TO THE HONOURABLE
FRANCIS ROUS, Esq.

Honoured Sir,

If a Heathen Poet could say, Non omnis moriar, I shall live though I die; supposing his Works immortal, though himself were mortal; Upon how much better an account may a Prophet of the Lord say, Non moriar, sed vivam, I shall not die, but live; both in respect of his immortal Soule.
soule, to which death is as the gate of life; and in respect of the immortall travell of his soule, being conversant in the Word of the Lord that abideth for ever.

The workes of the Saints of God in whom is the spirit of prophesie, not onely live when they are dead; but are instrumentall in the hand of grace, both to plant life where it is not, and water it where it is, that it may spring forth more abundantly.

The chosen Vessell of the Lord, by whose Ministry he was pleased to give out the Heavenly treasures laid up in these Sermons, hath some yeares since put off his earth, and put on that Inheritance of the Saints in light, for which the Lord seemed earlie to have fitted him, by his earnest and affi-affiduous Travail in fitting others. But though the Vessell be broken, or rather indeed refined and translated to his masters more immediate use, yet the Treasures abide for the common enrichment of the Saints. For spiritual Treasures (like the loaves blessed by our Saviour) multiply in their use, and when thousands have been enriched by them, doe still remaine sufficient to enrich thousands.

To you honoured Sir, is this small; but Precious treasury presented, not as though your own store were not already full; for who knowes not how many precious Jewels (through the riches of Christ in you) you have richly set and polished for the adorning the Bride the Lambs wife? Surely the spirit of Christ seemes to have chosen and sealed your Spirit to celebrate his own Nuptials in your Mystical Marriage and long of loves.

But as gold, besides its own internal worth, receives an Authentick impression from the Image and Superinscription of the Prince: And as in honouring the Lord with the best part of our substance, An humble acknowledgement of his Interest both in the whole and our selves (not any Addition to his fulness) is intended: So is this Treasure presented to the touch and test of your Judgement, First as the Standard of approving things that are excellent, And then as an humble testimony how much he owes himselfe to you that presents it.

That the Lord would make you long an Ornament and defence to his his Saints, and prosper his own pleasure in your hands, is the prayer of,

Honoured Sir,

The most humble, and most obliged of your Servants,

J. W.
To the Christian Reader.

The Author of these ensuing Sermons hath so abundantly approved himselfe to the Church of God by his former labours, both in preaching and writing, that it would be rather a disparagement to him to offer any thing by way of commendation. His name is yet like a precious Oyntment; and so may it be so long as the Sunne and Moon endures. These Sermons will discover themselves to be his genuine issue; the several lineaments and proportions of his stile (though stiles differ as much as faces) are here discernable. Those that had the happinesse to be conversant with him, and auditors to him, are able to say, Sic oculos, sic ille manus, sic ora ferebat. So he opened his Text, so he handled his Doctrine; so he delivered his Application. It is true, these fragments of his are under the prejudice of being Posthumous works; yet we may say of them as Paul said concerning himself, We suppose they are not inferior to the rest of his Works, though they are born out of due time; and fragments though they are, yet are they to be esteemed, Ramenca auri sunt pretiosa. These Sermons are to be prized for their own worth and intrinsic excellency, whoever was Author. And this Author is to be honoured for his real worth, whatsoever he is the Author of.

We shall add this also for thy encouragement, that these Sermons have been very happily taken by the pen of a ready writer, Mr. Farthing, now a Teacher of Short writing; one who hath given ample testimony of his great skill and dexterity in writing Short-hand. We think we may say, there are not many words delivered by the Author, that are left out. However, confident we are that there is nothing material which was by him preached, but is here by the care and faithfulness of the Scribe presented to thy view.

The desire of the publishers is that the name of this worthy man of God may be kept in bo-
To the Reader.

He that thou maist transferre these things to thy own use, and expresse them in thy life; that what was spoken to some may be common to all, what was accepted by them that heard it, may be received and improved by those that read it. This is all we have to communicate to thee; it would be an injury to detain thee longer from the reverend Author; we only commend thee to the grace of God, which is able to make thee abound in every good work, and bid thee Farewell.

Exodus 15.11.
Who is like unto thee, O Lord, amongst the Gods! who is like unto thee, glorious in holiness, fearful in praises, doing wonders!

His Scripture is this day fulfilled in our Eares, and before our eyes; that which God hath already begun to doe for this Kingdome and the neighbour Churches, doth shew unto us, that there is none like unto the Lord, Who is glorious in holiness, fearful in praises, doing wonders.

The words though they be in the middle of the Song, yet they are a kinde of an Epiphonema, which usually is at the end; but the spirit of Moses being raised in admiring at, and blessing God for the great things he had done for his people, he containeth not himselfe till he comes to the end, but breakes forth in the very middle with this applause of the glory of God, Who is like unto thee, O Lord amongst the Gods.
rious in holiness, fearful in praises, doing wonders! You see then the words are a part of Moses' song, occasioned upon the goodness of God in delivering of his people from Egypt, and carrying of them through the Red-sea. And this song is the most ancient song that ever was in the world; it is the first in Scripture, and we know of no Author before Moses; those that were skillfull in the way of Poetry were many hundred years after Moses. It is a spiritual and most excellent song; the stile of it is full of Elegancy, the matter of exceeding variety; it is Eucharistic, Triumphant, Propheticall, and 'tis pity we have not such an excellent song as this, turned into Meeter, to be sung in our Congregations. And it is a most delightfull song, and therefore you shall observe when God promised a great mercy to his people in which they should exceedingly rejoice, he hath reference to this song, Hosea 2. 13. And I will give her Vineyards from hence, and the valley of Achor for a doore of hope, and she shall sing there as in the days of her youth, and as in the day when she came up out of the Land of Egypt. When God intended any great mercy to his people, he would have them sing according to this song of Moses: So then, if God be in a way of mercy, if he be opening a doore of hope to us, you see how reasonable this song is. And 'tis a Typicall song, as of the deliberation of Gods people out of Egypt, so a Type of the deliveration of Gods people from the bondage of Antichrist; therefore it is very observable, that this song was to be sung againe when the people of God should be delivered from Antichrist; In Revel. 15. and the beginning, you may see Gods judgements upon Antichrist; and in vers. 3. it is said they sing the song of Moses the servant of God, and the song of the Lamb, saying, Great and marvellous are thy works Lord God almighty; just and true are thy wayes, though King of Saints. By this you may see that God would shew us, that the bondage under Antichrist is like the bondage in Egypt; and therefore Rome is called Egypt in the Revelations, because when we shall be delivered from AntiChristian bondage, we shall renew this song of Moses. So that if we now expect deliverance from bondage under Antichrist, it is good for us to acquaint ourselves with this song, because it is that which shall be sung over againe when the bondage of Antichrist is removed.
moved. It is a miraculous song according to the opinion of Ausine, he brings in this song as one of the miracles, that is, that God did at the same time by the spirit inspire all the people of Israel, that they sung together one and the same song; and therefore it was miraculous true if it had been so, but the Scripture is not cleere in that.

But we leave generalls and come to the words; though there be many excellent things in the Chapter to make way to that I have read; yet because I would not be hindered, I will come instantly to the words, which are as it were a recapitulat-ation of all, containing the substance of all; as if he had said, I have spoken of many particulars that God doth for his people; but there is none like unto the Lord, who is glorious in holiness, fearefull in praisies, doing wonders. There are foure things (you see then) wherein the name of God is advanced here: First, there is none like the Lord: Secondly, glorious in holiness:
Thirdly, fearefull in praisies: Fourthly, doing wonders.

I confesse when my thoughts were first to speake upon this Text, I intended onely the third particular, the opening of that Title of God, fearefull in praisies; we finde not any such Title that I know of in all the book of God but onely in this place; but because I saw there was much of God in the two former, therefore I thought it might be usefull to shew you what there is of God in them, and was unwilling to passe them by. For the two first then, who is like to thee, O Lord, amongst the Gods; who is like unto thee, glorious in holiness, who is like to thee? this you see is put by way of interrogation; now interrogations in Scripture are especially brought in two wayes: First, by way of admiration. Secondly, by way of negation. Sometimes by way of admiration, Isaiah 63.1. Who is this that cometh from Edom with died garments from Bozrah? Many others we might name by way of admiration: and by way of negation you know there are hundreds of examples; and both these we are to understand here in the Text: First, by way of admiration, who is like unto thee O Lord amongst the Gods, &c. The spirit of Moses and the people being struck with astonishment at the glory of God, now manifested by the great workes he did, they admire and say, who is like unto thee O Lord? and then by way of negation, who is like unto thee O Lord? that is, there is none like unto thee; that is the first expression of the glory of God, the lifting up of the name of God above all things whatsoever there is none like to God.

And God doth much glory in this expression of his glory, that there is none like to him; we have it very often in Scripture, 1 Chron. 17.20. O Lord there is none like thee, neither is there any God besides thee, according to all that we have heard with our ears. So in Psalm 86.8. Among the Gods there is none like unto thee, O Lord: and Psalm 89.6. For who in the heaven can be compared unto the Lord? who among the sons of the mighty can be likened unto the Lord? we might name divers other places where God glories much in this expression of his glory: and the people of God have gloried much in it; and there is great cause they should doe so. It is said of the godly Machabees that at first by reason their name was an offence, meeting with this sentence, who is like unto thee O Lord amongst the Gods? and being much taken with it, they wrote the first Hebrew Letter of every word in this sentence in their ensignes of warre, and carried them about with them; and upon this ground they were called the Machabees, glorying in this Title of God, who is like unto thee? And upon this ground the Holy Ghost concludes, that all should honour and glorifie God, because there is none like unto him. Psalm 86.8. Among the Gods there is none like unto thee O Lord, neither are there any works like unto thy works. Mark what followes in 9.10.11.12. verses. All Nations whom thou hast made, shall come and worship before thee, O Lord, and shall glorifie thy name; for thou art great and dost wondrous things, for thou art God alone; teach me thy way, O Lord, I will walke in thy truth, writing my heart to feare thy name; I will praise thee O Lord my God, with all my heart, and I will glorifie thy Name for evermore. Thus you see how the holy Prophet was taken with this expression of God; that there is none like to him, therefore teach me thy way, O Lord, I will walke in thy truth, &c.

There is none like unto the Lord amongst the Gods: So it is here, it may be translated as well amongst the mighties. God is lifted up here not onely above the Heathen gods, so that there is none like to him amongst them; but he is lifted up above whatever ever hath any excellency in it; there is none like to thee amongst the mighties: whoever is mighty & great, or let there be what might and greatnesse and excellency forever in the world, yet God is infinitely above all. It would take up too much of our time, if we should dilate ourselves in shewing to you somewhat of the glory of God in this, how he is above all things, and that there is none like to him: I will therefore but briefly name a few passages, and apply this particular, and pass to the second, that we shall dwell longer upon.

There is none like to God: First, in that whatever is in God, is God himselfe; this is a propriety of God: there is no creature hath any excellency in it that reaches to this excellency, that whatever is in that creature should be the being of it, all creatures being made up of several things; but now whatever is in God is God himselfe. Again, there is an universal goodness in God, and there is none like to him in that; one creature hath one good in it, and another, another; but God hath all good in him; there is all excellency and beauty in God in an eminent manner; there is none like to him in that. And then all beings are but one excellency in God, however we apprehend God in several excellencies; one attribute shining through one creature, and another through another, yet all are united in God; And all that is in him is primatively in him, he is of himselfe, and from himselfe, and for himselfe. And then none can communicate himselfe so as God can; none can inflict evill, or convey good so as God can, and that this expression of God hath reference too: for it is peculiar to God to communicate as much of himselfe as he will, which no creature can doe; though the creature hath but little, some drops onely of goodness in comparison of the infinite Ocean that is in God, yet the creature cannot communicate of those drops as it will; it is the propriety of God onely to communicate of his goodness as he will. And not onely so, but he can make the creature that he communicates his goodness to, to be as sensible of his goodness as he pleases, which none else can doe; though one creature can communicate good to another, yet it cannot make that creature as sensible of that good as it will, which God can doe. And so in inflicting of evil there is none like like to the Lord: in that, the Lord is able to let out all evil, to bring all evil at once; which none else can doe; and he is able to make the creature upon whom he inflicts an evil, to be as sensible of that evil as he will; one that hurts another, yet cannot make him as sensible of that hurt as he pleases, but this is the propriety of God; as he can bring all evil together, so he is able to make the creature as sensible of all as he will; and God challengeth this as his own propriety, that he alone can doe good, and he alone can doe evil; and therefore there is none like to him; from hence it follows then, that there is none to be worshipt as the Lord; there is none to be honoured as the Lord; the Heathen gods, because they did but communicate some particular good, therefore they challenged but particular service; externall worship, and worship in some particulars would serve the Heathen gods, and they were satisfied with it, and required no more; and there was reason for it, because they could not challenge to themselves a communication of a universal good; for one god was for one particular good, and another for another particular good; and therefore they had but particular worship suitable thereunto: but now there is none like to the Lord; he challengeth a universal worship and obedience: Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and soul, and strength: so that there is no such worship to be given to any as is given to God; and all because there is none like to him in the excellency of his nature, and in the way of communicating of himselfe unto his creature.

Now this that I have spoken, is exceeding useful in the whole course of our lives, in ordering of our ways and thoughts toward God: consider how useful this is, thus: It should be our care in beholding any beauty, any good, or excellency in the creature, to keep still in our thoughts and hearts, the sense and apprehension of the infinite distance that there is between God and that creature; the want of this is the cause of almost all the evil that there is in the world; and the true apprehension of this is a speciall means to enable us to glorifie God as a God. I say thus, when thou beholdest any excellency, beauty, or comeliness in a creature, and tastest any sweetnesse in it, be sure thou dost then keep in thy heart the sense of this truth, that though though there be some sweetness here, yet God is infinitely above the creature, and there is an infinite disproportion between that good, and beauty, and excellency that is in these creatures, and that which is in God himselfe. God gives us leave to let out our hearts upon, and to take the comfort of the creature, when we see a beauty and excellency in it; and that because it is his similitude upon the creature, and it is God's excellency that is there, and a spiritual heart hath more freedom to let out itselfe to the comforts of the creature than any in the world besides, because he can meet with, and taste God there; but though God give us leave to doe this, yet evermore so that we be sure to reserve our hearts to God, to be sensible of the infinite excellency that is in God above any creature, and if we be not careful of this, we shall soon fall off from glorifying God as God, and our hearts will beke in the creature. And this hath been the ground of all the outward Idolatry and spiritual Idolatry in the world: Of outward Idolatry, which did arise thus; men at first seeing some excellency and worth in the creature, as the Sun and Moon, and Stars, they did acknowledge God above them; and that these were but creatures, and that there was more excellency in God then in any of these: but at last coming to look upon the creature too much, and being taken with the excellency they saw there, their hearts stuck in the creature, and they lost the apprehension of the infinite excellency of God above the creature, and so fell from God, and worshipt them that were no gods.

And so for spiritual Idolatry; those that commit Idolatry with riches, or any creature, come to them at first, and say to them, how do you apprehend the comforts of the creature? Is there not infinitely more in God then there is in the creature? yes, they will say. But by letting our hearts out upon the creature, and by poring upon the beauty of the creature, we begin at length to lose the power of this apprehension that was at first upon our hearts, and to commit spiritual Idolatry with the creature; and therefore it must be our care to keep in and fresh our apprehension and sense of that infinite distance that there is between God and all the comforts of the creature: and so long as thou dost keep thy apprehensions fresh and strong here.
here, there is no danger, and thou finnest not in letting thy selfe out to the creature, if it have not abated thy apprehensions of the infinite disproportion that there is between God and all creatures, therefore now seeing there is an infinite stupendious height of excellency in God above all creatures, there should be the like thoughts in our hearts towards God and the creature, thus: as there is an infinite distance between the excellency of God and the excellency of all creatures, so there ought to be a kinde of infiniteness in the distance and disproportion between that esteem and delight, and dependance we have in, and upon the creature, and that we have in and upon God; therefore you should not satisfie your selves in this that you acknowledge God above the creature, for all will do so; but you are to finde in your souls such a disproportion between your esteem and joy, and desire after the creature, and that you have after God, as is somewhat like the distance that there is between God and the creature, now the distance is infinite that is between God and the creature, therefore there should be a kinde of infiniteness in the distance between your esteem of, and the working of your hearts and endeavours after the creature; and that esteem and working of your hearts and souls which you have towards God; and this is to glorifie God as a God; this is the soul worship we owe to God in the world; this is the true sanctifying of the name of God when this comes practically upon our hearts.

Secondly, if there be none like to God, then it followes that there is none like to the people of God; for as a mans god is, so is he; look what god a man chuseth, he is as his god is; a covetuous man, if he make riches his god, he is so to be judged; and so a voluptuous man or a Heathen. Now if the Saints of God have chose this God to be their God, and there be none like to him, then it must needs follow, that there is no people like to Gods people: and marke how the Holy Ghost makes this inference in divers Scriptures, as Deut. 33. 26, 29. compared:verse 26. There is none like unto the God of Israel, who ride the upon the Heaven, in thy help and in his excellency in the skie; what is the inference of the Holy Ghost upon this? verse 29. Happy art thou O Israel, who is like unto thee, O people saved by the Lord, &c. So that you you see according to the glory of God in any particular there is a reflection of it upon the Saints of God; and this is the wonderfull excellency of Gods Saints to have the reflection of God upon them, happy are they that have God to be their God; if God be excellent, so are they: if God be above all, and there is none like to him, so are they above all, and there is none like to them. You have the same inference of the Holy Ghost, 2 Samuel 7.22, 23. Wherefore thou art great, O Lord God, for there is none like thee, neither is there any God besides thee; according to all that we have heard with our ears. Marke what follows, and what one notion in the earth is like thy people, even like Israel &c. So that there is none like the people of God; and it must needs follow from hence, for they are as their God is; therefore saies Moses (when he speaks of the people of God) Exod. 33. 16. So shall we be separated, and thy people, from all the people that are upon the earth, so you read it in your Bibles; but the word in the original signifies wonderfully separated; Gods people are wonderfully separated from the world, as God is wonderfully high above all creatures ye are his people, therefore in Numb. 27. 9. it is said that Gods people shall dwell alone, and shall not be reckoned among the Nations: why, because they are the people of God, and the people of that God that hath none like to him, and therefore there is none like to them; that is for the consolation of the Saints of God.

Thirdly, it follows from hence, that therefore it should be our care that none should doe for their gods so as we doe for ours: for if there be none like to our God, then it is a shame, that any that chuse other gods should doe that for them that is above that which we doe for our God. As now for Idolators, to instance in outward and spirituall Idolatry: why, there is none like to our God, certainly all the Idolaters in the world have not such a God as we have, their rocke is not as our rocke, our enemies themselves being judges. What a shame then were it, if we should not doe more for our God then they doe for theirs? yea, we should labour to doe that for our God that may come up to that height of excellency which we apprehend to be in him. Will you see what Idolaters doe for their Gods: First, observe the earnestness of the spirits of Idolaters after their gods,

god, their hearts are enslaved after their Idols; so we have in Isaiah 52:5. enslaving your selves with Idols under every green tree. Their hearts were enslaved after their Idol gods, which seems like your God. O how then should our hearts be enslaved after our God! Should we content our selves with, and rest satisfied in cold and dead services to our God! How much strength should that exhortation of the Apostle have upon us Romans 5:13? Be fervent in spirit, serving the Lord. It is the Lord we serve; it is our God, the great and glorious God; and therefore we should be fervent in spirit, serving him.

Secondly, the Scripture saith that Idolaters, those that worship false gods, are mad upon their Idolats. Jer. 19:3. The people of God then should have their hearts set after God, so that those that are carnal and not able to judge, should look upon them even as mad men, and indeed they do so: whenever the hearts of the Saints are after God fully, they are looks upon as mad men; St. Paul was counted a mad man by his critics. Acts 26:24. and we should not be afraid of the approaches of the world in this kind; though they despise us, and think us base and vile, and out of our wits: Why Idolaters are mad upon their Idols, therefore if there be any thing God calls for at our hands, though the world account it madness, yet our hearts must work after God in it. And it is a shame that any mens hearts should be more after their gods, than our hearts are after ours; because there is more like unto our God.

Thirdly, the earnestness of the hearts of Idolaters after their Idol gods appeares from Jer. 8:1, 2. At that time saith the Lord, they shall bring out the bones of the Kings of Judah, &c. And they shall spread them before the Sun, and the Moon, and all the host of Heaven, whom they have loved, and whom they have served, and whom they have walked in, and whom they have sought, and whom they have worshipped: they shall not be gathered, nor be buried. Act. I have often thought of this Scripture; it is exceeding remarkable: I know no one Scripture in all the books of God, that hath so many expressions together, to shew the strength of the hearts of Gods people after God, as here we have to shew the strength of Idolaters after their Idols: And they shall spread them before the Sun, and the Moon, and all the host of Heaven. Mark. 3. Whom they have have loved. 2. Whom they have served. 3. After whom they have walked. 4. Whom they have fought. 5. Whom they have worshipped; and all in so few words. Thus their hearts were after their Idoll gods: how much more then ought it to be said of us concerning our God, whom we have loved, and whom we have served, and after whom we have walked, and whom we have fought, and whom we have worshipped?

Againe, observe how the Scripture sets out the spirits of men after their Idoll gods, in regard of the cost they are willing to bestow upon them. Isa. 46. 6. They shall lavish gold out of the bag, and weigh silver in the balance, and hire a goldsmith, and he maketh it a god. They care not what cost they are at to worship their Idols. O what a shame would it be, if we should not be willing to part with much of our estates for the true worship of the true God: and though we should lose our estates, yet if we can serve God better, and in a purer way, we should be content; for Idolaters will lavish gold out of the bag upon their Idols. Now there is none like to our God; therefore it is a shame that they should doe more for their gods then we doe for ours. And then what are Idolaters willing to suffer for their gods? 1 Kings 18. 28. how did Baals Priests there cut themselves after their manner, with Knives and Lancers, till the blood gushed out, to shew their respect to their Idols? let us then be willing to suffer any thing that God calls us to. And how constant were they to their Idols! therefore Paves God, Jer. 2. 10, 11. Consider diligently and see, if there be such a thing: but a Nation changed their gods which are yet no gods? but my people have changed their glory for that which doth not profit: how ill doth God take this: that Idolaters should not change their gods that are infinitely below him, and yet that his people should change their God who is infinitely above them?

Againe let us take heed lest there be any found that should have their hearts set more upon their lusts; then we are upon God: take all the excellencies in the world, and they are infinitely below God: how much more then is a lust? for what? lust in comparison of all creatures in heaven and earth? and yet how are mens hearts set upon their lusts? yea, how hath my own heart been set upon wicked lust heretofore? thinke then with thy selfe, what an infinite unreasonable thing is it that the heart of any man in the world, or thy own heart, should be set more upon a base lust then upon the living, eternal, and infinite God. Tis said of Abab, that he sold himselfe to work wickednesse, 1 Kings 21:20. be thou willing then to sell thy self to God, to give up thy self to God; the hearts of the sons of men, (it is said) are set, and fully set to doe evill, Eccles.8:11. doe not thou content thy selfe with some faint wishes and desires after God, but let thy heart be set and fully set for God. In Micah 7:3. it is said they doe evill with both hands earnestly; marke, they doe evill, and they doe evill earnestly, and they doe evill earnestly with both hands. Now then, for shame be not thou sluggisht in doing service for thy God; doe that which is good, and doe it with both thy hands, and doe it earnestly with all thy heart.

Againe, we have one notable Scripture more that shewes how the hearts of men are set upon that which is evill, Prov.19:28. The mouth of the wicked devoureth iniquity, tis an elegant expression of the Holy Ghost; its a metaphor taken from the practice of brute creatures; as now take a beast that hath been kept from drink a long time, and is exceeding thirsty, if you bring it to the water, it will thrust its head into the water, as if it would devour the whole River, and could never be satisfied: that is the meaning of this phrase, the mouth of the wicked devoureth iniquity, that is, when he comes to his sinne, he is as greedy upon it, as the beast that hath been kept long from water is greedy of water. O how should our hearts be infinitely more greedy after God, and his service, then wicked men are or can be after the service of their lusts! to conclude all this, with that you have Exodus 30: from verse 34. to the end; there was a perfume there to be made by the composition of the Apothecary; but there was this charge given, as for the perfume which thou shalt make, you shall not make to your selves, according to the composition thereof, it shall be unto thee holy for the Lord, &c. So I conclude this point, there is none like to God, he being above all; when your hearts therefore are in any good frame towards God, perfumed and lifted up towards God, take heed they be not lifted up towards any creature in the same manner as they are towards God: for your service to God must be suitable to the nature of God; now there is none like to God, therefore there should be no such service tendered to any, as is tendered to God: thus much for the first thing, whereby the name of God is advanced here; who is like unto thee, O Lord among the gods!

We come now to the second, glorious in holiness; The word translated here glorious, doth as well signify magnificent, noble, and so it is used in many places: thou art magnificent and noble in thy holiness. Brethren, it is the greatest magnificence, the greatest nobility, and height of spirit, that can be, to be holy: God himself is a magnificent God, and he is ennobled by his holiness: this sets out the excellency of holiness.

Again, glorious in holiness, it is tendered by some glorious in holy things: that is, glorious in thy holy Angels, glorious in thy holy Saints, glorious in thy holy word, glorious in thy holy Ordinances, glorious in thy holy worship. God indeed is very glorious in his Angels, and in his Saints, and in his word, and in his worship, and in his Ordinances; but we will take the words as you have them here, glorious in holiness.

And for the explication of the glory of God in this Title, there are these three things to be done: First, to shew you a little what holiness in God is. Secondly, I shall open unto you how God is said to be glorious in holiness. And then Thirdly, I shall shew you why God hath this Title given him here in this place; why he is rather said here to be glorious in holiness, then glorious in power: for it was an act of power rather, that God did put forth in the destruction of the Egyptians, and deliverance of his people.

For the first: what is holiness in God? we understand this (as generally we doe almost all things of God,) rather by way of negation than otherwise; rather by what it is not, then by what it is, therefore we use to say that God's holiness is that whereby his nature is free from all kind of mixture, and from the least soil and filth of sinne; therefore God is called light, because light is so pure a creature and so free from any mixture of pollution, that it can be amongst filthy things without any defilement of it selfe: so God can worke with sinne it selfe, and yet without any defilement of his nature; but besides this negation, gation, if you would know somewhat positively, what the holiness of God is, I would describe it briefly to you thus: It is the infinite rectitude and perfection of the will of God especially, whereby he doth will and work all things suitable to the infinite excellency of his own being; the excellency of God is the highest, and therefore the rule of all excellency; and the will of God being always suitable to his own infinite excellency, and impossible to vary in the least from it, therefore his will is the rule of all holiness. Let us consider it a little by looking into the holiness of the creature, and by that we shall see somewhat of the holiness of God: for as we cannot see the glory of the Sun by looking directly upon it, it being too bright an object for us; but by the reflection of its beams in the water we may behold its glory: so, the holiness of God is too bright to be beheld in itself; we cannot behold the infinite purity and holiness of God immediately; but by looking upon the holiness of the creature, which is as it were the reflection of God's holiness upon it, and a ray and beam of it, we may come to see somewhat of the holiness of God. Now the holiness of a creature is this, the separation of it from common things to a holy use, or the dedication of a creature in some immediate manner to God, for the lifting up of the name of God; the holiness of the Saints is this, the separation of their spirits from all common things to God as the highest and last end. And when they are able to work to God as the utmost end, and to will that they doe in order to God as the last end; and so as is suitable to God as the highest end, that is the holiness of their wills: so it is in God's holiness: God's holiness is a dedication, as it were, of God to himselfe: that is, God being of and from himselfe, and himselfe being his own last end, he gives up himselfe unto himselfe, and wills himselfe as the highest and utmost end, and so wills all things in order to himselfe as the last and highest end: this is the holiness of God; and the image of this holiness is that stamp and worke of grace that is upon the creature: when the creature is enabled to will God as the highest end, and all things in subordination to him, the creature is then said to be holy, because it hath a stamp of God upon it: this is God's holiness.
But glorify in holiness: how is God glorious in holiness? God is glorious in all his attributes and works; and the truth is, there is not one thing in God more glorious then another, every attribute of God being in itself equally glorious; but in regard of manifestation and according to our apprehension, so one thing appears more glorious then another; and God is pleased to speak to us according to our apprehensions: therefore you may see how the Saints do especially glory in God as a holy God: looking upon him as a holy God, they do exceedingly rejoice and glory in him: therefore says the Psalmist, Psal. 99.3. Let them praise thy great and terrible name, for it is holy: and verse 5. Exalt ye the Lord our God, and worship at his footstool, for he is holy: and again; verse 9. exalt the Lord our God and worship at his holy hill, for the Lord our God is holy. Thus the people of God look upon God in his holiness as the special ground of his praise and exaltation, yea the Angels themselves in heaven, look upon God in his holiness, and especially exalt him from thence. Isai. 6.3. the Cherubins and Seraphines cry three times, holy, holy, holy is the Lord of hosts. You never finde any of Gods attributes mentioned so three times together: though it is true, God is infinite in power, and in wisdom, as well as in holiness; yet you never finde in Scripture that God is said to be wise, wise, wise, or, almighty, almighty, almighty: but holy, holy, holy, three times together: and as the Angels of Heaven adore God especially for his holiness, so the Church of God, Rev. 4.8. cries out, holy, holy, holy, Lord God almighty, shewing the blessed condition of the Church of God, when it shall be hereafter more sanctified, and God shall dwell amongst them, they shall exceedingly then adore God in his holiness above any other attribute: yet God himself seems to glory in his holiness above any other attribute; therefore when God would lift up himselfe in his glory, and give you the highest expression of himselfe, he doth it in this, as he is holy. Isai. 57.15. For this saith the high and lofty one that inhabiteth eternity, whose name is holy. When God would lift up himselfe, it is in this whose name is holy: and so when God would swear by himselfe (Amos 4.2.) he sweares by his holiness. Now as the Scripture saies, when God could sweare by no greater, he sweare by himselfe: so I may say, when God could sweare by no excellency above this, he sweares by his holinesse.

