beare towards the creature. Now this is done when it doth proceed from the inmost parts of our hearts, and is immoveable, so that it cannot be laid aside, Psal. 103. 1. 2 Cor. 7. 3.

8. A. 3. We ought so tenderly to love God, that the least hurt or violation either of God himselfe, or of our love towards him should more affect us, then if in other things wee should suffer some great losse, or harme, Psal. 119. 136.

9. A. 4. Our love to God ought to be so fervent, and so vehement, that in comparison we love other things as though we loved them not, 1 Cor. 7. 29.

Quest. 4. How are the consciences of the godly to be pacified, when they seem to themselves sometimes to bee carried with a greater love towards certaine creatures, then towards God?

10. A. 1. The estimation, and strength of love is to be distinguished from that stirring of that affection, which may be greater, when the love is lesse. For if any one be so disposed that he would not offend God, or forsake him, although all things besides were to be forsaken for him; if such an one bee more moved sometimes in other things, yet it doth not follow that he loves them more. It was therefore no solid and Logickall, but onely a military argument which Joab 2 Sam. 19. 7 drew from the stirring of Davids affection towards Absolom.

11. A. 2. The solidity of love is to be distinguished from the light titling of it, as much as common and vulgar mirth is distinguished from serious joy, where the spirit is more inwardly wardly affected, and the affection is founded and rooted, there is the greater love, Ephes. 3. 3. 18.

12. A. 3. We must distinguish betwixt spirituall and sensuall love. For spirituall love may in its kind be more tender and vehement, then sensuall in its kind, although the corporeal senses may be lesse affected with this, then with that: as the sensuall affection may be so vehement in its kind, that the spirit in the meane season may bee little or nothing affected. While we live here (such is our infirmity which we have contracted by sinne, that ordinarily our senses, and our vitall, and animall spirits, are more affected with things sensible, then with things spirituall: yet this hinders not, but our spirits may be affected more with the spirituall good, if they doe adhere to it in that manner which was spoken of before.

13. A. 4. We must also distinguish betwixt the habit of love, and the acts of it. For one affection may sometimes be more moved in act, then another which doth yet exceed it by many degrees, in the internall disposition.

Quest. 5. How and how farre is feare opposed to love.

14. A. 1. Not as sinne, or the offence of God is feared and shunned thereby: for so farre it is an effect, and fruit of love. 1. Because love seeketh union, and communion with God, and the feare of sinne avoideth that which doth seperate from God. 2. Because love both desireth and causeth all honour to be given to God, and this feare shunneth that which is opposite to Gods honour. 3. Because love resteth in the goodnesse of God, and this feare shunneth those motions whereby any thing is preferred before God.

15. A. 2. Nor as feare is taken for the reverence of Gods infinite majestie: for so farre it is due unto God from every creature, and is found in the Angels and blessed Spirits which have perfect love, Esay 6. 3.

16. A. 3. Nor as the wrath of God is feared in this state of imperfection and frailty, which we are in for the present. For although this feare be opposed to perfect love, 1 John 4. 18. Yet simply to love it is not, because love while it is imperfect, and is in a combate against imperfections is holpen by this feare.

17. A. 4. That feare which makes us fly from God, is opposed posed unto love, whereby we doe adhere unto God.

18. A. 5. That feare which apprehends God so terrible unto us, that we cannot rest in his goodnesse, is opposite unto love, which hath a complacency in God.

19. A. 6. That feare which doth affect a man with anguish, and vexation is opposite to love, which brings with it joy and peace.

Quest. 6. How may God be said to be hated?

20. A. 1. When it is conceived as a pleasing and delightful thing, that there were no God.

21. A. 2. When a man wisheth and desireth that God were not such an one as he is, that is, a punisher and revenger of sinne.

22. A. 3. When a man opposeth himselfe to the will of God, and willethe the contrary to those things which God willethe.

Quest. 7. Who are they that in this third respect are to be accounted as haters of God?

23. A. 1. All those who wittingly, and willingly breake the commandements of God, Exod. 20. 5. with 6. because it is a point of love to observe Gods commandements.

24. A. 2. Those which are strangers to the knowledge and worship of God, Iob 21. 14, 15.

25. A. 3. Those which doe hate discipline, and true reformation of life, Psal. 50. 17.

26. A. 4. They which doe not studiously seeke after wisdom, Prov. 8. 36.

27. A. 5. They which doe hate such as doe love God, Psal. 39. 7. I Iohn 4. 12. and 5. 1. Matt. 25. 40.

28. A. 6. They which doe love other things more then God, 2 Tim. 3. 4.

29. A. 7. They which doe neglect God, and cleave unto the world, Luke 16 13.

CHAP. XI.

Of the hearing of the Word of God.

Quest. 1. VVhat kind of attention is required to the hearing of the Word of God aright?

1. A. 1. Religious attention which doth arise from the consideration of the majestic of God, and from that reverence which is due unto him: so that it differs not onely in degree, but in the whole nature of it, from that attention which is due to the words of men, although they be such as excell in authoritie, Acts 10. 33. Iudg. 3. 20. 1 Thes. 2. 13.

2. A 2. Attention therefore to the words onely, or to the sense of the words is not sufficient; but there is required an attending to that divine obligation, which in many respects lies upon us, whereby we are tyed to a religious observance of the will of God, when it is propounded unto us, Deuter. 32. 46, 47.

3. A. 3. The foundation of this attention consisteth in the exercised act of the reverence and feare of God, Esay 50. 10.

4. A. 4. Hence it is that such an attention is required, which must have some preparation going before it, Exod. 19. 10, 11. Eccles. 5. 1.

Quest. 2. What kind of inquiry, or consultation is requisite in this attention?

5. A. We are not to consult whether the will of God is to be obeyed or no, for such a consultation cannot be free from impietie: but wee are to enquire onely to this end, that wee may understand what is the will of God, 1 John 4. 1: For the words of any men whosoever, such a judgement ought to be passed on them, whereby it may be discerned whether they be good, and to be observed yea or no, 1 Thes. 5. 21. but the Word of God admits no other judgement but onely for the discerning of it to bee the Word of God. For by the Word of God we must passe judgement of all things else: but as for it, we are not to judge it, but to submit our selves to it to be judged.

6. In hearing of men, men are said to carry themselves these foure waies For either they are like sponges which do suck up both good and bad, or else they are like Houre-glasses which let that out at one eare which they take in at the other : or they are like the Wine sacks, which keeps the dregs onely, and let the good wine out : or else like Scives which let goe that which is worth nothing, and retaine that onely which is good. And among these foure kind of hearers, the last onely which are like Scives are to be approved : but in hearing the pure Word of God, the first kind onely are to be commended; namely, they which suck up all like a Sponge, or like the earth which drinckes up the raine that falls upon it, Heb. 6. 7.

Quest. 3. What intention of the Will is required in hearing of the Word of God?

7. A. 1. Our intention ought not principally and lastly, to be carried to knowledge, but to practise, James 1. 22. Such doe fall into a foule and dangerous deceit, which doe rest in knowledge.

8. A. 2. Our intention to doe those things which God would have us to doe, ought to be absolute and universall, without any limitation or distinction, Deut. 5. 33, 35. Jer. 42. 3, 5, 6. James 2. 10.

9. A. 3. This intention ought to be so strong, that it may have the force of a vow, or of an oath, Psal. 119. 106.

10. A. 4. It ought not to be delayed with any stay, or lingering, 119. 60.

11. A. 5. In this intention wee must rest not upon our owne strength, but upon the grace and power of God, 1 Thes. 1. 5.

12. A. 6. This intention must be actually renewed every time we heare the word of God, Psal. 27. 8. And by this meanes, while we are hearing wee may fasten every commandement of God in our hearts.

13. A. 7. This intention must be continued by a dayly and diligent meditation of the Word heard, Psal. 1. 2. and 119. 15, 109.

CHAP. XII.

Of Pride against God.

Quest. 1. WHether can any creature shew his pride against God his Creator?

1. A. 1. Pride is an inordinate affection of a mans own excellency.

2. A. 2. This affectation of excellency is put forth two waies : 1. When one doth lift himselfe up above another. 2. When he arrogates something to himselfe that is above him.

3. A. 3. In the first respect a man shewes his pride, either directly, when he doth simply preferre himselfe before another : or indirectly, and by interpretation, when he refuseth to submit himselfe unto another, to whom he ought to be subject.

4. A. 4. After this last manner all these shew their pride against God, which will not be subject unto his will, nor heare his word, Exod. 5. 2. Ier. 13. 15. and 43. 5.

Quest. 2. How can this pride be in all those which will not heare the Word of God, since many other lusts may be causes of this disobedience?

5. A. 1. As sinne, so also the cause of sinne, may admit a twofold consideration : For we may consider him, either as it is a turning away from God, or as it is a turning to some thing that is opposite to God. Now many other lusts may be the causes of disobedience, in respect of the turning to something in stead of God ; but pride is the beginning of all sinne, as it is a turning away from God, and a deniall of that subiection that is due unto him.

6. A. 2. Other concupiscences and lusts, while they doe draw a man to neglect the will of God, they draw also to a certaine pride, and contempt of God, 2 Sam. 12. 9.

7. A. 3. All other lusts, at least, the most of them do induce us to sinne, as they carry in them the appearance of some excellencie (ye shall be like gods) in the desire of which there is to be found something of the nature of pride.

Quest. 3. What are the proper meanes whereby this Pride may be beaten down, and kept under?

8. A. 1. The consideration of the greatnesse and power of God, Job 39.35. Rom. 9.20, 21.

9 A. 2. The consideration of our own basenesse, Rom 9. 37.

10: A. 3. The consideration of those bonds, whereby we are tied to submit our selves wholly to God, as to our Creator, Preserver, and Lord.

11. A. 4. The consideration of the wrath of God against the proud, and of his grace towards the humble, 1 Pet. 5. 5. 6.

CHAP. XIII.

Of Consulting with the Devill.

Quest. 1. When are men said to Consult with the Devill?

1. A. Not onely when they doe, either by a direct petition, or by an expresse compact, desire the aid of the Devill, either that they may come to the knowledge of things hidden, or for the doing of things difficult: but also when the same is attempted by a silent and implicate compact. For as in consulting with God, we are not onely said to enquire at him, when we doe immediately goe unto him, but also when wee use those meanes, for the knowing, and doing of his will, which are ordained by himselfe; So also the devill is consulted with, when we doe use those meanes, for the finding out, or effecting of any thing, which have beene first brought in by the Devill. These two doe differ onely, as divers degrees of the same act.

Quest. 2. When is the Devill silently and implicately consulted with, and his voice heard in the place of God?

2. A. 1. In a generall way this is done, whensoever wee forsake that way which God hath prescribed us, and follow the suggestion of the Devill walking in another way, and using other meanes for the attaining of happinesse, as it is to be seene in the temptation, and fall of our first Parents.

3. Specially, and properly, this is done, when either those men are consulted with, which have communion with the Devill:

Devill: or those meanes are used, either for the knowing or effecting of things which have no such use by their owne nature, nor by the ordinance of God; and no extraordinarie operation of God with them can bee expected by Faith. The reason is, because such meanes have not that vertue which seemesto be in them from God, neither in a way of nature, nor in a way of grace, nor extraordinarily by the working of his omnipotency, nor can they receive such a vertue from men, because men cannot communicate that vertue unto others, which themselves have not, neither doe they receive such a vertue from the holy Angels, because they doe nothing but only as Gods ministers. It followes therefore that the Devill is the author both of the operations, and significations which doe depend on such meanes, and that the Devill is consulted with by them that doe expect any thing in such wajes.

Quest. 3. What is the evill of such an action?

4. A. 1. The first evill which is found in this sinne is infidelity. For Faith and Hope are not placed in God, when the way which he hath prescribed is forsaken, and a new way is sought.

5. A. 2. But the chiefe evill in it is this, that hee which thus in this manner consults with the Devill, doth in some sort submit himselfe unto the Devill, and doth yeeld unto him an excellencie which belongs to God, and so by interpretation doth give honour and worship unto him.

6. A. 3. There is also hereby a way directly laid for the Devils more effectually deceiving of us, and our fuller forsaking of God.

Quest. 4. Whether are the predictions of iudiciall Astrology of this nature?

7. A. Predictions from the Starres concerning voluntary actions, and concerning contingent also in particular, although sometimes they may be ascribed to rashnesse and impudence, yet if they be seriously used, they cannot be excused from all participation of this sinne: for the Stars although they may infuse a certaine generall disposition, and inclination into inferior bodies, as common causes, yet can they not be certaine causes, or naturall signes of this or that effect in particular: no more then an Hen that sits upon divers sorts of Egges is a cause or certaine signe that one kind of chicken shall come out of one Egge, and another out of another.

8. The same is to be said of such predictions, as are taken from the elements, from the frame of the members of mans body, from dreames, from progedies, &c

9. For in these things, and in the like, there is wont to be something that is naturall, from which in a generall sort other things may be concluded, but yet nothing certain in particular; concerning contingent events, especially those which do depend upon the election of the Will.

Quest. 5. In which things is this sinne usually committed, and participated by the simple, ignorant, and credulous common people, in these vaine observations?

10. A. 1. When common and ordinary things are highly accounted off, as if they were lucky or unlucky, that is, when they doe conjecture some joyfull, or sad events, upon some accidentall words or deeds aforegoing. As if such a creature, as suppose a Hare, or Cat should meet them, or crosse the way before them, if the Salt-fellar upon the table should be overthrowne, or Wine spilt, if at their first going out in the morning they should sneeze, or dash their foot against a threshold.

11. A. 2. When certaine daies accounted luckie, or unlucky to beginne any worke in, for this cause onely, because they are such dayes of the week, yeares, or moneths, dedicated to such a Saint.

12. A. 3. When efficacie is attributed to certaine formes of prayer, and to conditions annexed to them, for the procuring of this, or that singular thing: Of this sort among the Papists are brieve sentences hung about their necks, Ave Maryes, and Pater nosters mumbled upon Beades, till they come to a certaine number.

13. A. 4. When some advantage is expected, by the carrying about of things unprofitable: As when the Papists carie certaine reliques about their necks, that by the strength of them they may be defended against dangers, diseases, and temptations.

14. A. 5. When vertue to drive away diseases, or to produce other reall effects is attributed to Figures, Images, Characters, Characters, Charms, or Writings.

15. A. 6. When the like vertue is ascribed to Herbes, and other Medicines, not as they are applyed in a naturall way, but as they be charmed, or as they be used in some certaine forme and no other.

16. A. 7. When Faith is given to the predictions of braine-sicke-men, as if they were the Oracles of God.

CHAP. XIII.

Of Prayer.

Quest. 1. IN what thing doth the essence it selfe of holy Prayer consist?

1. A. Prayer in regard of the inward essentiall and common nature of it is nothing else, but a religious motion of our will towards God, tending to moove, as it were, him also.

2 In this it doth differ from hearing of the word of God, because there our will is mooved towards God, that we may be moved by him againe: but here the immediate end of our motion is God himselfe, that he may bee affected with our desires.

3. Hence it is, that by a singular appropriation, Prayer is called, The lifting up of the heart to God, the ascending of the minde towards God, the drawing neere unto God, and is said effectually to availe with God, as a sacrifice out of which God smells a sweet savour, wherewith hee is affected, or mooved.

4. Now because it is not for us to apply the will or power of God to this or that, either by commanding, as hee deales with us in his word, which is the part of Superiours to their inferiours: or by a familiar request, which is the part of equals amongst themselves, or by any other way, whereby we may by any reall indeavour lay an obligation upon him, or work an inclination in him to this or that: this way onely remaines, that we doe by way of a submissive and religious representation of our affections before him, minister unto him an occasion and matter of such, or such an operation.

And

And this is to be done not onely with that subjection, which is necessary in all the actions of obedience, but specially, with that submission which doth become an act of Religion.

Quest. 2. What intention of the Will is required in Prayer?

5. A. 1. There is required, 1. A speciall intention of honouring God, and not a generall one onely, as in all other things.

6. A. 2. There is required an intention of representing some good, honest, and decent desire unto God, that is, such a desire as is conformable to his goodnesse, and will.

7. A. 3. There is required an intention of stirring up such affections in our selves, as doe agree to the presence of God, and to the nature of the thing that we propound unto him.

8. A. 4. All those intentions are required which do immediatly, and essentially follow Faith, Hope, and Charitie.

9. A. 5. In all these intentions wee ought to leane not upon our selves, and our prayers, but upon Christ.

Quest. 3. What attention of the minde is required in Prayer?

10. A. 1. There is required an attention to God, to whom we pray.

11. A. 2. An attention to the thing for which we pray.

12. A. 3. An attention to our selves, and the disposition of our affections, out of which we pray. For we ought with attention to watch to the intention which we have.

13. Hence it is that he which desires to pray aright, ought necessarily to recollect himselfe, and to take heed that his thoughts be not distracted, and that his senses doe not rove, nor wander.

Quest. 4. Whether is such a kind of attention so necessary, that the want of it makes our prayers frustrate?

14. A. 1. This attention is two fold: 1. Actually, whereby we doe distinctly, and constantly attend to every thing that we should. 2. Vertuall, whereby we continue in the same disposition of attending, wherein we began. The first attention is mo't laudable, but if this latter kind of attention be used, though it faile in some part, our prayer doth retain its vertues.

15. A. 2. Distractions and rovings are of two sorts, For either they come through our negligence, or want of care, or else they rush into our mindes, so that we doe unwillingly, and with griefe suffer them. The former kind of distractions turne Prayer into sinne, the latter are to be numbred amongst the infirmities of the faithfull, which doe not shut them out from comfort.

Quest. 5. In what sense are we bound to pray continually, or at all times without intermission Ephes. 6. 18. 1 Thes. 5. 17.

16. A. 1. In regard of the disposition and preparation of the heart to pray, we ought to keep it continually: Because we can never without sinne leave off, or turne aside from directing our hearts, and desires towards God.

17. A. 2. In regard of the act of Prayer, wee ought to take, yea, to catch at every occasion, and opportunitie of exercising it. ἀδιαλείπτως ἐν παντί καιρῶ, Without ceasing upon every occasion. There is the like phrase used, 2 Sam. 9. 1. Mephiboseth did eat meat continually at the Kings table. And Luke 2. 37.

Quest. 6. Whether is there any Commandement for set times of Prayer every day?

18. A. 1. There's a generall precept, that we serve God all the daies of our lives, Luke 1. 75. That worship of God therefore which fitly may be performed every day, ought no day to be omitted: But such is Prayer, therefore it ought no day to be omitted.

19. A. 2. We are taught in the Lords Prayer, to pray every day for our dayly bread. Give us this day. And yet more instantly is the kingdome of God, and the righteousnesse thereof to be sought, Mat. 6. 33.

20. A. 3. In the old Testament there was a Law commanding a dayly Sacrifice to be offered publikely, Num. 2. 8. And there was likewise an houre of Prayer, Acts 3. 1. Now the Sacrifice it selfe, and the Incense offered with it was a tipe of Prayer, Psam. 51. 17. and 141. 2. Heb. 13. 15.

21. A. 4. Godly men have been wont to pray dayly, Psalms 55. 17. Dan. 6. 10.

22. A. 5. This is the common instinct of all those, who have any shew of Religion amongst them, as may be seen by the Papists, and the very Mahumetanes themselves.

23. A. 6. We are dayly invited to this duty by many benefits from God : urged by sundry dangers from the enemies of our soules : excited by our owne wants , and the necessities of others : and drawne on, and as it were, by a sweet force moved to this exercise dayly, by the nature of Prayer it selfe, wherein we have a singular and sweet communion with God, an exercise of every grace, and refreshment, and reparation of our soules.

24. This duty therefore is dayly to be performed by every one, in regard of the precept ; and though by reason of the divers conditions of mens lives, all men cannot performe it in the same measure, and manner, yet the thing it selfe ought not any day wholly to be omitted.

CHAP. XV.

Of Confession.

Quest. 1. WHether is Confession necessary in every Prayer?

I. A. Expresse, and Explicite Confession is not alwaies necessary, as appears by severall formes of Prayers, which we have approved to us in the Scripture, in which yet there is no direct Confession expressed ; yet an implicite, and silent Confession, at least, ought alwaies to be joyned with Prayer. 1. Because Prayer is an act of Religion, and so we ought in it to confesse our subjection to, and dependance upon God, at least, by a silent acknowledgement. 2. Because humiliation before God, and poverty of spirit, is necessary in Prayer, Luke 1. 53. James 4. 10. 1 Pet. 5. 6. 3. Because we can desire nothing of God properly with true Faith, but we must first acknowledge it to be above our desert and sufficiency. 4. Because both our selves and our prayers, being defiled with divers sinnes, ought not to be presented before God, without a confession of our unworthinesse.

Quest. 2.

Quest. 2. When is it requisite that we confesse our finnes distinctly, and expressly?

2. A. Whensoever our consciences are burdened with the guilt of finnes, and we seeke the remission of them, that our consciences may be unburnded, Ier. 3. 8. Prov. 28. 13. Psalm. 32. 5. The reason is, 1. Because we cannot seriously, and as we ought, desire the remission of our sinne, unlesse we be first affected with the sence of them. Now a pious confession doth demonstrate this sence, by our laying of our finnes open, and doth fasten it deeper, by our ripping them up. 2. Because God in his Word hath passed judgement concerning sinne and sinners, and will not remit that judgement by condemnation, unlesse it be first acknowledged as just, by sinners themselves, and be in a sort passed in their owne consciences, 1 Cor. 11. 31. God will therefore have us to accuse, convince, and condemne our selves of sinne, in our confessions, that so we may not be inforced to undergoe accusation of the Devill, and the sentence of Gods wrath. If thou thy selfe be thy accuser, and God doe see thee free, what will the Devill be but a slanderer, August. 3. Because the confession of sinne gives unto God, both the glory of his justice in iudging, and of his mercy in pardoning, Nehem. 1. 33. Psalm. 51. 6. Dan. 9. and so of its owne nature makes way for our reconciliation with the Lord, whom we have offended, as it is to bee seene also amongst men, Gen. 41. 9.

Quest. 3. What conditions are requisite in this Confession?

3. A. 1. It ought to bee naked without any manner of hiding, or covering, Prov. 28. 13. For though in the committing of sinne, it is better to hide it then to declare it, Esay 3. 10. Yet in confession, all is to be opened unto God, and nothing to be concealed.

4. A. 2. It ought to be humble, with the submission of our soules to the iudgement of God, which is due unto our sins, and so with griefe and detestation of sinne, as it were in dust and ashes, Iob 42. 6. And with shame of face, Ezek. 9. 6. 15. Dan. 9. 7, 8, 9. If this condition be wanting, the declaring of our finnes is not a confession, but rather a profession.

Quest. 4. Whether it be necessary that we confesse our sinnes in particular, and by name?

5. A. Such sinnes as are grievous and knowne, are particularly to be confessed: But it is enough to confesse others generally, Psalm. 19. 13. 1 Sam. 12. 19, 21.

Quest. 5. Whether, and how farre, is Confession of sinnes also to be before men necessary, that our prayers may be acceptable to God?

6. A. 1. Whosoever seriously doth confesse his sinnes before God, he also will be without doubt alwaies ready, in some sort, to confesse the same before men to the glory of Gods mercy, Psalm. 32. 6. Yet, this is not alwaies required in particular. For those sinnes which are knowne to God onely, are ordinarily to be confessed onely unto him. For seeing Confession of its owne nature tendeth to the taking away of the guilt of sinne, and to the removing of the punishment which was inflicted upon the commission of sinne: It hath of it selfe no use, but onely to ward him that is offended by the sinnes and that knowes them.

7. A. 2. Yet by accident it may fall out, that those sinnes which are knowne to God onely, ought to be laid open before men. 1. When the glory of God in any singular way seemeth to require this, Iohn. 7. 19. 2. When our owne necessitie perswadeth to it, that is, when wee do iudge the particular counsell and comfort of this, or that man about our sinnes, to be profitable for us, Acts 10. 18. Iacobus 5. 16.

8. A. 3. But those sinnes which are publikely knowne, ought also publikely to be confessed. Because to all those to whom any hurt doth come by the contagion of an evill example, notice should be given of the repentance and amendment of the sinner that hath done the hurt. The desire of the glory of God, and of the salvation of men, must needs constraine the faithfull to this dattie, Acts 19. 19. 1 Tim. 5. 20.

9. A. 4. Those sinnes wherein we have done any singular and notable iniurie, to such and such a man, must be confessed singularly vnto him, if it be possible, for the reuiving of that bond of charitie which was broken through our default, Matt. 5. 23. 24.

10. A. 5. Publike confession also before the Church is necessary, after the commission of a sinne publicly scandalous, 2 Cor. 2. 6, 7. This is grounded upon the same reasons with the former, and moreover is due unto that Ministeriall iudgement, which Christ doth exercise in the Church, and by the Church, Matt. 18. 17. 18.

CHAP. XVI.

Of promise made to God in Prayer.

Quest. 1. IN what thing doth such a kinde of promise consist?

1. A. 1. Essentially it consisteth in an holy purpose, represented before God, Psalms. 119. 30. 57.

2. A. 2. In that representation there ought to bee contained a will to bind our selves, such as is in an oath, Psalms. 119. 106.

3. A. 3. There ought also to be added an expression of this will, Gen. 28. 20, 21, 23.

4. A. 4. The solemne expression of this will, doth chiefly agree to greater occasions and affections: when wee are either in great troubles, out of which wedoe desire to be freed, Psal. 66. 14. Or when some great cause of ioy falls out through the singular favour of God, Psal. 118. 27.

Quest. 2. Whether is it necessary that such a promise bee alwaies made to God in prayer?

5. A. It is required at least implicitly, in respect of the purpose of the Will. Because to desire any thing from God, without a purpose to indeavour with our utmost power for the obtaining of it, or without a purpose to glorifie his name for the granting of our petition: and to praise God in words, for the benefits we have received from him, without a purpose to yeeld honor unto him in our actions: or lastly, for us to represent our wil before God, to be regarded by him, without purpose of observing his will, and of living answerably to such an action, all this would in some sort be nothing but to mock God, Quest. 3. What kind of things are to be promised to God?

6. A. 1. Not an evill action, nor any thing that is vile and abominable, Deut. 23, 18.

7. A. 2. Not things impossible, inevitable; nor those which through the calling or strength bestowed upon us by God, we cannot, or are not fit to performe it, Numb. 30.

3. 4.

8. A. 3. All those things are to be promised which are commanded us by God, which yet ought to be understood so farre, as they may be performed by the grace of God, without speciall priviledge. For it is not lawfull for us simply to promise that we will abstaine from all sinne. Although we ought to promise all care and diligence, to the utmost of our power, by the grace of God, for the avoiding of all sinne, and the following after every thing that is good, Psalme 119. 106.

9. A. 4. All those things likewise are to be vowed, which although they be not enjoined unto all, yet all circumstances being considered, may be meanes unto us either of honouring God, or of a better observing of his commandments.

Quest. 4. In things that are good and commanded, how can there be by our promise and vow a new obligation added unto that obligation which lyes upon us, by vertue of the Law of God?

10. A. There is not properly heereby a new obligation added, neither is the former in it self augmented, but it is more acknowledged and received by us: passively we were bound as much before, but by an active renewing of this bond, it is more strictly applied unto us by our selves.

Quest. 5. Whether may things not commanded be the object and matter of a vow?

11. A. 1. If they be simply considered, as indifferent, they ought not to be vowed unto God: Because so they have nothing in them convenient, profitable, or fit to promote the honour of God.

12. A. 2. Yet as they are meanes to some good end, whereby God is glorified, they may, being rightly ordered, be a fit object of a vow.

Quest. 6. What kind of obligation is brought upon us by such kind of voves?

13. A. If the vow be lawfull, the obligation is most strickt. Because the bond of Religion is contained in the vow: and so that which before was free, is now, because of the vow made, in some sort, the due worship of God. For although the subject matter of the thing which is vow-ed be of it selfe indifferent, and bee directed by the vow to some other vertue, yet the observation of that vow, pertaines directly to that religious honour which we owe to God. The breach therefore of such a vow, is a prophane perfidiousnesse against God. It is perfidiousnesse, because the promise is not performed; and prophane, because the promise was made unto God, and doth pertaine to his honour.

CHAP. XVII.

Of mentall and vocall Prayer.

Quest. 1. WHether is it sufficient to pray with the heart and minde?*

1. A. 1. It doth suffice to the essence of prayer: because the vertue of Religion which is exercised in prayer may be put forth in an internall act, although no externall act bee added to it, 1 Sam. 1. 13. Neh. 2. 4. God also sees the internall act, though it be expressed with no externall signe, Psal. 139. 4.

2. A. 2. But it is not alwaies sufficient for the dischargeing of his duty, that prayeth: 1. Because God is to be glorified, and to be religiously worshipped by us, not only with our soules, but also with our bodies, and so with our voice. 1 Cor. 6. 20. 2. Because although the internall act may suffice to the brieve ejaculation of our desire, yet it is difficult to hold on in a continued representation of our desires before God, unlesse the outward man also be withdrawn from other things, that it together with the inward may attend unto this duty. 3. Because the voice comming from the

the heart, is heard againe, and recoyleth upon it, so that it is a meane of exciting, continuing, and increasing that holy affection from whence it springeth. 4. Because we must often pray with others, which are edified by benefit of our voice, and are admitted to the participation of the same prayer with us.

Quest. 2. What sort of attention is required in vocall Prayer?

3. A. 1. The principall attention ought not to be about the words and voice. 1. Because they are onely the adjuncts of prayer, and may in the same manner be used of him that doth not pray; as by a foole, one asleepe, a childe, one that doth but play. 2. Because in such an attention there is a greater regard had to our owne vaine glory, then to the glory of God. 3. Because by this meanes, that internall affection in which the essence of Prayer consisteth is not promoted, but hindred, lessened, or quite taken away.

4. A. 2. Yet some attention is required, even to the Words. 1. That they be decent, least something should be intermingled, that is unbecoming God, or his worship. 2. That the speech, as much as may be, may be such as the Holy Ghost teacheth, 1 Cor. 2. 13. 3. That they be not uttered after the manner of men, but be cloathed, as it were, with a spiri- all habit, agreeable to the nature of the thing. 4. That if we pray with others, a care be had to their edification.

Quest. 3. What vsing of many words is that which is forbidden? Matt. 6. 7.

5. A. 1. All long Prayers are not forbidden, for Christ himselfe was wont sometimes to spend all night in prayer, nor all doubling of the same Petition; for Christ also hath approved that by his example. Matt. 26. 44.

6. A. 2. But there is forbidden, 1. An affectation of prolixitie, and much repetition. 2. An estimation of such things, as if they were of force to procure audience. 3. That prolixitie and repetition which comes not from the abundance of inward affection, but from the want of it.

Quest. 4. Whether a certaine and prescript forme of words is to be used in Prayer?

7. A. 1. That this is sometime lawfull, is evident from the the approved practise of the Saints ; which the Scripture commends untous in their prescript Psalmes, and formes of blessing.

8. A. 2. It is also profitable and necessary for some to follow such a forme, though out of a Booke. 1. Because there are some Beleevers so ignorant, that they are not able to expresse their desires in any sort in fit words.

9. A. 3. Others there be, who though they can doe it, so as may suffice for themselves in private, yet if they be to pray with others, they are either destitute of ability, or of a free-nesse of putting it foorth. 3. There are some also to whom it may be profitable in their meditations and prayers, to be ruled, as it were, by such a meane as this.

10. A. 4. Yet no man ought to rest contented in such a kind of praying, but rather to indavour that he may be able to expresse his minde before God, without such an helpe. 1. Because a prescript forme, whiles it doth not directly follow our inward affections, but lead them, doth lesse perfectly performe that which is in the nature of prayer. 2. Because all those particular things which we have need to goe to God for, cannot be contained in a prescript form. 3. Because even as we are praying, God is wont to stir up speciall affections in our hearts, which are often hindred, and extinguished, if we alwaies keepe to a prescript forme. 4. Because by this reason, sloath and lukewarmnesse creepes upon us, and deadnesse in prayer; so that our forme is used out of custome onely, and for a forme.

Quest. 5. Whether the Lords Prayer be a forme prescribed for us, and to be observed by us?

11. A. 1. Christ in teaching us that prayer, would not prescribe us a forme of words constantly to be observed : but an example or patterne, according to which we are to direct our Prayers. This is evident enough from this, that wee never read that the Apostles used that Prayer.

12. A. 2. It is not expedient to sticke to this forme. 1. Because we ought often to pray, more particularly, as occasion is offered. 2. Because by this meanes, it is become among the Papiests like a charme. 3. Because so we shall make no proficiencie in the spirit and gift of praying.

CHAP. XVIII.

Of the gesture of Prayer.

Quest. 1. VV Hether in every Prayer there be some care to bee had of the gesture of the body?

1. A. 1. In short ejaculations of our desires before God, the outward gesture, neither can be attended, nor hath any use, further then it doth really, and without a direct intention of its owne accord, follow the inward motion of the minde.

2. 2. In secret Prayer which is known to God onely; yet in the presence of others, gestures and outward signes ought as much as may be, to be hid, Nehem. 2. 4 Least wee give cause to suspect of hypocrisie, or affectation of vaine glory, with the Pharises, Matt. 6. 5.

3. 3. In private solitary Prayer, some care of the gesture is profitable for our selves, because as by the voyce, so by the gesture and habit of the body, affections are excited, supported, and continued, Dan. 6. 11.

4. 4. In Prayer with others, whether private or publick, there must be a stricter observation used of gestures and signs, because of others: partly, least wee give them occasion to suspect us guilty of carelesnesse, or disturbe them any way, or offend them; and partly, that we may helpe their Devotion by our example, Psal. 95. 6.

Quest. 2. What gesture is required?

5. A. 1. Gestures in generall ought to be such, as may in an holy manner expresse the inward motions of the minde.

6. 2. Because in every Prayer there is required singular humility, therefore the common gesture of solemne Prayer, ought to be agreeable to this demension, as the uncovering the head, and for the most part; bending the knee, bowing of the body, or standing upright. Sitting by it selfe is not gesture of praying, because it expresseth no reverence, nor is approved in Scripture.

7. 3. Because also in every Prayer, our desire is directed to our heavenly Father, with confidence and hope; therefore the lifting up of the hands and eyes is decent in every solemn Prayer.

8. 4. Other particular singular gestures in Prayer with others, are not to be used, for the causes before spoken off, In private Prayer they are not so much to be affected, as to bee admitted according to the motion of the minde.

Quest. 3. What use is there of covering the face in Prayer?

A. No other but to prevent occasions which may be insinuated by the eyes, or to conceale those singular gestures which sometimes are unnecessary for us, but would seeme fond, or hypocriticall to others. Except on these occasions, the covering of the face doth rather belong to women, then men:

CHAP. XIX.

Of Singing.

Quest. 1. WHat use hath Singing above the ordinary pronounciation?

1. A. 1. It brings a kind of sweet delight to godly minds, Psal. 104. 34.

2. 2. It hath a more distinct and fixed meditation, Ibid.

3. 3. It hath a more copious and ample profession of Pietie, Coloss. 3. 16.

4. 4. It hath more command of mutuall edification, if it be with others, Ephe 5. 19.

Quest. 2. Whether Singing doe equally agree to the mind in trouble and in joy?

5. A. It doth more properly agree to joy, James 5. 13. because of the sweet dilation of the heart, which it makes a shew of: yet it well agreeth to the profitable recording of past sorrow, as appears by these Psalmes which are called Penitentiall; and sometime to the removing of sorrow, Prov. 25. 20.

Quest. 3: How are we to sing those Historicall Psalmes which belong to other persons, and times.

6. A. 1. If we so meditate of them, that we reape consolation, and hope from them, Rem. 15.4.

7. 2. To this end, we ought in our thoughts to put on, as it were, the person, either of them, of whom those Psalmes were composed, or of them who composed them, that what ever is spoken there, we may, in some sort, take it as spoken to our selves.

Quest. 4. How may we sing those Psalmes aright, which containe dire imprecations in them?

8. A. 1. We may upon occasion of those imprecations meditate with feare and trembling, on the terrible judgments of God against the sinnes of impenitent persons.

9. 2. We may thereupon profit in patience, and consolation, against the temptations which are wont to arise from the prosperity of the wicked, and affliction of the godly.

10. 3. We may also pray to God that he would hasten his revenge (not against our private enemies, but) against the wicked and incurable enemies of his Church.

CHAP. XX.

Of Petition,

Quest. 1. How are spirituall things to be asked of God?

1. A. 1. All things are to be asked in that manner, in which they are promised. Therefore spirituall good things, as they are necessary to salvation, are absolutely to be desired; because they are absolutely promised to beleivers and penitents, Luke 11.13.

2. 2. Those spirituall good things which admit degrees, cannot absolutely in every degree be desired: because the things themselves, not the degrees of them are absolutely necessary, and absolutely promised by God, 2 Cor. 12.8,9.

3. 3. Yet we ought absolutely to desire that measure of grace which is necessary for us, to the avoyding of crimes, or scandals, and to the keeping a good Conscience, James 1. 5, 6. 1 Cor. 10. 13. Psal. 19. 14.

Quest. 2. How are temporary things to be asked of God?

4. A. 1. Temporary good things are only secondary objects of our hope: namely, as they tend to spirituall blessednesse: which because it is not certainly known to us, therefore we cannot desire them with that strength of hope in particular, with which we desire things spirituall; neither ought they to be desired with so ardent and fervent an affection, but with a secondary and more remission, Mat. 6. 33.

5. 2. As we may hope that temporall good things will profit us to salvation, and turne to the glory of God, so farre we may beg them, Pet. 4.

6. 3. Such a petition is not formallly conditionall, neither in words nor sense: Because as a conditionall assertion, affirms nothing certainly of the antecedent, so a conditionall petition desires nothing.

7. 4. Neither is it a generall Petition onely, that God would deal with us as he sees fit, and expedient to his glory, and our salvation. For so a sicke man should no more desire freedom from sicknesse, then the continuation and increase of it.

8. 5. It is therefore an absolute Petition, but yet with a submission to the wise ordering of God, either expressly, or tacitly.

Quest. 3. Whether may all our Lawfull desires be represented to God in a Petition, to have them fulfilled?

9. A. 1. In no sort; for some desires are lawfull, the contrary of which is to be chosen, Phil. 1. 23, 24, 25. Some lawfull desires also are so light, that they ought not to be commended to God: such as is the desire to win in play.

Quest. 4. For whom are we to pray?

10. A. 1. For all, and every person alive wee may pray in some sort, because some goodnesse of God extends to all. 1 Tim. 4. 10.

11. 2. We cannot pray for all men collectively, that they may be saved; because it is manifest to us out of the Scripture, that all are not to be saved.

12. 3. Yet we may pray for every one in particular, that they may bee saved (unlesse extraordinarily there happen something to hinder) because we are bound by the law of Charity to hope well of every man.

13. 4. We may and ought to pray for spirituall good things for them, from whom we justly desire that temporall things may be taken, while they hurt themselves, or others with them. And so we are to pray for the potent enemies of the Church.

Quest. 5. Whether are we bound to pray altogether in the same manner for others, as for our selves?

14. A. We may, and ought to doe it with the same charity; but with the same faith and hope we cannot: because we doe not so properly by Faith apprehend and apply the promises of God to others, as our selves.

CHAP. XXI.

Of Fasting.

Quest. 1. What kind of Abstinence is required in a religious Fast?

1. A. 1. Greater abstinence is required, then the common law of temperance prescribeth. For Temperance ought to be perpetuall; but Fasting is extraordinary, and upon speciall occasion.

2. 2. This abstinence must not onely bee in meate and drinke, but also in all other things that tend to the pampering of the body, Dan. 10. 3.

3. 3. This Abstinence is to be such and so great, that thereby we may be made fitter for extraordinary humiliation, Ez. 8. 21.

4. 4. Now because all and every one are not of the same temperance and constitution: therefore this fitnessse for religious humiliation bringeth home variety of abstinence: so that that degree of abstinence which is profitable and necessary for one, would be an impediment to another, neither can any particular rule be given for all and every man to observe in that degree and measure of abstinence.

Quest. 2. In what doth the religion of a Fast consist?

5. A. 1. A religious Fast differs from a naturall and civill Fast in this, that it is commanded by Religion, that is, it doth directly and immediatly tend to the worship and honour of God.

6. 2. Yet it is not so referred to the worship of God, that it is a part of worship, but onely as a meanes whereby true worship is promoted.

7. 3. In the New Testament it is not properly a meane of worship, either because it doth any thing, or signifieth any thing by institution, either before God, or men, but as it doth fit for the extraordinary exercise of worship.

8. 4. It stateth principally by removing those impediments, which are repugnant to the extraordinary calling upon God.

Quest. 3. Whether it be lawfull publikely to appoint such Fasts?

9. A. Not at mans pleasure, because there is nothing religious which depends altogether upon mans wit; but upon an extraordinary cause, to call men to the extraordinary invocation of God, is both lawfull, and pious.

Quest. 4. For what causes principally are the Fasts of the Papists to be disallowed?

10. A. 1. Because certaine set times, returning in course, are appointed for Fasting, which is repugnant to the nature of an extraordinary exercise, that depends upon a speciall occasion: so that it brings in the forme of a Fast, without the force and power of it.

11. 2. Because they doe sometimes prolong those times beyond the space fitting, either for an extraordinary duty, or the abstinencie of Fastings, as in Lent; whence also that forme of Fasting is made more vaine.

12. 3. Because at those times they make a certaine choise of meates, which is both ridiculous while they abstaine from flesh, and use wine and junkets: O impious! because they abstaine from flesh, as if it were for that time uncleane, which is the doctrine of Devils.

13. 4. Because they obtrude those times, and this choise of meates upon the whole Church by humane Lawes that binde binde the Conscience; and establish them with more rigid and severe punishments, then the Law of God.

14. 5. Because they place worship in the abstinence which they prescribe.

15. 6. Because they attribute satisfaction and merit to their Fasts,

CHAP. XXII.

Of an Oath.

Quest. 1. VWhether an Oath be lawfull for Christians?

1. A. 1. It is evidently lawfull of its owne nature. 1. Because it is not of its owne nature intrinsically evill; for it contains nothing but the confirmation of our testimony, by desiring the testimony of God. Againe, if it were intrinsically evill, it should never have beene lawfull: whereas yet no Christian will deny, but it was lawfull under the Old Testament.

2. 2. In the old Testament it was no part either of the Iudiciall or Ceremoniall Law, because it hath nothing proper to the Jewes: therefore it was of morall right, which pertaines to Christians as well as to the Jewes.

3. 3. Because there can be no reason given, why it was lawfull of old to sweare, which takes not place as well among Christians.

4. 4. Because there are laudable examples of the use of an Oath in the New Testament, 2 Cor. 1. 23. Apoc. 10. 6.

5. 5. When Christ forbids to sweare at all, Matt. 5. 34. he simply forbids those formes of swearing, which he there nameth, and such like: as also to use any Oath in familiar talke, or but upon necessitie; because the Jewes thought the third Commandement was not broken in that manner, but onely by forswearing, James 5. 12

Quest. 2. Whether it be lawfull to sweare by the creatures?

6. A. 1. The Popish sort teach that a man may sweare by the the creatures, in a double respect, by unreasonable creatures, specially if they be consecrated and dedicated to God, in order and relation to God: and by some reasonable creatures, as the Angels and Saints in heaven, absolutely.

7. 2. Some also of our Divines, although they condemn that absolute way of swearing by the creatures, yet they admit a relative way, out of Matth 5. 34. and 23. 16.

8. 3. But neither of these opinions is to be admitted; For although creatures may be named in swearing, 2 Cor. I. 23. Yet they may not absolutely be respected, without Sacrilege and Idolatry, as appeareth from the nature of the thing. Neither can they be relatively used in the place of God himselfe without sinne.

9. 1. Because we have no approbation of such kind of formes of swearing in Scripture. For Christ, Matth. 23. 16. doth not approve those former, as if they were to be used, but onely shewes that being used, they doe binde. The Apostle, 1 Cor. I 5. 31. doth not properly swear, but proves that he was obnoxious unto death; and 1 Tim. 5. 21. he calls the Angels to be witnesses, as men that are present may be called by a bare obtestation.

10. 2. Because to swear by the creature with relation unto God, is religiously to invoke the creature, in reference unto God. But this is condemned in Scripture, by the consent of all our Divines.

11. 3. Such formes are scandalous, both to such as doe swear, and the like sort, after the example of others, without distinguishing a relative Oathe from an absolute; and to the swearers, who cannot discern when one swears lawfully, and when not.

12. 4. Such oaths diminish the reverence which is to be used in swearing, and so cause them to be too familiarly and rashly used, even by those which are not prophane, as wee may see in the Jewes.

13. 5. Heretiks were the first authors of these formes in the Church of God, who also were upon that ground, condemned. Elixai (a follower of the Heresie of the Offenes, in the time of Trajan) taught, that it was lawfull to swear by Salt, Water, Bread, Earth, Heaven, Sky, Mudde; whom Epiphanius confuting, Lib. 1. proves, that we must sweare by God alone, according to the Law; Thou shalt have no other Gods but me. And of the Manches, among other their novel Doctrines, it is reported by August. Lib. 19. contra Faust. cap. 22. That they sware often, and without any scruple, by the creatures.

14. 6. In the Civill Law such kind of formes are condemned by the best Interpreters, Wesembec. Lib 12. tit. 2. The Emperours Arcad. and Honor. in the Booke, Si quis major, Cap. de Transactionibus, thus spake.

Object. What is to be thought then of those formes of Oathes, in which mention is made of the Soule, Life, Salvation, Death, Damnation, &c.

15. Answ. In these formes of execration, men sweare directly by God himselfe: and by these additions, they effectually shew, that they offer themselves to the severe judgement of God, to deprive them of those best things they have, or to afflict them with the greatest evils, if they make not good what they say. But when the attestation it selfe is made by a creature, it can by no meanes be excused.

Quest. 3. What are we to thinke of those usuall formes, in Faith, in Troth, on my Conscience?

16. Reas. They are not Oathes, because they adde not a new attestation to the confirming of a Testimony, but only declare it to be serious, deliberate, sincere and certaine. Yet from such formes as have the Particle, By, in them, with reference to the creature, we are to abstaine, as from that which hath an appearance of evill, and is scandalous.

Quest. 4. What is to be thought of that forme, in which the Sacrament, or some such thing is named, in way of an Oath?

17. Answ. Beside the common sinne, which is alwaies committed in swearing by creatures, there is also a Superstitious opinion concerning such things, or at least, a kind of partaking in that Superstition.

Quest. 5. Whether is it lawfull in swearing to use Amphibio- phibology, or Equivocation?

18. A. 1. Equivocation is used in an Oath two waies, First, when the words themselves which are used are of a doubtful sence, and so are meant one way by him that sweareth, and taken other wise by others: As if a French-man, called in Latin Gallus, being questioned with about his Countrey, should swear he were no Gallus, meaning no Dunghill-Cocke, as the word also signifies.

Secondly, when the words themselves which are used, have a plaine meaning, but by a tacit restriction, or interpretation, which one keeps to himselfe in his minde, they are changed into another sence: as they say, that Franciscan Monke did, who being asked which way a Murderer had fledd that passed by him, putting his hands into his sleeves, answered, he passed not that way; meaning, that hee went not through his sleeves.

So also, many of the Iesuits doe maintaine, that a Priest being asked, whether he be a Priest, if he be not asked by a Judge, or have a cause to dissemble the truth, may lawfully answer, that he is no Priest, so that he understand that he is no Priest of Baal or Isis, or that he is no Priest to tell another so. The former may bee called Verball Equivocation, the latter Mentall.

19. A. 2. Mentall Equivocation cannot be used in an Othe without a grievous sinne.

First, because in an Oath we testifie something unto others, in the most solemne manner that may be; but when we signifie no certaine thing in our words, but something fained, or dissembled; then wee doe in intention testifie nothing unto others: and so the nature of an Oath is by this dissimulation violated, and quite overthrowne in the maine foundation of it.

Secondly, because this mentall Equivocation is a direct and manifest lye, because there is in words a testimony given both against the minde and conscience of the witness, and against the thing it selfe,

Thirdly, because he goeth about by his testimony to work a believe of that which is false in the hearers; which is not onely to suffer them to be misled and deceived, but directly to misleade and deceive them.

Fourthly, because it is a great injurie to, and provocation of God, to bring his testimony, though fainedly, to prove a falshood; and therefore that outward Oath is taken upon a grievous lye, with a great mockery of Gods testimony, which is called upon.

Fiftly, because by this meanes, a doore is opened for the cheerishing of all manner of lyes. For there is nothing (as Azor. Jes. observeth) so false, but may be cleared from being in any fort a lye, if wee doe but reserve something in minde, according to our pleasure. For we might, whatsoever any body desires of us, though we have it by us, deny that we have it, understanding, to give it them: whatsoever we have done, spoken, or thought, or purposed; wee might say, when we are asked about it, we have not done, spoken, thought, or purposed it, namely, in this sense, to tell it you.

Object. Of the speech uttered by the mouth, and the reservation we keepe in minde is made but one compound, and totall proposition, in which there is no falsity: As when a Masse-Priest affirmes in words, that he is no Priest, and understands, to tell it to another. Now it is free for a man to compose such a proposition of Vocall and Mentall termes.

20. Answ. Although such mixt propositions may be admitted, when a man is meditating of any thing by himselfe, or when we have to doe with God alone; because God and our spirit understand that which is in our minde, aswell as if it were uttered by words: yet they have no place in giving testimony before men; because the mentall reservation testifies nothing to the hearers; let that reservation therefore, be what it will, such a testimony is a lye; and if it be confirmed with an oath, it is perjury: seeing that which is signified by words, is repugnant to the conscience of the witnesse.

21. 2. Verball equivocation is also unlawfull in an oath. First, because it testifies no certaine thing, and without a certaine testimony, that oath at least is vaine.

Secondly, because it tendeth not to the end of an oath which is to end Controversies, and confirme the truth, Hebr. 6. 16. but contrary.

Thirdly

Thirdly, because it deceives and misleades the hearers, which is contrary to the nature of an Oath, if unwittingly I deserve.

Fourthly, because the affirmation, or denyall of the question propounded, it from the Conscience of the respondent, it bee not conformable to the sense of him that asks the question, is a lye. For the question it selfe, in that meaning in which it is propounded, is the sentence to be testified: and the affirming or denyall of that which cannot stand with that sense, is a falsity, which if it be against the conscience of him that gives the testimony, it cannot but be a compleat lye.

Fifthly, because such an oath that confirmeth a lye, is in respect of the nature of the thing, manifest perjury; and in respect of the intention of the swearer, a prophanation of Gods Name.

Object. If we be not asked in a lawfull maner, or if injury be done to us, it is lawfull for us to provide for our owne good, so that we speake ambigiously?

22. Answer. No injurie offered unto us by man, can bee any just cause to us of offering injury to the name of God. Now a great injury is done to God in that sinne of lying, and much more in that sinne of perjurie.

Quest. 6. In what sense are the words of an Oath to be taken?

23. Answer. In that sense which we judge the hearers to conceive: that is, regularly in that sense which they have in the common use of men. Because the signification of words depends upon the use of men.

Quest. 7. Whether is it lawfull sometime to answer according to the principall and remote intention of the asker? for example, when one city refuseth to admit the inhabitants of another city, which is thought, though falsely, to be infected with the Plague, if any one comming thence should be asked, whether he came from that City, whether may he upon Oath deny it, either because that City is not infected; or because, if the City be infected, he knowes himselfe to be cleare: and so hee truly satisfies the principall intention of him that demands the question?

24. Answer. Its not lawfull. Because the question is propounded pounded, the Oath required, not about the End, which is principally intended, but about that particular meane which seems to belong to that End. Now the question, and the affirmation, or deniall of it doe together make up one and the same proposition, or axiome, Quest. 8. Whesher are the words of an Oath alwaies to be taken stricktly, as they import?

25. A. 1. An Oath, (because of the danger of perjury) is of a strickt, right, and interpretation, so that it admits not those larger explications, which take place oftentimes in deeds and words of another nature.

26. 2. Yet in an Oath there are to be understood those conditions, which through the received use and custome, are presumed to be conceived of those whom the Oath concerns. For example, First, in all promissory Oathes this condition is understood, if it shall please God.

Secondly, in those things which are subject to the power of a Superior, it is to be understood, if it shall please him also.

Thirdly, in things so mutable, that they may make their promise unlawfull, it is so to be understood, if things continue in the same state.

Fourthly, He which swears he will keepe the Statutes of any Societic, is to be judged to understand, as those Statutes are observed in the approved custome and use of others.

Fiftly, He which sweareth that he will stand to the Precepts or Statuts of any man, or Society, ought to be understood in that sense, that the Oath be not stretched but to those that he might in probability thinke of, not to those which if the Iuror had thought of, it is probable he would not have promised to performe.

Quest. 9. Whether every Oath obligeth him that sweareth, to the fulfilling of it?

27. A. 1. Every Oath bindes as farre as it is a testimony of a lawfull and possible thing, but no further. Hence, first, such an Oath bindes, although it be wrested by force, or feare, though it be joyned with some injurie. For there is a double obligation in every promissory Oath; one to God, another to man. Now although the injury done, takes away the wrong in respect of man doing the injury, because no right is founded upon an injury; yet the obligation made to God remaineth, which without irreverence and injury to God, cannot be both admitted, and then contemned. This is the case of a man constrained by theeves to sweare to pay a price for his redemption. Such a one either ought not to sweare, or swearing a lawfull thing, ought religiously to keepe his Oath.

28. A. 2. Although an error about the substance of the thing which is respected in their Oath, or about the proper cause, may take away the obligation of ones promise, which is the case of one that contracts Matrimony with one particular person, supposing her to be another: yet an error about a circumstance, or an intrinsecall, and accidentall cause doth not dissolve the obligation. This was the case of the Israelites with the Gibeonites, Josua. 9. and is the case of him that contracts Matrimony with a meane, or a poore woman, supposing her to be Noble, or rich. In the first error there was no testimony at all, but in the second there was a lawfull testimony.

29. A. 3. A latter Oath against a former honest Oath, or promise, doth not binde: because such an Oath is plainly of its owne intrinsecall nature, upon supposition of the former promises unlawfull.

30. A. 4. An Oath to commit any sinne, or to neglect any duty, doth not onely not binde, because an evill thing can receive no force from an Oath; but if it be kept, it increaseth the guilt, because then two sinnes are committed; one, of that kinde which the fact considered in it selfe is of; and the other against religion, out of irreverence, and abuse of the name of God, as an evill purpose is confirmed by the authority of God.

31. A. 5. That an Oath lawfully taken, though the keeping of it may hinder a greater good, ought to be observed, unlesse that good be such that it brings a generall obligation, and be generally understood as an exception in such a promise.

Quest. 10. Whether the Oath of a dead man doth bind his Heires and Successours?

32. A. 3. It doth not properly binde under that notion of an Oath : because an Oath is a personall bond. Citizens therefore are not properly perjured, if they keepe not the Statutes, which were sworne to by their Predecessors, if themselves sweare not.

33. A. 2. Yet it doth sometime binde, in respect of the thing which was the proper cause of the Oath ; to wit, if it were after the nature of a contract : which is the case of him, that sweareth he will pay, or doe this or that ; so that by that meanes he may enjoy this or that commodity. For his heires if they will enjoy the same benefit, are tyed to keepe the same oath.

