LXXII SERMONS

ON The whole 53^d CHAPTER of ISAIAH,

WHEREIN

The Text is clearly and judiciously opened, and a great many most apposite, truly spiritual, and very edifying Points of Doctrine, in a delectable Variety, drawn from it, with choice and excellent practical improvements thereof.

WHEREIN ALSO

Several Adversaries of the Truth, as Socinians, Arminians, Arians, and Antinomians, are solidly and fully refuted.

BESIDES,

Many Errors in Practice incident to Professors, otherwise Sound and Orthodox in their Opinions, are discovered; and many grave, deep, and very important Cases of Conscience, satisfyingly discussed.

ISAIAH LIII. Verse 9.

Verse 9. And he made his grave with the wicked, and with the rich in his death, because he had done no violence, neither was any deceit in his mouth.

EVERY passage of our Lord's way in prosecuting the work of redemption hath something wonderful in it. We heard of several of them, especially in his humiliation, how very low the blessed Surety condescended to come for relief of the captivity; how he was put to wrestle and fight, and what great strengths or strong holds he was put, as it were, to take in. There is one strong hold (to speak so) not spoken of as yet, which must also be stormed, and the fortifications of it pulled down by the Mediator, and that is the grave; the prophet tells us, that as he declined not death, so neither did he decline the grave, but as he was cut off out of the land of the living, as a wicked man in the account of men, so in the account of men he was taken down from the cross with the thieves, and buried in the grave as one of them.

I shall not trouble you with diversity of interpretations, but shall only hint at two things for your better understanding of the words, in which the difficulty lieth. The 1st, is this, whether doth this relate to his humiliation only, or to his exaltation, or to both? For it cannot be reasonably thought but his being buried with the wicked is a piece of his humiliation; but to make it only an evidence of his humiliation, seems not to stand with the next part of the words, because he had done no violence, &c. which is a causal reason of that which goeth before. But we answer, that there may be here a respect unto both; the first words respect his humiliation, comparing them with the truth of the history, as it is set down, Matt. xxvii. where it is clear, that he was destinate in the account of men, and by their appointment, to be buried with wicked men; for they thought no more of him than if he had been a wicked man. The next words, And with the rich in his death, look to his exaltation, and the meaning of them is, that however he was in the account of men buried with thieves, and laid in the grave as a malefactor or wicked man, yet in God's account, and by his appointment and over-ruling providence it was otherways, for he put a difference betwixt him and others, and gave him an honourable burial with the rich; though he was designed by men to be buried with thieves, yet, as we have it Matt. xxvii. 57. Joseph of Arimathea went to Pilate, and begged his body, and wrapped it in clean linen, and laid it in a new tomb; which in God's providence was so ordered, both to shew a difference betwixt him and those thieves, and also to declare that he was innocent, as the reason subjoined tells us, Because he had done no violence, neither was any deceit in his mouth; and to make way for the clearing of his resurrection, he being buried in such a remarkable place where never man had been buried before.

So then the sum of the words is this; he was humbled in coming to the grave, and in mens account and destination was buried as a wicked man; yet by God's decree and providence it was so ordered, that though he was poor all his days he had an honourable burial, burial, such as rich men have, 'Because he had done 'no violence, neither was there any deceit in his 'mouth.' God will not have it as men designed, but will have him honourably buried and laid in his grave, that thereby there might be the greater evidence of his innocency, and a more full clearing and confirmation of the truth of his resurrection.

What is rendred death here in our translation, is deaths in the plural number in the Hebrew; to shew the greatness and terribleness of the death which he underwent, and the fore spiritual as well as bodily exercise that he was put unto at, and in his death; so that it was a complication of many deaths in one, and at once, which he suffered. 2. Where it is said in our translation, that, he made his grave, in the original it is, he gave his grave with the wicked; so that the pronoun he may be meant, either of the Father his giving, or it may be understood of the Mediator's giving himself; and so the meaning is, that it came not to pass by guess on God's side, but was by him well ordered; and upon the Mediator's side it sets forth his willingness to go to the grave, and his having an over-ruling hand, as God, in his own death and burial; as he saith, John x. 18. No man taketh my life from me, but I lay it down myself; his death and burial were determined and well ordered, as to all the circumstances of both, by a divine decree and by an over-ruling hand of providence, and this agrees well with the reason subjoined; because he willingly condescended to die; God put a difference betwixt him and others, as is clear in that of John x. 17. Therefore doth my Father love me, because I lay down my life for my sheep. The verse hath two parts, 1. Something foretold concerning the Messiah, and that is, That he shall make or give his grave with the wicked, and with the rich in his death. 2. There is a reason subjoined, especially to the last part, taken from his innocency, and from the difference that was in his life betwixt him and all men in the world, that therefore God put a difference betwixt him and them in his death and burial.

First then, This point of doctrine is implied here, that coming to the grave is a thing common and certain to all men; I mean, that death, or a state of death, and to be in the grave, in an ordinary way is common to all men; and whoever want the privilege of a burial, their condition in that respect is rather worse than better. It is supposed here that wicked men come to the grave, therefore our Lord is said to make his grave with them; and it is also supposed, that rich men come to the grave; therefore it is said, and with the rich in his death; that which Solomon hath, Eccles. viii. 8. of death, may well be applied to the grave; There is no man that hath power over the spirit to retain it, neither hath he power in the day of death, and there is no discharge in that war, neither shall wickedness deliver those that are given to it; the most powerful wicked man cannot prevail over it, nor is he able to resist and withstand it. Those who conquer most of the world, are constrained at length to be content with some few feet of ground, and their bodies turn into dust. Job in the 3d chapter of his book, speaks of it as common to all, to rich and poor, to high and low, to the king and the beggar, all lie there as in one common place. If any were freed from it, it would readily be rich men; but as it is, Psal. xlix. 6, 7, 8. their riches will not be a ransom for them; They that trust in their wealth, and boast themselves in the multitude of their riches, none of them can by any means redeem his brother, nor give to God a ransom for him, so precious is the soul, that the redemption of it ceases for ever. Amongst all mortals there is none that can buy himself from coming to the church-yard, or from going down into the grave; but were he ever so rich and honourable, he must be laid in a pit as well as the poor man. The bravest

and best gilded tomb is but a grave; that sentence past by God must stand and will stand, dust thou art, and to dust thou shalt return. The translation of Enoch and Elias who did not see death, does not alter the common rule, tho' it shews the sovereignty and power of God and what he can do.

Use 1. O! think more on death, and on the grave. These sure would be much more profitable subjects of thought than many things which our minds run ordinarily on. It is appointed for men once to die, and thereafter cometh the judgment. As we walk over and tread on the graves of others now, so some will be walking over and treading on ours e'er long; and within a few years our bodies will be turned into dust, and our dust will not be known from the dust of others that lived before us; it were good to have the faith of this more rooted in us, and that we did meditate more frequently and seriously on it.

Use 2. It reproves the pride of men and women, and their lusting after earthly vanities. When death and the grave come, where will all their brave houses, and cloaths, and well-drest beds be? And what will become of your silver and gold? These things will not go to the grave with you. As ye brought nothing into the world, so it is certain that ye shall carry nothing out of it; the consideration whereof should be a restraint and awe to mens exorbitant desires. The time is coming when six or seven foot in length, and two or three foot in breadth of ground will serve the richest and most honourable; and within a few years the Lord Provost's dust will not be known from the dust of the poor man that had only a share of the common contributions; the dust of both will be alike; dress and pamper the body as ye will, that beauty will not abide with you. Wherefore then serves all this pride, vanity, and bravery, seeing a very little time will lay it all in the dust, and then all our projects will have an end? As Job saith, chap. xvii. My purposes are broken, broken, and what did break them off? The grave (saith he) is waiting for me, I have said to corruption, the rottenness of the earth, thou art my father; and to the worms, ye are my mother and sister; they and I must lie together. Those that now cannot get their beds made fine and soft enough, the worms and they will lie together ere long in the grave, the chest or coffin will not be so close but they will get in, nay, they will breed in their own bodies; do we not see this daily? Were it not good that when you are going to the burials and graves of others, you were thinking on your lying down in the grave? And what will be your thoughts in that last day of all things in this world? If dead corpses could speak out of their graves, they would preach sharp warning to them that are alive, and would say to such as are carrying them thither, beware of putting off thoughts of death, and of the grave. Tho' this be a common point of truth, yet few walk suitably to it. But we are generally in our practice, as if it were no truth at all, no more minding death and the grave, than if we were to live here eternally.

Use 3. As this should make men sober in prosperity, so it should make them patient in adversity. A little time will make us all equal, and what matter is it what our condition be, if our peace be made sure with God? Heathens may shame many of us that are professing Christians, who, by the consideration of death, have been brought to be much more sober in their carriage, than, alas, many of us are.

2dly, Observe, That the Messiah behoved to come to the grave and be buried; it was so designed, foretold, and fore-prophefied of him, he made his grave with the wicked, and with the rich in his death. Hence the apostle, Acts ii. 30. citing Psal. xvi. 8. gathers, that as there was a necessity of his being in the grave, so there was a necessity of his resurrection out of it, because he should not see corruption in it,

his soul was not left in hell, or in the grave, neither did his flesh see corruption. And in all the evangelists it is clear, that after death he was remarkably laid in the grave, and very particular and special notice is taken of it. Take here briefly some few reasons of this necessity according to the Lord's appointment, and no further. The 1st whereof is this, that the spotlessness and purity of divine justice may appear, and that therefore the completeness and perfection of his satisfaction, as Mediator, to the justice of God, may be confirmed. If he had not been buried it might have been questioned, whether that which people suffer after death be a reality or not: But his three days lying in the grave is a greater evidence of the unstainedness and purity of justice, and of its impartiality, than the imprisoning of many creatures for many thousands of years would have been. This shews him to be a just God, when the sinner's Surety is not only pursued to death, but to the grave; and therefore this is always accounted the lowest part or step of his sufferings. And in the Creed, his descending into hell is spoken of, which in our excellent catechism is expounded to be his continuing under the power of death for a time. 2. It is much for the manifestation of the great love of God, and of the rich condescending grace of the Mediator, who is not only content to die, but to come to the grave, and to suffer death to have a kind of dominion over him for a time; so that as death had power to separate his soul from his body, so it maintains that power during his being in the grave. His enemies, as it were, cry, What think ye of him now? And they seal the stone, and set a watch to keep him in the grave. 3. It is for the consolation of the believer, and serves mightily to strengthen him against the fear of death and the grave: So that the believer needs not be afraid of death, but may lie down quietly in the grave, because it was Christ's bed, warmed, if we may so speak, by him;

he was there before him, and the grave is now to the believer no part of the curse, any more than death is; the grave will not swallow him up with a sort of dominion and right, as it doth the reprobate. 4. It serves to confirm the truth of the resurrection of Christ, more than if he had never been in the grave, as the apostle proves, 1 Cor. xv. from the beginning to the close, even 'till he come to that, O death! where is thy sting? O grave! where is thy victory? Our Lord by dying and being buried, hath delivered his people from both. As neither a great stone, nor a seal put on it, could keep him in the grave, but that he rose again the third day, so nothing will be able to keep believers for ever under the power of death; and as he died to disarm death, so his entering into the grave was to disarm the grave, and to open a door for believers to come through it, by his power who was dead and laid in the grave, but now is risen, and alive for evermore.

The uses are 1st, To shew the full conformity and agreeableness that is betwixt what was foretold of the Messiah and what is fulfilled; and so serves to confirm our faith in this, that he is the true Messiah, who was crucified, dead and buried. This is one of the articles of our faith foretold by Isaiah, now fulfilled and recorded to be so in the gospel. 2. It shews the severity of justice, that when any person is made liable to the lash of it, were it but as surety, it will exact of him satisfaction to the uttermost; therefore when Christ enters himself our Surety, it not only exacts death, and pursues him till he gives up the ghost, but after death pursues him to the grave. It will needs have the satisfaction of the Mediator, and he yields to it so as to lay himself by as a dead man. O! what a revengeful thing is justice when a sinner must answer to it? When the Mediator was so pursued by it, what will it do to others who are out of him? Here we may apply that word, Daughters of Jerusalem, weep not for me, me, but weep for yourselves and your children; if it be done so to the green tree, what shall be done to the dry? When the fire of the vengeance of God shall kindle that lake that burns with fire and brimstone, and when finners shall be cast into it as so many pieces of wood, or as so many pieces of dry sticks, what will be their condition? It were good in time to fear falling into the hands of the living God, which is indeed a most fearful thing, Heb. x. 31.

3. It shews the believer's obligation to God that hath so fully provided a satisfaction for him, and hath furnished him with such a ground of consolation. Beside what is done for the satisfying of justice (which is the great consolation) there is here ground of consolation against all crosses, pain, sickness, death, and the grave. There is not a step in the way to heaven but our Lord hath gone it before us. We have not only a Mediator that died, but that was buried. O! but this is much, when believers come to think on their going to the grave! Will it devour them, or feed upon them for ever? No, he hath muzzled it, if we so say; they rest in their graves as in a bed, their bodies being united to him, and their dust must be numbered. It is true, the bodies of the reprobate must be raised up, yet upon another account, and not by virtue of their union with Christ, and of Christ's victory over death in their stead, as believers are. In a word, they have many advantages that have Christ, and they have a miserable life, a comfortless death, and a hard lying in the grave that want him; therefore as the shortest way to have a happy life, and a comfortable death and burial, and the grave sanctified to you, seek to have your interest in Christ made sure, then all things are yours, and particularly death and the grave, which will be as a box to keep the particles of your dust till it restore them faithfully to Christ, to whom it must give an account. But as for you that slight and do not know Christ, ye have a dreadful lot of it, no interest in Christ living, no union with him in the grave, nor at the resurrection; and if you did but seriously consider that you will die, you should also consider, that it is good dying and being in the grave with Christ, and that it is a woful thing to be in it without him.

3dly, Observe, That all the sufferings of our Lord Jesus Christ, to the least particular circumstance of them, were ordered of God, and before-hand determined and concluded upon; none of them came by guess upon him; that he should suffer and die, and what sort of death he should die, and that he should be laid in the grave, all was before concluded and determined. When we read through the gospel, it were good to take a view of the Old-Testament prophecies of the covenant of redemption, and of the ancient determinations concerning him, as Peter doth, Acts ii. 27. Him being delivered by the determinate counsel of God, ye have with wicked hands crucified; God's foreknowledge and determination fixed the bounds, and laid down the rule, to speak so, to those wicked hands in the crucifying of him, without all tincture or touch of culpable accession to their sin; and in looking over his sufferings we should call to mind, that this and that was the Lord's purpose, and that in these sufferings, even in every part of them, the Mediator is telling down the price that he undertook to pay: All which demonstrates the verity of our Lord's being the true Messiah.

4thly, From comparing the two parts of the first part of the verse together, He made his grave with the wicked, as to the estimation of men, and with the rich in his death, in respect of God's ordering it, observe, That often God hath one design, and men another, and that God will have his design to stand, and infustrably to take effect; when some would design shame to his people, he will have them honoured.

The 1st use serves to comfort God's people, when they

they are in their lowest condition, and when their enemies are in highest power ; our Lord is carrying on his design, and making his and their enemies to fulfil it. Pilate and the chief priests, with the scribes and Pharisees are putting Christ to death, the multitude are crying, crucify him, and preferring a robber to him : But in all this, they were fulfilling what God had before determined to be done, which we say is matter of great consolation, both as to our own particular case, and as to God's general guiding of the world, and especially of his church therein. There is nothing wherein the malice of men seems to be most prevalent, but our Lord is still gaining his point upon, and by them ; they are all the while executing God's determination, though to their own ruin.

2. See here an exact correspondency betwixt all the circumstances of our Lord's sufferings, and God's determination, and a concurrence of all of them for the promoting of it in the history of the gospel. A bone of him is not broken, when the bones of the two thieves crucified with him are broken ; a spear is run into him, and his side is pierced, when they are not pierced ; and all this, because it was prophesied of him, that a bone of him shall not be broken, and they shall look upon him whom they have pierced ; and when it comes to his burial, Pilate wots not what he is doing, when yet he is fulfilling the Lord's design, in giving his body to a rich man, Joseph of Arimathea, when he asked it from him to be buried by him, whereby the prophecy in the text is fulfilled. The wickedness of some, the contingent actions of others, and the ignorance of many, concur all together, to make out the same holy and unalterable design and purpose of God.

And therefore 3dly, Let us stay our faith here, that our Lord is still working in all these confusions, and when matters are turned up-side-down to human appearance, our blessed Lord is not non-plussed and at a stand when we are, he knows well what he is doing,

and will make all things most certainly, infallibly, and infrustrably to work for his own glory, and for the good of his people.

From its being said, that he made his grave with the wicked, as holding forth Christ's willingness to be buried (as he saith of his death, John x. 17. No man taketh away my life from me, but I lay it down and take it up again.) Observe, That in the whole performance of the work of redemption, even in the lowest and most shameful steps of it, our Lord was a most willing condescender, He made his grave with the wicked; he was a most free and willing undertaker. When as it were, the question was put, Who will satisfy for elect sinners? He comes in, and says (as we have it, Psal. xl.) Lo, I come, in the volume of thy book it is written of me, I delight to do thy will, O my God; I am here, Father, as if he had said, I offer myself, and accept of the terms chearfully and with delight; I rejoiced, saith he, Prov. viii. 28. in the inhabitable parts of the earth, before the foundation of the world was laid, my delight was with the sons of men. So it may be made evident, that in all the parts of his sufferings, and in every step thereof, he did most exactly, and also most willingly perform whatever was carved out to him. He preached and wrought miracles, and did all with delight, as himself says, John iv. 32. It is my meat and my drink to do my Father's will, and to finish his work; it refreshed him when his body was hungry and faint, to be carrying on the work of redemption in speaking to a poor straying sinner. If we yet look a little forward, we shall find that he so longed for the saddest part of his exercise, that he is pained till it be accomplished. Luke xii. 50. I have a baptism to be baptized with, and how am I straitned till it be accomplished? His heart longed so much for it, that he would not approve or admit of any thing that might stand in the way of it; therefore he rejected Peter's advice with holy detestation, with a get thee behind me, Satan;

Satan ; he well knew what was in Judas's mind, and yet would not divert him, but bid him do what he was about, quickly. He went to the garden where he was known to resort, and gave his enemies opportunity to take him, and would not suffer his disciples to draw a sword to oppose them. When he was before Pilate, he would not open his mouth ; when he was buffeted, ' he gave his back to the smiter, and his ' cheeks to him that plucked off the hair, and hid not ' his face from shame and spitting ;' because he knew what was aimed at in all this, and accordingly saith, Matt. xx. 20. ' The Son of man came not to be served, but to serve, and to give his life a ransom for ' many.' When his holy human nature feared to take the cup, and when he was thereby put to pray, ' Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me,' he sweetly subjoins, ' but for this cause came I unto ' this hour ;' and the nearer it came to his death he discovered his desire after it the more ; with desire have I desired, saith he, or with special desire have I desired, to eat this passover with you before I suffer : Even when he was to eat the last passover, and to take his last farewell, and to be in readiness for what was coming. What could have been the mean or motive to bring it about, if he had not been willing ? It was this willingness that Jehovah was pleased with, and that made his sacrifice to smell sweetly to his Father, who loveth a chearful giver ; and it never had been satisfactory, if it had not been willing but extorted ; and therefore saith he, John x. No man taketh my life from me, but I lay it down ; and I delight to do thy will, Psal. xl.

Use 1. See here a great evidence of the love of God, and of the Mediator ; behold what manner of love is this, that when it was not required, he should offer and freely give himself to death, and to the grave, this is the love of a friend, and beyond it, that he should have so loved his church as to give himself for her her to death, and to the grave ; well may he say as he doth, John xv. 15. Greater love hath no man than this, &c.

2dly, It sheweth what great ground of consolation and encouragement a sinner hath that would fain be at Christ, to believe on him, and to expect life and salvation through him ; our Lord was most willing to lay down his life, and come to the grave for that end, and is it possible, that he will refuse a sinner that comes unto him, and that would fain share in the benefit of his sufferings, which was his great end in suffering ? This one thing, to wit, the willingness that he had to suffer ; and the delight that he had in suffering, to purchase redemption to sinners, may be as a strong cordial to strengthen the heart of a fainting sinner, and a great motive and encouragement to come forward to him. Thou wilt, it may be, say, I wot not if Christ loves me ; O ! consider these sweet words, Rom. v. 10. If he died for us while we were yet enemies, how much more shall we be saved by his life ? I shall close this discourse with these two words, the 1st, whereof is, for encouragement ; if there be any body here that would fain have Christ's love, and partake of his death : Take courage, seeing our Lord out of the great desire he had to promote the salvation of sinners, Gave himself to death, and to the grave, will he not willingly make application of his purchase to them when they seek it ? That he was willing to undergo all this, is a far greater matter than to receive a sinner coming to him ; and if he did all this for this very end, will he dispute it when it comes to the application ? The 2^d word is, That this is, and will be a ground of conviction to all who think little of our Lord Jesus, and of his love, and who will not part with a base lust for him, and who will not make choice of him, but will refuse, reject, undervalue, and despise him, with all that he hath done and suffered ; it will exceedingly aggravate your condemnation, tion, that when he was so willing to die for the good of sinners, ye were not willing to live for his satisfaction. Think on it, O! think seriously on it; these things are the truths of God, and the main truths of the gospel, that lie very near the engaging of hearts to Christ: and if such truths do you no good, no others easily will. God give us the faith of them!

Verse 9. And he made his grave with the wicked, and with the rich in his death, because he had done no violence, neither was any deceit in his mouth.

THIS is a most wonderful subject that we have to think and speak of, which concerns the sufferings that our blessed Lord was pleased to undergo for sinners. And this makes it the more wonderful, when we consider what he was made, and what his carriage was; He was numbred with the transgressors, and made his grave with the wicked; and yet he hath this testimony, that there was no violence in his hands, nor any deceit in his mouth; he was a sinless Mediator, not only before men, but before God.

These words considered in themselves, give us a short and compendious account of a holy walk; most perfectly and exactly fulfilled in the conversation of Jesus Christ; he had done no violence; or, there was no violence in his hands, that is, there was no sinful deed contrary to the law of God in all his practice and walk;

and there was no deceit, or guile in his mouth, that is, no sinful or deceitful expression : In short, neither in deed nor in word was there sin in him ; he did wrong to none by his deeds, and he deceived no one by his words. This guile or deceit, as it looks to the first table of the law, imports, that there was no falshood or corrupt doctrine in his ministry ; he did not beguile or seduce the souls of any in leading them wrong. And as it looks to the second table of the law more immediately, it imports that he was sincere and upright, that there was no deceit, no violence, or dissimulation in his carriage ; so that whether we look to him as God's public servant in the ministry, or to him in his private walk, he was completely innocent, and without all sin, as the word is, 1 Pet. ii. 22. Who did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth ; however men accounted of him, he was an innocent and sinless Saviour.

If we look on the words as they depend on the former, they are a reason of that difference which in his death and burial God did put betwixt him and others. Though he was by wicked men put to death, as a wicked person, yet God in his providence so ordered the matter, that he was honourably buried with the rich ; Why so ? this is the reason of it : Because, though they esteemed him a false prophet, and a deceiver, a wine-bibber, &c. yet he had done no wrong to any, neither by word or by deed, and therefore God would have that respect put on him after his death in his burial, and so a remarkable difference to be made betwixt him and others.

Observe hence, 1st, That our Lord Jesus, the High Priest of our profession, that laid down his life for sinners, is completely and perfectly holy. He hath that testimony from the prophet here, that ' he did no violence, neither was there any deceit in his mouth ; ' he hath this testimony from the apostles ; from Peter, 1 Pet. ii. 22. ' He did no sin, neither was any guile found

‘ found in his mouth ;’ from John, 1 John ii. 5. ‘ He ‘ was manifested to take away sin, and in him is no ‘ sin ;’ and from Paul, Heb. vii. 27. ‘ He was holy ‘ and harmless, and undefiled, separate from sinners.’
In this respect there is a difference betwixt him and all men in the world. And it was necessary and requisite for believers consolation, that it should be so ;
It became us, saith the apostle, to have such an High-priest, 1. If we consider the excellency of his person, he could not be otherwise, being God and man in one person, and having the fulness of the Godhead dwelling in him bodily. 2. It was necessary, if we consider the end of his offices ; he being to offer up an acceptable sacrifice to God, therefore must he be holy and harmless, otherwise, neither the priest nor the sacrifice could have been acceptable. 3. It was necessary, if we consider the dignity of his office ; it behoved him to differ from the former priests under the law ;
and if he had not been without sin, he would not have differed so from them. 4. It was necessary for the persons for whom he undertook these offices ; such a High-priest became them, and another could not have done their business. All these we shall find put together, Heb. vii. 26, 27. where the apostle having said, verse 25. That ‘ he is able to save to the uttermost all ‘ those that come unto God through him ;’ subjoins,
‘ For such an High-priest became us, who is holy,
‘ harmless, undefiled, separate from sinners, made ‘ higher than the heavens, who needeth not daily, as ‘ these high priests, to offer up sacrifices, first for his ‘ own sins, and then for the sins of the people.’ The most holy of all the priests had sins for which they were to offer sacrifices, and so had the holiest of the people ; but Christ was holy and blameless, and had no sin, and it behoved him to be so ; as I said just now, his sacrifice could never have been accepted for others, if he had needed to offer up sacrifice for himself.

The uses are these: Not to speak how it vindicates our Lord Jesus Christ from all those aspersions cast upon him by wicked men, who called him ‘a glutton, ‘a wine-bibber, a friend of publicans and sinners, a ‘deceiver,’ &c. He was holy and harmless, and ere long he will gloriously appear to be holy, when those who pierced him shall see him and be confounded; I say the uses are these, in reference to the church and people of God: It serves, 1st, To shew the condescendency of love, and the contrivance of infinite wisdom in the behalf of sinners. Such a High-priest became us; love condescended and wisdom contrived, that he should become man and suffer, the just for the unjust. Wisdom set on work by grace provided for sinners such an High-priest as they stood in need of; and indeed sinners have no want here, for they have an High-priest becoming them, and this is an evidence of it, that he is holy, harmless, undefiled, separate from sinners, &c. 2. It serves to be a great ground of encouragement to sinners, to step to, and make use of Christ’s sacrifice. Our Lord had no sin, and needed not to offer a sacrifice for himself; and if he offered sacrifice for atonement, wherefore did he so? It was either for himself, but that could not be, for he was holy, or for nothing, or no end, and to say so were blasphemy, or it must be for a real satisfaction for sinners, or such as should make use of him. And thus faith hath a sure ground to lay hold on, namely, that his satisfaction was real; and that it was for this end, to be for the benefit and advantage of such as should believe on him; and therefore look upon Christ’s suffering, and upon his innocency who suffered, and ye will find that ye have a suitable High-priest, and atonement made for you; O that is a sweet word, 2 Cor. v. ult. ‘He hath made him to be sin for us who knew ‘no sin, that we might be made the righteousness of ‘God in him.’

3^{dly}, It is ground of great consolation to them that betake

betake themselves to Christ. Why? Our Lord's sacrifice cannot but be accepted, for there was in him no guile, nothing that might make his sacrifice unfavoury; and as it commends the way of grace to a sinner, so it is ground of encouragement to a sinner to expect to be accepted through him; for if the temptation should say, thou art a sinner, and such and such a great sinner; that is nothing to the purpose, for God hath accepted of Christ and of his sacrifice; and if thou make use of his sacrifice, it cannot but be accepted for thee. Here then is the consolation, that we have such an High-priest as became us, who needed not to offer for himself, but only for the sins of the people, that is of his own people.

4thly, It serves notably for our imitation. He was holy, and in his holy walking hath left us a copy to write after and to walk by; and therefore in your speaking of Christ's holiness, or in your reading of it, consider that he is thereby writing a copy for you, and bidding you 'purify yourselves as he is pure, to be 'holy, as he who hath called you is holy; learn of 'him to be meek and lowly of heart,' to be humble and heavenly minded; and in whatever respect his life and walk is proposed to us as a pattern, set yourselves in his own strength to imitate it, and be ye followers of him as dear children; whenever ye read of his obedience to the death, of his holiness in all manner of conversation, and of his fulfilling all righteousness, let it provoke you singly and seriously to design and endeavour conformity to him therein in your practice.

2dly, From the connexion of these two, that he was accounted a sinner before and at his death, and that after his death God did put that note of respect upon him, that he was buried with the rich, because he had done no violence, &c. but was holy and harmless in his life; Observe, that however holiness may suffer as long as holy persons live, yet at death and after death, there is ever a testimony of the Lord's respect put on it;

or thus, holy walkers are always separated and distinguished from others at their death; it's ever otherwise with them than it is with others when death comes, however it hath been with them in their life. 'He made his grave with the wicked, and with the rich in his death, because he had done no violence,' &c. This hath been confirmed in the experience of all that ever lived: the rich glutton, Luke x. vi. hath the better life as to externals and Lazarus had a poor afflicted life; but when death comes, the rich glutton goes to hell, and Lazarus goes to the bosom of Abraham. This is laid down as a certain truth, Eccles. viii. 12, 13. 'Though a sinner do evil an hundred times, and his days be prolonged, yet surely I know that it shall be well with him that fears God, but it shall not be well with the wicked,' there shall be a change at death. And it cannot be otherwise, whether we look 1. To the holy nature of God, who hath a complacency in holiness, as it is said, Psal. xi. ult. 'The righteous Lord loveth righteousness, his countenance doth behold the upright:' Or whether, 2. We look to the word of God, which Isa. iii. 10, 11. bids say to the righteous; 'It shall be well with them, for they shall eat of the fruit of their doings,' (for blessed are the dead which die in the Lord, they rest from their labours, and their works do follow them) 'but woe unto the wicked, it shall be ill with him, for the reward of his hands shall be given him:' The same connection that was betwixt Christ's life, though a suffering life, and his death, shall be betwixt the life of all his members, and their death: If we suffer with him, we shall also reign with him.

The uses are 1. To let us see what is the true way to eternal well-being, when this short life shall be at an end; and it is the way of holiness: And it also serves to answer a great question, who shall be happy at their death? Even they that are holy in their life; whose hands have done no violence, and whose mouths have have had no guile, to wit, with the full consent of their will, and without all gracious reluctance; for absolute freedom from these in this life was proper only to our Lord Jesus since Adam's fall. Such may expect the Lord's countenance when death separates their soul and body; therefore observe this as a mark for a trial, and see what is your carriage, and judge accordingly; and seeing the Lord hath joined holiness and happiness together inseparably, presume not to separate them.

2dly, Is it so that holiness hath a good and comfortable ending? (which is the substance of the doctrine) it should commend to us the study of holiness as the most precious, advantageous, honourable, sure and safe course that a man can follow: Say to the righteous, it shall be well with him; it is not, say to the honourable man, or say to the rich man, or to the wise man, &c. God hath not chosen many of these, as is clear, 1 Cor. i. 26. but, say to the righteous or holy man, it shall be well with him. And is there any thing that should have so much influence on men, as how to be well in the close? People may have a fighting life of it here, and may suffer much, and be under reproach for a time, as Christ was; but if thou be holy, ere thy body be laid in the grave, it shall be well with thy soul. And as for all who have chosen the way of holiness, we are allowed to say this to you, that it shall be well with you at death, and after death at judgment, and even for evermore. To them, saith the apostle, Rom. ii. 9. who by patient continuance in well doing, seek for glory and honour, and immortality, eternal life. O how many great and good things are abiding all the honest hearted students of holiness! Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, nor heart conceived, what they are.

3dly, It is ground of expostulation with them that neglect and despise holiness. As it will be well with the righteous or holy, so they shall have a miserable and desperate lot of it, who either despise or neglect holiness. Woe to the wicked, saith Isaiah iii. 11. it shall be ill with him. Some of you may think that ye are rich and honourable, are well cloathed, sit in fine houses, and have rich covered tables, when the poor are kept at the door, and are destitute of these things; and are ready to bless yourselves, as being well, tho' ye care not for, nor seek after holiness: But woe unto you, for ye must die, and go to the bottomless pit, and there ye will not have so much as a drop of water to cool your tongues in those tormenting flames: Neither your riches, nor honours, nor pleasures, will hold off the heat and fury of the vengeance of God, nor in the least ease you in your extreme pain; but as it is, Rom. ii. 9. indignation and wrath, tribulation and anguish (four terrible words) will be upon every soul of man that doth evil. O! do ye not believe this? It is the truth of God, and a very plain truth; and we are persuaded none of you will dare downright to deny it: Holiness will have a sweet and comfortable close; and the neglect of it will have fearful effects following on it. What is the reason then that holiness is so little followed? Do ye believe that ye shall die? And think ye ever to come to judgment, or to hear that word? 'Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you: For I was hungry, and ye fed me; naked, and ye cloathed me,' &c. O what will become of many of you, when the Lord Jesus will be revealed from heaven, with his mighty angels, in flaming fire, to render vengeance to all them who know not God, and obey not the gospel; and will say to you, 'Depart ye cursed into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels: For when I was hungry ye gave me no meat,' &c. This is, I grant, a general truth, yet if it be not received, we know not what truth will be received; and if it were received, the practice of holiness would be more studied; there would be less sin, and more prayer, reading, meditation, more seeking after knowledge, and more watchfulness and tenderness of conversation: Always, in this the Lord shews the connection that is betwixt holiness and happiness; and here ye have the copy and pattern of an exemplary walk.

4thly, From this, that the holiness and blamelessness of Christ here spoken of, is marked in him as peculiar to him; for it fits him to be a High-priest, and proves that only he could be the priest that became us, and that no other could atone for us, as the apostle reasons, Heb. vii. 26, 27, 28. For the law maketh men priests that have infirmity; but the word of the oath, which was since the law, maketh the Son, who is consecrated for evermore: From this I say, observe, That all men, even the most holy, except Christ (who was both God and man) are sinful, and not one of them sinless, while living here on earth; and the reason is, because if any were sinless, then this that is said here would not be peculiar to our Lord Jesus Christ, that he did no violence, neither was there any deceit in his mouth. This being a singular character of our High-priest, that none of his types could claim, it exclusively agreeth to him, so as it agreeth to none other. The scripture is full to this purpose, in asserting, that not only all men are sinners, as considered in their natural condition, but that even believers are sinful in part; for the same apostle John that saith, 1 epist i. 3. Truly our fellowship is with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ, saith also verse 8. If we say, we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us; and verse 10. If we say, that we have not sinned, we make him a liar, and his word is not in us; and 1 Kings viii. 46. and Eccles. vii. 20. There is no man that doth good and sinneth not, plainly insinuating, that all have need of an intercessor. We shall not insist on this, only from these words compared with the scope, making it peculiar to Christ to be without sin, and implying, that none others are so, but we would also consider the necessity of its being so. 1. For distinguishing and separating of Jesus Christ from all others, by putting this dignity on him, of being holy, harmless, undefiled, separate from sinners; this is his prerogative, and badge of honour, above others. 2. It is necessary for this end, to demonstrate the need that there is of offering himself a sacrifice for sinners; and that it was not for himself, but for sinners that he offered up himself, and that there is a continual necessity of making use of that sacrifice; for if there were not a continuance of sin in part, while believers are out of heaven, there would be no need of this part of Christ's office; if we were holy and harmless ourselves, we needed not such an High-priest.

Use 1. This may serve to establish us in the faith of this truth, that among all men there is none, except Christ, that is without sin; sin is still abiding in them, while in this world; of none of them all can it be said, that they have done no violence, neither is there any deceit in their mouth; none of them could ever say, since Adam fell; the prince of this world cometh, and hath nothing of me; yea, this is a special qualification of Christ Jesus, for his priesthood, that he was without sin, and behoved to be so. I am not pleading, that sinners should take a liberty to sin, because there is no perfection attainable in this life, God forbid; woe unto them that make such an use of this truth; nor do I speak of it to allow any to dispense with, or to give way to themselves to sin; for we shewed before, that Christ is here proposed, as our pattern, and we are bid to purify ourselves, as he is pure: But this we say, that none living here on earth are without sin; the most perfect men that are on this side eternity, carry about with them a body of death, called five or six times sin, Rom. vii. that hath actual lustings, and a power, as a law of sin to lead captive, and that makes the man guilty before God.

Use 2. For reproof to two sorts of enemies to this truth. 1. Those inveterate enemies of the sacrifice of our Lord Jesus Christ, to wit, the Papists, that black train that follows antichrist, who plead for a perfection according to the law, as attainable in this life, laying down two grounds to prove this perfection. 1. That the inward lustings, or first risings and motions at least of the body of death, are no sin; and 2^{dly}, their expounding of the law, so as it may suit to their own apprehension and opinion, yet so, as they say, that every believer, or godly person, attains not to this perfection to keep the law wholly, but only some of their grandees. This the Lord hath mercifully banished out of the reformed churches, as inconsistent with the experience of the saints, ‘who find a law in their members warring against the law of their mind,’ and leading them captive to the law of sin that is ‘in their members;’ inconsistent with the scriptures, which clear, that none have attained, or do attain perfection in this life, but the contrary, that in many things we offend all; and inconsistent with grace, that leaves sinners still in Christ’s debt, as standing in need of his imputed righteousness. This perfection they place in inherent holiness, and habitual grace, but we insist not on it. Secondly, Another sort of enemies are reprov’d here, are the old Familists, who are owned by those who are called Antinomians, several of which miserable persons are now going up and down amongst us, who say, that the people of God have no sin in them, wherein they are worse than Papists; for Papists make it peculiar to some only, but they make it common to all believers; and Papists make their perfection to consist in inherent holiness, but they make the nature of sin to be changed, and say, that sin is no more so in a believer, even though it be contrary to the law of God. We grant indeed, that the people of God are free from sin in these respects, 1. In this respect, that no sin can condemn them, they are not under the law, but under grace; in that respect, Rom. viii. 1. it is said, that, There is no condemnation to them who are in Christ. 2. In this respect, that they cannot fall into that sin which is unto death, as is clear, 1 John v. 17. 18. And 3dly, in this respect, that they cannot so sin as to lie, or be under the reign or dominion of sin, as is evident, Rom. vi. 14. The believer delights in the law of God according to the inner man, Rom. vii. 22. and is not in sin, neither doth commit sin, as the unbeliever doth, for the seed of God abideth in him, and is kept from being involved in that which the corrupt nature inclines the believer to. So then, what the scripture speaks of believers being free of sin, is to be understood in one of these respects. But to say, 1. That a believer cannot sin at all, sad experience and the practice of the saints is a proof of the contrary; or, 2. To say, that sin in a believer is no sin, because of his faith in Christ, is as contrary to scripture; for the law of God is the same to the believer and unbeliever, and sin is the same to both, adultery is adultery, and murder is murder in David, as well as in any other man, sure, when Christ bade his disciples pray for forgiveness of sin daily, he taught them no such doctrine, as to account their sins to be no sins; for if so, they should neither repent of sin, nor seek the pardon of it, as some are not ashamed to say they should not. That which we aim at, is to clear it to be Christ's prerogative only to be free from sin, none other in this life can claim it; and to teach believers to carry about with them daily, all along their mortal life, that which is for their good, even the sense of sin. I know it is made a jest by some, who pretend perfection to the people of God, that we should think and say they have sin, and are not perfect: And we are by these men called Antichristian-priests and Jesuits, because we preach that doctrine. But let it be soberly considered, whether doth better agree with Papists and Jesuits,

to say that believers are without sin, or to say that they have sin; They who say that believers, or the saints have no sin, do agree in this with the Papists, who maintain a perfection of holiness, or a conformity to the law in some in this life, and who deny the lustings of the body of death to be sin; without which opinion, though most gross, they would not, nor could, with the least shadow of reason, maintain their doctrine of justification by works: And yet some now among us will needs call us Popish, because we say that we have sin, and that none of God's people are without sin in this life. This seems to be very strange; but that which hath been the thought of some sharp sighted and sagacious men, since the beginning of our confusions, to wit, that Popery is a working, as an underhand design; is by this, and other things, made to be more and more apparent. Is there any thing more like Popery working in a mystery, yea more Popish than to say, that the motions of corruption in believers are no sins, that a man or woman may attain to perfection in holiness here, and yet to carry on this with that subtilty, as confidently to aver, that it is Popery to say the contrary? Nay, if the scriptures they make use of in their papers or pamphlets be well considered, we shall find that not only a perfection in holiness and good works is pleaded for, but a possibility of fulfilling the law, and covenant of works. As namely, 1 Pet. i. 15. 1 John iii. 3. and v. 5. and Matt. v. ult. Will ye, say they, call yourselves saints that are not purified even as he is pure? And will ye call yourselves believers, that have not overcome the world, &c. As if all that is commanded duty might be, or were perfectly reached in this life; or as if no distinction betwixt begun, yea, considerably advanced holiness, and intire perfection were to be admitted. That for which I mark this, is to shew that the design of Popery seems to be on foot, the devil in some considerable persons venting these things, when the great patrons patrons and authors of them lie hid, and in the dark; and it is observable, which we have heard of late, that some of their ringleaders in this time have declared themselves expressly for Popery. Though we have reason to bless God, that the people in this place are kept free of these things; yet this truth is worthy the vindicating, and the hazard and danger is to be guarded against by all of us, when this foul spirit is driving so hard, and prevailing with some to publish abroad this error in papers; and so seeking to draw people into the snare, lay down but these two principles both now mentioned, that they that have faith have no sin, and that they that want grace should not pray. What would they turn to, and resolve in? Satan's design in this is doubtless to make all untender, in their walk. It is strange, that it is not seen and observed. What a terror and torture would it be to an exercised and tender Christian, and how would it put his conscience on the rack, to say to him, What a faith is this of yours, that cannot keep you altogether from sin, and that cannot quite overcome the world? God be blessed, that hath given poor believers other and better grounds in the gospel, by which to judge of their faith, so that they may own their faith as sound, tho' they have a mixture of unbelief with it, and yet unbelief is always a sin, and may say with that poor man, Lord, I believe, help thou my unbelief.

3dly, Observe, That to the making up of a perfect holy walk, there is a necessity both of holiness in practice, and of soundness in judgment, that no deceit or guile be in the mouth, and that no violence be in the hands. And this is needful to be taken notice of, because many have an aptitude to think, that people may be truly holy, be of what opinion, judgment and persuasion they will; as if God had left the mind of man as a bare empty table or board, that he might write on it whatever he pleased. But our Lord is vindicated here, from the scandal of corrupt doctrine, as well as from scandals in his practice; and therefore as we would say on the one hand to you, who are found in your judgment, and hate error, yet if ye be gross and untender in your practice, the soundness of your judgment will not prove you to be holy; so upon the other hand, we do say, that though it were possible, ye could be sinless in your practice, if you take a latitude and liberty, as to your judgment to be corrupt, and to vent what you please, you will never get God's approbation, as being holy persons; therefore let both be joined together, soundness in judgment, and tenderness in practice. God give the right use of these things!

S E R M O N XXXVI.

ISAIAH LIII. Verse 9, 10.