Again, God glories in heaven it selfe as the habitation of his holinesse: heaven is the habitation of Gods glory, there God lets out his glory fully: but what is that glory? why the top of all, is, the holinesse of God. Isaiah 63.15. Looke downe from heaven and behold from the habitation of thy holinesse and thy glory: yea the throne of God is Gods holinesse, Psal. 47.8. God sitteth upon the throne of his holinesse; you know Kings upon their thrones are exalted and lifted up, so is God lifted up upon the throne of his holinesse. Solomon, he made himselfe a throne of Ivory, and overlaid it with the best gold, 1 Kings 10.18. But the throne of God is a throne of holinesse, a throne of bright shining holinesse.

Again, when God rejoices in his people, he doth it as they are a holy people, Deut.7.6. For thou art a holy people unto the Lord thy God: the Lord thy God hath chosen thee to be a peculiar people unto himselfe above all the people that are upon the face of the earth. Yea further, you shall finde that this attribute of holiness is more especially ascribed to the third person in the Trinity: God the Father is a holy God; the Son, he is the holy one of God; but the Holy ghost hath his name from Holiness: and is very observable, that all the three persons challenge an equal share in the working of holiness in the creature, it being such a part of Gods glory, that all the three persons work it wherefover it is: as the Father, he is a Sanctifier. Jude speaks of the work of sanctification wrought by. God the Father in the first verse of his Epistle, To them that are sanctified by God the Father. And then for the Son, Eph. 5.25,26. Husbands, love your wives, even as Christ also loved the Church, and gave himselfe for it, that he might sanctifie and cleanse it with the washing of water by the Word. Christ he gives himselfe for his Church; to what end? Not that he might bring it to Heaven onely, but that he might sanctifie it also; and then the Spirit of God, 1 Cor.6.11. And such were some of you: but ye are washed, but ye are sanctified, but ye are justified, in the Name of the Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of our God. So that all the three persons come in for a share in this work: this is the glorious work of Father, Son, and Holy ghost. But
But yet further for the demonstration of it: holiness must needs be the glory of God, because it is the highest perfection and restitution of an Intelligent free Agent. An Intelligent free Agent is the highest being of all, and holiness is the restitution of that being, and therefore must needs be glorious. Hence it is, that grace is called God's image, because it is that which represents God in his highest excellency: for that is properly an Image of another thing, that sets it out in the excellency of it: if it doth not only in a common and general way, it is not an Image of it. And then, in Scripture, holiness is called the beauty of God, Psalm 27.4. One thing have I desired of the Lord, that I will seek after, that I may dwell in the house of the Lord all the days of my life, to behold the beauty of the Lord, and to enquire in his Temple. Now what is God's beauty but the beauty of holiness, the holiness of God appearing in his Ordinances, and his worship is the luster and beauty of the infinite glory of God, as Psalm 110.3. the Ordinances are called the beauty of holiness: Thy people shall be willing in the day of thy power in the beauties of holiness, &c. Yea, holiness, some seeds of it, the very Image of it, only in the creature, is called the glory of God, Rom. 3. 23. All have sinned and come short of the glory of God; the very beginnings of the work of holiness in the hearts of Saints is called the glory of God; much more then the infinite holiness of God's own nature. Further, it is holiness that puts a luster upon all the other attributes of God, and makes them glorious and honourable, Psalm 111.9. Holy and reverend is his name; the name of God is therefore reverend, because holy; so take all the height of excellencies that are in God, yet if they be such as you can conceive them separated from his holiness, they do not make his name reverend: and this shews how infinitely it concerns us to labour after holiness; if all the excellencies of God cannot make his name reverend, being separated from holiness, then let the creature have what excellency it will, for parts, for estate, for dignity, and honour in the world; take away holiness, &c. you cannot say reverend is his name, but holy and reverend is his name; so it is said of God, his name is reverend, because holy.

Again, God's name is glorious by holiness, because it is the special end of all his works, to advance holiness: a workman D when he drawes a worke, he shewes, Art in the beginning of it:
but when he comes to the top of it, there he shewes the excellency of his workmanship: 'tis so with God, God will be honoured in all his worke, of creation and providence: but now come to the height and pitch of all, and 'tis that he might be honoured as a holy God; and that he might have a holy people to honour him here, and to all eternity. I say holiness is that which God aimed at in creating of heaven and earth; 'tis that which God aymes at in all the wayes of his providence:
It is the great businesse for which the Son of God came into the world, that he might redeem to himselfe a people to serve him holiness: 'tis the end of the great councell of God from all eternity; yea and that he might manifest the beauty of his own holiness in those two great attributes, Mercy and Justice, which are the branches of his holiness, that he might make them shine to all eternity: this is that God aymes at; therefore holiness must needs be the glory of Gods name.

Now a little for the third: but what is the reason that this Title is given to God here in this Song of Moses, glorious in holiness? the reason is this: to shew, that the infinite excellency of Gods power is such, that it is without any mixture of the least evill in the exercise of it: here was an act of mighty power put forth, and God was infinitely holy in this act of his power. It is otherwise with men (observe the difference between God and man.) It is a very hard thing for a man to doe great things, and to manifest great power without a mixture of evil: as 'tis with the waters, while they run shallow, they may run clearly:
but when once the waters rise and overflow, they run muddy, and usually there is a great deal of filth comes in with great streames: so though in common and ordinary workes we doe not manifest our uncleannesse, yet 'tis seldom when we ayme to doe great things, but we manifest a great deal of filthinesse: but it is otherwise with God: God is great in power, and in that keeps the glory of his holiness. And God manifested here the greatnesse of his wrath upon his enemies, and yet the glory of his holiness too. It is a very hard thing for men to doe so; let men have their anger stint'd a little, O how much filth doe they presently discover? how many have we that all the while they are pleased are exceeding meeke and loving, but let any thing stirre their passion, and O what a great deale of filth appears, like a pond that is full of mud at the bottome, and cleare at top, but stirre it a little and then its nothing but filth. A father or a mother cannot tell how to be displeased with a childe or correct it, but abundance of corruption comes with that anger; and so a governour a servant. Who can execute Justice upon others, but there will be much of self, self-ends and self-interest; but now here is the glory of God, that when he manifesteth his wrath, though it be sore wrath, yet he is glorious in holliness in great wrath; he is infinitely powerfull in his wrath, and in the execution of his Judgements, and yet infinite in holliness too; therefore the vials of Gods wrath are said to be of gold, which is the purest mettall; so is God in the executing of his Judgements. O let us labour to imitate God in this; thou hast a passionate spirit, and art soon provoked, and discovered abundance of filthiness; see how unlike thou art unto God; though thou shouldst be displeased with that which is sinfull, and mayst correct thy children and servants, yet be sure to keep that which is the beauty of all in thy correcting of others, and that is holliness.

Againe, this Title is given to God here, because in this great worke of his he did manifest his faithfulness in fulfilling of his promises to his people; many promises God had made to his Church for their preservation and deliverance: and God in this worke of his did fulfill these promises; now Gods faithfulness is a branch of his holliness; therefore because he manifested his faithfulness in this worke, Moses and the people extoll his name by this Title, glorious in holliness. It is observable, and it is of great use to us, that Gods faithfulness is a branch of his holliness: if you compare two Scriptures, you will finde it so; Isaiah 55.3. says God, I will make an everlasting covenant with you, even the sure mercies of David, and this Scripture is quoted Acts 13.34. I will give you the sure mercies of David: so we read it; but in the original it is the holy and faithfull things of David: so that when God comes to shew mercy according to his word, he doth manifest the glory of his holliness, and it is of admirable use to Gods people to strengthen their faith. You have heard heard that the glory of God is his holiness, now one part of this holiness is his faithfulness, in fulfilling his promises to his people; therefore it concernes God as he loves his own glory, to be faithfull in fulfilling of his promises, and God lookes at it as his glory to doe it; thy comforts are deere to thee, and thy preservation is deere to thee, but Gods glory is dearer to him, yea Gods glory is dearer to him then thy soul, or thy eternall estate can be to thee; and the top of Gods glory is his holiness; and his holiness consists in this (In one thing) his faithfulness in his promises.

Now for the application of this, first: hence you may observe, whether ever you understood God aright or no; let me put this question to you, what is that excellency of God that your soul closeth with? we speake much of Gods excellency, and we all say, we love God, and delight in God, and bleffe God; but now, what is it in God that drawes thy heart so to him, and caueth thy soul to love thy God, and to bleffe thy God, and to delight in thy God (as thou sayest) since the time that ever thou knewest him? what, is it that God will shew mercy to thee, and pardon thy sinne, and save thy soul, and bring thee to heaven? these are things indeed that we are to love and bleffe God for: but there must be more; it is the very person of God himselfe that our hearts must be taken with, and it must be the person of God in his excellency: and what is that? his holiness; therefore hath ever the luster of the infinite holiness of God shined upon thy heart, and drawne thy heart to God, and caused thee to stand and adore him, and admire him; and hast thy heart leaped upon the sight of the brightness of his holiness? and doest thou therefore love him? if so, thou knowest God aright and thy heart hath been aright drawn to him: says David, Psalm. 119. 140. thy word is very pure, therefore thy servant loves it. Canst thou say so, O Lord, thou art pure, thou art holy, therefore doth thy servant love thee; and thy word is holy, and thy worship is holy, and thy servants are holy, and thy Ordinances are holy, and therefore doth thy servant love all these; for if the beauty of Gods holiness be that which drawes thy heart forth in love unto God, then proportionably it will be the beauty of holiness in all holy things. that will draw thy heart to love and delight in them: then thou wilt looke upon his Saints as glorious in holinesse, and upon his worship, and word, and Ordinances, as glorious in holinesse, and so thy heart will be drawn unto them. Psalm. 33. 21. you shall see there how the Saints of God did rejoyce in the Lord, and had their hearts drawn to him, because of his holinesse; for our hearts shall rejoyce in him because we have trusted in his holy name: the trusting in Gods holy name, is that which makes our hearts rejoyce in him.

But Secondly, hence the people of God should exceedingly comfort themselves in God; in that they have to deal with him as a holy God: that though they meet with much unholiness in the spirits of men with whom they doe converse: yet there is in God nothing but holiness, yea the very beauty and glory of holiness: Brethren, it is a delightfull thing, yea a rare and a blessed thing, to meet with a friend that hath a clean and a pure heart, that hath no mixture in him, that is holy in his ends and aymes, and that hath a spirit free from guile: O what rejoicing is there, when one friend that hath a heart pure and clean, and free from guile, can meet with another such as himselfe, and can close together in every point! but what a delight then is it to meet with a God that is infinite in purity and holiness, in whom there is no mixture at all! God he takes delight in us, because we have but some drops of his holiness. O how should we then rejoyce in him who is infinite in holiness: Indeed when we deal with men, we doe not alwayes finde them as we expect; we many times meet with men of excellent parts and gifts; but when we come to close with them we doe not finde their wayes and spirits suitable to the eminency and excellency of those parts and gifts; and this is a grievous vexation to the Saints, when they look upon men that are eminent and excellent, and hope to finde a proportion of spirit suitable thereunto, but instead thereof finde abundance of filth in their spirits; though this may trouble thee, yet blese thy God in this that when thou art to deal with God thou shalt finde nothing but holiness in him, thou shalt finde him working according to his excellency; for that I told you was the nature of Gods holiness, as the perfection of his will whereby he workes all things things fitable to his eminency and excellency. Man hath an excellency in him, but not always grace in his heart to worke fitable to it; but God, I say, always workes fitable to his eminency and excellency. Now when our hearts are raised with the sight of Gods excellency, and then thinke with ourselves we shall always finde God working according to it, O what a comfort is this to a gracious soul against all the evil he meets with in the spirits of men, amongst whom he converseth?

Againe, further for the comfort of the Saints, if God be glorious in holiness (then as in the former point, as there is none like to God, so there is none like to his people; for as a mans god is, so is he,) so are the Saints glorious in holiness too; for that which can make an infinite God glorious, must needs make a poor worme a glorious creature. It is true, that which will make a poor man glorious, will not make a King glorious, but that which will make a King glorious must needs make a beggar glorious: now holiness puts a luster and glory upon the divine nature it selfe, upon the infinite God: so that if thou have it, it must needs put a glory upon thee: therefore it is observable, that the communication of Gods holiness to us is express in another way then when he communicates any other attribute to us: when God communicates his knowledge to us, we are not said to partake of the divine nature by it; and so his power, and the like: but when he communicates his holiness to us, we are then said to be made partakers of the divine nature: the holiness of the Saints is the same with Gods holiness; as it were a beame of his: so saies the Scripture, Heb.12.10. He chasteneth us for your profit, that we might be partakers of his holiness. Marke, his holiness: and therefore it puts a wonderfull glory and excellency upon us; for it enables us to worke as God, and to live as God: for what is Gods holiness, as I said before, but that whereby he worke to himselfe as his last end, fitable to his own excellency? So the Saints come to worke to God according to their measure, as their last end, fitable to the infinite excellency of God himselfe: and so they live as God, lives and worke as God worke, and so are fitted to have communion with God; as the life of a plant makes it not fit to have communion with beasts: nor the life of beasts with men: nor men with with the life of God. Now holiness is the highest life of all beings, being the life of God: and therefore fits for communion with God: for in communion there must be the same life: therefore no creature can have communion with God, that doth not live the same life that God doth: but if thou partakest of holiness, thou livest the life that God doth, and so art fit to have communion with God himself.

Further, it puts not only a glory upon thy person, but upon all thou hast and dost: it sanctifies all as the gold was sanctified by the Altar: so the very natural actions, and the ways of Gods common providence, are sanctified to Gods people: there is a lufter upon all the good they enjoy, by virtue of that holiness which God puts in them: as Gods holiness puts a lufter upon all his attributes, so holiness in the Saints puts a lufter upon their parts, names, estates, converse with others: there is a beauty upon all by holiness: take a man that hath excellent natural parts, if he have no holiness, there is no lufter and beauty in him: but take a man that hath able parts, and holiness too, O the lufter that then appears in them.

Again, holiness is the very principle of eternall life, the very beginning of eternall life in the heart, and that which will certainly grow up to eternall life. Again, holiness is the proper object of Gods delight; God delights not in the legs of a man, but in his holiness; let a man be what he will, if God see any impression of holiness in him, the soul of God closeth with that soul.

Further, holiness is that which is the separation of the creature for God, and eternall life: there is (you know) a twofold separation of a creature for God: you have the expression, Psalm 4.3. The Lord hath set apart him, that is godly for himselfe: he is set apart passively; and then hath an active principle to set apart himselfe for God. God in his eternall election sets apart those he intends to save for himselfe; here are those, saies God, that I have set apart from the common lump of mankind, to magnifie the riches of my grace upon, and to live with me to all eternity. If God should now look from heaven upon a man or woman in the congregation, and say, Be it known to all the world that I from eternity have set apart such a man, and woman, to glorifie them with my selfe for ever: every one would look upon such a man and woman as glorious creatures indeed: but now know, that if God hath stamp'd the image of his holinesse upon thee, thou hast as much honour from God, as if he should thus speak to thee: and in some respects more:
for if God should declare, that from all eternity thou art set apart from the creature for God, this were glorious; but when God hath put a principle of his own spirit into thee, to enable thee to set apart thy selfe, and to consecrate thy selfe, and thy all to God, this is more: for in the other thou art but passive, in this thou art active: As on the contrary, there is more dreadfull evill in unholiness then in reprobation; men are afraid of reprobation, that God should set them apart from eternity to magnifie the glory of his Justice upon them; and 'tis true, this is terrible: but while thou apprehendest this as terrible, thou thy selfe art active in that which is more terrible;
that is, by the filthinesse and wickednesse of thy heart and life, thou dost actively set thy selfe apart for eternall wrath and miserie: the other is passive, and thou art onely set apart: but in the wickednesse of thy heart thou art active, and setst thy selfe apart: For as holiness is the dedication of the creature to God, the separation of it from all other things unto God by an active principle; so on the contrary, sinne is the separation of the creature by an active principle from God to all misery. I thought to have enlarged my selfe in comparing the glory and happiness of the Saints, and the misery of the wicked together, but time will not give leave.

Further, as holiness makes the name of God to be reverend, so holiness in the Saints puts a reverend respect upon them in the very consciences of wicked men: take the vilest of wicked men, though they cry out of thee; yet know, if thou walkest strictly, thy close walking with God will gaine respect and reverence from their hearts, in spite of their hearts. And the reason why the people of God gaine not respect and esteeme, is, because they doe not walke strictly; many men mistake themselves: they thinke that strictnesse is slighted and contemmed, and therefore they begin to lessen and abate in their exact walking: but this makes them disesteemed; and it is just with God
God it should be so: doth the abating of holiness help thee to a reverend respect? no, walk more closely with God, and thou wilt have respect from men's consciences: do what they can, thou wilt anger their lust; but thou wilt convince their consciences: and in their most serious mood they will say, O that my soul were in this man's soul's stead: and how often do they say so on their death bed? and if holiness put an excellency and glory upon low and mean things, as in the law what a glory did it put upon a piece of Wood, or Leather, or Brass, when once it was consecrated to a holy use? because that was God's Ordinance, God did put it in it, and not man: for a man to think it is in the power of his will to make God esteem, or that others in reference unto God should esteem of a creature, more than what God hath put into it, is a great mistake: that common stones by my will should be holy, and consecrated to God, and must not be meddled with, that I should put a divine excellency upon that which hath onely a natural excellency in it; what a boldness would this be in me: but now, if God's Ordinance be so, then there is a glory put upon it, as in the Temple, because it was dedicated to God by divine institution, there the very wood, and brass, and every thing had an excellency upon it. Now I would argue thus, shall ceremonial holiness put such an excellency upon a piece of leather! what then shall the image of God put upon an immortal soul?

A further use should have been this, If God be glorious in holiness, then certainly (brethren) God will mainaine holiness in the world: and this is one reason amongst others, of this Title given to God here, because he did worke for his Church: God will honour his own Ordinances and worship, and mainaine his Saints that are holy; preserve me O Lord (sayes David) for I am holy: and thou wilt not give thy holy one to see corruption. If thou beest Gods holy one, he will not leave thee to the power of corruption, he will defend thee and mainaine thee: therefore sayes the Psalmist in Psalm. 68. 35. O God thou art terrible out of thy holy places; what are there any that will be injurious to Gods people when they are in the way of his holy worship? God will be terrible out of his holy places unto such.
these expressions are against the enemies of God, because it is the holiness of God, and the people of God's holiness that they set themselves against. And let all men take heed what they doe in opposing the Saints, and the ways of God's holy worship; for God will maintain holiness therefore it concerns us all to honour holiness our selves, and to set up the glory of God's holiness as much as we can in the world. O let us labour all to be holy, as our heavenly Father is holy: let that be our prayer, Psalm 90. 17. Let the beauty of the Lord our God be upon us. O grow up more in holiness, which is the beauty of God: converse much with God, that thou mayest be holy: when Moses was forty dayes in the Mount conversing with God, he came downe with his face shining: and certainly, those people that converse much with God will have their faces shine with holiness: there is much to be had in conversing with God, who is a holy God. And shew forth the beauty of holiness in thy conversation, that others may say, if one beame of holiness be so delightfull in such a man or woman, O how glorious in holiness then is God himselfe! I remember what a heathen said of the God of the Christians, when he saw the courage of the Christians, certainly (sayes he) the God of the Christians is a great God: why let us walk so holily before others that they may read holiness in our conversations, and be forced to say, certainly the God of this people is a holy God: Especially looke to thy heart to cleanse that when thou drawest nearer to this holy God, in this holy worship, then labour to sanctifie his name; looke to thy feet, come not in thy filth into the presence of so holy a God; 'tis a notable expression of Joshua, Joshua 24.19. when the people say, we will serve the Lord, for he is our God: sayes Joshua, you cannot serve the Lord, for he is an holy God, &c. As if he should say, it is another manner of business to serve the Lord then you thinke for, for you have to deal with a holy God, and 'tis not externall worship will serve his turne. It is an argument people do not know God, when they can turne his service off so lightly: the sight of God would put thee into another frame; didst thou know God in his holiness, thou wouldst look upon the service of God as a great service, thou servest a holy God, as they say, Sam. 1.6.20. who who can stand before this holy God? So, didst thou apprehend God to be a holy God, thy heart would be stricken with fear and awe, and thou wouldst say, who can stand before this holy God? God is greatly to be feared in the assembly of the Saints, and to be had in reverence of those that are round about him. Psalm 89.7. God is to be had in reverence of all men; but if you come near to him, certainly then you must labour to sanctifie your hearts. How canst thou come before the luster and beauty of God's holiness with wilfull uncleanness in thy heart? that Text in Job is very remarkable Job 13.11. Shall not his excellency make you afraid? You have heard that Gods holinesse is his excellency: now I say, to thee that hast to deal with him, shall not his excellency make thee afraid? art thou conscious of thy uncleanness and dost thou come into the presence of a holy God and not feare and tremble before him? O bold daring heart that thou hast, that canst come into the presence of a holy God with an unholy heart; and not tremble: it would be of admirable use in all our dealings with God, to have clear apprehensions of his holiness.

Againe, labour to magnifie God this way: as God is glorious in holiness, so set him out in his glory by keeping his worship pure. It is a speciall thing God lookes at, that we take heed what we doe in deslining of his worship. Gods Ordinances are the beauty of his holiness, therefore we must labour to come pure and cleane unto them: 'tis that which God commands his Church, to keep the vessels of his sanctuary holy, and those are the ordinances: and we are unfaithfull in our charge, if we doe not keep the ordinances holy: in Exod. 20. 24.25. God gives them charge there to make him an Altar: but sayes God, If thou wilt make me an Altar of stone, thou shalt not build it of brenen stone: for if thou lift up thy tool upon it, thou hast polluted it. What, might they say, shall we have an Altar of rude stone? shall we not polish and make it fine and sumptuous? will not that make it more specious to look upon? no, sayes God; if you lift up a tool upon it you pollute it. We are apt to thinke, that such and such mixtures of men, and such and such ceremonies would make the worship of God glorious; but this is a great mistake. It is a usuall thing for whores to paint their faces; they will not be content with their natural beauty, but are more pompous in their apparel than the chaste Matrons are. It is so with the whore of Babylon: how glorious are they in all their worship? and what strange things have they to take the outward senses? they are faine to dresse and trick up themselves, having not the purity of God's worship: but certainly these things defile the worship of God: compare two Texts for this, Isai. 44. 9. They that make a graven Image are all of them vanity, and their delectable things shall not profit: marke, the Images of Idolaters are delectable things in their esteeme: but see what God speakes of them, Ezek. 7. 20. As for the beauty of his ornament, be set it in Majestie: but they made the Images of their abominations, and of their detestable things therein. They call them delectable things, but God accounts them detestable: but when God speakes of his own ordinances, he saies, as for the beauty of his ornament he set it in Majestie. O the worship of God in the plainness and simplicity of the Gospel! it is the ornament of God, the beauty of his ornament, and the beauty of his ornament set in Majestie: what phrases are here? this is Gods worship; but if man mix any thing of his own in Gods worship, it is detestable to God: therefore if we would honour and magnifie God in his holiness, let us keep pure his worship; for holiness becomes the worship of God for ever.

And then the consideration of this should humble us, and make us ashamed, for the remainder of all that unholliness that is in our hearts; the sight of Gods holiness made Isaiah cry out, Isaiah 6. 5. Woe is me, for I am undone, because I am a man of uncleane lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of uncleane lips, for mine eyes have seen the King, the Lord of hosts. And certainly there is nothing in the world hath that power to humble the heart so as Gods holiness: and then is your heart humbled for sinne aright, when you look upon it as that which is opposite to the pure nature of God. I am not onely troubled for my sinne because I am afraid it will bring hell along with it, but because I have had a sight of the infinite holiness of God, and the purity of his nature: and O that I should have a nature so filthy, and opposite to that infinite holiness of his. And hereby examine your hearts whether your humiliation be right or no; and this is one good argument, when the infinite holiness of God hath made you see your uncleanness, and upon that hath humbled you.

Lastly, what need have we all of Jesus Christ? if God be glorious in holiness, we should all of us say, who can stand before so holy a God! were it not for the holiness of the blessed mediator who stands between the father and us, and presents his infinite satisfaction to the father for our sinnes, and clothes us with his righteousness, woe, woe unto us: if you could possibly imagine that all the excellencies of heaven and earth were put into one creature, except holiness, yet if that creature had but the least drop of uncleanness and unholiness in it, God would eternally hate that creature; and were there not a mediator between that creature and God, God would eternally let out his wrath upon it: for God is so glorious in holiness that he doth infinitely hate filthiness: we wonder to hear of such great misery threatened to wicked men, but we should not wonder, did we know God's holiness: God doth so infinitely hate sinne, that he did instantly send all the Angels that fell, downe in chains of eternall darknesse, and refused to enter into the least parcel with them, or to be reconciled to them for ever. Now what is the reason, that though we have so much uncleanness in us, yet God is pleased to be reconciled to us, and to admit us into his presence, and give us hopes to see his face with joy to all eternity? 'tis this, because we have a mediator, and they have none: were it not for that, could we weep streams of blood from our eyes, yet God would hate and abhor us, and his wrath would eternally seize upon us. And therefore, though you may rejoice in inherent holiness, yet let your hearts especially be upon the perfect holiness of Jesus Christ, and tender up that to God: and though thou hast much uncleanness in thy selfe and in thy duties (for alas what is it for us to tender duty to the holy God) yet let this comfort thee, thou hast not to deal with God in thy selfe, but through Christ; and in him thou hast liberty to come, and mayest look upon God's face with boldnesse; this is the great mystery of godlineesse, revealed in the Gospell, that notwithstanding the infiniteness of God's holiness, yet there should be a way for us polluted.
polluted creatures to looke upon this God with joy. This mystery is onely taught in the Gospel. Though men now thinke they can come and cry to God for mercy; yet hereafter when God shall let out the brightness of his holinesse to thee, and thou comest to see thy uncleanness, then thy heart will sinke down in eternall despaire; thou wilt not endure to behold God then: And if thou beeft not acquainted with God in this way of reconciliation, thou art undone for ever; therefore study the mystery of the Gospel; and make use of Christ, that the glory of Gods holinesse may not be to thy terror, but to thy comfort.

Colos. 3. v. 11. Latter end of it.

But Christ is all in all.