Quest. I I. Whether and how may the obligation of an oath be loosed ?

34. A. 1. No absolution from an oath, properly so called, either by Dispensation ( which is a plaine releasing of the bond ) or by Commutation ( which is the changing of the bond, from one subiect matter to another ) can bee expected from any humane Authority. Because the religion of an oath pertaines to a Divine Court, and therefore is not subiect to Mans Court. In those doubts which fall out about Oathes, the counsell of such as are skilfull, is of good use , but for Authority to loose the bond of an Oath, either wholly, by Dispensation, or in part, by Commutation, it is not committed to any kind or order of men.

35. 2. Yet there may bee a making void of an Oath sometimes by Superiours, if in that subiect matter they be Superiours, about which the Oath is conversant. So Parents, Husbands, Masters, Princes , may pronounce as well either the Oathes, or the vowes of their Children, Wives, Servants, Subiects, made without their consent in such things as are subiect to their power.

36. 3. When the formall reason of an Oath is taken away, the Oath it selfe ceaseth in regard of the event ; which is the case of such as have sworne that they will obey any Lord, or Prince, who afterward ceaseth to be such an one.

37. 4. When the Oath taken, respects onely the observance or commoditie of man, to whom something is promised, then the obligation ceaseth upon the releasing, or consent of that man to whow the promise was made. The reason son is, because the foundation of such a promise ceaseth: and by the nature of the thing, there is alwaies included in such a promise a condition, unlesse the other shall pardon or remit. This is the case of a creditor to his debtor, and such like. But this cannot be extended to the contract of Espousals, because there not onely the profit of man is look'd at, but the institution of God.

Quest. 12. Whether is it lawfull for a man to bring him to swear, whom he knoweth, or vehemently suspecteth, will swear against his cause?

38. A. It is never lawfull determinately to desire that he would swear that which is false. Neither is it lawfull indifferently to desire that such a one should swear, whether this or that thing be or no, unlesse upon a necessary cause: because we should both do iniury to God, and be a murdherer of his brother. Now there may be a necessary cause for a Iudge to require this, at the instance of a Plaintiffe, where no other remedy can be used: because then we exact it not in his own person, but in the person of the Plaintiffe. And there may be sometime a necessary cause to the Plaintiffe of desiring this, when other wise some great discommodity cannot bee avoyded. But for a private man, that knowes it, privately to require it, there can be no sufficient cause; because no private benefit can come of it.

Quest. 13. Whether it may be lawfull for a private man to draw him to swear, who, he feares, will swear false, but is in simplicitie deceived: For example. Titius knowes that Sempronius was not this yeare at Franequer; he knowes also that Caius doth verely thinke that, hee saw him this yeare at Franequer; the question is, whether Titius may desire Caius to swear that Sempronius was not at Franequer this yeare?

39. A. This is not lawfull: Because though this Oath in Caius would be without fault; yet in Titius the perswader and adviser to it, it would partake of the nature of periury. He doth not indeed so much iniury to Caius, as if he should induce him to swear that which hee knew to be false, but he doth the same iniury to God; whose Name he doth wittingly and willingly abuse, to the confirmation of a falsehood.

Quest. 14. Is it lawfull for a Christian to accept, or require an Oath of him, who he knowes will swear by Idols?

40. A. It is lawfull to doe this for a weighty cause, as Jacob did, Gen. 31. 53. First, because the perverseness of the Oath is not respected by him, for whose sake it is taken, but onely the confirmation of a testimony, and faith given. Secondly, because it is not simply evill, to use evill to a good end. Thirdly, because he that simply desires an Oath, not such an Oath, doth not so much make use of the perverseness of the Oath, as the common nature of it.

Quest. 15. Whether it be lawfull for the Judge to exact of the Defendant an Oath touching the crime objected to him; which is called an Inquisitory Oath, or Oath ex Officio?

41. A. 1. It is not lawfull at all, in a crime that is altogether secret. For God onely judgeth of secret things.

42. 2. It is not lawfull to give a man an Oath, whereby he should be compelled to accuse himselfe. First, because it is against nature, that a man should bring a punishment upon himselfe. Secondly, because by this meanes many would be brought to forswear themselves.

43. 3. Though there be an accusation going before, yet it is not lawfull to require such an Oath of any one, as a probation, because all judgement ought to be founded in Witnesses, and such arguments as have the force of a testimony, Deut. 15. 19. 2 Cor 13. 1.

44. 4. In case of an infamy going before, or a probation not sufficient, and the want of a full one; a man may be admitted to an Oath of purgation, if he shall offer himselfe to it, Exod. 22. 11. but he cannot be compelled.

45. 5. If the fault be notorious, any man generally may, even with the religion of an Oath, be asked concerning the author, Deut. 21. 7.

Obiect. 1. It was lawfull to adiure a wife suspected, Num. 5. 19.

46. A. This was a singular law, of an extraordinary disposition, granted because of the hardness of the hearts of the Jewes, as also the divorce of a woman that was not an Adulteresse, Obiect. 2. Ioshua required of Achan, that he should acknowledge his fault, Jos. 7. 19.

47. A. After accusation and iudgement, hee onely perswades to confession.

Obiect. 3. Our Saviour answered to the High Priests adiuration, Mat. 26. 63, 64.

48. Answ. First, not because he was lawfully adiured, Ioh. 18. 20, 21. Secondly, No otherwise then hee did to Pilate without adiuration. Thirdly, Not to confesse his fault, but to beare witnesse to the truth, Iohn 18. 37.

CHAP. XXIII.

Of a Lot.

Quest. 1. How may a Lot be lawfully used?

1. A. 1. Such a Lot as is cast to finde out what is lawfull or not, is in no sort to be permitted. Because the Law of God is a meane appointed by God to shew men the rule of life; neither did he ever reveale his will to any by Lot.

2. A. 2. A Consulting, or a Divining Lot, used to finde out an hidden truth that is past, or some event that is to come, cannot be lawfull, unlesse it be by Divine inspiration. Because this is an extraordinary meane, and so hath not an ordinary rule, nor may it be used without extraordinary direction, without rash tempting of God.

3. A. 3. A Divisory Lot, which is used to determine any thing de facto, may be lawfull, or unlawfull, according to the circumstances wherewith it is cloathed. It is unlawfull, First, if it be done out of an ill intent, expecting the deciding of the Question, either from Fortune, or from any other cause, but the providence of God. Because then it is either a meerevanity, or hath Superstition mixed with it. Secondly, If it be done without iust necessitie, or if other ordinary meanes of Gods providence be omitted. For then it hath rashnesse mixed with it, and belongeth to the tempting of God. Thirdly, if it be done in an under meanes, either with fraud, or without due reverence to Gods providence. It is lawfull : First, if it be done out of a right intention, seeking direction from God. Secondly, if in a case of necessitie, when a better meanes cannot be used to take away the doubt or difficultie. Thirdly, if in a due matter, where there is no danger of iniustice : because we have the decision of such questions in the word of God. Fourthly, if with due reverence, so that that be yeilded to which the lot determines, as coming from Divine providence.

Quest. 2. What is a iust cause of casting a divisory Lot ?

4. A. When there is no other meanes to avoid some great discommodity. Now the greatnesse of the discommodity sometimes depend upon the weight of the thing it selfe ; as when it is put to Lot, which among fit ministers, ought to stay in the City in the time of the Plague. And often it depends upon the affection of men : as when among companions that are every way equall, the Lot is cast for the taking away debate and discord.

Quest. 3. When Lufory Lots, or those playes which consist of Fortune, or meere chance, be lawfull ?

5. A. Such kind of Playes, whether they meereley depend on Fortune, as Dice playes, or doe principally depend on it, as Cards and Tables are in their owne nature unlawfull. First, because that ought not to be turned into a play, which in its owne nature hath a singular respect to Gods speciall Providence. But a Lot of its owne nature, doth respect the determination of the Question, from the speciall providence of God. For meere contingency of it selfe, hath no aptitude, for the determining of any question. Neither can any thing beside meere contingency, be respected in a Lot, without the speciall providence of God, or the helpe of the Devill, or of some faigned Deity in the directing of that Contingencie. Secondly, because in such kind of plaies, the nature of the Lot, gives occasion to many sinnes, as to a blasphemous recreation, and cursing of Fortune, when the Lot is crosse : a praising of ones good Fortune, when the Lot favoureth : and a pertinacion contention because of the expectation of better fortune.

Quest. 4. What is to be thought of publicke Lotteries, wherein wherein many Prizes, or rewards, are proposed to be gotten by Lot?

6. A. 1. They might haply bee so ordered, that they might be lawfull. Namely, if there were any need of a contribution to some pious use: and to avoide discommodities, the businesse should be permitted to Lot who should distribute: and these also which cast the Lots, should onely venture that which they would not unwillingly give, and so come to the Lottery, not out of an hope of gayning, but out of an intention of bestowing something.

7. 2. As they are now used, they seeme to be unlawfull, because they onely aime at gaine, by fraude and flattery, and give an occasion to many evils.

CHAP. XXIV.

Hitherto concerning the first Commandement; In the second, first of the Church.

Quest. 1. WHether is a Beleever bound to joyne himselfe to some certaine particular Church?

1. A. 1. Yes, by all meanes. First, in respect of Gods Institution, Matt. 18: 17. in which there is not onely the necessity of a Precept, but also of a Meane.

2. 2. In respect of the presence of God and Christ, Apoc. 1. 13. For if we would approach to God, we must joyne our selves to that Society, where God is in a singular manner present, so that he may be found of those that seeke him.

3. 3. In respect of the glory of God, which by this meanes is publicly promoted, and propagated. For as the Name of God in the Old Testament, was placed at Ierusalem, so also is it now in the Ecclesiasticall Assemblies though not in this or that place.

4. 4. In respect of the Covenant and promise of God: For those which are in the Church, are as it were directly under the blessings of God, to have them powred upon them, Psal. 65. 5. and 133. 3.

5. 5. In respect of our profession, because otherwise it cannot be avoyded, but those signes will hardly be discerned, whereby Beleevers are distinguished from Vnbeleevers, 1 Cor. 5. 12.

6. 6. In respect of mutuall edification, which followeth of it selfe, upon the combination of Beleevers, Heb. 10. 24. 25. 1 Cor. 11. 17. and 12. 25. 27. Rom. 1. 12.

Quest. 2. To what a kind of Church ought we to joyne our selves?

7. A. 1. To none but a true one, that is, Professing the true Faith.

8. 2. Of true ones, we ought to chuse the purest as farre as we are able,

9. 3. Although we may joyne our selves to one, in which many defects are necessarily to be tollerated, yet not to one in which we must of necessity partake in any sinne, Eph. 5. 11. neither is it lawfull to adjoyne our selves to any Church, with a minde, by our silence, to cherish any of its defects, but that (as farre as we may with edification) we may doe our endeavour to take them away.

Quest. 3. Whether wee may communicate with such a Church, as doth tollerate the wicked, and oppose the good?

10. A. 1. The tollerations of any notorious crime, is a grievous sinne in a Church, Apoc. 2. 20. and of it owne nature tends to the corruption of the Church, 1 Cor. 5. 6.

11. 2. It doth pollute the Communion in it selfe, to these wicked ones who are tollerated, and to those also which are the causes of that tolleration, Hag. 2. 3.

12. 3. All those participate of this pollution, which doe not endeavour, as much as in them lyes, to remove scandalls, 1 Cor. 1.

13. 4. Th t mixture which doth arise from this tolleration, doth diminish the consolation and edification of the godly.

14. 5. All men ought therefore by all lawfull meanes to endeavour that they may live in those Churches, where the Precious is separated from the vile, Jer. 15. 19.

15. 6. Yet from such a Church, in which some wicked men are tollerated, we must not presently separate, 3 John

9. 10. 11. First, because it may be the error or infirmity of the Church. Secondly, because patience and long-suffering is to be exercised toward a private brother offending, Gal. 6. 1. much more towards a whole Society of Brethren, or a Church. Thirdly, because by the rash departure of the godly the correction of the evill ones is not promoted, but hindered. Fourthly, Because oft-times there cannot be a departure made from such a Church; to one more pure, without grievous discommodities; which must be avoided as much as wee can, without sinne: yea sometime they make an affirmative Precept to cease to binde, which otherwise could not be left undone without sinne.

16. 7. If any one either wearied out with unjust vexations, or providing for his owne edification, or for a testimony against wickednesse, shall depart from such a Society to one more pure, without a condemnation of that Church which he leaves, he is not therefore to be accused of Schisme or of any sinne.

Quest. 4. Whether it bee lawfull to continue in that Church, where the power of removing Scandall, and purging out the wicked, is wanting?

17. A. 1. The power it selfe, for the right of it, or in regard of the first act of it, cannot be separated from a true Church, because it doth immediatly and necessarily flow from the very essence. For it is contained in that covenant whereby Beleevers are ioyned into a Church.

18. 2. The use of the power cannot bee taken away, without the grievous fault of them who take it away, and the great iniury of them from whom it is taken.

19. 3. Neither ought the Church to rest in this, that it seeth it selfe uniuersally oppressed by others: for it belongs to the duty of the Church to maintaine the Liberties which are granted to her by Christ.

20. 4. Yet if Beleevers contending for their liberty cannot procure this right in that part, nor without most grievous discommodities depart to a more pure Church, and doe keepe themselves from the approbation of sinne, and study likewise to make up that defect, as much as they can, they sin not if they ioine themselves to such a Church, or continue in it:

Quest.

Quest. 5. Whether it be lawfull to stay in such a Church, where some of the Ordinances of Christ are wanting, and in the roome of them some of mens constitutions brought in?

21. A. 1. The defect of some Ordinances, though it ought not to be approved, yet it may be tollerated; because an imperfection, whether in private persons, or in a publicke State doth not take away the nature of that Office, which is found more perfect in some persons or State.

22. 2. Humane Institutions if they be extrinsecall to the Church and Worship, and make to the promotion of the Ordinances of Christ, and edification of the Church, then they ought to be admitted and approved, as Civill meanes used and applyed to spirituall ends. But if they have a religious State, and pertaine intrinsecally to worship, or have that same nature with the institutions of Christ, possessing this place, for they ought in no sort to be approved.

CHAP. XXV.

Of calling to the Ministry.

Quest. 1. WHether a Calling be necessary?

1. A. 1. A singular calling, not required to teach and preach the Gospell upon occasion, Acts 8. 4. and 11. 19 21. and 18. 24. 25.

2. The reason is, First, because this is the duty of all Christians to promote, as much as they can, the kingdome of God, and so to teach others Divinity.

Secondly, because it is necessary sometimes that men be convicted of errors, and instructed in the truth, before there can be any lawfull vocation.

Thirdly, because a people sometime destitute of a Minister, cannot, without detriment to their edification, be otherwise helped, unlesse they admit the teaching of such as are not yet rightly called to the Ministry.

3. 2. Not onely private preaching, but publicke, may be exercised with a singular calling. First, in a Church to be constituted,

Secondly,

Secondly, in a Church constituted also, with her approbation, if confusion be avoyded, and order observed, 1 Cor. 14. 23. &c. Acts. 13. 15. for it pertaines to the edification of the Church, that they who excell others in gifts, doe exercise them before others to helpe them, and excite them.

4. 3. Yet for one to invade the proper duty of a Minister, without a speciall calling, is altogether unlawfull, Heb. 5. 4. Tit. 1. 5. Jer. 14. 14.

First, because there is required a singular seperation of God, Acts 13. 2. and 20. 38. Rom. 1. 1.

Secondly, there is requiring an undertaking of a singular, and weighty function, the author and dispenser of which is God himselfe. Ephes. 4. 11. 1 Corinth. 12. 5, 6. Matt. 9. 38.

Thirdly, there is required a singular assurance of the assistance of God.

Fourthly, there is required a singular expectation of a blessing from God, Mat. 28. 20.

Fiftly, there is required singular fidelity, and alacrity, 1 Tim. 4. 14.

Sixtly, it is requisite that that Church to which he is to minister be assured of the will of God whereby hee hath appointed such a one for their Minister, that they may be subject to him out of Conscience, Heb 13. 17.

Seventhly, it is requisite that order be observed, 1 Cor. 14. 40.

Quest. 2. What things are necessarily required in him that is to be called to the Ministry?

5. A. 1. Such an integrity of life, that he be not onely without Seandail, but also have a good testimony, 1 Tim. 3. 7 by a testimony here is understood the good opinion that we have concerning his uprightnesse, made manifest by his honest and pious conversation.

6. 2. Knowledge and skill in the Doctrine of Christ, above the common sort of Beleevers, 2 Tim. 3. 16, 17. To which also must be added, the understanding of those things which pertaine to his Office in governing the Church, 1 Timothie 3. 16.

7. 3. Some dexteritie in teaching, or in communicating unto others, that knowledge which he hath himselfe. 1 Tim.

3. 2. 2 Tim. 2. 2.

8. 4. A will in some sort ready to undertake the Ministry, and to discharge it: which will of his ought<sup>ne</sup> to arise from feare of poverty, or such like discommodity; or out of a desire of superiority, fame, or gaine, or such like, &c. 1 Pet. 5. 2. for this will is in some sort constrained, and is not properly and directly carried to the worke of the Ministry, but out of pure love and zeale, John 21. 15, 16, 17.

9. 5. The difference in these qualifications is such, that First, a knowledge of the truth with some dexterity of teaching is necessarily required to the essence of a Minister; because they are the proper foundations of that vocation: but integrity is onely necessary, as a meane to the well being, though it be necessary by the precept of God, even to the very being of a Minister.

Secondly, concerning the Doctrine, and dexterity, judgement may be given by others; but concerning the inclination of the will, no man beside the party to be called can certainly and alwaies judge.

Thirdly, Doctrine and dexterity cannot suddenly be procured by others: but the will drawing backe through feare, or modesty, may and ought to be excited, and stirred up by exhortations. As for those that can, and are not willing, paines is well spent in the calling them; not so for those that cannot, but would.

Quest. 3. Whether are those which can read, or recite a Sermon by heart, out of the writings of others, furnished with the necessary gifts of Ministers?

10. A. 1. In no sort. For first, the gift of reading and rehearsing by heart, is not a gift of the Ministry, but a gift of wisdom and knowledge, 1 Cor. 12. 8.

11. 2. A Minister must necessarily have a faculty of applying the Word, according to the diversity of hearers, times, places, and other circumstances, with that variety which divers occasions doe require, 2 Tim. 2. 15. but this cannot be done, by reading, or reciting out of the prescript of another.

12. 3. He ought also to be ready to give an account of those things which he teacheth, to any one that asketh, and to convince the gaine-sayers, Tim 1. 9. which cannot be done by reading and reciting.

13. 4. He ought to goe before the Church in those gifts, which are to be effected and sought by al Beleevers, 1 Tim. 4. 13, 14, &c. but all Beleevers ought to endeavour, that the Word of God might dwell plenteously in them, Col. 3. 16.

14. 5. No man can discharge the office, either of an Advocate, or a Phisician, by reciting prescript formes. Now a Minister is a spirituall Advocate and Phisician.

Quest. 4. Whether it bee lawfull to desire the Ministry?

15. A. 1. To seeke a place in the Ministry, either for lucre, or the profit that it may bring along with it, is plainly to be condemned. For this is to account gaine godlinesse, 1 Tim. 6. 5.

16. 2. To desire the worke of the Ministry, out of desire and zeale to edifie the Church, and to glorifie God, this is pious and landable, 1 Cor. 16. 15. 1 Tim. 3. 1.

17. 3. To offer himselfe to the judgement of others to be tryed and approved for the Ministry, is no way repugnant to the honour of the Ministry.

18. 4. He which hath a good testimony of his fitnessse, for the worke of the Ministry, may without offence of conscience, modestly offer his paines to any Church, Esa. 6. 8. for God offers such to the Churches.

19. 5. Yet importunately to urge his owne calling, and by cunning to procure it, is utterly unfit for one that is rightly disposed to the Ministry, 2 Cor. 2. 16.

20. 6. By fraud and violence to thrust himselfe upon a Church against their will, is plainly a devillish part.

21. 7. So to come to the office of the Ministry, as to a thing subject to buying and selling, this is Symony. Because the office of the Cure of Soules, is the gift of God, which is communicated properly by God alone; and therefore to buy that office is all one in kind, and in the nature of the thing, with that which Simon did, Acts 8.

22. 8. Symony is committed not onely by a gift from the hand, when money is given to procure such an office, but also by a gift from observance, which is given and yielded to any for that end: and also by a gift from the tongue, when it is procured by intercession and prayers, so that the worthynesse is not principally regarded.

Quest. 5. Who are they which have the right and power of calling Ministers?

23. A. 1. The chiefe right of calling is in Christ alone, who is the Head of the Church, the Author of the Ministrie, and the Lord of the Ministers.

24. 2. The delegated right cannot properly be in Diocefan, Bishops, or Patrons, or Magistrates; as such, because Christ who ordained the Ministry, hath prescribed nothing singular concerning those Orders, hath communicated no new right unto them, and hath left his Church well ordered without them.

25. 3. The delegated right belongs to that whole Church, which the Minister that is to be called must serve.

For, first, Ministers are given by Christ to the Church, that by the same ordinary and certaine way, they may bee procured by every Church. But if the vocation should depend upon others, the Church should often be destitute, of a certaine, of procuring Ministers to it selfe, and so such a Church should be instituted of Christ, which should not be sufficient in it selfe.

Secondly, If the right of calling were in the power of others, then the Church should not immediatly receive her Ministers from Christ, but from those whose this right was.

Thirdly, otherwise it could not be that the Church should alwaies freely submit her selfe to her Ministers, which yet in the Ministry is no lesse necessary then in Marriage.

26. 4. This right of Calling doth so in regard of the proprietie remaine in the Church, that it cannot either by the authority of any other be taken away, or by a voluntary grant be lost, or bee wholly committed to the fidelity of another. For the act of the Church is a cause necessarily required to Ecclesiasticall calling.

27. 5. Yet divers actions pertaining to calling may bee commanded to others, and ordinarily ought to be performed by the principall members of the Church, or the Presbyters.

And

And the care that all things be done rightly, belongs to the Magistrate.

Quest. 6. What is the act in which Vocation properly consists?

28. A. Vocation properly and essentially consists in election. For first, that voluntary relation which is between the Minister and people, cannot have any other foundation then voluntary election.

Secondly, a free Church, retaining her liberty, cannot be subjected to any, but by free election.

Thirdly, all those acts which pertain to vocation, either tend to election, as nomination, presentation, examination, or depend upon election, or ordination, institution, or induction, which is nothing else but the complement of election, and a solemn declaration; as the Coronation of a King, or the Inauguration of a Magistrate, and so is wont Metonymically, to be used, for election, or vocation.

Quest. 7. Where the freedome of election is diminished by Bishops, Magistrates, Patrons; what kind of Calling is there?

29. A. Although election be not in that manner and degree free as it ought to be; yet a voluntary consent, as in Marriage, so in the Ministry, though procured by unjust means, hath the essence of an election and vocation.

Quest. 8. When many are fit, who among them is to be elected?

30. A. 1. He which is most fit in the conscience of him that doth elect, well informed, because to doe otherwise were an accepting of persons, which being displeasing to God, ought to have no place at all in Divine matters. But this is so to be understood: First that comparison be made among those which may commodiously be had.

31. 2. That he be judged most fit, who though hee be simply and absolutely inferiour, yet in relation to that Church for which a Minister is desired, considering all circumstances is found fittest.

Quest. 9. Whether a man may be called to the Ministry, for some certaine terme of yeares?

32. A. 1. That this should be expressed, or directly included.

cluded in the Calling, is utterly repugnant to the nature of the Ministerie. For first, A Minister doth not properly devote his paines to the Church, but to Christ. Now Christ hath nowhere revealed his Will concerning a definite law of Ministry.

Secondly, Such a vocation doth diminish the affection and care of a Minister to his people, and of the people againe to him.

Thirdly, It lessens also the dignity of the Ministry, while in shew, at least, it makes it mercenary.

Fourthly, It brings along with it divers dangers, both to Minister and People. For so the Minister may without a just cause be dismissed, and the people may unseasonably be forsaken.

33. 2. Yet that they should be understood implicitey, a power of obtaining an honest dismissal upon some condition, the necessity of which, the condition either of the party called, or parties calling, or the Church in generall may cause, there is nothing that absolutely forbids.

Quest. 10. Whether may one that is rightly called to the Ministry, afterward leave off the Ministry?

34. A. 1. It is not lawfull for any one to attempt this at his owne will.

First, because he is bound to God in that vocation, neither can he without his Commandment forsake his station.

Secondly, he is also bound to the Church, not by an humane, but by a Divine covenant. And he can no more forsake the Church, then be forsaken of it.

35. 2. Yet if such a cause fall out, that makes him unfit for the Ministry, or makes the exercise of it impossible to him, or bring a necessity of sinning upon him in the exercise of it, then by Gods allowance he seemes to be loosed from the Ministry.

Quest. 11. Whether it bee lawfull for a Minister to goe from one Church to another?

36. A. It is one thing to goe from one to another, another thing to be translated or removed. Goe he may not so long as the foundation of his former calling remaines; but removed he may be upon the judgement of other Churches.

ches, and by the consent of that Church to which he is bound, for a further fruit of common edification.

CHAP. XXVI.

Of making Sermons.

Quest. 1. What ought to be the Text, or Argument of the Sermon?

1. A. 1. Seeing nothing ought to be Preached by a Minister of the Church of Christ, besides the Word of God; and the Word is not to be found any where but in the Scriptures, it necessarily followeth that his Preaching must be altogether of the Scriptures.

2. 2. Although the Catechisme in which is contracted the summe of the Scripture which is most necessary for all; be necessarily with all diligence to be inculcated, yet a difference alwaies ought to be observed betweene such humane formes, and the Holy Scripture. Therefore it is not meet that the Catechisme should be in the same manner propounded for a Text in the Church, as the holy Scripture is wont to be.

3. 3. For the honour therefore of the Scripture, for the efficacie of the truth preached, and the danger of the scandall which may arise from that custome, it is most safe that some select places of Scripture be propounded for a foundation of the Catechisticall instruction, and that the Doctrine of the Catechisme be drawne aright of them, as the Doctrine of the Scripture.

Quest. 2. Whether is that custome to be approved which hath held in the Papacie, and is still used in some Reformed Churches, in the Sermon onely ordinarily to explaine certaine Parcels and Sections, which are called by the name of Gospels and Epistles?

A. 1. The publike reading of those Sections, omitting the other Scriptures, is repugnant to the expresse Commandement of God, who hath commanded the whole booke of the Law to be often read, Deut. 31. 10, 11, 12. and to the the practise of the Ancient Church, Neb. 8. 21. 2 Chron. 34. 30. Acts 15. 21. Col. 4. 16.

5. 2. The exposition of those Sections is not sufficient for the due edification of the Church. For many things are necessary to be knowne, which are not contained in those Sections, 2 Tim. 3. 16.

6. 3. The Sections are perverse, so that many of them are, as parts cut off from intire bodies, and are propounded by themselves, maimed without head or taile.

7. 4. They which adhere to these Sections, neglect the Divine order and manner of the Scripture, and conceale it from the people, to the great detriment of Religion.

8. 5. This custome of Preaching onely out of these Dominicall readings, was brought in, in the depraved and darke times of the Church, not without a Superstitious respect to some Solemnities devised by men, against the rule of Scripture, and practise of the Primitive Church.

9. 6. Experience hath taught, and doth teach still, that the knowledge of God doth more abound in those Churches, where, this custome being left, the Scriptures are freely handled; partly, in a continued order through some whole Books; partly, as any singular and necessary occasion requireth.

Quest. 3. Whether is it lawfull to procure Sermons out of Postils?

10. A. 1. To beg, or to reherse verbatim a Sermon out of the prescript of another, is altogether unworthy for a Minister of the Gospell.

First, because by these meanes those gifts which God hath given men for the Ministry are not exercised, but onely memory and pronounciation.

Secondly, because they that doe so, cannot aright cut the Word of God by a fit accommodation of it to the condition of the hearers, according to the variety of occasions.

Thirdly, because the force and efficacie of that Sermon is lost, which is not setch from the certaine judgement, and inward affection of the speaker: which cannot be expected from them, that speake all out of a prescript forme.

Fourthly, because this manner of doing, makes Ministers not increase in knowledge, but in memory onely.

Fiftly, it makes them also to be despised among many.

11. 2. Yet Commentaries, and godly Sermons made by others, may be of great use to a Minister lesse exercised.

First, because imperfect beginners are excited and directed in the right way, by the example of such as are more perfect, and of greater yeares.

Secondly, because divers things are to bee found in such kind of writings, which those that are lesse exercised may transference into their owne use.

Thirdly, because some things are propounded with more confidence by beginners, when they see the same things used by the gravest Divines.

12. 3. For those Sermons which are commonly called Postils, so much is not to be attributed unto them, as that they should be numbred among the singular helpes of Sermons.

First, because the most of those Postils were written by Popish men, who were ignorant of the force and efficacie of the Gospell; or by other Heterodox persons, whose Orationes are read with more danger then fruit, by the unskilfull, or lastly, by some lighter Doctors, who without any great judgement, have in this way accommodated themselves to the time.

Secondly, because these Postils are onely accommodated to the Dominicall Sections, to which a Minister of the Gospell ought not to adhere.

Thirdly, because they containe neither the Divinity that is to be taught, but in a very little measure, nor any certaine and edifying manner of teaching, but such as is fitted for the pleasing of vaine men.

Fourthly, because in those Churches where they are most used, Religion is not to be found in its vigour, but either ignorance, or the forme of goodlineffe takes place, the power of it being denied.

Quest. 4. Whether are the Writings and Sayings of Heathens to be alledged in Sermons.

13. A. In the ordinary course of Preaching, among Auditors that are unskilfull in such matters, and which acknowledge the Divine Authority of the Scripture, such allegations are altogether to be abstained from.

First, because they are not fit meanes to beget, nourish, and preferue Faith and spirituall life.

Secondly, because neither Moses, who was learned in all the wisdom of Egypt, nor Christ in whom were all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge, ever alleadged any such thing.

Thirdly, because injury is offered to Christ, as if he onely were not to be heard.

Fourthly, injury is done to the Scripture, as if it alone were not sufficient for the edification of the Church.

Fifthly, because a scandall by this meanes is brought into the Church, whilest it heares the testimonies of Heathens promiscuously mingled with the Oracles of God, as if they were of like Authority.

Sixtly, because humane wisdom is to be concealed in the Preaching of the Gospell, 1 Cor. 2. 1. 2 Cor. 2. 4. because it hinders the demonstration of the Spirit, and the efficacy of Preaching.

Quest. 5. Whether it is lawfull promiscuously to allege the sentences of Fathers in Sermons?

14. A. First, they cannot be brought in place of prooffe; because they were men subiect to errours, and so their authority causeth not a certaine and Divine Faith.

Secondly, they cannot serue for any illustration among common Hearers, to whom even the Names of the Fathers are unknowne.

Thirdly, they cannot be brought for ornament sake, because humane mixtures doe not adorne, but pollute.

Fourthly, yet sometimes to convince the pertinaciousnesse of some, to refute the slanders of the enemies, and to helpe the weakenesse of others, it may be necessary to use such kind of testimonies. But then they ought so to be produced, that it may plainly appeare, that the Minister is compelled to goe out of the bounds of the Scripture, and that he doth this onely for the causes before named; the Word of God, and the edification of Beleevers requiring no such thing.

Quest. 6. Whether it is lawfull to mingle in the Sermon, words of Art, Latine words, Greeke, Hebrew, &c.

15. A. Among the ignorant it is not lawfull. First, because cause strange Words doe hinder the understanding, and interrupt the attention of the Auditors.

Secondly, because if they be not explicated, they make not for the edification of the simple, and if they be explicated, it is an unprofitable wasting of time.

Thirdly, because they favour of ostentation in the Minister, and minister occasion and argument to the ignorant to cherish and excuse their ignorance.

Quest. 7. Whether may Allegories invented by mans study be propounded in Sermons?

16. A. 1. Continued Metaphors (which most properly are called Allegories) if they be apt, cannot with any reason be disallowed; for if it be lawfull to use a Metaphore, it is lawfull to continue the same.

Secondly, Allegoricall interpretations of things which have no certaine foundation in Scripture, ought not to be propounded as certaine.

First, because they are inventions of men, not the Word of God.

Secondly, because they wrest the Word of God from its proper scope.

Thirdly, because they subject the Oracles of God to the pleasure of vaine men, to be drawne hither or thither as they thinke good.

Fourthly, because seeing they are not produced out of the Word of God, but by men brought unto it, they have no spirituall efficacy in working upon the consciences of men.

Fifthly, because they can have no sound Doctrine in them, but that which hath a certaine foundation in other places of Scripture, and so they tend to the prejudice of that doctrine, which is handied fondly, and out of place, without foundation, as if it had none any where.

Sixtly, because they can breed no Faith, but that which consists in the wisdom of men.

Seventhly, because they make the sollid and saving simplicity of the Preaching of the Gospell unfavory and ungratefull to unskillfull men; who are taken with these toyes.

Quest. 8. Whether any care be to be had of Exordiums in the making of Sermons?

17. A. 1. An Exordium or preamble is not accounted, by Oratours themselves, for any necessary and internall part, though but of an humane Oration: it is a great defect of judgement therefore in them, who will have it necessary in an holy Sermon.

18. 2. The seeking the good-will, docility and attention (in which consists the end of preambles) among Beleevers well instructed, acknowledging their Pastor, prepared and excited by prayers, both publike and private, to the hearing of the word of God; hath no necessary use.

19. 3. A Preamble, if it be nothing to the businesse in hand, is condemned by all: if it handle any matter which is contained in the Text, then it brings either a perverse disturbance of order, or else Tautologic.

20. 4. To seeke for Proverbs, Apothegmes, Sentences, or select Histories to make Exordiums of, by the accommodating of them, doth not onely favour of something humane, unworthy the Word of God, but hath a childish kind of affectation, which is not approved in the more grave speeches of men.

21. 5. The explication of the Coherence or dependance of the Text, which is part of the Analysis, may profitably be propounded instead of vulgar Exordiums. 6. And a brieve insinuation may sometime be used, wherein some thing upon occasion singularly pertaining to the purpose is declared; but not ordinarily.

Quest. 9. What Text is to be chosen?

22. A. 1. For the quality of the Text, the election must be directed according to the condition of the hearers, times, and places. For the most necessary and profitable things must alwaies be most insisted on.

23. 2. In regard of the quantitie, fewnesse, or shortnesse of words ought in no sort to be affected.

First, because the more of the word is profitably explicated, the more the hearers are edified.

Secondly, because divers Doctrines proposed may more plainly and effectually be demonstrated out of a Text of divers propositions, then of one.

Thirdly, because unprofitable and ungratefull Tautologies, or digressions, follow upon this affectation of a short Text.

Fourthly, because it favours of a kind of ostentation, for a man to seeme to desire to fetch many things out of few.

Quest. 10. Whether are all things which may be produced out of Scripture, or reasons to the purpose, to be propounded in the Sermon?

24. A. 1. Testimonies of Scripture, and confirmations from reasons, are not to be heaped up without prudent discretion. For 1. to prove that carefully among Christians, of which no Christian almost doubteth, were to wast the time, and weary the auditors without any fruit.

25. 2. In the confirming of that which needes prooffe, choice and measure is to be used, lest the memory of the auditors be overwhelmed, or firme and apt prooffes bee any wayes weakned, by the mixture of such as are weake, and nothing to purpose.

26. 3. The heaping up of prooffes, or illustrations unnecessarily, doe seeme to argne, either defect of judgement, or some ostentation of wit, and memory.

27. 4. Other things more edifying are omitted, because of these things, which omission when it cannot be defended, is wont ridiculously to be excused with shortnesse of time that was voluntary sought and procured.

Quest. 11. Which part is most to be insisted on, the explanation of the Text, the handling of the Doctrines, or the Use, and Explication of them?

28. A. Some speciall occasion may make the large explication of the text, or handling of the Doctrine to be necessary; but regularly, and ordinarily the principall worke of the Sermon, if it be not Catechericall, is in the use and application.

First, because the use is the principall end, both of the explications and doctrines. Now the one is principally to bee regarded, and those things which doe neerely belong to the end: and all other things are to be directed to it.

29. 2. Because it hath more difficulty and necessitie in the most part of hearers. For such is the blindness and perverseness of men, that their mindes doe more difficultly admit nothing, nor doth their condition require any thing more, then the effectuall accommodation of the Word, to the subjecting of the Conscience in all things to the will of God. The word of God is much more easily into the eares and understanding of men, then into their hearts and hands.

Thirdly, because so Christ, and the Prophets, and Apostles preached: for they did direct all things to the use and practise of life, and in perswading to that practise, they spent their greatest paines.

Quest. 12. Whether Rhetoricall ornaments have any place in Sermons?

30. A. That Rhetoricke which we finde in Scripture to be used by the Prophets and Apostles, hath great use in Preaching, if it be used with the like prudence. Now in Scripture there is great use of Tropes and Figures of sentences; but for Figures of words, which consists in likenesse of sounds, measures, and repetitions, very few examples of them are to be found.

The reason is, First, because the harmony of elocution is the lighter part of Rhetoricke, which more agreeth to light persons and things, then to grave, sacred and divine.

Secondly, because they serve onely for naturall delight, not for spirituall edification.

Thirdly, because they are repugnant to the powerfull demonstration of the Spirit. They doe foolishly therefore which in their Sermons, affect sounds ending alike, but specially they which propound such rimes in unknowne Latine or Greeke words.

Quest. 13. By what meanes especially may a Sermon be made effectuall for the working upon mens Consciences?

31. A. 1. Next to the evidence of truth, and the will of God drawne out of Scripture, nothing makes the Sermon more to pierce, then when it is apparent that it comes out of the inward affection of the heart without any affectation. To this purpose it is very profitable, if besides the dayly practise of pietie we use serious meditation, of fervent prayer to worke those things upon our owne hearts, which we would perswade others of.

Quest. 14. How ought Controversies to be handled in Sermons?

32. A. 1. No Controversies are to bee moved, which we finde not just occasion for in the Text, or in the Doctrine deduced out of the Text.

33. 2. Then there is a necessary occasion, when for the edification of the hearers, wee are to meet with the secret thoughts and objections of the Auditors; or the calumnies commonly spread up and downe in oppositon to the Doctrine propounded.

34 3. Obscure, subtle, and high questions are not to bee handled in Sermons.

35. 4. Old Heresies, and such as are already buried, are not ordinarily to be named in Sermons, much lesse laboriously to be confuted, and raised from hell: for neither hath a faithfull Preacher so much leasure, because of errors and sinnes now taking place, as to seeke matter of opposition from any thing else; neither makes it any whit to the edification of the people, that they should be held in hearing and learning blasphemies and heresies.

36. 5. In such Controversies as are necessary, the people are not to be loded with many arguments, and answers of objections.

37. 6. The most convenient manner of handling Controversies among the common people, is simply and briefly to shew how errors disagree from the principles of the doctrine of Christ.

38. 7. In the handling of many Controversies, that prudence is to be used, that the confirmation of the truth may appeare to all, and that they which know the contrary errors, may know how they may be confuted; and that they which know them not, may remaine in their simplicities, and may have ready at hand, wherewith to defend themselves, if they be set upon in that part.

39. 8. If it be necessary to defend to a more full confutation of some error, then the true state of the Controversie ought first to be laid open, that all may understand both what it is, and of what consequence in Religion. And those arguments principally are to be produced, which may effectually perswade the Conscience.

40. 9. In the manner of handling, zeale and truth must be be tempered with such mildness and moderation as becomes the cause, and as may distinguish such as erre out of simplicitie, from such as blasphemate impiouly.

Quest. 15. Whether beside the solemn preaching of the Word by the Minister out of the Pulpit, there be any other handling of the Scripture to bee used in the audience of the Church?

The exercise of Prophetic.

41. A. 1. In the Primitive Church, there was a certain propheticall exercise distinguished from preaching, 1 Corin. 14. 31, 32, &c.

42. 2. To this exercise were admitted, not onely the Ministers, but also of the brethren, such as were of chiefe note and most approved, for the gifts which they had received, 7bid.

43. 3. It was lawfull for others also in the Church for learning sake, modestly, and in order, to propound their doubts, that they might be instructed by those that had more skill, 7bid. vers. 35.

44. 4. This exercise where conveniently it may bee brought into Churches, ought not to be contemned, 1 Thess. 5. 20.

First, because it is most agreeing to the order of the Primitive Church approved by the Apostle.

Secondly, because it tends singularly to the exciting, cherishing, and increasing the spirituall gifts of every beleever.

Thirdly, because it takes away negligence and envy, and nourisheth charity.

Quest. 16. Whether a faithfull Minister may rest in the common and publike preaching of the Word, as having sufficiently done his duty?

Private Instruction.

45. A. He ought also to use private care to instruct every one in private, according as occasion shall serve, and their necessities require.

First, because in this duty the Apostles have gone before us, and left us an example to follow, Acts 20. 20. 1 Thess. 2. 10.

Secondly, because they have exhorted us, that we should have a care of the same duty, 1 Tim. 5. 1, 2. 2 Tim. 4. 2.

Thirdly, because by private admonition, the Word of God

God is more applied to the condition and necessitie of every particular, then in publike it can.

Fourthly, because private instruction makes way for publike, and also makes it much more effectually, then otherwise it would be.

CHAP. XXVII.

Of Baptisme.

To whom it doth belong to Baptize hath beene discoursed sufficiently in another place against Bellarmino : as also concerning the necessity and forme of Baptism. There remains therefore onely one or two questions in this Chapter, briefly to be discussed.

Quest. 1. W Ho are to be Baptised?

1. A. 1. Concerning those of age, there can be no question : for in them is required knowledge of the true Faith, and a desire to be Baptized distinctly declared.

2. 2. As for Infants (supposing in this place that they are not to be excluded from Baptisme, the grounds of which Doctrine are sufficiently declared in the Marrow of Divinitie) it is chiefly required that they be in the Covenant of grace by externall profession, and estimation, in respect of the Parents ; and that there be hope that they shall be instructed and educated afterward in the same Covenant. For Baptisme is a Signe and Scale of the Covenant of grace.

3. 3. Baptisme therefore most properly belongs to those Infants, or one of them at least, is within the Church, not without.

4. 4. That carelesnes therefore is in no sort to be excused, whereby promiscuously, and without difference, all are admitted to Baptisme whatsoever they be, and by whomsoever brought.

5. 5. Such Children whose Parents are unknowne, if they be borne among Christians, are in charity to be accounted as the children of Christians, if there be not a just cause of presuming the contrary.

6. 6. They which doe in some sort belong to the Church in profession, but yet doe openly violate the covenant of God, the infants of such ought to be baptized with some difference; namely, so that that which the Covenant requireth, and is wanting in them, may be supplied by others as farre as is possible. For first, a definition betweene the pure and un-pure ought to be observed in all the holy things of God, for the consolation of the good, the reformation of the evill, and the edification of all.

Secondly, the Ordinances of God cannot otherwise be kept from all pollution.

7. 7. Children borne unlawfully ought to be baptized, so that their parents shew their repentance, or their education be undertaken by some other that are godly.

8. 8. The children of Excommunicate persons that bee contumacious, ought not to bee baptized, unlesse there be sureties that undertake for them.

9. 9. The infants of Papists, and such like, who are halfe Christians, if there be a fit Surety to undertake for their education, may bee baptized: because they are not altogether strangers to the profession of the Covenant; and by this meanes they are brought to a more pure observation of the Covenant.

Quest. 2. Whether may the baptisme of Children be deferred at the will of Parents?

10. A. The baptisme of Infants is not to bee deferred without some great, and in some sort, compelling cause.

First, because the equity of the commandement for Circumcision upon the eight day, forbids this procrastination.

Secondly, because such procrastination can hardly be distinguished, from a dis-esteeme and contempt of this Ordinance.

Thirdly, because it is repugnant both to the forwardnesse of profession, the zeale of glorifying God, and the consolation of the parents, in the solemne consecration of the children to God.

CHAP. XXVIII.

Of the Supper of the Lord.

Passing by here also those things which are discoursed in another place.

Quest. 1. VV Hether the frequent use of the Lords Supper be necessary?

1. A. 1. All godly persons ought to endeavour that as often as they can conveniently, they make a religious use of the Sacrament.

First, because that Precept of an indeterminate time, Doe this, admits no other limitation, but a want of an opportunity, or some just impediment.

Secondly, because we have continuall need to feed upon Christ, and the good things purchased by him.

Thirdly, because the solemne profession of our Faith, according to Gods Ordinance, is a duty which we ought, most readily upon every just occasion, to performe.

Fourthly, because our infirmitie requireth a frequent renewing of our Covenant, and excitation of our heart and minde.

Fifthly, because it is apparent, that in th<sup>e</sup> Primitive Church the Sacrament of the Supper was administred every Lords Day, neither can there be any other reason given for the more rare use of it; but the luke-warmenesse of Beleevers, and the multitude of people in some Congregations.

Quest. 2. When a Controversie with one, either private or publike, or enmitie, be any just cause of abstaining from the Sacrament?

2. A. 1. There can be no just cause why any should of his owne accord keepe away from the Sacrament, beside the conscience of his owne unworthynesse, arising from his owne sinne. For that unworthynesse alone which is culpable, and comes from an evill conscience, excludeth from the communion,

3. 2. Litigious Controversies, and Law-suits, doe no more of themselves hinder the use of the Supper, then they hinder Prayer. For Charity toward our Neighbour is necessarily required in both.

4. 3. If therefore any man be in Law, or strife, not because he hath done injury to any, or because hee will not satisfie for an injurie done, or is farre from peace or reconciliation, but through the wickednesse of others; this cannot be a just impediment of communion. For the fault of one cannot deprive another of the benefit of Christ, and the priviledges of Christians.

5. 4. If any one therefore be overtaken with anger, or desire of revenge upon occasion of some strife, hee ought not therefore to abstaine from the Communion, but rather to lay it downe speedily, that he may communicate: otherwise he shall by a double sin augment his fault; and he shall seem to make more account of his inordinate affection, then of holy communion with Christ.

Quest. 3. What kind of Preparation is required to the holy use of the Supper?

Preparation to the Supper of the Lord.

6. A. 1. The preparation to be used, is placed in three acts by the Apostle, 1 Cor. 11. 27. 28. 29. For hee requires, First, a discerning of the Lords Body. Secondly, triall of our selues. Thirdly, a worthy disposition.

7. 2. This discerning stands in a right understanding and judgement, concerning the nature, use, and necessitie of the Sacrament. Now because these things cannot be understood, but out of the Foundations of Christian Religion, concerning sinne, and the misery that followes it; concerning Christ, and his benefits, as also concerning our duty in thankfulness and obedience to God: therefore the knowledge of the principall grounds of Religion, necessary to salvation, is necessary also to this discerning of the Sacrament.

8. 3. The examination of our selues consists in a serious triall, whether we be so disposed that we may with fruit use this Sacrament, which now we discern to be divine. The rule of this examination is the word of God, as it respects the institution of this Sacrament. The dispositions in this triall, principally to be respected, are Faith, Repentance, Charity, and and that study of new obedience.

9. 4. A worthy disposition doth not consist in perfection; which if we had it, there were lesse need of this Sacrament: but in a futableness of our affections to so holy an action; which futableness may consist with great imperfection.

Now it is required, First, that we renew our repentance, both generally for all our sinnes, and specially, for sinnes lately committed, and still cleaving to us, or to which wee are most subject.

Secondly, that wee stirre up in our selves an hunger and thirst after the grace of God in Christ, both for the pardoning and mortifying of those sinnes, and for the amendment and reforming of our life.

Thirdly, that we doe likewise stirre up our faith to lay hold upon the promises of the Gospell.

Fourthly, that with all humility, reverence, and devotion, we receive this Sacrament, as the seale of grace, and of Gods promises.

CHAP. XXIX.

Of Discipline.

Quest. 1. V V Hether is a singular use of the Key of binding and correcting necessary to some persons in particular, when the anger of God, and the exclusion out of heaven is denounced in the Ministry of the Word to all impenitent persons?

I. A. I. It is not necessary for those that have tender consciences, and that are provoked to mature repentance by the ordinary preaching of the Word. For seeing nothing but due repentance, ought directly to be intended in discipline, it would be in vaine to seeke that by many waies, which may be obtained by fewer; so the particular of the Key to loose or absolve is not necessary, where there appears to be a generall efficacie.

2. 2. Because of the hardnesse and deceitfulness of heart, which is to be found in many sinners, a personall application of those things which tend to the correction of sinne, in the exercise of Discipline, is necessary for the shaking of security, and for the working a serious care of sanctification.

3. 3. Because the ordinance of Christ concerning the personall exercise of Discipline, although primarily and directly it tend to the recovering of one fallen, and yet secondarily, and indirectly it tend to the edification of others, by removing the hinderances, and by promoting the helps; therefore the exercise of this Discipline is necessary also in respect of them.

Quest. 2. What kinde of sinne is it, which requires the use of this Discipline?

4. A. 1. Not those infirmities which are common, almost to all Beleevers; for the singular care, or reforming of those, neither can be expected, nor exacted of them who are subject to the same, or like imperfections.

5. 2. Not onely those hainous offences, which are wont to be restrained by humane Laws: because Ecclesiasticall discipline is part of the administration of the kingdome of Christ, and therefore is of a spirituall nature, and requireth more perfection then what is contained in civill honesty.

6. 3. Not onely personall injuries which make dissentions among the members of the Church, and turne away others from the communion of it, because there be other sins which doe as much or more require correction.

7. 4. The proper and adequate object of this censure, is a scandall given by a brother, Matt. 18. 15. Lev. 19. 17. Galat. 6. 1. for the ende of Discipline is, by the correction of the Sinner to take away scandalls, that Beleevers may goe on, without offence, in a course of holinesse, that others may be drawne on to the same way, offences that doe hinder, being removed.

Quest. 3. Whether the correction of a scandall ought to begin with a private admonition?

8. A. 1. It ought to beginne alwaies with admonition, because the declaration of the fault is the first meane of amendment, and the genuine cause of repentance.

9. 2. In private scandals, their ought alwaies private admonition to goe before, Mat. 18. 15. For the fame of our brother is not without necessitie to bee wronged, nor his minde to be prouoked, nor the scandall to be amplified, nor, in a word, the suspicion of calumny and defamation rashly to be runne upon.

10. 3. In publike and notorious scandals it is not necessarie to begin with private admonition, 1 Tim. 5. 20. For the medicine ought to have a proportion to the disease for the curing of which it is applied.

Quest. 4. Whether ought every one that gives a Scandall to be admonished by every Beleever?

11. A. 1. In Churches well instituted and ordered, this duty may and ought to be performed by every one to his brother upon occasion. For all are enjoyned to doe it by Christ.

12. 2. In such Churches which labour of the want of discipline, and confusion, it is not alwaies necessary, that hee against whom the fault is committed, doe admonish the offender, because he should often begin that which hee hath no power to performe.

13. 3. The precept therefore of solemnly admonishing our brother, doth then onely binde, where there is some hope that the admonition, either mediately, or immediately, will be of force to take away the Scandall. For the meane is so farre good, as it makes for the attainement of its end.

14. 4. Yet all men are bound in some manner to signifie, that the Scandall given, doth seriously out of Conscience toward God, displease them, Ephes. 5. 11. For charitie, and zeale of Gods glory doth thus farre binde all the godly.

Quest. 5. Whether after a private admonition rejected, the matter ought straight way to be brought to the Church?

15. A. In no sort: For the second degree of correction, according to Christs Ordinance, is to take one or two with us, and to urge the admonition in their presence. Mat.

18. 16.

First, because by this testimony, the admonition is confirmed, and made stronger, either with the brother to be corrected, or the Church that is afterward to correct.

Secondly, because by this meanes charity is better kept, when

when we endeavour the amendment of our brother, with as little infamy as may be.

Quest. 6. Is it enough to admonish an offending Brother, once privately, and once before witnesses?

16. A. He ought in this manner so long to be admonished, till he doe either manifest his repentance, or impenitencie, Matt. 18. 15, 16, 17. If he shall heare thee; If hee shall not heare thee, if he shall not heare them.

Quest. 7. How is he to bee brought before the Church, that carries himselfe stubbornly?

17. A. In this order, that first the matter bee brought to those that represent the whole company, and who ordinarily have the direction and administration of publike businesses committed to them. Tell the Church.

Quest. 8. Whether ought he to be presently excommunicated, who carries himselfe stubbornly to the Church?

18. A. 1. In notorious crimes, publikely knowne, the Apostle seemes so to judge, 1 Cor. 5. 2.

19. 2. In other sinnes we must proceed with much patience to this last remedie.

20. 3. Therefore a suspension from the use of the Supper, and like priviledges of the Church, which is nothing but a degree of excommunication, and therefore is called by many, The lesser Excommunication; ought, though not from any singular Precept of Christ, yet from the nature and equitie of the thing it selfe, to goe before, and to bee continued for some time, where the Scandall is such that it may beare delay.

Quest. 9. Who have the power of Excommunication?

21. A. 1. The right and power is properly in that Church whose Member the person to be excommunicated is, Mat. 18 1 Cor. 5.

For first, it belongs to them to cast out of communion, to whom it belongs to receive into communion, but the Church properly doth admit all the Members into society and communion.

Secondly, they are to purge out the leaven, whose duty it is to keepe the lumpe pure; but so is the whole Society.

Thirdly, they are to judge of the cause of denying communion, who are to deny communion; but this belongs to the whole Church.

Fourthly, without the consent of the Church no excommunication can effectually attaine its end; because the deniall of communion, is a free act of the communitie.

22. 2. Yet ordinarily the administration of the censure pertaineth to the Governours of the Church, of whose office the exercise of Discipline is not the least part.

23. 3. It belongs to Assemblies and Synods, when any difficultie doth arise, by common consent to declare and discern who are to be excommunicated.

Quest. 10. What is the Pastor to doe, when as a fit Presbytery is wanting, or the people will not consent to a just Excommunication?

24. A. The solemn manner of proceeding may be omitted: yet a good Pastour, with the rest of the faithfull Members, ought by all meanes to endeavour, that the essence of the thing be so farre observed, as that holy things bee not given to dogs, and swine, Mat. 7. 6. And that all publicke Scandals be publickly reprov'd.

Quest. 11. Whether may whole Churches, or the Members of another Church be Excommunicated?

25. A. 1. They cannot properly be excommunicated.

First, because every Church hath a communion in it selfe, out of which it can no more be cast, then out of it selfe.

Secondly, because the power of excommunicating flows from some Superiority, but all Churches are ordained by Christ, with the same equall right.

Thirdly, because the Members of one Church, are neither subject to the regiment of another, nor doe immediatly pertaine to the communion of others, but by meanes of the communion of their owne Church.

26. 2. Yet they may for manifest Heresies or crimes be condemned, forsaken, rejected, which hath an analogy with Excommunication.

Quest. 12. How farre doth Excommunication separate him that is Excommunicated from communion of Saints?