Verse 9. And he made his grave with the wicked, and with the rich in his death, because he had done no violence, neither was any deceit in his mouth.

Verse 10. Yet it pleased the Lord to bruise him, he hath put him to grief: When thou shalt make his soul an offering for sin, he shall see his seed, he shall prolong his days, and the pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in his hand.

WE were speaking something the last Lord's day, of the innocency of our Lord Jesus, which is here comprehended, and summed up in these two.
 1. That there was no violence in his hands. 2. That there was no deceit in his mouth; however he was accounted of among men, and by them numbered among mong transgressors, yet he was not so in very deed, and before God.

The prophet proceeds, and answers an objection, How came he then to suffer, if he was so innocent? especially his sufferings being ordered by God, who is said to give his grave with the wicked. He answers the objection, and removes the offence, by giving three grounds for this, ver. 10. Yet it pleased the Lord to bruise him, He hath put him to grief; this is the first reason, and it is taken from the fountain when his sufferings proceeded, God's good pleasure graciously ordered it so; it was the good pleasure of Jehovah, that it should be so. The second reason is taken from the nature, or end of his sufferings, in these words, when thou shalt make his soul an offering for sin; though he suffered before men as a sinner, yet before God it was an offering for sin, to satisfy for, and to remove the sins of his elect people: The word may be either, when thou, or when he shall make his soul an offering for sin: But both come to one thing, which is this, That his sufferings not such as befel other men, nay, nor such as befel innocent men; but they were ordered on a higher design, and for an higher end, even to be a satisfaction for sinners, and to make way for their freedom. A 3^d reason is this, as his sufferings flowed from God's good pleasure, and were a satisfaction for the sins of his elect people, so it hath notable and noble effects. And there are three mentioned here.

1. He shall see his seed; he shall have a numerous offspring, many that shall have eternal life from him: Men by their suffering of death are incapacitated to increase their offspring, but this is a quickning suffering, and a death that hath a numerous offspring.
2. He shall prolong his days, which seems to be another paradox; for mens days are shortned by their sufferings and death; but though he be dead and buried, yet he shall rise again, and ascend, and sit down at the right hand of the Father, and live for ever, to make

make intercession for his people. A 3^d effect, which is the conclusion of all, is, The pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in his hand; God hath designed him for a work, which is the great work of redemption, even the bringing of many sons to glory; this is the will of him that sent him, that he should give eternal life to as many as should believe on him; and this is called God's good pleasure, which shall thrive and prosper in his hand: He shall pull many captives from the devil, and set many prisoners free; he shall by his sufferings overcome the devil, death and the grave, and all enemies; and shall gather the sons of God together, from the four corners of the earth; and that work shall not miscarry, nor be frustrated, but thrive in his hand. So then in this text, we have much of the gospel comprehended in few words.

We shall speak a little to one observation more, from the close of the 9th verse, where Christ Jesus his sinlessness, and innocency are holden forth in these two, There was no violence in his hands, no sinful practice in him; and there was no deceit in his mouth. Which not only respect his sinless carriage before men, and say, that he was no liar or dissembler in his dealing and converse with them; but also his doctrine, and so say, that there was no doctrinal deceit in him; which is, when men lie concerning God to men, which is a gross sort of lying and deceiving of souls, in making them take that for truth which is no truth, and in derogating from the truth, and making them take that for error which is truth; as the apostle speaks of such, that they speak lies in hypocrisy. These words, There was no deceit in his mouth, respect both, especially the last, that is, the doctrinal deceit or corrupt teaching (from which he was free altogether;) I say they respect that especially; because he was calumniated, traduced, and called a deceiver of the people: That is, (as if the prophet had said) most untrue of him; there is no deceitful word in all his doctrine; though it was imputed to him, yet he was most free from it. Hence observe, that exact holiness and blamelessness takes in holiness in a man's conversation, in respect of practice, and soundness in his judgment, in respect of doctrine. For if our Lord be a pattern of holiness, that which was in him as our pattern, is called for from us, even to be pure as he is pure; No violence was in his hands, he was no stealer, no robber, nor oppressor, to speak so with reverence, And there was no deceit in his mouth, the word and worship of God were not wronged by him. And he is holden forth for an example to us in both.

That which we would say further on this, shall be in a word of use; where we may clear both the branches of the doctrine, in meeting with two exceeding prejudicial tenets among men.

There are some, who if they be not erroneous in their opinions, and sectaries, they think they are well enough, and insult over the infirmities of poor people, that fall into these errors; and they will, (like those spoken of) whore, drink, steal, lie, &c. and yet lean upon the Lord, and say, Is not the Lord among us, no evil shall come upon us. Such halve and divide godliness, they will not be Papists, Puritans, nor Sectaries, but there is much unholiness in their practice, much self-seeking, pride, hypocrisy, formality, deceiving, counselling, falsehood, and they cover all with this, that they are sound as to their profession; though only hearing, and not doing, professing and not practising. But they should consider, that Christ saith not, blessed are they that hear only, but blessed are they that do the will of God. O! beware of this great deceit; it is a piece of Christ's innocency and holiness, that no violence is in his hands; there was no sinful thing in his practice, no sinful word came from his mouth. Ye shall never be accounted followers of Christ, though ye give your bodies to be burnt for the truth (as it is to be feared few of you would do) if your conversation

tion be not suitable, God will never accept of your testimony. Therefore divide not these things which God hath put together; let holiness be in your practice, otherwise Papists and Quakers, yea, the grossest and most abominable hereticks, and you will be alike utterly disclaimed.

2. The other branch of the use is, That suppose there were never so much apprehended tenderness in people's walk, though they were much in duty, and though they should give all they had to the poor, yet if deceit be in their mouth, if they corrupt the truth, and teach others so to do, there is a want of the one half of holiness, yea, in some respect, of the best and chief half of it. And the reason is, 1. Because the image of God consists as much in the truth as in the practice; nay, if practice be not conform to truth, it is no true holiness, and where error is drunk in, there is so far an utter unsuitableness to the holiness of Christ, as well as where profanity appears in the conversation, For there was no deceit in his mouth. 2. Because this word of God prescribes the doctrine of faith to be believed, as well as duties to be performed, and the right grounding of faith is a main, if not the main thing, wherein the image of God consists, to wit, in knowledge; and error is as inconsistent with knowledge, as ignorance is, yea, more, in so far as it leaves a contrary impression of untruth on the soul, which is worse than simple ignorance. 3. Because, when a person miscarrieth, by turning aside from the truth to error, he also miscarrieth in his practice, at least so far; the right conceiving of truth, being both the ground of our faith, and the rule of our practice. As for instance, let once the conceit and fancy come in, of peoples being above ordinances, no conscience is thenceforth made of sanctifying the sabbath, or Lord's day, nor of any other duty of worship; but men become almost, if not altogether atheists. Yea, 4. The coming in of error begets a sort of presumptuous confidence.

dence. Therefore Christ says, He that breaks one of these commandments, and teacheth men so to do, he shall be called least in the kingdom of God; he not only breaks the command himself, but he seeks to engage others to do so likewise. So that an error from the truth, is a sin against the first table, and so among the great evils; and the teaching and propagating of error, is a sin against the second table, because it hazards the soul of our neighbour; whereas violence in the hands hurts only his person or estate. And 5thly, If we look to the rise of error, or whence it comes, we shall find it to be a fruit of the flesh, Gal. v. 19. and that which flows from our corruption, and is therefore ranked with witchcraft, adultery, fornication, idolatry, hatred, variance, &c. 6. If we look to the scripture account of it, and of the propagators of it, we shall find that, 2 Cor. xi. 13. they are called false apostles, deceitful workers, ministers of Satan, not common sinners, transforming themselves into the ministers of Christ, and no marvel, for Satan himself is transformed into an angel of light: For their work is to gather in souls to the devil, to hale them as in a net to him, to be his disciples. Or, 7. If we look to the effects that follow upon error, and the propagators of it, we shall find them to be dreadful; for as it is, 2 Pet. ii. 1. They draw upon themselves swift destruction; and chap. iii. 16. They wrest, or pervert the scriptures to their own destruction. In all these respects, error in judgment is as evil, if not worse, than profaneness in practice. And if we look through the churches of Christ, we shall find that there hath been more palpable havock, and destruction of souls since Antichrist arose, by his gross errors, and damnable delusions, than hath readily been by sin in practice; which men do not own and avouch, as they do these delusions. Think therefore seriously on this, whoever would be pure as Christ is pure, should study soundness in judgment, as well as tenderness in practice. And yet how many are readily dily mistaken in this? Who, if they meet with some that can speak a few good words, and make pretences to a holy walk, though the second commandment be baffled and disgraced by them, and the name of God torn, and though the fourth command be made of none effect, or esteem, by them, it is thought but little of, all is covered with this, that they are good people, and of a tender walk. But, O! can they be good who abuse that wherein the name and image of God are most tenderly concerned? And will God account that to be holiness agreeable to his law, that flights, depreciates, and vilifies the best part of his law? Let me therefore beseech you to hear me, and to join error with other sins, and look upon unsoundness in the truths of God, as a fruit of the flesh, and withal to look upon sound knowledge in the mind, and the form of sound words in the mouth, as being a duty that is called for from you, as well as other duties. We the rather take occasion to speak to this, because the devil is seeking to turn men meer atheists, Gallios as to the truth of God, to care for none of these things; and to wear out the esteem of truth, so as to make people look upon error, as if there were no hurt in it. It is sad that there is not more scaring at, and keeping distance from the company of such, who only give a parcel of good words, and make shews of respect to piety. In this lukewarm time, there is need to guard against this temper, or rather distemper; and to look well that we halve not, nor divide the pattern and copy which God in his word hath set before us; we should study purity and tenderness in our walk, and growth in sound knowledge; and should walk humbly under the impression of our hazard. It is sad, indeed, when people are ill-grounded, and yet scarcely discern it. It seems to be a sifting time, and some are already taken off their feet, who thought not some months, or years since to have carried it, in reference to the truth, as they have done. It hath been God's mercy to this place, that he hath hedged us about hitherto, at which the devil hath raged not a little. Be humbled, and have an eye to him that can keep his people, and can establish them in the truth, and make them unblameable in holiness till the coming of the Lord.

We come now to the 10th verse; and from the first part of it, Yet it pleased the Lord to bruise him, he hath put him to grief; these three things arise clearly. 1. That tho' our Lord Jesus was most innocent in his own person, yet he was put to exceeding sore trials and sharp sufferings. For 1. He was bruised, to wit, like corn betwixt the upper and nether millstones, or or like grapes in the wine-press; which respects not so much his outward sufferings, tho' great (for a bone of him was not broken) as his inward soul-sufferings, and the inward pressures of wrath that were on his human soul. 2. He was put to grief, was sore straitened, and in an agony; and these expressions import so much, 'My soul is exceeding sorrowful, even unto death, my soul is sore troubled, and what shall I say?' and, 'My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?' The particulars of this grief were spoken to before; and we shewed in what respect he was so humbled, and that he was most sinless, and without the least carnal passion, under those expressions, in which the sense of grief vented itself most in him. Only if it be here asked, what is the reason, why the prophet doth so much insist, in pointing out Christ's sufferings, and the extremity, of them, that scarce almost there is not one verse, but he hath in it some one or other new aggravation of them; we conceive the reason of it is, 1. Because there is nothing wherein the greatness of the love of God, and the kindness of the Mediator's condescending do appear more than in this; for the more he suffered, the more the love of God shined, and his condescendency appeared the more; this being the great instance, and demonstrative proof of the love of God, God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, as it is John iii. 16. O! manifold and vastly comprehensive so! what is unfolded in it, eternity will but suffice fully to unfold it; and this being the great instance of the Mediator's condescendency, and of his commending his love to sinners, That while we were yet enemies, he died for us; as it is, Rom. v. the Lord loves to have this the subject of our thoughts, that we may be led thereby to the soul-ravishing, and satisfying contemplation of love, and whence it came. 2. Because there is not any one thing that lies nearer, or that is readily of greater concern to believers, than to be well acquainted with Christ's sufferings, wherein the Lord would have his people spiritually clear; and it is their concernment in a two-fold respect. 1. As it is the ground of their peace; therefore he is called our peace and a propitiation; for by being acquainted with Christ's sufferings, believers have a solid ground for their faith, whereby they discover access to peace with God, to pardon of sin, and justification, the Mediator having undergone these sufferings for this end. 2. As it is the ground of their consolation, considering that they have a suffering Mediator, that hath paid the price that was due by them; even such an one that knows what it was to be bruised with wrath, and is therefore very tender of, and compassionate towards souls, that are under accusations of conscience and apprehensions of wrath. Those are sweet words which we have to this purpose, 1 John ii. 1. If any man sin, we have an Advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous, who is the propitiation for our sins, who was content to suffer and satisfy for them. O! consider then what ye are doing, when ye read of his sufferings; for the very marrow of the gospel, and the life of the consolation of the people of God lies here. 2. From these words, Yet it pleased the Lord to bruise him, he hath put him to grief. Observe, serve, That the Lord Jehovah had the main and principal hand, in all the sufferings of this innocent Mediator. It was not the Jews, nor the scribes and Pharisees, nor Pilate, but it pleased the Lord to bruise him, and to put him to grief; as is clear, Acts iv. 27, 28. ‘Herod and Pontius Pilate, the Gentiles and ‘people of Israel were gathered together, to do what‘soever thy hand and thy counsel determined before

 ‘to be done.’ In all that they did, they were but doing that which was carved out before, in the eternal counsel of God; and therefore Peter says, Acts ii. 23. ‘Him being delivered by the determinate counsel
 ‘and fore-knowledge of God, ye have taken, and by ‘wicked hands have crucified and slain. The Lord’s hand was supreme in the matter, and we may gather the supreme and sovereign influence of the Lord’s hand, in these three respects, in Christ’s sufferings,
 1. In respect of his appointing them. It was concluded in the counsel of God, what he should suffer, what should be the price that Jehovah would have, and the sacrifice that he would accept of from his hand. 2. In respect of the ordering and over-ruling of his sufferings, when it came to the execution of his ancient decree. He who governs all the counsels, thoughts, and actions of men, did in a special manner govern and over-rule the sufferings of the Mediator. Though wicked men were following their own design, and were stirred and acted by the devil, who is said to have put it into the heart of Judas to betray Christ; yet God had the ordering of all them who should betray him, what death he should die, how he should be pierced, and yet not a bone of him broken. 3. In respect of his having had a hand actively in them; and as he was the chief party that pursued Christ. It was he that was exacting the elects debt of him; therefore the Lord looks over Pilate and Herod to him, and says to Pilate, Thou couldest have no power over me, except it were given thee from above; and to his Father he said, Father, take this cup from me; and, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? He was pursued as standing Surety in our room; in which it is said, Rom. viii. He that spared not his own Son: He spared him not when he cried, but would have him drink off the cup; and Zech. xiii. 7. Awake, O sword, against my shepherd, and against the man that is my fellow, smite the shepherd. The message comes from him, and he gives the sword a charge, and orders it to smite him. In all which respects it is said, The Lord bruised him, and he hath put him to grief. It was this more than sword or nails, or spear, or whip, that made him cry out; another, and a higher hand brought his sinless soul to more bitterness, than all the sufferings he endured from men.

Use. This leads us to vindicate the sovereign and holy providence of God, in that wherein men have a most sinful hand, and are most unexcusable. Though Judas that betrayed, and Pilate that condemned the innocent Son of God, acted most sinfully; yet the Lord himself hath an active over-ruling hand, in carrying on his own design; and what Judas and Pilate, with other wicked men did, was so far from being by guess, that they were the executioners of his ancient decrees. And in this he is most pure and spotless, in discovering and manifesting grace, holiness and justice, when men were shewing their corruptions, impiety and injustice most. Therefore the holy providence of God mixeth no more as to any sinful participation with mens sin, in their sinful and wicked actings, than the covenant of redemption mixed itself with the sinfulness of them that crucified Christ. Nay, this is a principal diamond in his crown, that he can not only govern all the natural second causes that are in the world, in their several courses and actings, and order them to his own glory, but even devils, and wicked men, and hypocrites, their most corrupt and abominable actions; and make them infrustrably subfervient to the promoting of his own holy ends and purposes, and yet be free of their sin, for which they shall be accountable to him. And as it was no excuse to Judas or to Pilate, that they did what before was decreed of God ; so it shall be no excuse to any man in a sinful course, that God hath a hand in every thing that comes to pass, who yet is just and holy in all. It may also stay our hearts when the devil and his instruments, are as it were, running mad, that they can do no more than what God permits, nay some way commissioneth them to do. The devil could not so much as touch one of Job's sheep, without leave asked and given. ' O the depth both of the knowledge, ' and of the wisdom of God ; how unsearchable are his ways, and his judgements past finding out ! 3. As we may see here the concurrence of the persons of the blessed Trinity, Father, Son, and Holy-Ghost ; the concurrence of Jehovah with the Mediator, for carrying on the same design, the work of man's redemption, (for it pleased them all ;) so taking the Lord Jehovah essentially, as the comprehending all the three persons, we may observe, that the Lord is well pleased with, and hath delight in prosecuting the work of redemption, though even to the bruising the second person of the God-head, considered as he became man and Mediator ; not that he delighted in the sufferings, as such, of his innocent Son, for he afflicts not willingly, the children of men ; but considering the end, and the effects that were to follow, to wit, the seed that he should beget to eternal life, and the captives whom he was to redeem. In that respect, it was not only not against his will, but it pleased him well, or as the word is in the New Testament, it was his good pleasure, alluding, as it is like to this of the prophet ; hence, when Christ speaks of the work of redemption : He calleth it the Father's will and work ; the Father's will, when he says, I came not to do my own will, but the will of him that sent me ; The Father's work, while he

he says, I have finished the work thou gavest me to do: And here it is called his pleasure; for there was nothing without himself to move him to it; when he might have suffered all fallen mankind to lie still in their forlorn condition, it pleased him to give his Son, of his own good will, to redeem several of them.

Use. If we put these doctrines together, they afford us wonderful matter of consolation. 1. That we have an able Saviour, that hath given a sufficient ransom for us, a price that cannot be overvalued. 2. A willing Mediator, that gave himself; no man took his life from him, but he laid it down of himself, and took it up again. 3. A willing Jehovah, contriving, and taking pleasure in contriving the redemption of elect sinners, through the death of his own Son. Which reproves, and gives check to the wonderful strange mistakes that are often found with some poor souls concerning the way of peace; as some will be ready to say, O! If Christ were as willing to take me, as I am to take him; as willing to welcome me, as I am to come to him. But is not this a proof of his willingness, that he was content to be bruised, and put to grief about the work of our redemption? Others have a secret apprehension, that if God were as willing to receive and save them, as Christ is, they would have more confidence; but says the prophet here, it pleased the Father to bruise him: The Father first contrived the plot of sinners redemption, (if we may so speak) Jehovah thought it good. He loved the salvation of sinners so well, that he was content to seem in a manner regardless of his own Son's cries and tears, for a time, to make way for performing that satisfaction that was due to justice; and he did this with good will, and pleasantly. We shall not insist more on particular uses. But is there, or can there be greater ground of consolation, than this? Or is there any thing wanting here to complete the consolation? Is there not a well furnished Saviour commisfioned to give life to whom he will; who hath purchased it, that he may give it? and a willing, loving and condescending God, willing to give his Son, and willing to accept of his death for a ransom, and what would ye have more? The party offended is willing to be in friendship with the offending party, and to give and accept of the satisfaction: What can temptation say, or what ground is there for jealousy to discover itself here? He that did not spare his own Son, but willingly and freely gave him to death for us all, how shall he not with him also freely give us all things? as it is, Rom. viii. And if we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son, when we were enemies, shall we not much more be saved by his life? as it is, Rom. v. 10. There is a great disproportion betwixt Christ and other gifts, yea, and the gift of heaven itself. And shall a poor sinner have a suffering Saviour given, and may he not also expect pardon of sin, justification, faith, repentance and admission to the kingdom? There is here good and strong ground of consolation, to them that will build on it. Let the Father, and Christ's love to you be welcome in its offers, that his end in bringing many sons to glory, be not frustrated by any of you, so far as you can; though it cannot indeed be frustrated, For the pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in his hand, and he shall see the travel of his soul, and be satisfied.

S E R M O N XXXVII.

ISAIAH LIII. Verse 10.

Verse 10.—When thou shalt make his soul an offering for sin, he shall see his seed, he shall prolong his days, and the pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in his hand.

CHRIST and his sufferings have been a most delightful subject to be spoken and heard of, before ever he suffered; and they should be to us no less now, but much more so, even very glad tidings to hear, that ever the Son of God was made an offering for sin.

This verse, as we hinted the last day, doth set forth Christ's sufferings, in these three respects, that the design of God in bruising the innocent Lamb of God might be the better understood. 1. They are holden forth in the rise from whence they came, or in the fountain whence they flowed, the good pleasure of God. It pleased the Lord to bruise him, to put him to grief. Which the prophet marks, 1. To shew that all the good that comes by Christ to sinners is from the Lord's own bosom. It was concluded, and contrived there, and that with delight, there being no constraint or necessity on the Lord to give his Son, or to provide him to be a Surety for sinners; but it was his own good pleasure to do so. 2. To shew the concurrence of all the persons of the Trinity in promoting this work of the redemption of sinners; which was executed by the Son the Mediator, to shew, that the love of the Son in giving his life, is no greater than the

the love of the Father, in contriving and accepting of it for a ransom, there being naturally in the hearers of the gospel this prejudice, that the Father is more rigid, and less loving than the Son ; but considering, that it was the Father, Son and Spirit that contrived Christ's sufferings ; that the Son's sufferings were the product and consequent of this contrivance, it removeth this corrupt imagination, and prejudice, and sheweth, that there is no place for it. It doth also contribute notably to our engagement to God, to be thoroughly persuaded of the Lord's good pleasure in the sufferings of the Mediator, as well as in the willingness of the Mediator to suffer ; he having performed the will of the Father in the lowest steps of his humiliation. 2. They are exprest, and holden forth in their nature and end, they were to be an offering for sin ; and this follows well on the former verse, because it might be said, how could he, that had no violence in his hands, nor guile in his mouth, be brought so low ? He hath answered in part, by saying, It pleased the Father to bruise him, and to put him to grief. But because that does not so fully obviate, and answer the objection ; he answers further, that there was a notable good end in it ; though he had no sin in himself, nor are we to look on his sufferings, as for any sin in him, yet we are to look upon them as a satisfaction to justice for the sins of others, even as the bullocks, lambs, and rams, and the scape-goat, were not slain for their own sins, for they were not capable of sin, yet they were some way typical offerings, and satisfactions for sin, in the room of others for whom they were offered ; so our Lord Jesus is the proper offering, and sacrifice for the sins of his elect people ; and his sufferings are so to be looked on by us, and this is the scope. But to clear the words a little more fully, there are different readings of them, as they are set down here in the text, and on the margin. Here it is, When thou shalt make his soul an offering for sin ; on the margin it is, when

when his soul shall make an offering for sin. The reason of the diversity is, because the same word in the original, which signifies the second person masculine, thou, meaning the Father, signifies the third person feminine, his soul shall make itself: But on the whole, whether we apply it to the Father, or to Christ, both answer the same end; it seems to do as well to apply it to Christ; the former words having set forth God's concurrence, and good pleasure to the work; these set forth the Mediator's willingness; as in the last verse, it is said, that he poured out his soul unto death, and properly Christ is the priest that offered up himself; yet we say there is no difference as to the scope, the will of the Father, and of the Mediator, in the work of redemption, being both one; though, as we said, we incline to look on them, as relating to Christ.

2. Offering for sin in the original signifies sin; so that the words are, when thou shalt make his soul sin, the word being ordinarily used in the Old Testament, and thence borrowed in the New, to signify, a sin-offering, as Exod. xxix. 14. and Levit. iv, v. and vi. chapters, where the sin-offering is appointed, it is the same word that is here, intimating that the sin-offering was designed to bear their sins. They shall lay their hands on the sin, or sin-offering, because the sacrificed beast was typically to have the peoples sins imputed to it, though properly no man's sin is imputed to any, but to Christ. This is also clear, if we compare Psal. xl. 6. with Heb. x. 5, 6. that which in the psalm is rendered sin-offering, in the original is sin; but the apostle, Heb. x. hath it sacrifice for sin: And it is the same word which he hath, 2 Cor. v. ult. He was made sin for us, that is, an offering for sin; by which we may see the unwarrantableness of some mens accounting Christ to be formally a sinner, because he is called sin, and because our sin is said to be laid on him, which in scripture phrase, is as much as his being a sacrifice for sin in the room of sinners.

3. His soul may be taken either simply, for he shall be an offering for sin, the soul being often taken for the whole person; or it may be taken more properly, to relate to his sufferings, called the travel of his soul, verse 11. however it is the person, the man Christ, soul and body, that is the sacrifice; and more especially his soul as the wrath of God was on it; and when he suffered, his soul did undergo that wrath, as well as his back was given to the smiter, and his cheeks to them that plucked off the hair.

4. There are two words further, which we would hint at in the exposition, for clearing of Christ's being called an offering for sin. 1. We would put a difference between the offerings and sacrifices which were for sin under the law, and this offering, which is applied to Christ. The apostle says, Heb. x. That it was impossible, that the blood of bullocks, and of goats could take away sin. They were not properly sin-offerings, but as they were types of that offering which was to come; and so when Christ is called an offering, he is distinguished from all the offerings that were offered before him, by priests on earth, in this, that his offering or sacrifice takes away sin, by virtue of itself, according to the covenant; but these offerings of those priests that were under the law, (as is clear, Heb. ix. 13.) took not away sin by themselves, but only so far as Christ who was typified by them was made use of; and from this we may see it clear. 1. That it was by the blood of Christ, that the fathers under the law had their sins pardoned, and that the pardon of sin was to them an effect of this offering, as well as unto us. 2. That all those sacrifices and offerings under the law, were types of this one offering; and not the anniversary sacrifice only, which was offered once a year by the high-priest; which we the rather hint at, because both these are by Socinus, that enemy of Christ's satisfaction, controverted, he aiming thereby to draw souls from depending on this offering.

offering. 2. What we speak of Christ's sacrifice, relates to that which he performed on earth. Though he be yet a priest, and lives for ever to make intercession for us, yet this offering respects that which he offered while he was here in the world, and especially that which he offered on the cross, as it is said, Eph. v. 2. 'He hath loved us, and given himself for us, an offering and sacrifice to God for a sweet smelling savour;' and Heb. x. 12. 'This man after he had offered one sacrifice for sins, for ever sat down on the right hand of God;' and by his sacrifice once offered up before, he went into the most holy: He hath perfected for ever them that are sanctified; which is also a truth controverted by that same enemy Socinus; the clearing of it serves, not only to open the meaning of this place, but to let us see the efficacy of Christ's sufferings, and the nature of them, that in them, his offering, as it brings pardon of sin, and peace with God, does principally consist. So then the meaning of the place is in short, that though our Lord Jesus had no sin, yet it pleased God in his counsel, to appoint him to suffer; and that his sufferings should be an offering for the sins of others.

More particularly, if it be asked, what is meant by this, an offering for sin; we shall clear it from the type. And 1. It is here supposed, that there is sin on the person, and that wrath due for sin is to be removed. 2. It is supposed, that there is an ability in the person to remove the sin, and yet a necessity to have it removed, or else he must suffer. 3. There is supposed the intervening, or coming of something in the place of that person that is guilty of sin, and liable to wrath. 4. There is supposed the acceptation of that which interveneth by God, the party offended; and so it presupposeth a covenant, whereby the Lord hath condescended to accept of that offering. Take it in the sin-offering goat, the scape-goat, Levit xvi. a lively type of Christ, when he is brought into the congregation. 1. The priest must put his hands upon him, and confess the sins and transgressions of the people over him, which signified their acknowledgement of their sins, and a liableness to suffering, because of them. 2. It supposed their proposing of that goat, as a sacrifice to bear their sins, and to take them on him: Therefore it was said, The priests shall put the iniquities of the people upon him. 3. The one of these goats was to be sent away into the wilderness, and the other was to be killed; and generally all the sin-offerings were to be killed: So that no remission of sins was without blood, and they came in the room of the sinners, bearing as it were their sin and their punishment. And 4. It is to be an atonement, to wit, a typical atonement: By this means the people were to have access to ecclesiastical privileges; but they could not purify the conscience, except Christ was made use of, who was the true atonement then, as he is now still for sin; and by virtue of his sacrifice according to the covenant, they were to expect for the pardon of the sins borne by him.

We come now to observe some things from the words. And 1. It is supposed here, that even the elect, and consequently all others, are by their sin liable to God's judgment, and obnoxious to his wrath? there were no need of a sin-offering, if this were not. The name that Christ has here, supposes that there was sin, and that there was wrath for sin lying at the door of all men. Since man fell, and brake God's command, all men are before God like Isaac, lying before his father, ready to be killed, his father having his hand stretched out with the knife, ready to take away his life. And our Lord Jesus is as the ram that was caught in the thicket of thorns, whereby elect sinners are freed, and himself made the sacrifice that was provided in their room and place. Thus in the name that our Lord Jesus bears, we have holden forth to us, the condition that all of us are in

by nature, if Christ interpose not to take the stroke off us on himself, laying himself open to the stroke of justice for sin: To clear it, consider these three things, which will hold out, what this state of ours is. 1. The natural sinfulness, and guilt that men are lying under, which makes them naked, and to be as that wretched infant, (spoken of, Ezek. 16.) lying in their blood, cast forth into the open field, to the loathing of their persons. This makes God and them to be at variance, and lays them open to the stroke of justice. 2. Consider the interveining of the law of God, that threatens the curse on sin wherever it is, and pronounces this sentence, that ‘the wages of sin ‘is death,’ and says to the sinner, as it is said to Cain, ‘If thou sin, death lies at thy door;’ and in this sense, sinners are not only like to malefactors, taken and apprehended, but like to such when sentenced to death; therefore John iii. 18. ‘He that believes not, ‘is condemned already. 3. Consider that men in their natural state, who have broken the covenant of works, have justice some way pursuing them, to the executing of the sentence, which God in his law pronounced against them; and they are as those shedders of blood before they fled into the city of refuge, having the avenger of blood following hard at their heels; in which sense, John iii. 36. it is said, ‘He that believes not, the wrath of God abides on him.’ There is an actual appointment, or ordination of the curse added to the law’s sentence, till by Christ it be removed; and this is in some sort holding him fast, and taking him as it were by the throat. By the first of these man is found guilty, and liable to judgment; by the second, he is sentenced; but by the third, the sentence stands over his head, ready to be executed, and bespeaks him thus, thou art cursed, therefore thou art a dead man.

Soberly think upon this, and make these uses of it,

your own in particular, a very terrible and dreadful condition, wherein they are like men lying bound to be a sacrifice to the wrath of God, the Lord's hand being stretched out, to lay on the stroke, and the wrath of God abiding on them. Do ye indeed believe this to be your state and condition, till application be made of Christ's sacrifice, and till there be a laying of your sin on him by faith, that ever till then ye are liable to the law's sentence, and that the curse and wrath of God abideth on you? And yet this is the state and condition of all the children of Adam, that have not had Jesus Christ put in their room. It was typical, if the people did not bring an offering, as was prescribed, their sin remained in them; but it is real here, sin and wrath remain here, where Christ is not made use of by faith.

The 2d use is, for expostulation with you, that are still in nature, (and I wish there were fewer of you in this case to be spoken to than indeed there is.) How comes it to pass, when this is your condition by nature, that ye are so secure, and that ye have little or no apprehensions at all of the wrath of God, and of the hazard of your immortal souls? Ah! are there none such here, that apprehend their hazard? Were ye ever under it? And if so, how have ye been delivered out of it? Or who is come in your room? Do ye think it nothing to live in sin, and to have the wrath and curse of God abiding on you? There are many of you who are sleeping sound now, and that disdain to take notice of the rebukes of conscience; but as Solomon speaks of the man that was sleeping on the top of the mast, and so complaining of that, and of them that deceived him; so shall it be with you, that can lie still securely sleeping in sin, and that put by one day after another, and do not make use of this sacrifice. All that the gospel aims at is this, that ye should endeavour to have the enmity removed, and that the quarrel that is betwixt God and you may not be

be continued and kept up; especially, seeing there is a way laid down how to have your debt satisfied for; which if ye neglect, what will ye do when your day is gone? Are there not many dying daily; and is there not a day of reckoning coming, when the stroke that is hanging over your head will fall? And seeing it is so, why do ye lie still, and despise Jesus Christ? If it were believed what dreadful wrath is abiding many whereof your senselessness and security is a part; if you did consider what a terror it will waken in your consciences one day, ye would certainly think it good news to have the sufferings of Christ spoken of, and the benefit of them offered unto you.

The 3d use is, to stir up sinners to thankfulness, especially such of you as are blest with effectual counsel, to make the right use of this sacrifice: O! consider how much ye are obliged to God, and to Christ the Mediator. The preaching of the gospel is now thought little of, and is tasteless to many: But did ye know what is your state and condition by nature, how near ye are to hell, and how near the curse and wrath are unto you, even ready to take you, to tear and devour you, the Mediator's interposing to satisfy for you, would make him more lovely to you; and you that have got an interest in him secured, should think yourselves much, unspeakably much in his debt. This was the condition that grace found you in, even liable to the stroke of God's drawn sword of justice; and our Lord Jesus on the one side stepped in, and said, hold, Lord, let that be on me, and let them go free; and upon the other side, there was God's good pleasure, condescending to accept of his offer; and saying, Awake, O sword! and smite the Shepherd, and spare the sheep: What obligation should this lay upon you, to love and be thankful to God, and to the Mediator, who interposed to keep the stroke off you? I say off you who are sinners, and apprehensive of wrath; this is Christ's offer, and if ye be fled to him for refuge,

it is an evidence that he hath freed you of your debt, and purchased an absolution for you, And there is no condemnation to you, as it is, Rom. viii. 1. whereas before ye were in a manner condemned already. But the truth is, our Lord Jesus is undervalued, not only by them that do not apprehend their hazard, and so do not make use of him; but also in a great measure by them that do apprehend it, in so far as they give way to unbelief, and dare scarcely trust to his sacrifice.

The 2^d and next thing implied here, is, that tho' men be naturally under sin, and obnoxious to the wrath and curse of God, by reason of sin, yet there is nothing that can take away that sin, and free them from wrath, but Christ Jesus his offering up of himself a sacrifice for sin. Therefore he is so made the offering for sin here, as it is exclusive of all other things; nothing else could do it, as it is, Heb. x. 14. He by one offering hath perfected for ever those who are sanctified. The blood of bulls and of goats could not take away sin, neither is there, as it is, Acts iv. 12. any other name under heaven given to sinners whereby they can be saved, but the name of Jesus. I shall not speak here of the nature of Christ's offering and sacrifice; but sure, though all men be under sin, and wrath by nature, there is no other way to remove it, except by this sacrifice: Thousands of rams, (as it is, Micah vi. 7.) and ten thousand rivers of oil, the first-born of the body will not take away the sin of the soul; Christ's offering up of himself, in God's account is the only sin-offering, for the removing of sin and wrath from sinners. Is it needful to prove this? We wish it were not; but the truth is, it is hardly believed by men and women. Consider therefore shortly these three things, and ye will find it true, 1. The certainty and exactness of the curse that follows sin, as we may see, Gal. iii. 10. Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things written in the book of the law to do them.

them. Whatever may be said of God's absolute sovereignty, whereof we will not now speak; God hath so ordered his covenant, and revealed his will in his word, that the soul that sins shall die, if a sacrifice be not put in its room. 2. Consider the ineffectualness of all other things to satisfy justice, though we should multiply offerings; what cares God for these? All the beasts on the mountains are his, he delights not in the blood of bulls and goats, as it is, Psal. l. thousands of rams, and ten thousand rivers of oil are rejected. Whether we look to penances, (whereof some foolishly talk,) what can these do to God? Or whether we look to mens external performances of holy duties, or to their inward convictions, quarrellings with, and mournings for sin; there is no suitable value in these things, to interpose betwixt them and God's wrath, supposing that man after the fall could perform duties without sin; therefore the apostle, Heb. x. says that it was impossible that the blood of bullocks, and goats, could take away sin. There is no suitableness nor proportionableness betwixt the blood of a beast, and the soul of a sinner; far less betwixt it and the majesty of God that is wronged by sin; wherefore when the sufferings of a sinner are lengthened to twenty thousand millions of years in hell, the justice of God is never satisfied, nor ever will be to the full; what then can other things do? 3. There is no other thing that hath a promise made, or annexed to it, nor is there any other mean laid down, for the removal of sin and wrath, but Christ offering himself up a sin-offering. I know some are ready to think, that though there be no worth in the thing, or duty; yet God of his free grace will accept of it. But is there a promise of God's accepting any other thing for a satisfaction for sin, or for the removal of wrath, but Christ's sacrifice alone? And will or can people expect that for which they have no promise? The scripture is plain and peremptory in this, as namely Acts iv. 14. There is no other

other name under heaven, whereby a sinner can be saved, but by the name of Jesus. He is the door, John x. The way, the truth, and the life, John xiv. The promises are yea and amen in him, 2 Cor. i. there is a greater necessity to know this, though a common truth, than people think of. And for use, it aims at these two, 1. Upon the one side, to cry down all beside, that pretends to satisfy God, or to make a sinner acceptable to him; prayer is no sin-offering; repentance, convictions, a blameless life, &c. are no sin-offerings; these things are empty, and insignificant, as to the justification of a sinner, or the obtaining of his pardon. 2. Upon the other side, it points out the absolute necessity of making use of Christ's sacrifice, and of the betaking ourselves to it, for the satisfying of God's justice; if there be a necessity of the pardon of sin, and of the removing of wrath, there is then sure a necessity of closing with Christ, and his sacrifice.

The 1st of these uses speaks to two sorts of persons, with whom the word of God hath no weight, and who, in effect think to satisfy God with nothing. 1. A profane, graceless, secure company, who, because God keeps silence, are disposed to think that he is like themselves, and that he will never pursue a quarrel against them; much like to that man spoken of, Deut. xxix. 18, 19. Who says in his heart he shall have peace, though he walk in the imagination of his own heart, adding drunkenness to thirst. We have a generation of this sort among us, who slight all threatnings, as for them, (O! that God would be graciously pleased to make a change on them; or, if that may not be, that he would rid us of them?) who will needs live sensually, and as they list, who will needs speak, and do as they please, and will not be controlled; and yet at once will boldly and confidently assert their hope of heaven, as if they had never been sinners. Whence comes this? Even from their supposing, that there is another way to heaven than God hath appointed; they think

think they may be saved, though they never betake themselves to Christ for union with him. But whether shall their sentence or God's stand? There is a day coming when ye shall know. Ye say, ye shall have peace; but God says, No. Why so? Because ye never knew what it was to make use of Christ; ye had never so much as a form, nor any the least relish of religion, but were and are still as senseless as the stones in the wall; what do ye think will become of you? God urges as it were, the offers of Christ upon you, and ye still slight him. He tells you, that there is a necessity of union with him, else ye shall never see heaven; and yet notwithstanding how many continue still at a distance from him, and yet will needs hope for heaven; but alas! it will not be so with you; either think on the right way, which is by putting Christ in your room, and laying religion to the heart in good earnest; or dream not of coming to heaven. A 2^d sort are they, who are not altogether so profane as the others, but will condemn them, (as indeed the practice of many is loathsome) they will, it may be, pray in their families, and will not be drunk, neither will they swear, or lie, and they will walk blamelessly; and upon these grounds they promise heaven to themselves very confidently; and yet they come not, thro' the sense of their sinful and cursed state, by nature, to close with Christ by faith, and to make use of his sacrifice. Such err on the other hand. O! when shall we attain this, not to neglect the study of holiness, and yet not to rest on it, to the prejudice of this one offering. This were a practice suitable to, and worthy of professors of the gospel; to be seriously aiming at all duties of holiness that are called for; and yet to be building all their expectation and hopes from God, on the sacrifice of Christ alone, never coming to God without bringing it along with them, and looking through it to be accepted before him. There needs no more, and nothing else that we can bring will avail, nor be received at our hand, if this be neglected. The Lord himself teach us this way.

Verse 10.—When thou shalt make his soul an offering for sin, he shall see his seed, he shall prolong his days, and the pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in his hand.

WHATEVER the men of the world think of it, it is not an easy matter to have the justice of God satisfied for sin, and so have the wrath and curse that men, by sin, have drawn on themselves removed. Offerings of bullocks, and goats, thousands of rams, and ten thousand rivers of oil, will not do it. The redemption of the soul is so precious, that it ceaseth for ever that way, and by all such means. Therefore the Lord in his wisdom hath found out the means, and in his grace and love hath condescended, that his own dear Son, his Fellow, shall, as a Lamb without spot, be a sin-offering, to take away the sins of his elect world. And this is the great consideration by which we should understand the death of Christ, as making himself therein an offering for sin, and interposing himself to satisfy divine justice, that forgiveness might be made good to us.

The doctrine which we proposed to be spoken to, the last day, was this, That Jesus Christ is the only sin-offering, by which sin can be taken away, and God so satisfied, as to forbear the punishment of the sinner, and to admit him to peace and friendship with him.

him. If we should enumerate, all things imaginable, and invent ways and means without number to remove sin, or to make a sinner's peace with God, there is no other means but this that will do it. As we have it, Heb. x. Christ Jesus by his once offering up of himself, perfects for ever those who are sanctified; and Acts iv. There is no other name under heaven, whereby sinners can be saved, but the name of Jesus.

The use is, To commend and demonstrate to us all, the necessity of making use of this one offering of Christ. If he be the one offering to take away sin, and if no other will be accepted, then there is a necessity, that he in his offering of himself be made use of: If all be under sin, and if by the law, sin and death be knit inseparably together (as it is said the wages of sin is death) and if freedom from sin and wrath, and peace with God, be necessary; then there is a necessity, that sinners be serious in this matter, to have a title to, and interest in this one offering, and sacrifice of Christ.

In the prosecuting of the use, we shall speak a little to these four things. 1. To some grounds or reasons, to shew the necessity of sinners relying on Christ's sacrifice or offering. 2. To this, what it is to make use of this offering. 3. We shall give a word of advertisement, as to some mistakes that are about it. 4. We shall give some distinguishing characters, or evidences, of a person that is making right use of this offering for obtaining of pardon, and for making of this peace with God.