It is not long since (as some of you may remember) that in this place that subject was handled of the Saints enjoyment of God, to be all in all, out of 1 Cor. 15. v. 28. and then I told you we had such an expression in Scripture but onely twice: applied to God in the happiness of the Saints enjoyment of him in heaven, and applied here to Christ, of what Christ is to them for the present. That which was handled about Gods being all in all, is the end: this that is to be delivered concerning Christ being all in all, is that which brings the soul to that blessed end. Wherefore then, as Christ himself says, John 14. 1. Ie believe in God, believe also in me: So I say, as God shall be all in all eternally to the Saints, doe you believe in that? believe also in this, that I am to deliver to you this day, that Christ be all and in all.

The Apostle Saint Paul was a chosen vessel to beare the name of Christ, to carry it up and downe, in the world: and indeed his spirit was full of Christ, he desired to know nothing but Christ, to Preach nothing but Christ, to be found in none: but Christ; the very name of Christ was delightfull to him: he seekes in all his Epistles to magnifie Christ, and in these words (that I have read unto you) he doth omnifie Christ; he makes him not onely great, but makes him all. There is neither Grecke nor Jew, circumcision nor uncircumcision, Barbarian, Scythian, bond nor free, but Christ is all in all: that is, there is no priviledge in the one to commend them to God, and no want of any thing in the other to hinder them from God; let men be what they will in their outward respects, what is that to God?
God? let them be never so mean in regard of all outwards, that cannot hinder them from the enjoyment of God: for God lookes not at these things, but Christ is all and in all to them; so farre as God seeth Christ in any, he accepts of them: if Christ be not there, whatever they have, he regards them not. Christ is all in all, even in the esteeme of the Father himselfe: he was the delight of the father from all eternity, Prov. 8.30. and the father tooke infinite contentment in him upon his willingness to undertake this blessed worke of the redemption of mankinde. God the father is infinitely satisfied in Christ, he is all in all to him: Surely if Christ be an object sufficient for the satisfaction of the father, much more then is he an object sufficient for the satisfaction of any soul.

But that which is the maine scope here of the holy Ghost in this high expression of Christ's transcendent excellency (that I may come presently to it) I shall deliver it in this doctrinall proposition, That Christ is the onely means of conveyance of all good that God the father intends to communicate unto the children of men, in order to eternal life; he is all, and in all. This that I am now to Preach unto you, namely, Gods communicating of himselfe in his mercy to mankinde, through a mediator, it is the very sum of the Gospell, the great mystery of godliness, is the chiefe part of the minde and counsell of God, that he would have made knowne to the children of men in this world. This is the great embassage that the ministers of the Gospell have to bring unto the sons and daughters of men, and 'tis the most absolutely necessary point in all Divinity.

I suppose in the first hearing of it, every one yeilds to the truth of it; 'tis true you will say, we can have no good from God, but in and by Christ. Well, there is a great deal in that you say, when you say all must come from God in Christ: in all your prayers and petitions you usually conclude them through Jesus Christ; but certainly this is many times spoken when we see little of the glory of God that there is in such an expression: and that which I shall this day endeavour, shall be to shew you somewhat of the glory of God shining in this truth that God doth communicate himselfe through a mediator, through his son. This is the great point of Divinity that is absolutely olutely necessary to be known to eternall life: it is possible to be ignorant of many other truths, and yet be saved; but there must be some knowledge of this, or there can be no salvation: the mistake in this very thing is the miscarriage, and the eternall undoing of thousand thousands of souls; many there are who believe that they have need of, and can never be saved but by God's mercy, and this the light of nature convinceth us of: but that God is to communicate his mercy through a mediator, this they are ignorant of, and see not into the reality of this truth; and miscarry and perish eternally with cries to God for mercy, because they come to God, but not through a mediator. This is the sum of the Gospel, and the most supernaturall truth revealed in all the book of God. It is a truth that was hidden almost from all the world for many ages; the Scripture saith, The Princes of the world knew it not. A truth we are not able to understand anything of, by the light of nature. 1 Cor. 1.21. The world by wisdome knew not God; that is, by all their arts and sciences, by all their natural wisdome, they knew not God sparingly; they did not know God in Christ. There is no footsteps of this truth in all the works of creation or providence; therefore in Ephes. 3.8. Saint Paul saith, he was appointed to Preach the unsearcable riches of Christ; that riches that hath no footsteps: that is the propriety of the word; there is no footsteps of the riches of the Gospel in the creature; therefore you cannot trace it there; whereas many other points of religion have many footsteps in the creature, and by the light of nature much may be discovered about God: as that all our good consists in communion with God, that when we have offended God, we must seek to him for pardon and mercy, and the like: But that God communicates himself through Christ, and that not one drop of mercy in order to eternal life can be communicated from God, but through Christ the mediator, of this there is not one footstep in all the works of God.

This is that which is so supernaturall, that 'tis above perfect nature. Adam knew nothing of this in his perfect estate. Yea this is that which the Angels themselves desire to pry into, looking upon it as a mighty depth. 1 Peter 1.12. the Angels stoop downe (for so the word signifieth) 'tis as if a thing should lie lye in a deep pit, and when any would see it, they stoop down with their bodies to pry into the pit: that's the propriety of the word: so the Angels they see a mighty depth in the mystery of the Gospel, and they stoop downe to pry into it, that they may know what it is. Yea this is that which requires a worke of the spiritt, beyond the ordinary work of the spiritt of God, to reveale it to the soule, 1 Cor. 2.10. speaking there of the Mystery of the Gospel, sayes the Apostle, The spiritt that searcheth the deep things of God, &c. discovers this; that is, the spiritt of God in an extraordinary worke of his, as he is a spiritt searching the deep things of God, so he is a discovering spiritt of this truth unto us: and therefore seeing it is thus, it is not so light to be past over. I, you will say, tis true, it must come through Jesus Christ; well, you see a little spiritt, but there is much more in this truth: and yet we are aware of. Tis a truth that is the most profitable and the truths contained in the book of God: there is no growth up in godlinesse till we come to know God in Christ: the knowledge of God is something to worke upon the heart, and many labour against their sinne because they see it is against the law of God, and set upon duties because God requires them; and this is well; but till they come to understand indeed the mystery of the Gospel of Gods letting himselfe out unto his people through a mediator, they doe but bungle in the ways of godlinesse, they doe not thrive and grow up in them; and therefore those Christians that live under such a ministry, where though they have many good truths revealed to them, yet having but little of the mystery of Christ, as the mediator, their way of Christianity is very low, they doe not sanctifie God in their conversation. I remember a speech that Erasimus hath when they would have had him write against Luther, and promised him a great Bishopricke for it; he answers, Luther is greater then that I can write against him; for I am instructed more in one small page of Luther, then out of whole Thomas Aquinas, that was the great Schoolman. So certainly the understanding but some one truth, some one sentence in the mystery of the Gospel, in this way of Gods communication of himselfe unto us through his Christ, doth instruct the soul, and cause it to thrive and grow up in godlinesse abundantly. dantly more then thousands of Sermons about meree moralities: and you have a most admirable Text for this, Ephefs. 3.17: and so on, That Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith, that ye being rooted and grounded in love, may be able to comprehend with all Saints, what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height, and to know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge: make what followes, That yee might be filled with all the fulness of God, v. 19. By coming to know God in Christ, that is, to know Christ to be the way of Gods communicating himselfe unto us, we come to be filled with all the fulness of God: many Christians their hearts are very scant and empty, there is not a fulness in their spirits; and all because they know so little of God in Christ, in this mystery of the Gospell.

Lastly, there is no truth revealed in all the Scriptures whereby we can honour God so much as by this: this indeed is the great honour that God would have in the world, to be honoured in his Son, and in the great designe he hath of bringing forth glorious things by his Son; and therefore though we know never so much of God, and would honour him meerely as the Creator of heaven and earth, yet God doth not accept of that honour, that is but to honour him in a naturall way; we never know what it is to honour God aright, so as to be accepted of him, till we come to honour him in an Evangelicall way, to honour him in his Son: and yet the greatest honour he hath from most in the world, yea from multitudes in the very Church of God, that heare the mystery of Christ opened to them, is tending up to him meerely in a naturall way, and not in this spirituall Evangelicall service of God. You see now the consequence of the point, let us then fall to it.

And First I shall shew you the truth of it in Scripture.

And Secondly how it comes to passe that there can be no good communicated to us from God in order to eternall life but by Christ.

And Thirdly, how Christ comes to be the meanes and way of conveyance of all good unto us from his father.

Fourthly, I shall instanc in some speciall things, great things wherein most of the goodnesse of God is communicated to us, and shew you how in them Christ is all in all to us.

And
And Fifthly the reasons why God will have this way of communication of himselfe unto us through his Son, why he will not communicate himselfe immediately to us, but through a mediator; these are the five things for the doctrinal part.

For the first, the course of Scripture especially of the new Testament runs this way; you know that of Christ, John 14. 6. I am the way, the truth and the life; no man cometh unto the father but by me; there is no coming to the Father but by Christ; and Christ be is the way: and that in 1 Cor. 3. at the latter end, saies the Apostle there: All things are yours, whether Paul, or Apollo, or Cephas, or the world, or life, or death, or things present, or things to come, all are yours. How is that? marke, All are yours, and ye are Christ's, and Christ is God's: God the Father he is the principle of all good; all firstly comes from him, but it comes not from him immediately; he doth not say, all are yours, for ye are Gods; because you have an interest in God, therefore all comes to be yours: no, but all are yours, and you are Christ's, and Christ is God's; so that you see here how that Christ comes between yours and Gods.

All good is in God, true; but how shall we come to partake of that good? there is such a distance between these two terms, yours and Gods, that were not Christ in the middle, they would never come together. Yea, but Christs coming between, and joyning them together, then all are yours, because ye are Christs, and Christ is Gods; so that we may take the intent of the Holy Ghost here, in this similitude (though it be too low for the great mystery we are about to expresse.) Conceive God the father as the fountaine of all good, and Christ as it were the Cisterne: and then from him, pipes conveyed to every believer; and faith, that sucks at the mouth of every pipe, and drawes from God, but it comes from God through Christ. The Father he fills the Son with all good, and so it comes from the Father through the Son by faith unto the soul of every believer: we have a notable expression further of this mystery in the Epistle to the Ephesians in the second and third Chapters, in Chapter 2. ver. 12, having told them that they had been without hope, and without God in the world; but faith he ver. 13. To who sometimes were farre off, are made nigh by the blood of Christ: It is by the blood of Christ that you have anything to do with God; but especially in Ephes. 3. 12. In whom we have boldness and access with confidence by the faith of him; in whom? in Christ, we come to have boldness and access: boldness, the word signifies liberty of speech that we can come with liberty of speech before God, and we have access: Manuduction, we are led by the hand of Christ to the father, there is no coming to the father but by Christ, and Christ he takes a believer by the hand and leads him to the father, and so he comes to have boldness: as if a Traytor should be banished, the Court, and afterward the Prince should be a means of his reconciliation with the King, and comes and takes the Traytor by the hand, and sayes to him, come, I will lead you in my hand to my father; and though you have provoked him, yet being in my hand, you need not be afraid, but may goe to him with boldnesse and confidence. Just the meaning of the Text here, In Christ we have boldnesse and access with confidence; and although before there was a dreadfull breach between the father and us, yet being led by the hand of Christ, there is access and freedome of speech for us: well the truth is cleare enough in the whole tenour of the Gospell.

If you would know now how it comes to passe, that though God be in himselfe the fountaine of all goodnesse and infinite mercy; that yet there is such a stoppage as it were that there is not one drop of this mercy can be communicated to the children of men but this way? that although we have to deal with God, who in his owne nature is infinitely mercifull; yet such is the case with man, and such are the termes between God and man, that there is not, I say, one drop of this infinite ocean can be expected to come for ever from God, but onely this way, It comes to passe thus:

First, because of the breach of the first covenant that God made with mankind; for onely men and Angels, the humane and angelical nature, are capable of a covenant with God; to speak of a covenant properly; and because they are capable of this way of Gods proceeding with them, God would goe according to the nature of his creature; and therefore at first makes a covenant with them, and intended to convery and communicate his goodness to them by that covenant, now this covenant being broken, and so there being a breach between God and man, there is a stoppage made by virtue of that breach: So that there is no good now to be had by virtue of the first covenant: and unless there be a second, there can be no good at all expected; the first being broken, and we being lost by that.

And further, there is such an infinite distance between God and us, that there can be no coming together; and that not so much in regard of God's excellency in himself, and our meaness, that we are such poor low creatures, as in regard of the infiniteness of his holiness, and our uncleanness and sinfulness, this makes the distance.

Besides, there is the strength of the law; the curse of the law is upon every soul naturally, and that stops: there was never vessel stopp'd closer to be kept from having a drop of liquor poured into it, then the curse of the law is close upon every soul, to keep mercy from it, so far as God looks upon it meerly in its naturals, and not through his Son.

Then there are the cryes of infinite Justice against men, which must have satisfaction: and till Justice be satisfied mercy stirres not, unless it be in a way of providing satisfaction unto Justice; so that put these together, the breach of the first covenant, the distance between God and man in regard of God's holiness and man's sinfulness, the power of the curse of the law upon man, and the cryes of divine Justice, that will never be quiet till it hath received satisfaction: these things, being rightly apprehended, we may come to see that we are farre off from receiving mercy from God, though he be an infinite fountaine of mercy, except there be some strange way of conveying it to us. We know, according to God's dealing with the fallen Angels, there is no way of conveying mercy to them, but they are left to perish for ever; if the thousands of Angels that fell from God should be thousands of thousands of years crying out for mercy, they could not obtain one drop; why? because there is no mediator between God and them; and it would have been our case with them, had there not been a mediator between God and us. Many thinke

thinks if they are sensible of their sinnes, and can believe that God is infinitely mercifull, they shall do well enough: but I must tell you, that though there be infinite mercy in God, yet if thou hast no interest in Christ, thou mayest be undone for ever.

But how is Christ all in all to us in God's communication of good to us?

The first ground of all is the covenant that God the Father made with his Son from all eternity. Therefore in Titus 1. 2, the Apostle speaks of the promise that was before the world began. Now this promise can be meant only of that covenant that past between the Father and the Son: and therefore says the Apostle in 1 Cor. 2. 9. 10. Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them which love him: but the spirit which searcheth all things, yea the deep things of God, he hath revealed them unto us, that is, the spirit of God in the Gospel discovers what were the eternal thoughts and purposes of God concerning us, and what the transactions were between the Father and the Son in reference to man-kind before the world was. The covenant now being between the Father and the Son, and the Father requiring in this Covenant satisfaction to infinite divine justice, Christ he yields to this.

And therefore in the second place, Christ he actually comes to be the way of conveyance, by taking our nature upon him, and so makes us reconcilable to God, by taking humane nature into such a near union to the divine nature, to the second person in the Trinity; so as that there should be but one person in them both, that there should be a personall union, which is the great mystery of the Gospel. There are two great mysteries in the Gospel; the one, that there should be divers persons in one nature; and this is the mystery of the Trinity: the other that there should be divers natures in one person; and this is the mystery of the hypostatical union of our nature with Christ. So that Christ taking man's nature into such a near union to himselfe, it was a mighty preparative for God to have thoughts of peace toward humane nature, rather then to the Angels; and it was one, one part of his humility, and therefore hath a meritorious efficiency in this worke of reconciling God to man. But this was not sufficient.

Therefore in the third place, Christ was content now to come into the world, and be made the head of a second covenant between God and mankind; to performe what ever God the Father should require, for the satisfaction of divine Justice: so that, look as Adam by being the head of the first covenant, was the meanes of conveying all evil to us: so Christ by being the head of the second covenant, is the meanes of conveying all good to us; by his subjecting to this we come to receive all grace and mercy from God. And it could not have been otherwise; for though God would have thought of a second covenant, yet if he had left it to us to have performed the terms of it, we should as soon have broken that, as we did the first: but Christ undertaking to be the head of the second covenant, and performing whatever the Father required in it, by his perfect obedience to the law, and satisfaction to divine Justice, divine Justice had nothing to lay to the charge of those that Christ undertook to satisfy for: This was a mighty way of Gods letting out his grace and mercy to the souls of believers; for what is it that stops the current of his mercy? 'tis the curse of the law and cryes of divine Justice: but now, Christ undertaking to undergo that curse, and to satisfy divine Justice, God hath as much honour now by his suffering, as he had dishonour by mans sinning: so that mans sinne is made up in this; and that is it Justice requires. I have had dishonour by sinne sayes Justice, I must have this dishonour made up by suffering, and so much suffering as in which I must have as much honour as I had before dishonour in sinning. These are the conditions upon which God will be reconciled to man; and upon no other. I beseech you consider this, and herein you will see an infinite necessity of Christ: God is with us upon these terms: sayes God, you have sinned against me and dishonoured me; how doe you think to be delivered? why Lord, thou art mercifull: I, sayes God, but I am resolved upon this, I will have as much honour by suffering, as I had dishonour by by sinning. And Lord what would have become of us, if we had been left to make up this breach? This is the very reason why the damned in hell are there eternally, because they are there upon these terms; sayes God, I am infinite, and I am dishonoured, and there they must lye, till I have as much honour by their suffering as I had dishonour by their sinning.
Now after they have been there thousands of thousands of yeares, still the honour of God calls for more: and therefore they must lye there for ever. But now, Christ who is the great Saviour, he comes, and entering into covenant with God, and fulfilling that covenant, he layes downe God such a price, that God shall have as much honour in his suffering for sinne, as he had dishonour before in the committing of sinne. Now this being done, the current of mercy being unstop, and the passages of it opened, and God being infinite in grace and mercy in himselfe, what a glorious way is made for the streames of his mercy to issue and flow forth to the children of men.

And (take in this one particular more, and then we shall have done with this head) In this we may see, that God in forgiving of sinne, and shewing mercy to sinfull creatures is just; and goes in a way of Justice, as well as in a way of mercy: therefore that Text Rom. 3.25.26. is very observable (a Text that Luther for a while was exceedingly troubled about the meaning of it) Whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation, through faith in his bloud, to declare his righteousness for the remission of sinnes that are past, through the forbearance of God. To declare, I say, at this time his righteousness, that he might be just, and the justifier of him which believeth in Jesus. This was, that which troubled Luther so much, that God should declare his righteousnesse in the remission of sinnes: that God declares his mercy every one knowes, but that God declares his righteousnesse, and that Christ is set to be a propitiation, that God might declare his righteousness, this may seem strange: and then the Holy Ghost repeats it, To declare, I say his rightousnesse: as if he should say, consider that God in the pardoning of sinne, doth not onely manifest his grace and mercy, but declares his righteousness, That he might be just; and the justifier,

justifier of him which believeth in Jesus; Not mercifull, but just: thus wee see what way Christ takes to be the means of conveying Gods goodnesse to us; by performing the covenant, and so satisfying divine justice.

Lastly, he is the way of conveying good to us, as by his satisfaction, so by his intercession: for he is now, and shall for ever be, at the right hand of the Father in glory, making intercession for his people: that is, continually presenting before his Father the worke of his mediation, his merits, what he hath done and suffered, and as it were pleading with his Father for the conveyance of all needfull mercy and good unto the souls and bodies of his people whom he hath redeemed. As if he should every moment eternally speake thus to the Father: Father, behold here is my bloud, my merits, my death, all my sufferings; the worke of my humiliation, it is for these; yea for this poor soul, and for that poor soul particularly: for know that Christ thinks not only of the lumpe of believers in the generall, but particularly of every believer, and is continually presenting before the Father his infinite merits, to plead with him for supplie of all grace and mercy to us: and thus he comes to be an infinite way of conveyance of good to the souls of his people, and so to be all and in all to them, both here and eternally: that is the third particular; how Christ comes to be the way of conveyance.

But now the fourth, and that is, to instance in some speciall things we have from God, and to manifest that Christ is all in all in those things; As now first, in the point of justification and the pardon of our sinnes, the acceptation of us as righteous: that is the great thing we stand in need of from God, Christ is all in all to us here: this is the tenour of the Gospel, Rom. 3.24. Being justified freely by his grace, through the redemption that is in Jesus Christ. Luther hath this expression concerning justification: saies he, in the point of justification, there Christ and faith must be onely put together; they must be alone, and nothing else with them; but in our conversation, there indeed comes in good works: just as it is between the bridegroom and the bride, the bridegroom and the bride are alone.
alone in the bride chamber; but when they goe abroad, there they have their traine and servants attending them: so he compares justification to the bride chamber; none but Christ and faith must be there; but when they come abroad in their conversation, then all other graces attend them, and good works come in, but Christ is all in all here.

First, It is not all we have done; no, nor all that we can possibly doe, that can be our justification. You will say, true, we have for the present done but little: I, but suppose any of you should doe your utmost in any particular that God requires: you will say, I hope if I doe what I can, God will accept it of me: no, you mistake exceedingly if you think so; people are very apt to look upon God as if the termes between God and them were no other then thus: God he is a pittifull and a mercifull God; and 'tis true, we are weak and can doe but little: but yet doing, what we are able, God he will accept the will for the deed: no, God accepts not the will for the deed in point of justification. It is true, in those that are already justified, God in the performance of duty accepts the will for the deed, so as to take delight in them: but in point of justification, as to pardon of sinne and acceptance to righteousness, there he must have perfect obedience; and though we endeavour never so much, yet unless we can bring God a perfect righteousness, we are undone for ever; yea, woe to Abraham, and woe to Isaac, and woe to Jacob, and woe to David and Daniel, and to all the Prophets and Apostles, notwithstanding all their righteousness, if they had not had a righteousness beyond what was in themselves. If they had not had a perfect righteousness to tender to their Father, they had been utterly lost for ever: therefore it is not for thee to rest upon this, that thou dost what thou canst, and hast good wishes and desires, and the like; for were all the righteousness of all the righteous men that ever were in the world in one man, it would not be sufficient for his justification. I but it may be you will say, true I can doe but little of my self, but if God enable me, then he will accept of me. Nay further, it is not what God enables thee to doe, that can be the formality of thy justification: such are the termes between God and thee.
Thee, that there is nothing thou canst doe of thy self, or canst be enabled to doe, that is accepted of him for thy righteousness to eternall life.

But it may be said, it is true, though God should enable me, yet there may be imperfections; but God is mercifull, and will passe them by: therefore I adde another consideration, that it is not onely what thou canst do, or canst be enabled to doe, but 'tis not Gods mercy added. (if barely considered, as the mercy of God as a creator to his creature, and not under this consideration through Christ, and accepting a righteousness beyond thy own) that can eke out thy justification. This is a great mistake, many think that that which they have in themselves and what they are able to doe, is but little; but when they have done something, if God will come then and adde his mercy to it, that they think will eke it out: no, it is not that and mercy together that is thy justification, I say mercy out of this notion we are speaking of.

And that you may understand it yet more clearly, consider it thus: the work of Gods mercy in justification, it is not of this use, that it should be our justification, or should eke out what we are wanting in for our justification; but the work of Gods mercy in justifying a soul is, to take him off from himselfe, to unbottome him, and to make him see and be sensible of his own unrighteousnesse and uncleanesse: this is a great and mighty work of Gods mercy. I remember Luther sayes of himselfe, that while he was a Papist, he was not obedient out of worldly respects for a livelyhood, and the like; but he did what he did out of conscience; and yet sayes he afterward, (after he knew God in Christ) 'That which I counted gain was lost unto me. He did not think it enough to do what he did out of conscience, and that Gods mercy should make up the rest: no, he was taken off of that way. 'Tis not the work of mercy to do this, but to discover to the soul a righteousness of a higher nature, even of the mediator God and man; and to enable the soul by faith to tender up that righteousness to God the father for satisfaction: this is the workes of Gods mercy in point of justification. The mistake of the way of Gods mercy having an influence into our justification is a very dangerous mistake; and we had need be very wary in this great point of justification, for all depends upon it. I remember Luther in this, saith he, it is an easie matter to say we clothe with God's grace, and the righteousness of Christ alone in the point of justification, till the soul be brought to a conflict: and then 'tis the hardest thing in the world to do it, and the people of God have found it so in the time of trouble of conscience: that's the first, that Christ is all in all in point of justification.

Secondly, he is all in all in point of adoption, so says the Scripture, Gal. 3. 26. For ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus; and Chapter 4. v. 4. 5. But when the fulness of the time was come, God sent forth his Son made of a woman, made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons: and especially that is very remarkable John 1. 12. But as many as received him, to them he gave power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name. The word translated power, is another word in the greek. — He gave them authority to become the sons of God:
tis a word that imports more than bare power. Every one will challenge a part in sonship, that they are the children of God; but only those that are in Christ have authority to challenge it as their due. If a stranger should say he was the King's son, and were heir to the Crown, it would cost him his life, because he is none of the King's son; but if one be declared by Act of Parliament to be the right heir to the Crown, then he hath authority to challenge it. 'Tis so here; when once we come to be in Christ, then we have authority to claim this privilege, to be the sons of God, and heirs of heaven. And this great privilege that is so mightily above us, we have it in Christ, not only by way of the redundancy of his merit, but by our union with him, we are mar-rried to Christ; and by union with his person, are made one with him; and so are sons by virtue of his sonship: And are therefore sons of God in a higher way then the Angels are;
the Angels are sons by creation, but we are the sons of God in Christ, by virtue of our union in his sonship: as Christ is the son of God the second person in Trinity, and we made one with
with him, so we come to be the sons of God in a mysticall way of union with him, and Christ is all in all in that.

And then in point of reconciliation and peace with God, Christ is all in all there, Being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ, Rom. 5.1. It is not all the created power in heaven and earth that can bring true peace to a troubled soul: there is no salve for a wounded spirit, but the blood of Christ applied unto it; tis he that is the brazen Serpent that is only able to cure the strings of conscience; as Luther sayes, it is a harder matter to comfort an afflicted conscience, then to raise the dead: few think it so, and wonder what people meane in being so troubled in conscience as they are: I tell you, were there not a mighty redeemer, the conscience of a man or woman could never be pacified that once apprehends the wrath of God against them; so that Christ is all in all there.

And so he is all in all in point of all our sanctification, that is sanctification to life. There is a general kind of sanctification the Scripture speaks of, which comes some way from Christ: but now I speak of that sanctification which is our spiritual life. You know what the Scripture sayes, John 3.36. He that believeth on the Son, hath everlasting life; and John 1.16. And of his fulness have all we received, and grace for grace. There is the fulness of Christ conveyed into the soul; so that our sanctification is not only from him meritoriously, but efficiently, yea, and in a kind embracing too, for he doth not only merit it, and work it by his Spirit; but through our union with him there is a kind of flowing of sanctification from him into us, as the principle of our life: as from the Liver there flowes blood into all the parts of the body; so through our union with Christ, he having the fulness of the Godhead in him, from him as from a fountaine, sanctification flows into the souls of the Saints: there sanctification comes not so much from their strugling, and endeavours, and yowes, and resolutions, as it comes flowing to them from their closing with Christ and their union with him; there may be a great deal of striving and endeavouring, that may be utterly ineffectually, for want of having recourse unto Christ as the
the spring and well head of all grace and holiness. I remember a Germane Divine professeth of himself, that before he understood the grace of Christ in the Gospel, he vowed and vowed, and covenanted and covenanted a thousand times, and could never overcome his corruptions, till he understood God's letting out of his grace through Christ, and then he got strength against them: and the reason why we fail in point of sanctification is, because we think to get it all by maine strength; but the ready way is to close with Christ by faith, and then there will flow in life and grace to the soul: there may be many moralities by the light of nature, and the remainders of that light left in us; but that is not the sanctification that is to life. And hence it is, that there is so much beauty and glory in the sanctification of the Saints, because Christ is all in all in it; and that there is such power and strength in it, because it is of the strength of Christ; for Christ is all in all in it. And hence it is of an abiding nature, and an immortal seed; And therefore of a higher nature then that of Adam in innocency: that was loft, but so cannot this; because Christ is all in all in it; so that Christ is all in all in our sanctification likewise.

Again, he is all in all in the want of all things, whatsoever we want: do we want grace, do we want gifts, do we want outward comforts in the world? there is enough in Christ: it is Christ that is instead of all, that is better then all, and that will supply all in his due time. Those that know Christ; and have acquaintance with him, though they have this and that comfort taken from them, yet they know how to make supply out of Christ: they have that skill, and art, and mystery of godliness, that they can make Christ to be all in all in the want of all: and it is a great skill and mystery of godliness, to know how to make up all in Christ in the want of all.