27. A. 1. By the nature of the Sentence it separates from all communion which is proper to the Saints, and to be exercised cised among themselves mutually as they are such. For it declareth a man to be stubbornly impenitent, and so to be accounted of as an Heathen or a Publican. Mat. 18,

29. A. 2. In regard therefore of externall and brotherly communion, it separates absolutely, but not in regard of internall, except in case of fall and plenary impenitency.

30. 3. Therefore Ecclesiasticall communion ought to be denied to a man lawfully Excommunicated: and all such voluntary and free conversation, whereby singular propension of minde to another, and approbation of his state is wont to be declared, ought to be avoyded, 1 Cor. 5. 11. 2 Thess 3. 14. but not that Politicall, or Oeconomical communion, which hath a bond of obligation from the Law of Nature; such as is between Husband and Wife, Parents and Children, Masters and Servants. Magistrates and Subjects.

Quest. 13. Whether are all that professe repentance, to be received into the favour and communion of the Church againe?

31. A. A verball profession of repentance doth not suffice: because the holy Ordinances of God might be exposed to the scorne of the wicked; and the whole vertue of an Ecclesiasticall action should be placed in an externall forme. Such signes therefore are required, which in the judgement of Charitie, shew true and serious repentance, and doe make it very probable.

CHAP. XXX.

Of the manner of Worship. And first, of preparation to Worship

Quest. 1. Whether Preparation is necessary before Worship?

1. A. To solemn Worship, Preparation is necessary, Prov. 24. 27. Exod. 19. 10, 11. & 30. 20. Eccl. 5. 1. 2.

First, because an apt disposition is required in the subject of it, that it may be capeable of the good that is to be com.

municated to it. For what ever is received, is received according to the measure of the receiver.

Secondly, because we, through the infirmity and corruption of nature are untoward to every good, Jer. 4. 3.

Thirdly, because the excellent dignity of those things which belong to God, requireth more then ordinary care, Ephes. 5. 1. 2.

Fourthly, because the Devill useth all his endeavour, to turne our mindes, either from the worship of God, or the due, and fruitfull manner of performance, Luke 8. 12.

Quest. 2. In what things doth this Preparation consist?

2. A. 1. There is first of all required a consideration of the nature of the duty we are going about, and of those things which belong to it, Eccles. 5. 2. Bee not rash; Let not thy heart be hasty, that is, doe nothing inconsiderately, Acts 10. 1. I Thess. 2. 13.

3. 2. There is required a right intencion of seeking that, to which that speciall worship in which we are to be exercised, doth of its owne nature tend. For example, Hee that comes to the Sermon, not to learne what is the will of God, and to submit himselfe to it, and to put on those affections, and to follow that way, to which hee is called by the Word of God; it is no marvell, if such a one goe from the Sermon, such a one as he came, or worse: For he may obtaine that for which he came, as the approbation of men; it may be also some kind of delight, and light speculation, Esa. 3. 31, 32. but not that the Word should become to him a savour of life to life, but rather a savour of death to death, 2 Cor. 2. 16. A profession of this sort very good, but hypocriticall, example we have, Jer. 42. 3. 5. 9. 20.

4. 3. It is required that repugnant thoughts and affections, not onely those which are unlawfull, but such as are at other times lawfull, and may be an impediment, be laid aside, and put away, as much as can be, Ex. 3. 5. I Pet. 2. 1. Mat. 13. 22. I Pet. 1. 13.

5. 4. Lastly it is required that we bring an honest, and good heart, Luke 8. 15.

CHAP. XXXI.

Of reverence, of Worship.

Quest. 1. Whether and how farre is religious reverence to be given to those things which belong to Worship, as to the words of the Scripture, the holy Bible, the Water of Baptisme, the Bread and Wine in the Lords Supper?

1. A. 1. Reverence or honor is in a three fold sense called Religious; either, First, because it flowes from Religion, as the proper act of it, containing in it that vertue and direct relation which is in religious Worship: or, Secondly, only because it is commanded by Religion, as something agreeable with the nature of it: or, Thirdly, because it is both commanded by Religion, and hath a foundation in the relation of something, or person, to Religion, or holy Worship. In the first sense, Religious worship is due to God alone. In the second way, that civill honour which is commanded in the fifth Precept, and is especially due to Superiours, is rightly called religious. In the third sense, it is due to all those things which properly belong to worship.

2. 2. In holy use, although divine honour is not to be given to holy things; nor are those things to be accounted as the next objects of that Worship, by which the honour is carryed to God; Nor lastly, is there any worship of an inferior degree to be given to them: all which are the errors of Popish Doctors, while they worship the Eucharist as God, Images as the next termes, though not the last of religious worship; and the holy Vtensels with a religious observance: yet that honour which is due to God, cannot in a due manner be given to him, unlesse those instruments of his worship be used with singular reverence, because of that neere connection and relation, that is betweene an action, and the instrument of the action.

3. 3. Out of holy use, because wee have no external thing consecrated by Divine Institution, and placed in a religious religious state, in that manner, that the Arke, Altar, Temple, and such like were under the Old Testament, therefore no positive honour that is religious, is due to any externall thing. Yet there is a privative kind of reverence, which necessarily followeth of the religious honour of God: whereby heed is to be taken, that nothing be done to such things as belong to Worship out of holy use, by meanes whereof that reverence which ought to be observed in holy use, or worship, may be diminished. Such is the care whereby heed is taken, that the words or phrases of Scripture be not mingled with jests: that the Bible be not trampled upon, or applied to any use which hath a shew of basenesse, or unseemlinesse, that the Bread or Wine left after the Communion, bee not exposed to any contumelious use, &c.

CHAP. XXXII.

Of Devotion.

Quest. I. IN what things doth Devotion consist?

1. A. 1. To Devotion it is required, that a man have a firme and absolute intention of dedicating himselfe to God, and his worship; so that he can be altered from this purpose by no inticements, nor dangers. In this respect, Devotion is the Fortitude of Religion: and from it comes that patience and constancie, which is proper to Religion, and the duties of it. It holds proportion with the wicked devotion mentioned, Acts 23. 12.

2. 2. It is required that men rest not themselves contented in any degree of godlinesse, through luke warmenesse, sloth, and dulnesse, but that they aspire to the highest perfection. In this respect Devotion is the zeale of Religion. Apoc. 3. 15, 16, 19.

3. 3. It is requisite that a man have a complacencie, delight, and joy in the exercise of Religion, Esa. 58. 13. Psal. 122. 2. Esa. 12. 3. 1 Chro. 29. 9. This is the spirituall pleasure of Religion.

4. 4. It is required that he be often and much in the same exercises, Acts 10. 3. Luke 2. 37. Psal. 119. 164. This is the diligence of Religion.

5. 5. It is required that in those exercises he have his thoughts and affections present and intent as much as he can, without wandring and distractions of minde, Acts 16. 14. Ephes. 6. 18. 1 Tim. 4. 15.

6. 6. It is required that he have a tender Conscience, whereby he is holy affected according to the speciall occasion that happens in any exercise. 2 Reg. 22. 9

7. 7. It is required lastly, that with all his endeavour, he order his life, as becomes those which worship God, 2 Tim. 2. 19.

Quest. 2. By what meanes may this Devotion through the grace of God, be attained by us?

8. A. 1. It is necessary first of all, that wee keepe our hearts perpetually, as much as may bee, free from those thoughts and affections, which are repugnant to Religion, and the heat of it.

9. 2. It is also necessary, not onely to converse frequently with God in the exercise of holinesse; but also in the interim, while we are doing other things, to keepe in some sort that heat, which we get in holy duties; and by renewing to continue those holy thoughts, which wee found in our selves. He which doth other wise, his life is spent in weaving and unweaving the same web, without progresse to any perfection.

10. 3. It is necessary also, that now and then wee lift up our hearts to God, upon all occasions, using those short Prayers which are called Ejaculations, and may be put up to God in all places and times. Nor is it unprofitable, especially for them that are more weake, to have Verses chosen out of the Psalmes, which they finde most effectually upon their hearts, that by them they may occasionally lift up their mindes to God,

11. 4. It is very profitable for us to exercise our selves to take an occasion from common things, by the thought and discourse of the minde, to arise up to spirituall meditation. Whereof Christ hath left us divers examples in the History of the Gospell.

12. 5. It is profitable to have certaine times appointed for private exercisef of Piety, and to observe them not out of custome, but seriously to spend them for the increafe of godlineffe. And concerning those although no certaine rule can be given, yet by the common instinct of all Christians, the morning and evening sacrifice is commended to all.

13. 6. It much availes to make a choise of those with whom we converse familiarly, that they be such, from whom wee may come away not cooled, but stirred up in the care of Pietie.

14. 7. It helpes also not a little, to call our selves now and then to account before God, of our progresse and defects in the study of holinesse.

CHAP. XXXIII.

Of the Lords Day.

Supposing those things which are spoken of this point in the Marrow.

Quest. 1. VVhat is the difference betweene the observation of the Lords Day, and of those times which upon other dayes are destinated to Divine Worship?

1. A. 1. Other times are appointed by man, but this day by the Lord.

Secondly, other times are not so much instituted, as chosen by prudent Counsell, according to the commodiousnesse of particular Churches: but the Lords day hath an accurate Institution.

Thirdly, other times are onely of a personall obligation, according to every ones opportunity: but the Lords day is of generall obligation, so that other businesses must give place to the observation of it.

Quest. 2. What things otherwise lawfull, are unlawfull on the Lords Day?

2. A. 1. All those employments which doe notably hinder a man from attending upon God and his worship, either publicke, or private, are regularly, and ordinarily unlawfull, from the end of this institution.

3. 2. Here is no difference betweene a mechanickall or corporall worke, which is properly called servile, and that which is called liberall. For though servile workes be by Name forbidden, yet Synecdochically all works are meant, which are repugnant to that end which is aimed at, in the sanctifying of the seventh day.

4. 3. Those which belong to pleasure and recreation, if they be such as hinder from attending on God, are no lesse forbidden then ordinary labours.

5. 4. To make journeis which tend not to the better performing of Gods worship, but either to the dispatching of common businesse, or to pleasures, are no lesse disagreeing to the observation of this day, then to spend the same time in servile businesse, or following our delights.

6. 5. Faires, Markets, and laborious acts of traffique, by the same reason with dayly labours and occupations, are repugnant to the sanctification of this day.

7. 6. Those things which pertaine to courts and judicatories, are of the same nature.

8. 7. Not onely externall employments about those things, but solicitous cares about them are forbidden.

Quest. 3. What causes are there which may excuse such occupations, that they may lawfully be done, upon the Sabbath day?

9. A. I. Present, or imminent necessitie, which is neither fained, nor sought of purpose, but is put upon us by the providence of God, Luke 14. 5.

10. 2. This necessitie is, First, of the meane to the end, not respecting gaine, or pleasure, as the end; but most properly the avoyding of some discommodity falling out unexpectedly. This doth not therefore justifie them who accounting the lesing of gaine as a losse, follow their ordinary employments, that they may not suffer an occasion of gaine to passe.

Secondly, It is evident necessitie, not such as is conceived of an uncertaine conjecture. It makes not therefore for Husbandmen, &c, who in the time of Harvest, spend this day day in labour, because they feare danger by delay.

11. 3. This necessitie is to be understood, not onely as it respects our selves, but also as it respects our neighbour: so Physicians, Chyrurgeons, Apothecaries, are lawfully imployed in helping the sick; and as it respects the Common-wealth: so in warre many servile workes become necessary.

12. 4. Because the necessitie of some meane, in which the labour of Servants or Subjects is required by their Superiours, cannot be judged by them; therefore if laborious works be enjoyned them beside what is usuall, which may have their necessitie, they are to be accounted by them as necessary.

13. 5. Workes of mercy are to bee accounted both as worthy of necessity, and pietie.

14. 6. Servile workes which are necessary to the worship of God, are not onely lawfull, because of their necessitie, but by reason of the worship it selfe, of which they are adjuncts.

15. 7. The offices of common honesty, whereby the ordinary and modest delight of life is cheerished, and exercises of piety are not hindered, are necessary in respect of the end, and free in their owne nature: because the Ordinances of God which tend to the furthering of spirituall life doe not oppose the temporall. But sumptuous preparations for banquets, cannot consist with the due rest of this day.

16. 8. Some little and short occupation about temporall things upon occasion may be so directed, and tempered with pious meditations, that it may be no hinderance, but rather a furtherance of the duties of Religion. And indeede such a businesse in such a manner, doth not withdraw the minde from Gods worship.

Quest. 4. What things are required to the sanctification of this day?

17. A. 1. The exercises of worship which are dayly, must not be omitted, yet they are not sufficient, but speciall duties must be added to them, Numb. 28 6, 7, 8, 9, 10.

18. 2. Exercises of publike worship in a Church well constituted, and enjoying her libertie, ought to be held both before and after noone, Ibid. Psal. 92. 1. Acts 20. 7. And where solemne meetings are wanting, there every occasion to be laid hold one, to make up that defect as much as may be,

Act. 16. 13.

19. 3. These things which are necessarie to the receiving of due benefit by those exercises, both in the preparation before, and in the repetition following, because of the connexion which they have with the exercises themselves, are to be reputed as parts of them.

20. 4. A singular meditation of the workes of God in a religious way, doth singularly belong to the sanctification of this day, Psalm. 92.

21. 5. We are so to be employed in those exercises, that we may get spirituall refreshment thereby, by vertue of which we may be made the fitter to passe the rest of the week holly, Esa. 58. 13. Exod. 31. 13. Esa. 56. 2.

THE
OF THE DVTIES OF MAN
Towards his Neighbour.

CHAP. I.

Of Right.

THe Word Ius, signifying Right, is derived from the Latine Word Iussus, because it implies a Power of some Authority, commanding this or that to be done.

It is therefore taken :

First, For the Law commanding.

Secondly, For the Object and effect of Justice, or for the Action it selfe, prescribed and required by Law; and in this sense, we are said to give every man his Right.

Thirdly, For skill in the Law, according to that vulgar Saying, Ius est Ars Equi & Boni.

Fourthly, For the Power which any man hath, to doe this or that according to Law, in which sense, wee usually say, Such a man stands upon his Rights. And not unlike to this Acceptation, is the applying of the same Word, to denote some particular Priviledge granted to any man, either by Law or just Authoritie. Of which kind was that Ius trium Liberorum, among the Ancient Romanes.

2. The first and second Acceptation are onely Rationally, and not Really distinguished: For the same Rectitude is intimated in Both, but with a divers existence. It is first in the Law, as in the Efficient Cause and Rule: and secondly in the Action, as in the Effect, conformed to the Rule. In the third and fourth Acceptation, there is a Metonymia, of the Subject for the Adjunct, and of the Cause for the Effect.

This Word Right in its largest acceptation is divided into Divine, of which God is the Author.

Humance, of which Man is the Contriver.

3. Divine Right is divided into Right Naturall, and Right Positive:

4. Right Naturall is that which is apprehended to be fit to be done or avoided, out of the naturall instinct of Naturall Light; or that which is at least deduced from that Naturall Light by evident Consequence. So that this Right, partly consists of Practike Principles knowne by Nature, and partly of Conclusions deduc'd from those Principles.

5. The Divine Positive Right, is a Right added to the Naturall, by some speciall Revelation of God.

6. The Right Naturall, or Naturall Law, is the same, which usually is called the Eternall Law: but it is called Eternall, in relation to God, as it is from Eternity in Him; it is called Naturall, as it is ingrafted and imprinted in the Nature of man, by the God of Nature.

7. That Positive Right was in the minde of God from Eternitie, as well as the Naturall. But in respect it is not so easily apprehended by Humane Reason, therefore it is not usually termed, the Law Eternall.

8. The Naturall and Positive Divine Right differ in this, that the Positive is mutable and various, according to Gods good pleasure; for that which was heretofore in the Judaicall Church, is different from that which is in the Christian Church.

Church: but the right naturall is alwayes the same, and like it selfe, and for this reason also, it is called the Law eternall.

Quest. 1. Whether the Naturall law were not changed, when Abraham was commanded to kill his Sonne. And when the Israelites were permitted to take away the Egyptians goods?

9. A. 1. There was not in those cases a change of the law, nay not any dispensation properly so termed, but the mutation and change was in the matter, about which the law was conversant. For in the first instance, the life of the innocent, which was not subject to the power of Abraham, as the Principall cause, was subjected to him as the instrument of the command and good pleasure of God.

10. 2. In the latter instance, the goods of the Egyptians for Gods pleasure, who is the absolute Lord of all things; left off to be longer the goods of the Egyptians, and became proper to the Israelites: insomuch, that the Israelites taking them away, did not steale other mens goods, but assumed their owne.

Quest. 2. Whether the Law naturall is not changed, when a sword left with another, being demanded by the Owner to commit a murder with it, is not restored, nor ought by Right to be restored.

11. A. 1. The Right of returning any thing committed to a mans trust by the Owner, is not in this case quite changed, but it is stopt for a while and delaid by another more observable law, viz. of not committing murder.

12. Ans. 1. And somewhat like is the reason of prescription, or attaining any thing thereby: for by this law of prescription it comes to passe, that after some certaine time accomplisht, the action of recovering his owne goods from an unjust Possessor is denide to the true Owner. For the course of particular Right is stopt, for the sake of publike right and good, that so an infinite number of suites might be prevented. Nevertheless, the right and title to any thing is not so transferr'd in the Court of conscience for meere the forfeiture by prescription; for hee who wittingly and willingly detaines any thing of another mans against the will of the true Owner offends against the law of nature. Nor is this commanded by the law, but permitted onely.

Quest. 3. Whether it bee rightly said by Lawyers, that the Right naturall, or the Law of Nature is that, which Nature hath taught all living creatures.

13. A. 1. In brute creatures, the true nature of right, or law, hath no more place then it hath in plants, or things inanimate. For neither is there a reason distinguishing between good and evill, neither a will or choyce of one thing before another; nor lastly, any Justice at all in Brutes more then in things without all life.

14. 2. Neverthelesse in all things, there is an inclination, a power and operation, which is guided by certaine reason; for as much as concernes their nature and end. And in this respect, all things created are said to have a law prescribed unto them, which law or right remains passively onely in them, so that in respect to themselves, it is onely by similitude and some proportion termed a law or right; Psalme 148. 6. Iob 38. 10, 11, 12. Ier. 33. 20. 25.

15. 3. But in regard, there are some inclinations and operations, which are common both to man and beast, and not to plants; and other inanimate things, of which sort are the safegard and defence of life and liberty, the coition of male and female, &c. The apprehension of which things, brute beasts have by instinct of nature, as man by the Iudgement of his reason, therefore in a certaine speciall proportion, wee acknowledge the law of nature in brutes, rather then in plants and things inanimate.

16. 4. And hence is it, that the sinne of any man offending against these naturall inclinations, which are common to himselfe and beasts, even out of this very comparison is exceedingly aggravated, and rightly too, &c. Iud. 10. Esa. 1. 3. Ier. 8. 7. Rom. 1. 26. 2 Tim. 3. 3.

Quest. 4. Whether the Law of Nations bee the same, with the Law of nature?

17. A. 1. The law of nations, as it is taken for the law which all nations use, comprehends under it, not onely the law of nature, but also the positive law. So servitude is by Lawyers said to bee by the law of nations, and yet is evident dent, that servitude was brought in by custome and the positive law. And the same is the reason in division of possessions, and the like.

18. 2. If the law of nature bee taken, for that law which is introduc'd by the common consent and custome of all nations, it then participates a certaine middle nature betweene the law naturall; and that positive law which is peculiar to this or that nation. It hath thus much common with the naturall law; that it is every where received without any certaine authority or promulgation, and wheresoever any thing is done contrary, it is censur'd of all men to bee ill done. And it hath thus much common with the positive law, that it may bee changed or abrogated by the common consent of them, whom it may concerne. A division of things is by the law of nations: Neverthelesse by the common consent it may upon just grounds bee somewhere enacted, that almost all possessions should bee in common. It is likewise the law of Nations, that in time of warre the Embassadors of each side should bee peacefully entertained, because it is supposed they treat of peace, which is the end of warre: or at least to speake in their owne behalfe, which to any guilty party is not denied: & yet upon just cause, and by the common consent of both parties waging warre, this law may bee abrogated.

Quest. 5. Whether the Precepts of the law of nature be rightly stated. To live honestly, Not to hurt another, To give every man his due.

19. A. 1. This enumeration is somewhat confus'd and imperfect. For first, here is nothing mentioned of the worshipping of God, which neverthelesse is a principle of the law of nature. 2. To live honestly (as this phrase is usually taken by Philosophers and Divines) is the same thing, as to follow vertue. For vertue is honesty, or the honest good, as it is distinguished from the good profitable or pleasant, and in the same sense it is called the absolute good, or the iust good. Therefore to live honestly (if it bee taken in this sense) is nothing else then to live justly: In somuch, that when to live honestly, is called a precept of the law, nothing else is meant, but that the law prescribes, we should live according according to the law, and so it is as much as to say nothing at all, because in that saying they expresse the same thing by it selfe. But if this phrase bee sounderstood (as usually among the vulgar it is) for the esteeme and credite which may bee gotten among men, then it containes no certaine precept, but that every man should diligently endeavour his owne credite and esteeme in the vaine and inconstant opinion of the multitude. 3. What is meant by the injunction not to hurt another, must bee expounded by the particular precepts of the law; for in that wee doe our duty towards any man, wee hurt him not: But if wee doe not that which is our duty, wee doe hurt him, because wee give him not his due, though perhaps, for some reasons to our selves knowne; wee thinke wee have thereby deserved well at his hands. This therefore is too confus'd a precept. 4. To give every man his owne, is nothing else then to give every man right; (that is,) to doe what is right and just: Therefore to live justifiably, and according to law, is rather an injunction of the law in particular, then a precept of the law in generall.

Quest. 6. Whether that precept bee of the law of nature, what you would have done to your selfe, doe that to another: what you would have not done to your selfe, doe not that to another.

20. A. 1. This precept is naturall, and indeed Divine Mat. 7. 12. Luc. 6. 31. Yet in this it is to bee observ'd: First, that this law doth not include the whole compasse of the naturall law in generall; but that part onely, in which our duty betweene man and man is comprehended. 2. That our will whatsoever it bee, may not bee the square and rule of the performance of our duty to others, (for under that pretence, hee which would have any base thing done to himselfe, should doe in like manner to others: Hee which would himselfe bee made drunke, should make others drunke; hee which would himselfe bee inticed to Lewdnesse, should entice another to Lewdnesse: ) but our Naturall will being well disposed, and not tainted with any passion or perturbation, by which wee truly and considerately wish good unto our selves. 3. That it bee not enjoyed, that wee doe all those those things to others which wee in particular desire to bee done to our selves, (for so Masters should obey their owne servants, and cease to bee Masters) but the same things by way of proportion, or supposition; as if indeed wee our selves were in the case of them, from whom wee expect those duties. The Roote of Justice and the whole foundation of Equity (saith Lactantius in his Epit. cap. 3. is comprehended in this: Have a care, you doe not that to another, which you would not willingly have done to your selfe: If it bee irksome, to suffer an injury, whosoever he bee, that doth one, is unjust. Doe but transfer what thou thinkst in thy selfe to the person of another, and what thou judgest of another person to thy selfe, and you will soone perceive that you your selfe are unjust if you hurt another, as another if hee hurt you. If wee ruminat on these things, wee shall bee sure to retain our innocence, in which, Justice, as in it's first step, is contained; for the first step of Justice is, Not to hurt your Neighbour, but readily to doehim all the good you may. Alexander Severus (as Lampidrius relates it,) did oftentimes proclaime this, which hee had observ'd from some Jewes or Christians, and himselfe did approve, nay and commanded it pnbkely to bee proclaimed by a Common cryer when hee corrected any offender, Doe not that to another, which you would not have done to your self; which sentence hee so much affected, that hee commanded it to bee written in his Pallace, and other publique workes.

Quest. 7. What proportion the Civill Law, holds with the Law of Nature.

21. 1. The Civill Law is, that which every City or Society of men enacts currant for it selfe. And such a kind of Law is not onely peculiar to the Romanes, but also to the Athenians, English, or any else, who have no respect to the Roman Law.

22. 2. This Civill Law in as much as it is Right is derived from the Law of Nature; for that is not Law which is not just and right. and that in morality is called Right, which accords with right practicall reason, and Right practicall is the Law of Nature.

23. 3. This Civill Law therefore is deriv'd from the Law of Nature, either as a special conclusion inferr'd from a generall proposition, or as a speciall determination and application of a generall Axiom.

24. 4. That Law which is derived from the Naturall Law, onely by way of conclusion, if the consequence bee good, hath it's whole strength from the Law of Nature, as the Conclusion hath it's force from the premised propositions; but that which is derived from the Law of Nature, by way of determination and application, is in part a new constitution: Even as every species hath it's owne proper forme and essence, besides that which is actually comprehended in the Genus.

25. 5. Seeing then, that as well in conclusions as determinations, the Reason of man, can onely imperfectly judge, nay, and is often therein cozened; hence it must needs follow, that all humane Constitutions are of necessity liable to imperfection, errour, and injustice: This the Authours of the Romane Law confesse of their owne Lawes. It is impossible, that a reason should bee given of all things that are enacted not to all men, nor of all the Lawes, and it is proved in innumerable cases, that there are many things received in the Civill Law for the publike good, which are somewhat contrary to a disputative reason. Ad leg. Aquil. f. 51.

26. 6. The imperfection of the best Civill Law consisteth in this.

First, In regard it containes not in its compasse the whole Law of Nature, but so much of it, onely as such or such men have approved and thought applicable to their owne manners.

Secondly, in respect it hath no eye at all upon the inward affections, but onely upon the outward Actions; for it doth not suppress absolutely all vices, but those onely, which may seeme likely to disturbe the peace and quiet of the Common-wealth, neither doth it enjoyne all acts of all vertues, but those onely, which are opposite to the inconvenient vices.

Thirdly, In that it doth not principally make good men, but onely good Subjects or Citizens.

Fourthly, In that upon occasion it may admit in many things of addition, detraction, or correction.

Quest. 8. What proportion the Morall Law beares to the Law of Nature.

27. A. 1. All the Precepts of the Morall Law, are out of the Law of Nature, except the determination of the Sabbath-day in the fourth Commandment, which is from the positive Law.

For first, wee meet with nothing in them, which concerneth not all Nations at all times, so that these Precepts doe not respect any particular sort of men, but even Nature it selfe.

Secondly, Nothing is contained in them, which is not very necessary to humane Nature, for the attaining of it's end.

Thirdly, there is nothing in them, which is not so grounded upon right reason, but it may bee solidly defended and maintained by humane discourse, nothing but what may bee well enjoyned from cleere reason.

Fourthly, All things contained in them, are for the substance approved, even of the more understanding sort of the Heathen.

Fiftly, They all much conduce to the benefit of Mankind in this present life, insomuch, that if all these Precepts were duly observed, there would bee no need of any other humane Lawes and Constitutions. Memorable is that sentence in Hierome ad Celant. de insti. Matrisam. Whether it bee Hieromes or Paulinus his, upon the Precepts of the second Table: All things saith hee, which you would have men doe unto you, even so doe yee unto them. Hee would have charity knit and maintained among us by mutuall good offices, so that the whole Law of God is nothing else, but the generall benefit of mankind. O the wonderfull mercy of the Lord! O the unspeakable goodnes of our God, Hee promisseth a reward unto us on the condition that wee love one another, that is, if wee mutually performe those things among our selves, which we our selves stand in need of; yet we with a proud and ingratefull heart resist his will, whose very command is our owne benefit.

Obiect. But it may bee objected, that if the Morall were the same with the Law of Nature, it had no need to bee promulgated mulgated either by voyce or writing for it would have beene writ in the hearts of all men by Nature.

28. A. 1. That to Nature upright, (i. e.) as it was in the State of innocency, there was no need of such a Promulgation. But ever since, the corruption of our Nature, such is the blindness of our understanding and perversnesse of our will and disorder of our affections, that there are onely some Reliques of that Law remaining in our hearts like to some dimme aged picture, and therefore by the voyce and power of God it ought to bee renewed as with a fresh pencill. Therefore is there no where found any true right practicall reason, pure and complete in all parts, but in the written Law of God, Psalme 119. 66.

Quest. 9. What proportion the Judiciall Law beares to the naturall.

29. A. 1. That is properly termed the Judiciall, which is about Judgements or any politick matters thereto belonging as that was called the Ceremoniall Law, which was about ceremonies, and that the Morall Law which was about manners and civill duties.

30. 2. That Judiciall Law which was given by Moses to the Israelites as proper onely to them, was a most exact determination and accomodation of the Law of Nature unto them, according to the particular condition of that people.

31. 3. To the Israelites therefore in respect of the use, it was of like nature, with other good Civill lawes among other Nations: but in respect of the Authority, which from God the immediate giver, it received, it was of much more perfection then any.

32. 4. This Law belongeth not to Christians under the title of a Law, especially obliging them, but onely by way of Doctrine, in as much as in it's generall Nature, or in it's due proportion to it, it doth alwayes exhibite unto us the best determination of the Law of Nature.

33. 5. This Judiciall Law is not accurately distinguished from the Morall and Naturall Law, in this, that the Morall Law was publisht by God with his owne voyce, and twice written in Tables of stone and expressed in the Decalogue,
But

But the Iudiciall Law without all this solemnity, was afterwards delivered to Moses, and by him to the people. For the Lawes of restoring things Lent or Trusted, of iust Weights and Measures, of paying the Labourer his hire, and many such as these, not expressly set downe in the Decalogue, are not more Iudiciall or lesse Morall, and naturall then the Commandement, Thou shalt not steale.

34. 6. Those Lawes were properly termed Iudiciall; which being not Ceremoniall, had some singular respect to the people of the Jewes, so that the whole reason and ground of them, was constituted in some particular condition of that Nation.

35. 7. But it is no certaine Rule (which is given by some) that wheresoever the reason of the Law is Morall, there the Law it selfe is Morall, as is seene in Levitico. II 44. For any speciall determination of a Law may be confirmed by a Generall Reason; and the nature of the Lawgiver being mutable hath some place too, and power in constituting Lawes which may be mutable. But where the speciall intrinsicall and proper reason of the Law is morrall, there it alwaies followes, that the Law it selfe must needs be Morrall.

36. 8. Those Lawes therefore which are usually reckoned among the Iudiciall, and yet in their Nature beare no singular respect to the condition of the Jewes more then of any other people. Those are all of the Morall and Naturall Law, which are common to all Nations.

CHAP. II.

Of Justice.

Quest. I. VV Hether Justice be rightly defined to be a Perpetuall and constant intent of giving to every man his due.

I. A. I. This is not a Definition of the Generall Justice, which denoteth the rectitude of Vertue, and so intimateth one and the same thing with Vertue in generall. For it is not essentiall to all Vertue, to respect onely what is precisely due to another : as appeares in the Vertue of Liberality.

2. Secondly, It is not any exact definition of any particular Iustice, because it doth not set downe the Proximum genus, next common nature of any speciall Vertue. For seeing that a perpetuall and constant Intent or Will, implies as much as a Habit, and being that betweene a Habit and any speciall Vertue, Vertue in generall is interposed as the Genus, the perpetuall and constant Will, or Intent, cannot be the immediate Genus of any speciall Vertue.

3. Thirdly, The Lawyers which maintaine that definition of Iustice, doe in it miserably contradict themselves: because, Iustice being every way of as large extent as Right, which is the Object of it, and they themselves allow three Acts of Right, viz. To live heneſtly, To hurt none, and to give every man his due; they doe neverthelesse here define Iustice by one of those acts onely, viz. To give every man his Right or due.

4. Fourthly, If this description of Iustice were thus corrected, that by a Perpetuall and constant Wil should be meant Vertue, and by every man, our Neighbour should be designed, and by His Right, the duties we ought to performe towards him, then it layeth downe the Iustice of the second Table, and is the same with our definition: viz. Iustice is a Vertue whereby we are inclinde to performe all due Offices to our neighbour.

Quest. 2. Whether Iustice hath alwaies some respect to another.

5. A. 1. All Vertue is after its manner ordaind to the uprightnesse and perfection of him that hath such a Vertue. Iustice therefore doth not so wholly respect another, but that it hath some eye upon him that exerciseth it.

6. 2. Besides, in that very respect, that a Iust man gives another his due; it needes must follow, that he make himselfe fit for the performance of that duty, and so also conserve his owne due to himselfe with moderation.

7. 3. Howsoever in respect there is some peculiar difficultie in the designing and procuring what is Right, and due to another another, which cannot arise in the search of our owne Good or Right; and because that Iustice doth not consist in the proper commodity of him that exerciseth it; but is necessarily extended to other: in these respects, I say, it is most properly defined by Another's Right.

Quest. 3. Whether Equitie, or that which the Civillians call Epieikeia, (i. e.) a Moderation of the strickt Law, doe truly participate of the nature of Justice?

8. A. 1. All Law which is the Rule of Iustice, hath alwaies a double end. The one Intrinsicall and Immediate, which the Lawgiver doth immediatly looke upon: the other Extrinsicall and mediate. So the Law of not opening some City gates in time of Warre, doth immediatly consider the not letting in of the Enemies, which is the immediate End: but it hath another remote End, to wit, the safegaurd and preservation of the Citie. Legall Justice as it is strictly taken, considereth onely the next immediate End: but this Epieikeia respects the more remote End.

9. 2. In respect he which makes the Law doth alwaies first and more principally looke at the remote End, therefore to speake absolutely and clearly, Epieikeia hath more in it of Legall Iustice, though taken in the strickt sense. For if it be certaine that upon admission of some part of the hostile Forces into the Citie, the safegaurd of the Citie, and Victory would follow, it is more just to open the Gates so farre, then to keepe them still shut.

10. 3. Legall Iustice taken strictly, considereth the words just as they are written, but Equity considereth the End, scope and intent of the Law, and so hath more Law in it, then Legall Iustice, when taken strictly.

11. 4. Legall Iustice strictly taken, as it is opposed to *Æ*quity, is iniquity. For being *Æ*quitie is a vertue, it is necessary that what ever hath a contrary nature to it, should be reckon'd among vices.

12. 5. In that Proverb, where Extreame Right is termed Extreame Wrong, Extreame Right is not to be understood, as if it signified an exact observance of the Law, but rather as it expresseth the Outside, Superficies, and as it were, the barke of the Law: (i. e.) that which the Words and Letter of the Law speake, in which sound and outside oftentimes lurketh extreame wrong.

13. 6. Therefore it is the best Justice, so to stick to the words of the Law, that we be still ready to receive some further direction from the intent of the Lawgiver according to the equity of Justice.

14. 7. But howsoever in many things which appertain to the publike good, it is not usually in the power of any Subjects to depart from the words of the Law: In which sence it is rightly said, The Law carries no meaning in it but the words.

Quest. 4. What is the difference between Distributive and Commutative Justice?

15. A. 1. Distributive Justice is, as it were, from the Whole to the Parts, but Commutative is as from Part to Part. For the distribution of Honours and Rewards proceeds from the whole, as the greater; but all Commutation considers the Equity of Right between the parts Commuting.

16. 2. In distributive Justice, that which is due is given not as if before it had been in the possession and command of him that receiveth, or as it had formerly bin conferr'd, but that now in equity it should be conferr'd: But in the Commutative Justice, that which is due is retorted to a man, as being now properly his owne Possession.

17. 3. In Distributive Justice, the proportion which one party beares to the other, in respect of the thing to be delivered, is directly observed. But in the Commutative nothing is directly observed, but the proportion betweene the thing received, and the thing returned.

Quest. 5. To which of these two species do Rewarding and Punishing belong?

18. A. 1. The conferring of those Rewards which are freely given according to due proportion, doth belong to distributive Justice: But the Collation of those Rewards which may of right be exacted, for some service performed, as out of condigne merits doth properly belong to Commutative Justice: Because in this case the proportion and equality betweene that which is bestowed, and that which is received, is still considered. But punishing, in regard it alwaies deales about about some injury offer'd, that it may be punished with due and answerable punishment, it therefore belongeth rather to the Commutative then the distributive Justice. But because this Commutation is compelled for the most part, and is brought about by a Counter-passion (as they call it) not any answerable or equall action; it is therefore most properly refer'd to the singular species of corrective Justice, which is really distinguish'd from commutative Justice, properly so called.

Quest. 6. What is the difference between Civill and Criminall Justice?

19. A. 1. Civill Justice in its punishing doth principally aime at the injustice of the thing, but Criminall Justice in its punishing doth principally aime at the Injustice of the Person.

20. 2. Injustice sometimes is comprehended onely in the thing done, the action, or the worke it selfe; but sometimes not onely in the thing done, or action, but in the intent of the Doer. If the Action onely, or Thing done be unjust, without any appearance of injustice in the intention of the Doer, then that Justice whereby this injustice is punished, is to be termed Civill. But if not onely the Action, but the Intention be found to be uniuust, then in regard there is a crime comes in to be punished, the Justice whereby such iniustice is punished, in as much as it hath a Crime for its Object, is rightly stiled Criminall.

21. 3. Hence it is, that Civill sutes in Law, are appointed for the prosecution of the thing, and so are called Reall; but criminall suits were intended for Punishment, proceeding from the demerit and obligation of the crime, and thence are called Personall.

22. 4. Hence it is, that when any private commodity of the Party wronged is aimed at, it may be called a Civill sute, But when the sute is, that punishment may be given to the party offending, and that if any Fine or Mulf doe thence follow, it fall to the publike Trafurie, and not to the party of-fended, it is then called a Criminall sute.

23. 5. Moreover hence it is, that in a Civill cause a man may be cast, as guilty of iniustice, without all scandall to himselfe, in respect there appeared not any ill intent; But injustice in a criminall cause beares alwaies with it an ill intent, in which is evidently seene the nature of an offence.

24. 6. Neverthelesse, although these two differ in the whole Genus, yet they may meet in one and the same cause, as in case of some dammage offered by open violence, where the sute aimes at both the thing, and the punishment.

CHAP. III.

Of Revenge, or Vengeance.

Quest. 1. TO what Species of Justice belongeth Revenge?

1. A. 1. Revenge or Vengeance (whereby faults are punished according to their deserts) is sometimes taken for the Act of the Iudge, who by publike authority may lawfully execute it: sometimes for the Act of a private man, whereby he seekes of the Iudge that vengeance may be executed according to Law: sometimes for the Act of a private man, whereby he himselfe punisheth his enemy.

2. 2. Vengeance in the Iudge is not an Act of distributive Justice, because there is not any distribution of Goods, and evill things are not properly disposed by the Iudge, as if they were things to bee distributed. It hath neverthelesse some likenesse with distributive Justice, in regard more grievous offences are more grievously punished, and lighter more lightly.

3. 3. Vengeance in the Iudge, if you take the thing in it selfe, is in some sort an act of Commutative Justice.

First, Because of the equality which is considered between the offence and the punishment.

Secondly, Because that which is due out of precedent merit, is by that conferred.

Thirdly, Because the Common-wealth recovereth its own credit as much as may be out of the parity of Restitution.

Fourthly, Because Vengeance as much as may be, maketh the partie injur'd who suffered the wrong, equall to the other Citizens, in respect of the immunity from that wrong.

4. 4. The seeking revenge from a Iudge, in a private person, is sometimes an act of commutative Iustice: As for example. He who is much wronged by any in his credit, and is to stand upon his credit with other men, insomuch that hee may not exercise his function as long as his credit is tainted, is bound by that commutative Iustice whereby he stands engaged to others, to seeke Revenge. And it is the like case when a man is offended by some great iniury, or knows any other to be offended by one whose amendment can by no other means then by suffering vengeance be expected. For it behoveth Iustice to have a care, that the Common-wealth be not full of pernicious men.

5. 5. But the seeking of Revenge when it is not necessary for any publike good, nor for the amendment of the delinquent, nor for the immunity of the party offended, is by no means an act of Iustice. And the reason is, Because in such a case there is not any thing which doth legally engage any private man to seeke vengeance; nay, on the other side, there are many things which oblige him to forgive the injury.

6. 6. Private Revenge is unjust, especially in a publicke Society. Rom. 12. 17. & 13. 4 1 Pet. 2. 14. The first Reason is, Because to take vengeance upon another mans offence, belongs onely to him who is Superiour in his power: But all private men are by Right equall.

Secondly, Because Vengeance is an Act of Iudicature, and no man is a competent Iudge in his owne cause: which indeed is the reason too, that he which desires revenge seekes it not rightly, unlesse he desire it with this condition, that his cause being heard, it shall be thought fit by the Iudge.

Thirdly, Because a private man cannot by himselfe set any limits to his revenge. For seeing that in the Vindication of other mens injuries, these three things ought to be considered both by the Law and Magistrate.

That the Delinquent punished may be thereby amended, Rom. 13. 4.

That the example of his punishment may make others better, Deut. 19. 20.

That there may be henceforth more security to the party offended, and to others, Exod. 21. 18. Rom. 13. 4. 1 Tim.

 2. 2. He that taketh private Revenge doth not attaine to any one of these. For he doth more and more provoke his Adversary: he gives a scandalous example to others, and draws an endless vexation upon himselfe, and others.

Fourthly, Because vengeance is proper to God, Deut. 25.
 35. Rom 12. 16 Heb. 10. 30. and therefore not to be undertaken by any, but those to whom by God it is committed, and their Vindication is the Vengeance of the Lord, Numb.

31. 2. 7. 7. Publike Revenge, whether it be exercised by a Magistrate, or sought by a private man, if it proceed out of Envy, Hatred, Thirst of blood, or Cruelty, or if by any other meanes it be tainted in the impulsive, formall or finall cause, doth in that respect become private and unlawfull.

Quest. 2. Whether Vengeance may be lawfully taken upon those that are free from fault?

8. A. 1. Vengeance in its proper nature is a punishment:
 and all just punishment doth essentially and formally respect some antecedent Crime, as the effect doth its compelling cause, or as the adjunct doth its proper subject, or any like; or proportionate thing, respects the rule to which it is like, and from which its takes its measure; or as the correcting act respects the object to be corrected, and therefore it can have no place where there was no precedent crime.

9. 2. Yet there is something like revenge, which by way of Medicine, and as it may be necessary, either to prevent future crimes, or encourage Vertue, may be exercised, though no singular crime proceed. For as wee cut a Veine for the health and safeguard of the heart, so some certaine externall conveniences are to be denied to some private men, as occasion shall setve, either for the prevention of greater inconveniences, or the procuring of some greater good. So the Leprous man is denied publike commerce, and private conversation with others, and yet Leprosie is no crime.

10. 3. That sometimes Children do iustly suffer under the punishment of that fault which properly is their Parents it hence ariseth, because the children politically considered are as members of their Parents; for they so depend upon their

their Parents, that the Parents cannot bee punished without the dammage of the children. For even as the Father cannot suffer death, but the children must needs bee Orphans, so hee cannot bee deprived of his estate, but they must needs bee the poorer.

11. 4. That the Grecians (as the proverbe saith) are punish'd while the Captaines offend, (id est,) that Subjects sometime suffer for the faults of their Kings, is so, for some kind of participation in the fault, either by expresse consent, or by dissimulation, or for neglect of giving better advice.

12. 5. That there bee some Lawes that bind some to the punishment, who are guiltlesse of the fault, is either unjustly done, or else they are used by way of Medicine, or Example, and are not properly to bee termed punishments.

CHAP. IV.

Of Restitution.

Quest. 1. What is Restitution?

I. A. 1. Restitution sometimes signifieth the same thing, as to restore any thing, whether it bee out of Justice, or out of Charity, or Liberality, or Common duty; but among Divines and Lawyers, this word is more strictly taken to signifie an act of Justice, by which any injury or injustice done is repaired, and any man restored in the possession of what was his owne, but unjustly taken from him. And in the same sense, it is called a satisfaction, and requital.

2. 2. It is properly an act of Commutative Justice.

First, because requital ought to be made according to the equality of the thing, not the dignity of the person.

Secondly, because restitution is of some thing directly due.

Question 2. In what things hath this Restitution place.

3. A. 1. It doth most properly and primarily agree to externall and corporall things: But by some analogy it is rightly extended to internall, incorporall, and spirituall goods, and to those externall also which consist in honour and credit; that is to all those things, to which a man hath any title, for those we may reckon among his goods, as well as his externall and corporall riches.

Question 3. Whether it bee necessary that Restitution bee made.

4. A. 1. Restitution is in its owne nature necessary by the necessity of Precept; because the detaining of what doth properly belong to another man against his will, is an unlawfull action, a kind of theft, and is specially forbidden, Rom 13. 7. 8.

5. 2. Actuall Restitution is sometimes by accident not necessary: (viz.) when it is not in the power of him, that hath done the wrong, to make requital.

6. 3. A mind ready and willing to make Restitution, if it had power, is absolutely necessary. For neither is hee truly penitent for an injury done, who when hee may, will not satisfie for the same: neither is there the love of Justice, or charity towards his Neighbour in him, who hath not an intention of giving every man his due. And in this sense it is not ill said, That the crime is not remitted till the thing taken away bee restored.

Question 5. Who is bound to make Restitution?

7. A. 1. Every one who unjustly detaineth any thing of anothers, unjustly taken from him, whether it were taken upon trust, or by deceit: But yet there is a difference betweene trust and deceit in matter of Restitution; for hee who by deceit possesseth any thing of anothers, is absolutely bound to Restitution of the thing, and also of the losse thence acquired, and the gaine which by detention ceased: but hee, which detaineth a thing as committed to his trust, is not bound to a Restitution of that thing, which in his charge is lost without all fault of his, but onely of that, which by the use of it, hee himselfe hath gained, reserving still something in consideration of his owne industry.

8. 2. Every man who detaineth any thing lawfully received ceived beyond the appointed time, and before too, if he received it upon that condition, that if it were lost, it should not bee to the losse of the owner, but the receiver.

9. 3. Every man that hath unjustly damaged another, (id est) by violence, by deceit, fraud, or negligence.

10. 4. Not onely he who immediately offered the damage is bound to make Restitution, but also, (if the action whence the damage ariseth be unjust,) 6. sorts of persons.

First, He who either commanded or counsell'd the damage.

Secondly, He which maintaines any such act committed in his name.

Thirdly, He who consented, if so be his consent and connivance, shall be the impulsive causes of the unjust action.

Fourthly, He who so helped on, that he was wittingly and willingly a partner in such unjust action.

11. 5. He who did not hinder it, having power, and being in duty bound so to doe.

12. 6. He who discovereth it not, if his testimony be required by a Judge, or by the nature of the thing, or his owne conscience.

Question 5. What is to bee restored?

13. A. 1. The thing it selfe if it remaine, and there be no extraordinary impediment.

14. 2. The price or value of it, if it be either lost, or impaired by the fault of the detainer.

15. 3. That which another ought to have had as his owne.

Question 6. To whom is Restitution to bee made?

16. A. 1. To the true owner if he bee alive, and to bee found; Hebr. 5. 23. and 1 Sam. 12. 3. Hebr. 5. 11.

17. 2. To his lawfull Heire, or Deputy; Num. 5. 8.

18. 3. If after a diligent inquiry made after the true owner, or his heires, Neither can bee found, the Restitution then ought to bee made to God, bestowing the thing taken away eather upon the Godly, Num. 5. 8. or the Poore, Luc. 19. 8.

The first reasonis, because God is alwayes offended by that

that sin, which is committed against our Neighbour, therefore as farre as wee may, we are bound to make Restitution to God.

Secondly, The sincerity of our repentance before God, will not suffer us willingly to detaine that, which is unjustly got, which must all the while needs upbrad our crime unto us.

Thirdly, Wee ought so much the more to abound in workes of piety and charity, by how much wee have done the more wrong by injustice.

Question 7. What causes may excuse a man from Restitution?

19. A. 1. A free Remission of the debt made by him to whom it was due, but by no meanes compell'd neither by guile nor fraud, nor extorted through feare. Now this Remission is either expressed or else tacite and virtuall. This virtuall, tacite, implicite, or interpretative Remission then is, when from some probable signes we may guesse, that the damnified person would not have any Restitution made to him from such a person, or for such an injury. The will of parents, friends, or acquaintance may passe for such a Remission in some light matters.

20. 2. The disability of restoring, whether it be absolute, or onely such, that wee cannot restore any thing of lesse value, without farre greater losse.

21. 3. An equivalent Commodity bestowed upon the Creditour by way of satisfaction.

22. 4. If any inconvenience must necessarily arise out of the Restitution, to him to whom it ought to be made, it doth necessarily deferre the Restitution.

Quest. 8. Whether or no, and how hee ought to make Restitution, who against the 5. Commandement, hath injured another mans fame?

23. A. 1. If indeed any mans fame be notoriously blemished, if unjustly too, and not yet by any other meanes recover'd, then hee which did blemish it, is bound to make a Restitution of it.

24. 2. Fame is recover'd by recantation, and by satisfaction.

25. 3. Recantation is made either by confession that the same was falsely, or rashly, and unjustly tainted.

26. 4. Satisfaction is made: 1. In the same kind, when the defamer shall discreetly procure, that the defamation bee smothered, and upon all occasions speake honourably of the person defamed, and that without all signe of affectation. 2. In some certaine summe of money, to be paid (as the Judge or any honest man shall thinke fit) not properly in lieu of the same, which can by no meanes bee rated at any price, but for the dammages which may arise from the defamation, and to appease the wronged party if hee bee of such condition, that hee may with honour receive the money.

Quest. 9. Whether or no, and how hee ought to make Restitution, who against the 6. Commandement hath hurt another mans life?

27. A. 1. Hee who hath hurt another mans spirituall life, in respect hee was the cause, perhaps of his sinning, or left some scandall before him, is bound to doe what hee can to reduce the party so offended to that State, at least, from which hee seduced him.

For it is very just, that hee which is cause of the evill, should as much as in him lies repaire the same; As it is most just, that hee which hath given poison to his Neighbour, should with all speed get him an antidote. And hence it is that the Ecclesiasticall Discipline in all solemne pennance for a scandall given, either in words, or deeds, doth necessarily, prescribe and require Confession, Recantation, Deprecation, and holy Admonition.

28. 2. Hee who hath hurt his Neighbours corporall life, either by complete or incomplete homicide: Is first bound to make Restitution for all the dammages, that from that man slaughter or hurt may arise. And the reason is, that besides the Judicall punishing and vindicative Justice which respects onely the Common good, the Particular good also, in as much as may bee, ought to bee made whole. Secondly, But in respect, the dammages hence arising are of two sorts, viz. either Reall as the charges of curing, of diet, of buriall, and the gaine ceasing which all might be rated at a certaine price; or else Personall; such as are Desolation, Affliction, Deformation, Maiming, and losse of life, which admit no certaine rate or price, therefore there is this difference of Restitution.

First, That in reall losses, equall charges, or as much as is due bee restored, but in personall somewhat equivalent; or else what may be restored, and out of custome, or the judgement of wise and honest men ought to be restored.

Secondly, That reall dammages bee payed to the Heires of the party of what kind soever they be, though Creditours to the person deceased, but personall to them onely who are so nigh the party deceased that they seeme in a manner to make but one person.

Quest. 10. Whether or no, and how hee is bound to make Restitution, who hath against the 7. Commandement defiled a womans Chastity?

29. A. 1. Because Chastity once defiled, can no more bee restored, then life when once taken from us, therefore Restitution in this kind of injustice, respecteth those dammages which from such a pollution doe follow.

30. 2. Now the dammages thence following, are both in credite and temporall estate; for from knowne whoredome alwayes doth arise irreparable infamy, and many times, partly, by reason of the infamy; partly, and by reason of the issue so begot, many and great charges doe also follow.

31. 3. Amongst those persons, who without further inconvenience, may enter into matrimony, that Restitution is most commendable. Exod. 22. 16.

32. 4. The second degree of Restitution, is a competent Dowry. Exod. 22. 17. And some faire satisfaction (as well as may bee) made to the Parents or Guardians of the Maid, Deut. 22. 28. 29.

33. 5. The third degree of Restitution is, to bee at charges of keeping the child, and provide, as much as may bee, that none henceforth be dammaged thereby.

34. 6. There is a great deale of difference in the obligation to Restitution betweene him, which by any maid is moved to defloure her, and him which moveth any maid to it. For, hee which moveth a maid either by violence, de-deceit, or fraud, or importunate solicitations, is bound to make Restitution as well to the maid as her father, as well in other damages, as in her honour. But hee, that is himselfe moved, although hee bee bound as much, as in him lies to make satisfaction to those, who without their consent are in this wronged, yet in respect of the party moving him to it, he doth not in justice owe any Restitution at all.

CHAP. V.

Of Acception of Persons.

Quest. 1. WHat is Acception of Persons?
 A. 1. Acception or Respect of Persons, doth not consist in love of the Persons, but in this, that when the cause onely ought to bee considered, the Personall qualities are onely respected, which are altogether impertinent to the end, which is intended in the cause in hand, Levit. 19. 15. Esa. 11. 3. And such qualities are kindred, power, riches, and friendship; and hence in the Hebrew it is called, פני the respect of the face, and in the Greeke (ἀποσώτῃς) of the externall or accidentall Person, not ὑποσώτῃς.

2. 2. It therefore hath no place, but in him who is oblig'd for some reasons to preferre one man before another, not according to his opinion, but according to some reasons and causes inherent and to bee looked after in the very Persons.

3. 3. And hence it followes, that respect of Persons hath not properly any place in free gifts and gratuities, but in those gifts onely, which are some way due; whence also it comes to passe, that God when after his good will and pleasure: hee bestowes his gifts on some, and not others, though equall to them, is nevertheless in himselfe free from all respect of Persons, because hee bestowes his gifts freely, and not as any way due, nor hath hee regard to any particular inconsiderable qualities, but onely to his owne good pleasure.

4. 4. But yet it hath place in some certaine gifts, which in themselves are free, but upon supposition due. As in case those things, which out of liberality are wont to be distributed among all, be conferred on some few, who have no singular desert.

Quest. 2. Whether Respect of Persons bee a sin?

5. A. 1. It is in it's owne generall nature a sin, Ja. 2. 1. &c. Dan. 1. 17. Prov. 5. 21. 28. Because in the same act, it excludes both Justice and Charity.

For first, It deprives men of those good things which are due to them.

Secondly, Because it putteth a greater value on some smaller and more inconsiderable things, then those which are more weighty, and which ought to be considered, and perverteth the Order of humane Society, Eccles. 10. 2. 3. 4.

Thirdly, Because in effect, it makes a plaine and direct way to all kind of sin, Prov. 28. 21. Fourthly, And (as much as in it lieth) takes away all difference between good and ill deserts.

Quest. 3. To what sort of Justice is respect of Persons opposed?

6. A. Respect of Persons though it bee most properly imputed to those, who offend against distributive Justice, in the deciding of controversies betweene things and persons; yet rightly understood, and according to Scripture-phrase, it relates to all kind of Judgement, Election, or Sentence, which is made of men, not according to the Rule, which ought in such cases to be followed, but according to some affections respecting this or that quality, which nothing at all appertaines to the Judgement in hand.

Quest. 4. In what cases about the Election or Promotion of men to Offices Ecclesiasticall or Secular, is there this offence of Respect of Persons?

7. A. 1. If any doe wittingly, or willingly, or out of negligence make choyce of an unworthy man. Now such a man is unworthy, who is either void of skill, honesty, or the dexterity, or readines, which is required to the exercise of such an office, Hic & Nunc (as the Logicians terme it.) A in such an Election,

First, God is robbed of his honour, which all men of p like place ought to maintaine as their functions shall require.