For the first, That is, the reasons to evince the necessity of it; the first of them is, that which we hinted at just now, If men were not lying under sin, and obnoxious to wrath, and if there were any other sin-offering, or any other way or mean to escape the curse and wrath of God due for sin, there were no such necessity, but seeing that all men are under sin, and under the curse of God and his wrath, because of it, and seeing there is no other thing that can take away sin, then there is an absolute necessity seriously to make use of, and to have an interest in this sin-offering. 2dly, Consider that the greatest part of men in the world, and even of them that hear this gospel, do not indeed make use of this offering, tho' they be some way under the conviction that they are sinners, and that this is the only sin-offering to take away sin, and we suppose, if ye were all put to it, ye would not deny, but ye are sinners, and that nothing can take away sin, but Christ's offering up of himself as a sacrifice to satisfy justice. Tho' some be thus grossly ignorant, that they will speak of somewhat else, yet generally those that own and maintain the truth of the gospel, are under a conviction that nothing can take away sin; and yet even among these, there are many that never make use of Christ, and of his sacrifice to take away their sins, to have wrath removed, and their peace made with God. There were many Jews, who by the daily sacrifices, which typed forth this one offering of Christ, were taught that there was no other way to come by pardon and peace with God, but by their trusting to it; and yet the most part of them, in going about these sacrifices, were slights of this one sacrifice; therefore the apostle says of them, Rom. x. 13. That being ignorant of God's righteousness, they went about to establish their own righteousness, and did not submit themselves unto the righteousness of God. It is as certain, that many that hear this gospel, and profess Christ to be the only sin-offering, will be disowned by him on this account; therefore many are brought in, saying, Luke xiii. did we not hear thee preach in our streets, have we not eaten and drunken in thy presence? To whom he shall say, Depart from me, I never knew you, ye workers of iniquity; because, as if he had said, whatever ye professed, ye never made peace with God, through and by me; and what is the reason, I pray, that so many perish under the gospel, who

who in word acknowledge this one offering, and that it is it only which takes away sin; but because that notwithstanding of that conviction, and acknowledgement, they never brought actually to make use of Christ, and of this his sacrifice, and offering; and if ye think and acknowledge, that there many that go to hell, that have the knowledge and conviction of this truth, ye must also grant, that it is because they make not conscience to make use of it. 3. Consider, that though there be many of the hearers of the gospel, who do not rest on Christ, yet it is very hard to convince any of them, that they are ready to slight Christ's sacrifice: I am sure that both the former will be granted. 1. That nothing but Christ's sacrifice can satisfy justice; 2. That many do not rest on it, and so perish, but if we come to the 3. Scarcely shall we find one that will grant (except it be a tender body) that they make not use of him; they will easily be convinced, that adultery is a sin, and that they are guilty of it, if they be so indeed, that drunkenness and sabbath-breaking are sins, yet possibly, (which is more) that wandering of the mind in duties of worship is a sin, and that they are guilty of the sin of not making use of Christ, and of his sacrifice; nay, they are so puffed up with a good opinion of themselves, that they will laugh at such a challenge; and hence it is, that so few make use of Christ's sacrifice, and of his righteousness, because so few are convinced, that they believe not on him; therefore, when the Spirit comes, John xvi. It is said, that he shall convince the world of sin, not because they did whore, drink, swear, &c. Though convictions for these sins will not be wanting; but because they believed not in Christ. And hence it is, Luke xiii. 25. that these will not take Christ's first answer, I know you not; what (as if they said) knowest thou not us? We have eaten and drunken in thy presence, we have professed faith in thee, and our hope to have heaven by thy righteousness; and yet he shall answer them them again exactly, depart from me, I know you not; not that there will be much to do, or any great difficulty to convince people in that day, or any room to debate the business; but he tells us by this, that many die in this delusion. And if it be a thing that people are so hardly convinced of, have they not need to be seriously solicitous, that they be not deceived and disappointed? 4. Consider how sad the disappointment will be to sinners one day, when they shall be brought to acknowledge, that they knew that there was no other name given whereby sinners could be saved, but the name of Jesus, and yet that they slighted and rejected him. Ye that never seriously minded counting and reckoning with God, do ye think on this; and that the passing of the sentence will be upon this ground, to wit, whether ye have fled to Jesus Christ, and made use of his sacrifice or not? Will it not be a sad disappointment, to meet with a doleful depart from me, on this ground, because there was some conviction, that this was the only sacrifice and sin-offering that takes away sin, and yet it was not made use of, nor made the ground of your peace with God?

But to the 2d, What is it then to make use of this offering? I know no better way than to explain it from the typical sacrifices, that were under the law; and we may understand it in these three: 1. It implies a thorough conviction of people's liableness to the justice of God for sin, and an utter inability in ourselves, and utter emptiness and impotency in all other means to satisfy for sin. Thus they that brought the sacrifice to the priest, laid their hand on the head of the beast, by which they acknowledged, that death was due unto them. So then to have a lively sense of the due desert of sin, that is, to have the sentence of death carried about in our bosom, to have a thorough conviction of the emptiness of all other means of relief, is requisite to the right improvement of Christ's offering.

ing. 2. It implies this, That there be a respect had to the institution and ordinance of God, appointing this sacrifice to be the mean of the redemption of sinners. Therefore in those sacrifices that were offered for sin, there was a respect had to God's covenant; wherein were not only promises relating to external cleansing, and to admission to church-privileges; but promises also, relating to inward cleansing, and to the pardon of sin, which was the great end of those sacrifices; and the looking to the institution of this sacrifice, is the ground that leads us to know the end of Christ's sufferings, and is a warrant for our faith, in the improving thereof; being the only sacrifice that expiates sin, and holds off wrath, and if these two things be not carried with us in the use of this sacrifice, to wit, the conviction of sin and the liableness to wrath, and God's institution and appointment of this sacrifice, to take away sin, and to avert wrath; our using of it is but will-worship. 3. It implies this, that when the sinner is walking under the sense of his sin, and the emptiness and ineffectualness of all other things, to remove sin and wrath, (as David hath it, Psal. li. 16. Thou desirest not sacrifice, thou delightest not in burnt-offerings,) there must be a looking to the worth of Christ, and of his sacrifice, that is appointed to take away sin, and preserve from wrath; and the soul's actual applying of his offering to itself; as we may see, in the iv, v, vi, and xvi chapters of Leviticus, where there are several sacrifices appointed to be offered for several sins, and particularly that of the scape-goat, on the head whereof, the priest, for the people, was to lay his hands: In which was implied, not only their acknowledgment of sin, and of their deserving death; and of God's appointment of that to be a typical offering for the typical taking away of sin; but these two things further were implied: 1st, That they did take the burden of their sins, which neither they themselves, nor any other could bear,

and laid it on Christ; when justice did pursue them for their debt, to speak so, they drew a bill on Christ, as their Surety, to answer it; and as they did put the debt in his hand, to be paid by him, so they trusted the concerns of their souls to him, and to no other. So that when God was pursuing them for their debt; saying, as it were, I will have payment of you, or else you must die; they brought the sacrifice to the priest, to please God typically with an eye to Christ, typified thereby; even so for sinners, to make use of Christ's sufferings, is in the thorough conviction of sin, and of deserved wrath, to flee unto Jesus Christ, and to put him in their room; being content and desirous, that he be their cautioner, and undertake for them, and satisfy for their debt; yea, putting him actually to it, to pay their debt, so that they have no other answer to any challenge for sin but this, the cautioner that I have betaken myself to, and put in my room, will pay this debt and answer for it: The 2^d act of faith, is this, when they have betaken themselves to him, and to his sacrifice, they acquiesce in, and rest upon it alone, for obtaining of the sentence of absolution; which was also implied in the people, their laying their hands by the priest, on the head of the sacrifice; for as it is implied, their acknowledging, that they could not please, nor satisfy God of themselves, nor by any other way or means; so it is implied, that according to God's covenant, they expected his absolving of them, because of that sacrifice; and that, though they were desperate by themselves to satisfy, yet they had faith in God's covenant, that the sacrifice they offered, would typically satisfy him; even so the believer draws the conclusion from Christ's sacrifice, according to the terms of the covenant, that he hath absolution; and rests on, and acquiesces in it; and this is called trusting or confiding in Christ; when not only he casteth himself on him, but hath confidence, that the bill which he hath drawn on him

will be answered by him, which is founded on the covenant; in which it is said, of all that come unto me, I will put none away; as it is, John vi. 37. Him that cometh to me, I will in no wise cast out; and Zech. xiii. There is a fountain opened in the house of David for sin, and for uncleanness; On which ground believers expect the benefit of washing, on their performing of the condition of the covenant. And when David, Psal. li. 7. prays, Purge me, it holds forth the act of faith, drawing the bill on Christ. And when he says, I shall be clean, and white as snow, it shews his confident resting and acquiescing in Christ, for cleansing. And this is the reason, why some express faith, by cleaving to Christ; others, by confident resting on him, or by assurance; and there may be a truth in both; because the one looks on faith according to the first act of cleaving to him; and the other understands faith according to the other act of assured resting on him, or confiding in him, and on, or in his sacrifice offered up once for all. In a word, to trust to this once offering for sin, is so to make use of him, as to put him in our room, and ourselves someway in his room; not to reckon with justice; nay, not to dare as it were, to count with Christ, but leaving Christ, if we may so speak, to reckon with justice. Let us hide ourselves under him, who can count to the utmost farthing; even as when God commanded Abraham to offer up his son Isaac, and when he was lifting his hand to slay him, there came a voice from heaven, Abraham, hold thy hand, and a ram is provided, and Isaac is loosed, and taken down from off the altar, and the ram is put in his stead and place. So there is here a changing of rooms with Christ, according to that sweetest word, 2 Cor. v. ult. He was made sin for us, who knew no sin, that we who had no righteousness, might be made the righteousness of God in him.

3. If it be so very difficult, and yet so absolutely necessary to make use of Christ; and especially in his offering up of himself, for the sins of his people; there is ground here for warning and advertisement, to walk tenderly in this matter, that this sacrifice be not despised, that this offering be not neglected, as we would not have sin lying at our door. And here we shall hint at three sorts of persons, who may be counted despisers and neglecters of this offering. The 1st sort are those, who think to make their peace with God, without minding the necessity of the intervening of any one betwixt him and them; and these go on several grounds, and are of several sorts. 1. Some are utterly careless how their peace be made, or whether it be made or not; they hope for it, and think to come at it, but cannot give an account, whether they shall come at it or not; and they are careless to know the way. 2. Others go upon their presumption; they think God loves them, because they love themselves; and though they know they have sin, yet they think God will not be so ill, as to reckon with them; they think they are sure that God loves them, but they cannot give a ground for it. 3. Others think, God is merciful, and therefore they conclude that they shall be pardoned; they cannot conceive God to be like man in his mercy, but to be far beyond him (as indeed he is infinitely in some respect) and therefore, because when man is merciful, he sometimes seeks no satisfaction, so neither will God, think they; not considering, that though God be merciful, that yet he will not shew mercy to the prejudice of his justice, but will needs have it satisfied; such think on the matter at least, that they should have got mercy, though Christ had never died. It is true, if God had not been merciful, never a sinner had gotten mercy; yet that is not the ground of his shewing mercy, otherwise all the world might expect mercy, for he is, and ever was gracious and merciful in himself; and therefore there must be some other ground and way for obtaining of pardon; else it cannot be expected, because of the alone simple and abstract consideration of his mercy: And yet many will needs expect it on this ground, without respect to the Mediator's purchase. A 2^d sort, are they that take the legal way for making their peace with God: Not, as if they thought to appear before God without sin, and holy, as the covenant of works requireth: But if they sin, they will make amends; and it is either something negative, that they have not done, or something positive, that they have done, or some external qualifications, that they rest upon. 1. Something negative, they have not been so ill as other people, and if they go to hell, they think few will go to heaven; they have done wrong to none; and if they were about to die, they think, and it may be say, that they will leave a good name behind them, on the account of their harmless walk; like that Pharisee, they can say, Lord, I thank thee, I am not like other men, nor like this publican. They are not drunkards, or oppressors, they neither curse nor swear; and when they see any profane persons, they are puffed up with a good opinion of themselves, because they are not as profane as they. Or 2. They will come a further length, and positively do many duties upon which they rest, and whereof they are ready to boast, with that same Pharisee, who vaunted, I fast twice a week, I give tithes of all I possess. If an duty be performed, or any good be done by them, they are ready to trust to it. But 3. and especially, if there be any inward work, as if there be any liberty, or motion of the affections in prayer, if there be at hearing the word, some convictions sharper at one time than at another, if there be any sort of repenting and sadness for sin, &c. These they think, will do their turn. It is most certain, and might be cleared, both from the word of God, and from experience, that many hundreds of professors dash, and perish on this stumbling-block, Isa. xlviii. 1, 2. where the Lord is speaking of a people, that made mention of his name, and swear by him, but not in truth, nor in righteousness : Of whom he says, that they call and count themselves of the holy city, and stay themselves upon the God of Israel. And the ground of it is, their resting on external duties of fasting and prayer, and the like : It is expectation of happiness grounded on some worthless performances that is the ruin of many civil and discreet men, that are not grossly profane. A 3^d sort, do not altogether despise and neglect Christ himself, but they despise and neglect his offering ; as if they would in a manner make use of himself, but not of his sacrifice, as Matt. xix. and Mark x. there is a man spoken of, that comes to Christ, would fain be at heaven ; and asks, Good Master, what shall I do that I may inherit eternal life ? and yet he was going on the grounds of his own righteousness. This is exceeding subtle and deceitful ; And therefore ye should take the better notice of it, and how it is fallen into. A man may come to Christ, as God, for pardon of sin, (and some think, though most ignorantly, and erroneously, that Christ the Son is more compassionate and ready to pardon than the Father) and may seek pardon from him ; but not for his sake, or on his account ; for there is a difference betwixt making Christ, the object of our worship, and making use of him as Mediator. There are many that have prayed to Christ as God, and sought pardon of sin from him, who never prayed to obtain pardon, by virtue of his offering. People may also desire help from Christ, to enable them to do duties, that they may thereby work out the work of their own salvation, and be helped this way to make their peace with God, who do not ground the making of their peace with God on his offering alone. These things are exceeding frequent in peoples practice, who will pray to Christ for such and such things, and yet not found their expectation of them upon his offering, or his righteousness. If we would make use of Christ's offering, singly and rightly, we would eschew these, and all other wrong ways.

4. It may be asked then, what are the evidences that may give a person some clearness, that he is making use of Christ's righteousness aright, and that it is not his own righteousness, nor the making use of Christ only as he is God that sustains him, I answer, that this indeed is a mystery : and will require searching, and watching to observe our own condition : and more things concur than one or two, to make a full discovery of it : In speaking to this, as we desire to strengthen the presumption of none, so we shall labour to shun the weakening of the faith of any sound believer. There are then these six or seven differencing evidences, or characters of a person, that is making use of Christ's offering, which difference him from others ; and, 1. One that truly makes use of Christ's offering hath not only been brought to see his need of it : yet he sees not, neither will take with the tendency, propenseness, and inclination of his heart, to rest upon some other thing beside it : See this difference in Paul, before and after conversion, Phil. iii. Before he was converted, he studied, as he thought, all the righteousness of the law ; and no doubt offered sacrifices, which implied the acknowledgment of sin ; and he thought that all was well with him : Therefore he says, touching the righteousness of the law, he was blameless : and verse 6. These things that were gain to me, Or these things that I placed my righteousness in, I thought the more sacrifices that I offered, I had no more to buy my peace by ; he sees, that in studying of holiness, he was seeking to make a stock in himself : but after his conversion, he casts all these, as to leaning to them, or making them any ground of his peace with God, or of his justification before him ; he betakes himself only to Christ's righteousness, and and counts them to be but loss ; I would think it a good evidence for folks, not only to see the looseness of their hearts in duty, and that to be a sin ; but to see when it goes well with them, the inclination of their hearts hearts ready to account that to be gain, and to rest upon it. There is such an humour and natural inclination in all; and it is a good sign when it is discovered, and becomes a burden, and the ground of a reproof; not only that they have sinned, in this and the other duty; but that they have gone a whoring after their performances, to the prejudice of their esteem of Christ, and of his righteousness: Before the law came, saith Paul, Rom. vii. I was alive, I thought I was sufficient to do my own business; but when the commandment came, sin revived, and I died. There are many that will be convinced of sin in their performances of duties, that will not be convinced of this sinful inclination, to put these in Christ's room. A 2^d difference or evidence is this; one that aims to make use of Christ's offering and righteousness, not only their sins will be an exercise to them, how to get over them to Christ, but it will be their exercise also, how to get over their graces, and duties to him. It will be an exercise to them, not only to have such a sin in their duty taken away, but how to get over the duty itself, that they stumble not on it, to the prejudice of their trusting to Christ; whereas another man, when his duties go well with him, it is easy to him to be above them as he thinks, because he rests satisfied with them. Paul, Phil. iii. sees not only while he was in nature, that he counted something gain beside Christ; but after conversion, he finds an inclination to it; and therefore in opposition to this inclination, he doth with a doubtless cry down all things, and count them but dung and loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ, taking in his gracious actions, as well as others; for the words in the text, and context; tells us, that he is speaking of duties performed by him, even after conversion; and that he found a necessity to cast away the good as well as the bad, in the points of justification; as a man that is in a storm at sea, hath a greater reluctancy to cast over board silks, sat-

tins, and velvets, and other ſuch fine things than that which is more baſe, and of leſs worth; ſo he found it more difficult, and was put to ſome harder exerciſe, to be quit of his duties, that they ſhould not cleave to him, than to be rid of his ſins. Is there any ſuch exerciſe as this amongſt people here? To be put to wrestling with their duties, not as being angry at them as ſuch, but how to get them, as it were, caſt over board, to be jealous of any good in them, or done by them, that it prejudice not their eſteem of Chriſt; to be buſy in well doing all the day, and in the evening to count all their doing but loſs; and to renounce it utterly, as to any puffing up by it, or as to the making of their peace with God thereby. A 3^d evidence is this, one that is ſincere in making uſe of Chriſt's ſacrifice, will be exerciſed and diſquieted, when his duty is done, till there be for acceptance a ſtaying and reſting on Chriſt's righteouſneſs. There are two ſorts that utterly fail and fall ſhort here, 1. Some that are content with ſin, and make lies their refuge. 2. Others that are ſatisfied with duty, if it go well with them, and promiſe themſelves acceptance on that account alone, neglecting Chriſt; but the believer hath, as I juſt now ſaid, one exerciſe of faith, how to be rid of ſin; and another new exerciſe of it, how to be freed from reſting on duty, and how to be ſincerely engaged unto, and to reſt upon Chriſt; his mind is not quiet in all his duties till he come hither, even to be found in Chriſt, not having his own righteouſneſs, but his. It is a good ſign when people are not only exerciſed to have ſin mortified, and duties with them, but alſo to have their peace with God grounded on Chriſt, and not on duty. Hence it is, that a Chriſtian will ſometimes be taken up a whole day in duty, and yet have but little, or no peace, becauſe he would be over, and through all duties to reſting on Chriſt, which he attains not to his ſatisfaction. 4^{thly}, One that is ſincere in applying of Chriſt, and of his offering,

ing, hath a fear of mistaking this offering of Christ; and that some other thing be put in his room, and he misunderstood or neglected. There will not be only a fear, least he sin, and come short in the suitable performance of such a duty, and least he fall under wrath; but also fear and jealousy, lest in his unbelief and selfishness he be going wrong in the applying of Christ, and of his sacrifice; as is implied in the word, Heb. iv. 1. where the apostle having spoken of many of the Israelites, their unbelief in the former chapter, says, in the beginning of this; Let us therefore fear, lest a promise being left us of entering into his rest, any of us should seem to come short of it, to wit, through unbelief: Be holily jealous (as if he had said) lest as it is, chap. iii. 12, 13. there be in any of you an evil heart of unbelief, in departing from the living God: In a word, he will be suspecting the exercise of his faith, as much as any thing. A natural man will sometimes, it may be, suspect his duties, but hardly will he be brought to suspect his faith, otherways he could not have the peace that he hath, such as it is. This may also be confirmed from that poor man's prayer to Christ, Mark ix. Lord, I believe, help my unbelief. He dare not well trust his own faith. 5thly, They that are sincere in applying of Christ's offering, not only see themselves sinners, but they carry along with them the discovery of the naughtiness of every thing that is best in them. When they see that which others trust to so much so very unsuitable, and that they are far short of that which they should be at, they dare not own, nor look on it to boast of it; but it is a burden to them, to see so much sin in it. It is nothing to discover sin in some outward actions, and in that which is directly contrary to God's law; but it is much to see sin in our best things, as in our faith in God, in our love to him, and in our ends in holy duties. A legal man will confess it may be readily, that he sins in every thing; but he covers all with this, that he hath

a good heart to God, or a good end. The believer on the contrary sees all his good so naughty, that it is tasteless to him; he never has any thing to rest on, or that can bear his burden to confide in, till he come to Christ's sacrifice.

6thly, Such as are aiming rightly to make use of Christ's offering and sacrifice, esteem and think exceeding much of it; therefore they adventure heaven, and their eternal salvation on it; it is that which cheers and delights them most, that Christ hath stepped in and engaged to do that for them, which neither themselves nor any other person, or thing could do. The life, (saith the apostle, Gal. ii.) that I now live in the flesh, is by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave himself for me: And 1 Tim. i. 15. This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Jesus Christ came to the world to save sinners, of whom I am the chief. And John, Rev. i. 7. To him that loved us, and washed us in his own blood, &c. But they that endeavour not, neither aim rightly to make use of Christ's sacrifice, think little or nothing of it; they are not made glad, nor are their hearts lifted up with spiritual joy, because of it: The good and glad news of a slain Saviour, are not the chief ground of their consolation, as they are to the believer. This evidence is somewhat general, yet sure, as well as the former: O! but its matter of much wonder, to the believer, when he thinks how that when the stroke of justice was ready to come on him, Christ should have interposed betwixt him and that fatal and deadly blow; but others esteem not of it, and therefore cannot make use of it. 7thly, They that are rightly applying of Christ's sacrifice, find it to be a difficult thing, and that which will cost them wrestling, to trust to it aright: They breathe after it, and yet attain not to that which they would be at in it. O! as David cries, Psal. li. Purge me with hyssop, and I shall be clean; wash me, and I shall be as white as snow. They know not well how to apply it to their satisfaction, or how to fix and exercise their faith on it; and when it comes to actual believing, and to the acting of their faith, they find it to be like a smooth and slippery stone, that they cannot easily hold their feet on. So Paul says, Phil. iii. I count all things but dung, that I may win Christ, and that I may be found in him. He cared not what he cast over-board, that he might get to that land, even to Christ and his righteousness; like seamen in great hazard, who cast all overboard to be on the shore. It is even so with the believer, he sees that there is such hazard to go wrong, and that it is so difficult to be right, even to make the heart to submit to the way of faith, and to abide by it only, that he is content to suffer the loss of all things, if he may be right there: But on the contrary, a man that rests on his own righteousness, let what will be a difficulty to him, faith is no difficulty to him: he may have fear to come short of heaven sometimes, but he thinks that he is always exercising his faith: In a word, the believer ordinarily believes best, when he hath the deepest, and most kindly impression of his sin; as for the legal man, he can believe well, as he thinks, when he hath no challenge for sin, but when he is challenged for sin, his faith fails him. Now, from all that hath been said, ye may see the necessity of making use of this sacrifice: and how warily, and how cautiously it should be done; that ye may steer a straight course between gross prophanity, and presumption, either of which will ruin and destroy the soul: The Lord Jesus himself be your steers-man, and pilot, that ye by his skilful conduct may get into the port, and hold off these rocks, on which thousands of souls split, and make ship-wreck.

Verse 10.—When thou shalt make his soul an offering for sin, he shall see his seed, he shall prolong his days, and the pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in his hand.

SIN was easily brought into the world, a little matter brought in sin, and so the wrath and curse of God with it; and without any great difficulty, men can continue in sin, and lye under God's wrath and curse; but the taking away of sin, and the satisfying of the justice of God for it, is no easy matter, that (if we may so speak) did put heaven and earth both to it. There was such a contrivance of this way, and such a means chosen, and made use of, that sin might be removed, and the curse taken away, as the like was never heard of.

The intimation and manifestation of this way, is in the first part of this verse, Yet it pleased the Lord to bruise him; in God's council, and by his pleasure it was contrived, and the way found out; and the means is set down in these words, When thou shalt make his soul an offering for sin; the Mediator, even he who was the spotless Lamb of God, in whose mouth was found no guile, was bruised, and put to sad suffering, to get this effected; that the curse might be removed from sinners, he was made the sin-offering.

We shewed that Jesus Christ is the only sin-offering, by which sin is taken away, and that it is implied here; so that it is denied to all other things or means to have any efficacy, virtue, or merit in them, as to the removing of sin, and the curse brought on us by it; this is, I say, so peculiarly applied to Christ's offering, that it is denied to every thing else; which shews, first, How much sinners are obliged to Christ, who, when nothing else could effect it, he interposed himself. 2. The necessity of making use of this one offering, without which not one soul can be perfected or saved: He is the alone foundation of sinners peace, and of all the consolation that they can have in the promises of God.

Now to proceed, and to hint at some few things more from the words, wherein the end and nature of Christ's sufferings are set forth: He in his sufferings, and offering up of himself, did step into the room of the sinful elect, that by justice exacting of him the debt that was due by them, they might escape, and be set free. Hence observe, 1. That when there was no other thing, nor means that could sufficiently satisfy divine justice, or be a sacrifice for sin, our Lord stepped in, undertook, and became the sacrifice to take away sin; according to that often cited, Psalm xl. 7, 8. Sacrifice, and offering thou didst not desire, in burnt offering thou hadst no pleasure: He is not speaking of what God required in the law, as typical; for he required sacrifices and offering in that respect, but not to be a propitiation for the sins of the elect world, because they could not do it; and then follows; Lo I come, or I am here; mine ear hast thou bored, it is Heb. x. A body hast thou given me; which sets forth his being put in a capacity to be a sacrifice; I delight to do thy will, O my God. Here there are these four things implied. 1. A liableness in the elect to the justice of God for sin, and the impossibility of all other means and ways of relief, but by this one sacrifice, for considering the sentence which God had pronounced, The day that thou eatest thou shalt surely die; And cursed is every one that continues not in all things things written in the law, to do them; no sacrifice can be accepted but this only; thousands of rams, and ten thousand rivers of oil will have no effect; he did not in that respect require these, neither would he capitulate on these terms. 2. That when no other sacrifice was sufficient, Christ Jesus came in, and was content to interpose, and to be the sacrifice for sin; Lo, saith he, I come, I am here ready to satisfy for my elect people; for this is an ancient design, and he had undertaken from eternity to carry it on. 3. There is implied here a great willingness, and a delightful condescending in the Mediator, to be the sacrifice; he steps in affectionately in the room of the elect, as the sacrifice for them, to receive the stroke of justice, that they may escape and go free. I delight to do thy will, O my God: This is God's will, as to the work of redemption, as it is, John vi. 38. I came down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me. And John xvii. 4. I have finished the work thou gavest me to do; That will and this work is all one, and Heb. x. it is said by which (or by this) will we are sanctified. 4. The Father's admitting and accepting of him, to interpose in the room of them, for whom he offered himself, is implied here; for otherways his offering up of himself, could not have been a sacrifice satisfactory to justice, if the Lord Jehovah had not been content so far, to relax this threatening and curse, in reference to the party offending, as to admit of a Surety in the room of sinners, to satisfy for them, of which satisfaction he accepted. All these things put together, make Christ's interposing himself as a sacrifice and Surety complete. I delight to do thy will, supposes not only God's pleasure, that he should interpose, but his accepting of his interposing; and this is the foundation of the work of redemption; the sentence stands over the elects head, cursed are the guilty, Christ comes in, and interposes, offering cheerfully to take on him

the debt, and says, here am I, let the curse fall on me, and let satisfaction be taken of me; and this being offered according to God's will, it is accepted, and Christ's satisfaction becomes an offering in their room.

Use. See here the desperate condition, wherein by nature we are all lying; it becomes us well, in speaking of grace, to take a view of what we were: and it shews how much sinners, are in Christ's debt, that interposed for us in this condition. Could we so itably make inquiry what case we were in, under the hand of justice, and its stroke ready to fall on u; and could we behold our Lord Jesus Christ interposing for us, and the sword of justice awaking against him, and smiting him for us; and the Lord Jehovah accepting of his interposing, and making his soul an offering for sin; and him willingly, and delightfully offering up himself in our room; we should see our obligation to God, who was pleased to contrive, admit, and accept of this way and means of our redemption; and could we consider, what advantages we have by this redemption, and what it cost Christ to obtain it; we should see ourselves much, unspeakably much, in his debt. The day is coming, when it will be thought a favour, and when the sweet effects of it shall be made fully good to them, that now cordially close with it; and when the fruit of despising it, shall be found to be bitter like gall and wormwood.

2. From its being said, when thou shalt make; or, when his soul shall make itself, or he himself shall make himself an offering for sin; observe, That as Christ undertook, and by undertaking interposed himself in sinners room, to satisfy for their sins; so his death and sufferings are really the performing of that undertaking; and his death and sufferings are so to be understood and considered by us as an offering for sin; or thus, Christ's death is the sin-offering that satisfied the justice of God, in the room of elect sinners; this is the sum or substance of all that is spoken of his suffering. If then it be asked, what was the design of them all? Here it is answered, he was made a sin-offering: We shall clear it a little in these three or four parts, or branches. 1. Christ is properly a sin-offering, or a sacrifice for sin, he is properly the propitiatory sacrifice for sin that satisfies the justice of God for the sins of the elect. 2. This sacrifice was especially offered by him, in his death and sufferings, it is his suffering and humiliation that is most properly this sacrifice, for it is that which is related here. 3. That by Christ's offering up of himself, he was not only outwardly straitned, but his soul was deeply affected and troubled: In satisfying the sin-revenging justice of God, both his soul and body were straitned, and distressed. 4. By his suffering, there is a sufficient satisfaction given to justice for the sins of his people, a propitiation, or propitiatory sacrifice, that makes God propitious to elect sinners; as in satisfying the justice of God for sin, all other things are denied to have any hand, so there is a sufficient efficacy and worth in his sacrifice to procure satisfaction, and by God it is accepted as such; and so there is a fair way made to them, for whom he offers this sacrifice, to escape sin, and the wrath and curse of God, and hereby be set free.

As for the 1st of these, to wit, That our Lord Jesus, in his dying, and suffering, was properly the propitiatory sacrifice, or is properly a propitiatory sacrifice for the taking away of sin; to clear it a little, we should consider, 1st, That sacrifices are sundry ways taken in scripture. 1. Sometimes they are taken improperly for duties, as alms, prayers, praises, &c. Psal. li. The sacrifice of a broken heart thou wilt not despise. So also Heb. xiii. 15, 16. 2. They are taken more properly for such sacrifices as were offered under the law; as of bullocks, lambs, rams, and goats ; yet none of these was the true propitiatory sacrifice, as is clear, Heb. x. 4. It was impossible that the blood of bulls, and goats could take away sin. But Christ's sacrifice is properly the propitiatory sacrifice, it being by this sacrifice, that believers under the Old Testament became partakers of redemption, and obtained remission of sins, as well as believers do now under the New. If it be then asked, What is necessary to a sacrifice properly so taken ? I answer, these four things, (all which we find to be in Christ's sacrifice.) 1st, That there be somewhat set apart to be offered to God, in the room of some other thing, as it was in the typical sacrifices. 2. That there be some appointed to offer the sacrifice, that there be some set apart for that very end. 3. That there be a killing or destroying of that that is offered a sacrifice, which especially in the sin-offering was necessary ; to wit, that it should be killed, or destroyed ; as we see in Exod. xxix. and in Leviticus frequently. This had a signification, and the Lord does thereby point out man's great guilt, and the necessity of the Mediator, in order to the obtaining of pardon ; for there could be no remission, or pardon of sin without blood ; as it is, Heb. ix. 22. Therefore the sinner must either die himself, or have another to die for him, and in his room. 4. The sacrifice must be offered according to the manner prescribed by God, as to all the rites and ceremonies enjoined. Now we may see all these in Christ's sacrifice. For 1. he himself is the sacrifice, as we find in Heb. vii. 26. ix. 26. x. 10. and frequently elsewhere in that epistle ; and 1 Pet. ii. 24. Who his ownself bare our sins, in his own body on the tree ; and when he had offered up himself as a sacrifice, he sat down on the right hand of the Majesty on high ; he is the alone sacrifice, that comes properly in the room of elect sinners. 2. As there must be one to offer the sacrifice, so Christ Jesus is the Priest, that offered up the sacrifice of himself : He is not only the sacrifice, but the Priest: And in this he differed from other priests, Heb. vii. 26. Such an high Priest became us, who is holy, harmless, separate from sinners, and made higher than the heavens; and then follows, Who needs not daily, as these high-priests, to offer up sacrifices; first for their own sins, and then for the sins of the people; for this he did once, when he offered up himself. There are three things ordinarily attributed to Christ, as to his sacrifice, to wit, That he was the Sacrifice, the Altar, and the Priest. 1. He was the Sacrifice, in respect of his human nature, which we are not so to understand, as abstracting, and dividing it from his divine nature; for tho' he suffered in the flesh, yet it was the same person that was God that suffered. 2. He was the Altar, by which his sacrifice received a special efficacy, virtue, value, and commendation. As it is said, The altar sanctifies the offering; so Christ Jesus, according to his Godhead, was the Altar, which did put an especial excellency on his sufferings, and made them to be of such worth and value; therefore, Heb. ix. 14. it is said, That he thro' the eternal Spirit, offered up himself without spot unto God. It was the suffering of the person that was God, that made the sacrifice to be accepted. 3. He was the Priest, and that according to both his natures, each nature concurring, and that jointly, as in one person, to the making of the sacrifice offered up to God acceptable. 3. We have in him a real destruction; but do not mistake the word; it is not so to be understood, as if he were annihilated; or had been utterly destroyed and undone; but the meaning is this, that he was killed, or put to death, and his soul separated from his body: In which respect he ceased to be what he was before for a time, having been really slain, dead and buried. And 4. All this was according to God's prescription, and appointment in the covenant of redemption; this commandment (saith he, John x. 18.) have I received of my Father.

ther, to wit, that I should lay down my life for my sheep; and most emphatically he says, John xiv. 13. As my Father gave me commandment, even so (mark, even so, most exactly, according to the commandment) do I. It was all, as to every circumstance, ordered according to the good pleasure of God, who was pleased thus to bruise him, and to put him to grief.

The 1st use of it serves, to teach us how to conceive, and consider of Christ's death, and sufferings aright, to wit, even as a sacrifice designed by God, to come in the room of elect sinners; and how to look upon his death, not as the ordinary death of ordinary or meer men, who by necessity of nature die; but to look on it as being appointed of God, to be a sacrifice properly so taken, for the sins of his people.

2dly, This serves to clear some truths, concerning our Lord Jesus his sacrifice: For we must consider it, as satisfying to justice, and meritoriously procuring the escaping from wrath, and also the salvation of them for whom he interposed. It is from the gross ignorance, or from the wicked denial of this ground, that the damnable deniers of Christ's satisfaction, do also deny the propriety of his sacrifice on earth, and confine it to heaven; whereas, it is bounded to his death; though by virtue of this one offering, he continues to interceed for us in heaven.

3dly, It teaches sinners what is the native use which they should make of this sacrifice; they should look upon it, as the only sacrifice to prevent eternal death, and the curse of God; and so it demonstrates to us, that either Jesus Christ must be received by faith, and his sacrifice rested on, or we must resolve to meet the wrath, and the curse of God ourselves in our own persons.

4thly, It serves to clear up to us the way and tract of grace; to wit, how it came to pass, that our Lord, who was innocent, and without sin, was so bruised, and

and put to grief: He came to be a propitiation for the sins of his people, and placed himself in our room, as our Surety, as a sin-offering for us. It would doubtless resolve many questions and doubts, that arise in the hearts of believers, if this were well understood. They may say, we should have been in such and such a sad condition, this and that terrible thing would have come on us, if he had not interposed. Never enough can those words be spoken and thought of, that we have, 2 Cor. v. ult. He was made sin for us, who knew no sin, that we might be made the righteousness of God in him.

5thly, It serves for great consolation to believers, who have betaken themselves to Christ, and have many accusations for sin to engage with, that his death was to be properly a sacrifice for sin; and was so accepted of God in their room: So that ye see the right notion of Christ's death, is a matter of no little moment; Christ crucified being the very substance of the gospel. It helps much to keep alive the impression of our sinfulness, and of the goodness of God, and gives us direction how to escape wrath, by putting him in our room. There is nothing wherein people more readily miscarry, in making of their peace with God, than in not making the right use of Christ, and of his sacrifice and death; some praying for pardon of sin from him, and not for him, or for his sake, when they know not what they are saying, as we hinted before; some praying for strength from him for duty, that they may do for themselves, not considering that we are justified by his interposing in our room, and by faith's closing with him, under that consideration, as appearing himself at the bar of justice; and the Lord accepting of him in the room of elect sinners. This being well considered, it gives faith much clearness how to know when the soul rightly aims to partake of the benefit of his sufferings.

know, that there are, as divines observe, four or five ways, how the death of Christ is to be considered; or how Christ, in procuring by his death, redemption, peace, and pardon to sinners is holden forth in scripture. 1. He purchases redemption, and pardon of sin meritoriously, or he merits it by his death; this respects the value of Christ's sufferings and satisfaction; so that if we consider Christ in himself, and the elect in themselves, his death and sufferings are more, than if all the elect had suffered eternally in hell. 2. His death is considered, as a satisfaction; and this looks to the wrong that men by sin have done to God. That the finite creature durst be so insolent as to break God's command; it required a satisfaction equivalent to the wrong done. Though the word satisfaction be not in scripture, yet the thing is; Christ Jesus, for the restoring of God's honour, that was, as to the manifestation of it, wronged by man's sin, comes in to perform the will of God, and to satisfy for the wrong done him by man, that it may be made known that God is holy and just, who will needs avenge sin on his own Son, the holy and innocent Surety, when he interposes in the room of the sinner, which vindicates the spotless justice and sovereignty of God as much, if not more, than if it had exacted the satisfaction of the sinners themselves; as it is, Rom. iii. 16. To declare his righteousness, that he might be just, and the justifier of him that believeth in Jesus. 3. Christ's death is considered as a redemption of man from sin, the law, and the curse, because liable to a debt which he cannot of himself pay; and his death was in this respect a paying of the debt that man was owing, and loosing of the captive and imprisoned sinner; even as when a piece of land is mortgaged, and a person comes in, and pays that for which it was mortgaged: So Jesus Christ comes in, and as it were, asks what are these men owing? and what is due to them? It is answered, They are sinners; death and the curse are due to them.

them. Well, saith he, I will take their debt on myself, I will pay their ransom, by undergoing all that was due to them. He hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, saith the apostle, Gal. iii. 13. being made a curse for us, that the blessing of Abraham might come on us Gentiles. And so Christ's death in this respect, is to be looked on, as a laying down of the same price that justice would have exacted of men: His death is the paying of our ransom, and satisfying of the account that was due by us. 4. His death is considered, as it furthered the work of the redemption of elect sinners, by a powerful annulling of the obligation that was against us, and by a powerful overcoming of all enemies that kept us captive; he engaged with the devil, and that wherein he seemed to be strongest; he tore the obligation that stood over sinners heads, as it is, Col. iii. 14, 15. blotting out the hand-writing of ordinances that was against us, and that was contrary to us; he took it out of the way, nailing it to his cross, and having spoiled principalities and powers, he made a shew of them openly, triumphing over them in it. In this respect though his death be one of the lowest steps of his humiliation; yet considering him, as in it, prevailing over the devil, and other enemies, he is to be looked on as powerfully working, and efficaciously perfecting our salvation. In the former respect, he pays God the debt that was due by sinners; in the latter respect, considering the devil, and spiritual enemies, as so many jailors, keeping sinners prisoners; he, by his death, wrings, as it were, the keys out of their hands, and sets the prisoners free. 5. Christ's death is considered, as in the text, an offering and sacrifice for sin: In this respect, it looks to God as displeased with man; and our Lord Jesus interposes to pacify him, and to make him well pleased; and that by the means of his death, God's peace, favour and friendship may be recovered to poor sinful men. All these considerations of the death of Christ, are but one and the same upon the whole; yet thus diversified, they serve to shew, how unexpressibly much sinners are obliged to Christ; what great advantages they have by him, and what a desperate condition they are in, who are without him, having nothing to satisfy justice, or to pay their debt with.

2dly, We said, that this sacrifice was especially offered by him, in his death; therefore he is said to offer this sacrifice on the cross. He himself as Peter hath it, 1. 2. 24. bare our sins in his body, on the tree; Heb. ix. at the close; and Heb. x. 14. it is said, that he once offered up himself to bear the sins of many; and by his once offering he hath perfected for ever those who are sanctified: So that this offering is to be applied to that which he suffered on earth before he ascended; and it is in this respect, that he is a propitiatory sacrifice; though, as I said, the virtue thereof is still communicated by him, now when he is in heaven.

Use. This serves to remove two errors about Christ's sacrifice. The first is, that which bounds and limits Christ's offering and priest-hood to his going to heaven, thereby to enervate the efficacy of his sufferings and death, quite contrary to this scripture, wherein the prophet explaining his sufferings on earth, calleth them an offering for sin. The second is, that blasphemous conceit and fancy of the Papists, who account their abominable mass a propitiatory sacrifice, for taking away the sins of the quick and of the dead; which as it is most horrid blasphemy, so it is most expressly against this text; for if Christ's sacrifice, for the taking away of sin, be peculiarly applied to his humiliation and death, which brought with it such a change, as made him not to be for a time, what he was before. Then certainly there can be nothing of that name, there being no other thing, to which the properties of a real sacrifice can agree, but to this only. 3dly, I said, that Christ's offering up of himself in a sacrifice, was in his soul as well as in his body, and that he was therein obnoxious to the wrath of God; that is, as he stood Surety for the elect, and had the cup of wrath put into his hand, he suffered not only in his body, but also and mainly in his soul, which the Jews could not reach; and he is here holden forth as a sin-offering in his soul; yea, considering that it was the wrath of God, and his curse due to the elect, that he had to deal with, his soul was more capable to be affected with it than his body. Hence he says, when no hand of man touched him, John xii. 27. Now is my soul troubled, and what shall I say? And Matth. xxvi. 38. and Luke xxii. 44. Now is my soul exceeding sorrowful, even unto death; and being in an agony he prayed, &c. That which looked like strong armies mustered and drawn up against him, was not the soldiers that came to take him, nor the bodily death, which was quickly to follow; but it was the Father's coming with his awakened sword, to exact of him the debt due by the elect, and to be avenged on him for their wrongs, and his being to step into their room, and to be smitten with that awakened and prepared sword, and to offer himself the sacrifice, as he had long before engaged. Here, O! here was the heat and strength of the conflict.