Again, Christ to the Saints is all in all in the enjoyment of all: when they enjoy never so much of creature comforts, Christ is all in all in them; the satisfaction that their souls have, is not so much that they have the creatures, that they have larger estates, more friends, greater comforts than others; but but in this, that they know how to enjoy Christ in all, and can look upon it as a fruit of the covenant that God hath made with them in Christ; and as coming from the fountain of God's eternal love and mercy in his Son. Zech. 9.11. God saith there, As for thee also, by the blood of thy covenant, I have sent forth thy prisoners out of the pit wherein is no water. That which is spoken there of the deliverance of the prisoners, may be applied to all the mercies that a believer enjoys: whatever deliverance he hath from evil, whatever good he is possessed of, it is by the blood of the covenant; a believer can look upon every bit of meat he hath, and upon all the good he enjoys, and see it all come streaming to him in the blood of Christ; and so it comes abundantly the sweeter. As cist with the Sun, when it shines through the air it is not so warm, as when it shines through a burning-glass. Take a burning-glass, and hold it between you and the Sun, and the glass will contract the beames of the Sunne, so that it shall have an efficacy of heat, even to burn again: So the goodness of God that comes to people through the general bounty and patience of God, hath not such an efficacy to warm and heat their hearts, and to draw them to God; but now, Christ is as it were the burning-glass, that is held between God and the soule; and the mercy coming through this burning-glass, O how doth it warm and heat outward comforts! therefore there is no people in the world can enjoy outward comforts with so much fulness of contentment as the people of God doe, because they all come to them through Christ. Christ is all in all in the enjoyment of all. And so I might shew you how he will be all in all in Heaven to eternity.

But to give you one particular more: as he is all in all in the good we have from God, so he is all in all in whatever we tender up to God; as in descent from God to us, so in ascent from us to God. Christ must come in there, he must be all in all in our services, let our services be never so good; yet, though spiritually, yet they must find acceptance with the Father through Christ. That Text is very remarkable for this, 1 Pet. 2.5. It also, as lively stones, are built up a spiritual house, an holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices acceptable to God by Jesus Christ.
Christ; marke, To offer up spiritual sacrifices. 1, but though the sacrifice be spiritual, that is not enough to make it acceptable, but Christ he must come in; therefore he addes, acceptable to God by Jesus Christ. Many people offer up sacrifice, and they think that is enough; but the people of God they rest not only in the duty, no, nor in the spirituality of the duty, though that be counted a great matter: but they goe one step higher, and so must you in all the duties you tender up to God, and that is, not only to be carefull that your duties be spiritual, but you must tender them to God in the hands of Jesus Christ, and expect acceptance through him. When thou haft to deal with God in all thy approaches to him, be sure thou dost not omit the work of Faith, in laying hold upon Christ and carrying him along with thee; or else thy service will not be accepted. We know the sacrifices in the law, though they were never so good, yet they were not accepted unless a man brought them to the Priest, and the Priest he must offer up the sacrifice, and then it was accepted. Now what was that to signify to us, but Christ's Priestly office: this is the very work of the Priestly office of Christ, to take all our sacrifices that we tender up to the Father, and to offer them up for us: for we must not presume to offer them our selves; and though they offered a sacrifice that was never so good, yet if they did not offer it upon the right Altar, it was not accepted: so Christ he is the right Altar upon which we must offer up all our sacrifices to the Father; we must look towards the Temple, towards Christ, in all that goes from us unto God, Christ being all in all for acceptation of our duties.

And thus we have done with the fourth particular, shewing wherein Christ is all in all.

But now it may be demanded; how it comes to passe that God will have this way of communicating himselfe to mankinde, and will not goe in that other way, that we by the light of nature and reason would think he should goe? true indeed, we are sinners: I, but God is mercifull, and we will seek, and cry to him for pardon and mercy, and deliverance from our sins; and what needs there more? why will not God
God save us this way? I will not stand now to dispute about the possibility of this, but we know this is not the way.

We are therefore now to enquire why God should rather take this strange way, then goe any other way? and indeed it is a wonderfull way, if we rightly consider it: there is nothing in the world that works so much upon a mans heart to adore and admire God in the mystery of the Gospell, as the understanding of this, that God should have a peculiar way of communicating himself to man, different from Angels, and from all other creatures; that it must be through the second person in the Trinity; and he must take mans nature upon him, and suffer, and dye, and all the mercy we have must be through him: this is a wonderfull mystery of godliness; and should take up our serious thoughts in the consideration of it.

Now if you would know the reason of it; the first is this, That hereby God might manifest to all the children of men, what a dreadfull breach their sins had made between God and them: we cannot imagine any way how the breach between God and man could have been so clearly set out, as by this means; when we understand that such was our condition by nature, and such our apostacy from God, that there was no way of communication of any good from God to us, but by this strange and wonderfull way of a mediator between God and man: that he should obey and suffer, and dye for us, we must needs apprehend now, that certainly there was some mighty difference between God and us: and that mans estate was very low, and his condition very desperate, that must have such a remedy as this is. And this is that which God would have men to know, even what that breach is between him and their souls: and tis such a breach that few think a right of it. If I should open the law to you, with all its curses, and set the sorments of hell before you, all this could not set out the dreadfulness of the breach between God and you, so as this point doth, when I tell you that it was such as requires to strange and wonderfull a way of Gods being reconciled and pacified towards you.
Secondly, God takes this way, because he sees it the most advantageous way for the manifestation of his glory; first the glory of his mercy: there is no way that could have been devised by men or Angels to set out the glory of God's mercy in man's salvation, so as by this way: if God should have said to mankind; You poor creatures have sinned against me, but I am merciful and will pardon you; God had been glorious in this: but now there is infinitely more mercy shewed when God shall say, You miserable creatures have sinned against me; and such is your condition, that except the Son of my bosom be made a curse for you, there can be no mercy for you: well I am content that he shall not be spared; but shall be given to be a curse to prepare mercy for you; here is glory indeed. Therefore when Christ was borne, the Angels sung, glory to God in the highest, Luke 2. 14. As if they had said, this is the highest pitch of the glory of God, in providing such a way of reconciliation with the children of men; and God was set upon this work of shewing mercy to mankind, that though it cost the death of his Son, he would have it, and that shewes it to be infinite mercy and love, indeed, when it breaks through such mighty difficulties; there is the glory of his mercy.

And then secondly, there is the glory of his Justice: God sets out the glory of his Justice here, more then if all mankind had been eternally damned: God's Justice would not have been honoured so much in that as in this way of God's reconciling man unto himself; and that in these two regards: First, because in Christ God's Justice is glorified actively; whereas if all men had eternally perished, it should have been glorified but passively: and 'tis more to have it glorified actively, then passively: and as God delights more in active obedience then in passive, so he delights more in the active glory of his Justice then in the passive, (though there is a kinde of activeness in suffering, and so in Christ's suffering: therefore that distinction of active and passive is needless; for his active obedience was passive, and his passive obedience had activeness in it.)

But Secondly, God's Justice is now glorified perfectly; the debt is fully paid: whereas if all mankind had been damned, the debt should have been but a paying, and not have been paid to all eternity. As suppose a poor man oweth a thousand pounds, and he payeth two pence a week, he may be paying of it, but cannot pay it in all his life: but now if a rich man shall come, and at once lay down the money for him, the debt then is paid: and this is a great deal more then if it should have been always paying. So I say, if all mankind had been damned eternally, God should have had his debt but paying; but the debt would never have been paid: but now Christ comes and lays down the payment at once upon the borde, and asketh Justice whether it hath enough or no; so that Justice is more glorified this way.

And Thirdly, the infinite glory of his wisdome appeares in reconciling Justice and Mercy together: that God should be infinitely mercifull and just both in one thing: this is that that no Angell in Heaven could ever have imagined: suppose God should have said thus to all the Angels in Heaven, Mankind is in a lost and undone condition, yet I am willing to save him, but so as that I will have infinite mercy and Justice reconciled: if all of them should have gone and consulted together, they could not possibly have told how this should be. Now the infinite wisdome of God, and nothing but infinite wisdome could finde out such a way; as that God should be infinitely mercifull, and infinitely just too.

And Fourthly, the infinitenesse of Gods holinesse is hereby manifested: if God in a generall way should have thrown his mercy as it were up and down in the world without any more adoe, Gods holinesse, and hatred of sinne, would not have appeared as now it doth, when nothing can expiate sinne but the death of his Son; if God should carry any of you to the brinke of hell, and there let you see all the miseries of the damned, and heare all their yellings under the fruits of divine wrath, O you would say, how doth God hate sinne! but be it known to you, in the sufferings of Christ there is a greater manifestation of Gods hatred of sinne then in all the torments of hell: You that would know how infinitely hateful sinne is to God, come and behold Christ, God and man swellering under the wrath of his Father; look upon him in the garden, sweating drops of blood: come and follow him to the Cross, and heare him cry out in the bitternesse of his soule that dolefull cry, My God, my God, why haft thou forsaken me? behold Jesus Christ, God man, who was God blessed for ever, made a curse for sinne, and for thy sinne; look upon sinne in this glasse, and here see Gods hatred of sinne. There are two glasses wherein we see the evill of sinne; the bright christall glasse of the law, and the red glasse of the sufferings of Christ: and this latter doth more fully, more sensibly (I am sure) set out the nature of sinne, and Gods hatred of it: and by this you may see the meaning of 2 Cor. 3.18. where the Apostle speaking of the mystery of the Gospell sayes, But we all with open face (marke) beholding as in a glasse the glory of the Lord, &c. We behold but Gods back parts in his works: as God sayes to Moses; we behold but the footsteps of God in his works: but when we behold him in Christ, we behold him with open face. Now look what difference there is in knowing a man when we only see the print of his foot upon sand, and when we look him in the face, so much difference there is between the knowing of God and his glory as it shines in the workes of creation, and as it shines in the face of Christ; that God therefore might manifest his glory, he would not pardon sinne so freely as to say, you have sinned, but yet I will pity you, and pardon you, and there is an end; no, though he would pardon sinne, yet he would doe it this way.

A Third reason why God would bring things about this way, is this: because God saw there could be no such way to draw poor sinners to himself as this. When God shall reveal to a sinner that he is not only a mercifull God, but that he hath provided such a strange way to convey his mercy: this hath a mighty efficacy to draw the soul to God: for the poor soule apprehending its own guiltinelle, and Gods hatred of sin; and understanding withall, that the heart of God is set upon such a way of mercy; is by this as by a mighty argument prevailed with to draw neer to God in a way of dependance upon him: for thus will the soul argue: Well, I heare that God, to the end he might let out mercy to poor sinners, hath of his own infinite wisdome provided such a strange way of convey-conveyance as this is; and when God hath made it appeare by revealing to me the mystery of the Gospell how his heart is set upon this way of shewing mercy to sinners, I conclude now, that the Lord is willing to be reconciled to me, and why then should I be unbelieving any more? why should I have hard thoughts of God any more? why should I remaine in my doubting condition any longer? thou canst not be more desirous of the salvation of thy soul, then God is of magnifying his grace and mercy: and God hath done more for thee then thou canst possibly do for the salvation of thy soul. Besides, tis a mighty drawing argument; for by this means the infinite distance that conscience apprehended to be between God and the soul, is taken away: for when the soul sees it hath to deal with an infinite deity, that is so farre above it, it stands shaking and trembling, and dares not draw nigh to God. What have I to doe, faith the soul, with such a God as this is, who is so infinitely above me? but now when thou knowest that Christ is between God and thee, then this distance needs not scare thee; yea now all thy guiltinesse and all the filthinesse and pollution of thy soul, and all that the law hath to say against thee, need be no discouragement to thee, when thou seest thou hast to deal with God through Jesus Christ. Therefore no soul can stand off and say, how doe I know it belongs to me? doe but take this one rule, for that there is nothing can interest the soul in Christ but Christ himself: there is no preparation to Christ, but Christ must be all in all in it: therefore stand not off, and say, how shall my heart be wrought to these and these preparations, and work thus and thus, before I have part in Christ? no; puzzle not thy self about thy preparations, but set before thy soul the mystery of the Gospell in this glorious way of Gods communication of himself to thee, and of reconciling man unto himself; and the very efficacy of these truths will have a power upon thy heart to draw thee unto God in this way of reconciliation; and that is the way of true comfort.

The Gospell it self, though there be no preparation before, yet hath an efficacy to draw the heart to Christ; for Christ is all in all in that. And doe not say, I am a poor mean creature.
true, I can doe nothing, I cannot remember a Sermon, I cannot pray, or performe any good duty as I ought: why, remember soul, Christ is all in all: true, if any thing were required of thee in the business of salvation, it were somewhat; but know that God hath laid help upon one who is mighty; therefore tis not thy weakness, nor the distance between God and thee, that can hinder, if thou rightly apprehendest God in Christ reconciling the world unto himself.

Another reason might have been this: God doth it to in­deare his mercy to his Saints for ever; for indeed nothing in­deares Gods mercy to them so much as this, that they see it come to them in such a way of conveyance; and that which will in­dear mercy to the Saints in heaven to all eternity, and for which they shall be full of the praises of God, shall not be so much for the good things they enjoy, as for that strange and wonderful way by which they come to enjoy them. This I say is that which shall take up the hearts, and be a great part of the work of the glorified Saints in Heaven to all eternity, even their admiring, adoring, and praising God in Jesus Christ.

And then God delights to honour his Son, and that he might set him up, he makes him to be the means of convey­ance of all good to those he intends it to; as if a King were to honour his Son, what way can he take to doe it more effectu­ally then this, that all the favour he means to shew to any shall be only through his Son? so when God the Father would honour his Son, he appoints from all eternity, that all the grace and mercy that any shall have from him shall be only through his Son. Therefore as Christ saith, All judgement is committed to the Son, that all men might honour the Son, as they ho­nour the Father: So I may say of the work and dispensation of Gods grace, that all is conveyed to Christ, and by him communicated to those that have interest in him, that the Son might be honoured to all eternity.

I shall conclude in a few words of application, to work upon you this that hath been said.

First, if it be thus, let us stand a while and admire at the depth­of the counsell of God, and the infinite glory of the riches of his grace.
grace to mankinde; that God should ever have such thoughts towards such poor wormes as we are, that he should not rather have let such despicable creatures eternally perish, then goe in such a strange way to shew mercy to them: Truly brethren, God hath done more in bringing a poor soul to himsel then in creating Heaven and Earth: the work of creating Heaven and Earth is but a low piece of work in comparison of this wonderfull way of Gods conveying his grace and mercy to the children of men through his Son: this is the masterpiece of the workes of God, which he hath already done, or will ever doe to all eternity: and God therefore is to be admired and adored in this. We are to glorifie God in every creature, but how is God to be glorified then in his Son, wherein so much of his glory doth appeare? If it be a sinne for us not to sanctifie the name of God when we behold his glory in his meanest workes, O what a sinne is it not to sanctifie the name of God in beholding the mystery of the Gospell and his glory shining in the face of Jesus Christ! God, expects(brethren) that those who live under the Gospell, should spend their dayes and thoughts, and talk, about that glory which he hath maniifested in his Son. O you that have such chaffy droisy spirits, that can spend your precious thoughts upon such poor things as you doe, know that here is an object to take up your thoughts; and your sinne is abundantly the greater in this, that you spend your thoughts about such vanities, when God sets before you so glorious an object to raise up your hearts unto himself; and you that spend a great deal of your lives in vanity, know, that this day you have heard of a truth that above all things in the world should take up your time and thoughts in the contemplation of it.

And you that have more time and greater estate then others, and are not put upon it to get your bread as others are, and so have greater opportunities for the worship and service of God, and for searching into his truth, yet how doe you spend your time in vanity and light things, as if there were no greater matters to take up your hearts! It is a signe of a vaine and frothy spirit, that when God propounds such glorious things to you, that yet it should be the content of your souls to baffle out
out your time in vanity; and things that will not profit. Well, if you would have an evidence to your souls, that Christ is all in all to you, and shall be to all eternity, take it in this: if ever God hath opened thine eyes to see his glory in the mystery of the Gospel; and that thy heart is taken with it, and overcome by it, it is an argument that thou art indeed the soul which God hath received to mercy in his Christ; but saithes the Apostle, 2 Cor. 4:3. If our Gospel be hid, it is hid to them that are lost. There are a great many to whom the Gospel is preached, and yet is hidden to them; and it is hidden to you if you speak of Christ only in a formal way, and think it enough to say, I hope to be saved by God in Jesus Christ; but dost thou see that in the Gospel which raises thy heart with admiration, and that darkens all the glory of the world? dost thou see more of the glory of God shining in that one sentence, God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him, should not perish, but have everlasting life? then thou seest in the whole frame of the creation of Heaven and Earth? thou hopest thou layest to get to Heaven; but what wouldst thou do there? the work of Saints and Angels in Heaven joyed together, is to magnifie God for this great work of his: doest thou then begin this work here, and give God his glory, for the great things he hath done for the children of men.

The Second use should have been this: If Christ be thus all in all, then let us bless God that ever we knew Christ; and that the mystery of the Gospel hath been revealed to us: for otherwise we had been without God in the world; and what would have become of us had not this grace of God in the Gospel been revealed to us? could you ever have thought of it your selves? could it ever have entered into your hearts? certainly no; nor into the heart of any creature in Heaven or Earth: therefore blessed are your ears, that heare the things which you heare: and blessed are your eyes, that see the things which you see: and know, that when you come to live under the Ministry of the Gospel, you enjoy the greatest mercy that ever you enjoyed since you were borne: the coming under a powerful Ministry, that reveals Christ and brings the day of salvation to the soul, it is no other than the fruit of the prayer of Jesus Christ for that soul: compare Isaiah 49. 8. with 2 Cor. 6.1.2. and you shall see this. Isaiah 49.8: Thus saith the Lord, in an acceptable time have I heard thee, and in a day of salvation have I helped thee, &c. Now it is apparent by the context, that this is to be understood of Christ: that God the Father speaks there to his Son: well, what is this acceptable time and day of salvation in which Christ is heard? look 2 Cor. 6.1.2. in the chapter before he had told them, That they were ambassadors for Christ. We then as workers together with God, beseech you also that ye receive not the grace of God in vain: Now what is this grace of God? tis the Ministry of the Gospel. For be said I have heard thee in an acceptable: and mark how he applies it, Behold now is the accepted time: be bold now is the day of salvation. As if he should say; the acceptable time and day of salvation in which God the Father hath heard Christ, is now: now that we the ambassadors of Christ come and open the mystery of the Gospel to you; now is the time wherein God the Father hears the Son for you: what a mercy is this? and what an engagement upon you, that when you hear any thing of the mystery of the Gospel opened to you, you are to look upon it as the fruit of the prayer of Jesus Christ; and so when God sends a faithful Minister to any congregation, tis the fruit of the prayer of Christ. Christ prays, O Father, that there might be an acceptable time for such a people, for such a man and woman; it may be they have gone on a long time in ignorance and prophaness; I but Christ hath been praying to the Father for them, and when this acceptable time comes, then God disposes of them, that this man shall go out of such a wicked family, and shall live in a godly family, or shall come to such a Sermon, and there shall hear the wonderful things of the Gospel opened to him, and shall come to understand this great mystery of God's letting himself out through Christ unto his people: and there the Lord will renew him by a work of grace, and bring his heart over unto himself, this is the acceptable time when God reveals the mystery of the Gospel to any soul: therefore bless God for this.

Thirdly, this shews how dear Jesus Christ should be unto us. O how should we delight and take contentment in him that brings the Treasuries of grace from the bosom of the Father, and opens them unto us: and not only opens the minde of God the Father to us, but comes and lets out the treasure of God's goodness to us. It was flipt before, but Christ he opened as it were the flood gates, and lets the current of grace and mercy in upon us. O how dear therefore should Christ be unto us? It was the speech of that Martyr, Master Lambert, none but Christ, none but Christ. Yea when he suffered Martyrdom for Christ, then none but Christ was dear to him; because he saw that Christ was the way of conveyance of all good unto him: as if God now make a man a means of conveyance of a great deal of good to a nation, every man will be ready to have his eye upon that man: I, but there was never such a way of conveyance of good to us as Christ is: therefore how should our hearts love him, and prize him, and rejoice at the very thoughts of him? If you have a friend, and God makes that friend an instrument of mercy to you, O how doth it indeare you to that friend: if the husband be an instrument of good to the wife, or the wife to the husband; if a Minister to his people, or people to their Minister, and so in all relations: when we can look upon others as a means of conveyance of God's mercy to us, it is a mighty argument to knit our hearts unto them, and indeed this is the way to obtain love. It may be the wife complains, the hath not love from her husband; or the husband complains: he hath not love from his wife: Why now, be as instrumental as you can to convey the goodness of God to them, and this will mightily indeare and knit them to you; and if it doth so between man and man: how should it doe so much more between us and Christ, who is indeed the husband of his Church, and through whom the fulness of God is let out unto his people? O how dear and precious therefore ought he to be unto us!

Fourthly,
Fourthly, is Christ all in all? then if we have an interest in him, it should satisfy and content us, though we have nothing, or be nothing in our selves: Why, because if we have Christ, we have all; though thou wantest parts, friends, estate, outward comforts; yet know Christ is to be thy all, and is not he enough? as he said, am not I better to thee then ten sons? so sayes Christ to the soul, what dost thou want? thou wantest this comfort, and the other comfort, but am not I all in all to thee, and better then all? yea, be willing to be made nothing, for all is made up in Christ.

Again, it should have put us upon this, to be willing to give up all we have to Christ; alas, our all is but a poor all: yet give it to Christ; our parts, estates, interest, names; let Christ have all because he is our all.

And let him be the rule of our prizing all things: so farre as we see any thing of Christ, prize it suitably: as tis reported of Mafter Bucar, if he could see any thing of Christ in any man or woman, though they were never so poor and meane, his heart would close with them. And tis said of Austin, that before his conversion, he took great delight in reading of Cicero's workes; but afterward, sayes he, I finde not the name Christ in all Cicero; and that took off his heart from him: so in all thou dost enjoy, look how much thou feest of Christ in it, so farre let thy delight and esteem be carried out towards it, and no farther.

Again, with what mighty intention of spirit should the heart be put forth toward Jesus Christ above all things! what though God give thee an estate and honour in the world: if thou hast not Christ thou hast nothing, thou hast not that that makes way for thee to eternity. Therefore be not satisfied with any thing without Christ. As Abrahams sayes, What wilt thou give me Lord, seeing I goe childless? So say thou, Lord, thou hast given me a portion in the world, thou hast given me credit and repute amongst men; but Lord, what is all this to me, if I goe Childless, and have not him that is the conveyance of grace unto my soul, that is all in all? O Lord, thou hast this day taught.
taught me, that such is the distance and breach betwixt thee and me, that unless it be made up through a mediator, I must eternally perish: therefore give me Christ, whatever thou denyest me. O satisfy not your selves with any thing, without Christ. Many hypocrites they satisfy themselves with gifts: if they have gifts, then they are contented. Consider that parable in the Gospel, Matth. 13:45, 46. The merchant-man sought after goodly pearles, but when he had found the pearle of price, then he went and sold all that he had, and bought it. Now gifts and parts, and other achievements are these goodly pearles: I but Christ he is the pearle of price: therefore whatever thou hast, be willing to part with it for him: if God have discovered to thee the pearle of price, let no goodly pearles satisfy thee. Many souls perish eternally because they are satisfied with goodly pearles, and doe not endeavour to obtain this pearle of price.

Againe, the application should further have been, to have endeavoured to work this upon you, that in your seeking after God, you would be sure to take Christ along with you.

I will give you onely this note, if it were your last time to pray to God, and your everlasting estate did depend upon God's mercy, should you now seek God never so earnestly, yet if it were onely in a natural way, as your creator, your condition would be very dreadful, and you would perish eternally. If God should lay any of you upon your sick beds, or death beds, and you should cry to God, mercy, mercy Lord, be sure you take Christ along with you, and look upon God through Christ, or else all your cries will be to no purpose. It is a speech of Luther, that God lookt upon out of Christ, is most dreadful and terrible; and it argues a great deal of ignorance in us, when we think we can goe to God, and shall finde mercy with him, without considering him as a God that will be reconciled to us only through his Son. To conclude all, as Christ saies, If I be lifted up, I will draw all men unto... unto me: so this is the work of our Ministry, we have spent time amongst you that we might labour to lift up Christ to you: and O that God would be pleased to draw all your souls to him.

Hebr.
HEB. ii. vi.

Now Faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen.

In the latter end of the former chapter the Apostle exhorts to perseverance, and shewes the great evil and danger of drawing back. Now, to the end this evil might be prevented, he shewes what it is that will deliver us from it. Whatever others doe, or whatever temptations or afflictions we meet withall to draw us back, yet still the just shall live by faith: Now faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen.

In this Chapter (therefore) he falls upon this argument, to wit, the opening of the doctrine and practice of faith. And the words read are an excellent description of faith (not an exact definition of it) It is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen. The substance; the word in the original is very full, the essence, it hath many significations: the fundamentall, the foundation of things hoped for; the subsistence, the substantiality of things hoped for: those things that in themselves have no reall present subsistence to us, but are things to come, and hoped for; yet faith gives them a present reall substantial being to us. The substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen. The word translated evidence, is a Logicaall terme, and signifieth such a kinde of conviction as is by way of dispute and cleare demonstration, so as it must needs compell one to yeild unto it; that is the propriety of the word, that although the objects of faith are things not seen, either by the eye of sense, or by the eye of reason, yet faith brings such a light with it, and makes them so demonstratively clere, that it even forceth the soul to a belief of them: so that it hath the fullest conviction of them that possibly can be.

Two things then (you finde) are here said of faith: First, that it gives a substantiall reall present being to things hoped for.

And secondly, that it is the evidence of things not seen. In the first of these, we have these two things: First, that there are many glorious things which the Saints hope for, that yet they have not: they are men of hopes. Secondly, that their faith doth give a reall and substantiall being to those things which they hope for.

In the second of these we have likewise two things: First, that the things of God are things not seen. And Secondly that faith is the evidence of those things that are not seen.

For the first, but briefly, There are great things that the Saints hope for, that yet they have not; they are men of hopes. They hope that they shall ere long be delivered from all sinne and sorrows: that they shall never sinne more, never be tempted more, never suffer more, never feare more; they hope that the time is coming when it shall be said of all their sinnes, as Moses said of the Egyptians, These your enemies that now ye see, you shall never see them more. They hope that these vile bodies of theirs, these bodies of clay, bodies of vilenesse, bodies of sinne, shall ere long be made glorious bodies; that these pieces of dirt shall (within a while) shine more gloriously then the Sun in the firmament. They hope that the Image of God shall ere long be perfected in them, so as they shall be fully united to God, and be made one with the Father, as the Father and the Son are one. They hope that they shall meet with their blessed Saviour in the aire; and with these their eyes behold him coming in his glory: They hope that they shall be possessed of those glorious mansions which he is gone before to prepare for them. They hope that their eyes shall be blessed with the glorious vision of a deity that they shall see God, and so see him, as to be like unto him. They hope that they shall enjoy full communion with the Lord; that they shall have the immediate and full lettings out of a deity into their souls and bodies, without any intermisstion. They hope that they shall joyne with the blessed Angels and Saints in eternall Hallelujahs, and shall be everlasting admirers and adorers the name of the great God, for those glorious mysteries of redemption by Christ. They hope that they shall keep a perpetuall and eternall Sabbath, and shall no more be combled with naturall things, with the things of the earth, but shall have perfect and everlasting rest in Christ, and shall live in God as in an infinite ocean of all excellency; these things they hope for. I but are not these conceits? are they not notions, pretty fine fancies, with which they please themselves? is there any reality in these things: indeed if these things were real and substantiall, if there were as great a reality and as much substance in the things they hope for, as there is in the things they enjoy in the world for the present, and that they could see them as certainly as they see the things that are before their eyes, it were somewhat like. Well, says the Apostle, there is a principle to make all these things substantiall to you; and faith is the substance of things hoped for. These hopes are not con-ceits and notions, but they are raised up in their hearts by the mighty power of the holy Ghost. Rom. 15.13. Now the God of hope fill you with all joy and peace in believing, that you may abound in hope through the power of the holy Ghost. There needs not the power of the holy Ghost to raise fancies and conceits in mens hearts; but the hopes of the Saints are such as are raised in them by the power of the holy Ghost: And God himself is shiled by their hopes: Now the God of hope, &c. Now God is not the God of fancies and conceits, but he is the God of the hopes of his Saints? And these hopes are given to them, to the end they might be kept from drawing back, and might be upheld for the present in whatever they suffer. Therefore the Scripture compares our hope to an Anchor, and to an Helmet:
you know that of all dangers, those are the greatest, of shipwrack by Sea, and of enemies by Land: now our Hope is to helpe against both: against our dangers by Sea, of shipwrack, our hope is an Anchor: against our dangers by Land, of enemies, our hope is a helmet.