Secondly, By this meanes, the publique good, for which all publique offices are intended is much hindered.

Thirdly, There is an injury offer'd to them that are worthy, to whom the honour of publique offices is due as a Reward of their vertues.

Fourthly, There is much wrong done to vertue her selfe, whose proper encouragement (Honour) is denied to her, and perversely misplaced to her great contempt.

8. 2. If in case of opposition the lesse worthy bee chosen, and the more worthy neglected. And the reason is, because first, The lesse worthy, in comparison, to the more worthy, is indeed unworthy.

Secondly, Because the more worthy is fitter for the end of his place, which in election ought chiefly to be considered. This is very manifest in Ecclesiasticall elections, because the Church ought, as much as may be, to be edified by her Ministers, Ephes. 4. 11. 12. 13. 14.

9. 3. But yet there is this difference betweene the election of one absolutely unworthy, and one lesse worthy than another: That the choyce of one absolutely unworthy is in it selfe a sinne, but the choyce of one lesse worthy is not so simply and intrinsically a sinne, that it may not sometimes become lawfull upon that consideration of some supervening circumstances. As for example if there be foure men presented or nominated in the election. A man absolutely unworthy, a worthy man, one more worthy then hee, and one worthier then all the rest; If I give my voice to him, that is the worst of all, and will not concurre with them, that would choose the man that is worthy, or him that is more worthy then hee, the other side must needs carry it for the unworthy man, or for the lesse worthy at the best; it is lawfull and fit for mee in such a case, letting passe the most worthy to make choyce of him that is worthy, or him that is the more worthy. And the reason is, because I am not bound to give my voyce to him, whom I know cannot possibly be chosen, although hee be most worthy: yet I am bound to hinder (as much as in mee lieth) the election of one altogether ther unworthy, or lesse worthy then another, whom I may helpe with my choyce. But such a choyce is so to bee moderated, that there be for all that, a faire testimoniall given to him, that is the worthiest of all, or him that is mote worthy then the party chosen; because every mans due honour ought to bee afforded him according to his worth: and because every man is bound to give a faire testimony of his owne good intention to the Common good for example sake.

Quest. 5. Whether this fault of respect of persons, hath any place in giving of honour or reverence to others; Jam. 2.

2. 3. 4. And know ye not that the Lord is not partiall. 1. 10. A. I. Saint James in his 2. chap. doth cleerly testify this sinne to be too frequent.

11. 2. In that honour which is simply due to any (such as that is, which we owe to our Parents and Elders) the case is plaine: because in the distribution of this kind of honour, it were very unjust to deny any the due testimony of his preheminance which hee deserves, upon unfit grounds.

12. 3. Nay in honour, that is but upon supposition due, it hath place so farre forth, as there is way for injury or contumely. And somewhat neere unto this fault is it not to salute a man (as the use and custome of the Countrey is) that hath first saluted you: or else not to salute men at all, according to the distinction of their persons and worth.

Quest. 6. Whether Rich men ought to be honour'd for their Riches;

13. A. Simply for the possession of so much wealth, they are not to bee honour'd, but for the good use of it; or for the place they beare, perhaps in the Common-wealth by reason of their Wealth, they are to bee honoured.

Quest. 7. Whether in those things which are left to the free will of the Judge, there may bee such a thing as respect of Persons;

14. A. In those circumstances which nothing concerne the parties in suite, there can bee no respect of persons: But in those which doe concerne them and yet neverthelesse are not determin'd by the Lawes, but are (as of necessity many must) left to the discretion of the Judge, of which kind are the prorogation, or restraint of time, and the like.

if they bee done, ( as for the most part they are, ) with an eye upon the person, and not on the cause; There is in such case this sinne of respect of Persons.

CHAP. VI.

Of Injuries.

Quest. I. VV Hether it is possible an Injury may bee done to a willing man?

1. 1. By Willing, here we are to understand a man that knoweth, and willingly and freely consenteth to the fact: Otherwise there were no difficulty at all. For whatever is done either out of Ignorance, Feare, or violence, is esteemed as involuntary, at least in part is so, and so in that part may admit an injury by the consent of all men.

2. 2. This word Injury, if it be taken in its generall sense for the violation of that which is Right, and perpetration of that which is Wrong, doth no way depend upon the will of the patient, whether he consent or not, but only upon the Rule of Justice. And in this sense it is plaine, that an iniurie, or an unjust thing may bee done to a man both willing and consenting, as we may see in the example of the Amalekite who killed Saul when he desired him, 2 Sam. I.

3. 3. There are many things in which a man cannot as he pleaseth, quit his owne Right: to wit, those things over which he hath not a full power, but rather a custody and safeguard of them, such as are his life and members, and in these the consent of the Will taketh not away the nature of an iniurie.

4. 4. Now besides the Will Rationall, which alwaies springs from Counsell within, there is a certaine Naturall inclination, may be termed the Will Naturall, because virtually, alwaies it carryeth with it the power of a Will, and doth in some sort then appeare, when a man doth not directly consent to his owne discommodity, because it is his discommodity, or to the evill of punishment, because it is evill.

The

The consent therefore of the Will Rationall doth not a lwaies destroy the nature of an iniury.

5. 5. That this, (viz. To a willing and knowing man, there can be no Iniury done) is affirmed by Philosophers and Lawyers, is from hence, because by the word Iniury, they understand, a Violation of the Law, which is done by violence, and necessitie of coaction. But all kind of coaction is not required, to make the thing uniuert which is suffered.

6. 6. Indeed the Agent is perhaps willing and consenting, but it doth not thence follow that he is no way patient, Christ in suffering death was willing, consenting, and an agent, and yet he suffered most horrid Iniuries.

CHAP. VII.

Of Charity towards our Neighbour.

Quest. 1. W Ho is to be understood by that terme, Our Neighbour?

1. A. 1. Every man, whom by any meanes we may accommodate, is, in some sort, our Neighbour, Luke 10. 29. 37. Acts 17. 26.

2. 2. Man in general, as he is with us capable of supernaturall happinesse, inasmuch as he is the proper object of absolute Charity, is our Neighbour. For this is the Tye of our Charity betweene one another, in order to God whom we love. And thus is every man living our Neighbour, without difference of kind, affection, or manners, unlesse somewhat to the contrary doe certainly appeare unto us.

3. 3. But in regard the nature of sinne doth onely strive against this capacity; therefore Man as he is such, or in consideration he is a Man, is not to be loved, but rather hated and avoyded.

Quest. 2. In what sence is our Neighbour to bee loved even as our selves?

4. A. Even as, in this precept doth not imply an absolute and universall parity, but a proportion of likenesse; Now this likenesse chiefly consisteth in three things.

First, that we neither wish, nor doe any evill to our Neighbour, more then to our selves.

Secondly, that we wish all true good to our neighbour, and to our power endeavour to procure it.

Thirdly, that we wish these things to our Neighbour, out of sincere and hearty affection, having still an eye upon his benefit, and not our owne.

Quest. 3. Whether it be not lawfull sometimes to wish ill to our Neighbour?

5. A. 1. It is not lawfull to wish any man evill, as evill; but as good, sometimes you may. And so, First, you may desire and wish a temporall evill to any, for his spirituall amendment: to wit, if his amendment cannot bee probably hoped for by any other meanes. As in case, any man for the favour of men doe perhaps neglect his duty towards God, we may lawfully wish him out of favour with those men.

6. 2. It is lawfull to wish a temporall ill to some for the good of others. As if any man be a desperate corrupter of others, it is lawfull to wish him taken from the earth, for feare he should undoe others as well as himselfe.

7. 3. And such a thing as this, is sometimes lawfull, out of zeale for Iustice, and Gods honour.

Quest. 4. How the degrees of greater or lesse Charity ought to be observed.

8. A. 1. If you consider the good in it self, as it is to be wished to your Neighbour, there can be no imparity in the thing. For we ought to wish the chiefest good to our Neighbour, even as to our selves. And this too is the duty of every man, that as much as in him lyeth, he promote the good and welfare of his Neighbour: But yet there is some difference of order in the wishing that good: for we ought to wish that happinesse to the godly immediately, but to the ungodly, onely hoping and supposing their Faith and Repentance.

9. 2. In respect of the affection it selfe, whereby wee wish good to others, there ought to be no imparity of Intention or Remission therein: because the very Habite of Vertue in its owne nature doth equally incline our Affections to its act, without all difference of greater or lesse intention.

10. 3. In respect of the Exercise and effects of this Affection, there is granted some imparitie, as of the frequencie, the order, and extention, so farre forth as the collection of circumstances may make necessary this act and operation of Charity.

For first, We ought more frequently to stirre up, and imploy that act of Charity toward those, in whom we shall more frequently meet with reasons and causes for our true love.

Secondly, The order ought to be observed according to the occasion which is offered, and the proportion which the acts beare to their objects.

Thirdly, the extention to more, or more noble effects, is requisite according to the necessity of the effects, and the dig- nity of the parties beloved.

Quest. 5. Whether or no, and in what cases a man may be bound, in respect of the exercise and effects of his Charitie, to love his Neighbour more then himselfe?

11. A. 1. There may be such cases: Because our Neighbour, by sundry meanes may be in extreame grievous necessi- tie, so that he ought not to be neglected, nor ought we to expect, when others may and will helpe him, although we can- not doe it without our owne danger.

12. 2. Every man is bound with any temporall bazard whatsoever, to helpe his Neighbour that is in Spirituall dan- ger, if it be probable, his assistance may doe him any good. 1. John 3. 16.

13. 3. Againe, in extreame necessity, Every man of what condition soever, (but in the first place, he to whom of duty it may belong) is bound to expose his life to any probable danger, that so he may hinder another mans certaine death. For another Mans certaine death ought to be esteemed a grea- ter evill then our own, if uncertain. Hence it is not lawfull, for a Pastour to forsake his Church and Cure in time of Plague, or persecution, unlesse perchance there bee some other fit man who may undertake the charge.

14. 4. In temporall goods, every man is bound to prefer a publike person, or the community before himselfe. For the good of the whole is more to be valued then the good of any one part. Now those men ought to bee accounted publicke persons, persons, who doe manifestly stand the Common-wealth in much stead.

15. 5. Moreover it is sometimes an honest thing to expose ones corporall life to certaine danger, to save the corporall life of a friend, though but of equall condition, John 15. 13. For although my life, by it selfe taken, ought to bee conserved by me, rather then the life of another, yet it ought not to be conserved rather then anothers life, and my credit.

CHAP. VIII.

Of Praying for others.

Quest. 1. For whom ought we to pray?

1. A. 1. For all those whom we hope may bee helped by our Prayers; For Praier is a meanes instituted by God, that it may be applyed to procure those things which we wish: Hence no man living is absolutely to be excluded from our prayers, except it be evident unto us, that he is altogether desperate.

2. 2. We ought to pray for our enemies especially, Matt. 5. 45.

First, Because we are to be affected especially with their sinne, from whence danger hangs over their heads, Luke 23. 34.

Secondly, Because by this meanes we doe, and testifie that we doe, that which is necessary to the remission of our owne sinnes, Matt. 6. 12.

Thirdly, Because also by this meanes we exclude from our thoughts all unlawfull desire of Revenge, Rom. 12, 19, 20.

Fourthly, In regard this is in charity to commit our cause to God.

3. 3. Howsoever we are more bound to pray for our friends and allies, because in such there are many reasons found, which directly and in themselves, are prevalent to move our Charity, insomuch that they move some love, even in Ethnickes, Matt. 5. 46, 47.

Quest. 2. Whether or no, and how farre it is lawfull to wish evill unto any man ?

4. A. 1. A deliberate imprecation of evill, as it is evill against any man, which is a formall cursing, cannot chuse but be evill.

First, because it proceeds from Hate, which is an evill opposite to Charitie.

Secondly, because it is not more lawfull to wish evill, as it is evill, then to doe it so.

Thirdly, because it is repugnant to our blessed calling, 1 Pet. 3.9.

5. 2. Those rash and common curses which are in use amongst many, (as The plague take you. Get you gone with a mischiefe. Would you were hang'd. &c.) are expressions of hatred and ill will, the signes of perturbations raining in the heart, and besides this are contumelious to our Neighbour, and therefore cannot be excused from a grievous offence.

6. 3. The imprecation of evill under consideration of good, is in it selfe lawfull. Thus we may wish a lesse evill to this or that man, with relation to the glory of God, the good publike or private which is of greater moment; yet this must be thus understood.

First, that there be this condition, to wit, if that good will follow out of this evill, and not but by this evill.

Secondly that we submit our will to the will of God.

7. 4. Cursings which are cast on irrationall Creatures, if they have any respect to God and his providence, which is conversant about those Creatures are blasphemies, if to Man who is the lord of them, then they are injuries; if to the creatures, as they are simply considered in themselves, then they are the signes of heart and mouth full of bitterness, Rom. 3. 14. if to any evill which happens by them, then they either ought to be figurative speeches, as 2 Sam. 1. 21. or else they are unjustifiable motions of impatience, Job 3.

CHAP. IX.

Of Brotherly Reprofe.

Quest. 1. WHat persons fall under Brotherly Reprofe?

1. A. 1. First, and most properly, the faithfull, and amongst the faithfull, those who are members of the same Church with us. The reason is, because those have greater brotherly conjunction with us, then others.

2. 2. Yet Infidels also on occasion are to be reproved. First, because that seeing they are our neighbours, and to be beloved with true Charity, they ought not to be excluded from the common act, and duty of Charity.

Secondly, because the spirituall almes ought no more to be restrained, then the corporall: but the corporall ought in great necessity to be bestowed on any.

Thirdly, because the Oxe or Sheepe of ones Neighbour which is astray, ought by him that seeth it, if he can, to be brought backe, Deut. 22.1. then much more, ones Neighbour himselve, when he doth wander, ought to be reduced to the right way.

Fourthly, Because that he which erreth most, hath most neede of instruction, and the Law of Nature requires, that we strive to helpe our Neighbours in their greatest necessities.

Quest. 2. What conditions are requisite to make reprofe necessary?

3. A. 1. The knowledge of the sinne, which at least ought to be so probable; that it be morally certaine, that is, such which is morally judged, enough to beleve without rashnesse, That our Neighbour sinneth. Yet in a doubtfull suspition, the reason of our duty oftentimes requires that wee should wisely intimate to our neighbour, what the suspition is, and by what meanes it might be removed.

4. 2. The hope of some fruit. For if there be no hope of amendment, in that respect reprofe is not to be applied; Prov. 9.7. 8. Mat. 7.6. Yet it oftentimes happens, that those which are incorrigible in themselves, ought to be reprooved in regard of others, whose danger by this way may be prevented.

5. 3. The opportunity of time, and conveniency of other circumstances.

Quest. 3. Who are they which ought to reprove others.

6. A. 1. This duty in some manner belongs to all men who have the use of reason: because it is a Precept of the naturall Law, a deed of Charity, and a generall duty of Neighbour towards Neighbour, as hee is so. Hence, the faithfull ought to admonish both the beleever, and the un-beleever, and the infidell, as well the faithfull, as an infidell; Gen. 20. 16. The inferiours and those that are subject, ought to admonish their Superiours, but with reverence, Iob 31. 13.

7. 2. Yet more especially it belongs to them, who either by reason of their calling, ought to looke to the good of other, or by reason of gifts are more fit to fulfill this duty with fruit, Ezech. 33. and 34. Gal. 6. 1. Tit. 2. 4.

8. 3. Hee himsef which is guilty of the same, or a greater crime, is not altogether exempted from the obligation of this Precept. For no mans wickednesse can be so helpfull to him, that should excuse him from a naturall Precept, as this is. But hee ought to doe this with especiall expression of repentance, and compassion, accusing himsef first, and more then another, lesse hee incurre that reprehension of our Lord, Mat. 7. 3. 4. 5. Thou Hypocrite, first cast out the beame out of thy own eye, then thou maist see to cast out the mote out of thy brothers eye. There is a notable example in 2 Sam. 16. 17.

Quest. 4. How ought reproofe to bee applied?

9. A. 1. Admonition ought to be founded on the word of God, or the speech of Christ, Col. 3. 16. Let the word of Christ dwell in you plenteously in all wisdom, teaching and admonishing, &c.

10. 2. It ought to bee sprinkled with brotherly Charity, 2 Thess. 3. 15. 2 Cor. 2. 4.

11. 3. It should bee season'd with meeknes and lenity, Gal. 6. 1. 2 Tim. 2. 25.

13. 4. It ought to bee strengthened by perseverance, 2 Per. 1. So often, and so long, should our brother bee by us admonished, as there may any fruit bee hoped for thereby.

Quest. 5. How ought Reproofe to bee entertained?

13. A. 1. In Charity and holy reverence, 1 Theff. 5.

14. 2. With Humility, Hebr. 13. 22.

15. 3. With the fruit of Piety, so that it should alwayes bee to us, either, as for medicine (ιαμα) or for warning.
 (προφουλακτήριον) or at leſt for a testimony (διαμαρτυρια.)

CHAP. X.

Of Partaking with other mens finnes.

Quest. 1. VV Ho are they that partake of other mens finnes?

1. A. 1. All they which doe cooperate in the committing those finnes, for the sociall or joynt cause cannot chooſe, but partake of those finnes both in the crime and guilt to the production, of which it hath joyntly conferr'd it's power. And hence, first, hee who commands or perswa-deth any sinne, is partaker of that sinne, because hee hath both such an intent himſelfe, which before God is all one as that fact; and besides for as much, as in him lieth: hee would infuse that intent into another, and so hee is the au-thour of sinne, 2 Sam. 13. 28. 1 King. 12. 30. and 13.
 35. &c.

Secondly, Not onely the Authours, but the Ministers of finnes have communion with them, for in as much, as they are the ministring and assisting causes, and doe afford some strength to the sinne, they have a direct communion in the same sinne, Esa. 10. 1. 1 Sam. 22. 17. 18. with Pſalm. 52.
 2 Kings 1. 9. Matth. 28. 4. Acts 12. 18, 19.

2. 2. All they which doe cooperate though indirectly, that is, which doe any thing that ought to be omitted, or omitted any thing which ought to be done, of which sinne is the sequell. For by the morall interpretation, he also is termed the cause of sinne, who doth not apply all due diligence to forewarne or hinder the same, 1 Sam. 3. 13. Ezek. 33. 6. 8. Act. 20. 26, 27.

3. 3. And with this sinne, Preachers, Magistrates, Parents, Masters, Teachers, are chiefly tainted, when they doe not their duty in prevention of the sinnes of those, who are intrusted in their charge.

4. 4. All they who by their consent approve of a sinne already committed, Rom. 1. 32. For he who approveth and commendeth the thing done, he sheweth his Will ready and forward to doe the same thing, or at least, to perswade the doing of the same thing, if need and occasion should require it. And moreover he is a conserving, defending, and promoting cause of the sinne committed. To this consent of approbation is referred all cessation from our duty, either in the Reformation or correction of the sinner, 1 Chron. 5. 2. 6. inso-much that we may not onely participate in other mens sinnes, by our endeavour, speech, and example, but even by our silence, dissimulation, and connivency.

5. 5. And in this kind also doe some Preachers often offend, who make pillowes for the sinners, and preach peace unto them. And all other Superiours, who through too fond an indulgence, doe dissemble, or too tenderly reprove the sinnes of them that are under their charge, and all they too, who without some just cause omit brotherly reprove.

6. 6. Out of these principles the doubt is easily cleared, how when many are punished, and yet but one openly sinning, they are not properly said to be punished for the others sins, but for their owne; to wit, most often for those, whereby they participate with others sinnes. And after this manner, D. Reynolds. one of our Countreymen, doth piously and learnedly shew, how Indas Machabæus and the Iewes, 2 Mac. 12. 43. did not offer Sacrifice for the sinnes of those that were dead (as the Papists would have it) but for their owne, and the other survivors sin, which they had contracted to themselves from the pollution of those that were dead, and whereof perhaps not unworthily, they might, in some part, thinke themselves the Authors. For no man (to speake properly) is punished for for anothers sinne, as no man dyeth of another mans disease but his owne. But even as men doe oftentimes contract diseases. to themselves from other mens (and many things hurt the body by transition: ) so in those diseases of the minde, men do usually contract their own sinnes from other mens.

7. 7. Moreover, hence the Faithfull are instructed to a more profound humiliation of themselves, in the confession of their sinnes of this kind. And G. Par: proposeth a godly forme of Confession suitable to this purpose, which will illustrate this doctrine.

O Lord my God! What evill is there of which I am not guiltie, either in deed committing it, or desiring to commit it? And this either in my selfe, no by my selfe, or in some other man: to wit, by being willing or consenting that he should commit it, or by commending the fault, or flattering the committer of it, or not reprovng when out of my duty it belonged unto me; or (what is worse) by rejoycing at another mans sinne, or which was the greatest infidelity towards thee, by not regarding it at all. For sure, it could not be lawfull for me to see one of thy flocke perish, and be devoured by the infernall Wolves, and not resist as much as I was able: In the like condemnation I acknowledge my selfe, in respect of good things: For what good is there, which I have not either extinguishd in my self, or persecuted in others; either by hindring it that it should not be done at all, or by discommending it if it were already done, or permitting it to be extinguishd, or else rejoycing if it were extinguishd? Lord of mercy, how many good things have been lost, either by my procuring that they should not be, or my not assisting that they might be, or by not nourishing them, or withdrawing my ayde from them? Moreover, I have sinned against them, O Lord God, either by not rejoycing at them, or by not giving thanks for them to thee, the Author of them.

Quest. 2. Whether or no it be lawfull to rejoyce at an other mans sinne, or to take any pleasure in it?

8. A. 1. We ought not by any meanes to rejoyce at sin, as it is sinne, but as by God it is sometime converted into the occasion of some good. As if perchance some haughty-minded arrogant man, after some sliding, should repent and behave himselfe more modestly; or as if after some grievous offence, an excellent Law should be made, which otherwise would not had beene enacted. See Phil. 1. 15, 16, 17, 18.

Quest. 3. Whether or no it be lawfull to abuse another mans sinne?

9. It is lawfull when any necessity shall enforce it, provided that we doe not cherish those sinnes which we abuse. So Iacob when he tooke Labans oath, swearing by false gods, abused Laban's sinne, without any sinne of his owne, Gen. 31. 53. So in Ieremo. 41. 8. The tenne innocent men did abuse the ravenousnesse of Ishmael: So many out of necessitie compelled, doe honestly abuse the iniquity of Vsurers.

CHAP. XI.

Of good Example, and Scandall.

Quest. 1. VVHo are bound to give good example to others?

1. A. 1. This belongs to all godly men, in respect of all those, to whom their life may be any wayes knowne.

First, In regard all men ought to glorifie God by their works, 1 Pet. 2. 12.

Secondly, because there is no man who cannot expresse somewhat in all his life, whereby others may be encouraged and confirmed in godlines. For from the contemplation of the Pis mire men may be edified, Prov. 6. 6.

Thirdly, because each man in his place hath certaine special occasions of performing somewhat, which upon the like occasion may be exemplary to others, Prov. 2. 20. Psal. 34. 7.

2. 2. But this duty is chiefly injoynd to such as are above others, either in Age, Parts, or some Office, Titus 2. 4. 7. 1 Tim. 4. 12. 2 Thess. 3. 9.

First, Because to whom much is given, of him much is required, Luke 12. 48.

Secondly, Because the more eminent a man is, the more eyes be upon him, and he is the lesse undiscovered, Math. 5. 14.

Thirdly, Because they who in place doe precede other, ought by going before, to shew them the right way, 1 Thef. 1. 6, 7, 8.

Fourthly, Because Inferiours, doe much rely upon the Actions of their Superiours, and doe frame themselves to their example, Prov. 29. 12.

Quest. 2. Whether or no our good works ought to be carefully made knowne unto others, that they may bee an example to them?

3. A. 1. Good Workes are of two sorts: some Publike, and some Private. Those which are Private, ought not ordinarily to be divulged by us our selves; for this were ambition of Vaine-glory, Matth. 6. 1, 2, &c. But Publike good Deedes, because in their owne nature they are knowne unto others, may, and sometimes ought, modestly and warily be represented unto others.

4. 2. The representation of a good deed, of what sort soever it be, if by it we respect our owne glory as the end, is not to be allowed of: but as it may conduce to the glory of God, and edification of others, it cannot be discommended.

Quest. 3. Whether or no all Scandall be a sinne?

5. A. 1. In all Scandall there must needs bee some sinne: because it alwaies appertaines to the Spirituall ruine or detriment of our Neighbour.

6. 2. Neverthelesse, there may fall out some Passive, or received Scandall, without any offence of the Agent: as when the fact of one man, is an occasion of sinning to another man, beyond the intention of the doer, or the condition of the fact: And there may toobe an Active Scandall, without any sinne on his part whom it aimes at. As when one, as much as in him lyeth, by his example induceth another to sin, and yet the other will not suffer himselfe to be induced.

Quest. 4. Whether or no, Scandall be a speciall sort of sinne?

7. A. 1. It is a speciall, and indeed, a devillish one, when a man intendeth the ruine of his Neighbour. For this is a speciall difference which constituteth a sinne, that scarcely falleth on any besides the Devill himselfe.

8. 2. Moreover it is a speciall sinne, when that fact, whereby our Neighbour is scandalized, cannot be any otherwaies evil, but by the ruine of our Neighbour; the occasion of which another man ought not to give. For by that difference, such an

It is first in it selfe made evill, and therefore determinated to some certaine kinde.

9. 3. In other finnes the nature of Scandall is onely a circumstance opposed to that Charity which is generally required in each part of our conversion with our Neighbour. By this circumstance, Publike finnes are not changed but onely multiplied and aggravated.

Quest. 5. Whether or no it be possible for a man to live without Scandall?

10. A. 1. By the Grace of God, a faithfull man may live free from passive Scandall: Because he may so firmly adhere unto God, that he can never be moved from good to evill, by the other example of other men: He may live too, free from active Scandall, though not absolutely from all sinne: Because the common infirmities of all the godly, in respect they are not by them maintained, have not any aptitude to enduce others to sinne.

Quest. 6. What Rules are to be observed that wee give no Scandall?

11. A. 1. For the avoyding of Scandall, no sinne at all ought at any time be admitted, though it seeme never so slight: for this were only to sinne my selfe, lest another should sinne, Rom. 3. 8. To doe evill that good might come thereof. And hence no requittall of crimes is to be allowed of: Such as was that of the old Gibeonite, in the cause of the Levite, Judg. 19. 14. And of Lot in the cause of the Angels, Gen. 19. 8.

12. 2. No good or lawfull thing is to be omitted, for feare of the Scandall, which men of a Pharisaicall temper will take thereat, Matth. 15. 14.

13. 3. To avoid the Scandall which the weaker may take, all those things are either to be done or omitted, which may lawfully and without sinne be done or omitted. And this is the obligation of Charity, 1 Cor. 8. 13.

14. 4. Those are to be called the Weake, who are not sufficiently instructed about our Christian Liberty, 1 Cor. 8. 7.

15. 5. Neither are all they sufficiently instructed, to whom we can give a reason of the fact; for it may so fall out, that some are not capable of the reason that is given; who neverthelesse, though there be a reason given, are yet to be esteemed as weak.

16. 6. No humane Authority can take away the nature of Scandall, from that which otherwise would be a Scandall, nor the nature of a sinne from that Scandall being given. For no man hath a command of our Charity and Consciences, nor can he take away the danger of Scandall when given.

17. 7. There is no such danger of Scandall in neglecting humane inventions, as there was in the Apostles time, about the casting out the Ceremonies of the Law. For we may not use any such Conscience in humane inventions, as the Jewes used in the Injunctions of God.

18. 8. There is no such perplexity that it must needs be necessary for a godly man to give Scandall, whether he do this or that, or doe it not?

Quest. 7. What Rules are we to observe, that wee doe not take Scandall?

19. Ans. 1. We must have a care, that we doe not so depend upon any man, let him be of what perfection he will, or have him in so high estimation, that by his sliding, falling, or defection, our hearts should be too much affected. Hither wee are to direct our meditations upon those grievous sinnes, into which many have fallen, not onely of those who seemed, and were not, but also of those who were notable servants of God, as David, Salomon, Peter, &c.

20. 2. It is a detestable and horrid perverseness of Iudgement, whereby many are wont, at the falling of some, or the detection of Hypocrisie, strait to charge all of that profession with hypocrisie. For this is directly to imitate the Devill in accusing the godly, and burthening them with unjust suspicion, Iob. 1. 11.

21. 3. Although it be good to tread in the steps of the godly, yet this is not to be done in a blind obedience, and imitation, but with a discreet and wary carriage, as farre they follow Christ, 1. Cor. 11. 1.

22. 4. We must againe and againe consider how base a thing it is, either for feare or hope of this world, to desist or deviate from the right path.

23. 5. Vpon any occasion, we must call to minde that God doth permit Scandals to be offered unto us, for the triall of our Faith and constancy, Deut. 13.

CHAP. XII.

Of Schisme.

Quest. 1. What is Schisme?

1. A. 1. The Latine word Schisma, signifying Schisme, is so called à Scindendo, from cutting. And it is a Cutting, a Separation, dis-junction, or dissolution of that Vnion, which among Christians ought to be kept. But because this division is chiefly effected, and appeareth by a refusal of any due Ecclesiasticall Communion. Therefore this Separation by a singular appropriation is rightly called Schisme.

Quest. 2. Whether or no, and how Schisme differs from Heresie?

2. Ans. Schisme, as in the generall it denoteth all unjustifiable departure from the Church, containeth Heresie too, and those two words are sometimes used in one and the same sense, 1 Cor. II. 18. But they are properly distinguished, in that Heresie is opposed to Faith, and Schisme to Charity. Heresie is in a perverse opinion, but Schisme in the fact of a perverse Separation. So that he may be an Hereticke, who is not a Schismatike, as in case he deny some Article of Faith, and yet will cleave to that Church which professeth the true Faith; and he may be a Schismatike, who is no Heretike, as in case he beleve all the Articles of Faith, yet will not communicate with the true Church in holy duties. And such a distinction is intimated by the Apostle, Gal. 5. 20.

Quest. 3. Whether or no all Schisme be a sinne?

3. Ans. Schisme, properly so called) is a most grievous sinne.

First, because it is against Charity toward our Neighbour, and robbes him of a spirituall good.

Secondly, It is against the edification of him which maketh the Separation, in regard it deprives him of all communion in that spirituall good.

Thirdly, It is against the honour of Christ, in regard that after its manner, it destroyeth the Vnitie of Christs Mysticall Fourthly, It maketh way for Heretic, and a separation from Christ.

4. 2. Neverthelesse, a Withdrawing from the true Church is in some cases both lawful and necessary. As First, if a man cannot continue his communion, without a communication of their sinnes. Secondly, if there be any eminent danger of being seduced. Thirdly, If by oppression or persecution, a man be compelled to withdraw himselfe.

5. 3. Howsoever a totall Sessation or Withdrawing, with an absolute renunciation and rejection of all communion with that which is the true Church, can by no meanes lawfully be undertaken; but a partiall secession onely is allowed of, as far as there can be no Communion had, without a participation of the sinne.

Quest. 4. Whether or no, Schismatickes are Members of the Church?

6. Ans. Schisme doth in so much seperate from the Church, as it doth renounce the communion with the Church. If therefore, First, a seperation be made from some certaine Actions or Persons onely, although that seperation be Schismaticall, yet doth it not presently separate from the Church.

7. 2. If the separation be made from one or more particular Churches, yet the party separated may neverthelesse remaine a member of some other Churches, in which hee findeth not that cause of separation which he did in the other.

8. 3. If an obstinate Separation bee made from all true Churches, or from any one, for a cause common to all, then such Schismatickes (although it may be, retaining the Faith, they continue members of the Church Catholike) they cannot be esteemed as visible members of the Church.

Quest. 5. How farre we ought to avoide Schismatickes?

9. Ans. So farre at least, that by our agreement, neither they be confirmed in their Schisme, nor we have communion in the same, nor others by our example entised to the approbation of Schisme.

Quest. 6. Whether or no, a Schismaticall Church is to be held a true Church?

10. Ans. While it retaineth the true Faith, it is to be held for a Church, and so those things which are Ecclesiastically performed formed therein; For the substance of them ought to be held ratified and firme; but in respect it is Schismaticall, it is not to be held for a lawfull and allowable Church.

C H A P. XIII.

Of the Honour of our Neighbour.

Quest. 1. WHat is the Honour which is due to our Neighbour?

I. A. I. Honour in its common signification denoteth some testification of the excellence or eminence that is another. And in regard such testification cannot be made before men, but by outward signes of deedes and words, therefore in the common use of the word, any outward expressions of that kinde are intimated thereby, as it is in the holy Scripture, Lev. 19. 32.

1 Pet. 3. 6. Rom. 13. 7. 9. 10.

2. 2. But because this outward testification which is in words and deedes (if it be not a dissembling and vaine counterfeiting of it, as indeed now adayes a Muncicall observance hath the name and place of Honour among many) it includeth a correspondent Iudgement, and internall affection, in which resideth the testification before God; therefore the true and solid duty of honouring any man, doth chiefly relie in an internall acknowledgement of his worth and eminence. Lev. 19. 3. Rom. 13. 5, 9, 10.

Quest. 2. To what men is Honour due?

3. Ans. 1. We are bound most properly and fully to honour, those who in worth are our Superiours, as our Parents, and the like, because not onely a reverend esteeme and absolute acknowledgement of their preeminence is due unto them, but also an illustration of the same, by a submissive observance, springing from the confession of our owne imparity.

4. 2. Yet for all this, we have the expresse word of God telling us that all men are to be Honoured, 1 Pet. 2. 17. Honour all men.

First, Because a nother mans eminence may be considered, not onely by the comparison thereof to him that honoureth him, as if indeed he ought to be more eminent then the man that should honour him, but by the comparison of him to others, and by this reason, we owe honour to our equals, nay, our inferiours, because they are more eminent and superiour to others.

Secondly, Because indeede there is scarce any man found, in whom wee may not observe some gift or other, in which he is superiour to us, if we passe our judgement upon our selves with any humility, Phil. 2. 2.

Thirdly, Because the meanest sort of people may have some singular relation to God, in which respect they are to be honoured, Mark 9. 41. 1 Pet. 3. 7. Esa. 39. 9.

Fourthly, Because in all, and every man, who have communion with us in the same nature at least, and are not excluded from a capacitie of the same communion in grace, there appeareth somewhat which forbiddeth contempt, and so doth in some manner demand some honour, Iob 31. 13, 14, 15. Mat. 18. 6.

Object. The godly are taught to contemne the ungodly, Psal. 15. 4.

5. Sol. 1. The ungodly are to be contemnd, just so as they are to be hated, that is under that formall acception, whereby they are ungodly. They are not therefore to be honoured because they are ungodly, or so that their impiety may be cherishd, confirmd, or strengthened by our honour, Prov. 5. 9. & 6. 33. & 26. 1. 8. but as they have good in them, a faire testimony thereof is not to be denyed them, 1 Tim. 6. 1.

6. 2. And for this cause some signes of that honour which is in it selfe simply due, may for their wickednesse sake, of right be denied unto them, 2 King. 3. 14. But with this caution, that this be not understood but of those that are very notoriously wicked, in whom the ordinary causes that should invite our honour, are by the opposite basenesse quite overwhelmed; and that it be still with that moderation, that we may shew a willing disposition to give them all honour, in case this obstacle of their impiety were once removed.

Quest. 3. Whether or no, and how farre we ought to regard our owne honour that is due unto us?

7. A. 1. Worldly honour, if once it come into competition with that honour which wee are to seeke at the hands of God, ought utterly to be contemned, Ioh. 5. 4. & 12. 43. Rom. 2. 26.

8. And for this cause, First, we may not commit any sinne for to get the honour of this world.

9. 2. Neither are good workes to be done wholly for the honour of this world, Matth. 6.

10. 3. Out of our regard unto solide honour, we must abstaine from all sinne especially from that which carrieth with it any singular note of defamation, 1 Thess. 4. 4. 1 Cor. 6. 18,

19. Prov. 5. 9. & 6. 33.

11. 4. We ought to apply our selves to the performance of those things to which God hath annexed true and solid honour, 1 Sam. 2. 30. Prov. 4. 8. & 8. 18.

First, Generally to Righteousnesse towards God.

Secondly, Especially, to those duties of Righteousnesse, which by the world are held of greatest disparagement, such as are to suffer reproofe, Prov. 13. 18. And to cease from strife, Prov. 20. 3.

CHAP. XIV.

Of Fame, or Report.

Quest. I. V Hether or no, and how far a man ought to looke to his Fame?

I. A. 1. A good Report is in its proper nature, the testimony of Vertue, and an evill Report, the testimony of Vice. That therefore is to be wished for, and sought after; but this to be avoyded and feared. A good report cannot wholly be contemned, without the contempt of Vertue too, Prov. 22. 1. Eccles. 7. 3. Phil. 4. 8. 2 Cor. 8. 20, 21.

2. 2. Now as all Testimony is of moment, according to the condition of him that giveth it, so also a good report among those that are good, is the onely true good report, and chiefly to be considered to wit, to be praised by a man that is generally prayed himsele, 2 Cor. 8. 18.

3. 3. And yet the testimony of those that are without the Church

Church, so they are not desperately wicked, is not to be neglected, 1 Tim. 3. 7.

4. 4. A good report because it is not a Vertue, but onely a testimonny of Vertue, ought never to be prized before Vertue or our duty, 2 Cor. 6. 8. We ought not to seeke Report by deserting Vertue.

5. 5. Moreover a good Esteeme is first to bee sought in the heart and Consciencie of men, rather then in their expressions, 2 Cor. 4. 2. & 5. 11, 12. and from solid workes of Vertue, rather then from an applause gained by cunning Art, 2 Corinth. 3. 1, 2, 3.

6. 6. Besides, a good esteeme is to be laboured for, and preserved, not for it selfe, neither for our selves, as if wee were bound to beleewe other mens judgements upon our deeds more then our owne, but principally for the glory God, Gal. 1. 24. 2 Theff. 1. 12. and that we by our example or deeds might more benefit others, 1 Theff. 1. 7.

7. 7. And for this reason, those men are bound to have a speciall care of their credit and esteeme, who by reason of their parts or function, are specially called to the promotion of Gods honour, and the good of mankind, Neh. 6. 10, 11. 1 Tim. 3. 7. 1 Sam. 2. 17, 22, 23, 24.

8. 8. Yet this difference is to be observed, that we lesse esteeme our credit in those things, which doe not much concern Gods honour, and that we more regard it in those things which doe more concerne that. So Paul contemning the credit of humane Wisdome, and Eloquence, 1 Cor. 2. 2. & 2 Cor. 11. 6. did specially regard the credit of knowing Christ truly, and was chiefly solicitous about the credit of his Calling, faithfulness, and constancie, 2 Cor. 1. 17, 18. Nor indeed is any mans credit impaired, for that he is undeservedly and unjustly thought poore, base, or lesse learned, eloquent, or witty then another. For a good esteeme is not the Testimony of Wealth, Titles, or Learning, but of Vertue.

9. 9. A man may sometimes smother up his discredit in silence, as in case there be no convenient occasion offered of retelling the same to any purpose, and there may bee some hope that the discredit will of it selfe so vanish, that it may redound rather to the good, then dammage of others, Matth. 27. 12, 13.

But whosoever he be that without some such reason neglects his undeserved discredit, when it is not without Scandall to others, is not so much to be thought patient, as prodigall and cruell.

10. 10. He who disparageth himselfe, by imputing a crime to himselfe which he never did. doth not by his lye offend onely against the Truth, but against his Neighbour also, by leaving a Scandall to him, and against himselfe, whilst he robs himselfe of a good that ought to bee preserved, and against God too, whose grace in this part is disavowed, and whose name perhaps upon this occasion may be blasphemed, Job 27. 5.

11. 11. Yet a man may in some sort defame himselfe, by revealing some hidden crime, if there be any cause offered; as for example, if the great necessitie to aske advice, or to disburthen his heart of griefe, or if this be necessary, or some great inconvenience to others, may hereby be prevented.

CHAP. XV.

Of Rash Censure.

Quest. 1. VV What is rash Censure?

1. Ans. 1. It is an Opinion or beliefe of any mans badnesse, conceived without just ground.

2. 2. It is called an Opinion or assent, because a private Censure may be in the thoughts of the heart, without any expression of probation of the same thoughts, which must necessarily be done in publike judgement.

3. 3. The Object of this rash Judgement or Censure is seated in the badnesse of another, because the evill of the sinne, is the onely thing that hindreth a good repute; We generally say in the badnesse or wickednesse of another, because the Judgement may passe not onely upon some fact which is it selfe a sin, but also upon the state which any man is in, as if he bee in the state of sinne, Luke 19. 7.

4. 4. The difference properly doth consist in the lightnesse, or insufficiency of the proofes upon which the censure is grounded:

ded : in which respect it is properly termed Rash, which if it went upon good and firme arguments, were prudent and iust. But these Arguments and Reasons are not onely requisite in the thing it selfe, but must also bee evidently knowne to him that passeth the Iudgement : For a true Censure may be Rash, as a true assertion may be a L.y in him that telleth it.

5. 5. Now those grounds are to be esteemed light and insufficient, which upon sober consideration of all the circumstances, are not thought sufficient to produce such an assent as passeth. For those Reasons which are too light to fasten an ill report upon one man, may be strong and iust enough to fasten it upon another ; and those which are light to perswade one ill opinion, may be forcible to perswade another, those which are light to ground a firme assent, may be iust to ground a weaker assent, or a suspicion which is onely an inclination of the minde to assent, or to doubt, where the minde is in suspence, and cannot incline to either side.

Quest. 2. Whether or no, and how rash judgement bee a sinne ?

6. 1. It is a sinne of Lightnesse, and so against Prudence.

7. 2. It is repugnant to that naturall Principle, Doe not that to another, which thou wouldest not have to be done to thy selfe, For there is no man who would willingly have his Neighbour to Judge rashly of him, or his Actions.

8. 3. It impaires the good of our Neighbour and is repugnant to his Right. For every man hath title to a good repute, as a commodity trusted in the bosomes of other men, till such time as hee himselfe by his owne misdemeanours shall, as it were, fetch it away thence.

9. 4. It begetteth a contempt of our Neighbour, Rom. 14. 3. whence it cometh to passe, that hee may undeservedly, be held unworthy of offices, or benefits.

10. 5. It is an usurpation of the Judgement and authority of God, in as much, as it either judgeth of things hidden and knowne to God alone, or else, that it frames to it selfe a Law of judging, and doth not receive any, which is onely proper to God, Rom. 14. 4. Jam. 4. 11. 12.

Quest. 3. What may bee the difference of the sinne in rash judging ?

11. A. 1. Rash judgement may sometimes proceed from the simple error of the apprehension, or else from inadvertency, whereby it may come to passe, that those proofes of some wickednesse may bee held sufficient, which indeed are not so. This is a lighter offence, as proceeding from Common weaknesse: And it is a signe of this, when hee, that so judged shall bee ready upon better information to renounce his opinion.

12. 2. There is another kind of rash judgement, which proceedeth from a perverseness of mind; whereby, a man is ready to judge perversely of another man, or some personall misprision, whereby a man will easily bee perswaded to beleevē evill of this, or that man, towards whom hee is peevishly inclined. And a signe of this, is such a pertinacy, which willingly neglects the triall of the reasons or proofes, upon which the judgement is grounded, and a willingness to persist in the same perverse opinion, and such a kind of rash judgement, is indeed voluntary, and a grievous sinne.

Question 4. Whether or no, and how things in themselves doubtful, may be interpreted upon the better part?

13. A. 1. Doubts upon things, ought to bee carried according to the weight of the proofes, without any inclination to either side.

14. 2. Doubts about persons in those things, which make to the good or ill repute of the persons, are absolutely to bee interpreted in the better sense, 1 Cor. 13. 5.

15. 3. But wee must not take this, as if positively and speculatively, wee ought certainly to judge those men honest, of whose honesty wee never had any certaine proofe, (for so wee should bee bound to beleevē a falshood) but that negatively and practically, wee ought to judge well of things doubtful, (that is,) that first, wee judge not ill of our Neighbour.

Secondly, That wee so behave our selves toward him in common duties, as if hee were honest, seeing, wee have no evidence to the contrary. And this is the judgement of charity.

16. 4. The Judgement of prudence is not repugnant to this Judgement of charity, that Judgement I meane, whereby, by way of amendment or caution, of some ill wee so behave our selves to some men in doubtfull matters, as if wee had some bad suspicion of them, as when wee have a reasonable carefull eye upon our goods before some men, which wee know not, as if they were theeves; or when we doe somewhat harshly rebuke those men, whom wee take to be honest, for their owne, or the common good. For in such cases, wee doe not interpret doubtfull things positively on the worse side, but out of a possible supposition, wee prevent the worse.

And this kind of judgement is not onely lawfull, but in some cases necessary, as well by the necessity of the Præcept, as of the means to the end aimed at by our place and calling. As in case of vigilant attention upon those men, who under fained shewes deceive the unwary, or as the Apostle admonisheth us: By good words and faire speeches deceive the hearts of the simple, Rom. 16. 18.

CHAP. XVI.

Of Detraction.

Quest. 1. What is Detraction?

1. A. 1. In propriety of language, Detraction, is as much, as an unjust and secret violation of another mans repute. But in regard, this is the chiefe way of injuring another mans credit, therefore by the figure Synechdoche, it may, and is usually taken in such a sense, as it may imply any open contumely. Which differeth from Detraction, properly so termed, as rapine differeth from Theft, because it is done to one, that knoweth and resisteth the injury.

2. 2. And hence, Detraction is so much the more grievous
sinne;

First, By how much it is the more unjust, as if it bee exercised against them, who are of an unblemisht conversation and manners, or if it be done with a direct intention of wrong-ing another mans credit, and not out of any rash or prating humour.

Secondly

Secondly, By how much the more it injureth, as if it bee in a matter, which must needs carry with it, a great blemish to reputation, and in such sort as it may spread the further, and so too, that it cannot well bee pretended, as in scandalous libels.

Quest. 2. Whether or no, hee bee truly a Detractour, who revealeth a true sinne of another mans, which otherwise would have beene concealed.

3. A. 1. Hee, who doth such a thing without just cause is a Detractour, because seeing no other lawfull end of such revealing doth appeare, we must judge out of the nature of the thing, which in such a revealing is nothing else, but a spoiling the mans reputation, to the intent to hurt him.

4. 2. But if it bee done, either in respect to the amendment of the offender, or for the prevention of some great danger to others, or some such reasonable grounds, it is not a sinne. Because by this meanes, the lesse good is neglected, that the greater may bee procured; and a growing evill is some way repressd and not promoted.

Quest. 3. Whether or no, hee be a Detractour, who reporteth things, that make to an ill fame, which hee hath heard from others, without any other asseveration of them?

5. A. If any man without some weighty reason, report such things, so that the hearers may bee very well induced to beleve them, or if it be likely, that an ill suspicion may from such a relation arise in the minds of men, then it is detraction: Because it is a cause concurring to the unjust violation of a mans credit.

Quest. 4. When it is lawfull to defame another mans sinnes?

6. A. 1. When they are publike either by the sentence of the Judge, or by the evidence of a notorious fact. For the authour of a crime, being in such sort defamed, hath forfeited his right to any good repute.

7. 2. When wicked men by dissembling their wickednesse, and making a fained shew of vertue, labour to get a good repute with the manifest danger of others.

CHAP. XVII.

Of Humility towards Men.

Quest. 1. WHat, and of what kind is this Humility?

1. A. 1. It differeth from the humiliation of our selves before God, and in respect of God: because in respect of God, our very soules are to bee subjected, and wee ought to acknowledge our selves not onely unprofitable servants, Luc. 17. 10. but nothing Prov. 30. 2. 3. 1 Cor. 3. 7. Gen. 18. 27. and to bee abhorred, Job 42. 6. But such a dejection of our selves hath no place among men. For Paul professeth himselfe to have beene usefull to the Churches, and that hee deserved to bee beloved and honoured by them.

2. 2. Yet our Humility before men, hath dependance upon that Humiliation before God, 1 Pet. 5. 5. 6. Prov. 22. 4. Not onely because wee ought to beare our selves humbly before our brethren, out of conscience towards God: But also because a sense and apprehension of our owne vilenesse and unworthinesse before God maketh us truly humble; and fitteth us in all respects for true humility.

3. 3. Humility towards men, is a vertue, whereby a man hath a care, that hee exalt not himselfe above his degree, Math 23. 12. Luc. 14. 11. and 18. 14. Rom. 12. 3. 2 Cor. 10. 13. 14. 15. And doth not willingly commend himselfe, 2 Cor. 10. 12.

4. 4. Therefore, hee that is humble affecteth not any outward signes of Eminence, Math. 23. 6. 7. 8. Luke 14. 7.

5. 5. He prizeth others highly and labours to waite upon them, Phil. 2. 3. Math. 23. 11.

6. 6. He patiently endureth any contempt of himselfe, so farre as it appertaines to him: 2 Cor. 5. 12. 13. & 12. 10.

7. 7. He aspireth not to high things. Psal. 131.

8. 8. And yet he doth not renounce the gifts which God hath bestowed upon him: 2 Cor. 1. 5. Nor doth out of the dejection of Spirit refuse any function to which he is called: Gen.

CHAP. XVIII.

Of Pride and Envy.

Quest. I. In what thing, doth pride towards our Neighbour consist?

1. A. 1. Pride in common is that, by which one doth inordinately goe beyond that which hee is. Whence it is commonly defined, an inordinate affectation of ones proper excellence. From this disposition, it doth immediately follow, that the proud man refuseth to be subject to others; and in this respect, it chiefly lookes towards God, to whom all ought to subject themselves. And it is found at least interpretatively in all sinne; because hee that sinneth refuseth to bee subject to the Divine will.

2. 2. But in respect of men, although their bee some such similitude of Pride towards superiours, to whom proud men will not bee subject: Yet hath it another consideration, in respect to inferiours, to whom they will not descend as they ought; and in respect to equals, to whom they desire to bee, or at least seeme, superiours.

3. 3. This Pride as it is in the heart, thought, and affection, is called the lifting up of the heart, 2 Chron. 28. 19 Eze. 28. 1 as it is in the outward gestures, it is called the haughtinesse of the eyes Prov. 6. 17. as it is in words, it is called boasting; Prov. 12. 9 and 20. 6.

4. 4. The same Pride as it is busied about fame, and empty praises, is called vaine glory; as it is busied about honours, and dignities, it is called ambition: as about the ostentation of some great vertue, which one hath not, it is called presumption.

5. 5. This sinne doth then directly hurt ones Neighbour, when a proud man undeservedly prefers himselfe before him: but chiefly if it bee done with any contempt, contumely, or dish esteeming of his Neighbour.

6. 6. But because it is the proper effect of Pride, to set ones selfe before his Neighbour, it singularly appears in that perti-

perinacy, by which one will stick to his owne opinion, or cause, against the judgement of others without any reason. Hence almost arise all discords, and contentions: and therefore in this consideration, also Pride is the cause of many sinnes against our Neighbour, Prov. 13. 20.

7. 7. From Pride also Envy properly flowes: by which, a proud man will not, or cannot with a willing mind see anothers good, because by that his excellency seemes to bee diminished.

CHAP. XIX.

Of the mutuall obligation betwixt those that are superiour onely in age, and gifts, and their inferiours.

Quest. 1. What is the duty of such Superiours?

1. A. 1. All Superiours of this kind ought to endeavour to goe before their inferiours, by some eminent example in living well; Tit. 2. 4 1. Pet. 5 3. The reason is, because of those which have received more, more also is required; Luke 12 48. and that, for others good, and especially for theirs which have received lesse. But hee which is superiour in good parts, hath received greater meanes of living well: and hee which is superiour onely in age, hath at least greater experience. Therefore from either somewhat more is required, then can bee expected from the inferiours, which conduceth to their good by the meanes of an eminent example.

2. 2 Hee which excels in some gift, ought readily to impart it to the benefit of others. The reason is, because those gifts which wee have received of God, are not meerey, as if wee were absolute Lords of them: but we are only dispensers of them, and in the dispensing of them, the will of the Lord and Giver, is to bee respected, which requires, that they bee referred to his glory, in the right use of them towards other men; Rom. 1. 14. I am a Debter, &c.

Quest. 2. What is the duty of inferiours towards such superiours?

3. A 1. The inferiours owe to them a lowly reverence or honour with submission. The reason is, because all are to be honoured according to their degree: and the degree of those superiours is above others, therefore, the respect which is due to them, ought to be joyned with acknowledgement of superiority, which is honouring, or lowly reverence.

4. 2. That reverence ought not to be performed by in-ternall estimation onely, but by words, gestures, and deeds also.

5. 3. Inferiours also ought willingly to learne those things of such superiours, as will bee for their proficiency in living well: and those things they have learned, they ought upon just occasion, gratefully to professe, Act. 18. 26.

CHAP. XX.

Of the mutuall obligation betweene Superiours in power, and those which are subjected to them.

Quest. I. What is the duty of this kind of Superiours?

1. A 1. They ought to procure as much as in them lyes, for those which are their subjects, that they may lead a quiet and peaceable life in all godlinesse and honesty, 1 Tim. 2. 2. The reason is, because hee which is superiour in power, is the Minister of God for good to others, Rom. 13. 4. Therefore hee ought first so to direct all his power. that God, whose Minister he is, may bee honoured by it: and then, that from the same power the greatest good may come to the subject.

2. 2. Hence, they ought as much as in them is, 1. To procure for their subjects all meanes of living well. For the foundation and chiefe act of supream power amongst men, is the communication of good, in respect of which, those, to whom it is communicated, depend on him that did bestow it, and are subject to him.

Secondly, to free them from danger or feare in doing well, for this is protection, which is the conservation of the good they have; and therefore it is a kind, at least according to to the continuation of it, of communicating good.

Thirdly, to stirre them up to good by all just meanes, and draw them from evill; for that is the end of the meanes of their support and conservation.

Quest. 2. What is the duty of subjects towards those which are Superiours in power?

3. A. 1. They owe to them that speciall reverence, which not onely respects eminency in degree (for such is due to our Superiours either in age, or gifts) but also originall eminency, on which they doe depend according to their well being, in some way as on it's cause.

4. 2. They owe to them subjection, by which they so acknowledge their power and authority, that they study to preserve it unhurt. For the power and authority of the Superiour, can no more actually subsist, without this subjection, then one relative without it's correlative. To this subjection, not onely all violent insurrections, but contempt also, and disesteeme is repugnant. For although this subjection towards men, is not properly of the soule it selfe, yet it ought to proceed from the soule; Ephes. 6. 6. 7. Col. 3. 23.

5. 3. They owe to them obedience, by which they are ready to performe those things which are appointed by them. This obedience is distinguished from subjection, as the speciall from the generall. For subjection in common, respects the authority, and power of the Superiour; but obedience respects the precept, or command which proceeds from that power.

6. 4. Hence, First, there may bee subjection, where there is not obedience, as in the humble denying of obedience, when that which is commanded by the Superiour, is manifestly unlawfull.