Use. This shews, 1. What a dear price Christ paid for sinners. 2. The severity of the justice of God, in exacting the elects debt of the Surety. 3. How much we are obliged to Christ, who so willingly undertook the debt, and was so ready to pay it, though it cost him not only external and bodily sufferings, but soul suffering, and put him to encounter with God's wrath and curse. We are perswaded, could we conceive, and speak aright of these sufferings, that there is a great mystery here: And really it is a wonder that we are not more affected with it, even to consider, that such miserable creatures who were pursued by justice, and could do nothing to avert the stroke stroke of it, should have such a great glorious Person, as the Son of God, interpose himself on their behalf; and that the Father should spare the poor sinful enemies, and make a way for them to escape, by the diverting of his justice from pursuing them, and by making it take hold of the Son of his bosom, exacting the debt severely from him. O what a wonder is this! That the Lord should pass by the enemy, and satisfy himself of his own Son; yea, that God should even take on himself the place of a midſman, and satisfy himself, that God should be in Christ reconciling the world to himself. This, this is the wonder. Here—in infinite wisdom, pure and spotless justice, holiness and faithfulness, grace and mercy, to the admiration of men and angels appear, and shine forth most radiantly. It can hardly be known, in which of these the glory of God shines most, in this great and glorious work of redemption. But of them all, we may say to you elect, and believing sinners, what could our Lord Jesus do more for your salvation? I say, what could he do more, than to offer up himself a propitiatory sacrifice for your sins? In the gospel, he calleth upon you to make use of it, that by virtue of his sacrifice, your peace may be made with God; as it is, 1 John ii. 1, 2. If any man sin, we have an Advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous; and then follows, He is the propitiation for our sins. This may give full ground to sinners to go upon, in their application to God, for pardon and peace, even this, that he hath made himself a sacrifice for setting of them free, for whom he offered himself a sacrifice. O! sinners, admire him, employ, and make use of his intercession in the court of heaven: Improve and welcome these glad tidings, and let it never be said or heard of, that he was offered up a sacrifice, and that ye would not admit of the benefit of it; that ye would not accept of him, to be a days man, betwixt God and you, to remove all grounds of quarrel. O! For Christ's sake, take, and as ye love your souls, go, and seek grace to make the right use of his sacrifice, in order to the obtaining of the pardon of your sin, and the making of your peace with God: Let himself powerfully persuade you to, and prevail with you, in this incomparably greatest of all concerns.

Verse 10.—When thou shalt make his soul an offering for sin, he shall see his seed, he shall prolong his days, and the pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in his hand.

WHERE there is any light and knowledge of a Godhead amongst men, there is this impression on them, that it is a dreadful thing to have a controversy lying over betwixt God and them unremoved: and upon this ground it is, that as naturally the conscience doth challenge, for the provoking of God, so men, according to the light they have, are set on, to seek after this, and that, and the other mean and way, to get God appeased, and the conscience quieted; and its like that this hath descended to men from Noah, that the most part of them have thought on the mean of sacrifices, by them to make their peace with God; so the Lord taught the family of Adam, after the fall; and Noah renewed it, after his coming out of the ark; and it is probable (as I said) somewhat of this hath abode with, and stuck to men, even when they degenerated and apostatized from God, and offered sacrifices to devils, though not intentionally, but unto God in their account: and indeed it is no marvel that flesh and blood be here at a stand, and made to say, Wherewithal shall we come before God? But we have this advantage by the gospel; That in it, the Lord hath shewed to us, what it is that satisfieth justice, and takes away sin, and the curse; and that it is even this in the text: Thou shalt make his soul an offering for sin: There is no other thing that a sinner can bring with him, that can be accepted, or that can make him to be accepted of God.

We have hinted at some things from the words already, and shewed, that Christ's sacrifice is called an offering for sin, as excluding all others and as expressing the nature and ends of it: We shall now speak to one thing more, which is the 4th implied in this expression; and it is this, That though atonement and satisfaction to God can be made by no other sacrifice or offering, yet there is an atonement and satisfaction, that may be made by Christ's offering: Hence he is called an offering for sin: not only because it excludes all others, but also because he is accepted for that very end, as a propitiation for the sins of them, for whom he suffered, and offered himself in a sacrifice; as this is denied to all other things (as we just now said) so it is applied and appropriated to him, and his offering, as Heb. x. 10. By the which will we are sanctified, through the offering of the body of Jesus Christ, once for all. Verse 12. This man after he had offered one sacrifice for sins, for ever sat down on the right hand of God. And ver. 14. For by one offering he hath perfected for ever, them that are sanctified: this is the great thing that the apostle aims at, in that dispute, not only to cast the Levitical offerings, as to the removing of sin and the curse, and making of sinners peace with God, but to commend

this one offering, as able to save to the uttermost, all that come unto God through it : And according to this, we have that great question answered to poor sinners ; ‘ wherewithal shall we come before the Lord, and ‘ bow ourselves before the most high God ? He hath ‘ shewed thee, O man ! what is meet, and what the ‘ Lord requireth of thee.’ That there is nothing but this one sacrifice of Christ, that will do the turn ; and this will do it most infallibly, and most fully as to the procuring of pardon of sin, and the making of their peace with God ; so that by the right making use of this sacrifice, a sinner may most really expect remission of sins, and peace with God, and his friendship, as if sin had never been ; for otherways Christ could not be called the sin offering or an offering for sin ; if he were not accepted in room of the sinner that comes to him.

To clear it a little, there are four things, in and about this sacrifice, to make out this, and to prove, that a sinner, that makes use of this sacrifice, may expect the pardon of sin, and peace with God. The 1st, is the excellency of his offering, He offered himself, as it is, Heb. vii. 27. and Heb. x. 10, 12, 14. the offering up of himself, and of his blessed body on the tree, was another sort of sacrifice than all these bulls, rams, and goats, offered under the law, that were but types of him. The 2^d, is the excellency of the person, that offered up this offering which is in effect the excellency of the priest. As the sacrifice was excellent beyond all other sacrifices, so also is the priest above all other priests, Heb. vii. 26. Such an high priest became us, who is holy, harmless, undefiled, separate from sinners : A priest, who is the Son, and is set over the house, as the heir : and though the human nature was the sacrifice, yet, as was said before, not as abstracted from the divine nature, the person being but one, and so the priest offering commends the sacrifice offered, and makes, that it cannot but be accepted.

The 3^d is his willing condescending to be the sin-offering, to interpose himself, and to become this sacrifice, out of respect to the honour of God, that his justice might be vindicated and satisfied; and that thereby access might be made, for shewing mercy to the heirs of salvation; which exceedingly commends this sacrifice, according to that of John x. 17. Therefore doth my Father love me, because I lay down my life, that I might take it again: No man taketh my life from me; but I lay it down of myself, and take it again. It commends his sacrifice, that he was not constrained to it, but did it most willingly, and with delight. It is true, if we look to him, as the eternal Son of God, and the second Person of the blessed Trinity, he could not but be loved of the Father, as well before his incarnation, as after. But when he says, Therefore doth my Father love me, it is to be understood, on account of his voluntary condescending, as Mediator, to do his Father's will; and out of respect to his honour engaging, and according to his engagement, satisfying his justice for the elect. And this cannot but commend his offering, that such a glorious Person, who was holy, harmless, and undefiled, should out of tenderness to the honour of God; and that the wrong done to it by sinners might be repaired; and out of love to the elect, should condescend to stoop so low, as to make himself a sin-offering. This regard for the honour of God, and willing condescendency to suffer for the repairing of it, is abundantly valuable, above the disrespect that sinners evidenced to the honour of God by their sinning. The 4th is the covenant, which is the ground of this offering, and that whereby it is regulated, and the terms of it. It was not an undertaking, as a price of will-worship, but according to the deliberate counsel, and foreknowledge of God; wherein it was determined, that the Son should become surety, and be made liable for the debt of the elect, and be an offering for their sins, and so freedom from sin and wrath should accrue to elect sinners : And all this being concluded in the covenant of redemption, his offering could not but be accepted for us ; the Lord having condescended on the articles of that covenant for this very end.

This doctrine is of very great and excellent concernment to sinners, and were there any such wakening and rousing amongst us, that souls were put to say, and cry, What shall we do to be saved? the opening of this truth, to wit, that Christ is a sin-offering for sinners ; and that by his offering the atonement is made, would be much more acceptable and refreshing. And therefore let this be the first use, that tho' there be nothing imaginable, that can be brought before God, which will be acceptable to him, as a satisfaction to his justice ; yet here there is a ransom found, by the offering whereof to God, a soul that is lying under a sense of sin, and apprehensions of wrath may expect absolution: This is in effect that which Elihu says, Job xxxiii. If there be an interpreter, one of a thousand to shew unto man his righteousness, then he is gracious unto him, and saith, Deliver him from going down to the pit, I have found a ransom. Here is the ransom, our Lord Jesus Christ stepping in, in sinners room, and offering himself up a sacrifice to satisfy the justice of God ; so that a sinner in applying of that, may come to be in good terms with God. And are not these glad tidings of great joy, that an offering is provided, a ransom paid, and a way found out, how sinners liable to the curse, may expect freedom ? It is no small matter, that God hath given this subject to us to speak of, and to you to hear of ; that the torturing anxiety of a soul driven almost to despair, may have this for an answer ; even the blood of Jesus, that blood of sprinkling that purges the conscience from dead works ; which as it satisfies justice, so it quiets the conscience of the sinner, that flies unto it, and makes right use of it. It would become sinners well, to think more of these glad tidings, and to study to have them always renewed. There are many parts of the world, wherein men are sacrificing beasts, some lambs, some rams, some other beasts; and some it may be, the first-born of their bodies, for the sin of their souls; (and which is lamentable, sacrificing these things to the devil, and not to God) and yet all that will not do. For not having heard of this offering, they cannot make use of it, neither can their conscience ever be quiet. But our Lord Jesus hath sent this blessed news to us, and hath shewed us what is the sin-offering, the atonement, and propitiatory sacrifice. We need not send our children through the fire, or bring any other offering to God, to appease his wrath: He hath given us his Son, and hath accepted him for a sin-offering, and hath told us, that this shall be as sufficient and satisfying, as if we had made satisfaction ourselves. Here, O! here is the wonder, even a wonder of wonders.

Use 2. See here the way how we come to life by Christ; it is imported in this doctrine to be by Christ's being made an offering for us. It is not our praying to him as God, nor by our holy living, nor by his working holiness in us; (though these ought, and will be in some measure, where he is made use of aright,) but by his offering up himself a sacrifice for us, and by God's imputing it to us; and considering that Christ Jesus is the offering in our room, and that thereby God is pacified, and sin and wrath removed, there can no other way be conceived, how we are made partakers of it, but by imputation. This will be the more clear, if we consider, that the same way that our sins became Christ's, the same way his righteousness becomes ours; or the same way that justice laid claim to him for our debt, the same way lay we claim to his righteousness. Now it is blasphemous to think, that our sin became his any other way, but that legally he entering himself as our surety, our sin was reckoned on his score; even so his righteousness becomes ours, by being imputed to us: So the apostle says, 2 Cor. v. ult. He was made sin for us, who knew no sin, that we might be made the righteousness of God in him, and have his righteousness derived to us. It were good that we should learn how to attain to this righteousness, even by presenting him to justice, as Surety for our debt; and by taking hold of his righteousness to ground our plea upon, when we come to reckon with God for our sins: And we think that there is here a clear ground, for refusing of that way of justification by any thing inherent in ourselves. For if it be by his offering, that we are justified, then it is by nothing in ourselves: Now this name that Christ's sufferings has, is an evidence that it is that which satisfies God, and absolves us, as the alone meritorious and procuring cause; and therefore there is no other thing that we can derive our justification from, but his righteousness only.

Use 3. Seeing by Christ's offering there is a ransom found, and an atonement made; and since it is offered in the gospel, we pray you, in the name of the Lord, take hold of and improve this offering; let every one that hears that Christ is the sin-offering, endeavour to have him to be their sin-offering. There are none that know, and find that they have sinned, but they should think of a satisfaction; and here it is, and there is ground to exhort you to make use of it, and to encourage you to it, because this is the very end of his suffering; and he is fully furnished completely to accomplish it. If there were no access to life by this offering, he would not be called a sin-offering, in opposition to all other offerings. There is ground therefore to declare this to you, that by Christ Jesus, life and reconciliation is attainable, and that it is actually attained by accepting of this offering. Such as accept of it, and rest upon it, shall find acceptance with God, and freedom from sin and wrath, by virtue thereof.

thereof. It is a common question, What shall we do? We do all we can or are able; but if we were studying a long time to tell you, this is it, even to make use of Christ's offering. This, and this only, will answer your end completely, and nothing else will do it.

The 4th Use is of strong consolation to all who lay hold on Christ, he is the sin-offering, that procures the taking away of sin and wrath, and that procures friendship with God; and there is no imputation of sin, nor condemnation to them who are in him, Rom. viii. 1. And hence is that triumph, verse 24. Who shall lay any thing to the charge of God's elect? It is God that justifieth. Who is he that will condemn? It is Christ that died, yea, rather that is risen again, &c. If justice were coming to execute the sentence, what can it say to the believer? Jesus Christ hath stepped in betwixt wrath and him; and as to God's acceptation, he alone is counted the sin-offering; and as those who under the law offered the typical sacrifices, had access to the ordinances, and were sanctified, as to the purifying of the flesh; so much more is this offering able to purify the conscience, and to purge it from dead works, and to give a fair access to the promises of life, and to the favour of God, to all them who make use of it, as if they had never sinned. I know much consolation will appear in this when Christ's offering is trusted to. But some will say, how shall we make use of Christ's offering? And others will ask, how shall we know, if we have made right use of it? And would to God, that souls were beaten off from their pride and security, and brought under the conviction of a necessity of depending on Christ, he would discover both to them: But before we answer the question, there are two things we would presuppose.

1. We presuppose that the soul is made sensible of its need of Christ's sacrifice, from the apprehension it hath of a quarrel betwixt God and it; and from the fear fear of his wrath because of sin; else the asking of such a question is to no purpose: For, as we hinted before, the offering of a sacrifice implies the confession of guilt, so relying on Christ's sacrifice, presupposes sense of sin; e'er a soul can make use of his offering, it must know its desert was utter destruction.

2. We presuppose, that the soul is desirous to be reconciled to God, and to have peace with him, to which end Christ is the means; and there will be no respect had to the means, except there be a respect had to the end, as it is, Heb. xi. 6. He that comes to God, must believe that he is, and that he is the rewarder of them that seek him diligently; where there is implied in the coming, a desire to approach to God, and an expectation of some benefit to be had from him; or as the word is, Heb. vii. 27. he is able to save to the uttermost, all that come to God by him; which implies the sinner's being sensible of his lost condition, his desire of reconciliation; and then Christ's offering comes in, as the means, to bring about, and obtain that end. But these being presupposed, the great thing wherein the answer of the question lies, how to make use of Christ's offering for the attaining of that end, of pardon of sin, and peace with God, seems to be holden forth in those words, Heb. vii. 25. He is able to save to the uttermost, them that come unto God by him: And therein we may consider sinners desire of peace with God, and the right understanding of Christ, in reference to that end in these three. 1. To have the breach made up with God, in respect of their state. 2. For quieting the conscience, in respect of particular accusations. 3. For the making up of their defects in grace, as well as for the removing of sin. And as a right knowledge of Christ in these three particulars, points out the way of a sinner's coming to Christ; so a sinners going on in this way, evidenceth a right improving of him, which will serve to answer both the questions, to wit, How to make use of Christ's offering? and, How to know that we are making use of it aright?

For the first, to wit, going to God by Christ. 1. It is opposed to going to God, in our own strength. 2. It is opposed to trusting to any thing else in our coming to God, for making up the breach. 3. It implies the sinner's laying hold of Christ, as the days-man, by whom he expects to obtain friendship with God. There are some scriptural similitudes, whereof if we could rightly conceive, and apply them to this purpose, they might serve much to clear it. There is a distance, which, like a gulf, is fixed betwixt God and man; a soul then comes to God by Christ, as one goes over a gulf by a bridge; hinted at by the apostle, Heb. x. 19, 20. Having therefore boldness to enter into the holiest, by the blood of Jesus, by a new and living way which he hath consecrated to us thro' the vail, which is his flesh. We take the force of the similitude to lie in this, That as one that hath a vail betwixt him and another, whom he desires to approach to, must go through the vail, e'er he get to that other; so here Christ's flesh being the vail, he by his death hath rent it, that sinners might go through that rent, or breach, to God; that is, when all was before shut up, betwixt God and sinners, Christ was content, that a rent should be made in his body, through which they might come to God; coming to God by Christ in this sense, is to walk, as it were, on Christ's sufferings as a bridge, and to have no other place or ground to stand, or walk on to God, but this. Again John x. Christ calls himself the door; I am the door; and John xiv. to the same purpose he is called the way; to let us know, that as none can come into a house, but by the door, nor can come to the end of their journey, but by the way that leads to it; so heaven being shut up, and closed upon sinners, any that would have entry into it, must betake themselves to Christ by faith; for by faith in him, the door is opened, pened, and the way paved to heaven. It is a good sign, when the sinner lays aside reckoning by himself to make use of Christ's satisfaction for payment of his debt: So that if he were to appear at the bar of justice, his answer would not be, That if he had done a fault, he had made, or would make satisfaction; nor that he prayed, and repented, and sought mercy; but this, that he owned his guilt, and made use of Christ's sacrifice. So Paul speaking, when renewed, in opposition to what he was, while a Pharisee, says, Phil. iii. That 'he counts all things to be but loss and dung, ' for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ, that ' he may be found in him, not having his own righteousness, which is according to the law, but that ' which is through the faith of Christ.' When he thinks on the day of judgment, and where he will hide himself in that day, when the question shall be asked, Where art thou? his desire and resolution is, to give this answer, I am in Christ, Lord, I have no righteousness of my own to trust to; I will never make mention of my painfulness in my ministry, of the tenderness of my walk, nor of any thing else of that kind; but I will lay hold of Christ's righteousness, and will say, Lord, here is much debt on my score, but there is a righteousness to which I am fled by faith, and on this I will ground all my answers. This righteousness is in Christ, as the purchaser thereof, and it is ours by faith, when we betake ourselves to it, to make it the ground of our claim; even as if a number of men were pursued for debt before a judge, and one should come in, and say, I have paid so much; and another should say, bate me a part, and I will pay the rest; and a third should say, give me a day and time, and I will satisfy; and a fourth poor man should come and say, I have, indeed, nothing myself to pay my debt with, but I betake myself to the responsal Surety, who hath payed all for such as betake themselves to him. This is faith's answering and arguing; it will never shift the debt, nor yet admit of the final sentence of condemnation, though readily acknowledged to be deserved: But it pleads Christ's satisfaction, as that which will be acceptable, though the sinner can do nothing of himself. In a word, this way of pleading is upon the one side, an utter denying of the man's self; and of all that is, or can be in him, for attaining of righteousness; and upon the other side, an intrusting of himself to Christ, for the attaining of that which he hath not in himself. It is not only faith, if it were possible to separate these two, to deny our own righteousness, but by the exercise of it, there must be a coming to God through the righteousness of Christ.

The 2d thing wherein the exercise of faith consists, is in the improving of Christ's sacrifice in reference to particular accusations of conscience; for even when a soul hath fled to Christ, and made use of his sacrifice for pardon of sin, and for peace with God, it will not be free from accusations, and from new accounts; and therefore the exercise of faith is to be continued in the making use of this offering, in reference to these particulars, as well as in reference to the making of our peace with God at first; in which respect, faith is called a shield, Eph. vi. 16. When new guilt is contracted, and when temptation says to the believer, is this the goodness of your purposes and resolutions, which have been like flax before the fire? no sooner wast thou assaulted, but thou wast much foiled, and prevailed over; the soul runs to this same buckler or shield; and though every one of these accusations be like a fiery dart that would set the conscience on a flame; yet by faith the dart is kept off, or the venom of it sucked out so that it burns not, and it makes the soul to say, though I cannot satisfy for the debt, yet there is that in Christ's righteousness, whereto I fly, which can do it; and if we look to that, which entertains tormenting exercises, that speak evil of the grace of God, we shall find it to be this; to wit, when souls

come to dispute, and debate with accusations of consciences, and do not interpose the shield of faith, taking hold of Christ's righteousness to answer for them; for sometimes a soul will betake itself to Christ's righteousness for peace at first, and will look upon itself, as bound to keep, and maintain its own peace; and will, upon the whole, think that it is but a sort of baffling, or profaning of Christ's righteousness, if we may so speak, to be making daily use of it, for answering of new accusations. And such will be ready to say, should not a believer be holy? and we say, that he should, and that it were to abuse the spiritual armour, to take one piece of it, and not all; but this we say likewise, that when one makes use of the sword of the spirit, he may warrantably make use of the shield of faith also. Failing in this, that is, when Christ's righteousness is not made use of, in reference to particular accusations, it mightily indisposeth many serious souls, for making use of the rest of the weapons of their spiritual warfare; and therefore, as ye should exercise faith in general, for reconciling you to God, as to your state, so ye should exercise faith on Christ's offering for doing away of particular quarrels, and for silencing of particular accusations, which is to be daily washing at the fountain. In short, as to the other question, this may be a mark of a person that is making a right use of Christ's offering for his peace, if he be daily making use of his offering, for quenching and silencing of particular accusations of conscience.

The 3^d thing, wherein this exercise of faith in the making use of Christ's sacrifice consists, is, in reference to the defects of our grace. We have indeed much need of Christ, and he hath much good in him, for the helping of grace, for the amending of weak faith, and love, and other graces, as well as for obtaining pardon of sin, and of peace with God; and yet oftentimes, those who are making use of Christ in the two former respects, are in hazard, and ready to think,

think, that they should believe more, love more, and exercise other graces more, of themselves. But we are to make use of him, for helping defects of grace, as well as for these other things. By this, I mean, not only the making use of Christ meritoriously; and so that we should look on faith, love, repentance, and every other grace, as purchased by him, as well as peace with God; and that we should make use of Christ's offering for attaining of these; but I also mean, that we should make use of Christ, as a priest, to make his own offering effectual, for attaining all the benefits of his purchase: considering that he is able to save to the uttermost, all those that come unto God by him. The apostle goeth on this ground, Heb. x. 19, 20. Seeing we have such an High-priest, and such an offering, let us draw near with full assurance of faith, &c. And if we ask what this is? It is of large extent; it is even to make use of Christ as a priest, not only as the object of faith, and as the procurer and worker of faith, but also for the confirmation of weak faith; it is a looking to him, to have the weak faith, that we dare scarcely trust to, made strong, or trusting of our weak faith to him, to carry us thro', when we dare not well lean to it. In the first respect we do by faith trust to Christ's righteousness; in this last respect, we trust our faith to him, and look to him not only for pardon, but for making faith, to keep its hold of him; and as it was with that poor man spoken of, Mark ix. who upon the one side betakes himself to Christ, If thou canst do any thing, have compassion on us, and help us; and on the other side, being in a holy impatience, finding his faith like to fail and misgive, when Christ says to him, If thou canst believe, all things are possible to him that believes, he cries out, in that his holy impatience, Lord, I believe, help thou my unbelief; he acknowledges his unbelief, as well as his faith, and trusts Christ with the helping of his faith, and holding together the threads of it, if we may so speak, when it was like to fall asunder. Our doing thus, evidenceth a more full denying of ourselves, when we dare not trust our own believing, but as it is committed to Christ, and when there is a depending on him, both for the benefit we expect, and for the application of it. That word of the apostle, Phil. iii. 12. is excellent to this purpose, That I may apprehend that for which I am apprehended of Christ Jesus. As also that of, 1 Pet. i. 10. Who are kept through faith by the power of God. So then, in answer to both the questions, 1. How to make use of Christ's sacrifice? And 2. how to know if we have made, or do make use of it aright? We say in short, as to the first, that there must first be a relying on his merit, for the buying or procuring of our peace, and a laying hold of it for that end. Secondly, When temptations arise, there must be a constant, daily flying by faith to his sacrifice, as to a shield, or as to a store-house; which he himself calleth an abiding in him, John xv. 3. There must be application made to Christ, as a priest, not only to remove daily contracted guilt, but also to heal the infirmity and weakness of our graces, especially of faith and love, trusting him to bring our faith and love to perfection. It is a sweet word which we have, Psal. ciii. He healeth all thy diseases. As to the 2d question, we say, that a person may look on himself, as making right use of Christ's righteousness, when he is daily depending on him in these fore-mentioned respects, who, if he were to appear before God, it is Christ's righteousness only that he would build on; he is also daily making use of him, to answer accusations as they occur, and dares not trust to his own faith, but as it is committed to Christ; considering, that as faith is in himself, it is daily in hazard to be extinguished; and we may add, that he so makes use of Christ, as that he dares not go to God without him; as the word is, Heb. vii. 25. Them that come to God by him, he comes unto God by Christ,

Christ, in prayer, in praises, and in every other duty of worship. The apostle to this purpose says, Heb. xiii. 15. By him therefore, let us offer the sacrifice of praise to God. The believing soul is never right until its all be put in his hand: Though all these be not distinct, and explicit in the person's making use of Christ's sacrifice; yet he expects that the application of the benefits which Christ hath purchased to him, shall be made good to him, by virtue of that same purchase, and that he who is the author, will also be the finisher of his faith. The sum and substance of all is, to shew, that as we have much good, by and in Christ, if we could make use of it; so he calleth us to be chearful, and comforted in the making use of it, and not to diminish our own consolation, when he hath condescended graciously thus to extend and enlarge it, with so rich, liberal, and bountiful a hand.

Verse 10.—He shall see his seed, he shall prolong his days, and the pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in his hand.

IT may be thought, and that very justly, that there must be some great and glorious design in the contrivance of the work of redemption, that was executed by such a means as the suffering of the Son of God;

God; and that there must be somewhat noble and excellent following on it, that moved the Father to send his Son, and the Son to come for this work. This part of the text answers, and tells us what is the design, He shall see his seed, he shall prolong his days, &c. He shall communicate life to many that were dead, and shall beget a generation, that shall have life derived from him, as children have from their parents. And so this is a third answer, for removing of that stumbling objection, proposed in the beginning of the verse; to wit, How it came to pass, that the innocent Son of God, who had done no violence, and who had no guile in his mouth, was put to such sufferings? We shewed that there were three reasons given in answer to this, 1st, It pleased the Lord to bruise him; it was the Father's good pleasure. The 2^d is, from the nature of his sufferings, which was to be a sin-offering, or an offering for sin, not for his own, but for the sins of the elect. The 3^d is, That his sufferings should have remarkable fruits and effects following them, set down in three expressions, which are partly prophecies, telling what should be the effects of the sufferings of the Mediator, and partly promises made to the Mediator, declaring what should be his reward for his sufferings. 1. He shall see his seed; that is, many shall receive good from his sufferings. 2. He shall prolong his days; that is, he shall out-live these his troubles and sufferings, and shall have a glorious deliverance and reign. 3. The pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in his hand; that is, the work that was given him to do, and to finish, shall prosper well, and no part of it shall fail or miscarry. In the first promise made to him, or in the first effect that should follow on his sufferings, in these words, He shall see his seed, we have these three. 1. A relation implied betwixt Christ and believers; they are his seed, such as in the next verse are said to be justified by him. It is, in short, many shall obtain pardon of sin, and justification by his death. In this respect it is said, Psal. xlv. penult. Instead of thy fathers, shall be thy children, whom thou mayest make princes in all the earth.

2. A prophecy foretelling of the event that should follow Christ's sufferings holding forth this, That our Lord Jesus should not only have a seed, but a numerous seed, that should be made sure to him; and it seems to be an allusion to that which is spoken of Abraham, and of others in the Old Testament, of whom it is said, they should have seed; that is, that many should descend of them; but there is more here; for whereas others, while they are living, or in their life-time beget a seed, which begetting is interrupted by death; the death of our Lord Jesus begets his seed, or his seed are begotten by his death.

3. Considering the words as a promise, they hold forth this, That tho' our Lord Jesus suffer, and die, yet he shall not only have a seed, but he shall see his seed, he shall out-live his sufferings and death, and shall be delighted in seeing of them, who shall have the good of his sufferings; as it is said of Job, that he saw his children, or seed of the third and fourth generation; that is, he lived long, and saw many that came of him; even so, tho' our Lord came to death, and to the grave yet he should not only have a numerous seed, and many children, but he should live and see them, and that not only for three or four, or ten generations, but for very many generations; and his dying should neither mar his begetting nor the seeing of them. And this seeing of his seed, is opposed to such parents as are dead, and who, tho' their children and posterity, be in want, yet they know it not. From the first of these, observe, That believers are our Lord Jesus his seed, they are come of him, whatever their meanness and lowness be in the world; and tho' they could not claim kindred to any of externally honest rank or quality, yet they are his seed: To this purpose the apostle bespeaks the believing Corinthians, 1 Cor. 1.

27, 28. 'Ye see your calling, brethren, how that not
 ' many mighty, not many wise men, after the flesh,
 ' not many noble are called; but God hath chosen
 ' the foolish things of this world, to confound the
 ' wise, &c. that no flesh should glory in his presence :'
 Though ye be not of any high rank or quality in the world, yet of him are ye in Christ Jesus, who of God is made to us, wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption : In this respect Christ is called the everlasting Father, Isa. 9. 6. For he is the Father of all believers, that ever had, or shall have life; who are,
 Psal. xlv. penult. called his children.

To clear this a little, you may take it in these four or five respects, or considerations, in which believers are said to be Christ's seed, or to be descended of him. 1. In this respect, that as believers, they have their being of him, as children have of their parents, as to their natural being. So believers, as they have spiritual being, are descended from him, and hold their being of him, without whom they had never been believers; and in this respect they are his seed;
first, because he meritoriously purchased life for them,
 which is the thing here mainly understood, as following immediately upon his sufferings. Secondly, Because they have life from him, efficiently, as he works
 it in them, and by the gospel begets them; therefore he is said, 1 Tim. i. 10. To have brought life and im- mortality to light by the gospel, which was not known in many parts of the world, till Christ brought it forth; in this respect, believers are Christ's seed; we are not born believers of our parents, nor have the faith which we have, from the ordinances, nor of ministers, as efficient causes thereof; but it is from our Lord Jesus, who is the believer's Father. Thus believers have an affinity and very near relation to Christ, even to be his own children: And they that would lay claim to faith, or spiritual life, should see well, that it proceeded from love to Jesus Christ, and that they own themselves indebted to him for it. 2dly, They are his seed, in respect of the likeness that is betwixt him and them, or in respect of the qualifications that are in them; as they are said, 2 Pet. i. 4. By the exceeding great and precious promises, to be made partakers of the divine nature; they have of the same spirit, for the kind, that he, as Mediator, hath in him. And it is in this respect, that Cant. vii. 1. the believer is called the Prince's daughter, which especially looks to the spiritual, generous, and noble qualifications that are derived from Christ to the believer. Hence believers are said to have the spirit of sons, when all others, though they be the greatest in the world, have but the spirit of servants, and their generosity is nothing to that of believers, who are made partakers of the divine nature. We have not, says the apostle, received the spirit of fear, but of faith and love, and of a sound mind; ah! there are many that claim kindred and relation to Christ, that are very unlike him. 3dly, They are called Christ's seed, in respect of the care that he hath of them; never mother was more tender of the sucking child, than he is of his believing children; therefore, saith the Lord, Isa. xlix. 15. A mother may forget her sucking child, but I will not forget thee. Hence is that phrase, even as to visible professors of the church, who refuse to listen to the call of the gospel, which is much more eminently verified in believers, Matth. xxiii. How often would I have gathered thee as a hen doth her chickens under her wings? So tender and respective is he to his children, as the mother is tender of the sucking child, or the hen is of her new-hatched and young chickens; for they are, in some respect, come out of his own bowels; his blood was shed to purchase them; so it is said, Isai. xl. 11. He gathereth the lambs with his arm, he carries them in his bosom, and gently leads those that are with young. And, O! what full consolation have such words as these in them? And what confidence

dence may believing sinners have to come to this Mediator, that is a mother, a father, a brother, and a parent, that hath begotten us out of his own bowels; and in some respect, (as we are believers) hath as a mother conceived us in his own womb? 4thly, They are called his seed, in respect of the portion which they have from him. The apostle says, that parents provide for their children; its indeed eminently so here, believers come under his care, oversight, and management; and as a man provides for his household, his children, and servants meat in due season; and the apostle says, He is worse than an infidel, that provides not for them of his own house; even so our Lord Jesus, as he gives believers their spiritual life; so he maintains that life, provides for them, and trains them up, till he enters them into the possession of eternal life; they are made by him Princes, Psal. xlv. 16. intitled to a kingdom; yea, all his children are Kings, and sit with him on his throne, Rev. ii. ult. and are made partakers of his glory, dwell as he dwells, and behold his glory. O! is not this much, that the poor debtor that hath not a penny left him, nor to leave to another, should be thus dignified, as to have a claim to Christ's kingdom, to be an heir, and a joint-heir with him, who is the heir of all things; for so we come to be advanced, and to be made heirs of all things; as it is, Rev. xxi. 7. 'He that overcometh shall inherit all things;' and it goes on this ground, Heb. i. 2. That the Mediator is appointed heir of all things; with whom, being joint-heirs, we are heirs too, and made to inherit all things. 5thly, They are called his seed, because of the manner of their coming to the possession of that, which through him they have a claim to; for they have a claim to nothing, but by being heirs to, and with him, and by believing in him: they are heirs of the promise, in some respect, as Isaac was: So then briefly to recapitulate all these, would ye know the way that believers are Christ's seed?

seed? 1. He begets them, and they have their spiritual life of him. 2. He is tender of them, as of his own children. 3. They are furnished with qualifications, and dispositions suitable to him. 4. They have a rich portion from him, and are well provided for. 5. What good they get is for his sake, who is their Father; here we may allude to that word, Rom. xi. They are beloved for the Father's sake, by a right and title to him; they come to have a good and goodly portion, they claim not to their portion, because of this or that thing in themselves, but by their being made heirs to Christ, being come of him, they come to get a right to what is his.

Use. As all relations betwixt Christ and believers speak forth much consolation, so doth this, if we were in a disposition to apply it; this one word hath in it, and holds forth a good condition, and of a very large extent.

See here then, 1st, What we are in Christ's debt, who are believers. It is much to be made a friend, to be freed from the curse of God, and to have all our debts paid; but this is more, to be his seed, to be his own children, to have our life of him, to have our provision and portion from him. It is really a wonder, that we wonder not more at this, and other relations; that are betwixt him and believers. As namely, he is the believers Father, and takes them to be his sons and daughters: He is the believers Brother, and is not ashamed to call them brethren: He is the believers Husband, and they are his spouse: He is their Bridegroom, and they are his bride. Such relations as these are pitched upon, and made choice of, to fill, if I may so speak, the faith of the believer, and that the believer may feed sweetly and delicately on them, till time come that the vail of similitudes be taken away; and they be brought to see him as he is, even face to face; and that thereby they may be helped to read their advantages and privileges, which they have in him.

What

What can be the reason then, that so few think, and esteem suitably of the excellent and desirable condition of believers, and that words of this kind relish not? Here is the reason, he of whom they hold all these privileges, and by whom they are put into this noble and non-such condition, is not suitably esteemed of, and accounted precious; therefore believers in him are the less valued. Our hearts should melt in love to him, and in sorrow for offending him, at the reading and hearing of such expressions, wherewith the scriptures of God are filled.

2dly, Are there any that would have a good and happy condition summed up, and compended? Here it is, even to have our Lord Jesus to be a Father, and to be his seed, to come in as sons and daughters to him. I appeal to you all, if any condition can be put in the balance with this: Is there any honour and dignity like it, or comparable with it? Who can claim to be come of such a parent as he is, who is King of kings, and Lord of lords, the Prince of the kings of the earth; the Father of glory his eldest and only begotten Son, by an eternal and unspeakable generation, who, in all things hath the pre-eminency? What is your pedigree, who will say, and boast, that ye are of such a Lord's house, and of such an ancient family and flock; yea, though ye were of blood royal, what is it to this? What will become of mens gentility or nobility of birth, yea, of royalty of birth, in that day when Christ shall set his throne in the clouds? To have this relation to Christ, will be more valuable and honourable in that day, than to have been great commanders, esquires, lords, marquesses, dukes, princes, and kings, who will all in that day stand upon the level with the poorest peasants, and when all honours and dignities, which are now so much esteemed and thirsted after, will be laid in the dust. Therefore learn to think of this, that the noblest birth and descent, is through faith in Christ Jesus; and covet, and be holily ambitious, to have the qualifications of his children. Look to the qualifications, parts, indowments, and accomplishments that use to accompany, or follow any houses of natural men. Are there any of them comparable to the qualifications of believers? Is there a stock or race of people in all the world, so truly generous and noble as believers are, who are come of Christ, and are made valiant, through the exercise of faith in him, against all occurring difficulties; regardless of worldly things, and taken up with, and busied about high and noble projects and designs; even to have heaven and glory, and God himself; who undervalue, and holily disdain the things of the world, which earthly worms so much seek after, their qualifications appear especially in this, that their designs are heavenly, their minds elevated to, and set on the best things, and that they have a truly magnanimous and a valorous way of prosecuting them, by studying the mortification of sin, and conformity to God, when others cannot endure to cast out with, and abandon a lust; they holily scorn, and account it below them to have their peace standing, or falling with the ebbing and flowing of creature-comforts, which the men of the world place their happiness in; their study is to be pure as Christ is pure. O! is there any portion like theirs? Many of you think but little of it now, but ye will think more of it in that day, when the earth, and all things in it shall be burnt up with fire: What will the earthly portion signify then? Ye that now have your variety of fine delicate meats, with your ale and wine at every meal, who shall be found out of Christ, shall not get a drop of cold water to cool your tongue, under your exquisite and hellish torments, when the poor man that believed and had a hard life of it here, shall be in Abraham's bosom, and with Christ at his table, yea, and on his throne with him; and it is upon the account of their having a title to Christ, that they come to all this glory, and happiness: O! is there any right and title like the believer's, which is founded on Christ's right and title, which is, or may be called the original right of the believer, who is kept by the power of God, through faith unto salvation. If these be the true and faithful sayings of God, what is the reason that men think so little of them? Why is an interest in Christ so undervalued? Believe ye, that such and so much good is to be had by being Christ's seed and children? If ye say that ye believe it, how comes it to pass that so few have it for their design, and that your designs are so much for this and that in a present world; and that this is so much slighted, and that there is so much boasting and glorying in other things, and so little holy boasting and glorying in this?

There are two or three marks which we may gather from the words, that may help to shew when this claim is warrantably made, and which may evidence the groundlessness of the claim of many. And 1. Christ's seed hath another original than that which they bring with them into the world; there is in them a change of the ground of their hope, and that on a new account: People come into the world sinful, children of sinful parents; but when they come to be believers, they get a new life, which men cannot give; and this new life hath new actings and fruits: Ah! how many dream of a right to Christ, who know no other birth or being, but that which is natural! 2. They who are Christ's seed, carry along with them the impression of an obligation to, and an acknowledgment of him, in whatever good they have received, they think themselves much obliged to Christ, and they acknowledge him for their life, as it is, Mal. i. If I be a father, where is my honour? And if a master, where is my fear? A son honours his father, &c. A native and genuinely disposed child acknowledgeth his father as his father, and reverenceth and loveth his father as his father; but there are many that pretend to a being from Christ, who think not themselves in his debt for it, and who know not what it is to walk under the conviction of their obligation to Christ for their supposed spiritual life and being. 3. They who are Christ's seed, have in them a likeness to him; as they did once bear the image of the earthly, so now they bear the image of the heavenly Adam; not that they come up in all things to be exactly like to the pattern; but it is their aim, and other things that disconform them to him, are deformed, loathsome, and ugly in their sight; their old inclination is burdensome to them, and is the continual ground of an inward contest and wrestling; and in a manner, they are troubled at the very heart, how to keep down what is opposite to Christ: And when their corruption overmasters them, they are the more discomposed, and disquieted; they discern something in them, that is not like to Christ, and they abhor that, though it be never so near and dear to them, even their very self; they see something also like to Christ in them, and they cherish and make much of it; they would fain experience more of it, and have his image more deeply impressed on their spirits, which they reckon their greatest, yea, their only beauty.

The 3d use is for direction to believers. If ye be Christ's seed, ye must be other sort of people in your designs, and in your deportment and carriage; king's children ought not to behave as others; it would be highly unsuitable, yea, even abominable to see them walk so trivially, and lightly as every base, ill-bred beggar's child doth: It is no less incongruous and unbecoming, that believers should be taken with this and that vanity, that meer worldlings are taken with, and hunt after.

The 4th use speaks a word of consolation to believers, and holds forth the greatness of the privilege of being Christ's seed. It will be much to persuade a poor sinner, duly sensible of sin, to believe this, and that the Lord is in earnest, when he speaks thus; that such an one, who hath betaken himself to Christ for life, and humbly claims right to nothing, but by virtue of Christ's right (the main thing, that our union with him is bottomed upon) who is content to be in Christ's debt for life, and goes not about to establish his own righteousness, but leans to Christ's righteousness for life and salvation; that he should be his seed, and have all the privileges of sons derived to him; And yet it is the Lord's faithful word, neither hath eye seen, nor ear heard, nor hath it entered into the heart of man to conceive, what good things are laid up for such a person, and that are bound up in these expressions of our relation to Christ Jesus.

Use 5th, It may be also a quieting and comforting word to some believers, who are in affliction, poverty, and straits in the world; that our Lord Jesus is a loving, affectionate parent, more loving and tender hearted, than the tenderest father or mother; and indeed it may sufficiently quiet them, that they have such a loving overseer, and provider, who is also a cordial sympathizer with them; whatever their condition be, he will not disown his off-spring and seed, whom he laid down his life to purchase.

The 6th use may be for incitement and provocation to all that would be happy, to place it here. An interest in Christ Jesus, by believing on him, brings us to have interest in the enjoying of him, and all that is his; and can there be any more sought after, or wished for? Are there any, but would think it a good life, to be here? And who are they, of whom he speaks so? It is not of some sort of strange and uncouth people that were once in the world, but are now all out of it, and of whom there are none now in it. It is not such as want sin, and derive their life from their own works, but it is such as are, 1. As considered in themselves, dead in sins and trespasses, and without spiritual life and being; and who know that all the pains that they can take, will not acquire it; and who

it may be, are quite dead to their own apprehension and sense oftentimes, and who have judged themselves, and have the sentence of death in themselves. 2. It is such as look to him for the obtaining of life, and who acknowledge him for any life, or liveliness they have: And who expect it, and use it, by virtue of his purchase; which is, that on which all their plea for life is founded.