The hope of the Saints for the present is as the corke to the net that keeps it from sinking to the bottom; though they may be in the water, and the lead of troubles and afflictions may weigh them down, yet their hope keeps them above water; they have great hopes, and they have that which makes their hopes substantial; for their faith is the substance of things hoped for. And that is the second thing I now come to: Carnall hearts think there is no substantiall real excellency in any thing, but in the outward excellencies of the world; they think that money, Lands, honours, the pleasures and delights of the flesh, have substance in them; and that there is something of reality in these: Now I beseech you, observe the difference between the judgement of the holy Ghost, and the judgement of a carnall heart: whereas a carnall heart looks upon outward things as the onely substantiall things, (therefore you call your rich men substantiall men: and so the Scripture speaking in the language of men, calls a man his substance, because men count their estate here their substance,) now the holy Ghost accounts all those things that the world lookes upon as substances, to be but meer conceits: and those things that the world accounts conceits, to be substances: (and those that judge according to the judgement of the holy Ghost, doe the like.) For the first, you know St. John reckons all things in the world in three ranks; either such as are profits, pleasures, or honours: the lusts of the flesh, and the pride of life, and the delights of the eye: now for those things that the world counts their greatest substance, their estates, and riches, marke how the holy Ghost thinks of them, Prov. 23.4,5. Labour not to be rich, cease from thine own wisdom: wilt thou set thine eyes upon that which is not? That which you call your substance, the holy Ghost saith, it is not, it hath no being at all. Well, but honours and preferments have somewhat in them. Nay, they have nothing in them neither. Acts 25.23. tis said, Agrippa and Bernice came in great pomp to the judgement seat, glittering in their brave apparell; but the word translated great pomp, is, they came with much fancy: what greater honour is there then for Princes to come in their robes upon the judgement-seat, glittering before the eyes of their subjects? thus did they: and yet their great great glory in the judgement of the holy Ghost, was all but a great fancy: And for the lusts of the flesh, Amos 6. in verse 5,6. you have the sensuality of the people set out very fully, They lie upon beds of Ivory, and stretch themselves upon their couches, and eat the Lambs out of the flock, and the Calves out of the midst of the stall; they chant to the sound of the violl, and invent to themselves instruments of musick; they drink wine in bowles, &c. and in verse 13. it comes all to this, Ye rejoice in a thing of naught, in that which hath nothing in it; there is no reality, no substantial excellency in all these things; neither in riches, honours, or pleasures; but mark how the holy Ghost judges of spiritual things: what substance there is in them, which are only conceits to carnall hearts, Prov. 8. 20, 21. (say es wisdome there) I lead in the way of righteousness &c. that I may cause those that love me to inherit substance; to inherit that which is; so Tremelius, as if nothing had a being but that which wisdome causeth to inherit. And Hebr. 3. 33,34. You were made a gazing stock both by reproaches and afflictions, and took joyfully the spoiling of your goods, &c. (but how came this to passe? marke,) knowing in your selves that ye have in heaven a better, and an enduring substance. So that that which was but a conceit and notion to the world, by their faith they saw it to be substantiall unto them: and Hebrewes 11. 10. It is said of Abraham, that he looked for a City with foundations: there was no City in the world that had foundations in Abrahams eye, but only the City that he looked for; and it was his faith that gave that City foundations. Thus we see the different judgement of the holy Ghost and the world. As now while we live upon the earth, we think the earth to be very great, and the Sun and Moon and Stars to be but little things, and they seem so to us: but were we in heaven, we should then see the Sun and Moon and Stars to be great and vast bodies, and the earth to be but a point in comparison of them: so while men have earthly hearts, they look upon the things of heaven as conceits, and poore small inconsiderable things, not worth looking after: but if by divine principles they were once lifted up to heaven and could converse there, then they would see the things of heaven to be great matters; and the things here below to be but a point, to be but poor low inferiour things, not worth minding or affecting. Those things that are the objects of faith are substantiall things, and faith gives them that substance.

And they are substantiall things, First, because they have in them more then appeares to be in them: we count that substantiall which hath in it more then it appeares for: those things that make a great shew, and have not that in them which they make shew of, we count them vain, and without substance, as a piece of cloth that hath not that in it which it shewes for, we say it hath no substance in it.

Now the things of God have more in them abundantly then they shew for, and therefore they are substantiall: hence it is that when Christ shall come in glory, the Text sayes, He shall be admired in all them that believe, 2. Thes. 1.10. They see for the present a great deal of excellency in Christ, and they love him, and their hearts are towards him for that they see in him now; but hereafter he shall appeare abundantly more glorious then they thought for: then they shall say, indeed we did see much in Christ, but we see now infinitely more glory and excellency then ever we imagined.

Secondly, the things of heaven that are the objects of faith are substantiall, because there is most of God in them. Now God is the infinite first being of all, and gives being to all: that therefore which hath most of the first being in it, must needs be the most substantiall and reall good: Now though it be true that all creatures are filled with Gods excellencies, yet spirituall and heavenly things are above all other most filled with God: the very divine nature of God is in them, and there is the very life of God, and the Image and glory of God, and there God doth especially communicate himself. God hath two wayes of his communication: the one is to his Son, and that is in an infinite way that we understand not: and the other is to his creatures: and his speciall communication of himself to his creatures is in spirituall and heavenly things:
therefore they must needs be the most substantiall and reall things to the soul.

And then Thirdly, they are substantiall things and not notions
tions and conceits, because they are the very center of the thoughts and intentions of God himself, and that which he aimes at in all his workes towards his creatures, and the very center of the happinesse of the most excellent creatures that ever God made. Now that which is the very issue of the great designe of God in making the world, and of all the workes he doth in the world, and the highest good any creature is capable of, certainly it is no conceit, but hath a great deal of substantiall being in it: but the good we have in spirituall and heavenly things, is the very issue of Gods designe from all eternity, in his full communication of himselfe unto his creature; and it is the highest good any creature is capable of: therefore spirituall things are reall and substantiall.

Againe, reall and substantiall things they are, because we finde they have a reall and substantiall operation upon the soles of those that are acquainted with them. O the mighty work that appeares upon the hearts of the godly from the apprehension of spirituall things, that are the objects of faith! how doe spirituall things tune and raise the hearts of men that were low, and base, and drossy, and vile before, to converse with God in the highest way and kinde that it is possible for a creature to converse with God in; and what great things doe they enable the soul to doe! those things that have such a substantiall operation, must needs be reall and substantiall.

Lastly, they have an eternall subsistency, that shall never vanish or fade away, that when all other things shall wither as the grasse, spirituall and heavenly things shall abide forever: therefore they are the only substantiall things.

But then, as they are thus in themselves, so how come they to be thus to the soul? why it is by faith; faith gives them the bottome, the foundation, the substantiallity of their being. And I note this the rather, because the great reason why our hearts are not taken with spirituall things, is, because we doe not see into the reallity and substantiallity that is in them, and into the presentnesse of the good they have.

Now faith gives them this their substantiall being:

First, because it is faith that carries the soul to contemplate upon upon God himselfe, and enables the soul to discern the excellency and glory that there is in God, to know much of God in his own essence and being; and elevates the soul to converse with God in a higher way abundantly then reason can doe (though it is true, a great deal of God is understood by reason.) And then by faith the soul comes to know what riches there are in these excellent and glorious things of God. It first sees them in God, and then after that it sees this God to be infinitely willing to communicate and let out himself to his creature; And then by faith the soul converseth with the deep and glorious councils of God, between himself and his Son: It sees into the great designe God had in sending his Son into the world for the working and bringing to passe those high and glorious intentions he had in communicating himself to the children of men through a mediator. Again, faith converseth with the great things of the covenant of grace, and there sees into those unsearchable riches (as the Apostle speaks) that have no footsteps in the creature; so the word signifies; we cannot see them by reason, or the creature. A special object faith works upon, is the covenant of grace in the Gospel, and it sees the riches that are revealed there: And faith receives the testimony of the holy Ghost; the holy Ghost is appointed by the Father and the Son to witness these great things, to manifest to the soul the deep things of God; those things that are but mere notions otherwise to the heart of a man, the spirit of God discovers these to the soul; and so faith working upon these objects, and closing with them as the proper sphere for it to move in, it makes all those glorious things that are revealed concerning the happiness of those that God intends eternally good unto, substantiall and reall to the soul; such things as the soul can build upon, and dare venture its self, and its eternall estate upon; and we had need have a good foundation in those things we are content to venture our eternall estate upon: and because it must be the work of faith (when God intends to save the soul) to have such apprehensions of the Gospel as to be willing to venture its eternall condition upon it, therefore it had need have a sure foundation: and hence faith is the substance of things hoped hoped for, and gives a real being unto these things.

And as it makes them real and substantial, so there is another thing included in this word; it makes them present; though they are but things hoped for, yet by faith they have a present subsistence to the soul; they are looked upon by faith as now subsisting, though in themselves they do not: faith partakes much of the nature of God, it hath a kind of omnipotent power in it, out of nothing to create something: there are many excellent works of faith, and amongst the rest this is a special one, to give a being to that which in itself hath none, to make it for the present a substantial real being to the soul: the work of faith in this kind is very observable: for evil things that are very nigh, faith can make them at a mighty distance; and for good things that are never so far off, faith can make them to be as present to it. Observe what the Scripture speaks of it this way: first for evils that are very nigh, and encompass us round about, when we are in the midst of them, faith can put the evil at a distance, as Psalm 91:7. A thousand shall fall at thy side, and ten thousand at thy right hand, but it shall not come nigh thee; not come nigh thee: If he had said, it shall not be upon thee, it had been somewhat; but to say, it shall not come nigh thee, this is a strange kind of expression; how could it be said not to come nigh him, when thousands fell on both hands, and he was in the midst of it? it was by faith: faith put that at a distance which was just upon him. The strength of reason will help one, when the plague is a great way off, then a man thinks, I am safe enough, because far enough from it: but suppose the plague come into thy house, into thy chamber; now to believe a promise, it shall not come nigh thee, here is a mighty work of faith; faith puts evils present at a far distance. And then on the other side, for good things that are absent, & a great way off, faith can make them as if they were really subsisting: therefore (Heb. 11:13.) It is said of the Fathers, that they law the promises afar off, and embraced them: the word in the original is saluted the promises; now friends when they salute, must be nigh one another; their faith made the promises which were a great way off to be with them as if present: therefore it is said of Abraham, that he saw Christ's day, and rejoiced; and the Scripture speaks of taking hold of eternall life, and that we doe by faith; and of being in heaven, receiving the end of your faith: This you shall receive, but now you are receiving.
Psal. 108, 7, 8. God hath spoken in his holiness, I will rejoice, I will divide Sechem &c. Gilead is mine, Manasseth is mine: marke, is mine: he presently concludes, as if the thing were already done, for it was so by faith: faith gives a present subsistence to things. Reason it self hath a great deale of power to make things that are future, to be as present, both in evil things and in good. In evil things, a man that is a contemplative man, and hath a wicked heart, he will fetch the sweetness of his lust and sinne which is a great way off, and make it as present by meditation, and rolling it up and down in his thoughts in a way of discourse; and so acts his sinne contemplatively, though he may be in hell before he act it really.
Now as reason and discourse can fetch in a luft, and make it as if it were present: so reason can goe a great way in making a future good thing as if it were present. And this is the difference between a rationally creature, and a sensual: a sensual creature is only for the things that are before it; but now reason can fetch things that are absent, and make them as present: and in regard of this, God hath a mighty advantage of mankinde, either for the bringing of his wrath upon them, or for bestowing happiness upon them: as you can fetch in your lusts that are absent, and make them as present to you in your thoughts, by the work and discourse of reason: so by the worke of this faculty, God can make ends and plagues though future, yet to be as present with you. And in this respect the woeful evil of those that perish eternally may be set out dreadfully: namely thus, they being reasonable creatures; by the work of their reason they may fetch in all the misery that they shall endure to eternity, to fill up every moments misery, that all the misery they shall endure to eternity, they shall possesse it presently and together: and therefore the torment of a brute creature is infinitely short of a reasonable; suppose a brute beast were in hell, yet its misery would come infinitely short of a mans, because a brute creature apprehends no more misery.
misery, then that instant: but now, if a reasonable creature be in torment, and knowes it shall be in it eternally, by thought and discourse it can fetch into that very instant, all the paine that it must endure for ever. And so for happinesse, those that are sav'd, shall be infinitely happy every moment, because they shall fetch in all the happinesse they shall have to eternity to make them every moment happy: this is the work of reason. Now if reason can make future things to be as present, how much more can faith, that is not only reason elevated, but is a principle higher then reason? as it is in dispaire, a man that dispaire brings hell to himself before he is in hell; and makes hell that is absent, as if it were present. Hence some in their dispaire have cryed out, they were in hell: as Francis Spira, he said he was in hell, and hell fire was upon him, because by dispaire that which is future hath a reall kinde of subsistence in the heart of a man, as if it were now present. Now as dispaire brings in the reallity of Gods wrath that is future, and makes it as present, so faith brings in the reallity of Gods love and mercy, that is to come, and makes it as present: and it is as genuine a work of faith, to make future things present, as any work of faith. Now I should have shewn you in what respects faith makes things present, that are to come, and what is the work of faith in them. But briefly, it makes all things present that are to come:

First, because it sees all things as certain as if they were already; if a man have a bond of one for a hundred pounds, that he is sure off, he saies here is a hundred pounds, because of the certainty of it.

Secondly, because faith lookes upon the possession of things, that not only they shall be, but that now there is a possession of them, and that two ways; First, Christ our head is gone before, to prepare mansions for us, and in our name to take possession of heaven, therefore we have taken possession in our head; and then Secondly, we have the first fruits of the spirit, the first fruits of the glorious things of heaven; and in that regard, we our selves have taken possession, and therefore they are as present to faith. Thirdly, there is such an infinitenesse in eternity, that the time that is to be before we have full possession.
is not considerable: therefore faith lookes upon them as present.

And then Fourthly, faith eyes the things of heaven continually, and they are therefore present, because they are always in the eye of faith.

And Fifthly, the presentnesse of them is seen in this, because the Saints enjoy all in God: for this is the happinesse of heaven, to see all glory and blessednesse in God: Now faith doth something of this here; faith enables us to see great things in God. Now the enjoying communion with God for the present, and beholding of heaven in God, and seeing all things in him, this must needs make a present real substance of them to the soul. Thus I have spoken briefly of faiths, being the substance of things hoped for.

For the use: If faith be the substance of things hoped for, and gives being to things so high and glorious as the things of God are: First, then certainly faith itself must needs be a very substantial thing; faith is not a conceit and notion, for it gives reality and substantial being to those things the world counts conceits. Faith is the most substantial and glorious thing in the world: It is that, in the working of which, the power of God appears more then in any thing in the world: therefore in Ephes. 1.19,20. there are some fix or seven gradations of the wonderfull power of God that appears in the working of faith: Now that must needs be an exceeding substantial thing, that hath such a mighty power of God in working of it: God doth not use to put forth extraordinary power for the doing of ordinary things. Now when he speaks of faith, he sets out his power in a glorious manner, and in an extraordinary way; and thereby tells us, that faith hath some great matter in it. And indeed faith hath much in it; though it be a grace that empties us of our selves; yet it is that whereby the believer is enabled to doe one of the most glorious workes that ever creature was enabled to doe: as now for a poor soul to see its self in its own filth, under sinne and guilt, and to see the wrath of an infinite deity incensed against it; to see the infinite justice of God requiring satisfaction, and the infinite holinesse of God hating of sinne; to have the accu-lations of conscience, of Satan, of the world, and being sensible of all this, yet to lay hold upon a mediator between God and man, and to trust in a righteousness beyond itself, and to tender it up to God the Father for a full atonement and satisfaction, and to venture itself and eternall estate upon it; and being unholy and filthy in itself, yet to unite it self to God in as near a union (for the kinde of it) as possibly a creature can have with the Creator, next the hypothesis of the humane nature of Christ with the divine: I say, for faith to be able to doe this, it is a high and most glorious work, and there is an abundance of the power of God appears in it.

By this how may we discover the vanity of the faith of the greatest number of people in the world, who have nothing but mere emptiness in them, their very faith is only a notion, and no marvell then if all things they believe but notions, they can doe nothing with their faith. You say you hope and believe and trust in Gods mercy, but what can you doe with your faith? what real substantial work of faith is upon your hearts? when faith comes, there comes the mighty power of God and his wonderful glory into the soul, that creates (as it were) and gives substantial being to the most high and glorious objects in the world: therefore know, that faith is not a dead still empty thing in the soul, but it hath a mighty operation upon the hearts of men and women: and certainly that faith that must save a soul must have high and glorious operations in the soul.

Again faith gives a substantial being to things hoped for; if we must learn to strengthen and exercise our faith in the things we hope for: which of us do not hope for great and glorious things (as I gave you a hint of them?) Now let faith be exercised and strengthened in these things; if all those blessed things we spake of were present to the soul, O how would our hearts be above the creature, how should we look upon all things here below as dung, filth, drosse, how would our thoughts be raised in the admiration of spiritual and heavenly things, how would our spirits be taken up in wondering at the glory of God that appears in these things, how would would our hearts be enflamed with love to God! how would our conversations be in heaven for the present! what heavenly thoughts and heavenly affections would be in us in all our ways! and how would we venture to go through fire and water for God! to doe any thing, suffer any thing, be any thing for God. And did our faith make such glorious things as these real and substantial to us? how substantial would our duties and services be. Why is it then that our duties have so much vanity in them, are so empty, having nothing but circumstance in them; certainly (brethren) if our faith gives a subsistence to such blessed & glorious things of eternal life, it will likewise give a subsistence to all our duties and services, that we shall not tender to God empty and dead services. Consider, this you, who though you dare not omit duties, yet what empty duties doe you tender to God; your works should be the works of faith, and faith should give them a subsistence, as well as it gives your hopes; therefore satisfy not your selves with that faith that will not give a subsistence to your duties; and doe not think it will give a subsistence to such glorious things we speak of. Thus much of the first particular, Faith is the substance of things hoped for. I would faine speak a little of the second, It is the evidence of things not seen.

There are two things here.

First, that the things of grace, spiritual and heavenly things, are things not seen.

And secondly, that faith gives an evidence to those things.

First, that grace, spiritual and heavenly things, are things not seen.

The Apostle says Gal. 5:19.22. the works of the flesh are manifest; but when he comes to the works of the spirit, he says the works of the spirit are these: he doth not say, they are manifest; for indeed they are things that are not seen; though tis true, the operations of them appear, yet there is no external work of grace, but an hypocrite may doe it: therefore the works of the spirit cannot be said to be seen either by the eye, offence or reason. And then for the things of heaven, says the Apostle, 2 Cor. 2:18. While we look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen, for the things which are seen are temporal, but the things which are not seen are eternal. I might here discover to you how it comes to passe, that spirituall and heavenly things are not seen unto sense and reason. Many arguments I thought to have given to discover this: I must but call out two or three particulars. The riches of a Christian in spirituall and heavenly things are like the riches of the Sea; it may be outwardly you see nothing but hideous waves, and a great deal of filth, but the riches are at the bottom, and the riches of the earth are within, and hidden, they do not appear: so the riches and treasures of a Christian are things not seen, they are things that are in the very bosome of God, in the very heart of God. Now as no man knowes the things of a man, but the spirit of man; so no man knowes the things of God, but the spirit of God, and him to whom God doth reveal them.

And then they are things that are beyond the principles of reason, they are too high, and so too glorious for such a faculty as reason is; if an object be too glorious for sense, it destroys the sense: so these objects are too high for reason, and and therefore cannot be seen by reason.

And the blindness of man naturally is such that he cannot see these things. And chiefly God so orders things in his providence, that he goeth a quite contrary way (as to sense and reason) to that which he hath promised. I say it is the way of God to hide his glorious excellencies by seeming to goe in the ways of his providence directly opposite to what he hath promised; we might shew how God hath hid from sense and reason his mercy to his own people: that of Abraham is considerable; there were two promises God made to Abraham, the one of going out of his own country, and carrying him to a land flowing with milk and honey; the other, that he would make his seed as the stars of heaven for multitude, and that in his seed all the nations of the earth should be blessed. Mark now, if Abraham had not had something to evidence that which was not seen, he could never have seen the faithfulness of God in these promises: for when he was gone out of his own country, he comes to Canaan (the country promised), but as soon as he was there, he was ready to starve, and was faine to flye to Egypt: and if he had not had faith he would have fallen off, and have been ready to turne back agayne. And then for the second promise, That in his seed all the Nations of the earth should be blessed: Abraham goeth on seaveny yeares, and his wife had no childe; and it ceased to be with her after the manner of women; she was old, and Abraham's body dead; and after he had a child, he must kill him, and being sav'd, Isaac must be forty yeares before he is married; and when he is married, he must have no childe in twenty yeares: and in the first hundred and fifty yeares after the promise, there was but seaveny of all his seed: yet this was the promise, that in his seed all the Nations of the earth should be blessed: thus God seems to goe crosse to what he promised.

We might instance also in Jacob; God commands Jacob to returne from Laban: and after that, mark how God followes him. First, his uncle Laban followes him with thoughts to slay him. Secondly, In his Journey his wives murde dyeth. Thirdly, his wife dyes. Fourthly, Dinah is ravished. Fifthly, his two Sons, Simeon and Levi, commit that villany, that makes him flink in the nostrils of the people of the land. Sixthly, Esau comes to destroy him; and all this in that journey that God commanded Jacob to take. Now if Jacob had not had faith to look through these to the things that might encourage him in his way to things not seen, it had been impossible he should have gone on. So when God brings Israel to Canaan, you know what a way they goe about through the wildernesse: when they were come to Canaan, a land flowing with milk and honey, God brought them to the worst part of it: for the south part was the hottest, and dryest, and barrennest part of the countrey; thus God seems to goe on in crosse ways, and this hides the excellency of the things of God; and hence it comes to passe they are not seen. If it be so, then that the things of God are not seen to a carnall eye, and require more then reason to apprehend them.

First, it should make us cease wondering, that men of excellent parts and reason, doe not see the things of God, but flight them: he not offended at this, they are things not seen: if it a great deceit in many, who think that because such and such men have larger abilities of reason than others to understand natural things; that therefore it must needs follow, they have deeper apprehensions of spiritual things: and yet men reason thus, what you poor simple men and women understand these things, when there are great scholars and learned men, that see them not: this argues a carnal heart; as if the strength of reason could make men apprehend more than faith can do. You know what Christ says, Father I thank thee, that thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them to babes, Matt. 11.25. Notwithstanding such expressions of Christ, yet we see the temper of the men of the world: alas, they look upon religion as a most foolish and ridiculous thing; and so for strictness in the ways of religion: when a man shall see another very earnest about a thing that he thinks is of no consequence at all, he cannot but impute folly to him: so, when the men of the world see the people of God fervent, and zealous about those things that they can see no excellency in; and see them willing to venture and suffer for them; they count this folly and madness: when Christ (being in danger of his life, John 18.37, 38.) tells Pilate that he came into the world to bear witness unto the truth, says Pilate, what is truth? speaking in a flattering way, as if he had said, you come here to answer for your life, and you had need look to that; and what does you talk of truth now your life is in question. So carnall men, when they see others venture their estates, and lives, for poor inconsiderable things, as they esteem them, they count this folly: and why does they doe so? because the things of God are not seen. Therefore in spiritual and heavenly things we must always endeavor to beat down reason, and to advance faith: says Luther, In the things of God we must not continually be asking the reason, for they are the things that are not seen. Nay (sayes he) faith kills the beast reason, in spiritual things. Though it is true, being kept under faith there is good use of it, yet it is as a beast to be slain, that so we may see the more of spiritual things. I meet with a story in a book of a company of Bishops that were gathered together, and there was a philosopher with them; who disputed against the Christian faith; and he argued so subtilly that he non-plust the Bishops. Now there was a godly man, a poor weak man there, and he desired he might have liberty to dispute, for that they were so non-plust in: and though at first they were afraid he would spoyle the cause through his weakness, yet at length they gave him leave to speak; and he propounds certaine principles of religion to the Philosopher, and said to him, doe you believe these things? and said no more, but doe you believe these things? and upon this the Philosopher yeilds. I have heard (sayes he) nothing all this while but words; but now I finde a divine vertue come into me, that I can no longer resift the Christian faith, and this meerly upon the propounding of the objects of faith, with urging upon him, Doe you believe? certainly in the things of faith we must believe before we can understand them fully: our faith must sometimes help us to conceive, and not alwaies our conceiving help to us to believe, we finde this in Peter, John 6.69. And we believe and are sure that thou art the Christ the Son of the living God: mark, we believe and are sure: He doth not say, we are sure, and believe: but first believe, and then are sure; by believing we come to be sure. There are many they would faine be sure that Christ died for them, that their sins are pardoned, and that they are the children of God; and they endeavour to make this out by arguments, from the effects, and would try themselves by such and such notes: but we should rather, and in the first place goe the way the Apostle doth here, we believe and are sure: we should cast our souls upon the truth of the word, and by believing come to be sure.

So much for the first, the things of God are things not seen. But now faith, that doth evidence and make them clear, We know in whom we have believed, 2.Tim.1.12. and the mercies of God in Christ are called The sure mercies of David, 12s 13.34. Faith is not a meer notion, imagination, or conceit, but tis that which makes all sure and certaine to the soul. I should have answered a case here, whether or no there may not be faith without assurance, that is without assurance of a mans own salvation by Christ.
Certainly it must needs be a great mistake to put that upon the being of faith, which is the riches of faith; for so the Scripture calls assurance: a man may be able to carry on his trade, though he be not rich; and a man may be a believer, though he be not rich in assurance: now assurance is the cream of faith, the riches of faith. I should have shewn also how farre faith can be an evidence, where there is doubting. Only thus: the assurance we have by faith building upon the word, and drawing conclusions from divine principles, (for that I should have spoken of, how faith draws things up to an evidence, by divine and spiritual principles; and what these principles are: but we cannot stand to open this: but) it is so farre an evidence, that the soul can venture upon it, as I told you before; faith is a foundation that the soul dare venture upon: as that Martyr said, though I cannot dispute for the truth, yet I can dye for the truth. Where faith comes with a convincing light, though there may be doubts and fears, and temptations; yet it can trusty and depend; and the soul resolves if I perish, I will perish here: let all the world say what they will, I finde this is the way, and whatever comes of it I will not goe back: and by this means over-powers the soul, and carries it through opposition; and so faith is an evidence.

Many things should have been spoken by way of application.