7. 5. Hence also, Secondly, the rule, of obedience and reason, why it is not to bee performed, in unlawfull things, floweth; because no man is bound to obey any one, but as farr as hee is subject to him, but God will not, that men should be subject to men, either to doe unlawfull things, or to sinne.

8. 6. They owe to them an humble gratitude, by which they must study according to their ability to recompence those benefits, of which they are made partakers by their power.

CHAP. XXI.

Of the mutuall obligation betweene Man and Wife.

Quest. 1. How the Husband ought to beare himselfe to-wards his Wife?

1. Ans. 1. Hee ought to reckon of his Wife in all things, as his neereit Companion, and as part of himselfe, or of the same Whole, in a certaine parity of honour, Ephes. 5. 28, 29.

And hence first, there ought to bee a most sociable and intimate affection betweene Man and Wife.

Secondly, A cruell, offensive, or contumelious usage of the Wife, is altogether different from the true nature of wedlock, Colos. 3. 19.

Thirdly, There is a singular Honour in a practicall way due from the Man to his Wife, 1 Pet. 3. 7.

2. 2: Neverthelesse, hee ought in all things to beare himselfe, as the head of his Wife; 1 Corinth 11. 3.

And hence first, Hee ought to excell in knowledge and prudence, that so hee may rightly give example, governe, and direct the Wife depending upon him, 1 Pet. 3. 7. 1 Cor. 14. 35.

Out of which prudence, hee ought often to depart from his owne justifiable right, and consider the infirmity of his Wife, and bee more forward, then shee in the patient toleration of all weakenesses, 1 Pet. 3. 7.

3. 3. Hee ought to provide for her all things necessary, according as his estate and condition give leave, 1 Tim. 5. 8. Hee ought to governe her in those things, which belong to good manners, and household affaires, Numb. 30. 14.

Quest. 2. In what sort ought the Woman to beare her selfe to her Husband?

4. Ans. 1. Besides the Common duty of sociable and intimate affection. Shee ought in the first place to submit her selfe to him as to her head, 1 Cor. 11. 3. Ephes. 5. 22. Coloss. 3. 18. 1 Pet. 3. 6.

5. 2. Shee ought so to carry her selfe, that shee may bring honour, (and if it may bee) gaine to her husband, Prov. 12. 4. and 14. 1. and 31. 10, 11, 12, &c.

6. 3. Shee ought with feare and submisse reverence, have a care that shee doe not offend her Husband, Ephes. 5. 33. 1. Peir. 3. 2.

7. 4. Shee ought in all things so to behave her selfe, that her Husband may content himselfe in her, as in another himselfe, Psalm. 45. 11, 12.

CHAP. XXII.

*Of the Mutuall obligation betweene Parents

Quest. 1. What ought Parents to doe for their Children?

1. Ans. 1. They are first bound to nourish their Children, till they are fit to helpe themselves; 1 Tim. 5. 8. And this duty ariseth out of the very propension of Nature, which is common to Man and Beast. For even wild Beasts doe nourish their young, till such time as they grow somewhat bigge. And out of this reason, it must needs follow, that it is a sinne in that Mother, that without some just cause hindring, doth not nurse her Children with her owne breasts.

2. 2. They are bound either by themselves, or others, to bring them up in the Discipline, and feare of the Lord; Ephes. 6. 4. And the reason is, because Parents ought not onely to provide that their Children may live, but that, (as farre as in them lieth) they live well to God.

Hence first ought (they according to their apprehensions) instruct them in the Principles of Religion, that they may from their tender yeares conceive the seeds of conscience, religion, and good manners. 2 Tim. 3. 15. 1 Reg. 18. 12. Prov. 4. 3, 4. and 31. 12.

Secondly, They ought by all fit meanes to deterre them from evill, and incite them to good; 1 Sam. 3. 12. And for this reason, not only a verball, but a reall correction is in its place requisite, Prov. 13. 24. and 19. 18. and 22. 15. and 23. 13. But yet such a moderation this here to bee observed, that the Children bee not provoked to wrath, Ephes. 6. 4. Col. 3. 21.

3. 3. They are bound so to exercise their paternall authority, that it may redound to the greatest benefit of their Children, not onely while they are in their Nonage but afterwards also. And to this place, two things chiefly have respect:

First; That they provide for them some honest, and fit course of life, Prov. 22. 6.

Secondly, That when it shall bee needfull, they provide for them an honest and fit marriage, 1 Cor. 7. 38.

Quest. 2. What, and of what kind is the power of Parents?

4. Ans. 1. The power of Parents, is the title, that they have over their Children by reason of the generation, and education of them. And hence, all Paternall authority, is terminated in the good of their Children, by governing and restraining them, nor may it be extended to the power of life and death.

5. 2. The chiefest power of Parents over their Children, is then, when they are destitute of the use of right reason: for so long, all the actions of the Children, are subject to the command of the Parents, because they are not able to governe themselves.

6. 3. When they are arrived at their perfect use of reason, the power of the Parents doth chiefly consist in those things, which seeme to bee of moment for the government of the Common family. In respect of other things, the authority is lesse in the Parents, but the bond of obedience, seemes to bee stronger upon the Children, because then they doe more understand what they are to their Parents.

7. 4. After, that by the explicite or implicite consent of their Parents, they are seated in their owne power: then doth the authority of Parents (as it is properly so called) cease, though on the Childrens part, the duty of gratitude, observance, and filiall piety, may never have an end.

Quest. 3. What are Children bound to doe for their Parents?

8. Ans. 1.

8. Ans. 1. They owe to their Parents, as their Parents doe also to them a singular love, the want, of which naturall affection, is reckoned among the most odious vices, Rom. 1. 31.

9. 2. They owe a singular reverence and honour, as the words of the fift Commandement intimate, to which contempt, mocking and scoffing them, are opposed as most abominable finnes, Lev. 20. 9. Deut. 27. 16. Prov. 20. 20, Prov. 25. 5. and 30. 17.

10. 3. They owe them subjection and obedience, 1 Tim. 3. 4. Tit. 1. 6. Ephes. 6. 1. Col. 3. 20.

11. 4. They ought to have a singular patience, in hiding and bearing with the infirmities of their Parents, Prov. 23. 22. Gen. 9. 22.

12. 5. They ought to feare them, Lev. 19. 3.

13. 6. They ought with all gratitude to repay their love and care in doing good to them as occasion shall serve, 1 Tim. 5. 4. Matth. 15. 4. 5. 6. Marc. 7. 12.

14. 7. All these duties ought so to be performed by the Children, that they may beare the name of piety, 1 Tim. 5. 4. Because the Parents in regard to their Children, doe beare a singular image of God, as hee is the Creatour, Sustainers, and Governour.

CHAP. XXIII.

Of the mutual obligation betweene Masters and Servants, what, and of what kind it is,

1. Ans. 1. Servitude is much different from the state of a child.

First, In respect, it is not from nature, as that of a child, but either undertaken by voluntary consent, or else imposed by way of punishment.

Secondly, In that the condition of a Sonne tendeth chiefly to his owne proper good, not of his Father; but servitude doth aime directly at the good of the Master, and not of the Servant.

Thirdly, In that Children are not ordinarily enjoy'd any worke, but what is ingenuous, but Servants are bound to doe all kind of worke.

Fourthly, In that the subjection of Children is not alwayes in the same proportion and equality, but Servants owe their perpetuall endeavours without all distinction of time:

Fifthly, That in all things, Children are more tenderly and favourably to be used then Servants, Prov. 29. 21.

2. 2. Perfect servitude, so it be voluntary, is on the patients part often lawfull betweene Christian and Christian, because indeed it is necessary: but on the Masters part who is the agent, in procuring and exercising the authority, it is scarce lawfull; in respect, it thwarts that generall Canon, What you would have men doe unto you, even so doe unto them; Matth. 17. 12.

3. 3. Perfect servitude, by way of punishment, can have no place by right, unlesse for some hainous offence, which might deserve the severest punishment, to wit, death: because our liberty in the naturall account, is the very next thing to life it selfe, yea by many is preferred before it

4. 4. The condition of those men, who are for ever bound and enslaved to some certaine kinds of work: And of other Servants, who hire themselves out for a time at such or such a price, is not perfect servitude.

5. 5. Servants owe to their Masters subjection as well as honour; And therefore, they ought not to runne away from their Masters: because this were the same, as to take away another mans proper goods; and so no lesse unlawfull then very Theft, Ep. ad Philem.

6. 6. They ought to obey their Masters in the Lord, in all things, wherein they are subject. And this obedience, should not guide it selfe with an eye upon the knowledge of Men, but of God; nor should it aime chiefly at the reward to be receiv'd from Men, but from God; Coloss. 3. 22. 23. 24. Epbes. 6. 5. 6.

7. 7. They doe not onely owe this subjection and obedience to good and mild Masters, but also to the bad and harsh, 1 Pet. 2. 18. And the reason is, because the primary ground of this duty is not the merit of the Masters, but the ordinance of God, Rom. 13. 3. But those Servants, which have faithfull, and good good Masters, ought not thence take any occasion to bee slack in their subjection and obedience, but rather so much the more encrease it. Because both their owne charity and their Masters merit it. Gratitude is hence augmented: and so where the Masters deserve more, and the Servants are more engaged, the servile duties ought not there to bee slackned, but the rather encouraged, 1 Tim. 6. 2.

8. 8. It is the generall duty of Masters, that they doe not exercise an absolute Dominion over their Servants; nor imagine, they are granted any such jurisdiction, but a limited Dominion, whereof they are to give account to God, as the common Master of them, as well as their Servants, Ephes. 6. 9. Col. 4. 1.

9. 9. They ought to give their Servants what is their due, Colos. 4. 1.: (that is,) all things that are due to them for their labour, Iac. 5. 4. that is, all maintenance agreable to their service and attendance, such as is diet, cloathes, and lodging, Prov. 31. 15.

10. 10. They ought also to doe them what is fit as well as just; Col. 4. 1. (that is,) such things, which though they cannot bee exacted by the Servants, as of right their due, yet ought of right reason to bee allowed; such offices are to shew some speciall favours to a servant, that is, singularly trusty and discreet, Prov. 14. 35. and to promote him as much as is fit, Prov. 27. 18. and 17. 2. And not to forsake and cast off a Servant in his sicknesse; Matth. 8. 6.

11. 11. Moreover they ought to have a care that their Servants bee instructed in the Doctrine of Religion, and to see that they frequent holy exercises, and also to lead them in the right way, and to turne them out of the way of sinne, as appeareth in the fourth Commandement, Prov. 29. 12.

12. 12. They ought to beare themselves toward their Servants with humanity, and meekenesse; not imperiously, and dominerig, dealing with them as if they were beasts rather then men, Ephes. 6. 9.

13. 13. They ought to correct saucy Servants, Prov. 29. 19. or if they bee incorrigible, to turne them out of doores, Psalms. 101. 6.

CHAP. XXIV.

Of the mutuall obligation betweene Ministers and their Flocks.

Quest. I. WHat is the duty of the Ministers?

1. Ans. 1. They ought so to be- have themselves towards the Congregation as Servants, and not Lords; 1 Pet. 5. 3. 2 Cor. 4. 5. Now they are Servants of God as their proper Lord; Act. 20. 19. And of the Congregation as the object, whereupon their paines and service is bestowed. And hence it is, that being considered, as they are Christs delegates, bringing and executing his Commands by speciall commission, they doe all things with authority; Tit. 2. 15. Although considered in themselves in their manner of working, which concerns their persons, they are the Servants of all men; 1 Cor. 9. 19.

2. 2. They ought by all meanes to endeavour, to fulfill their ministry, Col. 4. 17. As well intensively in being zealous and instant in doing their duty, as extensively in looking to every part of their duty; 2 Tim. 4. 2. And all this constantly without thought of looking back, Luk. 9. 62.

3. 3. They ought in all duties of piety to behave themselves exemplarily toward their Flock, 1 Tim. 4. 12. 1 Pet. 5. 3.

4. 4. They ought to put a manifest difference betweene the good and the bad, that they may convert the bad from their badnesse, and confirme the other in their good way; Jer. 15. 19. 23. 14. 15. 17. Ezech. 13. 18. 22.

5. 5. They ought to put some difference betweene those, that are more, and these, that are lesse perfect among those that are good. And accordingly accommodate and apply themselves in all things; 1 Cor. 3. 1. 2.

6. 6. They ought to performe all these things with singular diligence as sculdiers; 2 Tim. 2. 4. as Husbandmen, 1 Cor. 3. 9. as Shepherds and Watchmen ready to give an exact account of all things to God, Hebr. 13. 7.

7. 7. They ought to doe all these things so, that they may appeare not to respect themselves, but onely the glory of God, and the edifying of his Church.

Quest. 2. What is the duty of the people towards their Ministers?

8. Ans. 1. They ought to shew them singular reverence for the dignity of their place, in which Christ hath seated them as his vicegerents; Esa. 52. 7. Rom. 10. 15. And this reverence though properly it bee but civill, yet in respect it is not onely enjoyned by the Religious worship of God himselfe, but is directly and immediately derived from it, and hath an individuall connexion with the same, it is therefore of a singular nature by it selfe, (that is,) participatively Religious.

9. 2. They ought to have them above measure deere; 1 Thessal. 5. 13. Gal. 4. 14. 15. For they who are made Partakers of a great benefit, cannot choose, but extremely love those, by whom as by instruments, it was conveyed to them.

10. 3. They ought to bee obedient to them, Hebr. 13. 17. And this obedience, as it looketh upon the will of God, manifested by them to us, ought to bee spirituall in purely inter-nall acts. It is also requisite, that obedience bee yielded unto them in other things, which belong to their office, so there bee not in such things any shew of sinne, scandall, or any notable inconvenience.

11. 4. They ought to provide, that they want nothing to maintaine themselves decently, 1 Cor. 9. 11. Galat. 6. 6. Rom. 15. 27. 1 Tim. 5. 17. Nor is this any free or charitable donation, but a just and exactible debt, Ibid. 18.

12. 5. All these ought so to bee performed, that it may adde cheerfulness to the Ministers in the performance of their duties; Hebr. 13. 17.

13. 6. But because, these things are not due for the titles sake, but for the Divine ordination and the workes sake; 1 Thess. 5. 12. 13. They are not therefore to be observed to Men-servers, nor to the absolutely unworthy.

CHAP. XXV.

Of the Mutuall obligation betweene Magistrates and Subjects.

Quest. 1. WHat kind of power is that of Magistrates?

1. Ans. 1. It is the greatest of humane powers, because it is above all other, and ruleth them, Rom. 13. 1.

2. 2. It is the institution of God; that in generall, there should bee Magistrates and publike Governours, Rom. 3. 1.

2. 4. But that in speciall, it should bee in this, or that forme, is the device of men, 1 Pet. 2. 13.

3. 3. Hence, this power is not absolute, but carries a double limitation, one from the will of God, whose Minister every Magistrate is, Deut. 17. 18. 2. Another from that will of man, which is included in those conditions and Lawes, in which the power of rule is founded.

4. 4. The right of Kings, 1 Sam. 1. 8. 9. 11. which is quoted by some (as it is in the old translation,) to prove the unbounded power of their rule, doth no more prove any such power, then the same word doth approve and allow of the iniquity of the Priests, 1 Sam. 2. 13.

5. 5. It is not to bee denied, but that some people compelled by necessity, may so sell themselves over to a King, that they may bee all justly his slaves, Gen. 47. 23. But wee must not presume this, because it is not evident; because it is against custome, & against all naturall inclination: neither can it lawfully or justly bee aymed at by any Prince: because it is his duty chiefly to have an eye upon the common advantage of his subjects: Neither would such a government constitute a City or Body Politick, but rather a Lordly Domineering, and a monstrous slavery.

Quest. 2. What is the office of a Magistrate?

6. Ans. 1. Hee oweth to his subject an eminent protection, whereby they may stand safe from all perturbation, feare, or impediment in their honest course of life, 1 Tim. 2. 2.

Esa. 32. 2. and hitherto belongeth the curbing and repressiō of the wicked, Psalms. 101. 8.

7. 2. Hee oweth to them eminent direction, by providing so for them, that they want no meanes, whereby they may bee advantaged in living well, Psalms. 72. 6. 7.

8. 3. The chiefe care of the Magistrate ought to bee, that hee promote true Religion, and repress impiety. Esa. 49. 23. Psalms. 2. 11. Examples of this care are commended in David, Solomon, Iosaphat, Hezekiah, Josiah, &c. The businesse of the Lord, and the busines of the King, are not so disproportionat, (as you may see in the 2. Chron. 19. 11.) but that the care and knowledge of the things which are Gods, may well belong to the King: But they are thus truly distinguisht, that in the manning of affaires, the King play his part politikely, and the Priest his Ecclesiasticallly.

9. 4. The Magistrate ought to further and promote the externall happinesse of his subjects, and not disturbe and overthrow their fortunes by unjust exactions, Prov. 28. 15. 16.

10. 5. And to this end, their lieth upon the Magistrate a singular care of the Lawes and Judgements, that they bee as well executed as constituted with all Justice and equity; Esa. 10. 1. Ierem. 5. 1. Deut. 1. 16. 17. 2 Chron. 19.

11. 6. Hee ought to shew his subjects a good example, and that by reason of his place, in an eminent manner, Psalms. 101. 1.

12. 7. In his manners, hee ought to shew himselfe as a Brother to the rest, and in his function as a Father; Deut. 17, 20. Esa. 12, 21.

Quest. 3. What is the duty of Subjects toward their Magistrates?

13. Ans. 1. They ought specially to pray for them, and that all manner of prayer; 1 Tim. 2, 1, 2. Psalms. 20. And this duty is to bee performed, not onely in respect, the good of the subject, is included in the good of the Magistrate, Ier. 29, 7. 1 Tim. 2, 3. But because indeed, a singular part of the honour of God, depends upon their power and administration, 1 Pet. 2, 17.

14. 2. They owe to them singular honour, Prov. 24, 21.

Rom. 13. 7. And there is a double ground for this; First, The ordination, and very image of God, which shineth in their eminence, Rom. 13.

Secondly, Those blessings, which are derived to the Subjects by them, as instruments of God, Psalms. 72.

15. 3. They ought out of singular reverence have a care, least they passe any rash censure upon their government, Exod. 21, 28. Eccles. 10. 20. 2 Per. 2, 10. Jua. 8. And the ground of this caution is:

First, That Candor which as it is due towards all men, so especially towards Superiours.

Secondly, The difficulty of searching the originals, and causes of publike businesse.

Thirdly, That moderation, by which wee ought to tolerate light infirmities and offences, and pardon them for publike quietnesse sake.

16. 4. They owe to them subjection and obedience, Rom. 13, 2, 5. Tit. 3, 1. And the ground of this is:

First, That supereminency of power, which Magistrates have received for the direction of subjects, which cannot by any means attaine it's end without the obedience of those subjects, Rom. 13. 1.

Secondly, That common good, which floweth from this order of rule and subjection.

Thirdly, Feare.

Fourthly, Conscience towards God, Ibid. vers. 5.

17. 5. They ought to performe all duties toward them, and pay tributes, and the ground is:

First, The due care of the common good.

Secondly, The debt of gratitude, for those benefits which are derived to all through that publike administration.

Thirdly, The debt of Justice, for the publike paines discharged by the Magistrates.

Quest. 4. Whether or no, and how farre humane Lawes bind the conscience?

18. Ans. 1. Nothing but the law of God doth properly, directly, immediately, and by it selfe bind the conscience:

First, Because the Conscience or Soule of man, is not properly subject to any, but God alone.

Secondly

Secondly, Because the onely rule of our conscience, is the Law of God written in our hearts, Rom. 2. 15.

Thirdly, Because man cannot indeed judge of the conscience.

Fourthly, Because they cannot inflict any spirituall punishment upon the conscience.

19. 2. Yet neverthelesse, humane Lawes are to bee observed out of conscience towards God, Rom. 13.

Fifily, Because the Law of God, hath constituted this power and order, and hath enjoyned us to yeeld obedience and subjection to the same, Ibid.

20. 3. Now, because the Law of God, doth directly and immediately enjoyne subjection to such supereminent power, therefore in all humane Lawes, the subjects are bound not to oppose them out of contempt of authority, nor thinke of any thing, which may carry the face of such scandalous rebellion; Because the contempt of authority, and the offence thereby given to others, is by it selfe a sinne against the Law of God.

21. 4. Those humane Lawes, which doe either urge or declare the Divine, or doe directly further the conservation thereof, doe bind even the conscience, and the reason is because such Lawes, in that respect doe partake the nature, and force of the Divine Law.

22. 5. Other humane Lawes, because they may bee either just, or unjust, or partly just, and partly unjust, and that by reason of the efficient matter, former or end, or in respect of this or that subject, or adjunct, therefore they doe not so absolutely bind, as that every violation of any of them should inferre a mortall sinne. For if it were so, then as many Lawes as there were, so many snares for soules there were, and they that live under Lawes, should bee subject to many more finnes, then they who live among barbarous people, either quite without Lawes or but a few.

23. 6. The violation then of such or such a Law, which is purely humane, is not any speciall kind of sinne, in respect of the matter of Law, but is onely so farre forth a sinne, as it breakes the Law of generall obedience; insomuch, that all transgressions of such Lawes, may bee reduced to one kind of sinne.

24. 7. The obligation of a Law, must not bee stretcht beyond the just intention and mind of the Lawgiver. But it is to bee presumed, that no man would oblige his subjects to a mortall guilt and utter damnation, for every neglect of his will and pleasure. Nay if in some case, the Law cannot possibly bee observed, but some great dammage, scandall, or inconvenience must needs follow, it is to bee presumed, that the Lawgiver never intended, that the Law in such a case should bee observed.

25. 8. If the intention of the Lawgiver should be unjust; nevertheless, the intention and end of the Law it selfe, if it (at least) bee lawfull, is alwayes just, right and the common good.

26. 9. The intention and obligation of a Law, ought not to bee stretched beyond the cause and ground of that Law; so that the ground or cause ceasing, the obligation of the Law is to cease too.

27. 10. The obligation of a Law ceaseth, when either through dis-custome, or some contrary custome, out of silent consent, or the connivency of the Magistrates, it is esteemed as abrogated. Now Magistrates may bee said to consent (at least interpretatively,) to the abrogation of any of their positive Lawes, when for a long time, and publicly, they know them to bee neglected, and yet they doe not re-claim them.

28. 11. Many Lawes are purely penall, so that they are well enough observed, if the penalty due to the breach be undergone.

The reason is, First, Because the end of the Law is to deterre men from the common, or frequent use of such or such a thing, to which end, the constitution of some penalty may suffice.

Secondly, Besides in all such Lawes, there is a tacite compact and agreement, that the penalty onely bee undergone upon breach of them.

Thirdly, Vnderstanding men never make any scruple of conscience in such Lawes, if there be neither contempt, scandall, shall, nor any great dammage in the offence. Such are the Lawes against hunting, and fishing, and against the taking of fowle or fish, and against the use of this or that kind, of habit or meates, &c.

29. 12. Nor doth this penall Law bind a man to undergoe the penalty, unlesse the Iudge determine it so, that the penalty bee suffered, and for the most part too, not unlesse the sentence bee put in execution. For the penall Law binds onely in order as the punishment must bee inflicted, the delinquent not being of his owne accord to undergoe or demand it, which were ridiculous.

30. 13. In all doubtfull cases, wee must presume upon the justice and equity of the Law, and the moderate intention thereof, or else upon the obliging force it beareth.

CHAP. XXVI.

Of the Equity of the Mosaicall Lawes, which are appendixes to the fifth Commandement.

Quest. 1. WHether it bee just, that hee, who strikes or curses his Parent, according to Law should bee punished with death? *Exod. 21, 15, 17.
Lev. 20. 9.*

1. Ans. 1. The equity of this Law, seemes to be approved by the Lord under the new Testament, Matth. 15, 4. Mark. 7. 10.

2. 2. Paricide of all finnes against men is the most horrid; Now to strike or curse ones Parent, is a certaine degree of paricide.

3. 3. Those finnes which are against nature, or against the Law of nature are most heynous: because that Law which is more written in our hearts, hath more of Law in it, in respect of the more cleere manifestation and concomitant conviction; whereby the contumacy of that man is more condemned, that shall violate such a Law, Rom. 1, 26, 27. 1 Tim. 5. 8. It is right therefore, that the most grievous

vous punishment may bee appointed for such, who are not afraid to commit such kind of faults.

4. 4. In such sinnes, there is a complication of many sinnes.

For first, The chiefest duty of charity is heynously violated in its prime object.

Secondly, The crime of greatest ingratitude is incurred.

Thirdly, There is a cleere profession of the worst kind of disobedience.

Fourthly, There is an open disclaiming of all reverence whatsoever.

Fiftly, The Image of God is foulely violated.

5. 5. Besides in that kind of sinne, are contained the seeds of many other sinnes.

For first, The bonds of domestick Discipline, being quite rent asunder, there is open way made to all licentious manner of sinning.

Secondly, By such courses, there is contracted a disposition and habit of contumacy and rebellion towards all rebellion, and even towards God himselfe.

Thirdly, The love of Parents, and the care necessary for their children is extinguisht.

6. 6. There are many conveniences doe arise from the constitution of so heavy punishment for this crime.

For first, Children will containe themselves in a dutifull carriage towards their Parents.

Secondly, Parents will bee the more carefull and exact in the right education of their Children, least by their fault, they perchance fall into that capitall offence.

Thirdly, Youth will bee exercised in the reverence due to all their Superiours, and to God himselfe, and also in the right estimation of the nature of the sinne.

Quest. 2. Whether or no, is that Law in Deut. 21, 18. just, which appoints death to the rebellious child?

7. 7. Ans. 1. The Equity of this Law, doth appeare by the causes of it.

For first, such a Child is here meant, who with riotings and drinkings, disturbes and destroyes the peace of the family.

mily and estate of his Parents, Verse 20. Prov. 19, 26; and 28, 7, 24, and 29, 3. Now in such a Child, the crime of theft and robbery is eminent, and that too, with a singular aggravation in respect of the parties, against whom it is committed.

8. 2. An incorrigible Child is here meant; Verse 18. Now such a Child to his obstinate disobedience, hath annexed an absolute despaire of his conversion, insomuch, that nothing can bee expected from such a one, if hee should bee suffered to live; but that hee will bee hereafter, as pernicious to the Common-wealth, as formerly hee hath bene to the private family.

9. 3. Such a Sonne is here meant, as hath estranged from himselve the affection of his Parents, and hath forced them to bee his most severe Accusers, Verse 19. Prov. 19, 26. which to some parents is worse then death; 2 Sam. 18. 32, and 19, 1.

10. 4. The like Equity appears from the conditions, requisite to this Law.

For first, The execution of this Law, is not the pleasure of the Magistrate immediately, but in the will of the Parents, who for the most part doe rather offend by too much indulgence.

Secondly, This Law is enacted not as if it were an injunction commanded to the Parents, but as a power granted to them, to exercise if they please.

Thirdly, This power too, is not granted to all Parents, but onely to such, as those, who have discharged their duties in the private education and due correction of their Children. It is not permitted to others, to complaine publique of that untowardnesse and dissolutenesse of their Children, which they may thanke themselves for, and they must beare those inconveniences, which they have brought upon themselves, as just judgements by God inflicted upon them.

11. 5. Moreover, by the event it appeareth, that the Law, was not unjust, for although, it cannot bee doubted, but Children in a family, were by this meanes better kept within the limits of their duty, yet wee meet not with any example in the whole old Testament of any Child, that for this cause suffered death after this manner.

Quest. 3. Whether or no, that Law bee just, Deut. 17, 12. that the man should suffer death, that hearkeneth not so the Priest or Judge.

12. Ans. 1. The Equity of that Law, will easily appear, if wee observe.

First, That it is not there meant of simple disobedience, but such a disobedience as carrieth with it petulancy, arrogancy, and sedition.

Secondly, 'Tis a disobedience in those things, which are manifestly and plainly determined by the Law of God.

Thirdly, It is meant of the disobedience of those, who by a speciall compact, have promised obedience.

13. 2. Neverthelesse, in respect, this Law did partly depend on the peculiar state of that people, it cannot bee in its rigour extended to all people.

CHAP. XXVII.

PRECEPT. 6.

Of Meeknesse, Patience, Long-suffering, and Placability.

Quest. 1. What bee the grounds of these virtues?

1. Ans. 1. That Meeknesse towards God, whereby wee receive his word with quiet and composed affection, Iam. 1, 21, 22. and submit our selves unto his yoke, Matth. 11, 30.

2. 2. That Charity towards our brethren, whereby wee wish unto them all good, and pittie their afflictions, Gal. 3, 22, 23. Ephes. 4, 2. Tit. 3, 2.

3. 3. Humility, whereby wee are ready to submit to our brethren for their good, Ephes. 4, 2. Col. 3, 12, 1 Pet. 5, 5. Phil. 2, 3.

Quest. 2. By what meanes are these vertues discernable from from other dispositions, which beare some resemblance with these, and usually the names?

4. Ans. 1. These Vertues doe shew themselves in quite different wayes, as reason perswades, and as cause doth require, Gal. 4, 20. Jud. 22, 23. For it is not indeed, Meekenesse or Patience, but meere stolidity rather, which doth not conceive the causes and reasons of things, and rightly weigh and ponder them.

5. 2. These Vertues cause men, willingly to part with many things, which are properly their owne, but by no meanes will they suffer any thing of Gods right to be bated, Gal. 4, 12. For it is not Christian patience or meekenesse, but a mere stupid dulnesse, which doth not, with zeale oppose it selfe against all sinne, 1 Sam. 12, 13.

6. 3. These Vertues doe so dispose a man, that they doe not at all hinder him, but helpe him, in seeking the amendment of his brother that sinneth, Gal. 6, 1. For it is too fond a tendernesse, and not meekenesse, which doth so much respect peace, that it neglects the care of it's duty.

7. 4. So that these kind of Vertues, though they should never be altogether wanting in a Christian man, yet sometimes, in respect of the exercise of them, they ought to be intermitted, 1 Cor. 4, 21.

Quest. 3. By what motives is the mind of man, stirred up to the study of these Vertues?

8. Ans. 1. If wee consider the meekenesse, patience, and long-suffering, which God sheweth towards us; Eph. 4, 32. Col. 3, 13.

9. 2. If wee but consider our selves, what wee have beene, Tit. 3, 3. and what still wee are, Gal. 6, 1.

10. 3. If we consider, how God can, and usually doth, dispence his grace, 2 Tim. 2, 25.

CHAP. XXVIII.

Of Slownes to wrath, and of Wrath.

Quest. 1. What kind of fault is Slownes to wrath?

1. Ans. 1. It is a fault arising from defect of anger, by which the duty of justice, or charity, whereby a man is bound to admonish, chide, and punish an offender is intermitted.

2. 2. It hath indeed some resemblance with meekenesse, but such a one as boldnesse hath with fortitude, and oblinacy with constancy.

3. 3. It hath some shew of long-suffering, or that slownes to wrath, which is a vertue. But here is the difference, that the long-suffering man is slow to wrath out of understanding, and that not humane but heavenly, Iam. 3, 17. But this is either out of dulnesse of nature, or of humane and carnall wisdom.

4. 4. The proper evill therefore, in this slownes to wrath, (of which wee speake,) is when it is the cause of the omission of some duty to be done, 1 Cor. 5. with 2 Cor. 7. 11.

Quest. 2. What kind of sinne is Wrath?

5. Ans. 1. It is a sinne in excesse of anger, because it observeth not the due meane.

6. 2. Now it is a sinne, First, in respect of the impulsive cause, when without just occasion one is moved to anger; Matth. 5. 22.

7. 3. Secondly, In respect of the degree or measure, though in a just cause, Gen. 49, 7.

8. 4. In the respect of the end, when it is not directed to the glory of God, and repressing of sinne, but is raised either for our credit sake, or our pride, or our profit. Prov. 13, 14, and 21. 24 and 28, 25.

9. 5. In regard of the direct effects, as when it breakes out into execrations and cursings, Psalme, 106. 33.

10. 6. In

10. 6. In regard of the indirect effects as when it be-reaves a man of his understanding; Prov. 16. 32. Luc.
21. 19. Or renders him unfit to execute Gods Justice, (idest,) to performe those duties which God hath prescribed and doth require.

11. 7. In regard of the time it lasteth, when in due time it is not appeased; Ephes. 4. 26.

---

CHAP. XXIX.

Of Concord and Good-will.

Quest. 1. IN what thing consisteth Concord?

1. A. 1. Concord is commendable in that which is good, but not in that, which is naught. For otherwise bee the designe knowne to bee naught, which they conspire about it is faction not Concord; but if that which is naught seeme to bee good it is an apparent Concord: onely, and not a true one; Phil. 1. 27. and 2. 2. and 4. 2.

2. A. 2. Hence true Concord is not properly among any but the good, because it is versed about that, which is good, which is not indeed any way sought for but by those, which are good themselves, Inſomuch, that there is never any solid Concord among the wicked: because the object and ground of true Concord is still wanting.

3. A. 3. Concord is an agreement of Hearts or Wils about some desireable good: so that although in many things it may seeme little different from peace, yet it contains within it somewhat more; for wee may have peace with the wicked; Roman. 12. 18. but no Concord.

4. A. 4. Now because the Wils of men, may bee united in some one good, and yet not have a perfect harmony of opinions about those things, which belong to that good; therefore a dissent of opinions about those things, which are not absolutely necessary, although it somewhat take from the perfection of Concord, yet it is not repugnant to Concord it selfe; Phil. 2. 15. 16.

Quest. 2. Whether or no Concord bee a distinct vertue and necessary?

5. Ans. 1. Concord as it implies an effect of union betweene divers parties, is not it selfe a vertue, but somewhat flowing from the vertue of those divers. But the love of Concord is an act of vertue. But the inclination and disposition to this love, is onely rationally distinguished from Charity.

6. A. 2. The desire of Concord is necessary; First, In respect of Charity from whence it flowes, and which it cherisheth, promoteth, and completeth.

Secondly, In regard of Iustice, whose impediments it removeth.

Thirdly, In regard both of publike and private felicity, which is more easily alwayes procured by the united forces of agreeing good men.

Quest. 3. In what thing consisteth good Will?

7. Ans. 1. It properly consisteth in that desire, whereby wee wish well to other men; But, First, The true and principall good things are to bee wisht both to others and to our selves; I meane Spirituall good things, and other things onely, as they may further these, 3. John 2. 2.

Secondly, No good is to bee wished to one man, which may by any meanes bee prejudiciall to another. Therefore wee may not wish, that those may thrive either in wealth or honour, who plot mischief against others.

CHAP. XXX.

Of Equanimity.

Quest. 1. VV What is Equanimity?

1. Ans. 1. Equanimity is that Moderation in conversation, with men, whereby Concord good will and peace is maintained; Phil. 4. 5.

2. A. 2. Now this Moderation consisteth properly in a relaxaa relaxation of the strict and rigid Law, as reason shall thinke fit; all circumstances being rightly considered.

3. A. 3. But this Relaxation that may partake the nature of a vertue, is to carry an even temper betweene two extreames; so that it doe not without discretion relaxe or pardon, either all things or nothing.

4. A. 4. This moderation in the first place is to bee observed in our speech, so that wee doe not arrogate so much to our selves by our words as our due is; Philem. 18. 19.

5. A. 5. It must bee observed too in our deeds, that wee doe not alwayes indeed challenge that right, which by our speech perhaps wee maintaine to bee due; I Cor. 9. 15.

6. A. 6. The like Moderation is to bee observed in a gentle toleration of those infirmities in others, which wee cannot by any meanes cure; Rom. 15. 1. I Thessal. 5. 14.

7. A. 7. This same Æquanimity is to bee exercised in the interpreting of other mens words or deeds, so that wee allow of all that is good, and entertaine all doubtful things in the better sense as farre as may bee; and that wee doe not too much aggravate what is evill, I Cor. 13. 5.

8. A. 8. It is to bee exercised in passing by and pardoning manifest injuries, when thereby either Gods glory, or the publike or private good of any men may thence bee probably expected, I Cor. 13. 7.

CHAP. XXXI.

Of Manslaughter.

Quest. 1. VV What is Manslaughter?

1. Ans. 1. By Manslaughter is meant any unlawfull killing of a man, to which may bee referred the maiming of a man as being an imperfect and inchoate killing. Hence it is no sinne of Manslaughter, where where a man is killed by Justice. But to this Justice, thy conditions must needs concur. First, That the cause bee weighty and just. Secondly, That it bee done by publike authority. Thirdly, That it bee done orderly and by just meanes. Fourthly, That it bee done out of right intention and zeale for Justice, not out of wrath, hatred, or desire of private revenge, or any other inordinate passion.

Quest. 2. What is a just cause that a man should bee killed.

2. A. That onely in conscience ought to bee held a just cause, which God in his law hath set downe for just, either in expresse words, or by cleere consequence: the life of a man is not subject to the pleasure of any but of him, who is the Authour and Lord of life. It is the part of all men to obey the Law which forbids murder, without any exception which is not allowed by the Authour of the Law.

Quest. 3. Whether it bee not in some cases lawfull to kill the innocent?

3. A. Out of intention and designe, it is by no meanes lawfull in any case:

But first, It is sometimes lawfull to deliver an innocent to some that will kill him. As in case, a Tyrant would quite destroy a City, were not some innocent man given to his rage: That innocent man is bound by the Law of nature to offer himselfe to dy for the safety of the whole Common-wealth: Nay the Common-wealth cannot retaine or defend him, but ought to urge him to the performance of his duty in this part.

Secondly, By accident an innocent may sometimes bee killed. As if in case necessity require, that some one or more guilty should bee killed, and they defend themselves by the interposition of one not guilty: Or in case, any man flying for his life through a narrow passage, cannot choose but trample upon another.

Quest. 4. Whether, it bee nat lawfull, to kill a man sometimes by private authority?

4. A. 1. It is sometimes lawfull to kill a man without giving any publike notice thereof, but it is then onely lawfull.

full, when the cause doth evidently require, that it should bee done; and there is no possibility of making publike complaint: for in such a case every private man becomes a Minister of publike Justice, as well by Gods allowance, as Mans consent.

5. A. 2. Hence it is no doubt, but a man lawfully sometimes in his owne defence kill one that assaults or sets upon him.

6. A. 3. But that this may bee lawfull. It is, First, Requisite that the assault bee violent and properly so termed; For it is force only which must be repelled by force, and not every injury.

Secondly, That the proper and true defence bee in the very act of the assault, at least in a moral sense if not in a physicall, and not any prevention of the assault or subsequent vindication; for if the assault may with any possibility bee avoyded, no reason will allow that it should come to this.

Thirdly, That nothing bee offered under shew of defence which is not necessary to that end, for if it exceed measure or the moderation of a blamelesse safeguard, it is not properly a defence, but one assault opposite to another.

7. A. 4. The justification or recovery of a mans honour, whether it suffer by words or any reproachfull signes, or by deeds, as by a blow, or any slanderous accusation; or by provoking to fight, or the like, is by some reduced to this kind of defense, but very unjustly.

For first, This honour, which is so much stor'd upon, is for the most part a vaine thing, depending on the opinion of vaine men, and by no meanes comparable to the life of a man.

Secondly, True honour is rather advanced then impaired by the contempt of such kind of injuries.

Thirdly, Any man may defend his honour by some other meanes.

Fourthly, That impaired credit, cannot bee made whole by the death of the Detraكتور.

Fifthly, If this were granted, the way were open to frequent Murders.

8. A. 5. Yet this defence is justly referred to the guarding of ones chastity, because hee that assaulteth anothers chastity, doth offer the greatest violence that may bee, and that with so heynous and irreparable an injury, that it may seeme rightly to bee equall to death it selfe.

9. A. 6. It is rightly too extended to the defence not onely of our selves, but of others that are innocent. For this is required of the Law, that wee love our neighbour as our selves.

10. A. 7. Now the person assaulking or some other circumstances may bee such, that hee that is assaulted, should rather suffer death then resist with any such defence.

Quest. 6. Whether in no case it bee lawfull to kill ones selfe.

11. A. 1. To kill ones selfe out of direct intention so to doe, is one of the most heynous kinds of Murder.

First, It is a grievous sinne against the authority of God, who is the sole Lord of life.

Secondly, It sinneth against the goodnesse of God, whose great benefit it contemneth.

Thirdly, Against the providence of God, whose order of things it endeavoureth to disturbe.

Fourthly, It is a sinne against charity, whereby a man is bound to defend his owne life no lesse then his neighbours.

Fifthly, Against Justice, which doth not allow any man for his private pleasure to deprive the Common-wealth and other Societies, of which every man is part of any one member.

Sixthly, Against the Common inclination of nature, and so against the Law of nature.

12. A. 2. It doth not excuse this sinne, though it bee done for the avoydance of any great evils whatsoever, or for the getting any great good whatsoever: or for revenge upon our selves for our finnes past. For no man is a competent Iudge to decree such a thing upon himselfe: Not is evil to bee done, that good may come thereof, or that other evils may not follow; and therefore in vaine is that fact of Saul by some excused; who fell upon his sword, least hee should have beene mocked by God and his Enemies; 1 Sam. 31. 4. And such was the fact of Razis, 2 Mach. 14.

13. A. 3. Neverthelesse it is lawfull and sometimes just, that a man suffer himselfe to bee killed by another; and not forbidding him when it is in his power, whether it bee for the satisfaction of Justice, or for the great good of others either publike or private, for this is not to doe evill, but onely to suffer it.

14. A. 4. It is lawfull too sometimes to expose ones selfe to such a danger, by which death must necessarily though indirectly follow. So a souldier may keepe his Station, or obey any command of his Leader though hee know hee shall therein bee killed. So Sampson (out of singular instinct) did directly intend to kill the Philistims and not himselfe, although hee fore saw, that his owne death must needs follow, Judg. 16. 30. And somewhat like is the case of those, who with gun-powder blow up the ship they are in, least the Enemy should possess her. For they doe not directly intend to kill themselves, but disadvantage the Enemy.

Quest. 7. Whether or no the casuall killing of a man bee a sinne?

15. A. 1. That is said to bee done by chance, which is done beside the scope and intention of the Doer. And this may bee done two manner of wayes. For it is either absolutely beside intention both in it selfe and in its cause, or in it selfe onely and not in it's cause. If man bee slaine the first way it is not Manslaughter, but onely materially, and so it is no sinne, because it is by no meanes voluntary; Exod. 21. 13. Numb. 35. 22. 23. Deut. 19. 5.

16. A. 2. If it bee done the latter way, it is the sinne of Manslaughter, but weightier or lighter, as it was more or lesse voluntary in the cause.

17. A. 3. And in such cases bee finnes most, who doth some unlawfull act, whereupon immediately followeth the death of another: As if a man should unjustly strike strike another without any thought of killing him, and yet his death should follow upon the stroke.

18. A. 4. The next degree of sinne, is when a man doth an unlawfull act, wherupon the death of another followeth mediately or by another party: As if a man should cherish some Ruffian or notable Murderer, although hee doth it not to that intent that hee should kill any body.

19. A. 5. Hee sinneth heavily in this kind, who being about some warrantable businesse, doth not take speciall care to avoid Manslaughter. As when any man dischargeth a Gunne, or throwes a dart or shooteth an arrow without any care, not regarding whether any body bee in the way or no.

20. A. 6. But seeing, some are by duty bound to have a more speciall care for the prevention of Murders, any negligence in such persons, is joyned with the greatest guilt: as if the Ministers of publike Iustice, doe not do their duties in preventing Murders and all causes or occasions of them.

21. A. 7. Nor indeed can those bee well excused, who neglect that duty, which out of Charity they are bound to performe, as in case one doe not succour another in great danger, when hee may.

CHAP. XXXII.

Of Duels.

Quest. 1. WHether or no Duels bee lawfull &

1. Ans. By Duels in this Question is not understood every single combate or fight betwixt two (for so the necessary defence of ones owne life against an assaulter should bee called in question,) but such a one onely, which is directly and voluntarily undertaken, upon agreement and bargaine, with danger of killing or mayming. And such kind of Duels are simply to bee condemned, as well in him that receives the challenge, as him him that provokes, though the fault bee greater in him that provokes.

2. A. 2. There is no allowance of such a kind of fight in all the Scriptures, so that the Lawes of duelling (as also of drinking) were never of Gods writing, but of the Devils tradition for the ruine of Mankind. The combate of David with Goliath, besides that it was with publike authority undertaken, and for the common good; and as it were a partiall Battle, having no correspondence to a private duell agreed upon two, was also out of a singular motion of the Holy Ghost, and so not ordinarily to bee imitated.

3. A. 3. It is not a meanes apt, fit, or necessary to any good end. Not to the clearing of any doubtfull truth, or the quitting ones selfe of any accusation, because seeing, God hath no where promised, that he will by this meanes give a testimony to truth, to advise with or call his extraordinary providence thereto, is nothing else, but by a Divellish invention to tempt God. Not to the defence of worldly honour, because that honour which is to bee maintained this way, is vaine, and onely in credit with vaine men, who out of a perverse abuse and barbarous custome have chetisht such an opinion, which honour or reputation whosoever preferres before the honour of God, which must needs bee violated by such sinne, is not fit to bee reckoned among Christians. Not to the defence of the honour of God, as if any man should challenge an infidell, or accept a challenge from him, that so upon the event the true faith should appeare. Because so either the infallible truth of faith, should rely upon a fallible meanes, or else a miracle must be presumptuously expected at Gods hands, which cannot bee without tempting of God. Not to the execution of any just revenge, because neither is there any revenge allowed to private men, neither in that equall condition which Duellers are in, is there that power which is requisite to the revenging of injuries.

4. A. 4. A Duell is a Warre betwixt two, which is no more lawfull then betwixt many, and so is of the same nature as a Civill Warre, which willingly or by compact to undertake all men would account for a madnesse.

5. A. 5. In a Duell, every man is his own Iudge in his proper cause, & that too being distempered by anger, rage, and desire of revenge, and subjects to himselfe to the same danger with his adversary, in either slight or waighty cause.

CHAP. XXXIII.

Of Warre.

Quest. 1. WHether or no Warre bee lawfull for Christians.

1. A. It is called a Warre, when there is a strife by force, which is either privately undertaken of which wee spoke before, or publicly, which is now the Question.

2. A. 1. Warre by it selfe, nakedly and entirely considered is a kind of evill.

For first, On one side at the least, there is the evill of guilt or sin: because there can be no War just on both sides.

Secondly, On both parts there is the evill of punishment, for the many inconveniences, which it alwayes bringeth with it. Whence in the Scriptures it is reckoned among the heaviest of Gods judgements.

3. A. 2. Hence it is a signe of a barbarous and cruell man, if any one bee given to warre simply desiring it and delighting in it, Psal. 120. 7.

4. A. 3. Neverthelesse by it selfe and intrinsically considered it is not alwayes unlawfull, but it may bee warranted upon some conditions: for had it beene so unlawfull, then certainly it had never beene allowed by God in the old Testament, which no body can deny.

5. A. 4. Iohn the Baptist the Forerunner of CHRIST in his Sermon of the Kingdome of God, or the Baptisme of repentance to the forgiveness of sinne, (idest,) Of the new Testament, Luc. 3. 14. being asked about the duty of Souldiers, perswadeth them not to cast away their armes, but to use them rightly. And the like is the reason of the Centurions and Souldiers, which were converted to CHRIST; Luc. 7. Act. 10. Act. 13. 12.

6. A. 5. CHRIST the Lord, Matth. 22. teacheth us to give unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsars, among which were payments for souldiers wages and costs of Warre, which it were unlawfull to supply, if Warre simply were unlawfull.

7. A. 6. The Apostle, Rom. 13. doth openly witness, that a supereminent power doth beare the sword, as the Minister of God, and therefore that the publike power of the sword is to such committed.

8. A. 7. In the Apocalipse are many Prophecies of Warres, which the Children of God should wage, and that with evident allowance.

9. A. 8. That highest power hath authority by the Law of nature (the Apostle in the 12. to the Rom. approving it) to repell injuries and vindicate the subject from them: But it often falleth out, that that cannot be done without open Warre.

10. A. 9. Those things which are contrarily objected out of Matth. 5. and the like places doe not shew, that all Warre is simply unlawfull.

For first, There is no new thing there enjoined, which cannot be shewed as a Precept in the old Testament, where Warre is allowed.

Secondly, Those things which are there said, are said to private men, in that they give any way to their affections and perturbations; Not to publike authority, which by God is constituted, a Revenger to execute wrath upon him that dothe evill; Rom. 13. 4.

Thirdly, There the hatred of enmity and meere revenge, not the care of Justice is forbidden.

Fourthly, Some Hyperbolicall speeches are there used, that wee might bee instructed how wee should bee prepared in our minds with the greatest patience where need requireth, and that wee ought to strive that way, to which by our nature wee are most averse.

Quest. 2. What conditions are requisite to make a War lawfull?

11. A. 1. There is required a just cause, that wee fall not into that fault which is so often with detestation recorded in the Psalmes; They persecute mee without a cause. Now every light and small injury is not a just cause of Warre, because Warre being such a thing which punisheth men with the most grievous punishments, it is not to bee undertaken, but upon some injury, which is great or heynous, either in it selfe, or in the consequences. Nor doth a great and heynous injury warrant a Warre, unlesse after the triall of all meanes of peace, Deut. 20. Jud. 20. 11.

12. A. 2. In the second place is required just authority. Now such an authority though in respect of a defensive Warre it is to bee found in every Common-wealth although imperfect; because all men have authority by the Law of nature, to defend themselves and to repell force by force, yet in respect of an assaulting Warre, it is not, but in the power of a perfect Common-wealth, which doth not depend nor hath any recourse to a superiour, but is in all things sufficient it selfe and entire in every point, which is requisite to a due Government. For an aggressive or assaulting Warre, is the supream act of vindicative Justice; Ier. 39. 5. and 52. 9. which kind of act can belong to none, but to a supream Judge, such a one as hath not any superiour, to whom hee is to have recourse, or by whom hee may demand fit satisfaction.

13. A. 3. Thirdly, A right intention is requisite: Not onely such a right intention in generall as aymeth at the glory of God, (which is the common condition of every good worke) but such a speciall one as immediatly concerneth the Justice of Warre, (id est,) that the Warre bee not waged out of passion, or hatred, but out of zeale for Justice, that Warre may alwayes tend to a fit peace and tranquillity as to its proper end.

14. A. 4. Lastly, There is requisite a just manner of waging. In which that generall rule of doing nothing contrary to the Law of God is as well to bee observed, as that speciall rule that wee doe no hurt to others, which is not convenient and necessary for the compassing the end of the Warre: Nor may the received Law of Nations be violated.

Quest. 3. It is here a Question about the first condition, how farre those that wage Warre are to be acquainted with the Justice of their cause.

15. A. 1. The Prince or Authour of the Warre, and those Souldiers of the higher ranke, who are admitted to Councils of Warre, are bound most diligently to weigh with themselves, and enquire of other prudent and religious men, whether or no they have just cause to make Warre. For, hee who maketh Warre, beares the place of a Iudge in the highest matter. Now a Iudge is bound to use all diligence in the examination of causes, that so hee may give sentence out of right judgement. It doth not therefore suffice to the Justice of a Warre, that a Prince doe beleve hee hath a just cause, but hee must be very certaine upon triall of knowledge. And hence, the adverse parties reasons, are alwayes to be heard, if they will discuss about, what is fit and good.

16. A. 2. If after sufficient examination and deliberation, the Justice of the warre doe still remaine doubtfull, whether the one part be in possession or not, there ought to be no Warre made, because, hee who wagemeth Warre in a doubtfull cause,

First, Sinneth in that, what hee doth, hee doth it not out of faith.

Secondly, Hee doth rashly expose himselfe and others to most grievous dangers, as well of sinning, as of enduring the miserie.

Thirdly, Hee giveth and executeth the sentence of vindicative Justice, without any manifest cause.

17. A. 3. Souldiers of the lower ranke, which are subjects to the Prince, making Warre, although in a cause manifestly unjust, they ought not to assist him, yet if after such triall as they may conveniently make, the cause doe not appear unjust, they may fight for their Prince.

For first, Such are not bound, neither are they able exactly to ponder the causes of Warre; but are onely the Executours of another sentence and instruments, which are not so much moved by their owne Councell or deliberation, as by the Counsell and deliberation of the principall cause.

Secondly, Because in a doubtfull cause, the safer part is to bee chosen. Now it is safer (where no injustice appears) to follow the command of the Prince, and provide for his owne and his friends safety, then for others.

18. A. 4. Neverthelesse, such Souldiers as are not subject to the Prince making Warre, ought not to assist him in the Warre, if they doubt the Justice thereof, because in doubtfull cases, the safer side is to bee chosen; but Souldiers being, they are free men, if in such a case, they abstaine from Warre doe no man any wrong: and if they undertake such a Warre, they offer violence to their owne consciences, and expose themselves to a great hazzard of doing the greatest wrong that may bee unto other men. And hence is it manifest, that those Souldiers who have saleable soules, and are ready to undertake any warre where 'tis probable they may have more wages, doe lead a most wicked life, and are in no wise excusable.

Quest. 4. In the second condition, it is a Question whether it bee lawfull for a Christian Prince in a just Warre to accept the aid of Infidels, or to give them aid in such a Warre.

19. A. 1. This thing considered absolutely, and by it selfe is not unlawfull for even as it is lawfull in a just Warre to use the helpe of beasts, as of Elephants, Horses, &c. So also is it lawfull to use the aid of beastlike men. Wee have a warrantable example hereof in Abraham, who joyned his forces with the forces of the King of Sodome; Gen. 14.

20. A. 2. Neverthelesse, by accident this falls out so often to bee unlawfull, that it ought not indeed to bee tried without speciall heed.

First, Because it beares a kind of show of diffidence, and inclination to compasse our ends either by right or wrong, and also of an unlawfull union with the wicked.

Secondly,

Secondly, Because hence usually, doe arise the greatest scandals both betweene Christians and Infidels.

Thirdly, Because Infidels usually keepe not faith, and so their ayd proves a losse.

21. A. 3. The Israelites did not onely sinne for those reasons, when they used the ayd of Infidels, but also, because they had a singular protection from God promised to them, nor could they bee vanquished, as long as they relied upon God, 2 Chron. 16. 8. 9. and 19. 2. 20. 36.

22. A. 4. Such a League of friendship as binds to a mutuall assistance to any Warre, whatsoever absolutely and without exception of cause is scarcely, or rather not scarcely fit to bee entred with any faithfull Prince, much lesse Infidell. For this were to expose ones selfe to the hazzard of a most heynous sin, and to suffer ones conscience to depend upon anothers pleasure.

Quest. 5. In the third condition, it is a Question what kind of sinne is the Minister intention of him, that makes Warre, as for hatred, envy, desire of honour, or riches?

23. A. 1. A bad intention alwayes vitiateth any morall action whatsoever, because the end which is intended and moveth the Will, hath the greatest power in producing the act. Now in waging of Warre, the sinne of a bad intention is so much the more heynous, by how much the more unwillingly any Warre should bee undertaken, for the cruelty of its nature, though with a good intention and not without a just and necessary cause.

24. A. 2. Neverthelesse, the worke it selfe (as it is a thing different from the action) is not changed either by a good or bad intention, for the intention is the cause onely of the working, not of the thing wrought, it appertaineth to the manner of doing, not to the manner of the thing done, which ought alwayes to bee esteemed by it its owne internall nature.