Now I know, that all this will not readily clear it to some, there are so many things that look counterfeit like; but I am now speaking to them, who have some stirrings of spiritual life, which yet are not so lively, as they can discern them to be the stirrings of life; and they have a body of death in them, which is ready to extinguish that life; and often they think that it is extinguished already; they have convictions of their own deadness, and that things are wrong in their condition, and are quite out of all hopes of righteousness, from and by themselves, or from any thing that they have done, or can do; and they have some confused looks to Christ, but they cannot order themselves in the matter of their faith; and duties go not so with them as they expected, and would have them. To such I shall speak a word or two, and conclude. 1. I would ask, whence comes that stirring of life, or feeling of that body of death? What is the original of it? Will nature discover the corruption of nature, and bring people to be out of love with corrupt nature? Certainly, where this is, it is not like nature, but is the life of Christ; especially, when it puts people to discern their own deadness, to give up their own righteousness, and to be content to lay their mouth in the dust, and to fly to the righteousness of Christ, if they could attain to an assurance of it. This looks to be from Christ, whose spirit convinces the world of sin, and of the sin of unbelief in particular; and of righteousness, as being only to be had in Christ; and of judgment, that is, of the reasonableness, that he should have a dominion over them, and that they should walk in holiness. Yet, notwithstanding all this, they are hanging in a kind of suspense, and know not whether to look on themselves as believers or not. They know well that it is not right with them, that they are lost in themselves, and that no other way will do, but faith in the righteousness of a Mediator. The thing whereat they stick and halt, is, that they know not how to maintain the consent that they have given; and they cannot think, that their faith is true faith, because they know not how to exercise it, though they have renounced their own righteousness, and reckoned themselves to be in Christ's debt for righteousness and life, if ever they come by them: All their difficulty is, how to go through with their believing. Now it is not of the reality of life, that we are here speaking, but of the exercise of life, and the finding out of life: And we say that such an exercise supposes life to be, though it be not discernable in its exercise to the soul itself. There are many poor creatures born and brought forth into the world, that can neither talk nor walk, but must be carried and kept tenderly, and that are in a manner, as if they were just brought out of the womb; so is it with many believers, and it were good to be in Christ's debt for life, and for the bringing it to exercise, and by diligence and waiting on him, in the use of his own appointed means, to seek to come to some distinctness in exercising of any life that he hath given. And it is no small encouragement to this, that Christ shall see his seed, that he must have saints and believers in him, which should make poor souls, that have no life in themselves, with the more confidence to commit themselves to him, upon this very ground, that the Father hath engaged to Christ, that he shall have many such for his seed: The which promise is performed to him, in the gathering in of poor confused, and perplexed sinners to be in his debt for life, and to hold their life of him for ever. It will sure be no small part of the ground of saints praise in heaven, that he not only bought life for them, but that he made application of life to them, and trained them on, till he had got them fitted to speak to his praise; wherein the body of death makes many a sad stop, and makes poor believers to stammer, as it were, while they are here. But it is good news that Jesus Christ hath bought life, and brought it to light, and that by his gospel, he is making application of it, and declaring that he is content to bestow it freely on all them that will acknowledge him for it.

for

Verse 10.—He shall see his seed, he shall prolong his days, and the pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in his hand.

IT was once a riddle, how that out of the strong could come forth meat, and out of the eater could come forth sweetness. It is here most clearly unriddled, and that in a comfortable manner: Our Lord Jesus, the strong Lyon of the tribe of Judah, is put to grief and bruised, and his soul is made an offering for sin; and here is the sweet meat that comes out of it; he shall see his seed, he shall prolong his days, &c. The substance of the words is, That by his death many shall be brought to life: It is the same death that hath given given us the hope we have of life, and all the ground that we have to speak of it to you ; which had never been, had he not been bruised and put to grief.

We shewed that here is holden forth the Lord's great design in the contrivance of the work of redemption, and that these words are a further answer to the stumbling objection proposed before, to wit, how the innocent Son of God could suffer? It pleased the Father to bruise him, when he shall make his soul an offering for sin, &c. Which justifies God, in that proceeding, and serves to wipe away that reproach, that might seem to cleave to him. In short, it is this, if we consider the noble fruits, and comfortable effects, that followed on his sufferings, and death ; there is no ground to stumble at God's giving his Son, or at the Son's condescending as Mediator, to suffer, to be despised, and put to death ; and this is the first fruit, and effect thereof, that he shall see his seed ; whereby it is meant, that by his death the elect, who are given to him, do by faith in him receive a new life from him, and are taken in, under a most sweet relation to him, by their being begotten again, to a lively hope, through his resurrection from the dead.

We have spoke to this particular already, that believers are Christ's seed which shews the great privilege, that they are admitted to, and their great obligation to Christ on that account, they are obliged to him for their spiritual life and being ; as children are obliged to their natural parents, for their natural life and being ; and infinitely more obliged, in as much as the one life is infinitely preferable to the other.

There are three things more to be observed from the words, 1. Considering them as they stand in dependence on the former ; that God's design in sending his Son into the world, and the Mediator's design, in coming so low, is to have a seed begotten to the hope of eternal life ; and to have poor souls dead in themselves, themselves, sharing of life in and through him, even to have many partaking of life through his death.

2. Considering the words, as foretelling the event of Christ's death and sufferings, we have this observation from them, That our Lord's death shall certainly procure life to many: Or thus, it cannot be, but his death must have fruit, to the saving of souls from death, and to the making of them partakers of life.

3. Looking on the words, as a promise made to the Mediator; we observe from them, that the seeing of a seed, is exceeding much esteemed by Jesus Christ, it pleased him wonderful well; therefore this promise of a seed is made to him, to encourage him to lay down his life.

We shall speak a word to each of these, and shall leave the consideration of the words as they hold forth, not only our Lord's out-living his sufferings, but his seeing a seed after them, to the second effect that follows, He shall prolong his days.

For the first doctrine, we suppose, it will be clear, if we consider how the seeing of his seed is subjoined to, and dependeth upon the former words which concern his making his soul an offering for sin, which holds forth this, That the great design of God, and of Christ the Mediator in his sufferings, is, to beget a people to eternal life, and to make way, that sinners naturally dead in sin, may partake of spiritual and heavenly life, and may be begotten to the hope of eternal life through him. And what other design, I pray, could there be than this? For the Lord had nothing to procure to himself. There could be no addition made to the glory of God thereby; therefore it is said, John vi. 39, 40. ' This is the Father's will
' that hath sent me, that of all that he hath given me,
' I should lose nothing, but should raise it up at the ' last day: And this is the will of him that sent me,
' that every one that seeth the Son, and believeth on
' him may have everlasting life, and I will raise him
' up

‘ up at the last day.’ 1 Tim. i. 15. ‘ This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation ;’ and what is it ? ‘ That Jesus Christ came into the world to save sinners :’ And that John x. 10. ‘ I came that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly.’

There are two things that we would speak a little to, for clearing of the doctrine, and then draw some proper uses from it : The 1st is, how this can be God’s design in Christ’s humiliation, to beget many sons to life ? 2dly, How Christ’s death contributes to this design ? For the first, when we speak of God’s design here, we mean not his last and ultimate design, but his immediate design in the gospel, which is subservient to that his last and ultimate design ; to wit, the glorifying of his grace and justice, is giving the Mediator, to satisfy justice for sinners, who are not able to satisfy for themselves ; and he having chosen this as the means to that highest end, we may well say, that this is his immediate design in the gospel, that thereby the glory of his grace and justice might be manifested. For the second, which is, how Christ’s sufferings contribute to this end ? It may be soon cleared, if we consider that there is a two-fold let in the way of sinners partaking of life, which Christ’s sufferings do remove. The 1st let, is a standing quarrel betwixt God and the elect, they having sinned, and having nothing to pay their debt ; this our Lord Jesus by his death removes ; he pays the debt, and tears the obligation, called the hand-writing that was against them, nailing it to his cross, Col. ii. And in this respect, his death is called a ransom for many ; and in the words before, he is said to make his soul an offering for sin, on the same account, to wit, that the principal debtor might be set free. The 2d let, is man’s utter unfitness to walk with God : For though the debt were taken away, yet they have no life, but Jesus Christ by his death hath laid down the method, how a sinner may be reconciled to God, and may partake of grace here, and walk with God, in some good measure, even while sojourning in the world, and be made partaker of the life of glory hereafter; his sufferings are not only a ransom for their debt, but also a bridge, so to speak, to go over the gulf of distance that is betwixt God and them, unto glory, whether he as the fore-runner is gone before them. In this sense, we have our graces, as the fruits of Christ's sufferings; the life of grace, faith, love, perseverance, &c. We have also protection, preservation, and guiding in the way, till we be brought through it to eternal life: As that word is, John vi. 39, 40. cited before, That of all whom the Father hath given me, I should lose nothing. In the first respect, Christ is Surety for our debt. In the second respect, he is Surety for our duty; in the first respect, we are admitted into the covenant with God; in the second, we are entertained in it by him, who lives for ever to make intercession for us.

Use 1. See here, believers, what are ye in the Father's debt for sending his Son, and what are ye in the Son's debt, for coming to die for you. You must have bore the curse yourselves, if he had not borne it; but he took it on himself, that ye might be freed from it. Thus it stood with you, ye deserved to be shut out for from God, to have the sword of his justice awakened against you. And he gave his back to the smiters, and his cheeks to them that pluckt off the hair; and was content that the sword of justice should awake against him, and smite him, that he might by his stripes heal you, and by his death procure life to you; yea, it stood thus with you, and it could not be otherwise. The justice of God being provoked, and the elect being under the curse, as it is Gal. iii. 10. Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things written in the law to do them; Ezek. xviii. 4. The soul that sins shall die; either they must die, or the Surety; and our Lord was content to be a sin-offering, thereby to set sinners free: To be lifted up on the cross, that he might draw all men after him, to pay their debt, which all the creatures could never have paid: And therefore, we should ask you, if you think heaven and glory to be of worth, and if ye think it to be a great mercy, to be freed from the wrath to come, and from the damned state and condition of the reprobate angels, and of reprobate men and women in hell, and to be admitted to enter with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, into the kingdom of God, and into those heavenly mansions; are ye not much in Christ's debt that procured this for you, and at such a rate, that thereby life might be communicated to you, who were naturally dead in trespasses and sins? Whatever the rest of the world think of it, if any of you be born again, as you ought, in a special manner, to think much of it, so ye will do in some measure; for ye are much obliged to Christ, who was content, that poor sinners should partake of him, and of the life that is in him, to taste of death himself, and who hath said, Because I live, ye shall live also; in a most wonderful way, his death is the price, by which life is communicated to us; and it becomes believers well, to be often reckoning, what they are in his debt. It is one of God's great ends in the work of redemption, even to have sinners esteeming highly of, and much ravished with his grace, and with his love brightly shining in the way thereof; yet less conscience is made of this, than of many other duties, by believers; we lend an ear to a practical point of doctrine, and will endeavour to mind it; if we be bidden to pray, we will pray; if we be commanded to mortify sin, we will endeavour it, and so in other duties: But who minds this as a duty, when we are called of God, to admire and praise his grace and love, and humbly to glory in him, so as seriously to set ourselves to go about it? And yet this would be a most native, proper, and lovely exercise for believers, even like the work of those, who say, Salvation to our God, that sits upon the throne, and unto the Lamb, Rev. vii. 10. To him who loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood, Rev. i. 5. To be taken up with such sweet soliloquies in ourselves about this subject, and with such songs of praise to him, who hath given us so noble a being, and life, which is conveyed to us by his blood, is sure a suitable use of this point; for if our life be of much worth, he must be of infinitely much more worth in himself, and should be so to us, who purchased it at such a dear price.

The 2d use, is to exhort you, whom we suppose to be renewed, as some of you now hearing me are, and O! that all of you were, that whenever ye think of enjoying of heaven and glory, ye would think also, whence it came to be thus with you; O! think on that rock, out of which ye are hewn, as ye are believers, and are entitled to life, and this will lay the natural pride, which, alas! too often believers have going along with their hope of life, as if they were something better by nature than others; because they have hope to come to heaven; but think this also with yourselves, that there are no thanks to you, but to him, Who loved you, and washed you from your sins, in his own blood; which should make you walk softly, and with a closed mouth; and in this case, every thought of your title unto, and of your hope of heaven, would be both singularly pleasant and profitable to you.

Use 3. See here, that which maketh the glad tidings of Christ's death wonderfully comfortable is, that Christ came and suffered; but if ye add this, that his design in suffering was to beget sinners to a new and spiritual life, to raise and quicken them that were dead in sins and trespasses, to pay their debt for them, and to cancel their obligation, it makes it to be much more wonderful. Alas, we have great want of spiritual affections, that we are not more affected with this, even with this, that the Father should send his Son, and that the Son should come into the world, and wherefore? Was it not even that he might have a seed, that poor creatures that were dead, and without life might be quickned, and that such as had no hope of heaven might have it; that in such a way an entry into heaven should be made to sinners, this is the wonder: Do ye believers indeed believe this, that the Lord's design in all the work of redemption, was to bring dead sinners to life? This is it that makes Christ have the name of a Saviour, that the shepherd being smitten, God might turn his hand on the little ones. And therefore, as a 4th use, see here a good ground, whereupon to preach to you by the death of Christ, the offer of life, and the remission of sin, as the apostle hath it, Acts xiii. 39, 40. 'Be it known therefore to you, men and brethren, that through this man is preached unto you, the forgiveness of sins, and by him all that believe are justified from all things, from which ye could not be justified by the law of Moses.' And there is never a text that speaks of the end of Christ's sufferings, but it some ways lays a ground, how a sinner may have life; and it is, as if it were a proclamation to sinners, to make the right use of what is offered to them. If our Lord Jesus had not suffered, there had not been a warrant for us to speak of life to you; there had been no treaty with sinners, no door opened for access to heaven, no ground for any to call God, Father; but on the contrary, Christ having suffered, and satisfied justice, it gives us ground to make this proclamation to you: Be it known unto you, that through this man is preached unto you forgiveness of sins. All which is plain from these two conditions, 1st, That there is a sufficient price laid down for the satisfying of the justice of God, for the debt of elect sinners. 2dly, That this is the Lord's design, in laying of the price down, even to procure, and to communicate life to them, according to that of John

iii. 16. God so loved the world, that he gave his only-begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him, should not perish, but have everlasting life. And that of John xii. 32. And if I be lifted up, I will draw all men after me : This demonstrates, that there is a sufficient warrant, to make use of Christ, for pardon of sin, and for obtaining of life, through him ; for generally the exception is one of these two ; either 1st, that the price will not do, and that cannot be said ; for the death of Christ is a price sufficient : Or, 2^{dly}, that sinners know not what is the Lord's purpose in it, this text holds forth that, and tells us, it is, that he may have a seed. This then is the sum of the covenant of redemption, saith the Father, Son, if thou wilt lay down thy life, thou shalt see a seed, that shall have life, thro' th^y sufferings ; and the Lord would never have given his Son to die, if he had not regarded the salvation of sinners, and to beget, and promote life in them, through his sufferings ; and to what end is the gospel preached, by which life and immortality are brought to light, but that what he hath brought, may be applied to sinners ?

And therefore, as a 5th use, we beseech you to concur with Christ, in the design of his laying down his life. Is it not, think ye, great ingratitude to him, and great cruelty to yourselves, that when the Lord had designed such a thing, by the laying down of his life ; that ye should, as far as ye can, stand in the way of it ? Now his design is, to have many in his debt for life, that he may have seed, and to have poor sinners, that are dead and lifeless in themselves, acknowledge their sin, and come to him, to have justice satisfied, and a right to life, by his offering : And is this a prejudicial design, or unprofitable to sinners ? Why then should ye stand in the way of that ? When our Lord had designed sinners good, and hath been content to lay down his life to make life possible to you, when all his design in dying, is, to have sinners

saved by their flying to him, the second Adam, that they may get a right to life transferred to them? Is it not folly and madness for sinners, to obstruct what they can this his design? The apostle makes use of this argument, 2 Cor. v. 18, 19. ‘ He hath given us ‘ the word of reconciliation, that God was in Christ ‘ reconciling the world to himself, not imputing their ‘ trespasses unto them; we therefore, as ambassadors ‘ for Christ, as though God did beseech you by us, ‘ we pray you in Christ’s stead, be ye reconciled to ‘ God.’ And what is the reason? ‘ For he was made ‘ sin for us, who knew no sin:’ And for this end, ‘ That we might be made the righteousness of God in ‘ him.’ And is not this the same argument that is in the text? Our Lord was made a sin-offering, that he might see a seed; and if so, then we would intreat you, if the bleeding bowels of Christ can have any weight with you, and if you would do him a pleasure, not to mar his design, as far as ye can, (for he will infustrably accomplish his design) and that is, to have souls brought in, to make sinners peace with God, and that they make use of his sufferings for that end: Need we use arguments, to persuade you to this, which is so much for your own good and welfare, even to save your souls? To come, and to be reconciled to God, to make use of Christ for life, to prevent the wrath that is to come, and to make heaven sure for yourselves; which it is impossible for you, honestly to aim at, but God shall have the glory of his grace and wisdom from you; and if this be not your aim and endeavour, God will not have the glory of his grace in you, though passively he shall have the glory of his justice in punishing you eternally in hell. But this is not his great and proper design, in sending of his Son; for he could have had his glory that way, though he had never sent him into the world; and therefore in his name, and in his stead, we do again and again seriously beseech, and solemnly intreat you, to give our Lord Jesus satisfaction in this particular ; ye that are going to hell, or are in hazard of it, come to Christ Jesus; the Prince of life, the Purchaser, and Giver of life, and receive life from him; come as dead sinners in yourselves, and by the law, to have a new gift of life, by his right: And we propose this suit and request in his name, who tells us, that he laid down his life, to get a seed. This gospel comes to every one of your doors, and says to you, will ye be obliged to Christ for life? Will ye be his children? If the heart be honest, and can sincerely say, content, Lord, and will creep under his wings, that ye may be found in him, and may be covered with his righteousness, there is good ground to expect a closed agreement: For our Lord purposely died, that he might have a seed, and is calling upon you for this very end, and will not go back from his word, if ye be content to make an agreement with him: And therefore I would again say unto you, shift not his call; it is his design to have a seed, and it should be yours to seek to be of that seed. O! let him have his errand among you; the offer comes, as I just now said, to every one of your doors, and your answer will be, and must be, either yea, or nay, either that ye are content to be his children, that his grace may be glorified in you; or that ye are not content, and that ye will not come to him, that ye may have life; as it is, John v. that ye scorn to be his seed. and children: But ah! the day comes, when ye would be glad of such an offer, and will not have it.

But to come a little nearer in the application of this use. 1. Are there not many of you without life, yea, hundreds of you, that are not renewed? If ye think yourselves to be dead, this word of life, and salvation is sent unto you, and sure you have need of it. 2. There is life in Christ to be had, a fair purchase made, and a way laid down, to bring sinners to have a right to life; and are not these two,

think ye, rightly appointed? On what ground then is it bottomed? Upon one of these two, or rather on both of them, implied in this phrase, of being Christ's seed. 1. It implies, that there be a coming to Christ, as void of life; and an actual trusting to him, for the attaining of life, that sinners pricked with fear, or feeling of the wrath of God, acknowledge Christ, as the Father of their life, and trust him with the application of life to them. 2. It implies, not only the trusting him with the application of life, but that we commit ourselves to him alone for it, which is implied in those words, John v. Ye will not come unto me, that ye might have life. The making use of Christ, for the attaining of life, is implied in the word coming, and that is for slain and dead souls to go to Christ, for absolution and life, called, Heb. vii. 25. A coming to God by Christ; and again, it is not, ye will not come unto me, that ye may buy or procure life, or work it to yourselves; but ye will not come to me, that ye may have it, ye will not acknowledge me for it. The first word expresses, where we have our life, and that is in Christ's sufferings: The second word, how we have it, even as the child has life from the parent, we have it fully and freely conferred on us by him: So that the similitude says this much, come to Christ, who hath procured your life; and trust your getting of life to him on the terms of grace. And since this is all that Christ seeks of you, not to make your performances the ground of your pleading for life, but his purchase; and that having need on your side, and fulness on his side, ye should come and have what ye want: What hinders your closing of a bargain? This is the very thing your salvation will stand or fall on; even on your yielding to come to him, and to be in his debt for life, and on your leaning to his righteousness, or not; and according as ye act faith, or not, on him, on this respect, so will the sentence of your absolution, or condemnation.

pass in the great day : And therefore, let me beseech you yet again above any thing to make this sure ; and when I speak of making it sure it is not only to have a glance of the thing in your minds, as many may have, to whose door Christ comes, when yet they will not go out of doors to him. Nor is it only to have a conviction in your judgment and conscience, of the reasonableness of it, as many of you have so many convictions of sin, and of the necessity of faith in your judgment, as will make you inexcusable ; ye are convinced, that such a thing should be, and there it holds ; the Lord draws you by his word, to give assent to the reasonableness of the offer ; but ye perhaps smother the conviction, ye come Agrippa's length, in assenting to the truth, but come no further ; ye laid your account, it may be, that ye could not save yourselves, and that your salvation was only in Christ, and ye took that for faith. But believe me, there must be something more than that, even a laying of yourselves on him, and a making application to him. I remember of a dying person, that had a good word to this purpose, who, when it was asked of him, how his faith did now differ from that which he had in his health ? Answered, when I was in health, I was convinced that I should believe ; but now my soul actually lays itself on Christ. The many convictions that men have, that they should believe, will cleave to them, and go with them to hell, and make them the more inexcusable, that they held there, and went no further.

6tly, and lastly, it serves to be a ground of exhortation, with many hearers of the gospel, who have heard of this noble design, and yet make no use of it. O ! hypocrites, formalists, and profane persons, what a reckoning will ye have to make, when this shall be found on your score ? Ye were dead in sin, and the Lord contrived a design to save lost sinners, in sending his Son to be an offering for sin, and the Son came and

laid down his life; and ye are called and invited to come to him, and to have life in him; the glad tidings of redemption were preached, and made offer of to you; and ye would not be content to close with Christ, but would, so far as ye could, thwart with him in this design, though it cost him his heart-blood to bring it about: What will come of this? Or what will ye answer him for it? Ye will say, it may be, that ye were content to concur with Christ, and stood not in the way of it; but it will be replied, why then did ye live and die in your sin, and bring your soul to this dreadful hazard and loss? Your conscience and God will bear it in upon you, and ye will not be able to get it shifted, that your destruction was of yourselves, because ye would not be saved; and will that, think ye, be a suitable and satisfying answer? That though Christ would have saved my soul, I would not be saved by him, and then to go to hell for that: What a tormenting thing will it be in the conscience, that life was offered to me, on condition of believing in Christ, but I refused, or scorned to take it on that condition? Think on it, what ye will think to be sent to hell, because ye would not be saved freely by Christ, and to perish, because ye would not be Christ's seed; because ye would not own your guilt, that ye may have life from him: What, do ye all think that ye have life, are there none sensible of their need of life from him? Alas! that we should be put so often to repeat these words, we may almost speak to stones with as great hope of success, as to many consciences among you, that are habitually obdured, and blinded with presumption, by the god of this world, who hath put out your eyes; but the day comes, when ye will find yourselves greatly mistaken. I shall insist no further, seeing that ye are naturally dead in sins and trespasses, and seeing that Christ's design in dying is, to have a seed, as ye would not prejudge yourselves of life, as ye would not be found to be despisers of his sufferings, and such as have trode the blood of the covenant under foot, study to make sure eternal life to yourselves, by flying to him for it; or reckon to be reputed guilty of this horrid crime of refusing him, with all the aggravations of it.

S E R M O N XLIII.

Verse 10.—He shall see his seed, he shall prolong his days, and the pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in his hand.

THERE is not one time that these words are read, but it might put to us this wondering question. For what is it that this great design of all Christ's sufferings hath been carrying on, and what hath been the great end of this covenant of redemption, that hath such sharp, sore, and sad sufferings following thereon to the Mediator, who engaged in it? This world was made with little noise, if we may so speak, there was no engagement on God for bringing about that work, though very great, as there is in bringing about this. This then certainly must be quite another thing, that hath an offering, and such an offering, as had in it the bruising and dying of the person, that was the Son of God, who interposed for the obtaining of it. But this answers the question, He shall see his seed, &c. which, in sum is this, his life shall procure life to

to many dead sinners, and they shall have it certainly applied to them; and the work of the ministry, so to speak, and of the mediatory office of Christ shall thrive well in his hand; so that there is not one soul that is designed to life and glory, but it shall be brought to the possession of it in due time.

There are two things which we have hinted at the last day, that we shall now speak a word to, and the first of them is this, that it is agreed upon, and a concluded article in the covenant of redemption, that our Lord Jesus shall, and must have a seed. This is a most certain and infallible truth: It is an effect laid down here, as a necessary consequence of his offering up of his soul for sin. It is a determined thing, if we look, 1. To the certainty of the event: Our Lord Jesus Christ must have a seed, to wit, believers in him; that is concluded on, and promised to him. 2. If we look to the seed that he shall have: They are particularly determined upon, to wit, how many children he shall have, and who they shall be: That was both a promise in the covenant, and a prophecy, as we have it, Psa. xxii. where the Psalmist, speaking before of Christ, says, verse 30. A seed shall serve him, it shall be accounted to the Lord for a generation. And this is laid down as a solid conclusion, John vi. 37. All that the Father hath given me, shall come unto me: Which supposes, both a determinate number given, and the certainty of their coming: Become of the rest of the world what will, they shall undoubtedly come. And indeed, if we look to the nature of this transaction, we will find it to be a promise, and a promise of God to the Mediator, that can neither be altered, nor accomplished; yea, it is a covenanted promise, made on a condition, to wit, the laying down of his life, as the stipulation on his side: And that which he hath for so doing from the Father on his side, is this, that he shall see his seed. And when this is, not only a promise, but such a promise as is grounded grounded on a transaction, bearing a condition, which the Son hath performed; as he himself saith, John xvii. 4. I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do. There is a justice and faithfulness in the performance of this promise on the Father's side to him, that he shall have a seed. 3. It is clear also, if we consider the end of this transaction, which is, to glorify the grace of God by Christ's purchase, in the salvation of elect sinners; in respect of this end it cannot fail, but Christ must have a seed, that the end may be attained: So then our Lord Jesus must have, and certainly shall have, many that shall partake of eternal life by him.

The 1. use of it serves to let us see the unwarrantableness of that doctrine, that leaves the fruit of Christ's death, as to his seeing of a seed, to an uncertainty, laying the weight of it on man's free-will, a thing that is very taking with natural men, and with conceited and carnal reason. But if it were left to mens choice, to receive Christ or not, then the execution of the work of redemption, and the performance of such a promise, as this is, must have the certainty of it subjected to man's will, and should be made effectual, or not, as he pleases; but it is God's great mercy to us, that we know it is not so: And that there is an equity here, (to speak with reverence of the majesty of God) that seeing our Lord Jesus hath done his part, the promise should be made effectual to him, that he should have a seed.

Use 2. It layeth a ground, serving greatly to quiet us in tumultuous times, when the world is turned, as it were, upside down, and we are wondering, what will become of the church that is now sorely assaulted, and made to stagger; what by the old enemy Anti-Christ, who is bestirring himself mightily; what through abounding security, and formality, whereby Satan is seeking to draw away many, some to error, and some to profanity: But though Anti-Christ, and the devil, with all their emissaries, and agents, had said the contrary, our Lord Jesus shall have a seed. It may be they are not the plurality of a kingdom, or nation, of a city or of a congregation; but they are so many, as shall serve to make good the promise. Our Lord makes use of this, John vi. 37. and 44. where, when a number are turning away from him, he says, ‘Murmur not at this: No man can come unto me, except the Father that sent me, draw him; and all that the Father hath given me, shall come to me.’ I will have as many (as if he had said) as are appointed to receive my word from myself, or from my servants speaking in my name; as for others, I look not for them. It is true, we should beware of having any sinful accession to the marring the progress of the gospel, and be suitably affected with any such thing in others; but withal, we should reverence the Lord’s sovereignty, who knows how to have a care of his church in the worst of times. And let this quiet your hearts, amidst all the tumults and confusions of these times, that our Lord shall have a seed, and that he shall not want any of those that are given him of his Father, but shall raise them up at the last day.

Use 3. Seeing this is the Lord’s design; it does commend to the hearers of the gospel, a concern to concur in this design, if we may speak so, in their public and private stations, in reference to themselves, and in reference to others: As it is the Lord’s design, that Christ shall have a seed, so we should make it ours. We must safely side, and fall in here with the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, whose design runs on this; and to speak so, they have, must have, and shall have a poor and fruitless work of it, who attempt to thwart the Lord in his design, whoever they be, and in whatever station or capacity, public, or private: As it is no wisdom, so it will be no advantage, to struggle or strive with God. But here is matter of great encouragement, to any that would have the gospel prospering, religion countenanced, error suppressed, the power of godliness promoted, and profanity borne down; that our Lord Jesus Christ does concur with them in the same design. I know not any other design that a man can fall in with, without fear, to come short in it, but in this; and whosoever falls in with this, it shall not misgive them; for Christ shall have a seed; and though we cannot, nor ought not absolutely and peremptorily, to design particular persons; yet in the general, we ought to concur, to have the promise made to Christ, of a seed performed to him; and indeed, it is no small privilege and prerogative, that we are admitted by prayer, or any otherways to concur with him in the design; according to that memorable word of promise, concerning this matter, Psal. lxxii. 15. Prayer shall be made for him continually, and daily shall he be praised.

Use 4. There is here great encouragement to sinners, that are in their own apprehensions void of life, and have some sense of their deadness, and would fain come to Christ for life, and have him for their Father: Such, I say, are by this doctrine, encouraged to step forward; for it is a thing determined and promised; and since it is so, we may, and ought to essay and endeavour, that he may have a seed, and may be sure it will not displease him, that we endeavour to offer ourselves to be of his seed. It is a foolish, and yet often a puzzling and perplexing doubt, that comes in the way of serious souls, when they offer to come to Christ, that they know not, but that they may be presuming; if there be any acquaintance with God, and Christ's design manifested in the gospel, there is no ground for such a doubt, and such a soul may as well question, whether will God and the Mediator be pleased, that the promise made to him of seed be performed? Certainly it will be displeasing to neither of them, but well-pleasing to both; and therefore the finer should be strengthened on this ground, and take it for granted in its addresses to God, that such a thing is designed, to wit, that Christ shall have a seed.

Use 5. It shews what must be the condition that others stand in, who do not come and make offer of themselves to be Christ's seed; they do, so far as they can, thwart God's design; and this will be added to their account; that if Christ should never have a seed, they would not for their parts betake themselves to him, nor be of his seed; but as far as they could, would stand in the way of performance of this promise to him. And this will be the ground of a sad accusation from God; I designed that Christ my Son should have seed, and I engaged by promise to give it to him, and ye scorned and disdained, to speak so with reverence on such a subject, to satisfy God so far, as to yield to Christ, to be of his seed, that that promise might have its accomplishment in you.

1. From the words complexly considered, observe, That Christ's having and obtaining of a seed, his having of souls to believe in him, is a thing most welcome and acceptable both to Jehovah, that makes the promise, and to the Mediator, to whom it is promised. There is nothing that pleases God and the Mediator better, than for lost sinners to betake themselves to Christ and his righteousness for life; it is the satisfaction that he hath for the travel of his soul; it is the recompence here promised to him; it is, to speak after the manner of men, as if the Son were saying, what shall I get, if I lay down my life for sinners? Here the Father promiseth, thou shalt see thy seed; that is, many shall believe, and be justified through thy death; and this is so acceptable to the Mediator, that he says, Lo, I come, in the volume of thy book it is written of me, I delight to do thy will, O my God; and Heb. x. the apostle says, By this will we are sanctified; he sought no more but this, for all his sufferings and soul-travel; and that it is no less acceptable to Jehovah, that makes the promise, as is clear; therefore, in the last part of the verse, it is said, The pleasure, the will or the delight, of the Lord shall prosper in his hands; that is, the engaging of souls to believe, (which is God's delight, as well as the Mediator's) shall thrive, succeed, and prosper well. It is this that John xvii. Christ calls the finishing of the work which the Father gave him to do. What is that? Thine they were, and thou gavest them me; it is even his stepping in betwixt justice and them, to make way for reconciliation through his blood, and this is very delightful and well-pleasing to Jehovah. It is true, this delightfomness is not to be so understood, as if there were such affections, and passions in the Lord, as there are in us; but it is attributed to him in these respects:

1. It is called pleasing and delightful to him, as it agrees with his revealed will and command: And so it cannot be conceived, but to be pleasing to God, as that which he commandeth, calleth for and approveth; in which respect, the holiness of them that will never be holy, and the faith of them that will never believe, is, or may be called pleasing to God.
2. It is called pleasing to the Lord, in respect of the end, and as it is a means to the glorifying of his grace, and the performance of his promise to the Mediator: For by this his grace comes to be glorified, and he hath access to perform what he hath promised to the Mediator.
3. It is pleasant to him; because in this the Lord hath a special complacency, and hath evidenced in his word comparatively a greater delight in sinners closing with Christ, and in their accepting of life through him, than in many other things: Therefore it is, that he calleth for this so pressingly; and when Christ is not thus made use of, he declares himself to be grieved, and that there is a sort of despite done to him; whereas upon the other side, he takes it (dare I speak, it with reverence) as a courtesy and honour

put upon him, when a soul gives up itself to him, and dare hazard the weight of its immortal soul on his word; in this respect, Abraham is said, Rom. iv. To give glory to God, when he trusted himself, his soul, and all his concerns to him; and we find, that believing is accounted to be an honouring of the Father, and of the Son, if we compare the 24th and 25th verses of John v. together.

The 1st use serves to let you see, that not only do the Father and our Lord Jesus Christ call sinners to believe, and warrant them to believe, and lay down grounds, whereupon they may found their faith; but they also declare, that it is well-pleasing to them, and that those shall be very welcome that come. The carriage of the father of the prodigal, Luke xv. is but a little shadow of that welcome, that a sinner in returning to God, by faith in Jesus Christ, may expect; tho' indeed that parable shews plainly, how hearty a welcome returning sinners may expect. It was meet, saith he, that we should make merry, and be glad, for this thy brother was dead, and is alive, and was lost, but is found.

Use 2. It serves to banish away that unworthy apprehension, that is in the minds of too many, that there is greater rigidity and austerity in God the Father, than there is in the Mediator towards poor sinners. If we look to God as God, his grace abounds in the person of the Father, as it doth in the person of the Son. And if we look to the Son as God, he is the same just God, that will not acquit the guilty more than the Father will do; so there is no ground for this apprehension which nourishes a sort of blasphemous conceptions of the blessed Trinity, as if they were of different natures and dispositions, the which is most unbecoming Christians. Hence it is, that many who are ignorant of God, will speak of Christ, as being easier to be dealt withal than the Father; it is a most derogatory conceit to the divine Majesty, and unworthy of Christians. Indeed if we abstract God from the Mediator, there is no dealing with him; but if we look on God, and come to him in the Mediator, there we find him easy to be dealt with; therefore, that which is called the satisfaction of the Mediator, verse 11. is called here the pleasure of the Lord; because he delights in the performing of his promise to the Mediator, in reference to his having of a seed: It is from this also, that some people pray to Christ, as if he were a different thing, or being from God; and they would first make their peace with Christ, and then by his means bring themselves in good terms with God; the Mediator indeed considered as Mediator, is different from God, who, without him, or out of him, is a consuming fire; But considered as God, he hath the same properties, and gives pardon on the same terms; and in this respect, we are to make use of his own righteousness for obtaining of pardon from himself, there being but one God: There is occasion too frequently to meet with this error; and I know not how many inconveniences it hath following upon it; some think that they are always sure of Christ's friendship, but they doubt of God's, as if the Father had not the same delight to save sinners, that Christ the Son hath: And another abuse follows on the former, that there is no need to make use of Christ but by a word of prayer to him, without exercising faith on his Godhead; if there were no more to rectify this gross mistake, this text alone might do it, if ye make use of Christ's righteousness, ye may expect friendship from the Father, and from the Son; and if ye do it not, ye have no ground to expect friendship from either of them.

Use 3. There is here ground of glad tidings to sinners, and that which makes the covenant of redemption to be deservedly called the gospel, and that made the angels to sing, Glory be to God in the highest, peace on earth, and good-will to men; that there is such a covenant laid down, for bringing life to dead sinners, and

and that the Father, and the Mediator are delighted, comforted, to say so, satisfied and well-pleased with sinners, making use of the Mediator for life. Is there then any sinner here, whose conscience lays open to him his hazard, applies the curse to him, and passes sentence on himself, and hath some desire to come to Christ, and yet wots not whether he will hold forth the golden sceptre? Behold this text doth hold it out to such, and bids them come in boldly, for Christ makes them welcome; yea, the Lord Jehovah makes them welcome: It is the Father's and Christ's delight that thou come forward. If there be a doctrine in all the scripture sweet, it is this; and without this, no preaching, nor point of truth would be sweet: I say, without this, to wit, that God hath not only provided a price, and makes an offer of it, but is well content, that it may be made use of: Yea, and is delighted that a sinner, dead in himself, should trust to the Mediator, for obtaining of life through him. And can there be any question of this? For, 1st, If it had not been the Lord Jehovah's delight, why then did he make such a covenant? Why did he, as it were, part with the Son of his love? Why did he accept of a Surety? And why transferred he on his own Son, and exacted of him the debt that was due from elect sinners; and made the sword of his justice to awake against him? If he had not had a great delight in the salvation of sinners, would he have taken that way, to smite the only Son of his love, to spare them? If it had not been the Son's pleasure, would he with such delight have undertaken, and done the Father's will, in reference to their salvation, Lo, I come, saith he, to do thy will, O my God: It was the Father's will, and he had a delight in it; and it was the Son's will and delight, so he came, and according to his undertaking, laid down his life. 2dly, Wherefore else are the promises and encouragements that are given to sinners to believe? As that of Matth. xi. 28.

Come

Come unto me all ye that labour, and are heavy laden, &c. and that, 2 Cor. v. 20. where both are put together, We are ambassadors for Christ, as though God did beseech you by us, we pray you in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God. Ministers press you in the name of God, and by virtue of a warrant from him, to be reconciled, and they have Christ's warrant in a more peculiar manner, as the great Prophet of his church, to tell you, it is a thing that the Lord Jehovah, and the Mediator have pleasure in, even in this, that ye should be reconciled. 3dly, Wherefore are the many expostulations with sinners, that they will not come to Christ for life, that they will not be gathered; that when he stretches out his hand all the day long, they will not behold him, &c. Do not all these confirm this truth, that there is nothing he is better pleased with, than with a sinner's coming to Christ for life? Let me therefore beseech you, by the love that you pretend to Jesus Christ, and in his name, and in the name of Jehovah beseech you, be ye reconciled to God in Christ, let him have satisfaction; let this pleasure be done to the Lord, even to receive life from him: This is no hard, nor hurtful, no unreasonable, nor rigid request, I am sure; all that he requires of you, is, that ye would come to him and receive life; O! if ye could but suitably apprehend this, to be that which the Lord aims at, in this preached gospel, that we might, to speak so with reverence, put an obligation on the majesty of God, in making sure, in this his own way, the salvation of our souls; and that we could not do him better service: (But I pray take the expressions right, for we cannot set forth his love, but in our own language, which comes infinitely far short of the thing) we could not from our hearts, refuse to grant such a loving, and highly rational a request. As it is sure then, upon the one side, that we cannot do that which will displease him more, than to despise his counsel in this. Though we would give our bodies to be burnt, and all our goods to the poor, he would not count it pleasure done him, if this be not done; we should look upon this, as low condescendency, and great grace in the Lord, that he seeks no more of us, but the making sure eternal life to ourselves, as that which will be most pleasing to him. It is even as if a son should say to his father, Father, what will please thee? And the father should say to his son, Son, have a care of thyself, and that will please me; because, by our so doing, he hath his great end; to wit, the glorifying of his grace, and love, which sinners, by their unbelief, do all they can to mar and obstruct: To speak seriously to you in this matter, it is a text we might speak to every day. Seeing he hath purchased redemption to sinners at a dear rate, and all that he requires of you, is to close with him, and to seek after the application of his purchase; we again earnestly pray you, be ye reconciled to God, and take heed that ye receive not his grace in vain. What can ye do that will be pleasing to God, or profitable to yourselves without this? Or what fruit of the gospel can be brought forth, when this fruit is not brought forth, if Jesus Christ, in his offices have not employment, and if his offering be not fled to for making of your peace; we may indeed, in consideration of this great and grave subject, go from the congregation partly refreshed, that there is such a doctrine to be spoken of, though we cannot, alas! speak of it suitably, but we should be afraid, lest we be found thwarting with, and running cross unto God's good-will and design in it, notwithstanding all the favour and grace he hath made offer of to us. It were good that we carried serious meditation on this subject along with us.

ISAIAH LIII. Verse 11.

Verse 11.—He shall see of the travel of his soul, and shall be satisfied: By his knowledge shall my righteous Servant justify many: For he shall bear their iniquities.

THIS is a great work that the Mediator hath to do; a great price that he hath to pay down for the satisfying of divine justice, and for redeeming of the lost elect. Now what shall he have for all the travel of his soul. Here it is answered, and the terms of the covenant of redemption are again summed up; as for the effects and fruits of his death, spoken of in the close of the former verse, he shall prolong his days; that being spoken to, from verse 8. And the pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in his hand. Being spoken to, by another lately in your hearing, from John xvii. 4. and in part by us, from verse 10. now read over again; we shall forbear further speaking to them, and come to that which follows in the 11th verse.