As First, If faith be an evidence to other things, and makes, them seen, then it is an evidence to itself. I meaneth thus: It is therefore possible for a soul to know its own good condition and its interest in Christ, meerly by the very work of faith itself; though for the present it be not able to argue, a posteriori, from the effects of faith, yet it may argue a priori; faith may evidence it self. Many Christians goe on in a doubting way, meerly because they think they must have evidences of their faith, by some effects that follow their faith; and till then they can have no comfort; tis true, where true faith is, there will be fruits and effects of it: but certainly if you could learne this mystery of the Gospel, to finde an evidence in faith itself, you would sooner come to comfort; And it is a safer way a great deal: as thus, if you have doubts about your condition, and finde no evidence, it is no argument of the truth of your faith.
have no interest in Christ, the way to be freed from these doubts and fears; is by renewing the act of faith itself, by presenting to your souls the riches of the grace of God in the Lord Jesus; and by viewing the glory of that, see if it will not draw out your souls to believe. And if upon this your hearts shriue not for the present, let these things before your souls againe, and turne not from renewing the acts of faith, to pore upon your corruptions, and then say, you can see no interest that you have in Christ: but look upward againe and againe, and by the very viewing of them, a vertue will come in, to draw the heart to believe. As by presenting the law, there is an efficacy to terrifie and a fright: So by presenting the glorious things of the Gospel, there is an efficacy to draw out faith: And then you are to renew the very primitive work of faith; that is to close with Christ, and to cast your selves upon the freeness of the grace of God in Christ; and though you finde in your hearts such and such corruptions, and are ready to say, shall such a one as I am, so polluted and defiled, cast my self upon the grace of God in Christ? yet lay hold upon Christ, and you have as much reason to doe it from thence, as from any thing; and therefore this must be thy course to renew this primitive act of thy faith again and again. But yet my doubts and fears remaine: but if thou wouldest have an evidence, to it againe & again a thousand times over, and at last there will be an evidence of the act of faith itself.
But you will say, this may be presumption to cast ones self upon the free grace of God in Christ. I answer, this is no presumption, because the very act it self gives thee a right to all that is in God and Christ. Now presumption is when a man takes that which he hath no right to: and if a man doe that to which he hath no right before, yet if that he doth give him a right, it is no presumption. But you will say, this is a licentious way, & gives liberty. O do not wrong faith, when thou (thou though thou canst see no reason for it) in the want of sight and sense canst venture thy selfe upon the riches of the grace of God in Christ, it is the most glorious work that thou canst possibly doe in this world: shouldst thou be able to live to overcome all thy corruptions, and so doe the greatest service imaginable, it could
could not be so glorious a work as this. And it is the most difficult thing in the world; and therefore no doctrine of liberty; that soul that can go through all the difficulties of faith, that can overcome its infinite guilt, and the terrors of the law; and notwithstanding all that comes between God and it, can venture upon the free grace of God in Christ, may overcome all the difficulties in the world. Many other things might have been in urging of this, as now, though we are in the dark, and fight and tense, and all is gone; yet exercise faith, and if thou wouldst study to magnifie God as a Christian, this is the onely way. There is a notable instance of credit that Alexander gave to his Physician, and the example of the trust he put in him did mighty honour him before all his Nobles: Alexander being sick, one tendeth to him and advieth him to take heed of Philip his Physician, for that one had feed him to poypeon him; his Physician brings him the potion, and Alexander gives him the litter, and drinkes the potion presently, intimating that he would not believe what was reported of him; and this was a mighty honour done to his Physician, and so when thou hast no evidence in thy selfe, yet when thou hast many temptations that speake ill of the free grace of God in Christ, and that tell thee Christ hath left thee and forsaken thee; and that it would never be thus and thus with thee if Christ intended any good to thee; and when temptations are in their greatest heat; and speake the worst of Christ; Now to venture thy soul upon Christ, Christ will take it as the greatest honour thou art capable of doing to him: and it is the readieft way to advance the riches of his grace and mercy. And be afraid of unbelief, as well as of presumption; be afraid lest thou shouldst not magnifie the riches of the grace of God in Christ, which is his great designe amongst the children of men. I thought to have laid downe something to shew what encouragement we have to believe in case of want of evidence, when we are in the dark, and can see no light; and to have given rules to help our faith:

But I will conclude with this one use.

By what hath been delivered you may all see what an excellent and admirable grace faith is, and of what use it is.
brethren, in these times wherein there is such fear, trouble and distraction; now to have faith to give a subsistence to all, the things that God hath spoken of; a subsistence to all the glorious promises that God hath made to his people: what a wonderfull blessing is this! now excercise faith, and by faith give a subsistance to all these promises; make them a foundation to rest upon; be willing to venture all you have, your Estates, names, liberties, lives, for the furthering and fulfilling the glorious promises which God hath made unto his Church: and if you have faith, that gives foundations to those promises, you will doe so. And though we see nothing but darkness, and misery upon the world, yet let us exercise faith; if the hour of temptation be yet to come, as who knows, then we shall have need of faith; and faith only, in such darkness can helpe us to light. And for preparation for such times, labour to strengthen faith, and by what you have heard, you may see what stead faith will stand you in, in any danger. It is a great comfort to a Christian, that though he be in the dark in many things (as there are many truths now disputed about Churches, and the like) yet to know he hath in him that will make the things of eternall life evident to him: It is a wonderful blessing of God to have a principle that gives subsistence and evidence to such things as these are. How exceedingly would many poor souls rejoice, if they might have an evidence but of some one truth of religion; as the truth of a deity, which reason gives light in; they are so pestred with Atheisme, that they would give a thousand worlds to be rid of it. Now if this be so great a mercy, to have that which doth evidence onely one principle of religion; what a glorious mercy then is it, to have faith to evidence all the glorious things of God; and to make them cleare and plaine to you! you can remember there was a time when you thought them fancies and conceits, but now you see them, as cleare as the light of the Sun, and you would not now for a thousand worlds but you saw them as you doe. Hereafter (brethren,) when we shall see them not by faith, but by sense. O how shall we bless God then, that we had before an evidence of these things made to our souls. What would have become of us if we had not had an evidence to cleare those things to us that lead to this glory, to evidence the righteousnesse of God in Christ for eternal life. I saw these things subsisting and evident before, and now God reveals them fully to me; whereas on the other side, those that want a principle of faith to make them substantiall and evident to them, when they shall come to be substantiall and evident to their sense, O what a horrid terror will it be unto them: then you will say, O Lord, that I had seen these things before, my heart then would never have been taken so with the things of the world: I ran madly upon the vanities of the world, to get riches, and honours; and I thought I was the only happy man, and that those things were the only substantial and real all things, and those things that I heard the Preacher speak of, I thought them to be but notions and conceits; but now I see they are real all and substantiall. O miserable man that now I am!

O the work of faith that can make those that are of weak parts, to see the great things of God, James 2.5. Hearken my brethren (says the Apostle) God hath chosen the poor of this world to be rich in faith. To understand the great things of faith; that poor men should understand the great, the deep, the glorious things of God, that were hid from the foundations of the world, it is a wonderful work; therefore when John sent to Christ, to know if he were the Messiah, Christ gives this as one argument, The poor receive the Gospel, Matthew 11. 5. Why, was that an argument that Christ was the Messiah, was it not rather an argument against him? that the poor did it: if the great ones had done it, it had been an argument. No, The poor receive the Gospel. And that those that are poor and weak in other things, should have this mighty work wrought in their souls, to be able to receive Christ and the Gospel: this is an argument of the mighty power of God. Brethren, to have the use of the eye of the body by which we can see the great works of God, the Sun, Moon, and Stars, and can take notice of the glory of God in these, this is a great blessing: what man would be willing to loose the sight of his eyes, to gaine a world? because it discovers so much of the glory of God.
Now if the eye that receives only these natural things, be so precious O then what is it to have a principle within us, an eye of faith clearly to evidence the great things and glorious counsels of God unto us? if a chriftall that can receive colours into it from without, be precious; O what is the chriftall of faith? it may well be called precious faith, for it receives into the soul the glory of God, and the excellencies of Christ, and the great things of eternall life. And these are brought into the soul by faith, in the reality and power of them to raise the heart, and to fill it with all joy and peace in believing, and to carry the soul through all the troubles of this world. O the eye of faith is a precious eye! the eye of sense is precious, because we can see visible objects by that; but the eye of reason is more precious, because that can make things seen which are not seen by the eye of sense; reason can discourse up to God himself: and it is the wonderfull excellency of a reasonable creature that God hath given him that ability, that he can discourse so from the effect to the cause, and from one cause to another, till at last he gets up to God, the first being of all. This is an admirable endowment we should bless God for: but now, if the use of reason have such an excellency in it; because by that we have an evidence of reasonable things to us, then still goe higher and labour to have a right esteem of this precious faith, that gives unto us such evidence of the glorious things of God, even that faith that God puts into our hearts on purpose that by it we might be able to receive into our souls those glorious and hidden mysteries of godliness that doe infinitely concern us eternall peace.

This Sermon was preacht April 25, 1641.

John 8:36.

If the Sonne therefore shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed.

In this Chapter we have Christ continuing of his contest with the wrangling peevish Jews, in answering all that they said, notwithstanding they snarled at every word almost that past. But however it was with the multitude, yet there were some that were taken with what he said: for in ver. 30. it is said, As he spake these words many believed on him, at least there were some beginnings of faith, or some preparations to it. And Christ tells them ver. 31. That if they continued in his word, then they were his disciples indeed: as if he should say, it is not enough that you are stirred for the present and profess you believe in me; I will not take you for my disciples, unless you continue in my word: how often do the flashes that are upon the hearts and consciences of men vanish and come to nothing? they continue not in the word of Christ, and therefore are not his disciples. Christ tells them further, that they must understand more concerning their condition then yet they apprehended. And ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free. v. 32. as if he should say, though you have some confused apprehensions of things for the present, yet it is but very little you know of your condition: but if you will go on in the way that God is beginning with you, in stirring your consciences; if you will continue, you shall come to know more then yet you know, Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free; and then in ver. 33. say they, we are Abrahams seed, and were never in bondage to any man; how sayst thou, ye shall be made free. See here, they begin to snarl again.
againe. Master Calvin, I remember, thinks that these are the words rather of some other of the Jews that were present, then of those that are said before to believe: but others think it may be understood even of those that are said to believe; for though they did begin to assent to the doctrine of Christ, and were very much convinced, yet there was still abundance of frowardness, perverseness and crookedness in their spirits: so that they begin again to wrangle with Christ, especially when he doth but intimate to them any thing of their bondage. It is a usual thing for many people, that have some stirrings of conscience, and some beginnings of the working of God's spirit in them, and it may be saving ones too, yet to continue a long time in much frowardness, and perverseness of spirit, if they be opposed in their way. Therefore, say they, do you speak to us of bondage, and tell us of freedom? why, We were never in bondage to any. ver. 33. What never in bondage to any? were not the Jews in bondage to the Babylonians, when in captivity to them? and were they not at this very time in bondage to the Romans? and yet we were never in bondage: thus carnal hearts, till grace fully subdue them, are very loth to know their wretched condition; they love not to hear of any thing that discovers to them the misery that they are in: they were never in bondage, they say, but yet Christ pityeth them: he did not take advantage to fling away presently, because he saw them continue still in their perverseness, and snarling at what he spake, but tells them, what bondage he meant. As if he should say, the truth is, though you think your selves free, yet there is a bondage that you are in, and such a bondage that none can deliver you, but the Son of God alone. If the Son therefore shall make you free, you shall be free indeed. Thus we come to the words of the Text.

These words, you see then, hold forth unto us the blessed liberty of the Gospel; that freedom that believers have by Christ.

I come then presently to the maine doctrinal conclusion, which is this:

There is a blessed liberty, that Christians enjoy by Christ, and only by him. This doctrine of Christian liberty that is enjoyed by Christ, Christ, is a Treasury of abundance of admirable consolation, and much of the mystery of the Gospel is contained in this doctrine. I should enlarge my discourse too far, and seek to gripe too much, should I think to give you but a view of this doctrine in all the points of it. If we should intend to handle it at large, I should shew to you. 1. What that is that Christ doth set believers free from. 2. The privileges of this freedome they have by Christ. 3. The Subject of it: who it is that hath this freedome. 4. By whom it comes: how it is by the Son, and only by him. 5. The price and purchase of this freedome. 6. The interest that believers have in this freedome: how they come to be enfranchised and to have interest in it. And 7. the application of it.

But should I goe this way to work, it is but little I should be able to doe: therefore I will not gripse so much. I intend therefore to handle but one speciall thing in this our freedome by Christ.

If I should shew to you, first of all what we are freed from; then there is the freedome from the law, the freedome from the power of sinne, the freedome from the bondage of feare, the freedome from an accusing conscience, the freedome from slavishnesse in the performance of holy duties; we are set at liberty in holy duties; the freedome from death, and the evil of that; the freedome from the slavery of the devill, and the freedome from the ceremonial law; but neither must we seek to gripe all these particulars: to shew you our freedome in these, I shall onely pitch upon one, and that is our freedome from the law. If the Son therefore shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed.

The doctrine of freedome from the law, is the subject that we are to handle at this time: and when I speak of freedome from the law, I meane, not freedome from obedience to the law: tis an erronisous conceit, to think we are freed from obedience to the law: and it is a conceit too meane and absurd for us to spend time about it now, that have so little, and having to deal in a matter of so great consequence as we have; for what is the law, but the image of God, the very beam of the the wisdome and holinesse of God himself, if you look at it, as requiring obedience; and for any to say, we should be freed from obedience to the law, is as much as to say, we should be freed from the image of God, from the beame of the wisdome and holinesse of God himself; therefore we will spend no time about that, but when I speak of freedome from the law, I mean freedome from the rigour of the law, from the condemning sentence of the law, in which all the rigour of it appeares.

Wherefore then it is necessary, first to give you a view of the bondage that we are all in, under the law, unless delivered by Christ.

And then Secondly, I shall endeavour to open to you, wherein the liberty of the Gospell doth consist, that Christ hath purchased for us. These two things (brethren) have in them the chief doctrine of divinity, and except you be well instructed and settled in these two, you cannot know aright any point of religion.

For the first: I will be but briefe in that, though there be many particulars in it, for it is the second I chiefly intend. And for a preparation to this first, this I shall tell you before hand, that I shall name many things unto you that will seem exceeding hard; but yet take this consideration along, that although the things I name to you appeare never so hard, yet they are but in order to that which I shall afterward deliver to you, that shall have much comfort and peace in it. If I tell you any thing of your bondage, it is onely to this end, that you may know the blessedness of your freedome and liberty.

Wherefore then, for the rigour of the law (that you may know what you are freed from) you must know what this is, and what you are all under by nature as considered out of Christ, for so the holy Ghost expressteth our subjection to the law, he saith, we are under it. Rom. 6.14. Now ye are not under the law: there was a time when they were under the law; first then the rigour of the law is in this, it requires hard things of those that are under it. I shall shew you afterward, how the things are not so to those that are set free by Christ: but to those that are under the law it is a hard yoke, it requires hard things, things that are crose and contrary to the hearts and dispositions of all that are under it; things between which and their hearts there is an enmity and antipathy. Now to require such things as one hath no minde to, but are quite contrary to ones nature, and that ones nature hath an antipathy against; this is very tedious; and yet such are all the duties of the law, to those that are in bondage to it.

Secondly, the law requires not onely hard, but impossible things, impossible to be performed by those that are under it, the law it is a yoke that neither we nor our fathers were able to bear Acts 15:10. But that you will say is meant of the ceremonall law: I, but there is more in it then so, for do but consider the occasion of that speech, it was upon this ground, there were some that came from the Church of Jerusalem to the Church of Antioch, and they troubled the disciples there with two doctrines, the doctrine of the necessity of the ceremonall law, and the doctrine of being justified by the law; now this Church of Antioch sends to the Church of Jerusalem, to be satisfied about both these questions, and that which is spoken is spoken concerning them both, not onely the ceremonial law was that whereby they lookt for justification, but the morall law too, and both were a yoke that neither they nor their fathers were able to bear; and the rather it must be meant of both, because in the very next words we finde it opposed to the grace of Christ, in ver. 11. But we believe that through the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, we shall be saved even as they. As if he should say, you must not think to be saved by the law, but by the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ. Now the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ is opposed to our justification, by obedience to the morall law, as well as to the ceremonial: so that the morall law is a yoke that neither we nor our fathers were able to beare. It requires of us such things as are impossible to be done by those that are under it. We must not dispute now how this can be, or the justice of it; that will fall in afterward.

And then thirdly, the law exacts all of us under the condition of perfection: the law accepts of nothing but that which is compleat and absolutely perfect every way, both in regard of the principle from whence, and the manner how, and the rule by which, and end to which, it requires absolute perfection.

Fourthly, the law accepts of no surety, it must have it done in our own persons: like a severe creditor that will be paid to the utmost farthing, and by our selves. I say the law, in it self considered, lookes for a perfect righteousness of our own persons, or else it condemnes us, this is the righteousness of the law, That be that doth the things therein contained, shall live by them. Rom. 10: 5. He that doth: there must be doing, and that by himself personally, or not at all.

But it may be, though there be much required, yet upon some endeavours there may be some remission.

In the first place therefore, such is the rigour and severity of the law, that let us endeavour never so much to obey it, yet all our endeavours are rejected, if they come not up to perfect obedience: Tis a vaine plea of many people to say, they doe what they can, and desire well, and endeavour well; It is true, this is somewhat to those that are children, and have freedome by Christ (as you shall heare by and by) but to those that are under the law, endeavours to obey, though never so strong, if the work be not done, are not accepted by God.

Sixthly, the law requires constancy in all these: Suppose we could obey the law, or goe on very farre in many things, yet such are the termes between God and us, as we are under the law, that if we were able to obey the law in every thing as long as we live, till the very last moment, and should offend but in any one particular at the last moment, were it not for this freedome we have by this Son, we were utterly undone for ever; you may see by the way still as you goe of what infinite concernment our freedome by Christ is. You must look to yourselves how you get deliverance by Christ, for certainly this is your condition as long as you are under the law.

Seventhly, the law exacts the obedience it requires exceeding rigorously, in a way of violence upon all that are under der it, it comes roughly upon them as Pharaoh's task-masters; it requires the work, and lookes not at strength, strength or no strength, the work is required, and required with exceeding rigour, with dreadful threatning if it be not performed: therefore it is, the law was delivered in so dreadful a manner with thundering, and lightning, and earthquakes, and fire, so that it made even Moses himself to shake and tremble at the manner of delivering it, and in Deut. 33.2. it is called a fiery law, it came with mighty rigour: that is the seaventh.

Eighthly, there is this rigour in the law too, that upon any breach of it in the least thing, it doth by the severity of it break the soule, so that it doth utterly disnable it for ever performing any obedience to it again: there is such hardness in the covenant of the Law, the Law is like an Iron or Brazen wall, that upon any breach of it, the soule is but as an earthen vessell, that dashes against it, and is broken in pieces; so that there must be a creating power to make it whole again: consider I beseech you, I say, this is the condition of the Covenant of workes, which was made with us in Adam, which is now the covenant of the Law, that upon any one breach, by the severity of it, it breaks the soule, so that it doth utterly disnable it, for keeping it again: it roots out all the principles whereby the soule should be enabled to obey again: sinnes against the Gospel do not do so, as you shall hear hereafter. And this is the very ground, why upon the first sinne of Adam, we were all gone, and so were the Angels upon their sinne, because they had to deale with God onely in a covenant of works. But if upon the breach of the Law, we come to have all principles rooted out by which we should keep it, afterward, it will (we hope) pity us, and not exact obedience from us.

Therefore in the ninth place, notwithstanding this, the Law goes on in its curse, and requires as perfect obedience, and that upon pain of eternall death, to every thing of it, as if we had all principles that might enable us to keep it still: this is the severity of the Law, it doth not remit all of the threatning, or punishment, or exactnesse of obedience, notwithstanding this.
standing we have lost all power to obey it.

Yea further in the tenth place, it requires this of us, and gives us no strength at all to do what it requires; it finds us divested of those principles that once we had to yield obedience, and it affords us no new principles; therefore some have compared the severity of it to Pharaoh's Task-masters; it requires the tale of Brick, but gives no strength at all.

Yet further in the eleventh place. In all it doth, it strikes at our life; the Law is satisfied with no affliction; let it be transgressed in the least degree, all the afflictions that can possibly be in this world, will not satisfy it: such is the severity of it (I say) that it strikes at life, and at eternal life, it follows to pursue us to our blood, to temporal and eternal death: and here I might open the condemning sentence of the Law, but that would require a subject by itself, therefore I only name what is in this head, that it strikes at our lives upon every transgression of it.

Again tersely, the severity of it, is in this, that upon any breach it doth presently bind over the soul; (though it does not execute it presently,) by the strongest bonds that possible can be, to everlasting death; it suspends execution, but the bond is immediately sealed upon the breach of it: so that all men, upon every breach of it, have chains clapt upon their souls, which is the guilt of sin, whereby they stand bound to eternal death, by such bonds as all created power in heaven and earth is not able to loose.

Thirteenthly, In the next place, such is the severity of the law, that when it is once offended, it will never be made amends again by any thing we are able to doe. Suppose we have offended the Law in some one thing, and that but once; if after this, we should endeavour what we can for our lives, and swelter our heart bloods to obey the Law, and think to make up the breach we have made, yet we can never make it amends again. It is true, some, though they be offended, yet by double diligence may be pleased again: but we must never think to doe so with God; being under the law, when we have once broken it, we cannot with all our care and diligence be able to make it amends; and that is a great part of the severity of the Law.
I, but what have we to doe, but to mourn and cry, and rent our hearts because of this distressed condition we are in.

Fourteenthly, Nay the Law accepts of no repentance; it will not discharge the guilt of any one sinne, for all the sorrow in the world. And here lieth a great mistake of people, when they have offended, they think they will be careful to make amends; and they will mourn and repent, &c. It is true, if you be under the covenant of grace, this is something; but if you be in your natural condition, should you weep your hearts out, and send streams of blood from your eyes, in mourning but for any one sinne; suppose that which thou countest a little matter, a sinne in thought, shouldest thou resolve to cry out and mourn for that one sinne all thy life, it will not be accepted, unless thou commitst under the blessed liberty purchased by Christ: therefore know the difference of being under the Law and under the Gospel.

Fifteenthly, Yet further, such is the rigour of the Law, that when it hath opened our wounds and miseries, it goes no further; it shews us no means of deliverance: like a Surgeon, that opens the wound, but applies no remedy. Certainly were it not for a Mediator, we should finde the Law only to open our wound, and there leave us.

Sixteenthly, but yet again, such is our bondage to the Law, that instead of mortifying any of our sinnes, it rather stirs them up, and makes them more: it threateneth indeed grievous things against the transgressors of it, but it doth not mortifie any sinne; it doth stir up lust (though accidentally) and makes our sin out of measure sinfull.

Seventeenthly, Yea there is one thing more, after all this: If we should keepe the Law, yet the promises of it are but mean and low in comparison of the promises of the Gospel. I doe not say they are but temporall, though before the Gospel was revealed, there was but little of Spirituall promises, yet we know what the Apostle saies, 2 Timoth. 1.10. That life and immortality is brought to light through the Gospel. And though I doe not say, there are none, yet there are very few Scriptures of the old Testament that speak of eternall life.

Thus:
The Saints Treasury.

Thus you see your bondage under the Law, and surely you will now think it a blessed condition, to be freed from the Law. And 'tis one Argument that a soule is delivered from the bondage of the Law, when it can heare all this, and yield to Gods justice in it, and can have the heart raised to God in the hearing of it. But if the soule at the hearing of these things, think them so hard and unreasonable, that it is ready to rise at them, it is a signe that the spirit is not acquainted with them; and although these things may seem hard unto us, yet if we consider but three or foure particulars, they will not appeare so hard.

First, doe but consider, you have to deale with a God of infinite justice and worth; indeed did we look upon God, as we look upon a creature like our selves, we should think it mighty hard: but now, when we have to deale with a God of infinite worth, we should not think it hard.

Secondly, we shall not think it hard, if we consider that state of perfection wherein God made man at first: however it is with us now, yet God did at first give us a stock to trade in the way of obedience, and to enable us to doe what the law required.

And then Thirdly, if you did but understand aright what sin is, then you would not think it hard, that upon that sin, we should be given up to such a woful condition we speak of: if you look upon sin as that which strikes at an infinite deity, at the very being of God himself, as much as in us lyeth, then you will not wonder that one sin should bring us into such a hard condition.

Fourthly, if we consider those things that we all take for granted that yet are as hard as these, and doe but lay them with them, and they will not seem so hard. As that God for one thought, should cast the Angels into eternal torments; and not so much as parly with them about any termes of peace: and that God for one sin in Adam, should condemne all mankinde, you all grant this in the general; yea further, that God the Father should deal so with his own Son, the Son of his love, as to make him a curfe for man; and should lay the weight weight of his wrath upon him, so as to make him sweat drops of blood, and to cry out, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? if you had never heard of such a thing, this would seem as hard as any thing we have spoken of.

Now before we come to speak of the other, let that which hath been said teach us, that surely then, all men in their natural condition are in a hard case: as the Israelites when the bondage they were in under Pharaoh increased upon them, the Text says, they saw themselves in an evil case. O that upon the hearing of these things, you would learne to see what you are out of Christ: that you would see yourselves in an evil case, in a sad and dangerous condition.

Secondly, if this be the case that every soul naturally is under such a bondage to the law: then the saving of a soul is a great and a mighty work; yea such a work, that God must make heaven and earth to move to save a soul; and to deliver it from the bondage of sin: the reason why people doe so slight this great work of salvation and mediation by Christ is, because they know not their bondage. Understand but this bondage aright, what it is to be under the law (I have not told you all this while of the condemnation of the law or the curse of the law: I have onely set out to you the bondage of the rigour of the law) and by this you will see it is a great work to save a soul.

Thirdly, you may see by this, how that vaine plea of carnal hearts comes to nothing: what will you trust now to your good meanings, good desires, and good intentions? and you will mourn and grieve, because you are no better; and you will doe what you can for God: tis true, these are good things but are these the things you rest in for standing before God? if they be, certainly you know not the termes you stand in to God, nor what your bondage is.

Fourthly, if God reveales himself to a man only by the law, it is impossible but the soul of that man must flye off from him, and look upon God and his law as enemies to him, unless it were reveale to together with the Gospel. Which is that I am now to tell you of, even that liberty we have by the Gospel.
Therefore then for the liberty of the Gospel, it is a precious liberty, wherein the treasury of the mystery of grace is laid up: it is the onely ground of support to our souls; and Saint Paul that was the great instrument of God in opening the doctrine of the liberty of the Gospel, sets it down in all his Epistles; and in many places elegantly: and in one Text wherein is some difficulty, In Gal. 4, from verse 21, and so forward, Tell me, ye that desire to be under the law, doe ye not heare the law? for it is written, that Abraham had two sons, the one by a bond-maid, the other by a free woman: but he who was of the bond-woman, was borne after the flesh, but be of the free-woman, was by promise: which things are an allegory; for these are the two covenants, the one from the mount Sinai, which gendereth to bondage which is Agar; for this Agar is mount Sinai in Arabia, and answereth to Jerusalem which now is, and is in bondage with her children: but Jerusalem which is above, is free, which is the mother of us all: for it is written, rejoice thou barren that bearest not, break forth and cry thou that travailest not: for the desolate hath many more children, then she which hath an husband. The Text seemes at the reading of it, to be somewhat obscure; and yet doth most excellently set out this doctrine. I am now upon, of bondage under the law, and liberty under the Gospel: the allegory, you see, is from the two sons, Abraham had one Son by a bond-maid, another by a free woman; It is an allegory, saith the Apostle, and it signifies the two covenants; the covenant of workes, and the covenant of grace: the covenant of workes, that was from mount Sinai; there was the law revealed, which is Agar, for this Agar is mount Sinai in Arabia. I remember Luther saith; that Agar in the Arabian tongue is as much as mount Sinai, they call it so in the Arabian tongue: and so the Apostle alludes to it; therefore the law that is of Agar, that tends onely to bondage. Agars posterity were Gentiles, and in bondage, and were not to have the privilege of the Sons of the free woman; therefore all those that have to deal with God in the covenant of workes, are bond-men; and are not to have the privilege of the children of the free woman, of the children of God. Well. This Agar is mount Sinai in Arabia, and answereth reth to Jerusalem, which now is, and is in bondage with her children, he sets out the estate of the Church of the Jews, the Jerusalem that now is, to be an estate of bondage, in comparison of the Church of the Gospel; because they had so little knowledge of the Gospel, but were in bondage unto the law, and knew little else but the law. But Jerusalem which is above, that is the state of the Church under the new Testament, is above, in regard of the Gospel, which is free, and is the mother of us all: the Church of God under the Gospel is the Jerusalem which is above; but now it is written, rejoice thou barren that bearest not, break forth and cry thou that travelflest not; for the desolate hath many more children than she which hath an husband. That is, those that acknowledge the doctrine of the liberty of the Gospel, at first are but as desolate, as the barren woman, before it be revealed; as Sarah was barren for a while, but afterward she had a childe: so the doctrine of the liberty of the Gospel, is but as a barren thing for a while, till people are acquainted with it; and we that are Ministers of the Gospel, it is our work to beget children to Christ. If we should be legal and preach only the law, we should beget children to bondage, to Agar, but this is our chief work, to beget children to the free woman; to beget children to the free grace of God in Christ. And O that I could beget one childe to this free woman! I cannot think, but that there may be many here that are children of Agar, that it may be have had terrous, and seares in their consciences; and yet are but children of the bond-woman still: Now it is the Gospel that proclames the Trumpet of Jubilee to those that are under bondage; therefore it is observable what time the Trumpet of the Jubilee was to be blown, Levit. 29.9. Then shalt thou cause the Trumpet of the Jubilee to sound, on the tenth day of the seventh month, in the day of atonement shall ye make the Trumpet sound throughout all your land. What was this day of atonement? it was the day of the publike humiliation of all the people for their sins: the day of fasting and prayer appointed by God to afflict their souls, is called a day of atonement, and the Trumpet to proclame the Jubilee must be blown upon that very day, wherein the people had been afflicting their souls for their sins: therefore now, if there be any soul that hath been humbled before the Lord and hath been afflicted for sin; behold this is the work that is now to be done, to blow the Trumpet of Jubile to such a soul, and to proclaim liberty in the name of Christ unto you, and as the Psalmist saith, Psalm 89. 15. Blessed is the people that know the joyful sound. It is translated by some, they are blessed that know the joyful sound of the Jubile. Now this Jubile having reference to our Jubile by Christ, blessed are they that heare this joyful sound that we have here in the Gospel.