25. A. 3. Hence in a Warre undertaken upon just cause and good authority it is not unlawfull to use the helpe of those, who fight out of a bad intention, either out of hatred, violence, or ambition, or desire of prey.

26. A. 4. And

of Warre.
26. A. 4. And hence also a bad intention in a Warre otherwise just, although it bee a sinne, yet it doth not inferre any obligation of restitution, because in it selfe, it is not a sinne against Iustice, for even as a Iudge, who punisheth a man out of hatred though deservedly, although hee commit a sinne thereby, yet hee is not bound to restitution, even so nor hee, who out of hatred makes a just Warre.

27. A. 5. In an unjust Warre, the bad intention doth augment and aggravate the injustice thereof. For seeing the injustice of the cause, is sometimes qualified and excused by an invincible ignorance; a bad intention maketh, that such an ignorance cannot beare the force of an excuse.

28. A. 6. Besides, not onely that intention which is in it selfe bad, but also any vaine or frivolous intention, (as the ostentation of forces,) is not a fit cause for any man to make a Warre: because it is against right reason, to choose a dangerous and dreadfull means to compasse a vaine end.

29. A. 7. Moreover such a lawfull intention, as the exercise of Military forces and the gaining of experience, or the expectation of reward, though it bee in a just Warre, if they are principall motives to it, and not the right it selfe, cannot choose but viciate the whole action.

Quest. 6. It is a Question in the fourth condition. First, What persons are they that wee may lawfully dammage by Warre, and how farre may wee dammage them.

30. A. 1. Every just Warre is waged properly and directly against the Offendours and those that are guilty, that is against those, whose cause and fault it is, that the Warre was begunne. Therefore those onely in true vindicative Iustice ought directly and of purpose bee punished. For without some preceeding crime, no punishment can bee justly inflicted upon any man. So that the Israelites seeme to have sinned grievously, by slaying the Sonnes of Benjamin without choyce, Iud. 20.

31. A. 2. Among the guilty, neither Children nor ordinarily Women, nor indeed any other quiet men, who disagreeing are forced to stay with the enemies, ought to bee numbred.

32. A. 3. Those that are guilty, are not to bee hurt any any further then the compassing the just end of the Warre doth require, that is so farre, that they make a faire restitution of the thing taken away, or that the injury bee sufficiently revenged, or a peace established.

33. A. 4. Those that are innocent may bee hurt, besides the intention of him that hurteth them, or by accident: as it falls out in any lawfull assault of a City or Ship, in which perhaps, there are sundry persons that are innocent; so in the spoile of goods, by which the enemy was some way more encouraged to a Warre: Because by such a conjunction, these innocents are reckoned with the guilty; and all the injury which is offered them, is indeed caused by those guilty men; who detain them in their power, and from them restitution is due: Neverthelesse Charity and Equity doth require, that the Warre bee so managed as the innocent may bee as little damnified as is possible.

34. A. 5. And hence the leave given to Souldiers to spoile any City, as they shall please themselves cannot lawfully bee maintained, because among many other horrid things, which thence follow in such a pillage, there is no distinction set betweene the guilty and the innocent.

35. A. 6. Hence too it is rather to bee thought robbery then a just Warre, where the oppression of innocent husbandmen is intended, and such a kind of Warre is that, which Ferdinand the Emperour now wagemeth in Germany.

Quest. 7. In what things may wee damnifie Enemies?

36. Ans. In those things, which belong either to their just punishment or our necessary security, as in depriving them of life, outward, goods, and liberty. In which things too, such a moderation is to bee observed as the rule of Justice and the necessity of the security doe perswade. But there can bee no violence offered to chastity, or bee permitted without the guilt of a grievous sinne. For such things doe neither belong to Justice, nor security, nor indeed can the sinne of the agent bee here seperated from

from the punishment of the patient.

Quest. 8. Whether or no it bee Lawfull to use deceits and stratagems in a just Warre.

37. A. 1. God himselfe the Authour of Justice, did by his owne mandate approve of deceits and Military stratagems in his people, Jos. 8. 2. as it is in many other examples; Jud. 7. 16. &c. and 20. 29.

38. A. 2. But now wee must not reckon lies among lawfull stratagems, because either to give an unlawfull promise, or breake a lawfull one, is alwayes unjust.

39. A. 3. Neverthelesse, in stratagems 'tis lawfull, not onely to conceale your Councils and intents, but also by some deeds and other signes to make a shew of somewhat you do not intend. For although directly in words to expresse any thing that is false, is an unjustifiable ly, neverthelesse, to expresse either by gestures or deeds some such thing, (id est,) to doe that, which probably may induce the adversary to guesse wrong, is no ly at all: Because those deeds which doe not of their owne nature, nor by any institution or mutuall agreement, signifie this or that businesse, are not of the same nature or speech, and so have not any proportion to a ly, although they bee in a wrong sense taken by the Spectatours, and wee did foresee and desire, they would be so interepreted.

CHAP. XXXIV.

Of the Equity of some certaine Mosaicall Lawes, which belong to the 6. Commandement.

Quest. 1. V What right was there in that, hee which presumed to kill his Neighbour, should suffer death himselfe? Exod. 21. 14.

1. Ans. 1. The sense is, and that most just, that the intent of killing a man, or the plotting anothers death, should bee punished with death.

2. A. 2. But this is to bee understood, not of every kind of desire to kill another, though in words expressed,

but

but of such an intent so followed, that the Murder is in doing, (that is,) begunne to bee put into act, in so much, that the Murder may follow, as farre as was in his power, that desired it.

3. A. 3. Now such an intent, is to bee punished as the deed, because such a man, hath done all that in him lieth to kill the other, and so hath actively murdered him, though the passive designe did not perhaps follow. And so hee that wittingly and willingly did his endeavour to have the innocent condemned, is to bee punished as a Murderer, Deut. 19. 19.

4. A. 4. And such is the reason, in case a man by weapon or poison attempt to kill another, or if on purpose, hee set a house on fire, in such cases not so much the deed as the intent, not so much the event as the Will and Councell is to bee considered.

Quest. 2. What right is there in that Law, of giving lesse satisfaction for the killing or hurting of a Servant, then of a Freeman? Exod. 21. 21. 26.

5. A. 1. There is some difference betweene Servants and Free-people, for matter of striking, which comes hence; in that, Servants and Slaves, are by their condition obnoxious to blowes and stripes, and are compelled to answer their faults by the paine of their bodies; Luk. 12. 47. 48. But the condition of Ingenuous and Freeman, exempts them from all such kind of violence.

6. A. 2. Neverthelesse, the Servant is not subject to his Master as farre as his life; but onely to the utmost of his endeavour, and in all things tending thereto. For God onely the Giver of life, is Lord thereof, nor can any but God, or hee that beares the authority of God, as a Iudge lawfully take it away.

7. A. 3. The Master therefore is not to bee excused, if hee strike his Servant with a weapon or instrument of slaughter; but if it bee with an instrument of correction, hee is, Exod. 21. 20.

8. A. 4. Hee that striketh his Servant with a rod, is not presumed to have done it with any intent to kill him, unlesse such force and cruelty were used that the Servant dye under his hand, or immediately after the blow.

9. A. 5. That reason, which is given in the 21. of Exod., ver. 21. (For hee is his money.) Doth not excuse a man in the Court of conscience, as if his money had procured him a title over the death of his Servant, nor indeed in the outward Court, but onely as farre as it is presumed, hee had no intent to kill him, but onely intended to chastise, and give him due correction; in as much, as hee had lost the money, hee bought him for.

Quest. 3. What Equity is there in that Law of the Beast, that killeth a Man?

10. A. Unreasonable Creatures are punishable for the killing a Man, not as if they had thereby contracted any sinne to themselves; (for they are not capable of any guilt:)

But first, That the Owners of such Beasts, might thereby bee punished, because they had not with diligence and care enough kept them in.

Secondly, That by this means, the life of man, might bee more tenderly esteemed, and all things that make against it, might bee had in the more detestation.

Thirdly, That beastly minded men by the death of such Beasts, might the more bee deterred from Murders.

Quest. 4. What Equity was there in that Law, which forbade men to kill some certaine Beasts? Deut. 22. 6. &c.

11. Ans. Divers things of this kind are forbidden, not as if they were Murders or sinnes properly against Iustice;

But first, Because in such things, the cruelty and savagenes of some mens natures, appeareth, and is exercised and increased thereby, whence Murders oftentimes spring. Prov. 12. 10.

Secondly, Because by such rudiments men, are taught to abhorre cruelty.

Thirdly, Because God would accustome his people, to keepe themselves from such kind of sinnes, nay from the very shew of them. For God would have his Law guarded with such kind of injunctions as with bounds to keepe men off from more heynous sinnes. Now as the bounds and wall which defended the house was reckon'd as one with the house, so these appendixes to the Commandments, make but one Decalogue. Like to this, is the reason that forbiddeth to boyle a kid in the Dams milke, Exod. 23. 19. and 34. 26. Deut. 14. 22. &c.
and

Quest. 5. What right is there in forbidding to eat bloud? Lev. 7. 27. and 17. 10. and 19. 26, Deut. 12. 16. 23.

12. A. This law partly aymes at the further detestation of cruelty; in which respect, it is joyned with that severe prohibition of Murder, Gen 9. 4. 5. and partly for a Religious and Typicall observation; in which respect, it is joyned with the Law of sacrificing; Lev. 17. 10.

Quest. 6. What Equity was there in the constitution of places of refuge by the Law? Exod. 21. 13. Num. 35. 22. Deut. 19. 4.

13. A. 1. They were not properly places of banishment, but of refuge; for banishment is a punishment, but refuge tendeth to an immunity from punishment. Nor indeed is there any thing in the Law read of such a punishment as banishment; all punishments being either by death, mulet, stripes, or servitude.

14. A. 2. This refuge was provided for those onely, who had unawares killed any man, as by the instrument and manner is described, Num. 35. and is illustrated by an example, Deut. 19. But to wilfull Murderers, all such refuge, is severely denied; Exod. 21. 13. of which wee have an example in the 1 Reg. 1. and 2.

15. A. 3. This refuge was provided for the innocent to defend them from the heedlesse and rash fury of the friends of him that was so killed, not to take them out of the Magistrates jurisdiction.

16. A. 4. The ordinary places of refuge, were some certaine Cities of the Levites, not onely that those that fled thither, might remaine in more security by the reverence, which all gave to the Levites, but also, that by their examples and advice, they might the better bee instructed, both to a religious bearing of themselves under their condition, and to the carefull execution of other parts of their duty.

17. A. 5. The extraordinary places of refuge, were the Temple and the Altar of God, Exod. 21. 14. Because the reverence of God, which was moved in all men at sight of that place, did repress all violence.

18. A. 6. In ordinary places of refuge, the Man-slayer might stay, till such time as the anger, griefe, and trouble which the deceased parties friends had conceived were over: Now that time did depend upon the life of the high Priest, partly that by Gods consent, hee might bee restored and partly that an opportunity of reconciliation, might bee taken from the joy of that new succession.

19. A. 7. If before that time, the Man-slayer was taken out of the City of refuge, it was indulged to the griefe of the deads friends, that they might unquestioned kill him.

20. A. 8. The Equity of such places, was; First, In that Man-slayers were not to bee punished before the cause was heard.

Secondly, In that it was fit, such should be succoured who either against or beside their intent had done some mischief.

Thirdly, That there was an account to bee made of the naturall griefe of men.

Fourthly, That there was a singular reverence due to holy places, but yet that there was not any impunity granted to wicked men for their sakes.

CHAP. XXXV.

Præcept. 7.

Of wedlock.

Quest. I. WHich is the more excellent state, Marriage or single Life?

I. A. I. If they are simply and by themselves considered, there is neither vertue nor vice, nor any worke morally morally good or bad included in either, because they are naturall formes of living, neither of which is either enjoyned or forbidden, 1 Cor 7. 25. Seeing then, that neither state is morally good but indifferent, it cannot bee properly said of either, that it is better then the other.

2. A. 2 Now because among those things, which are of a middle nature, and neither good nor bad, some are greater furtherers of vertue and good works, and some lesse; (as knowledge doth more helpe piety then strength of body, or riches;) they are therefore to bee esteemed or neglected according to the power they have that way. And in this sence is the present question of the comparison of Wedlock, and a single life to bee understood.

3. A. 3. Now in this very comparison, if the things bee absolutely considered, the state of Wedlock seemeth more excellent.

First, Because in the beginning, it was ordained by God, for the bettering mans condition, Gen. 2. 18.

Secondly, Because, that since the fall, it hath that end, and use that it directly makes for the avoyding of sinnes and temptations; 1 Cor. 7. 2. 5. 9. And by that meanes for the conservation and promotion of vertue.

4. A. 4. But if the comparison bee made in respect of this or that person, judgement must then bee given partly from the gift he hath, and partly from those circumstances which Paul comprehendeth under the name of present necessity, 1 Cor. 7. 7. And if any man according to this consideration hath the gift or power, that other conditions concurring, hee findeth himselfe better able decently and fitly to serve God in his single life, it is better for him to remaine so, Verse 26. But if any after diligent examination, see that hee cannot doe his businesse so holily and conveniently in single life as in Wedlock, to such a one, the state of Marriage, is better then single life.

5. A. 5. This is the summe of the Apostles advice, that hee, who by temperance, and diligent warinesse and prayer, cannot avoyd burning, (id est,) such a burning of concupiscence which disturbeth the peace of conscience, should choose Wedlock: But as long as by such meanes, a man may

may avoid but ning all things being equally considered, it is better for a man to continue single, specially in time of persecution or the like.

Quest. 2. Whether or no, and for what reason Polygamy is unlawfull?

6. Ans. 1. Polygamy is a sinne against the first institution and law of Marriage, Gen. 2.

For first, God made one Man and one Woman, and joynd them together: infomuch, that what is superadded, must needs bee monstrous, Mal. 2. 15.

Secondly, By an edict from God, it is ratified that two onely, not three or more should bee one flesh, and that the Husband should cleave unto his Wife not to his Wives, Matth. 19. 5.

7. A. 2. Moreover, it is a sinne against the law of nature and right reason.

For first, it is against that instinct, which is inbred in man by nature.

Secondly, It is contrary to the nature of conjugall affection, which is so singular and proper to one, that it cannot admit any third person to the communion of the same thing, as experience sheweth us in conjugall jealousies.

8. A. 3. It is against the nature of the Matrimoniall contract, whereby it comes to passe, that the Married party hath not his body in his owne power, 1 Cor. 7. 4. Whence bee that joyneth himselfe to another Wife, is said, to deale treacherously and unjustly, Mal. 2. 14. 15.

9. A. 4. It is against that united care, which should bee had of the progeny, and which the end of Wedlock requireth.

10. A. 5. It is contrary to that perfection, which is found in some brute beasts. For many fowles are observed not to couple but with one only, taught meerey by the instinct of nature: and reason doth dictate, that man should have greater continence, then any fowle whatsoever.

11. A. 6. It is against that naturall principle, Doe not that to another, which you would not have another doe unto you.

12. A. 7. It destroyeth the peace of the family, as experience teacheth, Gen. 4. 23. and 30. I Sam. 1. 6. Lev. 18. 18.

13. A. 8. Those ancient Fathers, who married more Wives then one, cannot bee excused, unlesse they had some singular dispensation. But because there is nothing in Scripture manifested unto us of any such dispensation, wee cannot affirme any thing for certaine, then that God tolerated some such things in them, and converted them to good.

Quest. 3. Whether or no, and how farre too nigh an affinity hindereth Marriage?

14. A. 1. That affinity which is contracted by carnall propagation from the same immediate stock and is called kindred of blood is a naturall impediment of Marriage.

First, Because such kinsfolke are from the beginning one flesh, and therefore are not so fit to bee made one of two, which is the nature of Wedlock.

Secondly, Because nature teacheth us to pay a peculiar observance and reverence to our Parents, and the next of our kinne, which reverence and observance cannot agree with the use of a conjugall state.

Thirdly, Because the encrease of neernesse and friendship, (which is one of the fruits of Wedlock;) in such a marriage of kinsfolke would bee lost.

Fourthly, Because the familiarity and acquaintance of kindred, would give an occasion of many inconveniences, if they had power of contracting Wedlock.

15. A. 2. That Spirituall affinity, which by the Papists is fained to bee contracted in the taking of Baptisme or Confirmation, or that Legall affinity which is made by adoption, as in case, a man take anothers child and make him his owne, hath not any force to hinder marriage, either from the word of God, nor the Law of nature.

16. A. 3. Those degrees of consanguinity and affinity with in which it is unlawfull to contract Matrimony, cannot safely bee defined to the direction of the conscience, but onely by the Law of God delivered by Moses, 18. Lev. wherein is unfolded the Law of nature.

17. A. 4. Those persons are to be reckoned among those degrees which have the same reason to be reckoned there as those which are, though they be not expressly named, as because in the Law, the Nephew is forbidden to marry with his Fathers or Mothers sister, it followes, that the marriage of the Vnkle, which his Brother or Sisters Daughter is also prohibited.

18. A. 5. Moreover, it is more safe for honesty sake, and to avoyd all shew of evill to obtaine from marriage with all such persons, as may but seeme to have the same reason of prohibition, as it is in next Cozens.

19. A. 6. Those degrees that are generally prohibited, may in case of necessity admit such exceptions as in Scripture are allowed.

20. A. 7. Besides those degrees prohibited by Divine right, the Civill Magistrate may prohibite a Matrimoniall contract to some persons for politike reasons. And so it is well in some places provided, that the Guardian marry not with his Ward.

Quest. 4. What, and what kind of consent, is requisite to lawfull marriage?

21. A. 1. A mutuall consent of the parties, is necessarily required to the essence of a conjugall state. Because in Wedlock, there is a mutuall surrender of bodies, and of power, and right over their mutuall bodies. Now there can be no lawfull surrender of that thing, which is anothers without his consent, as in all contracts doth appeare. And hence it is, that such a consent, is the immediate efficient cause of Matrimoniall conjunction, insomuch, that it is not in the authority of any humane power to joyne any in marriage without both their consents.

22. A. 2. This consent ought to be so declared by externall signes, that inward and harty consent doe manifestly appeare by them, (as farre, as morally one may guesse from them). For although ordinarily those signes are no other but words, expressing the sense of the mind, yet other tokens may be equivalent to words, if they make an undoubted consent appeare.

23. A. 3. The consent of both, ought to goe together.

as in other contracts. Yet it is not necessarily, that their consents be both at one time; but it is sufficient, if one party consent first, and that consent is thought still to be in force, for then in a morall sense, they are said to consent together.

24. A. 4. This consent must be voluntary and free, else it is not esteemed a humane consent.

25. A. 5. And hence, the consent of such as have not the use of reason, is of no force to such a contract.

26. A. 6. A compelled consent, such a one, as is forced by great and violent feare for that purpose raised, doth nullifie the contract, unlesse it be renewed or strengthened by a subsequent free consent. Now that feare, which in respect of some, may be thought light, in respect of weaker people may be counted great. For a great feare, which is not violent, but reverentiall, (that is,) such a feare as proceeds from a reverence towards Parents, doth not nullifie the consent: because such a feare, doth not extort a consent, but softly enticeth and perswadeth it.

27. A. 7. Such a consent as doth so proceed of error, as that the error was cause of the consent (whether it be mistake of the person, as it was in Jacob about Lea, Gen. 29. or of the condition or quality, which is essentiall to Wedlock, such as is the error treated of in the 22. Dent. 20. and as Ioseph suspected the blessed Virgine, Matth. 1: 18.) such a one I say, is not to be esteemed a consent.

28. A. 8. But if the mistake be but in some condition or quality, which is onely extrinsecall and accidentall, and nothing essentiall to the nature of marriage, then is the marriage no more to be nullified then the oath, which the Israëlites made to the Gibeonites upon mistake, Ios. 9.

29. A. 9. Moreover, the consent of Parents, and of such as beare their authority, in whose power the parties consenting are, is requisite. Now that such a consent of Parents, is requisite for the fairnesse of the marriage no man doubteth; but that is requisite out of necessity, the Papists doe not onely deny, but also anathematize all such as affirmed it; Concil. Trid. sess. 24. But if this Question bee rightly and civilly understood: so that by the name of Parents bee understood Father and Mother, but especially, the Father (for in Tutours and the Mother too properly, it is onely the Fathers power a little diminished;) and the consent or dissent of them bee removed from all injury, and bee grounded on good reasons, the affirmative part is more consonant to the word of God and reason it selfe, and that for these reasons.

30. A. 10. It is alwayes in Scripture attributed to the Father, that hee should bee the efficient cause of the marriage of his children; Deut. 7. 3. Ier. 29. 6. &c.

31. A. 11. The most allowed examples in Scripture shew alwayes this, that the beginning and ground of Matrimoniall contract, is from the consent of the Parent, Gen. 24. 3. 4. and 28. 1. 2. and 29. 19. &c.

32. A. 12. Nay after the consent of the parties, it is left in the choyce of the Father, whether hee will give his Daughter or no to him that hath laine with her; Exod. 22. 16. 17.

33. A. 13. Nor is Bellarmines answer satisfactory here, alledging. That the businesse here was not about any Matrimony already contracted, but about a future marriage enjoyed for punishment of the preceeding fornication. For it is absolutely shewed, that the dissent of the Father, is a just cause to hinder Wedlock, whatsoever the Man and the Maid have bargained, or shall hereafter bargain together. A vow made by a child unto God, (which oftentimes the Father hath lesse to doe with then the marriage of his children, and which in its nature containeth the most strict obligation) is not ratified without the explicit, or at least the implicit consent of the Father, Nam. 30. 4. 5.

34. A. 14. And that is a mere evasion, which Bellarmine here useth; That this law onely concerned Daughters, not yet come to mature age. For the businesse is about every Daughter, which is in the house or power of the Father, about every Daughter which is unmarried, being not a widow nor divorced, Vers. 6. 9.

35. A. 15. The

35. A. 15. The Sonne cannot alienate or give any thing away of his Fathers, without his Fathers consent, and consequently not himselfe, for hee is his Fathers.

36. A. 16. The Civill Lawes out of the principles of the Law of nature have provided, that the marriage of Daughters without the consent of Parents should not be ratified, and the Primitive Church both by Doctrine and practise, did in this part approve of those Lawes. For the punishment appointed for such marriages was, that, neither Husband or Wife, nor marriage, nor dowry should be acknowledged, and that the Children which should be borne, should be esteemed as Bastards; Instit. de nupt. s. penult. l. 2. d. de rit. nupt. l. dotis 68. de jure dot.

CHAP. XXXVI.

Of the Solemnities of Matrimony.

Quest. I. VV Hat right is there in Contracts?

I. A. 1. Contracts (as they are distinguished from perfect Matrimony,) are lawfull and mutuall promise of future matrimony expressed by some sensible signe. They are often distinguished from matrimony (in respect of the external Court) by that difference of time which the words pronounced doe ordinarily signifie to those that rightly understand them. For if the words import a consent of present contract, they constitute matrimony, but if onely of future matrimony, they make a bare betroathing.

2. A. 2. Although such kinds of contracts, are not absolutely necessary, (because all contracts, which may be lawfully promised for the future, may be at the same present time wholly perfitted,) yet ordinarily, they make for the fairenesse of the marriage. First, Because so there is a faire proceeding by just degrees from the beginning to the ends, (as in so waighty a businesse is fit.) Secondly, Because so the whole act is rendered more free from suspicion of rashnesse, and appeareth the more grave and deliberate.

Thirdly, Because by this meanes, the minds of the betroathed, are prepared and disposed to those affections, which in matrimony are requisite.

3. A. 3. Although lawfull contracts thus farre agree with matrimony, that any unjust violation of them, is all one as a violation of matrimony, Deut. 22. 23. 24. Nevertheless, for many causes contracts may bee broken, for which matrimony may not.

As first, if there bee some honest condition joynd to the contract, which is not performed.

Secondly, If there bee any certaine time appointed for marriage, and then one party is wanting, the other seemes to bee absolved of the promise, in respect, the condition was not performed.

Thirdly, If any thing fall out after the contract, which would have hindred the contract, if it had fallen out before, and doth reasonably alter the mind of one party.

Fourthly, If either party free the other of the promise made.

Quest. 2. What is to bee thought of Claudestine marriage?

4. A. 1. Claudestine marriage is such, as is secretly done, which two wayes is to bee understood, either when it is without meet witnesses, or without publike celebration.

5. A. 2. It may bee (setting aside positive lawes to the contrary,) that some such marriage may bee just and ratified in the Court of conscience, because all things essentiall to the nature of matrimony, may bee done in secret.

6. A. 3. Nevertheless, because most heavy inconveniences follow such kind of marriages; as unlawfull conjunctions, discords, and dissolutions of matrimonies contracted, &c. Therefore in the externall Court, a marriage wholly Claudestine, is rightly esteemed as none at all.

7. A. 4. The usuall conjurations, which are made in the inquiry of impediments, although they bee not of the essence, but onely the solemnity of marriage, yet in respect of many inconveniences which may follow, their omission sion, they ought ordinarily to bee premised.

8. A. 5. Publike celebration is necessary, not so much in respect of them that are to bee married, as in respect of the community, to which they are subject, and whose part it is to see, that marriage bee rightly performed.

9. A. 6. This celebration, though it may bee done by a Civill Magistrate, Ruth. 4. 1. Yet it is most fit, that in a Church it be done by an Ecclesiasticall Minister.

First, Because that ratification which is made in the name of God, by a Minister of God, before the Church of God is more weighty.

Secondly, Because the contract is more religious, and the obligation more piercing to the conscience.

Thirdly, Because a more powerfull benediction and sanctification is thence expected.

Fourthly, It appeareth by Tertullian, that it was a most excellent institution of Christians, that marriages should bee publicly solemnized and consecrated by the prayers of the Congregation; and Ministers, who writeth thus in his second booke; How shall I bee able to tell the happinesse of that marriage, which the Church maketh, which the obligation confirmeth, and the Angels acknowledge sealed, and the Father ratified?

CHAP. XXXVII.

Of the mutuall duties of Man and Wife.

Quest. 1. What are the duties which are mutually due betweene Man and wife?

1. Ans. 1. The first duty, is a speciall love, and such a one as is proper to Man and Wife, which therefore may bee termed conjugall, Ephes. 5. 28. 29. Genes. 2. 24.

2. A. 2. The second, is a speciall or conjugall honour, 1st Pet. 3. 7.

3. A. 3. The third, is living together, 1 Cor. 7. 10.
Now this living together containeth under it the ordinary dinary use of the same house, table, and bed,

4. A. 4. The fourth is, a mutuall communication of bodies according to the right end and limits of Wedlock with modesty and sobriety, 1 Thes. 4. 4.

5. A. 5. The fifth, is a communication of estates, and outward goods at least, as farre, as to the use of them, Ephes. 5. 20.

6. A. 6. The sixth, is a Communion in the ordinary worship of God, 1 Pet. 3. 7.

Quest. 2. Whether or no there is the same reason of these duties in the Man as in the Woman.

7. A. 1. In respect of the essence of the duty and obligation, there is the same reason in both. But yet for the manner of the performance there is this difference, that the man alwayes so behave himselfe, that hee bee acknowledged by his Wife as her Head, 1 Cor. 11. 3.

8. A. 2. Hence it is the Husbands part to cherish and keepe his Wife, and provide for her in all necessaries, Ephes. 5. 29. 1 Tim. 3. 4.

Secondly, To goe before his Wife in knowledge, and every way declaring the same, 1 Pet. 3. 7. 1 Cor. 14. 35.

Thirdly, In the governing the life and actions of his Wife, 1 Tim. 3. 4. 1 Cor. 11. 3.

9. A. 3. And hence, it is the duty of the Wife, First, To acknowledge herselfe subject to her Husband, Ephes. 5. 22. Secondly, To reverence her Husband, Ephes. 5. ult. Thirdly, To learne of her Husband, 1 Cor. 14. 35. Fourthly, To obey her Husband in the Lord as it becometh her; 1 Pet. 3. 5. 6.

Quest. 3. Vpon what causes may the Man and Wife live asunder?

10. A. 1. They may live asunder for a while by mutuall consent, 1 Cor. 7. 5.

11. A. 2. Absence too, may bee lawfull for a time upon some great cause, which cannot consist with a mutuall presence, 2 Sam. 11. 9. 10.

12. A. 3. If the Husband remove his dwelling upon any warrantable cause for a long time, and have a mind to carry his Wife with him, shee is bound to follow him, unlessc lesse some great danger of body or soule, is thence manifestly like to follow. For the Husband being the head of his Wife, may appoint both the place and manner of their habitation, 1 Cor. 9. 5. Gen. 12. 11. &c.

Quest. 4. Whether or no may the Wife give any thing without her Husbands consent?

13. A. 1. In some cases shee may, As first, If shee have free administration and power in some goods, which in many places is granted to Women; over such goods as they bring more then there dowry, and such as they have gotten by their owne industry.

Secondly, If shee make presents, and give almes, as other Women use of her ranke.

Thirdly, If it bee not any notable, but slight quantity for the proportion of goods, which shee and her Husband have in condition.

Fourthly, If it bee done out of presumption of the intent and consent of her Husband.

Fifthly, If in case it bee done for the prevention of some dammage otherwise likely to befall her Husband, 1 Sam. 25. 18.

Sixthly, If her Husband be either absent, or mad, or a lavish spender of his goods.

Quest. 5. Whether or no, and how farre it is lawfull for a Man to reprove his Wife being faulty.

14. A. Hee may and ought to restraine her by such meanes as are not repugnant to conjugall society, as by admonitions, reprehensions, and the deniall of some privileges which are due to a godly and obedient Wife. But it is by no meanes the part of any Husband, to correct his Wife with blowes:

Because first, It proceedeth from an unwarranted bitterness and cruelty.

Secondly, It is repugnant to the ingenuous, quiet and peaceable society of Wedlock.

Thirdly, It destroyeth conjugall affection, as well in the Husband, while hee useth his Wife as his Servant, as in the Wife while shee seeth herselfe contemned and tyrannically dealt with.

Fourthly, Experience teacheth, that this is not the way, either to the amending of the Wife, or the peace of the Family.

Fiftly, It is not allowed by any law, nor practised by any, but furious or drunken men.

CHAP. XXXVIII.

Of the dissolution of Marriage.

Quest. 1. VV Hether or no, and how Marriage may bee dissolved?

1. A. 1. Matrimony cannot by any at his pleasure bee dissolved. and for that cause, simply and absolutely considered is rightly termed indissoluble, Matth. 19. 9. Rom. 7. 1.

2. A. 2. Now Matrimony, whether consumate, or onely by contract ratified, hath this priviledge above other contracts, not onely from CHRISTs institution, but also from the Law of Nature, Matth. 19. From the beginning it was not so. The reason is, because Matrimony is not onely a Civill, but a Divine conjunction, whose Institutour and Ordainer is God himselve; Matth. 19. Whom God hath joyned, &c. And is of that nature, that it cannot possibly bee dissolved without the great inconvenience of both parties.

3. A. 3. Neverthelese it is not so indissoluble, but that upon such cause, as God approveth to bee just it may bee dissolved. For that indissolubility was not instituted for the punishment, but the comfort of the innocent, and doth admit some exception, in which God ceaseth to joyne them, Matth. 19. 6. 9.

4. A. 4. There is not any just cause of making, a divorce approved in Scriptures, besides adultery and the like horrid imparities, whereby it comes to passe, that two remaine no longer one flesh but divided; and so the faith of Wedlock, is directly violated; Matth. 5. 31st and 19. 9.

5. A. 5. Hence

5. A. 5. Hence any contagious disease is not a just cause of dissolving a consummate Marriage, although it may hinder conjugall conversation. Therefore in such a case, God who enjoyneth continence, will not deny it to such, as begge it by prayers, and seeke to obtaine it by the use of lawfull meanes.

6. A. 6. An obstinate desertion, although in the party deserting, it containeth no just cause of making a divorce, yet it makes a faire cause for the party deserted, after the triall of all other meanes in vaine, to suffer a divorce, 1 Cor.

7. 15.

7. A. 7. A voluntary and spontaneous absence, if it bee beyond the time appointed and continued by deceit, is of the same nature, with a professed desertion.

8. A. 8. The great danger, which one party may bee in by the cruelty of the other, or by any other manifest meanes of cohabitation, may bee just cause of retiring for a time, so to provide for his owne safety and security, but not for an absolute desertion, unlesse first hee bee deserted. For if one party drive away the other with great fierceness and cruelty, there is cause of desertion, and hee is to bee reputed the deserter. But if hee obstinately neglect, that necessary departure of the other avoyding the eminent danger, hee himselfe in that playeth the deserter.

Quest. 2. Whether or no Adultery committed, doe onely nullifie the use, or the bond too of Matrimony?

9. A. 1. It is cleere, that the bond it selfe is nullified.

First, Because the very essence of the contract, is directly violated: Now the contract ceasing, the bond grounded upon the contract doth necessarily cease.

Secondly, It is dissonant from all reason, that all Matrimoniall duties should for ever bee taken away, and yet the bond or obligation to those duties should remaine.

10. A. 2. The words of the Lord, in Matth. 5. 32. and 19. 9. have no distinction of limitation, of dimission, but doe simply and absolutely approve of dimission in the cause of Adultery: they doe allow therefore, not onely a partiall dimission, and in respect of some particulars as from bed or boord, but a totall one.

11. A. 3. The exception of fornication, Matth. 19. 9. signifieh a diverse thing (as Cajetane observeth) from other causes, and that diverse thing is nothing else but this, but that hee, who putteth away his Wife for fornication and marieth another, doth not commit adultery. The Confession of Cajetane upon that place is observable. The Text speaketh thus in the plaine literall sense: I understand therefore, that it is lawfull by the law of our Lord J E S U S C H R I S T, for a Christian to put away his Wife for carnall fornication, and that hee may marry another.

12. A. 4. The Apostle, 1 Cor. 7. 15. doth in expresse termes pronounce the deserted party to be free. Now that hee which is free, is free from the bond. But if in the cause of obstinate desertion without adultery the innocent party bee releast of the bond, much more sure is hee, so in the cause of adultery. I doe not onely wonder (saith Cajetanus,) but am amazed, that when C H R I S T doth so cleerely except the cause of fornication, that yet the whole torrent of Writers should neverthelesse deny that liberty of the Husband: And yet Paul not cleerely saying it, they allow a solution of Wedlock out of his words in a distinct cause, from what C H R I S T hath laid downe and solely excepted.

13. A. 5. But yet the bond of Matrimony, is not so broken by adultery, but that it may by the consent of the innocent party bee continued and renewed, 1 Sam. 25. 44. and 2 Sam. 3. 14. The reason is, because the divorce is allowed in favour of the innocent party, now hee that is innocent may part with his owne right. Neither is divorce enjoyned as a Præcept, but onely permitted and allowed as a priviledge: Therefore although, wee ought not so to connive at this sinne, that the amendment thereof bee wholly neglected, for that were to encourage wickednesse, yet no man is forbid to pardon the offence to the penitent so it bee without scandall.

14. A. 6. There would bee no Question about the offending party, if adulteries were alwayes punished as they they ought, and the Law of God requireth. Yet because usually one indulgence draweth on another, it seemeth reasonable, that they bee not wholly deprived of their naturall liberty.

15. A. 7. A commission of the same fault on both sides, seemeth to take away the right of divorce from either of them, for faults of an equall nature, are sometimes abolished by a compensation.

---

CHAP. XXXIX.

Of immodest Luxury.

Quest. 1. What kind of sinne is Luxury?

1. A. 1. Luxury doth generally note any excesse in the use of things, belonging to the decking of the body. For hee, which liveth too delicately and soft is said to melt in Luxury. But taken strictly and properly, it doth signifie a vice opposite to chastity by excesse in the use of things, which pertaine to generation. The reason is, because all excesse in the decking of the body, doth tend to that uncleannesse, as to the most full abuse of the body.

2. A. 2. It is a sinne most grievous in its owne nature:

For first, It destroyeth the soule, as it hath the nature of a burning, which doth consume, hinder, and oppresse the piety of the heart; 1 Cor. 7. 9. In which sense, such desires are said to fight against the soule, 1 Pet. 1. 12.

Secondly, Because lust doth pollute and defile the body more particularly, 1 Cor. 6. 18.

Thirdly, Because it is a perverse misusing of the most weighty thing, which doth not onely belong to private good, but also to the common good of mankind.

Fourthly, Because it especially overwhelmeth the whole man, so that hee can hardly bee freed from thence, by reason of the close inhering of this concupiscence, for its continuall importunity, and unbridled impotency, Hof. 4.

Fifthly, Because from this sinne as from a fruitfull roote, doe proceed many other, as idle talke, filthy, discourse, carnall, disposition, and a totall alienation from God.

Sixtly, Because it bringeth along most dangerous discomforts to the naturall life.

Seventhly, Because it doth extinguish the light of nature, and so is both the sinne, and the punishment of the sinne, as also the cause of other most grievous punishments, Rom. 1.

24. &c.

Quest. 2. What is the lust of the heart?

3. A. 1. A voluntary thought of any immodest act, except it bee done with detestation, is the receiving of a dangerous temptation.

4. A. 2. Any delight from an immodest act, which is represented onely by the imagination and thought, although there bee no meaning of executing that act, is a sinne of wantonnes: because the delight is alway such, as the object from whence it is sprung, and about which it is conversant.

5. A. 3. Those thoughts and delights, are so much the more vicious, by how much they are more voluntary, and continued.

6. A. 4. A consent to an impure act, if occasion and power might bee given, is accounted for the act it selfe, Matth. 5. 28.

7. A. 5. A libidinous habit, by which one is inflamed upon every occasion to such delights, with the consent of the will, is a disease of the affection worse then any act of impurity, 1 Thef. 4. 5.

Quest. 3. What is the Luxury of Speech?

8. A. 1. Obscene speeches are in themselves rotten; that is, no way convenient to the use of edification, but plainly repugnant to it, Ephes. 4. 29. and 5. 4.

9. A. 2. As they are commonly used, they are the manifest signes of an impure heart, from the abundance of which such words doe proceed, Luc. 6. 45.

10. A. 3. They are not onely opposite to the word of God, but to the order of nature: for those things, which in their owne nature are to bee hid with modesty, are impudently laid open by such words.

11. A. 4. They are temptations to the hearers, to whom by these meanes fowle thoughts are suggested: but especially, when they are used to that end, that they might stirre up, and kindle delights; 1 Cor. 15. 33. Ambrose sayeth rightly in the first booke, Chap. 14. de poenit. Lust is fed with banquets, nourished with delicates, kindled by wine, and enslaved by drunkennesse. But the fomentations of words are more dangerous then these, which inebriate the mind with wine of the vine of Sodome.

12. A. 5. Take of beastly things, with a meaning to delight himselve with the narration and proposall of such things to the phantasie, as if they were present, is a verball performance of that filthinesse, of which the talke is.

13. A. 6. Obscene speeches out of a certaine naturall modesty, are not wont to bee explained in downe right words, but insinuated obliquely by Metaphoricall phrases: whence it is, that upon occasion of the like words, or phrases, that godly discourse, meditations, and even prayers themselves are troubled, polluted, and hindered by such fancies entruding themselves. And for this reason, the frequent use of obscene speeches seemeth to bee more hurtfull to piety, then the simple act of fornication.

14. A. 7. Not onely obscene songs; and verses ought to bee reckoned among obscene speeches, but also some immodest gestures. For they are speeches expressed after another manner.

15. A. 8. Those also are in the compasse of these finnes, who willingly and without any detestation, or forbidding, heare beastly talke or read such things written. For they doe either intend an unlawfull delight, or at least expose themselves to the hazard of sinning so.

Quest. 4. What is the lust of the eyes?

16. A. 1. All beholding of that, which is in relation to unlawfull delights, and carnall desires, is an exercise of the wantonnes of the heart, Matth. 5. 28. 2 Pet. 2. 14.

17. A. 2. The like looke, although it bee not out of a fowle intention, but onely out of lightnesse, and curiosity, as farre it is with the hazard of stirring up unlawfull delights, doth participate of the same sinne under the consideration of a medium tending to it, Iob 31. 1.

18. A. 3. The beholding of lascivious and beastly things, either in act, or in some reall gesture, or in its representation, by an unbecoming picture, or immodest imitation, as it is commonly used, cannot bee excused from the note of wantonnes, Ephes. 5. 3.

19. A. 4. The beholding of a naked person, especially in a divers sexe, because to speake morally and according to practise, it giveth occasion of lustfull commotions, is not to bee allowed of without a necessary cause, 2 Sam. 11. 2.

20. A. 5. To this kind of sinne, is to bee referred the lascivious trimming of the body, by which a lustfull concupiscence is shoven, or stirred up, or any danger given any wayes to ones owne or anothers chastity, Isai. 3. 17. 1 Tim. 2 9. 1 Pet. 3. 2. 3.

Quest. 5. What is the Luxury of touching?

21. A. 1. Kisses and embraces, which are used after the honest fashion of the Countrey to signifie an honest good will, are things in themselves lawfull, Gen. 29. 11.

22. A. 2. Kisses, embraces, and lascivious touches which are done with an intention of stirring, or nourishing unlawfull carnall desires, or for carnall delight betwixt those who are not man and wife, or with danger of inordinate commotion, are the forerunners of uncleannesse: because in their owne nature, they doe tend to the joyning of bodies, and is as it were an inchoation of the same, Rom. 13.

13. Col. 3. 5. The comickall port sheweth this sufficiently in those sentences: Bee alway quick, the flame is next to smoake. Hee which would eat the kirknel, must breake the shell: and hee that would lye with one, must beginne with a kisse. Then I seeke out a Whore, and first I aske a kisse of her.

Quest. 6. What is to bee thought of dancings?

23. A. 1. Common revellings, or sporty dancings mingled or joyned betweene men and women, are altogether to be condemned. First,

First, Because (to speake according to practice,) they doe expresse the insolency, and a certaine madnesse of the mind. For, then men are more ready to beginne the dance, when they are almost frantique, either out of drunkenesse, or a forward desire, Exod. 32. 6. M.r. 6. 21.

Secondly, Because they doe openly represent in gestures, those things which by course of nature have modestly joynd with them.

Thirdly, Because they are snares and scandalls not onely to the Dancers, but also to the beholders. For they doe stirre up and inflame the mind of man by their enticing to lust: which of it selfe is carried thither with so much forwardnesse, that it ought rather by all meanes to bee repressed.

Fourthly, Because there is a kind of defiling of that dignity, which ought to bee kept by all Christians: and in that respect, they were used among the graver Ethnickes by hired prostitutes, and musitians.

24. A. 2. Neither doe those limitations and cautions, which being set, many doe contend, that dancings may bee admitted, availe any thing:

As first, If there bee a meane observed in them, and they are not too much frequented.

Secondly, If they bee instituted onely for delight, and not for levity, or lulls sake.

Thirdly, If they bee done in the presence of honest persons.

For first, Wee doe in vaine seeke after a meane in insolency, and madnesse, and the like, which doe consist in the excesse of a meane.

Secondly, Not onely the end and intencion of the doer, but also the end of the deed, and what doth usually follow upon it, ought to bee weighed in our consciences, especially when the thing is no way necessary.

Thirdly, Scandall may bee given to honest persons, and if the persons bee beyond the hazard of scandall, they are more worthy of reverence, which forbiddeth such light and mad voyes to be practised before them.

25. A. 3. That doth lesse availe which is objected by the patrons of these sports, that they are the Conciliators of good will, and affection betwixt young men, and maidens, and so of contracting marriage. For every occasion of marriage is not to be allowed of: but an honest occasion of impolluted marriage.

Quest. 7. What is to be thought of stage Playes?

26. A. Such stage playes as are now in use, are utterly to be condemned?

27. A. 1. They consist in the lively representation of vices and wickednesses. And if it be not lawfull to name such vices without detestation, Ephes. 5. 3. then certainly much lesse may it be allowed, that the same should be expressed to the life by gestures.

28. A. 2. In the representation of such wickednesses, the actors do not onely put on the resemblance of them, (which all Christians ought to abstaine from 1 Theff. 5. 22.) But they compose themselves with great care, that they as well conceive them internally, as expresse such manners externally. Whence it is by exercising themselves to it, they dispose themselves to the same vices, whence they become ready and prone to execute them without shame. For experience teacheth, that some by acting of playes, have put on such indecent habits and gestures, as they could not put them of againe in a long time.

29. A. 3. Some vices are so represented as they are also really done, such are idle talke, ribaldry, vaine cursings, execrations, and the like.

30. A. 4. Either Women are brought upon the stage to represent wantonnes with impudency (who ought even in the Church to keepe silence, 1 Cor. 14. 34. or to be veiled, 1 Cor. 11. 10.) or men for to please, put on Womens apparell, face, and gesture; which is repugnant to the word of God, Deut. 22. 5. and is a great kindling of wantonnes, as also it giveth occasion, and leadeth the right way to those beastlinesse which are against nature, Rom. 1. 27.

31. A. 5. Both Actors and Spectators seeke delight in these things, of which they ought to be ashamed,

Rom. 6. 21.

32. A. 6. They

32. A. 6. They expose themselves to manifest hazard. For they which are most modest, can hardly avoid the tickling thoughts of unlawfull things, and others learne to doe that, which they were wont to heare and see without blushing. The wiser of the Ethnickes themselves, did observe this, amongst whom Seneca: Nothing is more dangerous to good manners, then to see at a shew: for then vices creepe in more easily by pleasure.

33. A. 7. If there bee any of so hard a breast, that they are not moved with such sights, yet they give scandall to others, who by their example are drawne into dangers, and finnes.

34. A. 8. Great cost is vainely, and with hurt bestowed. For with the charges that are layed out upon one stage play, many poore may bee sustained some months.

35. A. 9. Stage-players by the Civill law are infamous. In the Primitive Church, they were excluded from the Ecclesiasticall communion.

36. A. 10. In time past, it was a solemne vow of all that were baptized: I renounce the Devill, his pompes, shewes, and workes, from whence Salvian. de provid. lib. 6. doth thus discourse: In all spectacles, there is a certaine apostacy of the faith, and a deadly pravarication from the Symbols, and heavenly Sacraments of it. For what is the first confession of Christians in saving baptisme? what else, but that they protest to renounce the Devill, his pompes, shewes, and workes? therefore spectacles, and pompes, according to our profession, are the workes of the Devill. How canst thou, ô Christian after baptisme follow shewes, which thou confessest to bee the worke of the Devill? Thou hast once renounced the Devill, and his shewes: and by this thou must necessarily know, that when willingly, and upon knowledge, thou dost goe againe to playes, thou returnest to the Devill. For thou hast renounced both together, and didst account one as both. If thou returnest to one, thou hast gone back to both. For thou sayest, I renounce the Devill, his pompes, shewes, and workes. And what then? I doe beleeve (thou sayest) in God the Father, &c. Therefore the Devill is first renounced, before God is beleeved in; because he which doth not renounce the Devill, doth not beleev in God. And therefore hee which returneth to the Devill, leaveth God. The Devill is in his shewes and pimpes: and by this, when wee returne to spectacles, wee leave the faith of CHRIST. So holy Salvian out of Tertullian (as it seemeth,) de Spectac. cap. 4. & de Idolat. cap. 6. where the like sayings are found. Those objections and limitations, which are brought by some Divines in favour of these playes, are of no moment.

It is objected. First, That stage playes are someway necessary. For seeing that recreation is necessary to man, and nothing doth recreate and delight more then such kind of sports, it followeth that they are necessary.

§ 7. 11. A. 1. Lawfull recreations or sports, doe consist in things onely indifferent, which are neither appointed or forbidden by God. For wee ought not to use forbidden things, and it is not lawfull to rest with Precepts. But it hath bene proved before that stage playes, doe consist in things forbidden.

Secondly, Those delights which either spring from things unlawfull, or which give an occasion to things unlawfull, are vitious, and deadly.

Thirdly, The too much inticings to carnall pleasures, ought to bee avoyded as suspected, and dangerous, as if they were snares: because they make the flesh wanton, and infect, and presse downe the mind. And truly, there is no other cause, why common stage playes doe so much tickle the multitude, then that they are bathed in all filthy pleasure by them, from the lively image of those luttis, which they love by any meanes to nourish, and stirre up in themselves.

It is objected. Secondly, That then is a manifold profit of these sports: because they helpe the understanding and memory in the knowledge of things: they promote the flight of vice, and love of vertue, and render both speech and manners more neat and civilized.

§ 8. 12. A. 1. If these were meanes which brought so much profit, without doubt they would have some approbation in the word of God. But others, and not these meanes are allowed of in the word of God, by the use of which those perfections ought to be attained.

Secondly, Such meanes are wont to be sanctified to Christians by the word and prayer, 1 Tim. 4. 5. But it is altogether unheard of, and strange to the nature of these sports, that any one should prepare himselfe by prayer to the use of them.

Thirdly, Experience of all ages sheweth, and the manner of stage players doe proclaime it, that the understanding and memory are polluted by such sports, vices promoted, and vertues extinguished.

It is objected. Thirdly, That those sports may have an honest end, a laudable subject, as a history of the Bible, and honest actours, free from all lightnesse and scurrility.

39. 13. A. 1. When the end of the deed is dishonest, it cannot be made honest by the intention of the doer.

Secondly, If choyce of the two were to be granted, it seemeth more sufferable that prophane rather, than sacred stories should be acted by players. For the Majesty of the word of God, which ought to be heard, and thought on with feare and trembling, is debated, spoiled, and abused in an unworthy manner, if it be turned into a matter of sport.

Thirdly, If lightnesse and scurrility be taken from the sceane; the common stage it selfe is likewise taken away: because it will be destitute of actours and spectatours. The Heathen Philosopher observed this of old, Tusc. Quest. l. 4. Poetry, the most famous Correctresse of life, which thinkes it fit, that the lover of vices, and authour of levity, should be placed in the Councell of the Gods. I speake of Comady, which except, wee did allow of these offences, would not be at all.

CHAP. XL.

Of the Mosaicall Lawes, belonging to the 7. Commandement.

1. THere were some lawes appendixes to this Commandment, which were permissive onely, by which a deed was not plainly allowed off, or made indifferent, or lawfull, but onely left free from the legall punishment. Of this kind was the law of putting away a wife, which was not an adulteresse, but was odious for some uncleannesse, Deut. 24. 1. Matth. 19. 7. 8. Of this kind was the law of searching out the truth in case of jealousie, Num. 5. 14. To this kind also ought those lawes, at least in part, to be referred, which suppose Polygamy: Such was that which denied the transferring of the right of primogeniture from the Sonne of the hated wife, to the Sonne of the beloved, Deut. 21. 15.

2. Some Lawes were definitive, but yet proper to that people, and had partly a judiciall, partly a ceremoniall consideration.

3. Such was the Law of taking ones brothers wife, Deut. 25. 5. whether the brother of both sides to the deceased, and brother in Law to the Widdow be understood, (yet with the exception of the Law, Lev. 19. 16.) which is the most received opinion: or whether the next of kinne, which could marry the Widdow according to the law, which is Calvins exposition, and not improbable.

4. Such was the Law concerning a Daughter which was an Heireesse, who is commanded to marry in her Fathers tribe, least the hereditance with her, should passe from one tribe to another, Num. 36. 8.

5. Such was the Law of not taking a stranger to Wife, not that it was denied the people of God to take Wives which were Idolatresses, Deut. 7. 3. but because the marriages at least with some Nations then contracted, and consumated sanated were disannulled, Esa. 9. 1. and 10. 10. 11. For the Apostle under the new Testament, teacheth the contrary, 1 Cor. 7. 2. 3.

6. Such was the law of the Priests marriage, Lev. 21. 13. and of the burning alive the Daughter of a Priest for fornication, Lev. 21 9.

7. The æquity of such Lawes, is onely from particular and morall right.

8. But other Lawes concerning marriage, which neither depend on the permission, or speciall condition of the Jewes, but flowes from the nature of the thing it selfe, according to their substance, are of the common and morall right.

9. Such is the law of adultery committed with another mans Wife, by killing both, Dent. 22. 22. There was no more derogated from this law, because CHRIST would not condemne the Adulteresse, Joh. 8. 11. then was derogated from the justice and æquity of parting the goods of the family, when CHRIST would not divide the inheritance betwixt the brothers, Luc. 12. 14.

CHAP. XLI.

Præcept. 8.

Of the Dominion of externall things.

Quest. 1. VV Ho are properly the Lords of things?

1. A. 1. God is the onely absolute Lord of all things, for whereas hee is the Creatour and Governour of all, hee is the sole Lord of the nature of things, when man is Lord onely of the use of them: and in the use it selfe, man is subjected to the will of God. When God useth all things as it pleaseth him.

2. A. 5. It seemes, Angels have not the Dominion of bodily things: because wee no where read, that power was given to Angels: neither is ther any use of bodily things attributed to them, except Ministeriall by Divine dispensation to execute the will of the Lord.

3. A. 3. Brute beasts have not properly Dominion over those things which they use: because that which is right and just is onely metaphorically found in beasts, and not properly.

4. A. 4. Man hath the proper Dominion of those things, which are subjected to his power, Gen. 1. Psal. 8. Because hee hath the ability, as farre as God permits, to apply those things to his owne use.

5. A. 5. Among men which live bodily lives, there is none, but hath power over his proper bodily things, in what age, state, or condition soever they bee.

6. A. 6. Children, and mad men, although for want of reason, they have not the next actuall power of using things, yet they have a radicall power, because they are men, Gal. 4.

7. A. 7. Infidels and wicked men, although by right, they are liable to bee deprived of this power, being destitute of that mere eminent title, which the faithfull in C H R I S T have obtained: yet, because the sentence of the law against them, is not commanded to bee executed, and some Dominion of bodily things in this life, is due from God to humane nature, being it is annexed by the law and order of nature; therefore they have a lawfull and free use of those temporall things.

Quest. 2. Whether or no, and which way was the division of Dominions lawfull?

8. A. 1. The division of things was both just, and necessary: First, To avoid contentions, Gen. 13. Secondly, That those things being in parts, should bee more diligently employed. Thirdly, That they might more orderly bee handled.

9. A. 2. That division is founded, not onely on humane, but also on naturall and divine right. For although the law of nature doth not from the beginning immediately command this division, yet it dictates, that division to bee necessary, by reason of the multiplication of mankind, and the prevailing of iniquity, to the more peacefull and quiet settling setting of things. And this was alwayes in the Law of nature, which wee observe at an ordinary table, or feast, that although the dishes bee set in common, yet those pieces which others have cut, no man ought to take to himselfe without their leave, who first had them.

Quest. 3. Whether true Dominion according to the Court of Conscience may be founded on the civill law alone, or the Divine law alone, or on both?

10. A. 1. The Conscience in all things, ought to looke back on the judgement of God. Vnlesse therefore, the title of Dominion is manifest to bee lawfull, and true by the law published by God either in nature, or in his word, it cannot stand in the Court of Conscience.

11. A. 2. Properly it doth consider onely the judgement of God, because it is not subject to a humane Court. If therefore, it shall plainly appeare, that the title is of force, either in the law of nature, or in the Divine law, it gives true Dominion according to the Court of Conscience, although it bee disannulled in the Civill law.