In this verse then there are these three things observable: 1. An offer and promise made to the Mediator, that if he will accept of the proposal, and lay down his life for redeeming of the lost elect; it shall not be fruitless, He shall see of the travel of his soul, and shall be satisfied. 2. The way how that satisfaction shall be brought about; By his knowledge shall my righteous servant justify many; that is, by faith in him; his purchase shall be applied to all these for whom he should suffer, who thereby should be justified. 3. The

The ground of this, which also shews the way, how he should justify many; for he shall bear their iniquities; that is by his undertaking, and paying of their debt, he should meritoriously procure their absolution, and the setting of them free. In the first part, we have these three things implied; 1. A supposed condition, or restipulation on the Mediator's side; that his soul shall be put to travel; which expresses both the nature of his sufferings, that they shall not only be bodily, but also, and mainly, soul-sufferings, and conflicts with the wrath of God; which the elects sins deserved, as the main and principal thing agreed to, and that wherein the price of their redemption lay; and the greatness and extremity of his sufferings, here called travel, from the similitude of a woman in travel, and the travel of his soul; this being the way foretold, how Christ should be used; he should travel in his sufferings to procure life to his people. 2. A promise made to him, that he shall see of the travel of his soul; that is, he shall not bring forth wind, but shall have a large off-spring, which in the 2d part of the ver. is called a justifying of many by his knowledge; that is, the fruit he shall have of his soul-travel. 3. The extent of this, which is his being satisfied, and quiet; which respects two things: 1st, To the certain and infallible success of his sufferings; not one of the elect shall be wanting; none that he hath bought life for shall want it; he shall have as many justified and saved as he conditioned for. 2dly, To the great delight and complacency that our Lord hath, in performing the work of redemption, and in sinners receiving the benefit of it, he shall think all well bestowed, when they come to have the application thereof, and by faith in him to be justified. From the first of these, observe, that the Mediator, in performing the work of redemption, and in satisfying the justice of God, for the debt of elect sinners, was not only put to external and bodily, but also and mainly to inward, spiritual and soul-

suffering; or, the redeeming of lost sinners cost our Lord Jesus much soul-travel and suffering; we have hinted at his sufferings often before, but this place especially speaks forth his soul-sufferings, and the inward anguish, and the agony that he was brought under; we shall therefore speak a little to this, it being most useful and extensive in the fruits and benefits of it to the people of God; and shall 1st confirm it by some places in the gospel, where we have the fulfilling of this prophecy clearly holden forth to us; and 2^{dly}, by a four-fold reason: Only take this for an advertisement, that when we speak of the soul-sufferings of our Lord we do not mean of any sufferings after death (as papists falsely columniate us) but of those sufferings, especially that were about the time of his passion, when he received the full cup of the Father's wrath put into his hand towards his approaching to the cross, and when he was upon it, when he was arraigned, and when the elect's debt was exacted of him. The first passage to confirm it, is that of John xii. 27. Now is my soul troubled, and what shall I say? Father, save me from this hour; here his soul-sufferings begin clearly to shew themselves when there is no cross nor suffering in his body, yet he is put to such a strait, considered as man, that he is, in a manner, nonplussed, and put to say, what shall I say? The horror of that which was begun, and was further coming on him, being beyond all expression, whereupon follows that prayer, Father, save me from this hour; his sinless human nature fearing as it were to enter on it. The 2^d passage is that of John xiii. 21. where it is said, that he began to be troubled in spirit, and testified, &c. But let us come forward, and compare Matthew, Mark, and Luke together, and we shall see an inexpressible and unconceivable height and heap of sorrows that his soul-trouble and travel will amount to; Matthew says, chap. xxvi. 37, 38. that he began to be sorrowful and very heavy; and in the next words, my soul is exceeding sorrowful,

even unto death ; and what made him so sorrowful ? the next words, Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me, shew that it was the cup of his Father's wrathful justice put into his hand. Mark says, chap. xiv. 33. that when he came to the garden, He began to be sore amazed, and very heavy ; a wonderful expression to be used of the Son of God ; that the person that was God should be amazed, yet being considered as man, he was so. Luke says, chap. xxii. 44. that being in agony, he prayed more earnestly. There is a sore exercise and sad soul-travel indeed, when the sword of God's justice awaked against the man that was God's Fellow, and when he hath the curse that was due to all the elect to encounter and meet with ; this was such a combat, the like whereof was never in the world ; and the effect of it is, His sweat as great drops of blood falling down to the ground ; when there is no hand of a man stirring him, nor any man by him to trouble him, but God, as a severe and holy exactor, putting him to pay the debt which he had undertaken to pay, according to his obligation ; the inward pressure of his soul pressed great drops of blood from his body. And if we will yet look a little forward to Matt. xxvii. 46. we shall find him brought to that extremity on the cross, that he cries My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me ? which though it say, that there was still faith in the Mediator, in adhering to the Father as his God ; yet it sets forth that great horror which he had inwardly to wrestle with, when there was some restraint on the sensible comforting influence of the Godhead. Now when all the evangelists concur so emphatically and significantly to express the excellency of this choice, and pitching upon such weighty words to set it forth by ; we may see it to be designedly holden forth, as a special truth, that the faith of the people of God may be strongly confirmed therein.

To confirm it yet further, put these four together :
 1. The state that the elect are naturally lying in, for whom Christ undertakes, they are naturally under sin, liable to the curse of God for the transgression of his law, which had said, the soul that sins shall die, and cursed is every one that continueth not in all things written in the book of the law to do them. 2. And to this, the supposition of Christ's undertaking to be the elects Surety, and to satisfy for their debt, whereby he steps into their room, takes on him their debt, and as the word is, 2 Cor. v. ult. becomes sin for them, is content to be liable to, and to be pursued by justice for their debt; and though here there be a relaxation in respect of the persons of the elect, for whom the Surety stands good, yet in respect of the curse and death due to them, there is no relaxation; but the same thing due to them is laid on him; as it is Gal. iii. 13. he hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us. In every thing he was put to pay the equivalent, for making up the satisfaction due to justice, and these two being put together, that elect sinners were obnoxious to wrath, and that our Lord came in their room, he must certainly be put to sad and fore-soul-suffering. 3. Consider God's end in the work of redemption, which is to set forth the inconceivableness of his wonderful condescending grace and mercy, in exacting of a satisfaction from the Surety, and in setting the sinner free, that his grace may be so glorified, as there shall be a proof given of his justice and sovereignty going along with it, and infinite wisdom being set on work to glorify infinite grace and justice, there is a necessity for the promoting of this end, that the Mediator shall thus satisfy, and the more full the satisfaction be, the more conspicuously do the grace and justice of God shine forth, and are glorified, according to that word, Rom. iii. 26. to declare his righteousness, that he might be just, and the justifier of him that shall believe in Jesus. This is the end of Christ's being made a propitiation, that God may be manifested to be spotless and pure in his justice, justice, as well as free and rich in his mercy and grace; who, having given a law to man, will not acquit the transgression thereof, without a condign satisfaction.

4. Consider, that it is a great thing to satisfy justice for one sin; but that it is more to satisfy justice for all the sins of one person, which all the angels in heaven, and men on earth cannot do; and therefore the punishment of the damned in hell is drawn out to eternities length, and yet there is never a complete equivalent satisfaction made to justice; but it is still much more to satisfy justice, for all the sins of the elect; who, though they be few in comparison of the reprobate world, yet simply considered they are many; yea, even innumerable. And our Lord having taken all their sins on him, he is peremptorily required to satisfy for them all; and if this be added, that he is to satisfy for all the sins of all the elect at once, in a very short time, and hath the curse and wrath of God due to them, mustered and marshalled in battalions against him, and as it were in a great body, in a most formidable manner marching up towards him, and furiously charging him; and all the wrath which they should have drunken, through all eternity (which yet would never have been drunk up, or made the less) put into one cup, and given to him; as the word is, Psal. xc. 7. He shall drink of the brook in the way; the wrath of God running like an impetuous river must be drunk up at once and made dry by him. These being put together, do clearly and convincingly shew, that it could not but be an inexpressible and inconceivable soul-travel and suffering, that our Lord Jesus was put to.

The use of this doctrine is large; and the 1st use is this, that ye should take it for a most certain truth, which the scriptures do so frequently and significantly hold forth; that our Lord Jesus, in performing the work of redemption, had much sad soul-travel and sorrow; the faith of this is very useful to demonstrate the great love of God, and of the Mediator: For doubtless the more suffering that was undergone by the Mediator, the more love appears therein to the elect. 2. It serves to hold forth the sovereignty and justice of God, and the horribleness of sin. 3. In respect of God's people, it is useful, that they may be thoroughly clear in the reality and worth of Christ's satisfaction; he having no other end in it, but to satisfy justice for their sin. 4. It is useful to shew the vanity and emptiness of mens supposed and fancied merits, and of any thing that can be alledged to be in man's suffering, or doing, for the satisfying of divine justice, seeing it drew so deep on Christ the surety. And here two gross errors come to be refuted, and reprobated; one is of the Socinians, who seek quite to overturn Christ's satisfaction; and another of the Papists, that diminish his satisfaction, and extenuate and derogate from the great privileges of the pardon of sin, as if any thing could procure it besides this satisfaction of Christ by his soul-travel; both which are abundantly refuted by this text.

But to speak a word more particularly to the first, for clearing of which ye will ask what could there be to affect the holy human soul of our Lord? Or what was that wherein his soul-sufferings did consist? But before we speak to this, we would permit this word of advertisement, that there are two sorts of punishments, or penal effects of sin. The 1st sort, are such as are simply penal and satisfying, as proceeding from some extrinsic cause. The 2^d sort are sinful; one sin in the righteous judgment of God drawing on another. And this proceeds not simply from the nature of justice, but from the nature of a mere sinful creature, and so from an intrinsic cause of a sinful principle in the creature. Now when we speak of the soul-sufferings of Christ, which he was put to, in satisfying for the sins of the elect: We mean of the former, that is, sufferings that are simply penal, for there was no intrinsic principle of

of corrupt nature, nor ground of accusation in him, as there is in sinful creatures: And therefore we are to conceive of his soul-sufferings, as of something inflicted from without; and are not to conceive of them as we do of sinful creatures, that have sin in them, whereof he was altogether free.

Having permitted this, we shall speak a little to these two: 1. To that wherein this soul-suffering did not consist. 2. To that wherein it did consist. For the former wherein it was not. 1. We are not to suppose, or imagine any actual separation betwixt his Godhead, and his manhead, as if there had been an interruption of the personal union; not so, for the union of the two natures in one person remains still, though, as was hinted before, there was a suspension of such a measure, at least of the sensible comforting influence of the divine nature from the human, as had formerly been let enjoyed thereby. And yet there was even then a sustaining power flowing from the Godhead, that supported him; so, that he was not swallowed up of that, which would have quite and for ever swallowed up all creatures, as is evident in his crying, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? Which shews, that though the union and relation stood firm, yet a comfortable influence was much restrained. 2. There was no sinful fretting, no impatience nor anxiety in our Lord, all along his sufferings; for he did most willingly undergo them, and had a kindly submission in them all; as is evident in these words: But for this cause came I unto this hour: And not my will, but thy will be done. 3. There was not in him any distrust of God's love, nor any unbelief of his approbation before God, neither any the least diffidence, as to his deliverance; for in the saddest and sharpest of all his conflicts, he was clear about his Father's love to him; that the relation stood firm, and that there would be a comfortable deliverance, as his prayer before shews, wherein he styles God, Father. And these

these hardest like words uttered by him on the cross, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? do also confirm it, wherein twice over he confidently asserts his interest, My God, my God: Though he was most terribly assaulted, yet the temptation did not prevail over him. 4. Neither are we to conceive, that there was any inward confusion, accusation, or gnawing of conscience in him, such as is in desperate sinners cast under the wrath of God, because there was no inward cause of it, nor any thing that could conceive it; yea, even in that wherein he was Surety, he was clear, that he was doing the Father's will, and finishing the work that was committed to him; and that even under the greatest apprehensions of wrath: Therefore all such things are to be guarded against, in our thoughts, least otherways we reflect upon our innocent and spotless Mediator. But 2. To speak a word to that wherein it doth consist. 1. It did consist, as we hinted before, in the Godhead's suspending its comfortable influence for a time from the human nature. Though our Lord had no culpable anxiety, yet he had a sinless fear, considering him as man; and that the infinite God was angry, when he was executing the sentence of the law against him, (though he was not angry at him considered as in himself, but as he stood in the room of the elect, as their Surety, of whom he was to exact the payment of their debt) he could not but be in a wonderful amazement, as the word is, Mark xiv. 35. He was sore amazed. And Heb. v. 7. it is said, When he had offered up prayers and supplications with strong cries and tears, unto him that was able to save him from death, he was heard in that which he feared, which looks to his wrestling in the garden. 2. He had an inexpressible sense of grief; not only from the petty outward afflictions that he was under, (which may be called petty comparatively, though they were very great in themselves) but also from the current of wrath flowing in on his soul. That cud

must have a most bitter relish, and an inconceivable anguish with it, when he was a drinking of it, as appeared in his agony, O! as he was pained and straitened in his soul, the soul being especially sensible of the wrath of God. 3. It consisted in a sort of wonderful horror, which no question, the marching up, if we may so speak, of so many mighty squadrons of the highly provoked wrath of God; and making so furious and formidable an assault on the innocent human nature of Christ, that considered simply in itself, was a finite creature, must necessarily to be attended with. Hence he prays, Father, if it be possible, let this cup depart from me; intimating, that there was a sinless loathing, and a holy abhorrence to meddle with it, and to adventure upon it. Though we have not hearts rightly to conceive, nor tongues suitably to express the most exquisite sufferings; yet these things shew, that our Lord Jesus was exceedingly put to it in his holy human soul.

The 2d use serves to stir us up to wonder at the love of God the Father, that gave his own Son, and exacted the elects debt off him; and made the sword of his justice to awake against him, and to wonder at the love of the Son, that engaged to be Surety for them, and humbled himself so low to lift them up. It was wonderful, that he should stoop to become man, and to be a poor man, and to die; but more that he should come this length, as to be in an agony of soul, and to be so tossed with a tempest of terrible wrath, though he was not capable of tossing as mere creatures are. This being well considered, would heighten exceedingly the praise of grace in his church, and very much warm the hearts of sinners. And for pressing this use a little, and for provoking to holy wondering at this love; consider these four: 1. Who it was that suffered thus? even he that was without guile, he that was God's delight, his Father's Fellow, the express image of his person, he that made all things, and who will one day be Judge of all. It is even he that thus suffered.

2. What he suffered, even the wrath of God in such a degree and measure, as was equivalent to all that the elect should have suffered eternally in hell; which drew from him those expressions which we hinted before.

3. For whom all this was, which makes it appear to be yet more wonderful. It was for a number of lost straying sheep, that were turned every one to his own way, as it is, verse 6. for debauched bankrupts, that were enemies to, and contending with him; some of them spitting in his face, some of them upon the consultation of taking away his life, as may be gathered from Acts ii. Yea, take the best of them, for whom he suffered, even those he took to the garden with him, to be witnesses of his agony; and we shall find them sleeping, and out of frame to watch with him but for one hour, when he is in the height of it, and is thereby cast into a great sweat of blood. It had been much for him to have suffered for righteous persons; but as it is, Rom. v. God commends his love to us in this, that while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us.

4. The manner how he suffered, to wit, most willingly and patiently; though he easily could have commanded more than twelve legions of angels to rescue him, yet he would not, but would needs be apprehended by a number of poor worms, that will with many more, one day crawl at his footstool. That being the particular word of every article of the covenant of redemption on the Mediator's part, both as to the undertaking, and the performance, I delight to do thy will, O my God. And now, for what end are all these things spoken? Is it think ye only, that we should speak, and that ye should hear of them, and no more? Surely no, it is a wonder that this which concerns us so nearly, is not more affecting to us. Are there any here that have hope of benefit from Christ's sufferings, or that can comfortably apply them? Do not ye behold a depth of love here, that cannot be fathomed?

ed? Is it suitable, think ye, that sinners, who have the hope of heaven through Christ's sufferings, should be so little moved at the hearing and reading of them? He suffers much by sinners, when his love that is shining forth in his sufferings is not taken notice of. I would put the question to you, when was your heart suitably affected with thinking on them? Or, when did ye make it an errand to God, purposely to bless him for this, that he sent his Son to suffer, and that the Mediator came and suffered such things for you sinners? This is a part, and a considerable part of your duty; and gratitude should constrain you to it, and should not let you diminish, nor derogate from the just esteem of his love, though, through your own fault, ye be not sure of your interest in it, yet his condescending grace is not the less.

Use 3. Behold here, as upon the one side, the exceeding severity of justice, and terribleness of wrath; so upon the other side, the exceeding abominableness and desperateness of sin. Would ye know what sin is, what wrath is, how just and severe the law is? read all these here, even in what is exacted by justice of the surety for the elects sins; the most part of men and women, alas! do not believe how evil and bitter a thing sin is, and therefore they dally and play with it. They know not what wrath is, and therefore they dare hazard on it; they know not how strict the law is, and therefore they promise themselves peace, Tho' they walk in the imagination of their own hearts, and add drunkenness to thirst. But O! secure sinners, what mean ye? Have ye, or can ye have any hope, that God will deal more gently with you, than he dealt with his own Son, when he was but Surety, and the sinner only by imputation. Ye are finite creatures, and drink in sin as the ox drinks water, and have an inward sinful principle, and an evil conscience, filled with just grounds of many accusations. Consider with yourselves, what a desperate condition, under inevitable and intolerable wrath ye have to look for, who have no ground to look otherways on God than as an enemy; when wrath was so horrible to innocent Jesus Christ, who had no sin, nor doubt of an interest with God, what will it be to you? Certainly the day is coming, when many of you will think ye have greatly beguiled and cheated yourselves in thinking, that justice would be so easily satisfied as ye did. O! then ye will be made to know, to your loss, the nature of sin, who would never suffer these things to be believed before: The case of the rich glutton in hell may persuade many, that the law is strict, and that sin is an ill and bitter thing, and that wrath is sore to abide. Therefore let me intreat you, as ye would eschew the wrath of God, and the lash of his revenging justice; beware of sin, dally not with it, as ye would not have it aggravated by this circumstance, above many, that ye ventured to commit it, upon the consideration of God's goodness, that in reason should have led you to repentance.

Use 4. See here the absolute necessity that lies on sinners, who hear this gospel, to receive Christ by faith, and to improve his satisfaction for obtaining of life through him: For one of these two must be resolved on, either to come to this reckoning with justice yourselves, or to endeavour the removal of wrath by the satisfaction of Christ, there being no other way to come to freedom from guilt, and from the wrath that guilt brings with it: That Christ Jesus suffered thus, as sinners Surety; it says, that wherever sin is, God will exact satisfaction; and where he exacts, he does it severely tho' most justly; and if he exact it severely of the Surety, what will he do with the debtor, especially when he hath slighted the Surety, and despised the grace offered thro' him? And therefore not only, in respect of the command, but of the consequence that will follow the disobedience of it, be exhorted, if you think not to take your hazard of wrath, to endeavour, in God's

God's way to get your interest in this satisfaction which the Surety hath made, well secured. There is here a solid ground for faith, to expect that this satisfaction will answer the end of all who will make use of it; and a most pressing motive to engage them that are lying under sin, to embrace, to close with, and to rest upon this offered satisfaction, that this grace be not received in vain. Is there not a testimony in your consciences of the former, and why do ye not make use of the latter? Will ye but once be prevailed with, to put the question to yourselves thus, what if I be made to reckon for my own sins? What horrid wrath shall I meet with when the Mediator had such sore soul-travel; even when there was a covenant relation standing still, not doubted of, betwixt the Father and him; when formidable wrath shall be seen palpably pursuing me the sinner, having no covenant-relation to support me? We would not put it to your choice; whether ye will reckon or not; for that must be, and shall be, whether ye choose or refuse. It is appointed for all men once to die, and after that to come to judgment; and we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ: But that which we would put to your choice, is the way of coming to this judgment, and reckoning, and there are but two ways; either ye must come in your own strength, or ye must fly to Christ's righteousness, as being thoroughly convinced of the necessity of it, and that it will procure your acceptance. The day of the Lord will discover, that many have spoken of their faith, and repentance, that never really exercised the same. I shall now say no more, only remember, that it is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God; who, when his wrath is kindled but a little, can cause the stoutest and proudest of his enemies to perish, in the midst of all their designs and projects: But they will all then be found to be happy who have put their trust in him.

S E R M O N XLV.

ISAIAH LIII. Verse 11.

Verse 11.—He shall see of the travel of his soul, and shall be satisfied : By his knowledge shall my righteous Servant justify many : For he shall bear their iniquities.

ALL scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be made perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works, and that his people may be made wise unto salvation : Yet these scriptures wherein our Lord Jesus is holden forth more clearly, are eminently useful, he being the foundation and ground of all, to whom the law and the prophets bear witness ; and they are only profitable to us, in the estate wherein we are, in so far as they relate to him, and set him forth to us. And we may further say, that these scriptures, wherein his sufferings and death are holden forth, in the richness and fruitfulness of them, are singularly so ; that being the very life of the covenant, and the very door, by, and through which, we pass from death to life ; and whatever they be to others, sure they have a special sweetness in them to sensible sinners ; and therefore the sum of the gospel, and of saving knowledge, is by the apostle, 2 Cor. ii. 2. summed up in the knowledge of Christ, and of him crucified, which unfolds his very heart and bowels to us.

The prophet hath been setting forth this in several verses, and hath hinted at the effects of his sufferings in the former verse : And now in these words, he puts a new title on them, calling them the travel of Christ's soul ; not only to set forth the exceeding greatness of them, but with respect to the foregoing words ; wherein it is said, He shall see his seed ; which is repeated here, when it is said, He shall be satisfied. So that as a mother is in travel, for bringing forth of a child ; so says he, shall Christ be put to soul-travel, for bringing life and immortality to the seed given to him, to be saved by him ; and seeing he is put to travel, he must needs bring forth, and see his seed. Here we may allude to that of Isaiah lxvi. 9. ' Shall I bring to the birth, and not cause to bring forth ? saith the Lord ; shall I cause to bring forth, and shut the womb ? saith thy God.'

We have spoken of the nature and greatness of these sufferings. Now ere we proceed to any more observations, we would speak a word further to the use of this ; it being indeed an eater, out of which comes meat ; and a strong, out of which comes sweet ; these pangs having calmed and quieted the pangs, to speak so, of many travelling souls, and brought forth a birth at last.

And therefore, beside what I spoke to in the use the last day, I would add this, That we should endeavour to have the solid faith, not only of his sufferings imprinted deeply on our hearts ; that, I say, the sufferings of a dying, blood-sweating Christ, wrestling and struggling, even to his being in an agony, with the wrath of God, and putting up strong cries with tears, may be borne in on our hearts ; and that we may thoroughly be persuaded of the greatness of the work of redemption, and that it was a most dear and costly engagement to Christ ; for it was not gold nor silver, it was not kingdoms nor visible worlds, nor angels that were given as a price for elect sinners ; but it was the precious blood of the Son of God ; nay it was the bitter and sharp soul-travel, sadness, sorrow, and

agony of our Lord Jesus; which, to speak comparatively, was beyond the shedding of his blood. And what a price do ye think this to be? That he that made all, and preserved all, in their being, and was before all things, should come thus low, as to be a man, and a mean, sorrowful, suffering, and dying man, yea, to be a cursed man, and to go out of this life, as being under a curse, yet being always the beloved Son of the Father; and being even then, when at his lowest, the Prince of the kings of the earth, and shining forth gloriously, in the power, and riches, and freeness of his love and grace. Sure this wonderful low stooping and humbling of himself, preacheth out the love that straitened and constrained him to engage in that which was his own death, there being no hands that could have taken away his life, had he not willingly laid it down, which he did with delight. Could we make use of this, there is much here to be said for our use.

We shall draw what we design to say on it, to these four heads. 1. To something for instruction. 2. To something for consolation. 3. To something for exhortation. 4. To something for reproof, and expostulation.

I say, first, it serves for instruction, and ye should from it be instructed in several things. 1. How to think aright of the great severity of the justice of God, and of the horror of wrath, and of the dreadful consequences of sin, which it will most certainly have following on it, should it not make your souls to tremble, to think upon, and consider, that our Lord Jesus was brought to such a pass, as to be in such an agony, to be so exceeding sorrowful, and even amazed; to be so troubled in soul, that he was thereby made to sweat great drops of blood, and to be wrestling with somewhat, that his holy human nature had a fear of? O! the desert and wages of sin are dreadful, when the law pursues its controversy, and when justice exacts what a broken covenant deserves. Alas! the most of men believe not this, but here there is enough to convince us, what an evil thing sin is, and what a dreadful thing it is to fall into the hands of an angry God. O! that ye would think upon it, that ye may beware of sin, by all means, and may always be minding that word which our Saviour hath, If these things be done in the green tree, what shall be done in the dry? If it was so done with him, who in the action (if I may so call it) was performing his Father's will, and giving an admirable proof of his respect to the honour of God; what will he do to the dry sticks, the damned reprobates, who have slighted the offer of his grace, despised the sufferings of a Mediator, and disdained to be reclaimed? Hear it and tremble, and be persuaded, that the horror that sin shall bring upon the sinner, when God comes to reckon with him, is inexpressible. 2. Be instructed, and see here how great the difficulty is of making peace with God, when once his law is broken. A thing that is little believed by most, who are disposed to think that they will get God sooner pleased and pacified, than they will get their neighbour, or master pacified and pleased; which says, that either they think nothing, or but very little of his wrath, or that they will soon get it appeased, and that a word will do it. Hence it is, that they think, that an equivalent price is not necessary for satisfying the justice of God, and for preventing of his wrath; but if it be so easy a thing to pacify God, and to satisfy his justice, why did our Lord undertake the debt? Why did he become so low, and pay so dear a price, to procure a discharge of it? Why was his soul put to such travel, when no shame, no reproach nor pain of his blessed body could do it, but his soul in the sore travel thereof, behoved to be made a sacrifice for sin? Sinners grossly ignorant mistakes of the justice of God, appear palpably in this; there never was a person that was called to it, and did undertake to remove God's wrath

from others, but our Lord Jesus; and ye see here what it cost him. And what do you imagine will be the lot of others, who shall lie under it eternally? 3. See here the worth and weight of a soul, and the great moment of the salvation of a soul; immortal souls are of much worth; and though men often sell them at a cheap and easy rate, yet our Lord bought souls dear. It is very true, souls considered in themselves, are not worthy of the price laid down for them; but being considered with respect to the end for which they are designed, to wit, the glorifying of the riches of the grace and mercy of God, and their enjoying of him, they are of much worth. Ah! that men should sell their souls so very cheap, when our Lord bought souls so very dear. 4. See here, the solidity, fulness, and satisfactoriness of the price that Jesus Christ gave to justice for the souls of his people? It cannot sure but be a full and satisfying price, that such a person should suffer, and suffer so much, even to be put to soul-travel, for which there could be no reason, neither could it have any other end, but the satisfying of divine justice for the sins of the elect; and considering these his sufferings in the degree of them, which was so very high; and in the rise of them, which was God's purpose and decree; and in the end of them, which was to satisfy the justice of God, and to make his grace glorious, it cannot but be a most solid, full, and satisfying price: So that a soul may have here a sufficient ground to build its salvation upon; and the more low that the Mediator was brought by his sufferings, the more solid and sure is the ground of our faith; yet, this is the end why he came so low. 5. See here, how greatly we are in Christ's debt, that when justice was provoked, and sinners had lost themselves, and when nothing else could be admitted, but all other sacrifices were rejected, he was graciously pleased to yield himself to be the sacrifice, by his extreme and most exquisite sufferings, most pleasantly and chearful-

ly, saying, Lo, I come, in the volume of thy book it is written of me, I delight to do thy will, O my God; by the which will, saith the apostle, Heb. x. we are sanctified, and by it we have access to eternal life. It had been much, if he had made a new world for believers to dwell in, nay, it had been much, if he had provided angels to mollify and mitigate their sufferings, and to give them drops of water to cool their tongues in hell; but that he his own blessed self, should decline no soul-travel, beside bodily sufferings, to redeem them from the curse; how much, how unspeakably much are they obliged to Jesus Christ? If we were suitably sensible of our hazard, and clear as to our interest in these sufferings, it could not be, but our souls would leap some way within us, as the babe did in Elizabeth's womb, on this consideration, that a Surety and Saviour hath come, and paid the price that was due by us to the justice of God. This is a greater obligation than his making of the world for an habitation to sinners; nay, a greater obligation than his giving of heaven to us, if abstracted from Christ. O how well would it become us, in reading of these words, to stand and pause, and to say, is it so indeed, that Christ gave himself thus for sinners, and for me? This is it which opens the door of access to God, and makes a bridge over the gulf, that is betwixt God and sinners. He was smitten, that by his strokes and stripes, health might be brought to us, he was content to undergo sore soul-travel, that thereby life might be brought to us.

That which we mainly aim at in this branch of the use is, that ye should look to the mercy purchased by this soul-travel, as your great obligation, and at what a rate you have the offer of grace, and access to heaven; when he made the world, heaven, and earth, sun, moon, stars, &c. he spake the word, and it was done; there needed no more, but let such a thing be, and it was; but the work of redemption was of another sort, and brought about at a high and dearer rate; therefore among all the things which the gospel holds forth, put a high value on those things that are the fruits of Christ's soul-travel; and consider what a slight it will be, and what guilt it will involve you in, that he should purchase redemption so dear, and make offer of it so freely, and ye should care little or nothing for it. 6. Be instructed concerning the absolute necessity of being in Christ's debt, for the right application of his purchase; is there any man that can merit it, or render him a recompence for it? If not, and if there be a necessity of heaven and salvation, then sure there is a necessity of being in Christ's debt, and of making use of his purchase, for the attaining of that which he hath purchased; and men are not hardly dealt with, when this blessed necessity is imposed upon them, not to satisfy for themselves (for what can they bring that will be an equivalent price?) but to acquiesce in his satisfaction made to justice for them, and the rather, that they cannot bind him to make application of it. People are very readily given to one of these two, either to mistake and pass by the Mediator, and so to presume to make a new bargain for their peace, by offering to drink themselves of the cup which Christ drank of; for that only was the price of souls; or if they esteem of Christ's satisfaction, they think to oblige him, and to procure from him the application of his purchase by their prayers and good living: But what is there in this, more than is in the former? what price is there that can be given to him, that is equivalent to his sufferings? It must therefore of necessity come to this, that as it was freely purchased, so it is freely applied; and it is very suitable for sinners to carry the faith of this along with them in their hearts; if he procured heaven to us, by his soul-suffering and travel, we cannot procure it to ourselves; and therefore a necessity lies on all that would come to heaven, to be in Christ's debt for it; and this is the upshot of all,

Use 2. This doctrine yields much consolation, and the fountain and rise of it is, that his soul-travel bought it all, and makes way to the bringing of us to the possession of it. And in many respects, our consolation depends on it ; we shall look upon it as the the rise thereof more generally, in these respects. 1. That to a poor sinner lying under the curse, there is a possibility of getting it put by, and kept off, that heaven is not desperate, and that the fear of coming before the tribunal of justice is not absolute ; for our Lord satisfied justice ; the price that he laid down was not for nought, but levelled at this very scope, as the apostle hath it, 2 Cor. v. ult. He was made sin for us, that knew no sin, that we sinners might be made the righteousness of God in, or through him ; and what strong consolation is this, for a sinner under the curse of God, to have this word spoken to him, though thou cannot satisfy justice for thyself, yet there is a way laid down to satisfy it for thee ? The Mediator having the price that was required, proposed to him, did not stick at the terms, but complied with the agreement, and hath accordingly actually performed it. 2. It is a consolation in this respect, that not only is there a complete satisfaction given to justice, but a willing Saviour, ready to make that satisfaction good, and to make it good freely ; can there be a greater proof of our Lord Jesus his love to sinners than this ? That when they were considered with all their debt laying on their heads, he undertook this soul-travel for them, to procure them salvation from wrath and justice ; this is more than his giving them his word for it, though that had been enough ; it is more than the giving them his oath, thus to commend his love ; as it is John xv. 13. Greater love hath no man than this, that a man should lay down his life for his friend ; but, says the apostle, Rom. v. 8. 10. God commends his love to us that while we are yet sinners, yea enemies, Christ died for us. This good shepherd laid down his life for his sheep. 3. It is a consolation in this respect, that there is also a willingness in the Lord Jehovah, the provoked party, to accept of this satisfaction; and to absolve the elect, on account of this satisfaction; for what, I pray, was all this soul-travel that the Lord underwent? But Jehovah his transferring of the debt of the elect on him, according to the transaction that had past in the covenant of redemption, he would never have made the sword of his justice to awake against the man that was his Fellow, if he had not been content to accept of his satisfaction for them that should make use of it; for we have not only the Mediator, and his satisfaction to consider in this soul-travel but also the contrivance of the covenant called in the former words, the pleasure of the Lord, who, while we were enemies, gave his Son, and was content to want him for a time, to speak so, and to be a distinct party to pursue him. Is not this then a good agreement, when we have a willing Mediator content to give the price and satisfaction, and a gracious and willing God, content to accept of this satisfaction, and both of them content to make the application of it to us freely? as it is Rev. iii. 18. Here is matter of strong consolation, the ground whereof will not fail, to wit, the Mediator's soul travel, and the Lord Jehovah will not throw off the agreement, when the poor sinner says I have nothing to pay, but there is a price in Christ's satisfaction offered in the gospel, and the judge admits it for the sinner that lays claim to it, as if the sinner had never sinned, or had actually paid the price himself.

But 4. Look a little further, and we shall find more consolation, though this be much, consider a sinner in a tempted condition, and under sad soul-exercise, that wots not what to do with unbelief, with the devil, and with the wrath of God; all which are like to overwhelm whelm and swallow him up, and the heart is like to sink ; here is the native and suitable fountain for such a soul to drink at ; that our Lord Jesus suffered more, and that it was another sort of cup that he drank of, and drank up, and for these ends, 1st, To take away the sting and bitterness of thy cup, 2^{dly}, To procure, and meritoriously to purchase a freedom and deliverance from these temptations for thee. 3^{dly}, Also, that he might be made a sympathizing High-priest, and the more compassionate towards the person that should be so tempted, according to that, Heb. ii. ult. for that he himself hath suffered ; being tempted, he is able to succour these that are tempted ; he was tempted, that he might have a tender sympathy with tempted souls ; and therefore when such are ready to faint, he supports and upholds them ; and when they are in hazard to turn their back on the conflict, he comes up with fresh strength, and recruits them. So Heb. 4. 15. ‘ We ‘ have not an High-priest which cannot be touched ‘ with the feeling of our infirmities, but was in all ‘ points tempted like as we are, yet without sin.’ We have such an High-priest, as was not only mocked, and scorned of men, and some way deserted of God, but who was tempted, though not from sin within (for he was without sin) yet to sin ; for he was assaulted by the devil, and tempted to unbelief, and other gross sins, as is clear, Matt. iv. though, as he saith himself, the prince of this world hath nothing in me ; and he was not only tempted to sin, but as if he had actually sinned, he met with wrath from all. There is a sweet and strong sympathy flowing from such bowels, as one brother hath towards another, but his is inconceivably beyond the tenderest bowels, that the most warmly loving brethren in all the world have one towards another ; and therefore he knows well what apprehensions, and strong temptations will attempt to beat in upon poor souls, and can with experience sympathise with them ; it is not so to be understood, derstood, as if there were any additional degree made to his kindness, skill, and grace, as he is God, these being infinite in him, as so considered; yet his being man as well as God, or having a human nature, he hath from his personal experience a sympathy, and that in a human way, though infinitely above what we can conceive, with his own, under their temptations, and sad soul-exercises. And seeing the scripture sets forth such a thing as this, that our High-priest is a man that hath bowels of sympathy, it may sufficiently warrant a believer to expect much good, this and other ways from Christ, he having grace infinite in him, as God, and a tender heart, as man, to befriend them, and to communicate, and send forth of that grace unto them. And this is great ground of consolation to believers under any cross and part of hard exercise, to know that we have a Mediator, who knows in experience, though not the sinfulness that accompanies these hard exercises in us; yet what these fears are, of being shut out from God, and how dreadful a thing it is to be at enmity with him; and is like to those, who having come through a fore trial themselves, are thereby the more ready to sympathise with others under it. 5. And lastly, the consideration of this may comfort believers even in their outward afflictions; it had been another sort of crosses that they would have been made to meet with, if he had not taken this cup of wrath, and drank it for them; and therefore they should be comforted, and bless God, who hath taken this soul-travel from off them, and made way for a retreat and shelter for them in him; and it should even shame believers, who are ready to think so much of any little inward exercise, or of outward affliction, seeing our blessed Lord Jesus endured so much, not only outward, and bodily affliction, but also so much inward trouble and soul-travel, that thereby their burden might be made light, and their yoke easy.

Use 3. For exhortation: Seeing our Lord Jesus was put to such sore travel; sure it lays a great obligation on them, for whom he suffered, to endeavour to make some suitable and grateful return; seeing therefore we are so much in his debt, we should give him a friendly meeting in these four particulars which this calls for: 1st, It calleth for love to him, that discovered such love to us: 2^{dly}, It calleth for faith; that seeing he gave such a price for us, we should trust our souls to him: 3^{dly}, It calleth for holiness and obedience, even living to him, and to the glorifying of him that hath bought us: This argument will sure weigh with you, who on solid grounds lay claim to his purchase. 4^{thly}, It calleth for thankfulness and praise, in magnifying his grace and love that hath so loved us. And are not all these very suitable and becoming; that sinners should love him, and that those who love him not, should be Anathema Maranatha, accursed to the coming of the Lord; and that sinners should believe on him, and be obedient to him, and thankful.

If ye believe this truth, this comfortable and soul ravishing truth, let me exhort you, and be exhorted and prevailed with, to love our Lord Jesus Christ, and to give him that answerable respect, meeting and welcome that becomes you: If we may plead for any thing from you, sure we may plead for this: If it be true that he engaged in such a bargain, in which, if he had not engaged himself, we had inevitably gone to the pit; and if he hath actually paid the price which he undertook to pay, let your consciences speak, if it should not melt the hearts of such, to whom the benefit of this is offered, with love to him? And if you have the faith of the doctrine, can ye deny, but this obligation lieth upon you? Look in on your consciences and hearts, and see if ye be able to shift it; and if ye had suitable palaces for entertaining him in, whether ye be not bound to open to him, and give him a free passage to them; and if your eyes were fountains of tears, would it not become you to wash his feet with them, and to wipe them with the hair of your head? Would to God that you were under the suitable impression of this, and that ye were by the gospel, and the privileges ye have by it, constrained to love the Lord Jesus Christ. It may be, some of you think, if this be all that is called for, he shall not want it: We assure you it is called for; My son, saith he, give me thine heart. But we are afraid, that though ye will confess, that this is your duty, and that you should have love to him, yet the most part of you want it: For when we speak of love to Christ, it is not a pretext or apprehension of love, that will be taken for love, but such love as hath these qualifications. 1. If Christ be loved, he will be esteemed of, as the most excellent thing, or person, the most excellent bargain, the most kind friend, the most loving husband, and as the most full, complete and absolute sufficiency, or sufficient one: As he is spoken of, and esteemed of by the spouse, Cant v. His countenance is like Lebanon, excellent as the cedars; his mouth is most sweet, he is altogether lovely: The heart is brought to esteem of him, and to prefer him beyond all that it can set the eye upon. It were indeed somewhat, if you were brought under conviction, and thorough persuasion of this, that Jesus Christ is incomparably the best thing that a sinner can have a title to; but alas! he is despised and rejected of men, though he be the chiefest of ten thousands; and men play the fool in preferring other things to him, who is infinitely worthy of the preference unto; and of the pre-eminency above them all. A second evidence of love is, the hearts longing and panting after the enjoyment of him, and of the enjoyment of him, as the most excellent object, quite surpassing all other objects: And when the thirst and longing of the soul is so carried out after him, as it cannot

cannot be satisfied without him, which is to be sick of love for him, as it is, Cant. ii. 5. and v. 8. To be in a manner fainting because of his absence, and even longing for his presence, to have the bent of the souls designs, and desires towards making of that glorious conquest; whereof the apostle speaks, Philip. iii. Even to count all things to be but loss and dung, and to cast all things as it were over board, to have him, and to be found in him; to count of him as the pearl of price, and as the treasure hid in the field; for the sake of which, ye would strip yourselves naked, and sell all that ye have to buy it. 3. This love to Christ Jesus hath in it a satisfying delight in him, and the souls blessing of itself in him, its contenting itself with him; and its rejoicing in that sweetness which it findeth to be in him, as being the only attractive object, that hath such a loveliness in it, as begets satisfaction; which satisfaction begets a warmth in the heart to him again, even till the soul be put in a holy flame of love to him; more of this love would make Christ and the gospel much more sweet, and would make every one of those words, that expresth his love in his sufferings, to be like marrow and fatness, and would also make the promises to be like breasts full of consolation; it would withal cause, that there would not be such mistakes of Christ, nor such gad-dings and whorings from him, and such preferring of idols to him, as alas! there are: Where this love is not, there can be no other things that will be acceptable. We shall say no more at this time, but only this; That we do appeal to your consciences, if there be not here an excellent and nonsuch object of love, and is there not here much reason to be in love with that object? A very heathen will return love for love, and should not we much more do so in this case? God himself kindle this love in us, and make us know more the great advantages of it.

ISAIAH LIII. Verse II.

Verse II.—He shall see of the travel of his soul, and shall be satisfied: By his knowledge shall my righteous Servant justify many: For he shall bear their iniquities.

THE work of redemption is a business that was very gravely and very seriously contrived and prosecuted, in respect of God, and of the Mediator; there was much earnestness in it as to them, and yet notwithstanding (which is a wonder) men whom it concerns so much, whose salvation depends upon it, and to whom the benefit of it redounds, are but very little serious in their thoughts of it. Our Lord Jesus was in travel, sore soul-travel to bring about this work, and that the gospel might be preached to sinners, that they might have thereby a ground to their faith, to expect life and remission of sins through him. Is it not then sad that we should speak and hear of it, and be in a manner, like the stone in the wall, no more, or little more affected with, than if it were a matter that did not at all concern us? The reading and hearing of these words will, doubtless, be a great conviction to secure sinners, that our Lord Jesus was at such pains, and put to such soul-travel and suffering, and that yet such sinners were never moved, nor made serious, to have the application of this purchased redemption made to them.

of redemption, and in paying the price due to the justice of God, for the sins of the elect. It is a wonder that ever we should have it to declare, and that you should hear of this subject, which is the very text, to say so, and sum of the gospel. And therefore, before we leave it, we shall speak a little more to the use of it; and truly if we make not use of this doctrine, we will make use of none; though I confess it is a great practise, how to draw it to use, and to conform ourselves in our practice to the use of it.

We proposed somethings the last day which we could not then prosecute; as 1. Something for exhortation. 2. Something for reproof and expostulation, which rising clearly from the doctrine drawn from the words, we may now insist a little on them.

1. For exhortation, considering Christ's sufferings and the extremity of them, and that they were undergone for sinners, we would exhort you to love him as ye ought: there is ground and warrant here to require it of you, seeing that love in his bosom came to such an height, that he was content to lay down his life, yea, seeing he was in such a hot flame of love, that the cup of wrath did not quench it, but his love drank and dryed it up, Greater love than this hath no man. It is a most wonderful love considered with all the circumstances, whereby it is heightened; and there is ground here to excite and stir you up, to give him a kindly reception, and to entertain his love with love. It will sure be a great shame, if our Lord's love stood at nothing, so that he might do the Father's will, and finish the work committed to him, which was the perfecting the work of sinners redemption, redeeming of his lost sheep. If every trifle shall quench love in our hearts to him; O! What a shame, will it be in the day of judgment to many, when this man shall be brought forth loving this idol, and another man loving that idol more than Christ, this man loving his lust, that man his ease, and another man his wealth or honour, and preferring them to Christ, and when it shall be found, that they would not part with their right eye, nor their right hand (which are not worth the name of members; being called so, because they are members of the body of death) for love to him: Think what they will, that native impression of the obligation that lyes upon them to love Christ, is wanting, and that divine and soul-ravishing influence, that his love should have on their hearts. It is true, ye all think, that ye love him, unless it be some of them who indeed love him; but if ye could reflect upon yourselves, ye would find that ye have little or no love at all to him indeed: And therefore, for undeceiving of you, beside what we said the last day, take two or three characters of true love to Christ. 1. This love is never satisfied with any degree, or measure that it hath attained, so as to rest satisfied with it. It hath these two things in it, a desire to be further in love; and a concern that it cannot attain at growth in it. The loving soul is disposed to think, that its love to Christ is not worthy to be called love, and it breathes after it, even to have itself warmed therewith to him, and to be brought to a further nearness to him, as we may see through the Song of Solomon: And particularly chap. vii. at the close, There will I give thee my loves: And chap. viii. O that thou wert as my brother that sucked the breasts of my mother. True love to him puts the soul to long for an opportunity to discover its love towards him. 2. Where this love is, the soul will be serious in praying for it, that it may attain it, as if he wanted it, and it will be as much affected with the want of the lively exercise of it, and for coming short in it, as it will be for any other sin. There is no benefit that it seeks more after; then to have the heart circumcised to love him; and Oh! it will be accounted a great benefit, to have love to Christ: and as it is one of the things that it seeks in prayer, so it is one of the things that

it eyeth in repentance: it is much affected with the want of it, confesses it to him, aggravates the sin thereof against itself, from this ground, that it loves not Christ as it should. I know not if there be much of this among us, many will be sorry if they fall into drunkenness, or any other gross sin, but O! How few repent of their want of love to Christ, and that he has not his own room in the heart. 3. Where this love is, it is very suspicious and jealous, lest the heart cleave to some other thing, and give it room to the prejudice of Christ. It is a sad thing, when people let their affections go out at random, and are not afraid, lest they overdo themselves in loving the world, their pleasures and their credit, &c. But rather they are like the whore in the Proverbs. Who says, Come, and let us take our fill of loves. Love to Christ was a weanedness from these things, and a jealousy lest they usurp a room in the heart, that is not due to them; because, as John says, there is not a consistency betwixt the love of God, and the love of the world in the heart; and therefore it is the watchful care of a poor believer, to keep out inordinate love of the world, and of those things that the heart is given to go a whoring after: Hence David prays, Psal. cxix. Incline my heart to thy law and not to covetousness, and turn away mine eyes from beholding vanity. There is in too many a sort of rooted confidence, that they love Christ, and they never suspect themselves of the contrary, when yet some other thing hath his room.