Now the first thing of this joyful sound of the Jubile, and liberty we have proclaimed by Christ from the law, is this, thou shalt not be cast for thy eternal estate by the law; the law may terrifie thee, but it shall not cast thee; indeed it must cast the children that are in bondage to it, for their eternal estate; but if thou beest a believer in Christ, if thou art a childe of the free woman, this is thy liberty. I say, thou shalt not be cast for thy eternal estate by the law, we doe not love to have any businesse of great concernment to be cast by those that are rigid and severe, be of good comfort O believer, thou hast heard of much severity in the law: but the great businesse concerning thy soul and eternal estate is above the law; It hath nothing to doe with thee; thou hearest many times dreadful threats of the law, and these threats it may be doe often terrifie thee, and thou art ready to say, who can stand before this holy God? but peace be to thee, thou believing soul, for thou art set at liberty from the law by Christ; and this is the first joyful sound.

The second joyful sound of liberty thou hast by the Gospel, is this, thy law-giver is no other then he that is thine husband, thou hast to deal with no other now, in the matters of thy soul but with him that is thy husband, and thy advocate by whom all is ruled, John 1.2.1. If we sin, we have an advocate with the Father; an advocate, that is, thou hast to deal now with Christ thy law-giver, who upon every transgression, presently is thy advocate with the Father, who stands up to plead for thee thee, and to answer all accusations against thee; I say, he that undertakes for thee, and engageth all the interest he hath in his Father, for thee, thou hast to deal with him, for thy law-giver, about thy soul and eternal estate; and this is the second joyful sound thou hast of the Trumpet of the Jubile of the Gospel, of the liberty thou hast by Christ.

Thirdly, being delivered from the bondage of the law, this is now thy liberty, that thou art made a law to thy self. I meaneth thus: there is nothing now required of thee but it is written in thy own heart: God writes his law in the tables of stone: and all that is required of thee in obedience to it, is written in thy heart: so that thou dost not now so much yeild obedience to the law; because of the condemning power of it, and punishment due unto it, as from a principle of love to it: For we must know, that we are not set free by Christ from obedience to the law, we are bound to obey the law still; but here is the difference, we are not servile to the law, we keep it freely: thou keepest the law now, by being a law to thy self, and having all that God requires of thee in his law written in thy heart, by the law of sanctity that he hath given thee; that is the third joyful sound.

The fourth joyful sound, is this; by the liberty thou hast now by Christ, this is thy condition, that whatever thou doest, though there be never so many imperfections in it, yet if God can spy out but the least good thing in thee, he will take notice of that, and cast away all the evil: if God sees but any thing of his own spirit in thee, he will be sure to take notice of that. If there be but one dust of Gold, though it be mixt with abundance of drosse, God will not loose it, but will finde it out: God he is not strict to mark what is done amisse by his children; but he is strict to marke what is done well by them. Indeed the law tells us, nay a moral man will tell us, that to make an action good, all circumstances must concurre: but the liberty of the Gospel tells us, that where there is any good, any grace in an action, God observes and takes notice.
notice of it. To give but one instance for this, and it is an excellent one for this purpose, Peter 1. 3. 6. the Apostle propounds Sarah as a pattern for good women, Even as Sarah obeyed Abraham, calling him Lord. Shee never calls him Lord; but then when shee did it unbelievingly, and yet God takes notice of that word, and never mentions her unbelief. Now Sarah was a free woman, and this is the gracious dealing of God with the free woman; and if thou beest a child of the free woman, this is thy privilege, that God will take notice of every good action thou dost. Isa. 42. 3. A bruised reed shall he not break, and the smooaking flax shall he not quench. The word signifies as soon as ever the flax begins to be black, God will not reject it: So that if there be but the least degree of good, it is accepted. And that is the fourth joyful sound by the Gospel.

The fifth joyful sound, is this, suppose thou canst not do any thing, yet if there be but a will, a desire in thee, God accepts that will for the deed. Many carnal hearts please themselves with this, but this is the case of those that are set at liberty by Christ: perhaps thou canst not pray; I but present thy self before God, as the Apostle speaks, and that shall be accepted of God; and know if there be any excuse to be made for thee, Christ will finde it out, and make it before God for thee; that is the fifth joyful sound.

The first thing wherein the liberty we have by Christ consists is, that though the Gospel call for obedience, yet it doth it in such a sweet and loving way that it would make any heart in the world in love with it, it drawes by the cords of love. 2 Cor. 5. 20. Now then we are ambassadors for Christ, as though God did beseech you by us: we pray you in Christ stead, be ye reconciled to God; and Philip. 2. 1. If there be therefore any consolation in Christ, if any comfort of love, if any fellowship of the Spirit, if any bowels and mercies, fulfil ye my joy, &c. The Gospel comes not as the law upon mount Sinai, with thunder and lightning, and darkness, but it comes in a milde and gentle way, and by that allures and draws the soul unto it self; and that is the first joyful sound.
The seventh joyful sound of the Gospel is, that the Gospel and liberty of it comes, as gently, so with abundance of life and strength, together with it: it comes as the Spirit is, and where the Spirit is, there is power, as the Apostle speaks, I remember Luther hath this note upon Rom. 8. says he, the law is a spiritual law, because it is the law of God; but it is not the law of the spirit of life: tis the law of the Gospel that brings the spirit of power and life along with it; there goes a virtue together with the commands of the Gospel to strengthen the soul to obedience: And the Gospel gives grace and strength beyond what Adam had, two ways: the grace that Adam had was only a power to do, but there was not the will and the deed given: but the grace of the Gospel, it gives both the power, and the will, and the deed.

The eighth joyful sound of the Gospel, is that tender pity and compassion that is in God to those that are made free by it. This is the difference between the sins of those that are under the law, and those under the Gospel: the sins of those under the law makes them hated by God: but the sins of those that are under the Gospel, makes them pitied by God.

The ninth joyful sound is this: the Gospel hath a mighty efficacy to melt the heart, and to resolve it into sorrow and mourning, & such mourning, that is one of the most acceptable things to God in the world; the law, I told you, accepts not of repentance: I, but the Gospel doth; the tears of repentance that come from believers, next to the blood of Jesus Christ, are the most precious things in the world. I say, next to the drops of the blood of Christ, the drops of thy tears, coming from Evangelical repentance, are most acceptable unto God: That is the ninth joyful sound.

Tenthly, another is this; the Gospel it comes with healing: as it hath a melting power, so it hath a healing power. Christ is described to come with healing in his wings: water makes the lime burn the more, but oyle which provokes other things to burne, quenches that: so it is with the oyle of the the Gospel, Christ was appointed for this purpose, to heal thee, and to quench thy lust and corruptions. In Isa. 57.18.
we have an excellent promise, ver. 17. He went on forwardly in the way of his heart, mark what follows, I have seen his ways, and I will heal him.

The eleventh joyful found is, that now being set at liberty by Christ, though thou dost sin not only against the law, but against the Gospel, thy sins against the Gospel shall not have power to root out any habits of grace; but all the grace of the Gospel will uphold the habits of grace in thy soul. It is otherwise with the law, for one offence against the law doth not only root out the habit that is contrary to that offence, but all other habits also: but the grace of the Gospel is such that the habits of grace within us are not touched.

The twelfth joyful found is this: the Gospel is so full of grace that it takes advantage of our misery; this is a good argument of the tenour of the Gospel, Pardon my sin O Lord, for it is great; strange argument of a childe of the bondwoman; but a good argument of a childe of the free-woman; and this God's argument, Gen. 8.21. I will not destroy the world againe, for the imagination of man's heart is evil from his youth.

Thirteenthly, Another joyful found of the Gospel is this: the Gospel proclaims this liberty to us, that all that is required of us may be done, and accepted, by and from another; namely Christ.

Fourteenthly, Further the grace of the Gospel shewes a way wherein God shall have all the wrong made him up, that ever thy sins did him; for suppose the Gospel had proclaimed that God were willing to pardon, this were not enough, as long as God stood wronged: but now the Gospel doth not only proclaime to thee, that God is content to forgive thee all thy sins, but it tells thee of a way how God shall have all the wrong made up that ever thou hast done him: and this Son that sets thee at liberty hath undertaken it, and hath done it.
The Saints Treasury.

Fifteenthand another joyful sound of the Gospel is this: That there is a most absolute perfect righteousness made over to us; the righteousness of the Son of God is thine, made over to thee, to be presented before the Father for thee.

Sixteenthly, yet further: there is this joyful sound of the Gospel: It proclaims admirable promises, glorious and high things; even the infinite Treasures of God's grace: the Son is come from the bosom of the Father, and hath opened the treasures of the grace of God, and hath discovered those things that were kept secret from the foundations of the world.

Seventeenthly, And yet there is one thing more, that is necessary for the full consolation of the liberty of the Gospel, and this blessed Jubilee, that it may make a Jubilee indeed in thy heart; and that is this: that such is the covenant of the Gospel, and Christ hath so undertaken for thee, that it shall never be forfeited: this is the full, rich, and glorious grace of the Gospel, that now Christ hath undertaken, and engaged himself to the Father; and the Father hath promised, and hath engaged his own truth, and mercy, and faithfulness, that this covenant shall never be forfeited: yea the very condition of the covenant that is required of thee, is that which Christ hath undertaken to the Father to perform in thee. If perseverance be a spiritual blessing, it is part of the purchase of Christ; and must stand: and therefore peace be to thee, thou art in such a condition as thou canst not forfeit and break the covenant: the marriage covenant between thee and thy Saviour can never be dissolved.

I should now have shewn you a little more the blessedness of this liberty, that all this grace comes in and by the Son; not from the bounty of God in general, but in a higher way, by the Son of God we come to be set at liberty, by being made one with him.
him who is God and man, the heire of all things, and so are made co-heires with him. But I must here breake off.

Hebr.
HEB. 9. v. 27. the latter end of the Verse.

But after this the judgement. April 29.

The scope of the Holy Ghost in this Epistle, is to prove the excellency of Christ: that he is the Messiah that was to come into the world; and that all the types and shadowes of the law pointed at him: And a special part of the Epistle is to shew the excellency of the Priesthood of Christ, by preferring it above the Priesthood of Aaron: and amongst other regards, in this, that those Priests did offer up sacrifices often, but Christ offered himself but once; and this once offering of himself was available for ever, and needed no further offering. And this the Holy Ghost doth illustrate, by comparing the efficacy of Christ's sufferings, with the efficacy of what a man doth here in this world: that as the actions of men here in this world, whatever they are, whether good or evil, are available for ever; what a man doth in this life, accordingly, when he dies he comes to be stated eternally: so the death of Christ it is available for ever. It is appointed for men once to dye, and then comes judgement.

By judgement here I doe not think the Holy Ghost intends especially the judgement of the great day, (though it be true, that after death the judgement of the great day will follow, and all men must come to judgement; but I shall not speak one word of the judgement of that day.) But there is another judgement that I conceive is the intent of the Holy Ghost here, and that is the particular judgement that passeth upon every soul immediately after death; which is the stating of the soul in the eternal condition of it, either of happiness or misery.

While men live here, their condition is not stated by any act of God (though in regard of his eternal purpose it is the same for ever) even the Saints themselves would be here in much hazzard and danger about their everlasting estate (in regard of themselves, and what they have actually bestowed upon them) were it not that the grace of God is above them; the people of God in this life, are not without many feares and doubts about their everlasting condition; and what would many poor children of God give to be delivered from their feares, and doubts which are a grievous burthen to them, that they might never have feare or doubt more about their eternal estates? Well, if thou beest godly, in a little time it will be so with thee: this is the good that death will bring unto thee, that after death judgement will come to thee; that is, thou shalt be so actually stated in thy everlasting condition, as to be beyond all hazard about it; thou shalt be beyond all feares, and doubts and temptations; thou shalt never feare more, never doubt more, never be tempted more, never more lose any of the good that thou art possessed of: this is the judgement that comes to the Saints after death.

And on the other side, wicked men here in this world are not without their hopes and confidences that all shall be well with them: but after death comes judgement to them: that is (as we have it Proverbs 11, 7.) when a wicked man dieth, his hope perisheth, he is stated in such a condition as he is never like to have hope of good more; he is past all hope and possibility of ever receiving further mercy from God: and this is the meaning of the Text on both hands, that after death comes Judgement. Whatsoever mens conditions are here in this world, though the Saints have many fears & doubts about their estates, yet I say immediately after death, they shall be so stated and actually possessed of happiness, that they shall never doubt more. And howsoever wicked men in this world have many hopes and confidences, and bless themselves in their way, yet immediately after death all shall vanish, for then
The Saints' Treasury.

Judgement shall come. Job hath this expression Job. 8. 14. The hope of the hypocrite is as the spider's web; he spins out of his own spirit a cunning web, but the benefice of death at once dasteth it all away; for immediately after death he comes to judgement.

This then is the doctrinal conclusion we are to handle out of these words thus opened unto you,

That the only time that men have to provide for their eternall condition, is the time of this life: if it be not done here, there is no help afterward; for after death comes judgement.

I shall desire to handle this point so farre as it may be a ground to work upon your hearts, and to stirre you up in the time of your lives to make all sure between God and your souls; for after death comes judgement.

This point that I am now to treat about, it is one of the most serious points that concerns the children of men: and usually one of the first things that the Lord setteth upon the hearts and consciences of those whom he converts to himself. For a man going on in ways of sin and death, to think himself, Lord where am I? what am I doing? what is like to become of me? wherefore was I borne? wherefore came I into the world? what have I to doe here? Then God answereth, that which thou hast to doe here, and art sent into the world for; is to make provision for eternity: tis about this great business; to make up all between God and thy soul, and look thou best careful in it: for though thy life be short and uncertain, yet this great business doth depend upon this short and uncertain time of thy life; and if it be neglected in this little space of time I give unto thee, thou art lost and undone for ever; for presently after death comes judgement; and you shall be then stated so as there can be no alteration. It is the observation of the School-men, that what did befall to the Angels that sinned, that in death befalls unto wicked men; that is, as the Angels upon the first act of sin, were presently stated in an irrecoverable condition; so wicked men when they dye are stated in an irrecoverable condition. It is true while we live in this world, though we are sinful, yet our condition is to be lookt lookt upon as better then the condition of the fallen Angels; there is not here such an actual stateing of us: but when once death comes, a wicked man is then in the same condition with the devils themselves: that is, his condition is then so stated and made as certain and sure, and as irrecoverable as any of the Angels that sinned. While we preach to men, though never so wicked, and ungodly, because an actual judgement (such as the Text speaks of) is not past upon them, we are to offer grace and mercy to them in Christ; but if this offer be neg lected for a while, if the twine thread, the single thread of your life be once cut, then thou art gone for ever. For after death comes judgement.

In the meditation of this point, me thinks I cannot but look upon God, as beholding all the children of men, in their fallen lost sinful and miserable estate with pity and compassion, saying, poor creatures they have sinned against me, and have made themselves liable to eternal wrath, which they understand not, which they are not able to bear, well; a little time I will grant unto them, to sue out their pardon, and to come in and make up their peace with me: and I will give them means for that end: but let them look to themselves; for according to the improvement of the time that I now give them, so shall it be with them to all eternity: if they negate it, they are gone for ever; mercy then shall do them no good: so that the tenour upon which we all hold our lives, it is no other then as a malefactor condemned to dye, who hath granted to him through the favour of the Prince, a little time of reprieve, and some intimation withal given of a possibility in that time to sue out his pardon; and according as he spends that time, so it shall be with him for life or death.
Thus I say we all hold our lives, we are all condemned be fore the Lord: onely God hath out of his infinite grace pro vided a way and means of salvation for the children of men, and gives us a little time (we know not how long, whether two or three days, but as long as we live) to look about us, to provide for the making of our peace with him; and if that be neglected, all is gone, and we are undone for ever.
great things then doe depend upon this uncertaine small time of our lives. It is reported of Alexander, that when he went against any City, he did use to set up a lampe burning, and would make proclamation, that whosoever came in while this lampe was burning, should finde favour and have his life; but whosoever stayed till this lampe was out, he was but a dead man, and must expect no mercy; brethren know that God hath set up a lampe, and our life is this lampe; and God proclames, Whosoever comes in while this lampe is burning, shall finde mercy; but if you stay till the lampe be out, there is nothing but eternal misery to be expected. Now this lampe of your lives may not onely goe out upon the consumption of the oyle, but it may be put out by accidental means; and if this lampe be once out, and your work not done, you are lost for ever. We read in Kings 6. 7. that when Solomon was preparing the Temple, he made all things to ready before hand, that there was no noise of axe or hammer heard there: Whosoever God intendeth for a living stone in the glorious Temple of Heaven, he squares and fits them here; there is no noise of repentance and sorrow for sin after this life; what is to be done, must be done here; nothing will doe it hereafter. Whosoever thou hast to doe, doe it with all thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in the grave whither thou goest. Eccles. 9. 10. and Chapter 11. ver. 3. In the place where the tree falleth there it lyeth. Which way thou fallest when thou dyest, that way thou shalt lie eternally: if Godward, then God is thine for ever: if sinward, then misery and destruction is thine for ever. Eccles. 12. 7. Then shall the dust returne to the earth as it was, and the spirit shall returne unto God who gave it. The souls of wicked men doe returne to God that gave them, as well as the souls of the godly; that is, they doe presently returne to God to receive the sentence of their eternal doome from him, and to be stated in their everlasting condition; there is a mighty change in the soul, immediately after it is departed from the body, and is brought to stand before the glorious God, to be stated in its eternal condition. There are twelve bowres.
the day (layes Christ) wherein a man may work, but the night comes when no man can work; John 9.4. The time of this life is thy working time: but the night is coming, and then no man can work. Rev. 6.8. And I looked, and beheld a pale horse, and his name that sat on him was death, and hell followed him. Hell immediately followeth death, where death surprizeth any in their natural condition, that have not finished the work of making their peace with God. 2 Cor. 5.10. We must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ, to receive according to what we have done in the flesh, whether it be good or bad. It is not according to what we do afterwards, but according to what we have done here in the flesh, so it must be with us forever. There can be no repenting, no believing after this life, body and soul being parted, the whole man is not capable of a work of God upon it.

And besides, immediately after death, God takes all means away: you shall never hear Sermon more, never have admonition more, never have good counsel more, never have any working of God's spirit more, to draw your soules to Christ.

And not onely so, but God then withdrawes himself so fully, in regard of all the common works of his spirit, that there is a kind of blighting the soul in sin (which yet cannot so properly in regard of God be said to be sin as evil,) so that it shall be impossible for thee to doe any thing but sin; as the Saints though while they live here, they have many lusts and corruptions in them, yet immediately after death their souls are so fully possessed of the spirit, that then they cannot sin: so on the contrary, though wicked men while they live here have divers common gifts of God's spirit, and many restraints upon them; yet immediately after death, they are so fully separated from God, and God so fully withdraws himself from them, that it is impossible for them to doe any thing else but sin and rebell against God, and blaspheme him to his face. There was in Adam in innocenciness possibility not to have sinned; there is in us, while we live in this world, an impossibility but that we should sin; but in the world to come there is in the Saints an impossibility that ever they should sin: and look look how the impossibility is on the one hand with the Saints, so is the impossibility directly contrary on the other hand with the wicked: therefore the wicked must needs be stated in an everlasting evil condition. There is no more possibility for the damned souls in hell ever to doe any thing but to blaspheme God, then there is a possibility for the Saints in heaven ever to sin against God.

And yet further, at the great day Christ gives up the kingdom to the Father, and then there will be another manner of administration then before; Christ will not then be exercised in the work of his mediatorship, to mediate any further for those for whom he did not mediate in this life. And presently after the separation of the soul from the body, the spirit of God wholly departes from the soul, and the wrath of God is let out so fully into it, that it breaks the soul, and fills up every faculty of it: so that it is impossible in regard of the strong current of divine wrath that carries the soul along with it, that ever it should be exercised to all eternity any one moment in any thing but onely in bearing of torment, and divine wrath. As the Saints shall be filled up with the presence of God, and carried on with such a strong current of divine mercy, that it shall be impossible that their souls should ever to all eternity be exercised in any other thing but in the enjoyment of God, and living to his praise: so on the quiet contrary is it with the wicked: therefore after death there is a stating of both. I will enlarge my self no further in the opening of this point, but come presently to apply it, for this point is applicatory rather then doctrinal, and I shall content my selfe with three or foure branches of application and so conclude.

In the first place, hence we may see what cause we have to blisse God for the continuance of our lives, especially any that are here this day, that have not throughly made their peace with God, that are not upon certaine and infallible termes in this great businesse of providing for their eternal estates. If there remains but any doubt in thy heart concerning thy eternal condition, and if the fears of eternity have been upon thy spirit, thou wilt from this point, that hath been thus briefly spoken to, see cause to bless God with thy face up on the ground, adoring the riches of his grace that thou art alive this day? why, because thy life it is the time of making up thy peace with God; it is the time of providing for thy eternal condition: if thy life be at an end, and this work not done, then all is gone, then judgement comes, and thou wilt be infallibly and unalterably stated in a lost and undone condition. O therefore its well that thou art alive this day; if a man have a great business to doe that concerns his whole estate, or life, and it must be done in a very little time, O what a favour would he count it, to have his time lengthened out, though but a little, because his business is of great weight, and he thinkes with himself, if I miscarry in it, I am lost and undone for ever: so all those that have ever had serious apprehensions of the infinite consequence of what depends upon their lives here, they cannot but fit downe and bless God for lengthening out their lives; for the time of this life is a happy time, it is a day of grace, a day of salvation. O how happy would those poor creatures, upon whom this judgement is past, that are stated in their eternal condition, think themselves if they might have but one day wherein it might be said, there is a possibility for them to make provision for themselves concerning their eternal estate! As they were not long since, so art thou now: and therefore know how to prize thy life. O the lives of men and women (especially such as have not yet done that great work) are worth a thousand thousand worlds. I remember I have heard of a speech of a great Gentleman, who being very sick, and Physicians telling him that there was no way for him but death; O, says he, that I might live, though it were but as a Toad! and indeed what man or woman is there that hath not got a thorough and Scripture-assurance of this great work that their peace is made up with God, but may upon very good ground (if sickness be upon them) desire to live though but as a Toad, because such great things depend upon their lives here in this world? Brethren, doe but say this to your own hearts upon serious serious meditation of this that I am now speaking of. What if God should come now to this Congregation, and say to every one of you, Well, now the time that I have given you to provide for your eternal estate, is at an end; if you have done your work, well and good, you shall be saved and possess eternal glory; but you must be cast according to that which is now done. I feare if such a message should come from heaven to many of us, it would make our hearts to ache within us, and we should cry out, O Lord, give me a little space before I goe hence and be no more seen: O that I might yet have a little more time. Suppose God had taken you away when he took away such a kinman or kinswoman of yours, such a neighbour or friend, and death had come then, and judgement had then been past upon you; which way doe you thinke you must have been cast? cannot some of you remember, that if God had taken you away at such a time, or when such a one dyed, you were then in such a case, that you have cause to think you had been certainly stated in a condition of eternal misery? therefore blest be God that you are alive at this day, to heare of such a doctrine as this is; that so long as you live, God gives you time to provide for your eternal estate. Psalm. 78. 38. the Text saies, God did not stirre up all his anger, but called back his wrath; when sickness comes upon men and women, some part of Gods anger is let out; I, but if God had let out his anger but a little more, what would have become of you? you had been gone: one stroke more had cast you for ever. I, but God was pleased to call back his anger, and did not stirre up all his wrath. O blest be God for sparing you at such a time; for certainly had you died then, your condition had been as irrecoverable as the Devells themselves; now tis a day of grace, now you have the voyce of the Gospel, and the glad tidings of salvation sounding in your ears: but then you had been past the time of grace, past praying, and past repenting: now that you are not past this day, you are to prize your lives. And brethren know wherein consists the worth of your lives, and the continuance of them; there is a horible.
rible impudence in some men, they would faine have their lives lengthened, to have their lusts more satisfied; did God give thee thy life for this end? no, the end why thou shouldst desire to live is, that thou mayest have further time to make provision for that which is of such infinite consequence, which if it be not done, it had been better for thee to have been a Toad or Serpent, or the vilest creature that ever lived. O that we had hearts to give God the glory of our lives, and to prize our lives aright; excellent effects would proceed from it, were our hearts wrought to these things.

But Secondly, If the onely time that we have to provide for eternity be the time of this life, how then are those to be reproved that mispend and squander away this precious time of their lives about vanities, and neglect the great business that they were sent into the world for? If such great things depend upon our lives, then the losse of the time of our lives is a most dreadful losse; we all say time is precious, and it is so, and the through-understanding and applying of this point would make us see time precious indeed: If there could be an extract of the quintessence of all the pearls in the world put into one, it would not be such a precious pearle as this time of our lives, because there is that depends upon it that is infinitely more worth then ten thousand worlds; however men and women make little of their time, and play and sport it away, yet there is no moment of thy time that thou dost mispend, but for ought thou knowest it might be the very moment upon which thy eternal condition doth depend: thou goest abroad, and art merry, and jocund, and mispendest thy time, and abusest thy self; I say for ought thou knowest that instant of thy sinning might be the very moment upon which the very hinge of all thy eternall condition depends; and did we understand this doctrine aright, we should see it to be an exceeding great evil and folly, to mispend our precious time; men ordinarily live in the world as if they had nothing to doe here, but onely to make provision for the flesh. If a man should come to the City about a business that concerns his life, and the time he hath to doe it in were were very short, how industriously (doe you think) would he spend that time! every time the clock strikes, would strike to his heart; or suppose God should send a damned soul that is now in hell into the world again, and should say thus to him, Soul, you shall goe and live againe in the world; and I will give you a little space, you shall live a quarter or half a yeare; (or if it were but a moneth or week) and I will put you in such an estate that there shall be a possibility for you to make your peace with me, and to deliver your self from this misery that you are under: I appeal to you, how doe you think such a one would spend his time? now as you are perswaded and convinced in your conscience, how such a one would spend his time, so doe you labour to spend your time; many would have rules to guide them in their way; why take this rule, if such a thing could be, that a damned soul could be sent into the world again, and be in a possibility of another estate, I say, What you think such a one would doe, that doe you: If one should come and say to him, what shall I give for your time that is granted to you? how would he contemne him? if you offer him Crownes and Kingdomes, yea all the world for his time, (be it but a week, or a day) he would scorne such an offer, and prize one day more then a thousand worlds. Now you have had dayes and weekes, one after another, and yet for ought you know you are liable to eternal ruine; and you know not whether you have a week or a day, more before your eternal condition be stated upon you; O what need then have you to improve your time!