12. A. 3. Hence it is, that hee hath just and true Dominion, which possesseth any thing by a contract, which otherwise is lawfull, and right, but onely for the want of some ceremony, or formality, which the civill law prescribes to a contract, in the humane Court is disannulled, or to bee disannulled.

13. A. 4. So also Dominion is transferred in the Court of Conscience, by a will which is not formall; (id est,) which wants a certaine number of witnesses, the Notary. &c. This formality is therefore onely prescribed in the Civill lawes, to prevent deceit, and cousening, which are often used in such contracts: but when the intents of those that made these contracts doth manifestly appeare, that reason ceaseth, as also the force of the Civill law doth cease; For when the cause is taken away, the effect also is taken away.

14. A. 5. The sentence of a Iudge which disannuls such a contract, is founded on a presumption of deceit: but that false presumption takes no place in the Court of his Conscience, that knowes the contrary.

15. A. 6. By the consent of all, the obligation of the law of nature is introduced by these contracts which are not formall, because they are made out of free will, upon deliberate Counsell. But the Civill law cannot abrogate the law of nature. Ergo,

16. A. 7. The intention of the Civill law, in disannulling such contracts, is onely not to helpe them in the externall Court, or give sentence on their sides, because of the Common good. Howsoever, all obligation which ariseth from the law of nature is left.

17. A. 8. The Civill law it selfe in some cases, (as in a Souldiers will, &c.) Doth admit of this naturall obligation although it want those formalities. Therefore it doth acknowledge, that these contracts in themselves, are of force in the Court of Conscience.

18. A. 9. Therefore hee, in whose favour the law disannulleth such a contract, cannot (with a safe Conscience) plead against it before a Judge, or require that it may be declared nullified, or of no force, if hee knowes the truth of it.

19. A. 10. Hence also the possession of anothers goods, the Lord thereof being unwilling, although it be continued so long as the lawes require to prescription, doth not conferre the Dominion to the possessour in the Court of Conscience.

20. A. 11. If the possession be by deceitfull dealing, (id est,) if the Possessour knowes, or thinks the thing possessed not to be his, but anothers, it is a sinne against the law of nature, and therefore cannot establish the right of Dominion. And those lawes, which allow so much power to such kind of possessions, tend to the destruction of the Common-wealth, in that they nourish heavy sinnes in detaining other mens goods against Conscience: and also allow thieves the Dominion of stolen goods, onely for delay of restitution, which is manifestly wicked.

21. A. 12. The possession of bona fidei, by upright dealing hath nothing which is not in the possession male fidei, except it be the false opinion of the Possessour, that the the thing is his owne. But this opinion cannot in the Court of Conscience bring a just title of Dominion: especially after it is taken away by the manifestation of the truth, and the contrary knowledge hath place, by which hee knowes the thing, which hee possessed was anothers.

22. A. 13. No just cause can be brought, why prescription bona fidei should transerre Dominion. Three reasons are wont to be alleaged:

First, That the Dominion of things should not bee uncertaine.

Secondly, That contention should not bee infinite.

Thirdly, That the negligence and sloath of men in regaining their goods might bee punished:

But first, All these reasons are as well for the possession mala fidei, by deceitfull dealing, as for that which bona fidei, hath upright dealing joyned with it.

Secondly, The first and second reason doe not belong to the Court of Conscience, but to the externall onely, where perhaps for those reasons, the action may bee denied to the true owner, when the time is runne out which is set downe by the law.

Thirdly, The third reason is not sufficient: because every negligence of the owner in re-obtaining his goods deserves not so great a punishment. Neither in truth is the law of Prescription properly pænall, for then the former Master should not loose his Dominion, or the Prescriber get it before the sentence is given. Neither can grosse and supine negligence bee easily proved, onely by the space of time.

Fourthly, Affected ignorance and voluntary negligence in finding out the truth, which excludes upright dealing, is alwayes presumed of him that detaines another mans goods, especially if hee were the authour, taking it into his possession.

23. A. 14. Hence also the detaining of goods lost by shipwrack, doth not conferre a just title of Dominion on the detainer.

For first, It is most cruell and savage in justice to spoile the Spoiled, and to encrease the misery of the miserable.

Secondly, It is most repugnant to charity, for where singular pitty and reliefe is required, there to adde affliction to the afflicted, is to goe positively opposite against charity. And it is all one, as if a traveller, which hath fallen into the hands of robbers, and beene rifled of all his goods, yet let goe alive with his horse, and cloake (bound nevertheless,) should by the Lord of the Soile bee kept bound, and by him bee spoiled of those goods which were left, his horse and cloathes.

24. A. 15. The detaining of goods lost by shipwrack, hath no colour of right of force enough for Dominion, except that which arises from the possession of goods forsaken, which become the first Possessours. But goods which by shipwrack, are cast into the water, are not therefore to bee accounted as forsaken. For things become forsaken either by the expresse act, of the former owner, or by æquivalent conjectures, as when knowing and willingly hee utterly neglects and permits those things, which were his to bee ceased on by others. But hee which unwilling suffers shipwrack, doth no more abandon those goods which escape, either expressely or tacitely, then he, who by reason of fire or ruine, suffers his goods to bee carried out of his house. Such goods are not out of the power of the owner de jure, but de facto. They doe not want a Master, and therefore the Dominion of them cannot bee acquired, by the bare finding, or detaining of them.

25. A. 16. The Civill lawes themselves condemne this detention. For so Constantine Cod. lib. 2. Tit. 5. If at any time a ship is driven by wrack on the shore, or shall touch at any land, let it belong to the owners, my Exchequer shall not interpose; For what right hath the Exchequer in anothers calamity, that it should seeke advantage in so lamentable a mischance? And if the publique Exchequer will not appropriate shipwrackt goods, much lesse ought it to bee done by private men. Cajetan therefore sayes rightly in sum. 5. furtum. Shipwracke goods, which according to the lawes of some shoures are confiscated, therefore, because they they are shipwracke, I know not by what justice are detained, except by that which adds affliction to the afflicted. There is no reason, that any one should gaine by shipwracks, unlesse it bee that wages is due to those, by whose labour and industry the goods are delivered, and preserved.

CHAP. XLII.

Of Contracts.

Quest. 1. VWhat law is there of the efficient causes of contracts?

1. A. 1. To a lawfull Contract, first are required Persons fit to a Contract, (id est,) they which have the administration of their owne goods, or power to oblige themselves in such things, Act 5. 4.

2. A. 2. Hence Infants, mad-men, and prodigals are not fit to make a Contract: and under that title their Contracts by the Civill law, are deservedly accounted nullities.

3. A. 3. Those that are under age, and are come to the perfect use of reason, although they have as yet overseers, if on mature counsell they doe bargain, that Contract considered in it selfe, according to the Court of Conscience, seemes to bee of force. Whence the Lawyers teach, that those being under age, which Contract without the authority of their Guardians, although they are not obliged by the Civill law, yet by the naturall they are.

4. A. 4. In the second place is required, either the formall, or virtuall consent of the Contracters, and that with three conditions: That first, It bee free, at least so farre as one is bound freely to will and agree, although he will not in an illicite act. Secondly, Promissive, (id est,) with a mind to bee obliged to those lawes of that Contract which is made. Thirdly, Expressed by some outward signe.

5. A. 5. From the first condition it followes, that the consent which is wrested by extreame feare, is not sufficient to a firme Contract.

6. A. 3. Yet this must bee so understood: First, That the feare is inferred to that end onely that consent might bee forced. For if it should bee induced for another end, and hee which is afraid to avoid that evill should make a contract, that contract will bee of force: as if one being taken by a theife, should promise a summe of money to bee freed, that feare was not the cause, but the occasion onely of the contract.

Secondly, The feare must bee brought on unjustly. For if one out of feare of punishment established by the lawes, should bargaine with him, to whom hee hath done an injury, such a bargaine cannot bee disannulled.

7. A. 7. From the second condition it followes, that promise which is drawne out by guile, or given out of error, or is so imperfect, that it containes not an intention of obliging, doth not properly make a contract. Howsoever if one being deceived with anothers words to his owne losse, taking those for a promise, hee is bound to performe what hee promised in that way of speaking, lest he should bee a cause of dammage which would follow.

8. A. 8. From the third condition it followes, that an internall promise made to a man doth not bind; the reason is, because the internall acts, are not fit instruments of conveyeing our meanings and consents to others.

Quest. 2. What law is there concerning the matter, about which contracts are versed?

9. A. 1. Lawfull contracts are not properly exercised, but about lawfull things, the reason is:

First, Because in every contract, consent is given: but consent to an unlawfull thing is sinne.

Secondly, Contract in it selfe hath the force of promise: but it is not lawfull to promise, what is not lawfull to performe.

Thirdly, From a contract an obligation doth arise; but no obligation can bee lawfull which obligeth to sinne, because under that very title it is repugnant to the obligation of the Divine law.

10. A. 2. Hence a contract or bargaine for any dishonest thing, is also it selfe dishonest as a bargaine for murder.

der, or whoredome, &c. The reason is, because such bargaines are ordained to dishonesty as their end, and therefore are of the same nature with the end it selfe, that is dishonest. But if it bee asked, if after the dishonest action committed, the contract obligeth him which promised, or if it bee lawfull to receive the hire bargained for in consideration of the danger, labour, and losse, which was joynd with the dishonesty, it may bee probably answered, that the promiser is obliged, but it will hardly stand with true repentance, if the other party doe receive it, Matth. 27.

3. 4.

11. A. 3. Contracts of buying, and selling, and those which are of the same nature, have no place in some things: not because they are not lawfull or good in themselves, but because they are so good that they cannot bee valed at a price.

12. A. 4. Hence it is a sinne of Simony, to buy or sell, or any way change a holy and Spirituall, for a Temporall; the reason is,

First, Because holy things ought to bee used as holy, not polluted, and profaned, which then they are, when they are brought downe, as Worldly things, into Temporall contracts, being it is against the Religion and reverence, which is due to holy things.

Secondly, Because it is injustice to sell those things, which are to bee bestowed on free cost, Matth. 10. 8.

13. A. 5. This sinne is extended not onely to supernaturall gifts, (which yet was the sinne of Simon Magus, from whom it tooke it's name,) But also first, To the causes of such gifts, as the Sacraments and the like. Secondly, To things annexed to such gifts, as they are such. Such are all those, which are so adjoynded to the Spirituall function and office, either as they goe before, accompany, or follow after it, that they can no wayes bee separated from it.

14. A. 6. Hence, not onely those are guilty of Simony, which buy or sell those things which directly belong to the election, ordination, or vocation of Ecclesiasticall Ministers, but all such, as in order to that calling, buy or sell those things things which are set apart for the maintaining of Ministers; which usually are called benefices.

15. A. 7. Such Simoniacall bargaines, not onely consists in money, but in all those things, which can bee valued, and rated with money, or hath the like nature with it, in respect to spirituall things. Hence a Simoniacall gift is not absurdly divided, into a gift from the hand, a gift from the tongue, and a gift from observance. A gift from the hand is money, or that, which is of the same valew with it. By the gift from the tongue are understood prayers, prayes, entreaties, flatteries, if they have the power of obtaining Spirituall things. By the gift from observance, is understood some Temporall deed, which induceth the bestowing of Spirituall, as payment of a debt, whether the bargaine bee expresse, or tacitely understood.

16. A. 8. To intend onely such donations or receivings, although it consists in one party alone, yet it is a kind of degree of this sinne, and so it is not ill called Mentall Simony, and by some Confidentiall, as it is distinguished, from conventionall, and reall.

17. A. 9. That which is given to the sustentation of those, which are the helpers, and Ministers of Spirituall things, hath no kind of Simony in it. That also hath a place here which is said of the reward of Physitians, and Schoole-masters: Wee doe not pay them the price of the thing, but their worke, because they serve, and being called from their owne affaires, they attend ours. They doe not receive the reward of their desert, but employment.

18. A. 10. Neither is it properly Simony, when somewhat is given out of meere gratitude, not by any agreement tacite, or expresse, direct, or indirect. Neither if any thing is given by him, which hath a certaine and undoubted right to the Spirituall function, for the avoyding of unjust troubles. Howsoever in these wee must beware of deceit, and the very appearance of evill is to bee avoyded.

19. A. 11. And although there is not in every respect a parity, yet there is some similitude, and proportion betwixt betwixt things sacred and publique offices, which have the power of jurisdiction. For the sale of such offices, hath a dishonest corruptnesse, which thwarts the nature of them. For as it is repugnant to the act of jurisdiction, that it should be saleable, so is it also to the power of exercising that act. Neither indeed, hath the Prince himselfe Dominion over the offices of jurisdiction, but onely administration. There are also so many evils which spring from this kind of traffick, that it is had in detestation with all ingenious men.

Quest. 3. What law is there concerning the forme of Contracts?

20. A. 1. The externall forme is not the same set and determinated by any law, either naturall, divine, or civill. For it may consist in any declaration of mutuall consent whatsoever, whether it be done by words, or gestures, or writing, or the delivery of the thing it selfe. Therefore, although that forme hath power of obliging, yet because it is not of force in it selfe, but as it hath relation to the internall Court, for that cause it doth the lesse belong to the internall Court of Conscience.

21. A. 2. The internall forme of a lawfull Contract, is upright dealing, by which one doth sincerely intend to oblige himselfe to the performance, of that which he professeth, and afterwards to performe it as much, as in him lieth. The reason is, because a Contract includes a promissive consent. Now a promise is a testimony, by which one binds his faith to deal uprightly with another in the performance of this or that; and therefore the forme doth require internall, and essentiall the upright dealing of the Contracter, to be true, and sincere.

22. A. 3. Hence that division of Contracts; by which some are said to be according to upright meaning, others to be according to the strictnesse of the law, is not accurate, and hath not place either in the Court of Conscience, or before God. For upright meaning is required in all Contracts, and because the chiefest part of the nature of Contracts doth consist in that, the judgement as farre as it can appeare, is to be given out of that, and according to it. Therefore in all Contracts, wee should proceed according to right, and good, not the letters, or extreame rigour of the law, in which often times the most extreame injury is found.

23. A. 4. Sometimes not to stand to promises, is not repugnant to honest meaning; to wit, when the promise leaves off to bind :

As first, If the thing promised becomes unprofitable, unlawful, or impossible.

Secondly, If the state of the things and persons is so changed, that in the judgement of wisemen, the promiser is thought, that hee would not have comprehended such an event.

Thirdly, If the other party, in whose favour the thing was promised, should remit it.

Fourthly, If hee which promised on the other side, will not fulfill his promise.

Fifthly, If any thing bee promised for that cause, which afterwards is found not to bee in it.

24. A. 5. Repugnant to honest meaning is dissimulation; that is, craftinesse, subtlety, fraud, cheating, plots, or contrivements either in words, or deeds, applied to the deceiving or circumventing anothers. 1. Thessal. 4. 6. 2. Cor. 6. 8. It is usually called evill craft, that it may bee distinguished from an honest devise, by which one is willingly cheated into right reason.

25. A. 6. It is repugnant to honest meaning, in as much, as it takes away the cleare intention of performing, that which was pretended, and seemed to bee promised.

26. A. 7. This guile, if it bee about the substance of a thing, as if one should sell glasse for a pearle, the Contract in its owne nature is made voyd, because in such a Contract the consent is wanting. For hee which would buy a pearle, meanes not glasse.

27. A. 8. Alike is the nature of evill guile, which yeeldeth the chiefe cause to a Contract, although it meddles not with the substance of the thing, as if one should perswade his chapman to buy a pearle for that reason onely that before it was his Fathers, who otherwise would not have bought it. For such a Contract is made voyd or to bee made voyd, because hee which was brought in by guile to bargaine, suffers injury in the Contract; and therefore is fully to bee satisfied by the undoing of the Contract.

28. A. 9. When this guile lights onely on the Contract, and is about it's accidents: as if one should bee deceived in the goodnesse of a thing, and is brought in by deceit, not that hee should buy, but that hee should buy for more then its value; it doth not make the Contract utterly voyd, or altogether to bee made voyd: howsoever hee which deceives is bound in Conscience, to recompence the others dammage according to æquity.

29. A. 10. Of this kind is that deceit, when the seller conceales from the buyer some hidden fault of the thing sold, which bringeth dammage or losse to the buyer.

30. A. 11. To this also belongs, if the seller knowing that in short time, there will bee great store of such wares, by which occasion the price will bee diminished, and hee shall suffer great losse which shall buy before at the current price, will neither foretell that to the buyer, or abate the price: or also if the buyer knowes that in short time, there will be great store of buyers, and scarcify of wares, by which the prises of things will bee encreased, and the seller brought into poverty by selling at the usuall rate. For in such cases wee are bound, at least by the law of charity, to foresee for our neighbours good, as long as it may bee done without any great losse to us.

31. A. 12. Those Civill lawes which confirme a Contract made by circumvention, so it bee under halfe of the just price, are permissive onely to diminish strifes, and doe not justifie the Contract, but leave it to bee judged in the Court of Conscience, by the law of nature, and the Divine law.

32. A. 13. That fault also is opposed to honest dealing, which consists in the inconsiderate omission of that diligence, which might and should have beene added to the fulfilling of the Contract. It differs from deceit, because deceit properly is used wittingly, and on set purpose: but this fault proceeds from not heeding, or inconsideration without set purpose or intent. It is repugnant to honest dealing, not because it doth simply exclude sincere intent, but because it doth shew, that diligent and due care of performance was wanting. Therefore it is rightly called by the Apostle lightsnesse, 2 Cor. 1. 17.

33. A. 14. This fault is divided into open, slight, & slightest. The open fault, is the omission of that diligence, which men in the like case ordinarily apply, as if one should leave a borrowed booke in some open place from whence it may bee taken away. A slight fault is the omission of that diligence, which diligent men of the like case commonly use, as if one should leave a thing entrusted of great value in an unlockt Chamber, from whence it may bee taken away. The slightest fault, is the omission of that diligence, which the most diligent in the like case are wont to add, as if hee should leave that thing entrusted, and thinke the doore lockt, and yet doth not certainly know.

34. A. 15. From the open fault, all Contracters are held guilty of the dammage, which shall thence ensue. Because common diligence is contained in the obligation of every promise, and the omission of it, is manifestly repugnant to honest dealing. Whence it is, that this open fault is wont to bee ranked almost in the same place, and order, with evill guile.

35. A. 16. From the slight, or slightest fault, they are bound so farre, as either the nature of the Contract, or the agreement of the parties require, or also so farre as humane lawes out of equity have established.

Quest. 4. What law is there concerning the end of Contracts?

36. A. 1. The end of a Contract, ought alwayes to bee some good. For neither obligation, promise, or consent, ought to tend to evill.

37. A. 2. Contracts ought chiefly to bee for the good of the parties. For they are employed about their goods, and not other mens. For no man can bargain about those goods, which are not in his owne power.

38. A. 3. Some

38. A. 3. Some Contracts are for the good of the giver onely, as a thing entrusted, a command. Others for the good of the receivers onely as a gift, a free lene. Others for the good of both, as buying, letting out, partnership, pawns, exchange, &c. But this difference although it properly depends on the nature of the Contracts themselves, yet upon the agreement of the parties it may be changed, and many ends mixed together, as a thing entrusted may be sometimes for the good of him, which is entrusted, and a free lene for the good also of the lender.

39. A. 4. To seeke ones owne good onely in that Contract, which in its nature tends to the good of another, or of both sides favours of fraud, and oftentimes is repugnant to justice, but alwayes to Christian charity.

Quest. What is the effect of Contracts?

40. A. 1. The effect of every lawfull Contract, is the bond of obligation to performe that, to which it hath consented.

First, Because every one is bound to stand to that, which hee hath lawfully promised.

Secondly, Because from promise, and the acceptation of it, the other party hath gained right and power of demanding the promise. Whence it is, that no Contract can be broken, the party to whom it is availeable being unwilling.

41. A. 2. This obligation, because it is not extended beyond upright meaning, doth therefore sometimes cease upon a meere chance, or an unthought of event which happens without the fault of the obliged, seeing it could not be hindered by humane providence.

42. A. 3. But although, regularly and according to the nature of the thing it selfe, no man is bound by a casual chance, which comes betweene without his fault: yet hee may be bound to such chance by some particular agreement, because such an obligation can be valed at a certaine price.

CHAP. XLIII.

Of the proportion of prizes in Contracts of selling, buying, letting out, hyring, and in those,
which are of the same nature.

Quest. 1. WHat rules are to be observed in setting a iust price in such Contracts?

1. A. 1. That rule is chieft, which is delivered by the holy Ghost, Prov. 20. 14. That the buyer, to abate the price, should not deceitfully take any thing away from the wares, which are to be bought: or the seller, to augment the price, should not amplify against his conscience the worth of his wares. For to be willing to buy cheape, and sell deare, is (as Augustine observes) common, but yet a common sinne, except it is bounded within a certaine measure and limits.

2. A. 2. The publique authority is to be observed in those things, whose price is appointed by the Magistrate, which happens in many places concerning those things, which most necessarily belong to foode. For that is alwayes presumed just and æquall in such things of common use, (except the contrary be manifest,) which is allowed of by the community. Yet here it is to be observed, that because in things necessary to life, the price is usually rated according to the bignesse, for the buyers sake, yet notwithstanding, the price may be brought lower, though, not augmented.

3. A. 3. The common rate of the market, and of wise and good men is to be followed. For this rate hath the force of a tacite law, and excludes the danger of any deceit to the dammage of another. In this sense may be admitted that rule, which is approved in the Civill law, and the manners of men: that that price is just, if the thing be sold for so much, as it can be sold for: or, every fittable thing is worth so much, as it can be sold for: that is, as it can bee sold for commonly, not out of any affection, or for the profit of this or that man.

4. A. 4. Where no publique rating, or common valuation can have any place, there the price is to bee set, (yet without fraud) according to the judgement of understanding men, all circumstances being duly considered. For a more certaine law in many things cannot bee had to direct bargaines.

5. A. 5. That difference is to bee noted in the observing of these rules: that the lawfull price which is appointed by publique authority, is indivisible, so that it cannot the least way bee augmented by the seller: but the naturall price which is set either by common valuation, or the agreement of parties, hath its latitude, within which upon occasion it may bee altered. Hence a threefold just price useth to bee assigned, one is called rigid, or the uttermost, according to the terme of magnitude: another mild, lowest, easie, sweet, according to the terme of parvity, And the third meane, or moderate, as it receeds from either extreame.

Quest. 2. Whether there bee any just causes of varying the just price?

Ans. There are many causes given.

6. A. 1. The first cause is fetcht from the consideration of the office of a Merchant, for it is valuable at a price, that hee spends his time, care, and thoughts in getting, preserving, and conveighing things, and also that hee hires servants: insomuch, that if Merchants were wanting, the Common-wealth must necessarily provide publique Ministers to doe those things. Hence the same thing is valued at a greater rate with Merchants, then with other private men. Yet Merchants must not reckon all their charges they have laid out: For it may oftentimes fall out, that so much labour is employed, and so great expenses bestowed in an unprofitable and unnecessary thing, and therefore the common rate is to bee followed.

7. A. 2. Hence, those rules are deceitfull, by which Merchants use to justify themselves, in exacting a greater price for their wares: to wit, that they bought those wares for

for so much; that they spent so much in procuring them.
For it may happen, that a Merchant may sell cheaper than hee bought, and yet sell unjustly: either because hee bought it foolishly, or afterwards the rate of things is changed.

8. A. 3. The second cause is brought from the manner of selling: from whence manifold variety may follow in augmenting or diminishing the price.

9. A. 4. When the ware seekes out a chapman, it makes the just price of a thing to abate, according to the common proverbe, proffered wares stinke. The reason used to bee given, is, because in that manner of selling, a scarfity of buyers is presumed, by which the common va-lew is diminished: but that reason doth not seeme sufficient in conscience for any notable diminution of the price, except that also happen, that the thing which is so sold, is little profitable to the buyer, or such, that hee would not have bought it but upon such an occasion, or that hee buyes not so much for his owne, as the sellers sake.

10. A. 5. From this rule it often happens, that goods which are at open sale, or by the voyce of the publique cryer, bare lesse price, then otherwise they use.

11. A. 6. When Chapmen seeke wares. For then the store of buyers augments the common vawew, and so is a just cause of augmenting the price.

12. A. 7. When one sels a great quantity of things together, and not by parcels: this manner of selling dimi-nisheth the price, because it diminisheth the number of buyers, and also the power of detriment, or danger of losse, which might ensue upon occasion of selling it after.

13. A. 8. When one sels by parcels: this manner may justly augment the just price of things; because there is more labour in selling, and more care in keeping, and dividing the wares.

14. A. 9. The third cause is, if the seller by selling, shall suffer some particular discommodity, although that discommodity consists onely in the privation of some honour, or particular delight. For then the seller may exact somewhat

somewhat more then the thing is worth in it ſelfe, and the price by accident will bee juſt: becauſe naturall æquity requires that the ſeller, being hee is Lord of his owne things, ſhould keepe himſelfe harmleſſe.

15. A. 10. But this is lawfull onely then, when the buyer ſolicites the ſeller, that hee would ſell that thing, which otherwiſe hee was not about to ſell. For if the ſeller freely offer himſelfe to the buyer, then the buyer is not the cauſe, that hee is deprived of his owne commodity.

CHAP. XLIV.

Of Contracts by Vſury.

Queſt. 1. VVhat is Vſury?

1. A. 1. Vſury by lending (in this matter of Contracts,) is wont to bee deſcribed, a gaine ſought from the lone of money by force of the lone it ſelfe.

2. A. 2. By gaine is underſtood the acquisition of ſome commodity which is valuable with money, which was not mine. For if any one ſeekke onely friendſhip or good will, it is not Vſury; becauſe they are not of the number of thoſe things, which can bee æſtimated at a price. If alſo one by lending ſhould ſeekke to receive that which is due by vertue of a former contract, and obligation, it is not Vſury, for otherwiſe, hee would not receive his owne. But if one ſhould not ſeekke money, or wares, yet homage, or gifts, or the impoſition of ſome burden, it is rightly called gaine by Vſury, becauſe it is valuable at a price.

3. A. 3. It is ſaid by the force of the lone it ſelfe, to exclude that gaine which may bee received by ſome other title, as for recompence of emergent loſſe, or the ceaſing of gaine. The gaine of which kind is uſually called interēſt, and is diſtinguiſhed from Vſury.

4. A. 4. This gaine is ſaid to bee ſought, not agreed upon, upon: because not onely reall Usury, in which a Contract interceeds, but also mentall, which is in the intention of getting againe from the lone as a debt, may bee contained in this description.

Quest. 2. Whether this kind of Usury is lawfull?

5. A. 1. Such Usury which is commonly practised by Usurers, and Bankers, is deservedly condemned of all: because it is a catching art, and no regard of charity or equity being had, layes in wait for other mens goods.

6. A. 2. But it cannot bee proved solidly by any naturall reason, that any Usury whatsoever is generally, and absolutely unlawfull.

7. A. 2. Not by their reason who say, all lones in their nature ought to bee of good will: For it cannot bee proved, that every lone with whatsoever circumstances it bee cloathed, ought to bee freely bestowed: and if this bee granted, nothing else will follow, but that, if the lone bee not gratis, it passeth into some Contract, either named or not named, simple or mixed.

8. A. 4. Not by theirs who alledge, that in those things, which consume by use, the Dominion is not distinguished from the use, and therefore nothing can bee taken for the use beyond the valew of the thing it selfe, or the Dominion of it. For it is answered, gaine is not taken simply for the use of the borrowed thing according to its substance, but according to the valew, or income which remains after the substance is consumed: and is oftentimes in things, which are not consumed by use: as also for the office, and act of lending, from whence the borrower receives profit.

9. A. 5. Not by theirs who object, that money in its owne nature is barren. For although it bee barren in it selfe, yet it may easily bee changed into merchandise, which yeeld fruit: and the industry of the Vser being added, it bestowes its power to bring forth fruit.

10. A. 6. Neither lastly by theirs who say in generall, that there is nothing in the lone, for which gaine may bee received. For there is the fruit of the income, or profit, which which probably might be expected from the money which is lent: and there is a burthen annexed to the privation of the money, by which all occasion of placing it otherwise with encrease is omitted. For the vacation from using money by the same right may bee valued, as the vacation from labour, is Exod. 21. 19. seeing that, no lesse then labour, or worke may bee employed for the benefit of the owner.

11. A. 7. It is confirmed by evident reason, that some Usury is lawfull: because no reall difference can bee shovne betwixt some Usury, and other Contracts, which are allowed of by all, as for example; one is furnished with money to buy a farme, from whence he may receive the yearly profit of a hundred pound. Another desires to have the same farme, yet is not furnished with ready money: if the first buy the farme, and rents it out for a hundred pound, no man will deny, but that hee hath done that which is just and right. But if hee give the money to the other to purchase the farme for himselfe, and shall receive the same summe from him, subjecting himselfe to the same perill, which hee should have benee obnoxious to in the purchase for himselfe, it is the same justice, and besides there is somewhat added to him which payeth Usury, by reason of the Dominion of that farme, which hee hath got by his purchase.

12. A. 8. The Scripture doth not take away altogether all Usury;

But first, That which is exacted of the poore, who for urgent necessity, and his owne sustentation borroweth, so that the prohibition is founded on the condition of the person, Exod. 22. 25. Lev. 25. 35. Proverb. 28. 8. Ezech. 18. 17.

Secondly, That which bites, and gnawes; that is, when the debt is exacted with rigour, and the dammage of the neighbour.

Thirdly, That, which is repugnant to charity, Luc. 6.

35.

Fourthly, And perhaps, that which by the politick law was not lawfull to the Iewes to exercise among themselves, Deut. 23. 19.

13. A. 9. The Scripture doth seeme to imply, that some Vsury in its selfe is lawfull, when it did permit the Iewes to take Vsury of every stranger that was not poore; Deut. 23. 20. For if all Vsury was intrinsically and in its owne nature evill, then the Iewes could not take Vsury of the gentiles without some grievous scandall, by which the gentiles might bee averted from the religion, and law of the Iewes, which admitted a thing unlawfull, as lawfull. Hither also it may bee referred, that it is most probable from that parable of the talents, Matth. 25. 27. that so usury of Bankers, was not onely in common use among the Iewes, but also not disallowed of by the Lords: because under that similitude hee requires a spirituall duty, without any insinuation of dislike, which in other parables hee did use to adde, which did set forth our duty by the disallowing the use, as Luc. 16. 8.

Quest. 3. From what ground can the equity of gaine by the lending of money bee demonstrated?

14. A. 1. The equity of it is manifest, of which none can doubt, if any one doth not bargaine, that a set summe of returne shall bee precisely payd; but so puts out his money with some honest man, on whose faith hee doth rely, that hee will bee contented to receive some equall part of the fruit of the money according to the measure of Gods benediction towards the employer of the money. Of the putting out of money in this kind there can bee no question, if the danger of the principall bee commune also: For it is nothing else, but a contract of copartnership, both in gaine and dammage.

15. A. 2. Nothing is committed against equity, if the uncertaine gaine which will probably follow, bee sold for a moderate certainty.

16. A. 3. Neither is there any iniquity in that, if the contract bee made with equall conditions, that the whole danger of the principall should belong to him which employes the money. For it is nothing else, but a contract of assurance, assurance, by which the danger of anothers thing, which may bee rated at a price, is undertaken for the price.

17. A. 4. It is not necessarily required, that a contract of this nature, bee done distinctly and expressly, but 'tis enough if it bee done implicitly, and out of a sincere intention, as also according to the estimation of honest men, and such as understand affaires of that sort,

18. A. 5. When therefore all those contracts, as all men confesse, severally are lawfull, it necessarily followeth, that a contract mixt, and compounded of those, (to wit,) of a contract of copartnership, of assurance of the stock, and of the sale of an uncertaine gaine for a certaine, is not simply and absolutely to bee disallowed.

Quest. 4. What things are to bee observed in the putting out of money, that sinne may bee avoyded?

19. A. 1. First, Wee must beware, that nothing bee required beyond the principall, of those which are poore.

20. A. 2. Wee must beware also least the greedinesse of gain any way hinder any of us, that thereby he doth lesse helpe the needy by lending, or those that are altogether poore, by simply giving, according to his abilities.

21. A. 3. Wee must beware all excesse, which to avoyd, it is most safe, that hee which puts out money, should not exact all that, which is allowed by the lawes or received custome, but containe himselfe within that which is permitted.

22. A. 4. Consideration is alwayes to bee had of him, with whom the busines is, that the fruit of the mony return to him that lent it with the profit of the borrower, and not the losse. Hence extreame right cannot bee urged sometimes without extreame injury; as if one should suffer losse without his owne fault in the traffiquing with the money which was borrowed, it would bee inhumane to demand of him the encrease of the money, that is, to receive gaine from his losse. Naturall conscience also seemeth to dictate this equity in letting, and hyring, as if either barrennesse, or any other calamity which happens, bee so much, that the hyer suffers some notable dammage by the thing, hyred, the rent is to be remitted to him by the lessour, either in whole, or according to the proportion of the losse.

23. A. 5. The rule of equity, and charity is alwayes to be marked, and observed: that that onely be taken, which every one in upright meaning being in such necessity, would have others take of him.

24. A. 6. Offences and calumnies, (to which this kind of contract is obnoxious, Ier. 15. 10.) ought as much as can be, alwayes to be avoyded.

CHAP. XLV.

Of Contracts by wagers, lots, and gaming.

Quest. 1. What is a wager?

1. A. It is a contract, in which two contending about some truth, doe wager somewhat on both sides, from whence hee shall have reward that attaines the truth, and hee punished which doth not. Wee have an example in Samsons riddle, Iud. 14. 13. 14.

Quest. 2. Are these kind of wagers lawfull?

2. A. 1. The act of waging, as it is considered in its selfe, is not plainly unjust: because onely the danger of one, is opposed to the danger of the other, which dangers sometimes may be undergone, and interchanged.

3. A. 2. One may undergoe the hazard of a voluntary milt to confirme his conjecture: and that milt may deservedly be required of the other, if so be hee rashly trusts his owne conjecture.

4. A. 3. There may also be a reward appointed betwixt two upon mutuall consent, on some doubtfull event, that from the hope of the reward, hee, or the other may be stirred up to a laudable endeavour.

5. A. 4. Yet wagers are unlawfull; First, If they have an unlawfull condition, as if two strive betwixt themselves for this or that sinne; as who should overcome another in drinking, drinking, or who should carry himselfe more boldly in this or that businesse, which may bee disallowable, &c.

Secondly, If it bee to the notorious losse of either party; for such danger ought not to bee undergone in that contract, which serves neither to publique or private profit, and such are common wagers. And that gaine is to bee accounted shamefull, which ariseth from anothers losse. Hence that contract of Samsons riddle, was afterwards deservedly condemned by the Philistines themselves, because it tended to the spoiling them of their inheritance, Jud 14. 16.

6. A. 5. That renew which is called an annuity, in which one gives a summe of money, that hee may receive a certaine stipend every yeare as long as hee liveth, is not to bee referred to the Contract by Wagers. For hee doth not promise, that hee will survive, till the stipend overcome the principall, neither doth the other to the contrary. For such a contract is of buying and selling, by which an uncertaine gaine, is bought for a certaine price; and it is held for lawfull according to the lawes, and nature of such a buying, and not by reason of some fained Wager.

Quest. 3. What is the Contract by lots?

7. A. 1. It is a contract, in which by the force of a foregoing agreement, lots are cast, that it may appeare, who ought to bee Master of this or that thing.

8. A. 2. Such kind of contracts are sometimes made betweene those, which had right before to that thing, about which the lot is cast; whether it bee to bee divided amongst many, as in the distribution of the land of Canaan, Ios. 18. Or whether it bee wholly to come to one, as in the garment of the Lord which was to bee adjudged to this or that souldier, Ioh. 19. 24. to which kind, those lots may bee reduced which are by game. But sometimes it is betweene those, which before had no common right of disposing the thing; as when one thing, or more are exposed to bee as it were sold by lots, and divers meet to get the same by lots: which wee call commonly Lotteries; or lastly, when the lots are ordained to make some election, as in the choyce of Matthias, Act. 1. 26.

Quest. 4.

Quest. 4. What lawfulness is there in such kind of Contract?

9. A. 1. The Contract in it selfe is lawfull, and is approved in the Scriptures by divers examples. The reason is, that because every one mutually doth expose his æquall right to the thing, or that part which hee ought to receive, to the hazard of lots, it is as it were an equall change.

10. A. 2. Yet it is divers wayes turned into sinne.

First, If any shall depend upon the stars, or spirits, or fortune for the directing of the lots.

Secondly, If that is intended which in it selfe is unlawfull, or if an unlawfull manner of doing it bee adjoyned.

Thirdly, If they bee used without some great cause, or due reverence; because the casting of lots in its owne nature, hath a particular respect to the speciall providence of God, Prov. 16. 33.

Quest. 5. What is a Contract by game?

11. A. 1. It is a contract, by which the players doe agree betwixt themselves, that something shall bee yielded by the conquered to the Conquerour. For whether all that which is staked by both, is given to the winner, or that which was staked onely by the looser bee spent in common, somewhat alwayes is granted from the conquered to the Conquerour.

12. A. 2. It is mixt of two contracts, of which the first is a mutuall changing both of danger, and interest for the good, either of this or the other, according to the event of the game, the second is a wager suspended either upon greater skill, industry, or good hap.

Quest. 6. Is such a contract lawfull?

13. A. 1. It is not in it selfe unlawfull, because such an agreement may bee in the lawfull power of the parties agreeing: it may bee ordained to a good end upon a good iatention: it may bee also so used, that it shall not bring with it any violation either of religion, justice, or charity.

14. A. 2. An

14. A. 2. An eager intention of gaine, maketh it vicious.

First, Because the end of play is recreation, and delight of the players. Therefore if it bee meant for gaine, or if it bee turned to the notorious discommodity of one party, it is an abuse contrary to the nature of play.

Secondly, There is either a parity betwixt the gamsters, and so it is a prodigall rashnesse to hazard a considerable summe of money without any necessity: or an imparity is supposed, and so the contract is vitiated by guile and deceit, when one opposeth little or no danger of losse with a certaine hope of gaine, to the others great perill.

Thirdly, No mortall man is so absolute a Lord of his money, that hee can alienate, or expose to the danger of alienation, any notorious summe without just cause approved of in the word of God: which cannot bee affirmed of gaming as it is in selfe.

Fourthly, It is not lawfull for any man to gaine by anothers losse; which is manifestly done in gaming on purpose for gaines: and in this respect, gaine arising from play, is filthy lucre: neither would it bee more approved of commonly, then the other kinds of avarice, but that it hath somewhat of prodigality joyned with it, which seemes to have some magnificence in it.

15. A. 3. That little for which it is lawfull to play, may admit some variation according to the condition of the gamsters. But it is certaine, that no man ought to venture more in play, then that which hath a just proportion to the end of gaming, that is, no more then a man of such a state can reasonably bestow on his recreation.

16. A. 4. Those games which onely are by chance, or doe especially rely upon chance, are to bee removed from such contracts:

For first, In chance there is no contention or exercise of vertue, which to excite, as there ought to bee rewards publicly proposed, so also upon private consent to bee appointed.

Secondly, Lot in its owne nature hath a speciall relation to the special providence of God, and so it is a sacred thing: and the old proverbe is true, it is not good to play with holy things.

Thirdly, Such kind of games doe give occasion of divers finnes to the gamsters;

As first, Of greivous perturbations, cursings, and blasphemies for their crosse fortune as they call it.

Secondly, Of immoderate pertinacy in continuing to play, in hope of better luck, which to cast away, they can see no reason.

Thirdly, Of losse of time and money, being no true gaine can redound to any from thence.

17. A. 5. Hence it is, that wee read in Scripture of other exercises used and allowed of for the encrease of vertue and strength, as of handling the bow; 2 Sam. I. 18. But dicing hath no allowance in the Scriptures, and is condemned almost by all lawes, although such lawes are compelled to give way to our compted manners.

CHAP. XLVI.

Of employment of life.

Quest. 1. WHether any having no certaine employment can live without sinne?

1. A. 1. Hee which hath so much power, and gifts bestowed on him, by God that hee may live laudably in some honest calling, if hee abstaine from all employment willingly, hee cannot bee quitted from sinning greivously.

For first, It is the ordinance of God, that every one by helping others in some particular calling, should glorifie God, Gen. 2. 15, and 3. 19. 1 Per. 4. 10. Gal. 5. 13; 1 Thess. 4. 11.

Secondly, Every one hath received his talent, or some part of a talent from God to that end: which cannot bee buried or hid without sinne, Matth. 25.

Thirdly,

Thirdly, Idleneffe is to bee shied, as the mother and nurse of many vices, especially of evill thoughts, desires, curiosities, and wicked contrivements; 1 Theff. 4. 11. 2 Theff. 3. 11.

Fourthly, The glory of God, publique, and private well-fare, as also the peace of conscience, may and ought to bee sought by some honest calling.

2. A. 2. Hence lusty begging vagabonds are not to bee suffered;

First, Because they openly oppose themselves to the Divine ordinance.

Secondly, They are a burden to others without necessity.

Thirdly, Because they defraud those that are poore, indeed at least of some part of the almes which they would receive, if they had not beene prevented by such.

Fourthly, They doe not carry themselves either as members of any Church, or Common-wealth.

Fiftly, They directly set themselves to many kinds of Wickednesfes.

Quest. 2. How may one know, that this or that employment bee honest?

3. A. 1. If it bee manifestly approved of in Scriptures. Secondly, If with some proportion to those callings, which are allowed of in Scripture, it bee about that which is lawfull in it selfe, or profitable to mankind, or good report, Ephes. 4. 28. Phil. 4. 8.

4. A. Hence first, Those who are busied in the nourishing and furthering of sinnes, as those vittailers, which doe not administer onely to the necessity of strangers, and travaillers, but to the intemperancy of their neighbours, lead a dishonest life.

5. A. 2. Those that follow trifling, light, sportfull, scurrilous arts, or belonging that way; may not abide in them, as in an honest course of life.

First, Because nothing is found in them worthy the life of man.

Secondly, They doe invert the order of nature, when they,

they turne the remission of labour, into toyling.

Thirdly, They make themselves unfit for the more weighty and serious duties of Christians.

Fourthly, They use to helpe the Devill in tempting men, whilst they stirre up, and kindle their carnall desires.

6. A. 3. Their employment, who take occasion to raise their owne profit, by the dammage of others, which commonly is the course of usurers, cannot be approved as honest.

Quest. 3. What things are required for the due exercising an honest calling?

7. Ans. 1. Skill is required, by which every one perfectly knoweth those things, which properly belong to his owne vocation, Prov. 14. 8.

8. A. 2. Attention to his owne affaires, more then others, 2 Thess. 3. 11. 1 Tim. 5. 13. 1 Pet. 4. 15.

9. A. 3. Diligence in undergoing businesse, Prov. 10. 4. and 13. 4. and 21. 5. and 27. 23. 24. Eccles. 10. 12.

10. A. 4. Wisdome, in observing, taking, and using rightly opportunity, Prov. 10. 5. and 21. 5. Eccles. 10. 8.

11. A. 5. Courage and constancy in overcoming difficulties, Prov. 15. 19. and 20. 4. and 26. 16.

12. A. 6. A moderation in the desire of gaine, and care of wished successe, 1 Tim. 6. 9. Matth. 6. 34. Prov. 28. 20. 22.

13. A. 7. Lastly, A religious sanctifying of all our labours is required, 1 Cor. 10. 31. Gen. 24. 13. 27. Psal. 90. ult.

CHAP. XLVII.

Of poverty and riches.

Quest. 1. How must wee account of poverty?

1. A. 1. A Counterfeit poverty is ingratitude to God, whose blessing is renounced, and an injury to men, as well those, to whom due aid is denied, as those, who for that cause are the more burdened, Prov. 13. 7.

2. A. 2. And such is the poverty for the most part of Popish Monkes, which by word and habit professe poverty, but in deed are most rich, possessing large mannours, great incomes, and mighty wealth. It is a ridiculous defence of those, that the Covent, and Brothers in the Covent, doe possesse those goods in common, and undivided, so that any one cannot sell, or alienate any thing from thence, or receive at his owne will.

For first, If the Covent bee rich, the Monkes in that Covent cannot bee poore. For if each of them bee poore, and the Covent rich, then by the same reason, each part of a body may bee white, and the whole black.

Secondly, The Heires of some Prince, or rich man, although they possesse the inheritance individed, and are forbid to sell, or alienate any of it, yet they are not, nor cannot bee accounted poore men.

Thirdly, If two or more secular men should deliver up their goods altogether to some overseer, on that condition, that hee should minister to them necessaries, as need required, either severally, or together, these surely did not put off their riches, but the burden, care, and trouble of them: as Potiphar the Egyptian did by himselfe, Gen. 39. 8. and in some sort Pharash, Chap. 41.

: Fourthly, Every Monke hath right to demand his convenient portion, insomuch that if it bee denied without a just cause, it is accounted a trespasse, and hee may sue an action against the covent before a competent Iudge.

Fifthly, It is knowne that many enter Monasteries to avoyd poverty, because they have not wherewithall otherwise to live idly, and that many are thrust in by their parents, and kindred, that they might more certainly provide for their necessary maintenance.

Sixtly, Many goe into Monasteries, that they may make a way and degree to Papall dignities and offices, by which they may enrich themselves, and theirs.

3. 4. 2. True poverty, if it bee directly desired and sought, which is usually called voluntary, without some speciall urgent necessity, is a madnesse to bee condemned.

First, Because such a poore man doth not provide for himselfe and his, according to the course of nature approved by God.

Secondly, Because hee chooseth and seeketh the evill of punishment.

Thirdly, Because hee doth expose himselfe rashly to many temptations.

Fourthly, Because hee makes himselfe unable to render many duties which are due to their neighbours from those who have outward abilities.

Fifthly, Because this is to tempt God, if any one having wherewithall to sustaine himselfe, shall cast away that, expecting sustentation from God.

Sixtly, Hee refuseth that, which every day hee desires of God, that is, his dayly bread.

Seventhly, Hee burdeneth those, from whom hee receiveth any thing without necessity, and defraudeth those which should have received the same if hee had not intercepted it. Such is the poverty of some amongst the Popish Monkes, who live onely on that, which they get from day to day by begging. But they adde also to this madnesse, a superstitious and wicked presumption, being that they sell this poverty for a worke of perfection, and superogation which which will much prevaile for satisfaction and merit before God.

4. A. 3. True poverty which is necessary, not sought onpurpose, but otherwise happening, and is for the most part joyned with infirmity, weaknesse or suchlike defect, whence it is that the poore cannot helpe themselves by labour; this poverty in it selfe, and by it selfe hath no crime in it, or fault to bee ashamed of; but is oftentimes sent from God to the godly, either as a correction, or triall and searching, or both. It is therefore a miserable state, yet notwithstanding such a one by the appointment and grace of God, workes with the faithfull to salvation.

5. A. Hence first, Such poore men ought chiefly to beware that they doe not despaire; Prov. 10. 15.

Secondly, That they doe not murmure against the providence of God, or use unlawfull meanes to helpe themselves, Prov. 30. 9.

Thirdly, That they should behave themselves as poore men ought, free from all envy, Prov. 18. 23. Hence also others must take heed how they deride, contemne, or set against the poore, as also to refuse to helpe them according to their abilities, Prov. 14. 10, and 17. 5. and 19. 4. 7. 17. Iam. 2. 3. 4.

Quest. 2. How are riches to bee esteemed?

6. A. 1. Riches as they are considered absolutely and in themselves, are morally neither good nor bad, but things indifferent which men may use either well or ill.

7. A. 2. But because in their owne nature, they are ordained for a good use, Prov. 3. 9. Therefore although they are not morall goods, yet they are usefull and profitable, and so they are rightly called the gifts and blessings of God; Prov. 10. 22.

8. A. 3. Yet by reason of humane corruption and infirmity, the possession of large riches is joyned with so much danger, that it contains the evill of great and desperate temptations: so that it is very difficult for a rich man to enter into the Kingdome of Heaven, Matth. 19. 23. In which respect they are compared to thick clay, which weigh weigh downe and defile the owner, Hab. 2. 6. to thornes which prick and teare those that handle them, and choke and strangle all spirituall seed, Matth. 13. 22. to an entrapping snare, and an arrow peircing thorough the soule, 1 Tim. 6. 9. 10.

9. A. 4. But the more speciall temptations of riches is to pride, for placing vaine and idolatrous trust in them for the love of the World, lastly to luxury, and the following of every affection with contempt of God, 1 Tim. 6. 17. Ephes. 5. 5. Prov. 30. 9. Luc. 16. 9.

10. A. 5. Hence first, Riches are not absolutely to be desired, Prov. 23. 4. 5: 1 Tim. 6. 8. 9. 10.

Secondly, If riches encrease by Gods providence, the mind is carefully and seriously to bee fortified against those vices, which usually accompany them, Psalm. 62. 11.

Thirdly, Wee must strive as well by prayer to God, as all diligence to make riches our instruments of piety.

CHAP. XLVIII.

Of Parsimony, and Frugality.

Quest. 1. What is required to honest Parsimony?

1. A. 1. There is required; First, That wee beware, wee doe not idly lavish those things, which can bee employed either in profitable or honest uses, Prov. 21. 17. This rule, as agreeing to right reason, and the Doctrine of CHRIST, some of the Disciples thought not well off, yet did confidently apply it, especially Judas, in reproving the deed of Mary about the funerall of CHRIST, Matth. 26. 8. 9. Mark. 14. 4. 5. Ioh. 12. 4.

2. A. 2. That wee looke, that no considerable thing of those, which may bee usefull bee lost, Ioh. 6. 12.

3. A. 3. That wee doe not out of too much griping envy our selves the just use of those things we possess, Eccles. 6. 12. Nor yet foolishly devour them, Prov. 21. 20.

4. A. 4. It

4. A. 4. It is required that this care doe not proceed from the love of riches; but out of conscience towards God, whose benefits wee ought not to abuse, and out of a foresight of providing for our necessities, and doing good to others. For honest thrift doth not hinder, but rather promote liberality and other vertues.

Quest. 2. What is required to honest frugality?

5. A. 1. First, There is required, that wee doe not lay out our money upon vaine, and unprofitable things, Isa. 55. 2.

6. A. 2. That wee bee not lovers of pleasures, Prov. 21. 17. Luk. 16. 19.

7. A. 3. That wee employ our money in those things, which have a reall use, Prov. 31. 13. 16.

8. A. 4. That wee willingly bestow upon pious uses as farre, as wee are able, and wee may expect from thence the most sure benefit, Prov. 11. 24. and 19. 17. Hag. 1. 4. 8. &c.

CHAP. XLIX.

Of Liberality and Pitty.

Quest. 1. V Whose duty is it to exercise Liberality, and Pitty?

1. A. 1. To profit or benefit others, is a duty belonging to all men according to a good inclination and disposition of mind, as also in some sort according to endeavour.

2. A. 2. According to the outward worke of giving somewhat, whereby anothers wants are supplied, (which is the definition of an almes;) it is the duty onely of those, who have somewhat of their owne, and also the power of bestowing it, 1 Iob. 3. 17.

3. A. 3. This duty therefore doth not onely belong to rich men, but to those also of a meaner condition, who get their living by their hands, Ephes. 4. 28.

4. A. 4. Those who are so much subject to others, that they have nothing their owne, either according to the propriety, or profit, or profit onely, they are so farre exempted from this duty, that they can bestow nothing at least without the tacite consent of their Masters.

5. A. 5. Neither are all men which have somewhat of their owne strait bound to give somewhat to those that want. For by course wee must helpe others with those things which doe overbound with us, 1 Cor. 8. 13. which is to bee understood:

First, Of things superfluous to the necessity of life.

Secondly, Of things superfluous to the state and condition of life, wherein wee are placed, that is, of those things which wee may want without any detriment, either to life or state. But some extraordinary chance may require, that somewhat also of those things, which are necessary should bee spent, and this is to give above ones power, 2 Cor. 8. 2. 3.

Quest. 2. To whom must wee give an almes?

6. A. 1. To those that want, who cannot maintaine themselves, Matth. 23. 55. 36. Act. 20. 34. 35.

7. A. 2. Seeing that want, admits of a threefold degree, so that in some it is extreame, and joyned with hazard, either of death, or sinne; in others heavy, with danger of great discommodity, in others ordinary, requiring onely some reliefe; from hence a difference of obligation followeth: for wee are bound to helpe him, that wants extremely even with things necessary to our state, (for the life of a neighbour is to bee more esteemed, then our owne externall condition.) Wee are bound to helpe him that wants greivously with things superfluous to our state; but him who wants but ordinarily, with things superfluous to the decency of our state.

Quest. 3. What method is to bee observed in bestowing an almes?

8. A. 1. All things being alike, wee must give succour to a greater, and more heavy necessity, then to a lesse weighty.

Secondly,

Secondly, Where the need is alike, those are to be preferred, in whom wee discern more reasons of favour: as those that are neerer, to those who are further off, those who are of the household of faith; to unbelievers, the better to the lesse good, those that are more profitable to the Church or Common-wealth, to those that are lesse, &c. Matth. 15. 5. 6. 1 Tim. 5. 8. Gal. 6. 10. Deut. 5. 7.

9. A. 2. Although wee must use diligence, that wee may rather ayd good then bad, especially if it bee likely that our almes may bee an occasion, and instrument to those of glorifying God, but to these of sinning, yet wee must not therefore bee curiously inquisitive into the hidden faults of the poore: for charity doth not easily thinke evill, 1 Cor. 13. 5.

Quest. 4. After what manner are almes to bee given?

10. A. 1. Out of religion towards God, and desire of his honour, Prov. 3. 9. 1 Cor. 8. 3.

11. A. 2. Out of the affection of brotherly charity, and pittie; 1 Cor. 13. 3.

12. A. 3. Out of an humble conscience of duty before God, not out of ambition of vaine glory before men, Matth. 6. 1. 2.

13. A. 4. With respect to the poore, not with contempt, or their shame, 1 Cor. 11. 22.

14. A. 5. With cheerefulnessse and freenessse of mind, and countenance, not heavily, or as it were by compulsion; 2 Cor. 9. 7. Rom. 12. 8.

15. A. 6. Readily without delay, Prov. 3. 27. 28.

Quest. 5. How much must bee bestowed in almes?

16. A. 1. It must bee accounted for a generall rule, that wee should rather give plenteously, then sparingly; 2 Cor. 9. 6.

17. A. 2. In common, the measure of our bounty, dependeth on the measure of Gods blessing to us in externall things, 1 Cor. 16. 2.

18. A. 3. Here wee must looke diligently, what pietie and charity doth dictate to the best Christians, that wee may may doe the like, if wee have the like abilities, and if not according to an equall proportion, 2 Cor. 9. 2.

19. A. 4. And that is certaine, that all, and every one must lay out, much more upon pious uses, then they consume on their pleasures.

20. A. 5. How much wee must give just here, and at this time, cannot bee limited without wise consideration of all the circumstances.

Quest. 6. By what reasons should wee cheisty bee stirred up to give almes?

21. A. 1. There is a singular excellency found in this duty. For as charity is the most excellent of all vertues, 1 Cor. 13: And Pity is an excellent measure of charity: so this worke of charity and pity hath its blessed transendency; Act. 20. 35.