2dly, There is ground here to exhort you to believe on him, as the Prince of life, and a Saviour that is well fitted and qualified to give repentance and remission of sins; and this is the very native use that flows from this doctrine, even to lay a solid ground of faith to a soul lying under the sense of sin, to step forward to God's bar, with confidence, considering Jesus Christ crucified, and put to soul-travel for elect sinners, who should betake themselves to him; which if it had not been, there had not been any ground for faith; and the lower he came in his sufferings, we have the more native and strong ground of faith, and the stronger motive to draw us to take hold of him, and to fix our faith on his satisfaction. To clear this branch of the use a little, 1. Consider here a ground for faith, in a fourfold respect, and 2. The force of the motives that arise from these grounds, pressing a sensible sinner to exercise faith on them, or on him by them; and 3. The necessity that we are under, so to do.

For the first, 1. In general there is ground here to bring the heart to be fixed in the historical faith of what is spoken concerning the truths of the covenant; for, doth not this soul-travel of our Lord say, that men are lying naturally in a sinful condition, and obnoxious to wrath? That there is a covenant past betwixt the Father and Son, for delivering of elect sinners out of that condition, and that by the sufferings of the Mediator; and that by our betaking ourselves to him: Otherways, why did the Mediator come thus low, except it had been true that man was under a debt that he could not pay; and why did the Father send his Son, except he had been really minded, that he should offer himself up a propitiatory sacrifice to God for man's sin? And his accepting of the satisfaction tells plainly, that he was content, that the Sureties payment should stand for the principal debtors. All this supposeth a covenant, which is as real, as if we had seen, and had been ear-witnesses of the reading over of the covenant in all the articles of it; we wish that many were come this length, as to be confirmed in the historical faith of the general truths of the gospel, summed up in Christ's sufferings; and there cannot be any serious reading, or hearing of Christ's sufferings, but there must also be some considering of their rise and end; if it be otherways, we do but superficially run over them.

them. 2. As this shews the Lord's seriousness in pressing the offer of redemption on sinners, so it calleth you to be serious in accepting of it, according to that in John xii. When I am lifted up, I will draw all men after me. Where Christ's lifting up is made attractive to draw lost sinners after him. And can there be a greater ground of faith, or a stronger motive to persuade a sinner to be reconciled to God, and to rest upon Christ's satisfaction, in order to that, than this, that Jesus Christ hath purposely laid down his life, and undergone suffering, even to such an extremity, to bring it about. 3. When we say that Christ's soul-travel calls for faith, it requires this, and gives ground for it; that they that betake themselves to Christ for justification before God, may confidently commit themselves to his guiding in all other things; for will he not be tender of them in these, when out of respect to them, when there was not a covenant betwixt him and them (though they were mentioned in the covenant of redemption) he laid down his life, and suffered such things for them? May we not from this reason, as the apostle doth, Rom. viii. He that spared not his own Son, but gave him to the death for us; how shall he not with him also freely give us all things? Can there be a greater ground for sinners that fear to trust him with all things that concern them than this? that he suffered so much for them. 4. Having fled to him, it serves to confirm our faith, and to bring us to be quiet in resting on him, and acquiescing in him: For what more could we require for our settlement and quieting than this, that he hath come so low, and condescended so far on the behalf of poor sinners? Therefore in all these respects, let me exhort you, and in his name, Who was made sin for us, that we might be made the righteousness of God in him. Beseech you, not to keep at a distance from him, but acknowledge your sin, and by faith to flee unto him, and to the efficacy of his blood: O! yield yourselves by faith to him for making use of him for your justification. And a little more particularly, let me here speak a word to two sorts of persons, 1. To them that are yet strangers to God: 2. To them that are looking towards Christ; and 1. For you that are strangers to God, whose hearts were never yet affected with the conviction of the necessity of believing, who can lie down and rise up without serious thoughts of your souls estate, or of the necessity of making sure your peace with God: I beseech you, lay to heart your condition, and beware of trampling the blood of the covenant under your feet, let not the grace that is offered to you in this gospel be heard and received in vain, but by the acknowledgment of sin, and of God's justice to which ye are liable for the same; fly betimes to Christ's sufferings for a shelter from the wrath of God, that will otherwise be as a storm against you. This we press as the great use of this doctrine upon you, that you improve the cup of wrath that the Mediator hath drunken, for your exempting from the curse that is due to you, and that cup that ye deserved to have drank eternally. 2. For you, who under the conviction of sin, are looking towards Christ, let me intreat you not to stay on this side of the city of refuge, but go forward, and improve this soul-travel of the Lord for your spiritual ease, settlement, quiet and comfort, as well as for keeping you from wrath, otherways it will bring bitterness in the end. If ye make not use of Christ's sufferings, if ye betake not yourselves to him, and do not trust him for justification and life, ye will make yourselves guilty of his blood, and will be found treaders of it under foot.

And therefore, let me here speak a word to the second thing proposed, that is, the grounds, or reasons, or motives, that should press you to make use of these sufferings, and of the grounds of faith, that they hold forth unto you. And 1. In general, let me ask, is there not guilt, and hazard of wrath, because of guilt?

guilt? And if so, why stand ye at a distance from the Saviour? If it were sinless saints and angels that were exhorted to make use of him, it would be the less wonder, that there were so little thinking of a Mediator, but when it is sinners that are called upon, and sinners in such eminent hazard, it is indeed a wonder that there is not greater flocking unto him, and pressing on him: If there had not been need, would the Father have so pursued the Son? Or do ye think that it was for a complement that he laid down his life? which sure he would not have done, if salvation could have been had another way. 2dly, And more particularly, as ye should consider the many motives that you have to press you to rest on these grounds, which we shall draw to these four. 1. The fulness and sufficiency of the ground that is given to faith in Christ's sufferings, which the deeper they draw on his soul, faith hath the fuller and better ground to make use of them. 2. The power and ability that are conspicuously in him, to make application of his purchase: He hath encountered wrath, and hath overcome; he is absolved and justified before God, and is exalted to be a Prince and a Saviour, to give repentance to Israel, and remission of sins: And having satisfied justice, and defeated the devil; and being thus exalted, he can conduct safe such sinners as betake themselves to him; and these two considered, to wit, a sufficient price payed for the debt of the elect; and a sufficient Prince and Saviour, able to save to the utmost all that come unto God through him, and who is exalted, and sitteth at God's right hand, to make intercession for us; I say, as they are a solid ground for faith to rest on, so are they a strong motive to press believing. 3. The great faithfulness of God, that brightly shines, and wonderfully appears here, who, according to the covenant, sends his Son, and pursues the quarrel against him, and in so doing keeps the promise made to Abraham; and the great faithfulness of the Mediator, in coming and performing all that he undertook for the elect; both of them are faithful in performing all that was covenanted to the least jot thereof, as is evident by what our Lord says, I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do. Seeing therefore there is such exact faithfulness in keeping, and fulfilling all that passeth in the covenant of redemption, and of all that was promised to the Father; and seeing the Mediator hath said, that of all that come unto me, he will cast out none, nor put them away. Is there not here a strong motive to believing? Will not the Lord Jesus be as faithful, in keeping the promise made to comers unto him, as the Father and he have been in performing of what was covenanted concerning their redemption? The 4th, Is the great love of God and of the Mediator, that eminently shine here, in their willingness to make the application; as he is faithful, so is he willing to be employed; and what greater evidence of love would we have than this, that our Lord Jesus hath delighted so much in the salvation of sinners, that he laid down his life, and endured much sore foul-travel for this very end? We beheld, says John ch. i. 14. his glory, the glory as of the only begotten Son of the Father, full of grace and truth. In his humiliation, he was glorious in both these, glorious in his truth, making his faithfulness to shine, in exact keeping of what was agreed upon and promised: Glorious in his grace to poor sinners, in making application of his purchase, freely and fully; yea, the more that he was obscured by his humiliation, the more did his grace shine forth; how much more glorious will he be in these when he is now exalted? 3dly, If these two persuade you not to believe on him, to wit, the grounds that he hath given for believing, and the powerful pressing motives to make use of those grounds; consider the absolute necessity that you lie under of making use of those grounds, without which you will never be able to avoid the wrath of God. Is there any that can give God a recompence? The redemption of the soul is precious, and ceases for ever, as to you; or, if any could have been able, why did the Mediator come thus low? And where should have been the glory of grace and truth, that hath shined so radiantly in his sufferings? And therefore from all these be exhorted, to trust him with your salvation, by making use of his righteousness, and by founding your plea before God on his sufferings, as ever ye would have your souls saved; otherways ye can expect nothing, but to fall under the rigour of justice, and to be made to satisfy for your own debt, to the uttermost farthing; and when will that be? Dare the most innocent amongst you venture to satisfy justice for themselves? If not, is there not a necessity to make use of his sufferings for that end? Which he hath made attainable by his tearing off the vail of his own flesh, that sinners may go in with humble boldness to the holy of holies. This is the end of all our preaching, and of your hearing, which when it is not sincerely aimed at, and endeavoured to be reached, we are useless in both.

And therefore, 2dly, May we not expostulate with you, that are hearers of this gospel, that can hear of his offerings, and of his having been in an agony for this very end, that sinners might have a warrant to their faith, and yet have never to this very hour actually fled unto him to find shelter? I know that many will not own this as their case; and therefore in more application of this use (seeing here lieth the great treasure of the gospel, which, if it be not, what can be improved to any purpose?) We shall speak a word to the generality of hearers, who are strangers to the right improving of Christ's righteousness; and tho' ye may think this to be a hard charge, and cannot well endure to be expostulated with as unbelievers; yet let me ask you, 1st, Do you think that all of you will go to heaven? If not, but believe that it is a truth, that the most part of the hearers of the gospel will perish; then, sure all are not believers; for all believers will go to heaven, and not one of them shall perish; and tho' ye will not now believe this, the day is coming when ye shall, if grace prevent not, see and find it. When believers will be taken in with Christ, and others shut out, many of you may think that this doctrine is needless; the more needless that many of you think it to be, it is so much the more needful, and useful to be insisted on with you. 2dly, If you say you have faith, I ask you, Whence came you by it? I know, many of you will say, We believed always since we had understanding to know good or ill; yet, when you are put to tell what it is? ye know not how to answer, nor can you give the least satisfying account of it; and yet you question not but it will be well with you, and never once feared to go to hell. And is that faith, think ye? Alas! no; it is a plain counterfeit, and a very cheat. Others are ready to say, We believed not always, yet we believe sometimes, to wit, when we do some duties, and abstain from gross evils; but when accusations come from the neglect of duties, and for the commission of sins, we want it, and have nothing of it; and when death comes, such are forced to say, we fear we have been beguiling ourselves. Whence comes this? but even from this ground, that they would never suffer it to be told them but that they had faith; which yet will never be accounted to be faith; because it hath not Christ's righteousness for the ground of it; and therefore when their conscience is awakened, it is quite gone; whereas true faith will in some measure stand it out against an accusation, and will abide the trial, on the account of Christ's righteousness which they have fled to. 3dly, We ask you this question, are you sure of your faith? You will say, you hope so, and believe so, and this is all you can say, which in effect comes to this, we groundlessly presumed so; and it is observable, that if ye be put to a second question, what ground have ye for your faith? ye have none at all. If ye be asked, whether ye be certain that ye are believers? ye will answer, no person is certain, God knows that. Is not this strange? and hath it not in it an utter inconsistency, that men and women should confidently assert, and maintain their faith? and yet when they are put to prove it, they will tell you, that they are uncertain, that none can be certain of it. Therefore think it not strange that we expostulate with you, that ye have been so long hearing of Christ, and that ye have little, or rather no faith at all in the making use of his righteousness. But to make this the more convincingly clear, we shall give you four characters, whereby true faith may be tried and known, which will serve also to discover the unsoundness of the faith of many. 1. It may be tried by the ground that it standeth upon; solid faith hath for the ground of it Christ's righteousness and satisfaction, his sufferings, the price that he payed to justice for sinners debt; that he who knew no sin, might become sin for us; as it is, 2 Cor. v. ult. ye that say, ye hope to come to heaven, and will assert strongly that ye believe; try it, I beseech you by this, what is it that warrants you to believe, or, whereon is your faith founded? Is it Christ's righteousness that gives your faith a ground? You are ready to say, yes, and who do otherwise? Are there any but they expect life through Christ? But deceive not yourselves, there are many that have some sort of respect to Christ, who do not at all rightly respect his sufferings; many will look upon Christ as a Sovereign, and as one that can pardon them their sins, and will pray to him for pardon of them, who yet never seriously laid the stress of their obtaining pardon on his death, but expect pardon immediately, without an intervening satisfaction; yea, they never look upon that as needful. Others again look only to Christ's ability to save, and will pray to him as to an able Saviour;

and here also by such, his righteousness and merit is shut out, as if it were superfluous and unnecessary. A third sort look to his mercy, and think that he is very kind and gracious, and that as one man forgives another, so will he forgive them; and do not respect his righteousness, nor found their faith and expectation of pardon upon him, as upon one that hath satisfied justice by the travel of his soul, that pardon might come to them who come to him: But where true faith is, the soul begins to look on itself, as arraigned before the tribunal of justice, and unable to pay its own debt, judges itself, and hath not only some part of exercise to be freed from an accusation (which is all the faith that many have) but hath serious exercise, how to have the accusation answered, by betaking itself to Christ's satisfaction, from these grounds, that a satisfaction is given, that this satisfaction is made offer of in the gospel, and that the soul is content to make use of it, draws the conclusion as to its pardon: it hath intervening betwixt the consideration of its guilt, and its application of pardon, both the covenant of redemption on God's side, and the covenant of reconciliation on the sinners side, which the soul doth eye, as that which gives it warrant to lay hold on Christ's sufferings, which the other who presumes doth not. The believing soul says, if this satisfaction had not been, I could never have expected mercy. 2. In the solid faith of a believer, there is, an application made of Christ crucified, only as the meritorious cause of justification and life, so he is exercised in this, to be only settled on him as such; as for presumptuous souls, as they find it easy to believe, so they find it easy to rest on him only; but as the true believer hath it for one part of exercise to him, how to have Christ, so it is another part of exercise to him, to rest on him only, and to have him as crucified, made the ground of his faith, as the apostle insinuates, when he says, 1 Cor. ii. 2. I determined to know nothing thing among you, but Jesus Christ, and him crucified; where we have three grounds of saving faith, or knowledge. 1. Jesus Christ. 2. Him as crucified; and 3. A determining to know no other thing, but him to rest upon for life and salvation; it is in this respect that the apostle, Phil. iii. doth count all things but loss and dung, and cast, as it were, all overboard, that he may win Christ, and be found in him. Many find it no difficult matter to rest on Christ only, and to keep out other things from being joined with him, and never once suspect themselves in this by any thing; but the believer, (as I just now said) hath here an exercise and difficulty to rest on Christ alone, and on nothing else; because he knows nothing else to be a sure foundation; and because it is natural to him to rest on other things beside Christ. 3. The true believer is taken up, not only to have a sure ground to build on, but also to have his own hold and building on that ground made sure. It is his exercise to have it out of question, that his faith is true faith, and not presumption; to have the grace of faith actually and really taking hold of, or apprehending Christ; whereas another that presumeth, and hath only an opinion or conjecture in place of faith; as he is in his own opinion easily brought to Christ, so he finds it easy to exercise believing on him; he will, it may be, grant that he cannot sanctifie the sabbath-day, and yet he can believe; as if believing were less difficult than to sanctifie the sabbath; so will many grant, that they cannot pray, and therefore do decline the worship of God in their families, who will yet confidently say they can believe, and that they do believe always; as if believing were less difficult, than to pray for a quarter or half a quarter of an hour; but where solid faith is, the exercise of it is a difficult thing, and the person that hath it, hath a holy jealousy of it, and the experience of many others, and of himself, sometime telling him, that he may be mistaken, he is often trying it, and doth not, nay, he dare not trust much to it, and is put often with that man spoken of, Mark ix. to cry, and sometimes with tears, Lord, I believe, help thou my unbelief; he dare not trust much to his own hold; and therefore hath recourse to Christ to have it secured, and to him taking and keeping his hold for him, as it was with the apostle, Phil. iii. 12. 4. When believers have fled to Christ, they have a new exercise, to know that it is so indeed; it is not only an exercise to them how to ground their faith right, how to forego all other things, and to betake themselves to Christ only, and to cast their burden on him; but it is an exercise to them to be clear, that it is Christ indeed that they rest on, or to be clear, that they have rested on him: It is no good sign, when people are soon satisfied with their believing, and never put it to the trial; and this is it makes many go on blindfold, till they come to death, which makes a divorce betwixt them and their fancied faith, and discovers it to be but a delusion; whereas it is a believer's work, to try whether they have, and to know that they have believed, which they come not soon to know; and the reason is, because the sense of sin, the apprehension of wrath, and their love to God, and to Christ the Mediator, with their desire to enjoy him, suffer them not to be satisfied till they be sure. We may see all the four together, Phil. iii. 7, 8, 9, 10. where the apostle speaking of his case, when he was a converted Christian, in opposition to what he was when he was a Pharisee, and thought himself to be very well, and a strong believer, faith, 'What things were gain to me, I counted loss for Christ; yea, doubtless I counted all things to be but loss, for the excellency of the knowledge of Jesus Christ my Lord, for whom I have suffered the loss of all things, and do count them but dung that I may win Christ, and be found in him, not having mine own righteousness,' &c.

The object they would be at, is Christ; the manner how, is, not having mine own righteousness; the means through which, is faith in him; this is it that brings him to union with him; and then he would know experimentally, that he might know him savingly, as a believer in him, by finding the power of his resurrection, by having fellowship in his sufferings, and by being made conformable to his death; whereby he would prove, and make it out, to his own quieting and consolation, that he is indeed a believer: The believer is never right until he be in Christ; and it is his exercise to be entirely rid of all other things, and to rest upon him alone; neither doth he rest here, but he must be clear that he is in him, and that he hath fellowship in his sufferings and conformity to his death. This we would recommend to you as your main study, as ever ye would comfortably evidence to yourselves, your believing in him.

S E R M O N XLVII.

ISAIAH LIII. Verse II.

Verse II.—He shall see of the travel of his soul, and shall be satisfied: By his knowledge shall my righteous Servant justify many: For he shall bear their iniquities.

THE covenant of redemption is a great agreement; and we may say that it is a good engagement, wherein the greatest things that ever were imagined are transacted; the sum whereof is in these two, 1st, What shall be the satisfaction that must be given to the infinite justice of God; or what shall be the recompence that must be made to God for the satisfying of his justice, for the sins of all the elect; and that is comprised in these words, The travel of Christ's soul. That is the condition, or these are the terms on which only the Lord Jehovah will appoint, to speak so, and he will meet on no other terms. 2dly, What shall be the satisfaction that the Mediator shall have for all his sufferings, and soul-travel? And this is summed up in these words, He shall see of the travel of his soul, and shall be satisfied, upon which two stands the covenant of redemption; and hence it is, that all things relating to the salvation of the elect, are so sure and firm, that there is no possibility of the misgiving or failing of whatever is here transacted.

We have spoken somewhat of the price, which the Son, the Mediator, was to give, and of the soul-travel which he underwent in the paying of it: We shall now speak of the words as they hold forth the promises made to the Mediator, and they are two-fold; 1st, He shall see of the travel of his soul; which words being an explication of the former, and respect also these which follow; there is a word to be supplied, which will take in both, and it is fruit, He shall see the fruit of the travel of his soul; that is, he cannot but have a seed, and a numerous offspring, because of his soul-travel, in bringing them forth; and so the promise, in this respect, shews the certainty of the effect, that is, that he shall most certainly bring forth in his travelling. The 2d promise is, that he shall see the fruit of his soul-travel, or his seed; it is much to have a seed, but it is more to see it; it is not only this, that Christ shall have a numerous issue, but that shall out-live death, to see and over-see, and be a tutor to them, though by his death he purchase life for them.

tions; the 1st is this, that our Lord Jesus by his suffering and soul-travel, shall certainly attain the fruit he aims at in it; his death and sufferings shall not be fruitless, but shall certainly have the intended fruit; whatever we take the fruit to be, whether we take it from the former words, it is a seed that he shall see, or have; or whether we take it from the following words, it is the justifying of many; both these come to the same thing, and it shall certainly come to pass, and be made effectual in the upshot of it; as the Lord himself saith, John xii. 24. Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone, but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit; where he compares his own death to the sowing of seed, which, when sown, doth rot; and then springs up, and hath fruit; so, as if he had said, my death shall be a seed, or seed-time, whereon abundant fruit shall follow for the good and salvation of many. This doctrine supposes, 1st, That our Lord Jesus had a respect in the laying down of his life, to the salvation of his own elect people; or thus, that our Lord Jesus in the laying down of his life, had a design and purpose to save the elect, as he often saith, I lay down my life for my sheep; and here they are called a seed, and fruit, and such as are justified in due time. 2^{dly}, That this purpose should by his sufferings be certainly made effectual, this being the Father's promise to him, He shall see his seed, or the travel of his soul, and shall be satisfied. It cannot be frustrated; and we may further confirm it from these grounds, 1. Because it is a covenanted and transacted affair betwixt the Father and the Son, and is here promised. If therefore there cannot be a failing of the transaction and bargain, it must certainly have the full effect. 2. Because the Mediator hath faithfully fulfilled his part of the covenant; and if he hath been so faithful on his side, then jehovah on the other side of the covenant, who hath in it promised satisfaction to him, for the travel of his soul, cannot but perform his part

part also; the Mediator performed his part, even until it came to those sweet words, uttered by him on the cross, It is finished; and therefore, as I said, the other part, that he shall see the fruit of his soul-travel, must also be performed. 3. It is also clear from the end and design of the covenant of redemption, betwixt the Father and the Son, and of Christ's laying down his life, which was to bring about life unto, and to make it good for all them that the Father had given him, and to, and for no more, and likewise for no fewer; therefore he saith, All that the Father hath given me, shall come unto me. And, I give them eternal life, and will raise them up at the last day. Now, this being the end of the covenant, and of Christ's death, and the means whereby the glory of grace is manifested, that life might not only be purchased to the elect, but also actually conferred on them, according to the Father's and the Mediator's design of the covenant; Christ Jesus cannot but have the promise made good unto him, there being an engagement of, and on the Godhead (to speak after the manner of men) as to the reality, certainty, and success of the performance, and for making out this promise to the Mediator.

The 1st use serves for instructing and clearing of us, in several things contróverted by unsound men; for if this be a truth, that our Lord's sufferings and soul-travel cannot but have fruit, and the fruit that he aimed at therein: Then 1st there is a definite, particular, and certain number elected, to partake of the benefit of Christ's suffering; because there is only such a particular number that is given to Christ to be redeemed by him, and that do actually partake of the benefit of his sufferings, which cannot fail. 2^{dly}, That Christ's sufferings are not intended as a price and satisfaction for the sins of all and every one; for so he should not see the fruits of the travel of his soul, but should in a great part miss and loose it, if he had intended that the travel of his soul should have been undergone undergone for Judas, as well as for Peter. 3dly, There is here a ground for the certainty and efficacy of the grace of God in converting elect sinners; for Christ Jesus cannot loose those who are committed to him to be redeemed, any more than he can loose the fruit of his sufferings; then sure faith is not left depending on man's free-will, but is put out of question, as to all his own people through his undertaking, as he saith, That no man can come to me except the Father draw him; so he saith, These that are given me, shall and must come to me. There is a powerful draught of the Spirit of God, which is nothing else but the efficacy of his grace, by which this is made infrutable sure, and not left contingent. 4. See here the truth of the perseverance of elect and regenerate saints, who are appointed to be fruit of his soul-travel, and a satisfaction to him for the same: for if they should fail, and not persevere to the end, the promise made to the Mediator should not stand nor be necessarily performed and fulfilled. 5. See here how the salvation of elect sinners depends on the engagement betwixt God and the Mediator; their redemption depends on his paying of the price, and their attaining the benefit of it, depends on God's engagement to the Mediator; therefore we are said, 1 Pet. i. To be kept by the power of God thro' faith unto salvation. It serves withal to clear the sovereignty of God, and the freeness of his grace, when sinners cannot pretend to have any hand in the work, to mar the beauty and efficacy of grace that shines therein.

Use 2. There is here, 1. Something for the encouragement of such as would fain believe in Christ. And 2. Somewhat for comfort to, and for confirmation of them, who have betaken themselves by faith to Christ. 3. It serves withal to encourage them who would believe, and yet find difficulty in the way, while they are breathing after him. It is certainly promised, That he shall have a seed, and shall see of the fruit of the tra- vel of his soul; such therefore may expect that they shall succeed, who would fain obtain that which is the fulfilling of God's engagement to the Mediator; for it was transacted in the covenant of redemption, that his sufferings should be for the good of elect sinners; and that the Father should make application of his purchase made thereby to them. I say, it serves to comfort, encourage and confirm such as are fled to Christ, and find a difficulty how to get through; for they have a good and sufficient surety to make out their faith, and what concerns their salvation; God's promise to the Mediator shall not be for nought, nor in vain, but shall have its accomplishment. If poor sinners were left to their own guiding, the agreement should never take effect; but it may encourage and comfort the poor believer, though it should also humble him, that the affair is put into another and better hand than his own; this hath strengthened the wavering hearts of many believers, that both sides of the covenant, as to their performance, depend on the Father, and on the Mediator; the Mediator undertaking the payment of their debt, and the Lord Jehovah undertaking to draw them to the Mediator, and by his power to bear them through, until they have all that the Mediator hath purchased for them, conferred on them.

2dly, Observe, That all the benefits and advantages that any have ever gotten, or shall get, that lead to life eternal, and which concur to promote the work of their salvation, are the fruits of Christ's purchase, by his soul-travel. Is a sinner brought to believe? It is a fruit of his suffering. Is a sinner glorified? It is the fruit of the same. And therefore, when in the one word it is said, He shall see his seed; it is said in the next words, He shall see of the fruit of the travel of his soul, to shew that a soul's engaging to Christ by faith, whereby the person becomes one of his seed, flows from his sufferings, and is a fruit of the travel

of his soul, as it is, 1 Cor. v. ult. He was made sin for us, who knew no sin, that we might become the righteousness of God thro' him, or in him; where our righteousness, and what conduces to our justification, is derived from his being made sin, or a sin-offering for us. And Gal. iii. 13. it is said, that Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us, that the blessing of Abraham might come on us Gentiles; whatever is comprehended under that blessing, as taking in both the end and means by which we come by it, flows from his being made a curse for us, and from his being brought under sad sufferings, and sore soul-travel for us. In this doctrine you should consider something for clearing of it, or rather take the doctrine itself several ways, and it will help to clear itself.

1. Then when we speak of the fruit of Christ's sufferings, we mean, not only that justification, the pardon of our sins, and our entry into heaven, are fruits of it; but that our believing, repentance, holiness, and every thing that leads thereunto, are fruits of it also; therefore it is promised to Christ, Psal. cx. 3. Thy people shall be a willing people in the day of thy power; and that those that are given to Christ shall come, is a promise, as well as it is a promise, that those that come shall be justified, and the one follows upon Christ's engaging, and performing of the engagement as well as the other.

2. If we take the doctrine thus, that there is nothing that a sinner has that leads to life and salvation, but it is a fruit of Christ's purchase; we have neither repentance, nor faith, nor holiness, nor any other such thing, but on the account of Christ's satisfaction. Or, 3. take it thus, whatever is needful for completing of them that are Christ's seed, whom he hath purchased, whatever they want or stand in need of, whether righteousness, holiness, repentance, faith, hope, &c. all are purchased by him, and are the fruits of his death and soul-travel. This riseth clearly from these words, He shall see the fruit of the travel of his soul; that is, he shall see sinners

believing on him, and repenting for sin, as well as he shall see them glorified; which will be clear, if we consider these two reasons: 1st, The nature of the covenant, wherein all the promises concerning sinners salvation are comprehended, there being but one covenant of redemption, and that being a promise of this covenant, to circumcise the heart to love God, and to write his laws in it, as well as to pardon sin; and all the promise of the covenant depending on Christ's stipulation, and these things in the promises flowing from the covenant betwixt God and the Mediator, sinners can have no right to any thing that is promised, but by a covenant; neither can they have any access to them, but through Christ's sufferings. 2^{dly}, It is clear from the end of the covenant, that whatever sinners stand in need of, they must be in Christ's debt for it. Now, if we had faith, or repentance, or any other grace from ourselves, or on our own account, we should not be in his debt for all that we need, as indeed we are, according to that, 1 Cor. xxx. 31. He is made of God unto us, wisdom, to be our guide and teacher; righteousness, to be our justifier, and the meritorious cause of it; sanctification, to be the worker and procurer of it; and in a word, complete redemption, and this is subjoined as the reason of all, That he that glories, or rejoices, may glory, or rejoice in the Lord; that is, whether there be a looking to faith, or repentance, or any other grace, there may be no cause to be vain or proud of it; but that knowing these to be from Christ, as the fruits of his purchase, all the praise of them may be to him alone.

The use of this is large; it speaks something more generally to them that are strangers to Christ, and who have some faint desire to come to him, and something to them who are in him, and something to both. And the first thing that it speaks is this, (which we have often heard, but cannot hear of it too often,) even the great and glad tidings, and very good news, which we have to speak of through Jesus Christ, that redemption is purchased by him to poor sinners, and that through him there is access to life, and peace, and reconciliation with God, from which through sin we have fallen, and run ourselves, under a forfeiture of, and from which we had been barred up eternally, except he had suffered. There was a wall of separation and partition standing betwixt God and us, which by his sufferings was demolished and broken down, and thereby a door of access to God opened, even through the vail of his flesh. These should be refreshing and fresh news to us every day, as indeed they would be, if we rightly knew, and believed the benefit of God's friendship; and what were our hazard in lying still in nature, and what was the price that Christ laid down, to purchase for sinners, friendship with God, and delivery from his curse; that it must cost him sore soul-travel, ere any special grace could be bestowed on sinners; and that this same gospel that is preached to you, is a fruit of the travel of his soul; and that in making the covenant of redemption, this same was a part of the indenture, if we may so speak, that these good news might be published in this place, and these glad tidings spoken of among you: And therefore, 2. Put a great value on the means that may further your salvation, on repentance, faith, holiness, peace with God, &c. for they are the fruits of a very dear purchase, and the result of a great and sore conflict, which the Mediator had with the justice of God, ere there could be access for a sinner to any of them: There was not so much paid to get the world created, as was paid to buy faith, repentance, access to God, and an entry to heaven, for apostate sinners: Nothing was paid for the one, but a mighty great price for the other. And therefore 3. We would expostulate with many of you, how it comes to pass, that ye esteem so little of these things that Christ hath purchased, and that ye esteem faith in him so little; and that so many of you take a counterfeit for a true faith, you try not if you have it, and trouble not yourselves if you want it; and yet other things of little value are much esteemed of, and overvalued by you. Is there any thing comparable to that, which Christ hath put such a price on, that he gave his own life for it, and that God hath put such a price on, that he promised it to Christ, as a part of the satisfaction for the travel of his soul? And yet it is lightly valued by many, yea, by most men and women. The day will come, when ye will think faith to be of more value, and will think the pardon of sin, and an interest in Christ's blood, to be valuable above the whole world, though ye had it, when ye shall be brought to reckon with God for the slighting thereof. And therefore, 4thly, Seeing this is a truth, that every thing that leads to eternal life, is a fruit of Christ's purchase; take the right way to attain it: The exhortation implies these two, 1. That ye make a right choice of, and put a just value on these things, that ye should chuse and value. 2. That ye take the right way for attaining of these things. 1. Then would ye know what is to be valued and chosen? It is certainly these things, that God and the Mediator esteem of, and that the congregation of the first-born esteems of. The things that Christ hath purchased, and which are the fruits of the travel of his soul are most excellent; and therefore, mind, study, and seek after these things, that ye may lead your souls into life eternal, seek after faith, and repentance, to have your peace made with God, to have the heart purified, to be of a meek and quiet spirit, which in the sight of God are of great price, as the apostle Peter speaks, to have pardon of sin, and holiness, for adorning the gospel of God, and to have glory, that ye may see God and enjoy him; these things are the best things. This is undoubtedly the better part which will never be taken from them, whose choice through grace it is; God will give great estates, countries countries and kingdoms in the world, to men to whom he will not give so much faith as is like a grain of mustard-seed, nor true holiness, because they think much less of the one than of the other, and because the one is not so like God, nor will it have such abiding fruit as the other.

2dly, What way may men take to make this choice, and to attain these best and most valuable things? No other way, but that which this doctrine holds forth, if all things that lead to life and salvation be fruits of Christ's purchase, then sure it is by virtue of Christ's purchase alone, that ye must come by them; pardon of sin comes by the blood of sprinkling; peace with God, grace and more grace, the exercise of grace, and growth in holiness, faith in all its exercises and advantages, and every grace, come by his sufferings, as also doth glory, because he hath purchased these graces of the Spirit, as well as pardon of sin, and heaven; often Christ is not known, and passed by here: Many think that they shall obtain pardon of sin, and go to heaven without him; others, though they will not own that, yet fail in the second, and would make use of him for pardon of sin, and for paying of their debt, if they could repent and believe in him; but till they find these in themselves, they fear to come unto him; whereas the sinner that is convinced of sin, and of his hazard, would lay down this as the first step of his way in coming to Christ, that any repentance and believing, and the making of the heart willing, to close with, and to cleave to him, are the fruit of Christ's purchase; and that he must be in his debt for it, for there is no other possible way to have it. The first way that an awakened and sensible sinner should look unto, for pardon and peace, for repentance, faith and all things, should be to Christ, and his sufferings, whence all these come; sinners at first are disposed to look too far, and so mistake in the order of all things; therefore, when the

the sense of sin pinches them, and they set about to believe, and find that their hearts are very averse from believing, and can hardly be brought to it, then they are faint-hearted when they consider, and find that, if it stood but on this, even to consent to Christ, they cannot do it; but then and in that case, the Lord remembers them, and it is his will that they should acknowledge him for faith, and repentance, and for a soft and tender heart, and that they should seek these from him, as well as pardon of sin, considering that all this is Christ's purchase; and that there is a possibility to have it this way, when they can have it no other way; if ye would take this way, even to eye and look to Christ as the finisher of faith, and acknowledge him for it, through his grace it should go better with you. This is it which the apostle hath, Heb. xii. where he calls, to lay aside every weight, and the sin that easily besets us, and to run the race with patience that is set before us; and if it should be said, how shall that be done? Even by looking unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith; and then follows, who, for the joy that was set before him, endured the cross, and despised the shame: Thus leading men into his sufferings, as the solid foundation of their faith.

Use 2. See here ground for quashing the natural pride that is amongst men and women, as to spiritual things; How so? Where is the ground for this? here it is, because all is Christ's purchase, which may also give a check to those, who, because they have nothing in themselves, think not that they shall come speed upon this ground; as it doth to these others, who have gotten something, and are proud of it: To clear it a little, we would consider, that there is a pride in folk, ere they come to Christ, they cannot well endure to be in Christ's debt for every thing; they will take pardon of sin from him, but they would have faith and repentance of themselves, as some money in their purse to bring with them to him, that they

they may buy it; but where will you, I pray, get faith, or repentance, if not from him? are they not his gifts, and fruit of his purchase? which if it were well considered, there would be no access to the proud reasonings, of unbelief; dare ye say but these things are the fruits of Christ's sufferings, and his gifts? and if so, must ye not be in his debt for them? And as it silenceth the reasonings of unbelief, so it stops the mouth of the sinner and humbles him much more than if he had these things in, or from himself, and were only to be in his debt for righteousness and justification. 2. We would consider, That there is often some pride and conceit in them that have faith, disposing them to think themselves to be better than other people, but, if ye have faith, whence is it? Or who hath made you to differ? Is it not a fruit of Christ's purchase? And will ye be vain or conceited, of that which is the purchase of another? This is a spiritual poor pride, that stinks in the nostrils of the holy Lord, so to abuse his goodness, as to be proud, because he hath bought and bestowed that which ye could never have procured, nor attained yourselves: If then people have nothing, it is good to mind this, that Christ hath purchased what sinners stand in need of, and that it may be had in and from him; and if men have any thing, they should not be proud or conceited of it, but remember, that what they have, is a fruit of Christ's purchase, and that therefore there is no ground to be proud of it.

The 3d use serves to shew, what great obligation lies on sinners, that have any special good from God, it is Christ that hath purchased all; and therefore they ought to improve all that they have got, for him, who hath bought all; as it is, 1 Cor. vi. 20. 'Ye are not your own, ye are bought with a price, and therefore glorify God in your bodies, and in your spirits which are Gods.' Whatever ye have of faith, of repentance, of holiness, or of ability to serve and honour honour God in your station, it is bought with a price, and therefore glorify God in the right use thereof: We would think it not a little progress, and advancement in religion, if ye were brought to walk under the suitable impression of your engagement to Christ, as holding all that ye have, and all that serves for your perseverance in him; for, what do we, or can we do, it is Christ that buys all, and that confers all, we can do nothing of ourselves but abuse his purchase; and were it not, that the firmness and stability of our covenanting depends on the first covenant, even the covenant of redemption, transacted betwixt these two responsal parties, Jehovah and the Mediator, we should quite mar and break the whole of the agreement betwixt God and us, and undo all every day, if not every moment.

The other promise is, That he shall see his seed, and as we hinted before, it is one thing to have a seed, and another thing to see a seed. The former promise respects his having of a seed, and this to his seeing of that seed; whence observe, that not only is there a seed promised to Christ, but also the seeing of a seed, not only fruits but the improving and managing of these fruits; or thus, that not only is there a seed promised to Christ, but the overseeing of that seed is also promised; he shall have no other tutor (to speak so) to leave his children to, but to himself; he shall die, and shall by his death beget a seed, and yet by his death he shall become the overseer of that same seed, that by his death is begotten. There is much of the dignity of Christ's office, and of the comfort of believers here, that Jesus Christ is not only the procurer of our life, but the overseer of it: Hence is that conclusion of the apostle, Heb. vii. 25. Wherefore he is able to save to the uttermost all that come unto God by him, forasmuch as he lives for ever to make intercession for them: He hath not only purchased life, and many good things for believers, but he is living to make the application of his purchase to them ; and therefore is able to save to the uttermost, all that come unto God by him : Indeed, if he had been prevailed over by death, there might have been great hazard and doubt, if not utter despair of ever attaining his purchase, and a great breach in our consolation ; but when he is executor of his own testament, and by his Spirit makes the application, what is, or what can be wanting ? We shall say no more, but here it is clear, that we have a living Mediator, as himself says, Rev. i. 18. I was dead, and am alive, and live for evermore : And therefore sinners go forward to his sufferings, and seek the application of his purchase, since he lives to make it, it will no doubt be great ground of accusation against you, who slight his sufferings, and keep at a distance from him, since he is alive, and since what is accounted of by him, even the fruit of his sufferings, is by you set at nought, who neglect, refuse, or despise him, and the benefit of his sufferings, O ! what an aggravation of your guilt will this be ? When he is looking on, to see what comes of the fruit of his sufferings, and soul-travel, to be found thus to slight, and in a manner to affront him, he knows, and takes notice of the breathings of faith, where they are, and is well pleased with them, and even with the beginnings of it ; he knows also, who despise him, and refuse to believe in him, and hath all on record : God give us wisdom, to make the right choice.

S E R M O N XLVIII.

ISAIAH LIII. Verse 11.

Verse 11.—He shall see of the travel of his soul, and shall be satisfied: By his knowledge shall my righteous Servant justify many; for he shall bear their iniquities.

AS it is a most wonderful work that our Lord Jesus hath in hand, and a mighty great undertaking that cost him the travel of his soul, so it may be thought, that it must be a very great recompence that our Lord Jesus hath to expect, as a satisfaction for all that fore labour and travel. This is it that the text holds forth, He shall see of the travel of his soul; which in sum is this, he shall see poor sinners receiving good of him, justified by his grace, and admitted to friendship with God, and that to his satisfaction, as the words following clear, He shall be satisfied, to wit, as to that fruit, and shall acquiesce in it, as his satisfaction for all the travel of his soul.

We told you, that there were three things in these words, 1. The price that is called for from the Mediator, in performing the work of redemption, and making reconciliation betwixt God and sinners, to wit, the travel of his soul, and the fore pinching straits, and pressures that he was put to, and brought under, not only in his body, but also in his soul. 2. The promise made to him upon his undertaking and paying of the price, He shall see of the travel of his soul, that is, the fruits and effects of his soul-travel; it shall not be for nought, but shall certainly have fruit, he shall shall have a numerous issue. 3. There is here holden forth the Mediator's acquiescence in the bargain so proposed, that he undertaking the condition of laying down his life, on the same terms, that he shall see a seed, he requires no other satisfaction, and therefore he accepts of it, and acquiesces in it, as the result of this design, and shall be satisfied.