How few think of the passing away of their time, or that any great matter depends upon the time of their lives here in this world! you would count it a great folly and madness: if a man had a precious oyle that were worth a thousand pound a pinte, and he should set up a light with this oyle to talke or play, or doe trisling things by; what! a lampe that is fed by such oyle, that is worth thousands! surely this lampe should be for some weighty businesse, and not for trifles: Know brethren, that the time of your lives is this lampe, lighted up up, and fed with such precious unction: do not squander it away then about trifles and vanities; for there are things of infinite concernment that you have to doe in this time of your lives; tis the great charge of Christ against Jezebel, Revelation 2:21. And I gave her space to repent of her fornication, but she repented not. I remember an expression of a woman that was in great distress of conscience; some came to her, and endeavouring what they could to persuade her that there was hopes of mercy for her, she lookt with a gauchly countenance upon them, and said, Call time again, call time again: as if she had said, if you can call time again, there may be hope for me. Certainly we do not consider what depends upon time; it is a good signe of an enlightened conscience, to make conscience of time: there is nothing puts a more serious frame into a mans spirit, then to know the worth of his time; saies one (in discovering the losse of the opportunity of time) suppose there were a company of men falling to sea, and they come at last to a little Island that lies in the midst of the sea many thousand miles from any other land, and they goe and refresh themselves upon the Island, but saies the Mariner, look to yourselves, be not farre off, be within call, for I will not stay for any of you: the old men it may be are afraid to be too farre; but the young men trust to their legs, and think they can make haste; but the Mariner is gone, and they are left behind and perish: tis true, while we are here in this world, we are refreshing our selves; but be sure, saies God, you be ready when I call; and Gods call is the time of death: now God he calls, and poor creatures are not ready, and so they perish eternally. O the losse of the time of your lives will be a dreadful losse one day, and it will pierce your souls to think that once you had a day of grace, but now you have no time; judgement is now past upon you, and there is no remedy. It is reported of a woman who had her house on fire, that she was very busye and spent her time about saving of trifles, and in the meantime had a child in the cradle, and forgot that; and when she lookt upon what she had saved, she saw a few trifling things, but then it came into

into her minde, 'O what is become of my childe!', and imagining that her childe had been burnt (though it was saved) she ran mad, to consider that she should be so foolish, as to minde things of no concernment, and to forget her childe:
Take heed it be not your case; you heare that time is precious, and that there are great things that concerne your souls and eternal condition, which you have to doe; and you spend your time to get estates, to get a little pleasure, or honour in the world; but now, when the conclusion of all shall come, and you shall look back to see what you have done, and God shall come and call you to an account, and say, Well, now there is an end of your time, what have you done in this world? It may be you can say, Lord, I have got an estate, and I have led a merry and jovial life; but all this while, what hast thou done for thy soul? what hast thou done for eternity? what hast thou done for the making up of thy peace? what hast thou done about those things that are of such infinite weight and consequence? thy heart now will be overwhelmed with this thought, O Lord, I did forget my soul, I had no thoughts about my eternal estate, I have spent a great deal more time in playing, then in praying; at least more time in playing then I have done in praying to God in private; to make my peace with him: however it may be you can passe away your time merrily here, yet it will be a dreadfull thing to you hereafter, when you shall know what was the businesse of your time, and what you were borne for. I remember Bernard hath a notable expression, speaking of some calling one to another, Come let us be merry till an houre be past; fayes he (speaking with indignation against such folly) What wilt thou doe thus and thus till an houre be past, till time be past! what passe away that which the mercy of thy Creator hath so farre indulged to thee as to give it thee for reparation, and to get grace and to obtaine pardon. What to passe away time in which thou oughtest to be breathing after that life and blessednesse which thou hast lost! It becomes men, that have not made up their peace with God, to spend their dayes in bewailing of their sinful and miserable condition, and not in merrinesse and jollity, in chambering and wantonnesse: how wilt thou wish one day that thy time had been spent rather in mourning and lamenting? saies Abraham to Dives, Son, remember that thou in thy life time receivedst thy pleasures; this life is not the life of thy sensual pleasures, but to make all even between God and thy soul, when God is so gracious as to give us space for such great ends as he doth in this world, he expects that all the children of men should spend their dayes in seeking his face, and in making up their peace with him; in prizing his mercy, in admiring and adoring the riches of his grace and goodnesse in his Son— but where doe we finde this? what a different course of life is there in most men from what God expects? they are guilty of desperate folly that squander away their precious time, seeing all depends upon it.

Thirdly, If after death comes judgement, certainly then, when death findes any man unprepared in an estate of unregeneracy, that hath not made his peace with God, it must needs be exceeding dreadful because it brings judgement, and states such a one in his eternal condition. Job. 18. 14.
Death is called there the King of terrors; and well may it be so; for indeed it is the most dreadful thing in the world, to thoose that understand the meaning of their own sinful state and condition: there is enough in this to daunt the heart of the proudest stubbornest wretch that lives upon the earth, to consider that now I am launching into the ocean of eternity; but God knows I have made little provision for it; it may be it is the ocean of the wrath of this infinite God that I am now launching into, and must be in for ever; certainly (except thou haist good assurance of the work done between God and thy soul) the sight of the infinite ocean thou art launching into immediately after death, cannot but make thee give a dreadful shriecie when thou seest thou art now like to miscarry eternally; death taking an ungodly man, it is no other but the cutting asunder of the thred upon which he hung over the pit of eternal misery. It is the pulling up of the flood gates of Gods eternall wrath. Here when affilictions are upon men and women, Gods wrath is but onely like the little droppings of water through the flood-gates, as you see in flood-gates, there will be some leakings forth of some drops of water onely; but there is a vast difference between those drops, and when the flood-gates are pulled up, then the streames gush out abundantly: just so is it with Gods dealings here in the world with ungodly men; it may be Gods hand is upon them in many afflictions, but these are but as some few drops of his wrath; but when death comes and finds them unprepared, then God pulls up the flood-gates, and then the streames of the wrath of the almighty overflow them; death to them will be no other then the Sergeant of the Lord of hosts to hale them to prison: It will be a taking up of the draw-bridge, It will be to them a dismal and dreadful Sun-set, that brings with it a night of eternal darkness, and that will be a most dreadful Sun-set that shall never have day more; why, know that at death the day of grace and salvation sets to thee, and an eternal night of dismal blackness, and darkness will be upon thee; so that when thou art going out of this world, and thy peace not made with God, thou must then bid farewell to all comforts and to whatever thou didst enjoy. Now farewell those excellent truths of God, that I have had revealed to me: I shall never heare such gracious truths out of the mouthes of Gods ministers more. Now farewell all my loving friends, that I rejoiced so much in, and all the merry meetings that ever I have had; I shall never have them more. Farewell now wife, husband, children, I shall never see your faces more. Yea farewell house and lands, and all delights; farewell Sun and Moon and Stars, and all the world; I shall never see you againe till I see you all of a light fire, at the great and dreadful day of Christ. And now I am leaving the world and all the comforts here, and all the meanes of grace here; and O Lord, whither am I going? It was a speech of Pope Adrian, when he was to dye, fayes he, O my soul, my soul, whither art thou going? thou shalt never be merry more, as thou wast wont to be. It is a doleful thing for a poor creature, whose time is at an end, not to know whither he is going; to think of former pleasures and delights, and never to have them more. Me thinks when I consider the death of any ungodly man, that place in Isaiah 10:3, comes to my minde, And what wilt you doe in the day of visitation? It is true, thou dost now ruffle it out in the world, and takest thy fill of pleasure, and bearest all before thee, and wilt have thy minde, and art stout, and stubborn in thy way, and scornest the truths of God by his Ministers: but what wilt thou doe in the day of visitation, when the time shall come that puts an end unto thy dayes here? O the change that wil then be in thy spirit! God will then look upon thee with indignation, and say, O wretched creature, that hast spent thy dayes in vanity, thou shalt continue no longer in this world; and now the wrath of the Almighty is let out upon thee; Thou art upon thy sick bed in distresse, and conscience now is awakened, and tortures that soul of thine, and tells thee, that such and such wickednesse at such a time, in such a company, in such a chamber, thou didst commit; and thou beginnest now to curse thy selfe for thy folly, and for neglecting the day of grace and salvation; and now thy time is almost gone; well, thy sickness increaseth, thy paines continue, thy friends are all sent for, and they come about thee bewailing of thee, and thou beginnest to look gaitly, and drawest thy breath short, and the devil waits for his prey; thy mouth falls, thy soul departs, and there is an end of thee; an end of all thy pride, and an end of all thy stoutnesse, and an end of all thy vanity, and wickednesse: and this is the man that hath not made God his portion: mercy hath had her time, but thou hast neglected it, and now thou art gone for ever. We speak much of the mercy of God, and is it not rich mercy for God to give to thee, a wretched sinful creature, such a blessed time of repentance as thou hast in this world? for God to call, and cry to thee, and to tender thee grace and pardon, and peace; he did not doe so to the Angels that sinned; when they committed but one sin against God, he cast them away, and would not so much as treat with them about any termes of peace; and therefore seeing thou thou hast had thy time already, let all the Angels in Heaven, and Saints and creatures, yea and devils themselves, acknowledge that God was merciful to this man, to this wretched man and woman, that had such a faire time, though now judgement be upon them. O my brethren, the thoughts of death under this notion, hath a great deal in it to work upon your hearts. I remember I have heard of one that used to pray six times a day, and being asked why he spent so much time in praying, he gave no other answer but this, I must dye, I must dye; that which was to come after, would put a period to the time of his life, upon which so much did depend. O that we had hearts to consider it; and that we knew, even now in this our day, the things that belong to our everlasting peace, before it be too late. Brethren, these things are of infinite concernment to your immortal souls; the Lord grant they may be prevalent upon every one of us.

We may apply this dreadfulnesse of death (that followes upon the meditation of this point I have been upon) unto divers sorts of people: as first, me thinkes it should be of great force and efficacy to work upon the hearts of old people; your time is neer, you had need be sure that your work is done; for certainly you have no long time for the accomplishing of that great work, of making your peace with God; it is three or foure a clock (as it were) in your day of grace, the Sun is setting with you. Now if a man be to goe a journey upon his life, and hath neglected the forenoon, and much of the afternoon also, and sees the Sun draw low, he thinkes with himself, I had need make haste now, for if the Sun be once set, and I not at my journeyes end, I am a lost man, my life is gone. They that goe over where the Sea is dry at one time, and flowes at another, but so that if they mistake but half an houre, they are dead men, if by their watch they finde the time is almost come for the waters to returne, then their hearts are daunted, and they say one to another, we had need make haste, for the time is almost at an end. O consider this you old men, that have neglected the time of your youth, youth, and now your time is almost at an end, know in this your day the things of your peace, double now your diligence. It is a most dreadful thing to see an old wicked man, an old sinner, an old scorners, an old carnal wretch, that never understood the great business that he came into the world for.

Secondly, this concernes all prophane wretches, who instead of doing the work of their time, and preparing for their everlasting estate, goe directly backwards, and make the breach between God and their souls wider. If a man have a journey to goe for his life, and he must goe it before the Sun be set, and he goes a quite contrary way; when he begins to reflect upon himself, he then sayes, where am I? If the Sun goe downe before I am at my journeyes end, I am a dead man: so is it with you that goe on in wayes of prophaneffe, God hath sent you here to live; to the praise of his name, and to work out your salvation with feare and trembling, and you have gone directly backward, and the time of your lives hath been spent in nothing else, but in making your selves heaven-fold more the children of wrath then before: you had need now look to your selves; for if you dye in your course of prophaneffe you are undone for ever.

Thirdly, for those that have been heretofore in a good forwardness in the way of life and salvation, that have had some stirrings of conscience in them, but yet through the violence of their lufts have been turned back againe, and have fallen off from their former state; certainly this point might strike thee to the heart. As a man that is to goe over the Sea for his life by such a time, and he hath a good gale for the present, but when he is come neer the haven, a great gust drives him back againe; O what a sad condition is this man in? so is it with thee; the time was when thou hadst a good gale; God came graciously to thee, by the work of his Spirit, and thou seemedst to be in a good forwardness in the work thou wast borne for; but the gust of sin, and the violence of lust, hath carried thee quite back againe, and now thou art further further off then before: how should this awaken thee to improve all thy time and opportunities to the uttermost for the good of thy soul.

Againe, this concerns those that upon every discontent with themselves dead; as some froward people, if any thing crosses them; they presently with themselves in the grave. O vain man and woman, dost thou know what thou dost, to wish the time of thy life at an end? thou mayest meet with another manner of discontent then ever thou mettest within here; for after death comes judgement. Amos 5:18. Woe unto you that desire the day of the Lord, to what end is it for you? the day of the Lord is darkness and not light. So I say, woe to them that in a froward mood desire the day of the Lord, which is not a day of light, but like to be a day of darkness unto them, for ought they can tell. Instead of giving God the praise of thy life, upon every fullen mood dost thou wish thy self dead? this is a great dishonour to the grace and mercy of God extended towards thee.

Again, this concerns those that upon every drunken occasion, for a word or two, will venture their lives: tis true, fools will venture their lives for trifles, because they know not the worth of them; but those who know the worth of their lives will not doe so. I remember a story of a Philosopher being at Sea and in danger of his life, he was mightily afraid, and the Marriners were not at all afraid: what (say they) are you a Philosopher afraid, when we rude Marriners do not feare? I (say he) there is reason for it; for if I dye, a Philosopher is gone; but for you, your lives are not worth much: so they that are ready to venture their lives in a drunken quarrel, and will venture nothing for God, and a good cause, know not what their lives are worth, and that is the reason they are so willing to throw them away.

Again, it concerns those that in trouble and anguish of conscience are ready to lay violent hands upon themselves to take away their lives; one would think this point thus opened and applied might for ever keep back such a temptation for time to come. What an infinite, desperate folly is this, that that I that am made sensible of God's wrath, and am afraid of it, shall yet do that which may put me irrecoverably into it, and state me eternally in it, as they doe who lay violent hands upon themselves. If any people in the world should desire the continuance of their lives, and prize them at a high rate, those that are troubled in conscience should doe it; they should pray David's prayer, Psalm. 39. 13. 0 spare me, that I may recover strength, before I goe hence and be no more. And use God's own argument Psalm. 103.13,14. where it is said, God is merciful to his people, because he remembers they are but dust. So doe thou plead with God, and say, 0 Lord, spare me, I am but dust, and as a winde that passeth away and shall never returne againe: now is the time wherein thou hast saied thou wilt be intreated: 0 let my life be continued, for if this time be out, I am gone for ever.

Lastly, this concerns those that have been (as they thought) upon their death beds, that have apprehended themselves as dying, and have had this truth somewhat seeld upon them, that have seen eternity before them, and have been in danger (as they conceived) of everlasting ruine, and in their own hearts have received judgement, but God hath magnified his mercy towards them, and restored them againe: perhaps in this condition when thou sawest and hadst the judgement in thine own heart, that thy time was gone, thou then maddest promises, and saydest, 0 if God would spare my life, what a new man would I be! I would be sure to make use of my time in another manner then ever heretofore: Well, God hath raised thee up againe, and what then? why now thou wilt venture upon God's patience, and his wrath too; 0 woe to thee, when thy dayes are ended, and this judgement comes, it will fall dreadfully upon thee.

Wherefore my brethren, let me speake to you all (for I am not come this day onely to spend an houre with you, but to doe your soules some good) be it known to you, this is your day, the day of grace and salvation: And yet once againe, in the name of God, I declare unto you, this truth (supposing you have heard it many times before) that there is not the worst, the vilest in the congregation, that is come through the providence of God before God this day, but for ought we know it is possible for thy sinnes to be pardoned; it is possible yet for thy soule to be saved, for God to be reconciled to thee, and this day it is once more declared to thee, that thou art not yet seated in eternal misery, which might have been thy condition before now: O that when you are gone home, you would get into your closets, and fall down before God, and bleffe him for this message, once more preached to you.
Beloved, if I, or any of the servants of the Lord, should be sent by God to the gates of hell, with this message, O you damned spirits, know from the Lord, that there is a possibility for you to be saved, certainly they would with joyfulnesse hearken to such tidings. Now this cannot be preached to them, but this may be, this is preached to the vilest and wickedest wretch, and enemy to God and goodnesse that is in the congregation; and God declares this now to you, but how long it will be before judgement comes to state thee in another condition, thou canst not tell, therefore know in this thy day the things of thy eternal peace: and who knows what may depend upon one day? yet prayers and teares may doe thee good; but stay a while, and though streames of bloud should flow from thee, and thou shouldst cry and howle to God to all eternity, it would never doe it; therefore know your time; it is a happy thing for a man to doe a businesse in such a time wherein he may have the benefit of it; amongst men, though a thing be done, yet if not in the season of it, it loses of its worth and efficacy: so now prayers, and tears, and mourning, and crying to God for mercy, the efficacy of these things are gone, except they be done in time; and for ought thou knowest unlesse they be done this day, or to morrow, or very shortly, they may doe thee no good at all: therefore now take your time: God proclaims and sayes to every one of you this day, Poor creatures, as ever you expect to receive mercy in the day of Christ, look to it now; for now the golden scepter is stretcforth, now is the acceptable time, and the day of grace and salvation, come in and accept of the offers and tenders of grace and mercy now, or else you are gone for ever.

Wherefore then let this take off all slightness of heart, and those roving dispositions of your spirits, that run so after vanities. If a man that were wilde in his thoughts, and that had his eyes roving up and down, should have one say to him, Sir, consider what you doe, for it concerns your life; if you miscarry you are a dead man, it would make him call in his thoughts, and compose his spirit: so, if thou hast a flight and wandering heart, this is said to thee this day, friend, poor soul, know what thou art doing; even this dayes work concerns thy life, thy eternal estate, and take your selves off from all creatures, till you have done so great a work; so saies the Apostle 1 Cor. 7. 29, 30, 31, 32. Brethren, the time is short, it remaineth that both they that have Wives be as if they had none; and they that weep as though they wept not; and they that rejoice as though they rejoiced not; and they that buy as though they possessed not; the time is short. The word is, the time is wrapt up, it is folded up; it is a Metaphor taken from cloth that is folded even to the very fag end: the time is all folded up (sayes the Apostle) therefore let your hearts be taken off from the creature. Truly brethren, whatever you think of this point, yet those that understand themselves a-right, would not venture to be in an unconverted estate one half houre for ten thousand worlds; for they know that when death comes, then judgement also comes.

And you that are poor people, who live hardly, and in great extremity in this world, yet so long as you live here, your condition is comfortable; for you have time to doe that worke that is of such mighty consequence for the good of your souls: And indeed upon the consideration of this point, peoples hearts should be taken off from the creature; for a man had better live here in order to that great work, though as a stock or log in the fire, then to be taken away before he hath done that worke he was sent into the world for. When men are in paine, they would faine dye; I, but did they know what will be the state and condition of a wicked man man immediately after his death, they would rather live, though as the miserablest creatures in the world.

And consider all you young ones, now while God gives you time, of this great work of making your peace with him. If a man were to goe over Sea about a businesse of great weight, after he comes upon the shore, what should his first thought be? let him first make sure of his great work, and then be merry afterwards. If thou hast made sure of this great work, that thy peace is made up with God, and that thy everlasting estate is secure, then thou mayest be merry amongst thy friends, and mayest live joyfully, and comfortably all thy dayes. It was the complaint of one, that Art is long, and life short; but surely the art of providing for eternity is a long and difficult art, and thy life is short and uncertain: O therefore do not put off this great work, as Seneca speaks of some, they are alwayes about to doe, they will, and they will, and are about to live, but never live. O that you that are young ones would begin betimes; and this point settled upon the hearts of young ones, would cause them to apply themselves with all their might to the great work of their souls. And that which you do, be sure you do it with all your might; which is the Argument of the Holy Ghost, Eccles. 9. 10. Whosoever thy hand findeth to doe, doe it with thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor wisdom in the grave whither thou goest. If ever thou hadst a work to put forth thy strength about, O doe it here, doe not onely have some faint wishes and desires, and some sudden good moods, as perhaps at the hearing of such a truth as this, you have some sudden wishes and inclinations; no, but work out your salvation with feare and trembling, and be sure to take hold of all opportunities, seeing so much depends upon the short time of your lives. If a man were to goe over Sea for his life, and had a faire day and winde, it were desperate madnesse for him to say, Well, I have two or three dayes more to goe over in, and therefore I will not goe now, and so neglects his gale; and when those dayes are past, and the last day comes, he thinks to goe over, but cannot have a wind, for a world: so, many think they will repent when they come to dye. O but take heed when thou hast a gale that thou dost not neglect it, for fear it never come again; and know that if the Lord stirres any of your hearts this day, or any other day, by his word, and you neglect it, and goe to your businesse, and shops, and to your sensual pleasures and delights, you may hereafter desire to have such a time of the working of Gods spirit againe, and if you would give a thousand worlds for it (were it in your power,) you cannot have it, therefore take heed you doe not neglect this great work. And upon this ground labour to make sure work; for if a man had a work to doe, and having done it amisse, he might mend it afterwards, he need not be so exact about it: but if a man be set about a work, and he knowes when it is gone out of his hands, he can never mend it, he will not be carelesse in it, but will lay his work to the rule, and labour to make all sure. Know, it is so with you about your eternal condition: that which you doe in this world, must be available forever, you cannot mend it afterwards. If after you see your selves cast, you should say, O Lord give me farther time, and let me come into the world againe, and then I will mend this and the other fault that I was rebuked for; God will say, no; you cannot returne into the world again; therefore it neerly concerns you to make all sure while you have time. And doe not rest upon blinde hopes, and desperate adventures, I hope it will be thus and thus with me; but entreate this thought, What if it should prove otherwise? what if I should miscarry? this will mightily daunt the heart of a man, especially if he knows that upon his miscarriage, he is undone for ever.

Yet further, (which is another branch of the exhortation) my brethren, never baulk any way of God for fear of suffering, be willing to suffer any hardship for Gods way. How doth this follow? thus: If the time of thy life be that upon which the blessing of thy eternal condition depends, then it concerns thee to goe through Ritch whatever comes in thy way; as for instance, suppose a man were going to such a place place, and he must be there at such a time for his life, and riding apace through the streets the dogs bark at him (as usually the dogs bark most at those who ride fastest) how little doth he regard the barking of the dogs: but did a man ride only for his recreation, then it would be a little troublesome to him: And when a man rides for his life, though the clouds gather, and the raine falls, yet he will not returne; and if he meet with foule and dirty way, he will through it, or with a slough he will over it, because it is for his life: but if a man rides for recreation only, and meets with windes, and clouds, and stormes, he turnes back again. And truly brethren, the wayes of most Christians in religion are (me thinks) such as if they took them up for recreation, and nothing else; therefore if there be but a cloud arise, a little trouble and affliction appear, they repent their way, and presently return back again. O but did God reveal to thee what eternity is, and what depends upon the course of thy life here? then though there be clouds, and stormes, and tempests, and rugged wayes, yet thou wilt be ready to goe through all. The conclusion therefore is this, whenever thou art tempted to sin, labour by what thou hast heard this day to repel temptations; and say, God hath shewed me this day the great errand and businesse I came into the world for; of what infinite concernment those things are, that depend upon the time of my life: shall I then satisfy the lusts and corruptions of my own heart, and gratifie the devil, and the world, and in the meantime neglect that which is of so great importance for the good of my soul? Then once again, O that you all knew in this your day the things that concern your eternal peace! Consider what hath been said, and the Lord give you understanding hearts to make use of it.

What Idolaters will doe in reference to their Idol-gods

Idolaters are,

1. Earnest after their Idol-gods
2. They are mad upon their Idols
3. The strength of the affections of Idolaters after their Idol-gods appears from Jer.8.1,2.
4. Idolaters will be at any cost upon their Idols
5. Idolaters willing to suffer any thing for their Idol-gods
6. Idolaters constant to their Idols

We should take heed lest any should have their hearts more set upon their lusts, then ours are upon God.

Gods title of being glorious in holinesse considered

Holinesse in God what it is.

1. Negatively: It is that whereby his nature is free from all kind of mixture, and from the least soil and filth of some
2. Positively: It is the infinite rectitude and perfection of the will of God especially, whereby he doth will and work all things suitable to the infinite excellency of his own being.

The holinesse of God considered by looking into the holinesse of the creature

How God is glorious in holinesse.

The Saints doe especially glory in God as a holy God
The Angels in Heaven look upon God in his holinesse, and doe especially exalt him the from thence
The Church of God adore God in his holinesse
God himselfe seems to glory in his holinesse above any other attribute.

God glories in Heaven as the habitation of his holinesse
God rejoyseth in his people as they are a holy people

How it comes to pafs that there can be no good communicated unto us from God, in order to eternall life, but by Christ.

1. Because of the breach of the first Covenant that God made with mankind.
2. There is such an infinite distance between God and man, that there can be no comming together but by Christ.
3. There is the strength and curse of the law upon every soule naturally, that keeps the soul from mercy.
4. There are the cries of infinite justice against man, which must have satisfaction.

How Christ is all in all to us in God's communication of good to us.

1. From the covenant that God the Father made with his Son from all eternity.
2. Christ actually comes to be the way of conveyance of all good to us, by taking our nature upon him, and so making us reconcileable to God.
3. Christ was content to come into the world, to be made the head of a second covenant between God and mankind, to perform whatever God the Father should require for the satisfaction of divine justice.
4. By this means God in forgiving of sin, goes in a way of justice as well as in a way of mercy.
5. And he is the way of conveying good to us, as by his satisfaction, so by his intercession.

Some special things we have from God, instance in, and that Christ is all in all in those things.

1. Christ is all in all in the point of justification and pardon of sin, and the acceptation of us as righteous.
2. It is not all that we have done, nor all that we can possibly doe, that can be our justification.
3. It is not what God enables us to doe, that can be the formality of our justification.
The Contents.

It is not only what we can doe, or can be enabled to doe, but tie not Gods mercy added, if barely considered, that can eek out our justification

2. Christ is all in all in point of Adoption
3. Christ is all in all in point of our reconciliation and peace with God
4. Christ is all in all in point of all our Santiification, that is, Santiification to life
5. Christ is all in all in the want of all things
6. Christ is all in all in the enjoyment of all

And as Christ is all in all in the good we have from God, so he is all in all in what ever we tender up to God

Reasons why God will have this way of communication of himself unto us through his Son.

1. That hereby God might manifest to all the children of men what a dreadful breach their sins had made between God and them

2. God takes this way, because he sees it is the most advantageous for the manifestation of his glory
   The glory of his mercy
   The glory of his justice
   The glory of his wisdom
   The glory of his holiness

3. God saw there could be no such way to draw poor sinners to himself, as this

4. God doth it to endear his mercy to his Saints for ever

5. God delights to honour his Son, and therefore makes him to be the means of conveyance of all good to those he intends it to Use.

1. To admire the depth of the counsell of God, and the infinite glory of the riches of his grace unto mankind

4. Faith converseth with the great things of the covenant of grace.

5. Faith receives the testimony of the Holy Ghost.
   Faith makes the things of God that are absent, and but hoped for, yet to be present to the soul.
   Evils that are very nigh, faith can make them at a mighty distance.
   Good things that are absent, and a great way off, faith can make them as if they were really subsisting.

Faith makes the things of God that are absent, to be as present.

Doctrine.
That the only time that men have to provide for their eternal condition, is the time of this life; if it be not done here, there is no help afterward, for after death comes judgement.
This point is one of the most serious points that concerns the children of men.
Wicked men when they die, are stated in an irrecoverable evil condition.

The tenor upon which we all hold our lives.
There can be no repenting, nor believing after this life.
After death God taketh away all means of grace.
The souls of wicked men are then stated in such a condition that they can do nothing but sin.

At the great day Christ gives up the Kingdom to the Father.

Presently after death the wrath of God is let out fully into the souls of the wicked.

Use 1.
We have cause to bless God for the continuance of our lives, especially those that have not thoroughly made their peace with God, and are not upon certain and infallible terms in this great businesse of providing for their eternall estates.

Use 2.
These are to be reproved, that mispend and squander away the precious time of their lives about vanities, and neglect the great businesse that they were sent into the world for.
Time an exceeding precious thing.
Few think of the passing away of their time, or that any great matter depends upon the time of their lives here in this world.

Use 3.

When death findes any man unprepared in an estate of unregeneracy, that hath not made his peace with God, it must needs be exceeding dreadful, because it brings judgment, and states such a one in his eternall condition.

Gods wrath let out fully upon the wicked immediately after death.

Then they must bid an everlasting farewell to all comforts that ever they did enjoy.

The dreadfulnesse of death is applicable,
1. To old people, whose time is neer at an end, and therefore had need be sure that that great work be done of making their peace with God.

2. To prophanes wretches, who instead of doing the work of their time, and preparing for their everlasting estate, goe directly backwards, and make the break between God and their soules wider.

3. To those that have heretofore been in a good forwardnesse in the way of life and salvation, but yet through the violence of their lusts have been turned back again.

4. To those that upon every discontent wish themselves dead.

5. To those that upon every drunken occasion for a word or two will venture their lives.

6. To those that in trouble and anguish of conscience are ready to lay violent bands upon themselves.

7. To those that have been upon their death beds as they thought, and in danger of everlasting ruine, and did then promise if they lived what new people they would be, but afterwards forget all.

The efficacy and worth of a thing is when it is done in the season of it.

The consideration of time, and the worth of it, should take off all heighthnesse of heart, and roving dispositions.

The consideration of this point should take off peoples hearts from the