22. A. 2. Not onely the will of God revealed in the Scriptures doth require this, but also the law of humane nature. For nothing is more naturall then that wee should doe so to another, as wee would bee done to our selves. And nothing is more humane, then to helpe the necessity of man.

23. A. 3. In pity, and its workes, wee doe especially put on the image and likenesse of God, Luk. 6. 36.

24. A. 4. Love towards God, cannot consist without this charity towards our neighbour, 1 Ioh. 3. 17. neither can any true religion; Iam. 1. 27.

25. A. 5. God is in CHRIST, who asketh an almes of us by the poore; Matth. 25. 40. and hee requireth onely some little portion, of that which hee hath given us; 1 Chron. 29. 11.

26. A. 6. God gave us those things, which wee have not as to absolute Lords, but as to Possessours at will, that wee should dispense the things committed to our trust, to his honour, and according to his will; Luk. 16. 12.

27. A. 7. Yet God will restore abundantly what is givento the poore in his name; Prov. 3. 9. and 19. 17. and 28. 27.

28. A. 8. Without pity to our brother, it cannot bee that that wee should have any sence, or assurance of Gods pittie towards us, or that wee should bee disposed either to receive or aske it; Math. 5. 7. and 7. 6. 1 Tim. 6. 17. 18. 19.

29. A. 9. Pittie frequently in Scripture hath the promises, and uncharitableness the threatenings, both of this life, and the life to come.

CHAP. L.

Of Theft.

Quest. 1. What cases are there, in which one may take away anothers goods, without the sinne of theft?

A. 1. If one should snatch away any thing of anothers, without intent of keeping either it, or the use, or possession of it, which may bee valewed by money: as it oftentimes happens in jest among friends.

Secondly, If the taking away of another mans goods bee done as a punishment by one, who hath power of inflicting such a punishment.

Thirdly, If (without fraud or scandall) it bee for the profit, and benefit of him from whom it is taken, as when a sword is forced from a mad man: or the money of a prodigall husband is taken away by a provident wife for the necessary use of the family.

Fourthly, If it bee done out of charity, against the which the other storneth unjustly: as if one should sling away anothers dice, or spoile his cards, least by gaming hee should sinne, or runne into any other danger.

Fifthly, If it bee done for satisfaction of a cleare and apparant debt, which could not bee recovered by the ordinary course of law, so that it bee done without losse, infamy, or scandall to his Neighbour.

Sixthly, If there bee a probable consent or ratification of his from whom somewhat is taken away, as when a thing of small moment is taken by the Sonne from the Father, or the Wife from the Husband, &c. which is commonly accounted for nothing, Deut. 23. 24. 25.

Seventhly, If the Master which is unwilling, should bee angry without reason; as in those things, which one hath taken from another man to succour his owne present extreame necessity, which hee could not helpe by any other meanes. For this seemes to bee by the law of nature more ancient, then the division of things, which cannot be abrogated by the humane law; by which the division of things was made: In which sense it is not ill said, that all things are made common in urgent necessity.

CHAP. LI.

Of Covetousnesse.

Quest. 1. What is that Covetousnesse which is condemned?

1. A. 1. Covetousnesse is properly versed about those things, which are called externall goods: and belongs to the concupiscence of the eyes, as it is divided oppositely against the concupiscence of the flesh, and pride of life; I Iob. 2. where the cheifest worldly finnes are reduced to three heads, to honours, pleasures, and riches. Hence in Scripture it is called the love of riches, the love of lucre, and the love of money by a speciall appropriation, because all things may bee attained, and are rated by money.

2. A. 2. Not every desire of riches is Covetousnesse, but onely the inordinate love of them; and that love is inordinate which is repugnant to the love, which wee owe to God; or our Neighbour. Hence, Covetousnesse useth to bee called an immoderate, or unjust love of having.

3. A. 3. But because the essence of Covetousnesse, doth consist in desire, therefore it is numbred among those finnes,

finnes, which can bee consumated within, without any outward act, although it useth to command the whole man, and bring forth externall operations of all kinds.

4. A. 4. Hence also it is, that a Covetous man sinneth three wayes: First, In desiring riches. Secondly, In attaining them. Thirdly, In retaining or keeping them. For these three are contained in the desire of having.

5. A. 5. But because the inordinatenesse of this love consisteth in its repugnancy to the love of God, or our Neighbour; therefore the pravity of Covetousnesse is in it:

First, According to its matter, if wee would make our selves rich by those things which are sacred to God, as in the sinne of Simony, or by those things which are our Neighbours, so that they either ought not, or will not alienate them: such was the sinne of Ahab about the Vineyard of Naboth, 1 King. 21.

Secondly, According to the forme or manner; if any in getting riches, useth either wicked, unjust, or unlawfull arts or meanes, Prov. 10. 2. and 28. 8. 22.

Thirdly, According to the degree or measure, if any shall so give himselfe over to the heaping up of riches, that hee neglects his duty towards God and his Neighbour; Luk. 22. 5. Esa. 5. 8.

Fourthly, According to the end, if riches are either loved for themselves, or are referred to some evill end, or lastly doe turne a man from God, or his Neighbour either in whole or in part.

Quest. 2. What are the signes of a Covetous man?

6. A. 1. If hee bee too solicitous in thought of externall goods, so that his mind is in suspense like a meteor, Ezek. 12. 22, 25. 29.

7. A. 2. If his joy, and sadnesse, trust and feare doe depend upon his successe in those externall affaires, Luk. 12. 19.

8. A. 3. If hee have a quick and ready feeling in those things. but slow, and unapt to discern Spirituall things. For the attention of the mind and a knowledge more peircing peircing in one thing then another followeth alwayes the affection, Math. 13. 22.

9. A. 4. If that time, in which hee is compelled to leave of his seeking gaine, although it is employed in Divine worship, seeme too long to him; Amos 8. 5.

10. A. 5. If his mind hunteth after gaine, even in the exercise of Divine worship; Eze. 33. 31.

Quest. 3. By what reasons may wee bee stirred up to fly covetousnesse?

11. A. 1. Because this sinne so averts our love, trust, and whole heart from God to the World, that it excludes true Religion, 1 Ioh. 2. 15. and contains in it Spirituall Idolatry, Ephes. 5. 5. Col. 3. 5.

12. A. 2. Because it peirceth a man with cares, and deadly greifes; 1 Tim. 6. 10.

13. A. 3. Because it is the roote of all evill; 1 Tim. 6. 9. 10.

Quest. 4. What are the remedies which chiefly availe against this sinne?

14. A. 1. Frequent and serious meditation of the vanity of riches; Eccles. 5. and 6.

15. A. 2. A continuall consideration of the shortnesse of this life, and of the eternity to which we ought to aspire, Luk. 12. 20. 21. 33.

16. A. 3. A stirring up of faith, and lively confidence in Gods providence, and Fatherly care over us; Luk. 12. 28. 29. 30.

17. A. 4. A great esteeme, and zeale towards the Kingdome of God, and the righteousnesse thereof, which are Spirituall riches; Luk. 12. 21. 31.

18. A. 5. Invocation to God, that hee will not suffer our minds to slide into covetousnesse, P salm. 119. 36.

CHAP. LII.

Of some Mosaicall lawes belonging to the eight Commandement.

Quest. I. VV Hat was the equity of that law, that no simple theft should bee punished with capitall punishment?

1. A. 1. There was great equity in that moderation, which is to bee observed by all Christians; because justice requireth, that a proportion bee made with as much equality as can bee, betweene the fault, and the punishment: but there will bee no proportion found betweene those externall goods, which are taken away by simple theft from men, and the life of man, if they shall bee weighed together in the ballance.

2. A. 2. To that which usually is most objected, That when the faults encrease, the punishments ought to be exasperated; It is confessed to bee truly said, but with this exception and condition, that the whole kind of punishment bee not changed, nor that all limits of proportion betweene the fault and the punishment bee not leaped over.

3. A. 3 That which is brought against this, out of Prov. 6. 31. of the encreasing of the punishment of theft to sevenfold, and out of the 2 Sam. 12. 5. of the theife adjudged to death by David, are not repugnant to this equity. For with Solomon, the restitution of sevenfold, seemeth to bee put for a greivous mulct, which by right might, or in act used to bee imposed on the theife: as the seventh number is oftentimes put in the Scripture for great. But David giving that sentence, did not onely looke on the simple theft, but the great cruelty of the rich theife, or spoiler, preying on his poore neighbour: and also hee was kindled with wrath when hee gave that sentence.

4. A. 4. That is lesse which is objected, that the law of Moses concerning the punishment of theft, is no where found to be repeated, and confirmed or enjoyned in the new Testament, and therefore that it was merely politick and judiciall. For they themselves grant, which are of the contrary opinion those lawes of Moses to be universall and perpetuall, which have an universall and perpetuall cause and reason, and not a particular belonging to the Iewes; and they can bring no speciall reason, but a ridiculous one of the kindred, and affinity of the Israelites among themselves: which reason can take no place in strangers, who notwithstanding were not punished capitally for a simple theft; and if that reason did availe against the capitall punishment of theeves among the Israelites, it would have availed also against the capitall punishment of other faults.

Quest. 2. What was the reason of restoring double the theft of money, or household stuffe? Exod. 22. 17.

5. A. 1. It is just (by the law of retaliation,) that not onely that which is taken away should be restored, but also that the theife should suffer so much dammage as hee would, and did endeavour to bring upon another: and so hee may learne by his punishment, what it was that hee practised against another, and how hee ought to carry himselfe toward others.

6. A. 2. A Theife sinneth doubly against his Neighbour: for every one ought not to be onely innocent to his Neighbour; but also to wish him well, and doe good to him upon occasion, but a theife is delinquent against both duties.

Quest. 3. What equity was in that law, where a lesser mulct was appointed for him, which had stolen money or household stuffe, then for him which stole an oxe or a sheepe, when oftentimes there was more dammage done in that theft then in this?

7. A. 1. Some evils which simply considered in themselves, are lesse, yet may be more hurtfull to the publique peace and tranquillity, then others which are greater in themselves.

8. A. 2. Some evils for their opportunities are more easily easily committed, and more hardly redressed: as to steale a sheepe, then gold, because it may, and useth to bee kept closer.

9. A. 3. Because sheepe and oxen in their owne nature, are more necessary to sustaine mans life then gold, or household stuffe.

10. A. 4. Oxen and sheepe were to bee offered among the cheifest sacrifices to God. Therefore it is no marvaile, if hee would have those things more narrowly kept, and their taking away more severely punished, out of which a part was due to him, and on which his worship for the most part did depend.

Quest. 4. Why were five oxen restored for one, and onely foure sheepe?

11. A. 1. Because the use of oxen is greater to their Masters, then of sheepe. But their curious observation doth not ill agree to the explaining of this difference, who say there are foure commodities of a sheepe, the skinne, the flesh, the milke, and the young ones, but in an oxe they count a fift, to wit, the labour in husbandry, in treading out the gorne, and carrying of burdens.

12. A. 2. Because there is appearance of lesse necessity for stealing an oxe, then one sheep, which one may seeke for want of meat, to releive himselfe, and his family in present necessity.

13. A. 3. Because it is more boldnesse and villany, to steale an oxe, then a sheepe.

Quest. 5. What was the reason that a theife taken with those stolen beasts living, was lesse punished, then if hee had killed them, or sold them?

14. A. Because in the latter case, there is found more continuation, obduration, and multiplying of the sinne.

Quest. 6. What is the equity of that law, Exod. 22. 2. of killing a night theife?

15. A. 1. The Divine law doth not command this, or either simply or universally allow of it, but onely permit-teth it to bee done without punishment, that is, hee absolwith the killer from the ordinary penalty of man slaughter. Let not blood bee upon him; Let him not bee guilty of murder.

16. A. 3. The law doth also imply, that some murder some way may bee permitted, which is without the intention of the slayer: for it doth not say, If any shall slay, but if one shall bee smitten, and dye: As if the striking was onely intended, either to drive away or apprehend, and death followed upon that striking onely by chance. For hee, who when hee could either drive away, or apprehend, had rather kill, cannot bee excused before God, and in his conscience from the guilt of murder.

17. A. 3. This is not permitted to bee done to any theife, but onely to him which breakes thorough or open a house. Yet all Pyrates, and High-way-robbers, are in the same condition.

18. A. 4. It is permitted particularly on the breaker open in the night.

First, Because a night breaker open, comes with a violent invasion; that is, with such a force, as may lawfully and naturally bee repulsed by force.

Secondly, Because that violence in the night, is of an unknowne extent and manner. For it cannot bee discerned, whither the violence of the theife tendeth, as whether hee bee a robber, or a cut-throat.

Thirdly, Because in the night, there can neither bee ayd or witnesses had, and therefore wee must beleieve him which doth depose upon his danger, and feare, and pardon him if hee useth vehemency in his owne defence.

19. A. 5. Out of which considerations it appeareth, that hee could not lawfully kill such a theife directly for meere theft either attempted or done, but onely to avoyd that perill, which he ought not to undergoe, and could not shunne by any other meanes.

20. A. 6. Neither is there any thing in the new Testament, by which that which is permitted in this law is forbidden. For it is naturall equity, and allowed of by the Lord, Matth. 24. 43. That no man should suffer his House to be broken through by a theife.
of

Quest. 7. What is meant by that, which is read, Deut. 15. 4. There shall bee no poore among you?

21. Ans. 1. These words cannot bee so taken, as if they contained, either a promise or an absolute prediction. For so they would contradict those words which wee have Vers. 11. The poore shall never cease out of the land; And the like words of CHRISTs, Matth. 14. 7.

22. Ans. 2. Whether it bee a conditionall promise, (as some would,) or (as others would;) the reason of the antecedent precept of exacting debts in the yeare of release, it hath the force of a forewarning statute, that there should bee none brought to extreame want, or beggery, and left so, amongst the people of the Lord.

23. Ans. 3. But although this cannot bee procured, but by common consent, and the authority, and care of those who have publique power, yet this duty is imposed upon all and every one, that they should conferre somewhat to this worke, according to their ability and occasion, as to the promotion of the publique and common good.

24. A. 4. The equity of this law, is strengthened by most sound reasons:

For first, As it is a fowle scandall to a family, and a certainetoken of disorder, confusion, and dissolution, where every one is not provided of necessaries for food, in so much, that it can hardly bee accounted a family, where that care is not stirring, so also it is in every City and Community.

25. A. 2. From the neglect of this care, there springs up a great company of beggers, who live idly and disorderly, giving themselves to most beastly manners.

26. A. 3. Thence it cometh to passe, that honest and kind kind Citizens are burthened above measure, and without necessity.

27. A. 4. Thence also it is, that persons truly miserable cannot bee knowne from others, and so not releived as they should bee.

28. A. 5. Lastly, The publique and wandring beggerie of Christians, is a scandall of the true religion, as if it did not teach that humanity and charity, which nature it selfe dictateth: and passeth into contempt of CHRIST, who sayeth, that that is done to himsele, which is done to his members the poore: and into the manifest disgrace of the name of God, as well in those beggers which worshipping him are made the spectacles and examples of misery, as in the rowte of others, who wander without God as brute beasts.

CHAP. LIII.

The 9. Commandement.

Of a Lye.

Quest. I. VV What is (to speake properly) a Lye?

1. A. 1. A Lye is a false Testimony.

2. A. 2. A false Testimony, differs from a false opinion; because a false opinion may bee by error in the mind, and signified to no man: but it is required in a false Testimony, that it should bee a sinne of speech, that is, of an opinion expressed either by the mouth, or writing, or some signe equivalent to words.

3. A. 3. It differeth also from false enuntiation, by which a thing is pronounced otherwise then it is: because this may happen, that it is not done to procure beleife, which is the nature of a Testimony, and one may through error pronounce this or that which is false, yet thinke it to bee true in his mind: now in a Lye the speech alwayes dissenteth from the mind.

4. A. 4. Therefore if any one shall speake that which is false, beleeving it to bee true, hee lyeth onely materially. If any speaketh truth, thinking it to bee false, or not thinking it to bee true, hee lyeth formally. But if any shall speake that which is false, and thinke it to bee false, hee lyeth both materially, and formally, and fully.

5. A. 5. Yet if any shall testifie that which is false in those things, which hee may, and is bound, and professeth to know, although hee thinketh it true, hee by interpretation is accounted in the Scripture as one that did not thinke, and under that title is said to lye; as it appeareth in false teachers: all of which are frequently in Scripture said to lye; although there were not a few amongst them, on whom God (out of just punishment,) sent the power of errour, that they should beleeve a lye, 2 Thess. 2. 11.

6. A. 6. To this kind of lye an internall false speech hath some respect, as also the credulity of falsity, as far as it is in some way the beginning of false enuntiation, & in some sort it is a false Testimony of that man, in that hee doth testifie to himselfe; yet it hath not the formall nature of a lye, for to speake properly, no man can testifie that which is true or false to himselfe, but to others.

7. A. 7. It doth proceed from the same reason, that a lye, or false Testimony doth properly belong to the second Table: because words are instituted that by them wee should transerre our thoughts to other mens knowledge, and therefore should properly and truly testifie to men; although Hypocrites are said with some proportion to lye to God, Psalms. 78. 36. Act. 5. 4.

Quest. 2. Whether every lye bee a sinne, and what kind of sinne?

8. A. 1. It is a sinne abominable to God; Psalms. 5. 7. Prov. 6. 17. 19. and 12. 22. and which is usually punished greivously by him; Prov. 19. 5. 9. and 21. 18. Rev. 21. 27. and 22. 15.

9. A. 2. A lye cometh from the instigation of the Devill, Devill, who is a lyer, and the Father of lies, Ioh. 8.

44.

10. A. 3. It is a part of the old man which is to bee mortified and put off by the faithfull, Ephes. 4. 25. Colos. 3. 9.

11. A. 4. It doth disorder the lyer in himselfe; for it is against the order of nature, that the speech which is interpreter of the mind, should wholly disagree from the mind.

12. A. 5. It is a disorder also against his neighbour, for every one by the obligation of the naturall law, doth owe to his neighbour the observance of truth.

13. A. 6. It doth in a speciall manner hurt the Majesty of God, who is the authour, and such a lover of truth, that hee cannot lye: and also hath imprinted in man the image of his truth to bee kept: neither did hee ever give authority of lying by any dispensation.

14. A. 7. It is an abuse and fowle defiling of the tongue, which is rightly called in Scripture the Glory of man.

15. A. 8. There is somewhat that is base, and low in a lye, more then in other vulgar sinnes, (whether it is, because it seemeth to proceed from feare, or because it tendeth to deceit,) whence it is that rash men, who stand upon their slight honour; (although they lye continually;) yet take so hainously the exprobaton of a lye, that they thinke it fit to bee revenged by the sword.

16. A. 9. The violation and neglect of faith, doth directly disturbe, and take away all contracts and humane societies: because they depend upon the faith and truth of men, as upon their cheife bond, and foundation.

17. A. 10. A lye, because it robs the lyer of all trust and authority, doth make him unfit to undergoe either Christian, or Civill duties towards men.

Quest. 3. Whether, and how farre may one conceale the truth, without the guilt of a lye, or some other sinne?

18. A. 1. It is lawfull to conceale the truth by silence, when neither piety, justice, or charity require, that it should bee

bee revealed, Math. 26. 63. Mark. 14. 61. and 15. 5. Luk. 23. 9. Ioh. 19. 9. For the affirmative Precept, of speaking truth, doth not bind alwayes, but where the reason of circumstances well weighed doth require.

19. A. 2. The same is the reason of speaking one part of the truth, and hiding the other; if any (the circumstances being considered,) hath authority to hide it; Ierem. 38. 26. 27.

20. A. 3. Also it is lawfull sometimes, without falsehood, to speake those words, out of which wee know probably, that the hearers may conclude somewhat that is false, Aet. 23. 6. 7. 8. 9. For this is not to lye, or beare false witness, but onely to give another occasion of erring, not to commit, but to avoyd a sinne.

21. A. 4. But that concealing of the truth by mentall reservation, or verball equivocation, which most of the Pontificians teach, may bee used in some cases, if it bee applied in any weighty testimony, it is nothing else, but the art of lying.

22. A. 5. The concealing of the truth by mentall reservation, (as if one guilty shall say, that hee did not, or knoweth not, that which hee did, or knoweth, reserving in his mind, with this meaning that hee did not doe it, or doth not know it, so that hee would reveale it.) First, It doth evert the nature and doctrine of enunciation and testimony; because that part of the sentence which is reserved in the mind, doth not declare, signifie, or disclose any thing to any man.

23. A. 2. It doth proceed from an intention of deceiving, or creating an opinion contrary to the truth in anothers mind: which is against the nature of testifying, or bearing record of this or that thing.

24. A. 3. In words pronounced after this manner, there is a plaine and bare lye contained.

For first, If the guilty which did this or that, shall say that hee did, his testimony is true, therefore if hee denieth that hee hath done it, his testimony is false; that is, hee lyeth.

Secondly, By this meanes the guilty doth say and testifie not onely that which is false, but what hee knoweth, and is sure is false: which is to lye both materially, and formally, that is compleatly.

25. A. 4. If this bee not to lye, then such a guilty man, can by no meanes lye in the same cause, if hee would never so faine. Hee which hath done, or knoweth this or that, if hee can lye any way, it must necessarily bee by saying, I have not done it, or I doe not know it. Some mentall reservation either distinctly or implicitey conceived, alwayes lurketh in common lyes. For hee which knoweth that to bee false which hee speaketh, can hardly otherwise speake false without this restriction, or some such like: although this bee false, and I would confesse it in another place and time, yet for some reasons, I say so at this time and place: where the mentall reservation is almost the same which the Pontificians allow: I did not doe it, to tell thee in this place, or at this time.

26. A. 5. There are great men amongst the Pontificians themselves, who are forced to condemne these mentall reservations; Sotus de just. & jure, lib. 5. q. 6. a. 2. To say, (I did not doe it,) which I did, although it be with this limitation of the mind, (that I should give notice of it to you) is not equivocation, but a lye. Covarruvias followeth Sotus var. resolut. lib. 1. cap. 2. num. 2; Azor. lib. 11. cap. 4. If words which we use, are not ambiguous in their own signification, or by the common practice of men, but onely have one sense, we must use them in that sense which they give: neither is it lawfull for us, although we be questioned against right and law, to wrest one thing into another by a thought, for it is never granted to lye: but he lyeth who taketh words otherwise then they signifie; for there is nothing so false, which cannot be freed from all lying, if at our owne pleasure we retaine somewhat tacitely in our mind.

27. A. 6. That restriction of this licence, which the patrons of it make to certaine cases, doth not take quite away, but onely diminisheth the shame: it is lawfull (say they) they) absolutely to deny by words, that which hee knoweth to bee true upon oath: First, If hee hath heard it in confession. Secondly, If hee bee not questioned legally by a Iudge. Thirdly, If some injury is brought upon him by the Interrogatory. Fourthly, If hee have any reasonable cause, Filucius tr. 40. cap. 2. num. 49. 50. 51. 52.

For first, Those cases, although they containe causes of silence, yet they have no other relation or respect to a testimony mingled of words externall, which are false in themselves, and mentall, fained at will, then any other matter of speech in common discourse.

Secondly, Neither confession, or the defect of legall proesse, or an injury can give power to any to lye.

Thirdly, More then this, that last limitation (if he have a reasonable cause,) doth set such loose bounds to this fallacy, that it may take place upon all occasions, and in all businesse, with those, who thinke they have a reasonable cause for cousening others: which bringeth with it the destruction of humane intercourse.

28. 1. When one (say they) being questioned of no man, or being alone, or before others discoursing with himselfe for his minds sake, may understand what he will by any words without a lye. Therefore also, he may in case he be unjustly questioned: because he is obliged to nothing by an unjust interrogatory.

But first, This is such an inference, as if one should say: it is lawfull to play with huckle bones, therefore it is lawfull to play with oaths.

Secondly, The reason is altogether unlike, hee which discourseth alone with himselfe, or trifleteth on set purpose before others, testifieth nothing to any man, neither doth hee professe, that hee will give his testimony. But hee which answereth to one questioning seriously, professeth, (and that oftentimes upon the religion of an oath,) that he will give in true witnesse.

29. 2. There may bee ambiguity in words (adde they,) not onely in signification, but also according to the place, time, person, manner, and other circumstances. Now it is wholly left to one, that is unjustly questioned to take ambiguous words in what sense he will. And indeed, they speake so farre true, that there are some usuall significations of words to bee drawne out of the circumstances: to wit, when some particles may bee and commonly are understood, and supplied in some proposition, by the circumstance of time, person, end, &c. As if one selling corne, after hee hath sold all that hee would sell, reserving so much as is necessary for himselfe, should answer to a Chapman, demanding if hee had any corne, I have none, hee did not lye: because by the circumstance of persons, the discourse is understood to bee of wheat that is to bee sold.

But first, In those fallacies which wee treat of, there are no circumstances from which the hearers may gather that mentall interpretation, (which the equivocatour reserveth to himselfe; as for example, if a Iesuite, or some Masse-priest, should be asked by a Lay-Iudge, whether hee were a Priest or no, and hee shall deny it therefore, because hee is a Priest, and so not subject to the Jurisdiction of a Lay-judge: he denieth to this Iudge that hee is a Priest, onely because hee is one.

Secondly, Those circumstances as long as they remaine the same, alwayes denotate one and the same meaning; but Equivatours turne themselves into divers senses even as they list.

Thirdly, Hee which will bee understood by circumstances, neither hideth the truth, or deceiveth the Examiner, or Hearer; but an Equivatour professeth both.

Fourthly, When somewhat is understood by the circumstances, hee which so speaketh, if hee should bee farther asked, whether his words ought to bee understood so or no, if hee should deny, it were a plaine lye: but these Equivatours being asked distinctly, whether they speake equivocally, from their Masters doctrine, use to deny that too.

30. A. 8. In the examples, which the Pontificians bring of this kind of equivocation in some speeches of our Lord which are registred in the Evangelists, there is nothing to be found, which can countenance this deceit.

31. 1. They say, CHRIST the Lord, Matth. 9. 24. said of the Damzell that was dead, shee is not dead, understanding, in respect of my power and will.

But first, In that example, there was neither a secret of confession, neither an interrogatory made either against, or beside law, neither an injury offered to CHRIST, or any reasonable cause that did compell CHRIST to use any equivocation by a mentall reservation, but it was such a speech, as CHRIST used in his common conversation with men.

Secondly, The meaning of CHRIST'S words was manifest enough by the circumstances, without any mentall reservation. For hee spoke to those, who crying and mourning, did provide the funerall rites for the dead, as not to be raised againe; but hee would testifie, that hee would raise her againe as one awaked from sleepe: and therefore could not explain this more aptly, then in those words which hee used.

32. 2. They bring those words of our Lord, Job. 15. 15. All things which I have heard from my Father, I have made knowne to you. Which words they say, are to be understood by a mentall reservation: because hee had other things to tell them, not yet spoken, Job. 16. 12.

But Tolet the Iesuite, upon the place, doth answer after Iansenius: That there are many things spoken in Scripture, which are to be restrained according to the circumstances of things, persons, times, or the end or scope, for which they are produced: so CHRIST did now make knowne all things to his Disciples, which according to their condition and state they ought to heare.

33. 3. They object and urge, most especially that of

Mark, 13. 32. Of that day and houre no man knoweth, no not the Sonne himselfe.

But first, The conditions which the Pontificians require to lawfull equivocation, doe no more agree to this instance, then the first.

Secondly, The Sonne as man in that place, is opposed to the Father as God. For CHRIST did not deny, or would seeme to deny, but that the Holy Ghost did know the day of judgement. The meaning therefore is cleere as the words sound: that CHRIST as man was ignorant as yet of the day of judgement, or at least did not know by a naturall knowledge: which is the interpretation of Athanasius, Basilius, Hilarius, Nazianzen, Theodoret, Cyrill, and the whole sixt Synod, as the Iesuites among themselves doe confesse, Gregor. de valent. in comment. Theolog. tom. 4. disput. 1. quest. 10. punct. 2. And Maldonate upon Mark. 13. For although CHRIST the Lord had no faulty ignorance, either privative, or out of a bad disposition, or quality, yet it was not unmeet for his state of humiliation, that as hee was man, hee might have the ignorance of pure negation, or a not knowledge of somethings, which afterwards hee should perfectly know, being glorified.

34. 4. They alledge also that of Luk. 24. 28. Hee made as though he would have gone no further. But this feining was not in words contradicting the truth, but in gestures agreeing with the truth: For the Lord composed himselfe as if hee would have gone further, unlesse the Disciples should earnestly urge him to the contrary, and as it were retaine him by force. Such gestures of guests, when they are also joyned with words agreeing to them, in common discourse doe signifie nothing else, then such a will suspended on such conditions. Therefore in this example, there is no likelihood or shadow of an extraordinary equivocation; in words which are otherwise contradictory to truth, unlesse they were translated to some unperceived meaning by mentall reservation.

35. 5. Lastly, They oppose those words of our Lord,
Iob,

Iob. 7. 8. I will not goe up to the feast; because, notwithstanding this deniall, the same Evangelist doth testify, that hee did goe up to the Feast; Vers. 10. But the whole force of this objection relieth upon the doubtfull translation, by which that word, which properly signifieth, not yet, is rendered by not. Cajetan, Iansenius, Maldonate, and Tolet doe observe this in the explanation of this place. And this is fully shewed in the very vulgar translation, where in the words next following, it rendereth the same word by not yet, for my time is not yet come.

CHAP. LIV.

Of publique judgements, the Judge, Accusers, Witnesses, Advocate, and Defendant.

Quest. 1. What is Judgement?

I. A. Judgement doth properly signifie, the determining of that, which is just betwixt those which strive about right. But it doth also connote a coactive power, of compelling the parties to submit themselves to the determination, or sentence given.

Quest. 2. Whether such Judgements, and the office of Judges bee lawfull amongst Christians?

2. A. 1. They are not onely lawfull, but necessary; Act. 15. 10. Rom. 13. For that which by the law of nature is profitable and necessary for the good estate of humane society, is not taken away, but rather is established, directed, and perfected by the institutions of Christian religion. For Christian religion doth not destroy, but perfect nature: but the office of Judges and judgements, by the law of nature, are usefull and necessary for the good estate of humane society: as it appeareth by the example and experience of all people, which have used such judicatures, as necessary for the state of the Common-wealth. For it is plaine, that confusion cannot bee avoyded without the determination of strifes, and that many strifes cannot bee ended ded without the Iudges power.

Q. 3. A. 2. That which the Anabaptists object against this, is to weake to take away so necessary an institution. For CHRIST Matth. 5. 40. doth not Command us to flee suing at Law, as a thing unlawfull: but to beare injuries patiently, and not to repay evill with evill, neither slightly to contend with those, who doe us an injury; Matth. 7. 1. a private judgement is forbidden, and that too rash, proud, and unjust, and not a just one, as it appeareth by the opposite words, Ioh. 7. 24. Paul, 1 Cor. 6. 6. doth not condemne all going to law, but that contention which was joynd with scandall, such as was that of the faithfull brethren before the unbeleaving Iudges, which gave offence, both to the faithfull and the unbeleever.

Quest. 3. What things are required to a lawfull Iudgement?

4. A. 1. It is first required that it bee from just authority; that is, that it bee done by him, who hath lawfull authority over such persons in such a case, Luk. 12. 14.

5. A. 2. It is required, that it bee just in it selfe; that is, that the judgement, or judiciall sentence bee conformable with true justice, Ioh. 7. 24.

6. A. 3. It is required, that it bee certaine; that is, that it bee not given upon things hidden, or onely slightly knowen, but throughly tried; Prov. 18. 13.

7. A. 4. It is required, that the judgement bee upright and sincere; that is, that it proceed from no other affection, but onely from the love of Iustice, and publique good, 2 Chron. 19. 9.

Quest. 4. How many wayes may a Iudge lawfully proceed against offences?

8. A. 1. In criminall causes wee commonly proceed orderly, by way of accusation: (viz.) when there is one that accuseth, and promiseth to prove the crimes which hee objecteth.

The reason is, First, Because that judgement hath relation to a strife, question, or controversie, but there can be no difference, or question, except it bee betweene two, and and it can bee of no fault done, except betweene the accuser, and defendant.

Secondly, It is the office of a Iudge to appoint the medium of Iustice: which can have no place, except there bee two betweene whom it may bee appointed, Deut. 17. 8. and 25. 1. Act. 25. 16.

9. A. 2. But by the naturall and Divine law, there is onely required a sufficient testification of the fact, which is often without a formall accuser, to the giving of a iudiciall sentence: viz. when there are other things which supply the place of an accuser, (as a manifest evidence of the fact, publique report,) in which there is contained a virtuall accusation:

10. A. 3. It oftentimes belongs to the office of a Iudge, to proceed by way of enquiry, where there is no instance of the accuser.

For without this, First, All judgements would depend on the will of the accusers.

Secondly, That Iustice would cease, which is necessary to the bridling of hainous vices, and to the purging and preserving of the Common-wealth.

11. 3. The Iudge doth not fulfill his office, if hee onely knoweth the causes which are brought unto him, unlesse upon occasion, hee doth prudently find them out; Iob. 29. 16. Prov. 24. 11, 12.

12. A. 4. That enquiry, which is called generall, by which wee moderately looke into the observance of the lawes, and faults committed against the lawes, is both profitable, and agreeing to reason both in Church and Common-wealth; as also to the office of those, who have the care of the community, and so ought to have sufficient knowledge, how they ought to carry themselves in observance of the lawes, Act. 15. 36. Deut. 13. 14. and 21. 1. 2. &c.

13. A. 5. If it bee certaine, that the crime is committed, and the authour concealed; as for example, a man lyeth in the high way slaine, or it is certaine, that ones house is pulled downe, or rifled, then onely a generall enquiry ought to bee made, whether or no any probable infamy, or suspicion sticketh upon a man about the fault committed nere those places, and according to proportion, extraordinary enquiry is to bee made, as if hee bee excommunicated, Iob. 7.

14. A. 6. But if there bee an infamy, probable suspicion, or complaint made of this person, as the authour then there ought to bee a speciall enquiry of that person, whether hee bee authour of the crime or no? for then upon publique notice, the Iudge proceedeth as a publique person. And a certaine virtuall accusation is contained in such an evidence; Dent. 22. 14. &c.

15. A. 7. In a generall search, these things are to bee observed.

First, No man ought to betray any to the Iudge, to bee punished in that case which hee knoweth to bee honest, and to deserve no punishment. For this would bee injustice, to promote that, which is not justice.

Secondly, No man, who was not formerly attached, or tainted with the crime of which the enquiry is made, is bound to betray, or accuse himselfe, although hee bee asked upon oath, whether hee knoweth any one to bee guilty of such a fault?

The reason is: First, Because by the intention of the Iudge which proceedeth legally, hee is not asked of himselfe: being that hee doth not enquire of things altogether hid.

Secondly, Because no man is bound to punish himselfe, or directly to cooperate for his owne punishment.

16. A. 8. It is so farre against nature, that any man should betray or defame himselfe, especially when there is great danger, that such enquiries, in which one is questioned of himselfe in criminall causes, no scandall going before, force nature, and give occasion of horrid perjuries.

17. A. 9. No man is alway bound to reveale a secret crime of anothers, of which no ill report went before. For hee, whose offence is hidden, has hee as yet right to preserve preserve his fame, that it should not rashly bee layed open. Neither is it the part of a Iudge to search into hidden faults, who as hee is a publique person, ought to proceed upon some notice, or suspicion.

18. A. 10. Therefore to decline such incommodities, neither the Iudge ought to impose, or the examined to take that oath of enquiry, which is called ex officio, to declare the truth of whatsoever shall bee asked: except it bee with this restriction; as farre as hee is bound to it by law: or as farre, as hee may doe it by right.

19. A. 11. Yet sometimes, secret crimes which before were hidden are to bee detected, when the circumstances being well weighed doe induce this:

As for example, First, When the manifestation will bee profitable and necessary to the hindering the committing of another crime, which is probably feared.

Secondly, When some dangerous discommodity is at hand, which can scarce bee avoyded without revealing of the crime.

Thirdly, When the manifestation is necessary, either for procuring the delinquents amendment, or hindering the continuation or iteration of the offence. For in such cases, there is greater account to bee made of justice and charity, the common good, and one innocent, then of the fame of the faulty, which is blemished onely by chance, and that by his owne fault.

Quest. 5. Whether the Iudge ought alwayes to give sentence according to the things alleaged and proved?

20. A. 1. The Iudge ought not to passe sentence against the things alleaged and proved, whatsoever there bee in his private knowledge.

For first, The Iudge sentenceth as a publique person, and instead of the Common-wealth, therefore hee cannot bee accounted to give a sentence rightly and by his office, except it may bee thought, that the Common-wealth would give and approve the same sentence. But if the Common-wealth should sentence, it could not proceed, but upon publique knowledge. Therefore, hee must judge either ac-ording to publique knowledge which ariseth out of the things alleaged, and proved, or else wholly abstaine from judgement.

Secondly, If the Iudge could sentence either against, or beside things alleaged and proved, there would from thence follow great discommodities, and the perversion of judgements: when unjust Iudges would easily condemne the innocent, and quit the guilty, under pretext of a private knowledge, which disagreeeth from the things alleaged and proved.

Thirdly, There can be no other way, by which the Common-wealth may remaine in quiet.

21. A. 2. Yet the Iudge is not so restrained to things alleaged and proved, that he must condemne him to death, whom hee knoweth plainly to bee innocent.

First, Because things alleaged and proved, are onely meanes of manifesting the truth, and therefore ought not to prevaile with any against the truth which is certainly knowen; and that nothing availeth which they use to answer to this, that the end of proofes is onely publique truth: because publique truth doth presuppose absolute truth.

Secondly, Because a Iudge which pronounceth that to bee true which certainly hee knoweth to bee false, would bee a lyer, and sinne against his owne conscience.

22. A. 3. Neither is this argument solved by that distinction, betweene the publique and private conscience of a Iudge.

For first, the private conscience ought not to be violated at any time.

Secondly, That publique knowledge, although it may bee to others, yet it cannot bee a rule for proceeding to him, which certainly knoweth it to bee false.

Thirdly, Because to slay an innocent, is a fact intrinsically vill, and so ought not to bee committed, by any wittingly, and willingly. Neither is it enough to say it was done by chance, or that such a man was guilty by the common judgement. For hee who wittingly and willingly, and upon upon deliberation doth any thing, hee is the cause of it by himselfe. And the common judgement if it erre for the destruction of any, ought not either to bee confirmed, or promoted by him which knoweth to the contrary.

Fourthly, Hee would rightly bee accounted by all, a wicked man, who in such a particular case, should take upon him the office of a Judge to condemne him whom hee knoweth to bee innocent. Therefore it is wicked to abuse that office after such a manner when it is undertaken.

23. A. 4. If the Judge would but doe his duty in procuring the manifestation of the truth, so much intricatenesse would seldome happen. But if it should happen after hee hath tried all things for the delivery of the innocent, hee is bound to leave his office of Judge rather then to condemne him.

Quest. 6. What sinnes ought a Iudge especially to beware off?

24. A. 1. Either to make, or follow in judicature unjust lawes; Isai. 10. 1. Woe unto them that decree unrighteous decrees, and that write greivousnesse which they have prescribed: To turne aside the needy from judgement, and to take away the right from the poore of my people, &c. For every Iudge ought to administer true justice. But that cannot bee true justice, which is administred according to lawes which are repugnant either to the naturall or divine law. Because a Iudge by his office is the Minister of God, and the Keeper of his law; Deut. 1. 17. 2. Chron. 19. 6. 7. And therefore hee ought to judge according to that.

25. A. 2. To accept of persons; that is, in judicature to respect some condition of this or that person, which maketh nothing to the judging of the cause; Deut. 16. 19. Exod. 23. 3. Lev. 19. 15.

For this is directly against the profession of a Iudge.

First, Because a Iudge is appointed as a medium and Mediatour betweene those whose cause hee judgeth, therefore as the middle doth carry it selfe equall in respect of either extreame, so the affection of the Iudge ought not to encline to any side.

Secondly, A Iudge is nothing else but Iustice enlivened : therefore hee ought no more to encline to this or that party, then the Iustice it selfe of the cause doth encline.

Thirdly, A Iudge undergoeth the person of God, who is free from all passion.

26. A. 3. To receive bribes, Deut. 16. 19. and every where in Scripture.

The reason is, First, Because this bendeth the inclination of the mind to this or that person, which is beyond the cause, and so bringeth in acception of persons.

Secondly, By this meanes, judgement is either corrupted, that it may bee unjust, or just judgement is sold; either of which is abominable; therefore that description of a just man doth especially belong to Iudges, and other administrators of judgement; Isai. 33. 15. Hee that despiseth the gaine of oppressions, that shaketh his hands from holding of bribes, that stoppeth his eares from hearing of blood, and shutteth his eyes from seeing evill.

27. A. 4. To put, or suffer by others to bee put, demerres, prolongings, or unnecessary delayes on a cause; Luk. 18. 3. 4.

For first, This is to deny justice in part, though not in whole.

Secondly, This is to yeild an occasion of dammage, either of both parties, or at least of one : for whilst the cause is spunne out, charges every day encrease, which oftentimes exceed the principall.

Thirdly, By these meanes it commeth to passe, that so many inconveniences doe belong to judgements, that they becomis hurtfull, and formidable, as well to others that are lovers of the peace, as to poore and miserable persons, for whose sake they were chiefly constituted, and doe especially favourbusie wranglers : insomuch, that oftentimes they that have a just cause, will fly going to law, when the unjust oppressours wish it, and seeke after it : which is a manifest perversion and corruption of judgements. By such such abuses, judgements are turned into merewood, Amos 5. 7. and 6. 12. and into unquietnesse, Isai. 10. 1. 2.

Quest. 7. What law is there concerning accusers?

28. A. 1. Information made to a Judge of the fault of one guilty, whether it bee done by complaint, (in which the private good of the party offended, is usually sought,) or by Evangelicall denunciation, (where the good of the brother denounced, is intended;) or by judiciary denunciation, (where the common good, or of another which is innocent, is intended by the enquiry of the Judge;) or by perfect accusation, (where the procuring the same good, is sought by the proofes of the accuser;) if it be rightly done, and in order, is a lawfull and honest thing; 1 Tim. 5. 19. The reason is, because such information is a certaine meanes, which hath just proportion and order to the defending the common good. It is also an act of justice, as farre as it is a taking punishment of hainous injuries by publique authority.

29. A. 2. There are many cases where it is not onely lawfull, but necessary to accuse the delinquent :

As for example, First, Promooters, and such like Officers are bound by their place to accuse the guilty, as often as it is profitable to the advancement of the publique good.

Secondly, Every Citizen is bound to bring in those faults, which doe either immediately hurt the publique good, or mediately redound to the publique harme, or which hurt heavily any innocent, if the detriment cannot conveniently by any other course bee averted. The reason is, because hee is bound by the law of nature, and out of charity either to the Common-wealth, or his neighbour, to employ all his industry, when need shall require, to roote out utterly all such evils.

30. A. 3. All accusation is made unjust, either through calumny, by putting in a false crime, or through prevarication, by using fraud in the accusation, or by back-sliding, by desisting from a just accusation without lawfull cause.

31. A. 4. It is not alway necessary to use private and brotherly admonition, before judicall accusation and information. For sometimes it may bee a publique scandall, and so cannot bee taken away by private correction: sometimes there is no hope, that private admonition will prevaile. Also sometimes the common good may bee so farre endangered, that it cannot bee defended by secret admonition.

32. A. 5. If the delinquent may bee corrected by brotherly admonition, and the fault it selfe is not pernicious to others, so that the end of the accusation may bee obtained without the accusation it selfe, then charity and justice require, that setting aside accusation, wee content our selves with private correction.

Quest. 8. What law is there concerning witnesses?

33. A. 1. A witness is bound to testifie a knowne truth.

First, If hee bee lawfully asked by a Iudge, because obedience which is due to the Iudge, requireth this as well as the care of promoting, or at least of not hindering justice.

Secondly, Although hee bee not questioned by a Iudge, yet if some great danger is like to befall the Commonwealth, or any private man, which cannot (to speake morally,) bee averted without his testimony, hee is bound to testifie the truth at least out of charity, if not out of justice, if hee may conveniently. Hence in Civill causes, when his Neighbour shall suffer unjustly any great dammage, if there bee any, which can helpe him, without his owne detriment, hee ought not onely to testifie when hee is questioned, but also to offer his testimony: as also in criminall causes to free an innocent, Prov. 24. 11.

34. A. 2. In great and criminall causes, two witnesses by order are required, Num. 35. 30. Deut. 17. 6. and 19. 15. The reason is, because one may easily bee corrupted, and cannot easily bee convinced: but two or more witnesses are more hard to bee corrupted, and because they can scarce agree in all things, or speake alike, they may the more easily bee conynced.

35. A. 3. Yet

35. A. 3. Yet this doth not hinder, but that in lighter causes, especially when it doth not stand upon the condemnation of any one witnesse of speciall authority, may suffice. As also in some crimes, about the prooffe, whereof from the nature of the thing it selfe; (as in night villanies, in adultery, or the like, where) two witnessses cannot (to speake morally,) expected or found, other prooffes may suffice, although there bee not two witnessses who testifye the same particular fact. The reason is, because the nature of the thing, and the publique necessity make this exception from the universall rule.

36. A. 4. Not onely the evidence of the fact, proper confession not extorted, and written instruments have the force of a testimony, but sometimes also presumptions, if they bee not rash, and light, but strong, and convincing;

Quest. 9. What law is there concerning Advocates?

37. A. 1. Advocates, and Proctors are appointed to supply their places, who having a just cause, cannot handle their owne causes as they should, either through unskillfulnesse, or absence.

38. A. 2. It is therefore the office of an Advocate, to expound the grounds of his Clients cause, and approve it to the Iudge, and to perswade him as much, as in him lyeth, to give sentence for it.

39. A. 3. Hence is required in an Advocate; First, A speciall knowledge of the cause, and of the law belonging to it. Secondly, Fidelity, and right order and method in handling the same.

40. A. 4. Hence no Advocate ought to undertake or defend any cause which hee knoweth to bee unjust.

For first, This were to lye, and to sinne against his conscience.

Secondly, It were to defraud his neighbour against that, of Lev. 19. 13. and to doe unrighteousnesse in judgement, Vers. 15.

Thirdly, This is not onely to participate of the finnes of the Iudge, but to give an effectuall occasion, and cause to the same. Whence it commeth to passe that the art of pleading, (as it is used now a dayes by many,) is nothing but Sophisticall and pernicious, and made up of guile, deceit, sleights, cavils, snares, captiousnesse, entrappings, tricks, windings, and circumventions.

41. A. 5. It followeth from the same reasons, that the Advocate, who thought the cause to bee just at the beginning of the sute, and afterward in the progresse findeth it to bee unjust, is bound to admonish his client of the injustice of the cause, and to lay it downe.

For first, when hee is come to that knowledge, hee cannot goe forward in it, except hee will doe against his conscience.

Secondly, If his Client understandeth that his cause is unjust, hee ought to desist, and therefore the Advocate, who is but his helper.

42. A. 6. It may also happen, that after the injustice of the cause is evidently found out, that the Advocate may bee bound (if it bee without scandall) to helpe the contrary party either by his testimony or counsell: as in a capitall cause, or in any other of the like moment. For charity requireth, that every one should bee ready to hinder any great danger of his neighbour.

43. A. 7. But if the cause bee so probable, that the planitiffe or defendant may trie the justice of it by a judgement, then the Advocate may further it, by suggesting arguments to the Iudge, which may serve to make the cause probable.

44. A. 8. Although the Advocates and Proctors may receive a moderate stipend either out of custome, or vallow of the goods, for their labour faithfully employed, yet for poore people which are not able to give, they ought to plead gratis, by the equity of the law; Exod. 23. 4. Math. 7. 12. For this in such respect is the almes of the Advocate.

Quest. 10. What law is there concerning the defendant or party accused?

45. A. 1. If the defendant bee legally questioned, hee ought ought to confesse his fault: The reason is, First, Because hee can neither deny the knowne truth without a lye: or hold his peace, or deny the duty of answering, when hee is examined by a superiour, who hath power of questioning him, without the sinne of disobedience.

Secondly, Because to hide a fault revealed by Divine providence, (as it ought to bee manifested, so that the defendant may lawfully and legally bee questioned concerning it;) either by a lye, or a sleight, is in some way against the glory of God; 7of. 7. 19.

Thirdly, Because that publique good which is aymed at by the Iudge in a legall examination, ought not to bee hindered by the defendant.

Fourthly, Because the defendant in denying a fault legally objected either indirectly, or by consequence, by calumny, sayeth, that the planitiffe lyeth to his great injury.

46. A. 2. The defendant being condemned by evident injustice, may defend himselfe through lawfull means either by active or passive resistance, that the sentence given may not bee put in execution, so that it may bee done without scandall, or a greater evill.

The reason is, First, Because there is no such sentence in the Court of conscience.

Secondly, Because by the law of nature, every one hath right to defend himselfe against those injuries which are intended to him.

47. A. 3. A guilty man justly condemned, is bound to suffer the just punishment: but not so that hee should either procure it to himselfe, or hasten it, or not decline the occasion of suffering.

48. A. 4. Yet it is lawfull for the defendant (to avoyd a greater evill,) to execute upon himselfe in a sort a lighter punishment, which is decreed by the just sentence of the Iudge, as to restore money which is adjudged, or to goe to prison, or banishment: but not the punishment of death, or some like which in its nature is horrid, and repugnant to humane nature: because this is an evill intrinsecally, and cannot bee commended by a circumstance.

CHAP. LV.

Of revealing a Secret.

Quest. I. VV Hether, and how farre, it is a sinne, to reveale a Secret?

1. A. Another mans Secret which wee engaged our selves to keepe close, if there were a promise which doth remaine lawfull, cannot bee disclosed without sinne.

The reason is, First, Because it is against veracity, and fidelity, which wee are bound to keepe by the law of nature.

Secondly, Because it is repugnant to Civill society, the perturbation whereof followeth upon the detection of Secrets.

2. The promise of concealing is not thought to be made onely expressly, when wee doe promise silence in plaine words; but also tacitely, when by the manner of speaking and receaving it, and out of words signifying and perswading confidence, such a promise is left to be gathered.

3. Although there had no promise passed, yet if the detection of a secret shall bee hurtfull to anothers soule, body, credit, or estate, hee which doth reveale it without a cause, sinneth as well against justice as charity.

4. If a desire or intention of hurting doth accompany such a revealing, the sinne is the greater, being that it is directly repugnant to charity.

5. If there bee no meaning of hurting another, and yet hee is dammaged indeed, or at least there bee danger of his dammage, the sinne is as much as that of negligence or inconsideratenesse: in which wee find the fault sometimes lighter, sometimes larger. For as indeeds, so also in words it is not enough that the intention of hurting bee wanting,
but

but justice and charity doe further require, that wee should use diligence, least another mans detriment should follow thereupon.

6. Because the unjust revealing a Secret, hath in it oftentimes the pernicious violations of trust, friendship, and honesty, therefore it is not only in the common esteeme of men, but in the Scripture also reckoned amongst the most odious finnes, Psal. 35. 15. Wee did take sweet counsell together; 2 Tim. 3. 4. Traytours.

7. But if the Secret which is committed unto us, may bee to the great losse of others, or his who committed it, except it bee detested, wee are bound out of charity to make it manifest.

8. Or if the Secret bee of slight and no moment, if there bee no promise, it may bee revealed without sinne: because in such a matter neither justice or charity doe induce by themselves any obligation.

CHAP. LVI.

Of the equity of the law of taliation, established by Moses, against a false witnesse; Deut. 19. 16. &c.

1. THis law is not established against him, which out of probable ignorance, or inadvertency, or error which is not much faulty, shall bring in a false testimony: but of him who upon serled counsell shall rise up to testifie against any man that which is wrong; Vers. 16.

2. Diligent inquisition ought to be made by the Judges, that it may not only bee agreed of the wicked fact, but also of the meaning and intention of such a witnes, Vers. 17. 18. &c.

3. The hainousnesse of this sinne, doth appeare from hence:

First, That contempt of religion, and God himselve is concerned in the perjury of a false witnesse.

Secondly, That malice and extreame hatred is shewed, and used against his neighbour.

Thirdly, That such false testimonies doth directly tend to the everſion of common juſtice and humane ſociety.

4. It is moſt juſt, that hee which ſinneth in this manner, ſhould undergoe the ſame puniſhment which hee did intend and ſtrive to bring upon the innocent.

For firſt, That law is accounted moſt even by the conſent of all men, that hee which ſheddeth mans blood, by man ſhall his blood bee ſhed, Gen. 9. 6. Now hee which by his falſe testimony hath procured, or ſtriveth to procure anothers death, hee, as much as in him was, hath ſhed his blood.

Secondly, The juſtice of puniſhment, (which conſiſteth in the proportion of it to the fault,) is moſt manifeſtly obſerved in that law.

Thirdly, The keeping of this law is for this purpoſe, that they which intend ſuch an offence, and yet are afraid of ſuch a puniſhment, may bee admoniſhed of the hainouſneſſe, from the nature of the thing it ſelfe, and ſo bee deterred from their reſolution.

5. The equity of this law is to bee extended to falſe accuſers, who wittingly and willingly by calumny accuſe any wrongfully to Iudges, who condemne the innocent out of malice, to the malicious Corrupters of witneſſes, or Iudges, &c. For ſeeing that in all theſe, there is the ſame malice in procuring their Neighbours ill, they ought all to ſuffer the ſame puniſhment.

CHAP. LVII.

Of Contentment.

Queſt. 1. VV What is required to Contentment?

1. A. 1. That wee have our converſation free from all covetouſneſſe, Hebr. 13. 5.

2. A. 2. That we bee not to carefull for thoſe things, which which belong to this present life, Math. 6. 25. &c.

3. A. 3. That wee doe not absolutely and greedily desire any particular measure, or kind of such things; 1 Tim. 6. 9.

4. A. 4. That wee wish the best to our Neighbours, and take in good part our condition whatsoever it bee; 2 Cor. 13. 9.

Quest. 2. By what reasons may wee stirre up ourselves to the study of this content?

5. A. 1. Gods providence which dispenceth all things to his glory and our good, doth require this submission of Contentment, Iob 1. 21.

6. A. 2. The defect of this Contentment leadeth into divers temptations and sinnes as well towards God, against whose will wee murmure, as towards our Neighbour whom wee envy.

7. A. 3. The tranquility of the mind (without which wee are unfit for the common duties of piety, charity, and justice, and in which the greatest part of our felicity doth consist,) cannot bee retained without Contentment.

8. A. 4. The want of this Contentment argueth a mind too much given, and intent to this World, and the profits thereof.

Quest. 3. What meanes are most effectuall to the procuring of this Contentment?

9. A. 1. If we stirre up in our selves, a just esteeme of Spirituall things, and an affection agreeable towards them.

10. A. 2. If wee often and seriously meditate upon the vanity of this World.

11. A. 3. If in what condition soever wee are, wee cheifly give our selves to those things which yeeld us matter of praising God;

12. A. 4. If wee accustome our selves to use, and have those things which God hath granted to us, as if wee had them not; 1 Cor. 7. 30.

Glory to God, to men peace of conscience.