Having spoken of the former two, we come now to speak of the third, and we may consider it in these three respects, 1. As to Christ's design, who is like to one that is running a race, and hath the prize before him, and in his eye; and this is implied here, that he hath something before him, in laying down of his life, which he shall not miss, but shall reach and be satisfied in it; so many are given him, for whom he enters surety, on condition, that his righteousness shall be made good to them, and that none of them shall be without, or want it. 2. As it looks both to the number, and certainty of the effects and fruits, in respect of them that are given to him; he shall be satisfied, he shall have, though not all men and women, yet a sufficient number, even as many as shall satisfy and content him, and whatever was intended by him, in the laying down of his life, he shall want nothing of it, but shall be satisfied in it; and thus the words are to be actively understood, to wit, of God's actual performing of that which shall be satisfying to the Mediator. 3. It may be looked on as the effect and consequent following upon the former promise; and so it is to be understood passively, for the delight that he takes in the fruit of his sufferings, and in the seeing of sinners have the good of them; and so the meaning is, that he shall be fully contented, and thoroughly well satisfied with, yea, even delighted, and, to speak so, comforted in this, for all the travel of his soul, when many shall be brought to believe in him, and to have benefit by him.

ing to several similitudes, as 1. To that of hungry and thirsty persons, who are said to be satisfied, when their hunger and thirst are removed by meat and drink, which implies, that Jesus Christ in his pursuing and performing the work of redemption, had a holy hunger and thirst, and this hunger and thirst are satisfied in their salvation, and what leadeth to it; as himself saith, John iv. 32. where he makes use of this same similitude, I have meat to eat, that ye know not of. 2. It may allude to a man's taking pains in planting of a vine-yard, or orchard, to whom it is a satisfaction when all the trees grow, thrive well and bear fruit; and so the meaning is, that our Lord Jesus shall be at vast expence, and great labour and pains, making sinners to become trees of righteousness, but that all those for whom he suffered, and was at all this expence and pain, shall hold so well, and be so fruitful at length, that he shall be fully satisfied in them, and think all well bestowed; or, 3. We may take it in allusion to a woman in travail, who is said, John xvi. 21. 'To have sorrow, while her pains are upon her; but so soon as she is delivered, she no more remembers her sorrows, for joy that a man-child is born. And this similitude is here especially alluded unto, therefore our Lord's sufferings are called travel, because of the pains that he was put unto in them, and because the end of them was to bring forth children, before called his seed; as if the prophet had said, our Lord Jesus shall be put to great sorrow in suffering, but he shall bring forth, and as a woman hath joy in the man-child brought forth, so shall he have more comfort and delight in the bringing forth of believers, than he had sorrow in the procuring of life to them, though that was very great.

sufferings. It is a thing most satisfying, and well-pleasing to him. 2. That seeing our Lord Jesus is so well pleased with sinners making use of him; there is all equity and reason for it, that he should have this satisfaction; and this follows not only on the former, but clearly ariseth from the words; for this satisfaction is allowed him for his soul-travel; and as it is just, that they that labour should partake of their labour, and that the hireling should have his hire, so it is not only satisfying to Christ, that sinners get good of him, but it is just, he having purchased it at so dear a rate.

For the first of these, that our Lord Jesus is exceedingly delighted and satisfied with sinners making use of, and having benefit by him; if there were no other scripture to confirm it, this same is sufficient. Would ye then know what Christ aims at in his sufferings, what will content and satisfy him, as a recompence for all his soul-travel? It is even this, to see the fruit of the travel of his soul, to have sinners getting good of him, and saved by him, and there is nothing but this that will satisfy him; it were a great matter to have the faith of this settled and rooted in our hearts; rightly to understand what he hath suffered, how low he hath condescended to come, even to be a man, and a man of sorrow and acquainted with grief, to be reproached and mocked, to take on him the curse, and to be in pain and soul-travel; and fully acquainted with what he aimed at, and designed in all this, and what he accounted to be a recompence to him for all; even this, That when his gospel is preached, such and such poor sinners, under hazard of wrath, and accusations for sin, should, through closing with him, be brought to answer all their accusations by this; our Lord Jesus hath satisfied justice for sinners: and when poor sinners are under the sense of an hard heart, that they should cast their eyes on the same ground for a remedy of that spiritual malady, malady, and plague, even his sufferings, which have purchased the mollifying of the heart, as well as justification, and pardon of sin; and when a sinner is disconsolate and dejected, because of sin and divine displeasure, that he should be cheered and comforted in his sufferings; this, even this is refreshing, and is delightful to him: we say, it were much to have this thoroughly believed; that sinners are not half so desirous to come in under his sufferings for shelter and refreshing, as our Lord Jesus is, (to speak with reverence) to see them sheltered, refreshed and thriving; the very mentioning of this ought to be as marrow to the bones.

But for further clearing of it, we would speak a word, 1st, to what this delight and satisfaction is, 2^{dly}, to some grounds, to confirm the truth of it, that our Lord Jesus is indeed delighted to see poor sinners coming to him, and having benefit by him.

For the first, of these, we did, when we was speaking of these words, ver. 10. the pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in his hand, shew how it was a delightful thing to Jehovah; and now speaking of it from this 11 ver. in reference to the Mediator, we shall discourse of it in these particulars. 1st, There is in our Lord Jesus, not only a delight in sinners having good of him, as it is a thing he calls for, and is agreeable to his revealed will, and as being required of them as their duty; in which respect it is acceptable to God, and cannot but be acceptable and well-pleasing unto him; neither 2^{dly}, Is this delight only in respect of the end of his sufferings, which were undergone to make a way for, and to open a door to the throne of grace, through the vail which is his flesh: that poor sinners might come to a fountain and wash, and have access to God through him; which being the end he had before him in his death, cannot but be acceptable to God; because it was his end in giving of his Son to die; and so it is delightful to the Mediator; but also,

also, 3dly, It is so in these two respects further, sinners coming to him, resting on him, and receiving benefit by him, is his delight, 1. In respect of the honour that is done unto him; when a sinner believes on him, he counts it the putting of the crown on his head, as it is, Cant. iii. 11. See also to this purpose, John v. 23, 24. And though there could have been a possibility, of honouring God before, yet there is no honouring of the Mediator, till people make use of his sufferings by faith; and it is on this ground that Christ complains when he is not made use of; and therefore, when sinners trust in him by committing the saving of their souls to him, and by making use of his offices for that end, and for his performing in them, that, wherefore they were appointed, it cannot but be acceptable and well-pleasing to him. 2. In respect of that sympathy that our Lord Jesus hath with his own members; for though the Mediator be now glorified in heaven, yet he hath a human heart, and affection still, though inconceivably glorious, and so kindly sympathy with them, and is some way affected with their good and their evil; and considering him thus, he hath a delight in the good and well-fare of his people; and their being delighted in, and satisfied with him, proves a delight and satisfaction to him.

For the next thing, to wit, the clearing and confirming of it; it might be cleared and confirmed from many grounds, but we shall only touch on some, that may make it out most convincingly, that its most delightful to Jesus Christ, to see sinners making use of him, and getting good of his sufferings; and this his delight may be drawn from eternity, and carried on to eternity. 1. In the making of the covenant of redemption, it was delightful to him to enter in it, as is clear, Psal. xl. I delight to do thy will, O my God, the bargain was no sooner proposed (if we may speak so to that which is eternal) but heartily it was closed with with by him ; and this is confirmed, Pro. viii. 30, 31. Where the substantial wisdom of the Father is brought in, saying, Then I was by him as one brought up with him ; and I was daily his delight, rejoicing in the habitable parts of his earth, and my delights were with the sons of men ; Our Lord Jesus before the world began, was delighted in the fore-thought that such a thing was a-coming, that in such and such parts of the world, such and such poor sinners should be called by his grace, and get good of his sufferings ; as a man in a long journey, or voyage, may be delighted in the foresight of the end of it, before he come at it.

2. Look forward to his executing of his office of Mediator, and to his going about the work of redemption, and we will find that he does it with delight ; therefore, John iv. When he is sitting on the well side, and is weary with his journey, and hath neither to eat nor to drink, he began to preach to a poor sinful woman, and when the disciples would fain have refreshed him with that which they had bought, he says to them, I have meat to eat, that ye know not of ; and when they begin to wonder what that could be, he says further to them. It is my meat to do my Father's will, and to finish his work ; and what was that ? a poor whorish woman is spoken to by him, and brought by his speaking to acknowledge him to be the Messiah, and to accept of him as such ; and by that blessed work, his hunger and thirst were satisfied : So Luke xxii. 15. He saith to his disciples, with desire have I desired to eat this passover with you, before I suffer : And Luke xii. 50. I have a baptism to be baptised with, and how am I straitned till it be accomplished,

3. Tho' the drinking of that cup was terrible to him, and though mockings and reproaches were not pleasant in themselves, yet the love that he had to sinners good, mastered all the bitterness that was in these, and made them sweet.

3. There is nothing that he more complains of, nothing angers him, and grieves him

him more, than when he is not made use of, Ye will not, saith he, John v. come unto me, that ye may have life, to shew that the best entertainment that they could give him, was to come and have life from him; and it is told us, that he was angry and grieved for the people's unbelief and hardness of heart; yea, he weeps over them because of this, Luke xix. all which prove the great delight that he had, and hath still, in sinners benefit by him; and frequently in the Song, as chap. ii. 9. He is said to feed among the lillies; there is all his entertainment that he has in the world, he feasts on the fruits of his own spirit in them that welcome him: I shall name but one place more, and that is, Psal. cxlvii. 10, 11. He delights not in the strength of a horse, nor in the legs of a man, but in them that fear him. The following words clear it more, what it is that delights him, In them that hope in his mercy, that is, in them that draw near to him by believing; he delights in those beyond all the world.

Use 1. It is a desirable thing to be believing this; are there any so profane, but are ready to think, that if they knew what would please God, or Christ, they would do it? The question is here answered, that this is pleasing, and only pleasing to him; if this be wanting, there is nothing that will please him, even that ye make use of Christ's sufferings, and employ him in his offices, for getting the good that may be had by them. This is it that ye are called to, and which delighteth him; and if this be not, though ye would give him thousands of rams, and ten thousands of rivers of oil, yea, the first-born of your body for the sin of your souls, it will not satisfy him, nor be accepted; because this alone is the satisfaction that he will have for his soul-travel.

I shall a little explain this, and then prosecute the use of it; ye will ask then what is the fruit of Christ's soul-travel that satisfies him? I answer, that we understand by it, not only 1. That ye should aim to be at heaven; neither 2dly, this, That ye be serious in the duties of holiness, as if these were well-pleasing to God, without respect to Christ's sufferings; but it is the right improving of Christ's sufferings for attaining of these; when people by this new and living way go forward to heaven, and seek to be serious in the study of holiness; when they that could not walk in the way of holiness, do lean on the beloved, and study to live by faith in him. This is it mainly wherein his delight and satisfaction doth lye, even when a poor sinner is brought to make use of him for peace and reconciliation with God, for helping him in all called for duties, for his consolation, and for his admission to heaven in the end: And therefore they do not only fail here, who are profane, living securely, never minding heaven, their peace with God, nor the study of holiness; Not only those, who cast the law and its reproofs behind their backs, (who are loathsome to God and Jesus Christ,) are reprov'd but by this; those are also reprov'd, that do not improve the sufferings of Christ for peace and reconciliation with God, for righteousness, and for strength, for comfort and encouragement, and who hope not in his mercy. The reason is, because, though it were possible they could make progress in holiness, and attain to comfort and peace that way, yet it would not be thus the fruit of the travel of Christ's soul, he being past by, and so could not be satisfaction to him; but where a poor sinner sees that he cannot come to God of himself, cannot make his peace, nor can he walk in the way of holiness, so as to please God, and so flies to Christ for refuge, and makes use of his purchase; there lyeth Christ's delight, to see such a sinner come and hide himself under the shadow of his sufferings; and in this respect, the more hardly a sinner is put to it, it is the more satisfaction to him, that he in his death and sufferings is made use of; because this way, the sinner's life is more entirely the benefit of his sufferings;

ferings; and that such a person hath any strength, comfort, or peace, and is admitted to heaven; it is only through the travel of his soul, which is his great satisfaction.

And therefore we would 2dly commend to you, that as you would do Christ a favour, (to speak so with reverence; and O! what a motive is this for vile sinners, the dust of his feet, to be put in a capacity to do him pleasure) endeavour this especially, that as to you, Christ may see the fruit of the travel of his soul, and be satisfied, and that all his kindness offered to you may not be fruitless; this is the great hinge of the gospel, as to that which is pressed upon you, and this is the wonderful motive that is given to press it, That it is delightful to Christ, and therefore ye should believe on him: It were encouragement enough that it is profitable to yourselves; but if ye had hearts of stone, this should move you to it, that our Lord Jesus seeks no more satisfaction from you for all his soul-travel, but to believe on him, that you do not receive this offer of his grace in vain, nor be fruitless under it. In a word, we have here laid before us (and think upon it) the most wonderful, inconceivable, and inexpressible fute and request of him who is the Creator, to us poor sinful creatures, and what is it? I have been (says he on the matter) in fore travel and pain for you; now I pray you let it not be for nought, let me see the fruit of it. And (to speak it with reverence of the majesty of God) it should say this to you; let not our Lord Jesus repent of his sufferings: For as many as hear of this offer, and do not believe him with their souls, they do what they can, to make him repent that ever he became man, and suffered so much, when he is thus shifted, and unkindly requited by them, to whom he makes the offer; and this is very home and urgent, pressing of the necessity of making use of him, when such an argument is made use of; for thus it stands with you, and his offer speaks this, either make use of Christ, and of his soul-travel, for saving of your souls, that so he may be satisfied: or, if ye slight him, ye not only destroy, and cause to perish your own souls, but ye refuse to satisfy Christ for his soul-travel, and do what in you lies to mar and defeat the end and design of his sufferings. And is not this a great and strong-pushing dilemma? The result of your receiving or rejecting of Christ will be this, If ye receive him, ye satisfy him; if ye reject him, ye say, ye are not content that he should be satisfied. And what can be expected to come of it, when Christ suffered so much, and when all that was craved of you, was to make use of him; and when it was told, that that would satisfy him, and yet that was refused? What a horrible accusation will this be in the great day? And therefore to press this use a little, we shall shew you here, 1st, What it is that we exhort you to; and 2^{dly}, What is the force of this motive. 1. We should commend to you in general, that ye would endeavour the salvation of your own souls. This is it he cries to you, Prov. i. 22. How long, ye simple ones, will ye love simplicity, and ye scorers delight in scorning? Turn at my reproof, &c. He aims at this, that ye should have your souls saved from wrath, and this would not be prejudicial, nor in the issue unsatisfying to yourselves, and it will be very satisfying to him. 2. It is not only to aim at salvation simply, but to aim at it by him, to aim at pardon of sin, and justification through his righteousness and satisfaction; and that ye would bring no other argument before God to plead, for your peace with him, but this; and that ye would aim at holiness, as a fruit of his death, He having purchased a peculiar people to himself, to be zealous of good works, as it is, Tit. ii. 14. and that ye would aim to do holy duties, by his strengthening of you; and that ye would live by faith in him, which is your victory over the world, and the very soul of the practice of all holy holy duties. And 3. That ye aim to have a comfortable, refreshful, and chearful life in him, and by what is in him, as if it were your own, it being legally yours by faith in him; to be stopping your own mouth, as having nothing in yourselves to boast of, and, as I just now said, to be chearing and delighting yourselves from that which is in him; and, as it is, Psalm cxlvii. Even to be hoping in his mercy; In a word, it is to be studying peace with God through him, to be studying holiness in his strength, and to be studying a comfortable and chearful walk through the grounds of that joy that are given you in him, which is very reasonable; would ye then do him a favour, and have him delighted and satisfied, do but this, give him your souls to be saved by him, in his own way; come to him sensible of sin, and founding your peace on him, though weak in yourselves, yet strong in him, on whom, as the mighty one God hath laid help: And studying holiness in his strength, drawing virtue from him, only to mortify your lusts; that it may be known that Christ hath died, and is risen again, because grace shines in such a person; and be comforted in him, He that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord, having given up with creature-comforts, and confidences, with your own gifts, parts, duties, &c. And having betaken yourselves to the peace, strength and consolation that are in a Mediator, and which run through the covenant of grace, and flow forth from him, as the fountain from whom all the graces and comforts that come to us are derived. 2dly, For the force of the motive, consider seriously, if this be not a pinching strait that ye are put to; if this be it wherein our Lord's satisfaction lies, and wherein the salvation and edification of your own souls consists; we ask you, if it be any great difficulty, or unreasonable thing, that is called for from you? and if the motive whereon it is press be not most just and reasonable? that these who have, or profess to have the faith of this, that it will be satisfaction to him for all his soul-travel, that sinners make use of him, should yield it to him, and whether in the day of the Lord, it will not be a most heinous, shameful and abominable guilt, that when the business of your own salvation stood on this, even on your own satisfying of Christ by yielding, ye refused, disdained and scorned it, and would not make use of him for your peace, and would not in his strength study holiness, though your own souls should never be saved, nor he satisfied for his soul-travel; this, of all other challenges will be the sharpest and most biting; and upon the other hand, it may be most comforting to a poor believer that is sensible of sin, and afraid of wrath; is there, or can there be hazard to do Christ a pleasure by believing on him? It is a thing delightful to him, and therefore, let this be one great motive to press believing in Christ, among the rest, which, though it be cross, and thwarting to the unbelieving heart, and may look like presumption to look a promise in the face, and to offer to make application of it to poor sinners self; yet seeing it is a thing so pleasing to Christ, that it satisfies him for all his sufferings, essay it upon this very account, remembering always, that he delights in them that hope in his mercy; and to him be praise, for ever.

ISAIAH LIII. Verse 11.

Verse 11.—He shall see of the travel of his soul, and shall be satisfied: By his knowledge shall my righteous Servant justify many: For he shall bear their iniquities.

IT is a great work that our Lord Jesus hath undertaken, in satisfying the justice of God for the sins of the elect, and he hath at a dear rate, and with great expence and travel performed it. Now it is but reason that he should be satisfied, that so Jehovah's satisfaction, and the Mediator's satisfaction may go together, and that is the thing that is promised here in these words; what this satisfaction is which is promised to him, as the great thing in which he delights, and by which he is satisfied, in the undertaking and performing of the work of redemption, it is also set down here, He shall see of the fruit of the travel of his soul, and shall be satisfied; which in a word is this, he shall see many who had perished, if he had not suffered, having benefit by them; who, by his taking on him the curse and by his undertaking his soul-travel, shall be freed from the curse, and made to partake of the benefits, privileges, and comforts that he hath bought with so great and precious a price.

We proposed this as the main doctrine from the words the last day, that it is great satisfaction to our Lord Jesus, to see sinners making use of, and having benefit of his sufferings. Or thus, That sinners making use of Christ's sufferings for their good, is his satisfaction tisfaction for all the soul-travel and sufferings that he endured; he shall see of the fruit of the travel of his soul, and shall be satisfied. I shall insist no further in clearing and confirming this, but come to the use of it; and if any point of doctrine have use, this may have, and hath it, to the rejoicing and making joyful the hearts of lost sinners, that our Lord Jesus should suffer so much, and seek no more satisfaction for all; but to see sinners improving his sufferings for their good, to have a seed brought forth by his soul-travel, and to have them receiving life by his death, and the blessing of his bearing of the curse, and yet this is it that this doctrine sets forth.

We may reduce the 1st use to these four, from and by which we may learn, and know in some measure how to answer this question; seeing we have heard so much of Christ's suffering and soul-travel, what shall we give Christ for all that? How shall we satisfy him? If there were any affected suitably with thankfulness from the hearing of Christ's being brought so low, by his sad sufferings, this would be, and could not but be their question. Here is an answer to it, That our Lord Jesus seeks no more as a satisfaction for all his sufferings, but that ye improve them for your good. This will delight and satisfy him; ye cannot do him a greater pleasure, nothing will be more acceptable, nay, nothing will be acceptable to him, nor received from you, but this, even to see you coming to him, making use of his sufferings for your own good; that as to your particular concern, his suffering may not be in vain, and for nought; but that ye improve them, and so improve them, as that ye may not live and die in the state that ye would have been in for ever, had he not suffered; that is, under the dominion of sin and Satan, under the wrath and curse of God in an anxious, heartless life, without God, and without hope in the world. It is even this in a word, that hearing of his sad sufferings, and of the design of them, them, ye may betake yourselves to him for pardon of sin, for sanctification in both the parts of it, and for consolation, and that in the end, ye may have your souls saved, on the account of his sufferings, and by virtue thereof; 1st then, Ye should seek to be reconciled to God, as the apostle, 2 Cor. v. 20, 21. exhorts, We, as ambassadors for Christ, and in his stead, beseech you to be reconciled to God. And the argument whereby it is pressed, is the same that the doctrine holds forth; for he was made sin for us who knew no sin, that we might be made the righteousness of God in him. Hence it follows also, chap. vi. 1. We beseech you, receive not this grace of God in vain. Are there any of you, who are convinced that Christ should be satisfied, and that he should not be at all this travel and pains for nought? And that think ye would fain satisfy him, if it were in your power? Behold, our Lord hath told you what will satisfy him; it is not thousands of rams, nor ten thousand rivers of oyl; but that his sufferings be so improved by you, as the native fruits of them may follow and be found in you; that considering the woful case ye are in by nature, ye may make use of his satisfaction to divine justice, as the alone atonement, and may by faith take hold of it as the ground of your peace; if this be not, Christ will be to you as if he had never suffered. 2dly, It calls for holiness and mortification of sin; this is much pressed, Rom. vi. from verse 2, to 14. and by this same argument, to wit, that seeing Christ died for believers, we should die with him, that being it wherein the power of his death appears, even in the mortification of our lusts, which he came to destroy: But when people live as they had wont to do in their profanity and looseness, there is nothing of the travel of his soul to be seen in them. 3dly, Christ travelled for the consolation of his people: And this is another fruit of his death and sufferings, that those who have betaken themselves to Christ, may comfort themselves on this ground, that once, and that ere long, they will have the mastery over a body of death, and will get both Satan and it bruised under their fruit through him; ‘who was delivered for our offences, and rose again for our justification, and, who hath blotted out the handwriting of ordinances that was against us, nailing it to his cross; and that through the vail, which is his flesh, there might be a way made to us, unto the most holy,’ and that with confidence we might approach to God, and in his sufferings silence all our accusations. And, indeed, believers are behind, and greatly at a loss, who have betaken themselves to Christ, and yet live as anxiously and uncomfortably, as if they had not a slain Mediator to comfort themselves in, who, by his sufferings, soul-travel, and death, hath made a purchase of so great things for them. And in a word, the upshot of his sufferings is, to have the souls of believers in him, carried unto heaven and kept there perfect, till the body be raised; and in a perfect state be reunited to the soul, at the great day, according to that of the apostle, Eph. v. 26, 27. ‘He gave himself for his church, that he might sanctify and cleanse it, and present her to himself a glorious church without spot or wrinkle, or any such thing;’ and when souls are not taking the right way to heaven, he hath nothing of the travel of his soul from such, more than if he had not undergone it, or not suffered at all.

Use 2. If this be Christ’s satisfaction for all the travel of his soul, to see sinners having good of his sufferings, then if any motive be weighty to move people to give him their souls to save; this must sure have weight with them, even that thereby he may have satisfaction for his soul-travel; and therefore we would exhort you on this ground, to give him your souls to be saved by him, in order to his satisfaction. And what is spoken in common, take it as spoken to every one of you in particular, men and women, old and young, young, rich and poor; if ye would do Christ pleasure, give him employment for pardon of sin, for peace with God, for sanctification, for consolation, and for access to heaven; or, if ye would know what motive we should use to persuade you to make use of this gospel for all these, take this for one, and a main one, that it will satisfy, and even, to speak with reverence, comfort Christ for all the travel of his soul, and for all the hard labour that he endured; even as it satisfies a suiter for all his pains and patience, in waiting after many refusals and flights when he gains the woman's consent, and when the match is made up. So it will satisfy him, when he sees souls, by virtue of his sufferings, brought to believe on him, and to lay the stress of their salvation upon him; for then he sees it was not for nought that he laid down his life: And truly if this motive prevail not, I know not what motive will prevail.

But to make it the more clear and convincing, consider these things, 1. What it is that Christ seeks, when he seeks satisfaction for the travel of his soul, he even seeks your benefit and good: If he had sought that which would have been painful to you, ye would, I suppose, have judged yourselves obliged readily to have gone about it, had it been, as we use to speak, to have gone through the fire for him; but now, when this is all that he seeks, that by making use of his sufferings ye may be justified, made holy, comforted in your life, and brought to heaven at your death, should it not much more engage you to give him this satisfaction? 2. Who seeks this satisfaction, and to whom it is to be given? Is it not to our Lord Jesus Christ? There is very great weight in this part of the argument, that by believing on him, and making use of his sufferings, we not only satisfy and save ourselves, but make glad the heart of our Lord Jesus Christ, who being considered as God, needs no satisfaction, neither is capable of any additional satisfaction from creatures, he being infinitely happy, and fully satisfied in the enjoyment of his all-sufficient self; nothing from without can be added unto him; yet he having condescended to become man, and Mediator betwixt God and man, to reconcile lost sinners to God, he is graciously pleased to account it satisfaction to him for all his soul-travel, to have sinners believe on him for their good; and if there be any weight in the satisfaction of one that is great and good, and good to us; this hath weight in it, that our doing so will satisfy him, that is matchlessly great and good, and superlatively so to sinners. 3. Consider the ground on which this satisfaction is pleaded for, and it will add yet more weight to this argument. It is satisfaction to him for his soul-travel. And can any from their hearts think, but he should be satisfied on this account? Is there not reason for it? ‘Who,’ as the apostle says, 1 Cor. ix. 7. ‘goeth a warfare on his own charges? Who ‘plants a vineyard, and eats not of the fruit thereof? ‘Or who feedeth a flock, and eateth not of the milk ‘of the flock?’ Ah! should our Lord Jesus bestow all his labour and pains for nothing? And further, 4. Whose satisfaction is it that is sought? (this consideration is somewhat different from the 2^d, and should not therefore be looked on as any tautology) Is it not his who is Lord of all, and will one day be Judge? When, if we had all the world, we would give it to please him, and who will pronounce the sweetest or saddest sentence upon us, according as we have satisfied him in this, or not; considering that it is he who desires this satisfaction from us, should there not be any holy diligence, eagerness, and zeal to have that performed, that will please and satisfy him, especially when the improving of his sufferings may do it? But 5. from whom requires he this satisfaction? Is it not from them, who, like sheep, have gone astray? From those who have many iniquities lying on them, and are lying under the curse of God by nature? From those,

those, who must either be healed by his stripes, or else they will never be healed, but will die of their wounds? May not this make the argument yet the more strong, that he is not seeking this satisfaction of strangers, but of his own people, nor of righteous persons, but of sinners, who are lying under the curse, and whose happiness lies in giving him this satisfaction? And when it is thus with you, that either your sins must be taken away by him, or else ye must lie under them for ever; that either he must bear the curse for you, or ye must bear it yourselves; if these things be obvious, as indeed they are: O! Give him the satisfaction that he calls for, and let him not be put to say, as it is, Isai. xlix. 4. I have laboured in vain, and spent my strength for nought, and in vain.

3dly, To press this yet a little more (although it is matter of grief to us, that there should be need to press that so much on us, which is so profitable to us, and satisfying to him,) even that we should make use of him for our spiritual good and advantage. These considerations will add weight to the argument, 1. What esteem Christ hath of it; he thinks it as it were to be a payment, and a sort of compensation for all his labour and sufferings. The price was not gold nor silver, nor any such thing, which he gave for sinners, but it was his precious blood, his own life, who was the Prince of life, and the Prince of the kings of the earth; and O! What a vast and infinite disproportion is there betwixt his life, and all our lives; and yet he accounts it a sufficient reward, if we will but give him our souls to be saved by him, in his own way, and will make use of his death and sufferings for that end; and if it were possible, that we could think little of our own salvation, and much of Christ's satisfaction for his soul-travel, ought we not to think much of our own salvation, in reference to his satisfaction; and now, when he hath joined these together, so that we cannot please nor satisfy him, except we give him our souls to save, and cannot satisfy him, but that in doing so our souls shall be saved; should it not induce us to make use of him for that end? If he had commanded us to run here and there, and to undergo some long and very toilsome voyage, or some hard piece of labour, or to bestow of our means and substance, yea, all of it to please him, it had been very reasonable on his part to have demanded it, and most unreasonable on ours to have refused it; but our Lord lays weight on none of these things, as separated from the laying the stress of our souls on his righteousness: The reason is, because the making use of his righteousness, and the improving of his sufferings for our justification and salvation, shews, that he in his sufferings is esteemed of, and he seeks no more but that. 2. Consider how good reason ye have to satisfy Christ, and yield to him, and to improve his sufferings for your own salvation; is there any that dare say the contrary? Will not historical faith say, that there is good reason for it? If there be any love to him, or to your own souls, will it not plead for this? If ever ye think to be pardoned, is there any other name given whereby ye can expect it? Is there any holiness, or comfort but from him, any hope of heaven but thro' him? And will not this bind the conscience of any, that is not desperate, to judge, that he from whom all this comes should be satisfied? 3. Consider at what a rate he hath purchased these benefits of the pardon of sin, of peace with God, of sanctification, and of the hope of heaven, &c. And how he hath brought them about; did he not engage in the covenant of redemption, and hath he not performed all that he engaged for, in taking on him our nature, in being in an agony, in sweating drops of blood, in being buffeted, mocked, reproached, and in dying, to procure life and peace to sinners? If we could rightly discern his sufferings, and the benefits that we have by them, it would argue, that there is good reason, that he should have a kind acceptance, who hath done and suffered so much to obtain these for us. 4. Consider the cheerful way of his sufferings; and of his laying down of the price, how well pleased he was to undergo all for his people, so that he sayeth, John x. No man taketh my life from me, but I lay it down of myself, and take it up again, Psal. xl. I delight to do thy will, O my God; And Luke xii. I have a baptism to be baptised with, and how am I straitned till it be accomplished? And, Luke xxii. With desire have I desired to eat this passover before I suffer: He opened not his mouth, in order to his delivery, so well did he love the salvation of sinners. Now, what if a meer and ordinary man had done something to the hazard of his life for you, would it not plead with the most carnal persons, having the least measure of natural, or moral ingenuity, to shew him some respect; the very heathens will love those that love them, much more ought ye to satisfy him in what he requires, who hath done so much for sinners. 5. Consider what he seeks as a satisfaction? (hinted at before) If it were a great matter, or which were to your prejudice, there might be some shadow of reason to refuse; but when it is no more but to make use of his sufferings; for your good, how can it be refused? Its in this case as if the patients health would satisfy the physician, as if a poor man's receiving of a sum of money would satisfy the rich friend, who is pleased to bestow it; or, as if one that is naked would satisfy another, by putting on the cloaths laid to his hand by him; what reason is there to refuse such offers? and yet this that Christ calls for, is, even as if the physician should say to his dying patient, I will be satisfied greatly, if thou wilt take this potion that is for thy recovery, health and cure, and I will not be content, if thou take it not, though the ingredients cost myself very dear; besides that, it is for thy good, and will recover thee; or, as if the father should say to the child, I will not be content, if thou put not on such a fine suit, that cost me so much money ; in a word, That which makes the sinner happy, is that which satisfies him. 6. Consider, if Jesus Christ get not this satisfaction, what will become of it, if ye please him not in this, he will be highly displeased, no other thing will satisfy him, though ye should pray and weep an hundred years and do many good works, if he get not this fruit of his soul sufferings, to wit, that ye improve them for your souls good and salvation, he will be continually displeased ; therefore its said, Psal. ii. Kiss the Son, lest he be angry ; and this is nothing else, but to make use of him in his offices ; and it says, that there is no way to please him, and to eschew his anger but this ; and indeed, if ye anger him, ye anger him that can be your best friend, and greatest foe. 7. Consider further, how our Lord Jesus seeks, and presses for this satisfaction from you ; he sends forth his friends and ambassadors, to wooe in his name, and to beseech you to be reconciled, and told you, that it will not be thousands of rams, nor your first-born, that will do the business, but that ye must humble yourselves, and walk with God, which necessarily supposeth the use-making of Christ : if there had not been such sin, in not improving his satisfaction, but when he pleads so much, and so often for this, and intreats every one in particular to satisfy him, saying, as it were, let me see of the travel of my soul, let me have this much satisfaction for all my sufferings, that ye will make use of my righteousness ; and when he is so very serious, in beseeching and intreating, it should, no doubt, make us more willing to grant him what he seeks. 8. Ye should look upon this, not only as a discourse in the general to sinners, but ye should also look on it, as addressed to every one of you in particular ; and therefore remember, that ye will all be called to give an account of this matter, and it will be asked you, what became of such and such an offer of grace, and whether ye gave him the satisfaction that he called for, or no: According to that word, Acts xvii. 31. 'He hath appointed a day, wherein he will judge the world in righteousness, by that man whom he hath ordained, whereof he hath given assurance to all men, in that he hath raised him from the dead.' He would have judged the world though Christ had not come; but he will have a day wherein he will call all the hearers of the gospel to an account, especially as to this, to wit, what welcome they have given to Christ; and seeing such a day is coming, when people will be called to an account, what use they made of him, with what face will many come before him, when it shall be told them, that he craved no more satisfaction from them, for all that he suffered, but that they would have improved his sufferings for their own good, and that yet they would not satisfy him so much? Doth not this say, that there is need, that we should look well what fruit there is of his sufferings, that there may be more than if he had not suffered at all. 9. Consider the great stress that will be laid on this sin, of refusing to believe, and to satisfy him in this, to wit, in improving of his sufferings, above all other sins. This is a sin that will be found to be against equity, thankfulness and ingenuity, that when he had done, and suffered so much, he was so ill requited; yea, it will be found to be a wilful and malicious sin, that, when your good and his satisfaction were joined together, ye would rather chuse to destroy yourselves, than to satisfy him in saving yourselves, through your making use of his sufferings: There are two remarkable words to this purpose, Heb. vi. 10. it is said of such, that they crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh, and put him to an open shame, that is, they do displease and anger him, and do what in them lies to cast reproach upon him, as if he were no Saviour at all, or an insufficient Saviour, to put him to suffer over again, in his wanting of satisfaction for his sufferings ; as it is a great pain for a mother to be in travel, but it is another, and in some respect, a greater pain, if the child die in the bringing forth : In the x. chap. ver. 28. it is called, a treading under foot the Son of God, and an accounting the blood of the covenant to be an unholy thing ; and in the 26th verse before it is said, There remains no more sacrifices for sin, but a certain fearful looking for of judgment, and it is upon this very account ; (as we did at another occasion, make use of these two scriptures to a like purpose, and did give a caution in our application of them against mistakes) for what greater indignity could be put on him, than, when his satisfaction depends on the improving of his sufferings, yet people will not do it ? As nothing pleases him better than to improve his sufferings, so on the contrary, there is no sin that doth displease him more, than when they are not improved : And if ye will not now believe this to be a truth, yet, when the Lord shall call you to account for it ; ye will find it to be a most certain and sad truth ; that he called you to believe, and yet ye would lie still in your unbelief, ignorance and profanity ; that ye destroyed your own souls, and made his sufferings as useless, as to you, as if there had never a door been opened to sinners to heaven by them : Is there any of you that will be able to answer this accusation ? If not, then let him have this satisfaction, by improving of his sufferings, that he may find, to say so, that his death had not been for nought, as to you : Study to have him great in your esteem, and to have your souls saved by the virtue and efficacy of his sufferings, otherways the accusation will be unanswerable ; considering, that he declared, that this would satisfy him, and ye knew that this would have pleased him, and removed the quarrel and saved yourselves ; and that withal, by this means, a comfortable sentence at judgment might have been procured to you, and that yet ye disdained to do it : And therefore since it stands

good

so with you, be intreated to be in earnest, and more in earnest in believing, and in the great work of having your own souls saved, which he hath thought so much of, else it had been better for you, that ye had never had a delightful hour in the world; and sad will the encounter be, that ye will have with him, and with your own conscience, in that day, when it shall have this to tell you, that ye cannot now expect any good, or favour from the Judge; because, when he would have saved you, ye would not have it so, but would needs bring on your own damnation; and therefore we say again, either give him satisfaction, by improving of his sufferings, and by being in earnest in the matter of your salvation, or, resolve to meet with a most terrible pursuer of the quarrel against you, the wrath of God is dreadful, but much more the vengeance of the Mediator, who, because ye would not give him his will in your salvation, he will have it in your ruin and destruction.

4. There is here a sweet word of consolation to poor souls, that fain would have sin taken away, and are afraid to presume; our Lord will never be angry, that ye make use of his sufferings for your own good; nay, he accounts it a satisfaction to him, that ye improve them; that when ye find yourselves arrested for sin, ye put it on his score, and draw a bill on him to pay your debt; that when you find yourselves under that, which to you, looks like the dominion of sin, ye look to his cross, for virtue, to crucify, kill and subdue it; if therefore, as I have often said, ye would do him a favour, or pleasure, make use of him; be assured, that the more weight ye lay on him, ye do him the greater pleasure; and this is all the amends that he seeks, for all the wrongs ye have done to him; and all the satisfaction that he seeks, for all the good kindneses he hath done to you, is, that ye come to him, thus to make use of him; and it is good reason, even all the reason in the world, that he have this amends made him, and this satisfaction granted to him.

ISAIAH LIII. Verse 11.

Verse 11.—He shall see of the travel of his soul, and shall be satisfied: By his knowledge shall my righteous Servant justify many; for he shall bear their iniquities.

THERE are two things of great concernment for men to know, for sinful men to know (if any thing be of concernment) the one is, how the justice of God that is provoked may be satisfied, or what it is, by which provoked justice is satisfied: And the other is, what the way is, how we come to have that satisfaction applied to us? Or, what is the way to get the benefit of it made ours? And both of them are answered in this verse clearly and shortly: The first is held forth in the first part of the verse to be the travel of Christ's soul, which hath a special respect to the covenant of redemption, and to the condition on which it is accomplished and performed, that is, his soul-travel, under which all his sufferings are comprehended; the other is, in the latter part of the verse: By his knowledge shall my righteous Servant justify many, for he shall bear their iniquities. This holds forth, in short, the gospel; nay, how a sinner may be brought to have the benefit of Christ's satisfaction; these two being the sum of the gospel, to wit, Christ's purchase, and the application of it to sinners.

In this last part of the verse, we have these five things to be considered, which express this, 1. The great benefit that flows from Christ's sufferings, and it is justification, which in a word is thus much, to be absolved, acquitted and set free from the guilt of sin, and from the curse of God, justifying here being opposed to condemning; so that when it is said, They shall be justified: The meaning is, that those that were before obnoxious to the curse, and that were by the law to be condemned (according to that word, Gal. iii. 10. Cursed is every one that abides not in all things written in the law to do them;) shall now through the benefit of Christ's suffering, be declared free, and set at liberty, even as a debtor by the interveining of a responsal surety. 2. The parties made partakers of the benefits, and they are called many; though they are few, being compared with the world, yet in themselves they are many; They shall come, or many shall come, From the east and from the west, and from the south, and from the north, and shall sit down with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, in the kingdom of heaven: And comparing this with the last words of this verse, it says, that they are as many as those are whose iniquities he bare, and the payment of whose debt he undertook. It is not to be taken universally for all, but for some singular selected persons, whose iniquities he bare. 3. The fountain from which, or from whom this benefit flows to many: It is the Lord's righteous Servant, he shall justify many, where the effect is attributed alone to him. 4. The way how Christ justifies; it is not simply, by forgiving (as he indeed hath power to forgive sins,) but meritoriously, to wit, by his satisfying for them; therefore it is added, for he shall bear their iniquities; he shall take on him their sins, and pay their debt; and therefore, when they come before the tribunal of God, the guilt of their sins is taken off them through his merit. 5. The great means by which this benefit is derived to these many;

many; it is by his knowledge, which is not to be taken subjectively, for the knowledge that he hath, but objectively, that is, he, by making himself known by believing; or, it is by his knowledge, not actively, but passively taken; not his knowledge, whereby he doth know, but that whereby he is known: It is in a word, by faith, according to that, Philip. iii. 8, 9, 10. I account all things, saith the apostle there, loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus, &c. and he expounds what that is in the next words, that I may be found in him, not having my own righteousness, which is according to the law, but the righteousness of God, which is by the faith of him: These may afterwards be more fully cleared, as we come to speak of them more particularly.

There is here then a brief compend of the gospel, and of the way of sinners reconciliation with God; so, that if ye would know, 1. How a sinner is justified, or wherein it consists? Here it is, it consists not in the infusing of grace, nor in the sanctifying; or making of a profane person holy, though that doth accompany always and follow justification; but in the absolving of a sinner from the guilt of sin, or in acquitting the guilty, 2. Would ye know the reason of this, or how it comes to pass, that the just God can justify an ungodly sinner? It is because of Christ's righteousness, and of his satisfying justice, or paying of the sinner's debt. 3. Would ye know how it comes, that this man and not another comes to have Christ's satisfaction made his, and hath his debt thereby taken off? It is by his knowledge, and by faith in him, (called knowledge here, because it necessarily presupposes the knowledge of him;) it is by acknowledging of him in his offices, and by submitting and betaking of ourselves to him by faith, because it is articulated in the covenant of redemption, that his righteousness shall be made good to all them that by faith betake themselves to him for shelter; so that hereby

the ungodly are declared righteous; because, through the Sureties payment and satisfaction, their sin is not imputed to them, and they are declared free, because of his paying of their debt for them. 4. Would ye know the reason of this, how it comes, that faith justifies in its resting on Christ? It is not because of any worth in itself, nor because of any account that is made of its worth, but because it rests on Christ's righteousness, and takes hold of the benefit of Christ's purchase: Therefore it is said, because he shall bear their iniquities, because by faith they take hold of his sufferings and satisfaction, whereby their sin is taken away, and God becomes well pleased with them for his sake. This then is a most material place of scripture, and we had need in entering upon it, to have an eye to this righteous Servant, that he would be pleased to make the meaning of it known to us, and to give us the right understanding of this great mystery.

First, In general observe here, in what estate men are naturally, and as abstracted from Christ; they are unjustified, and lying under God's curse, obnoxious to his wrath. This is supposed, consider men then in their natural estate, this is it, they are even obnoxious to the wrath and curse of God, which is ready to seize upon them, for their breach of God's covenant, and for provoking of him by sin. If men thought seriously on this, how could they sleep, or have peace; not knowing when they may be arrested, and put in prison, till they pay the uttermost farthing, which will never be. O! that ye knew and believed this, who are ready to defy any that will offer to charge you with one penny of debt, and who walk up and down without all fear of your hazard. Lay your natural estate to heart, and ye will have quite other thoughts of yourselves.

2dly, Observe the way how freedom from this debt of sin, and liableness to the curse is derived; and to this,

this, many things concur, each of which hath its own place. 1st, The Mediator and his satisfaction; this is the ground of the freedom. 2^{dly}, The covenant of redemption, and the promise made to the Mediator in it, He shall see his seed, &c. He shall see of the travel of his soul, and shall be satisfied, by his knowledge shall many be justified, &c. Wherein it is covenanted that those for whom he suffered shall be pardoned and set free; and it is this that gives sinners access to expect the benefit of Christ's sufferings; otherways, though Christ had suffered, they had not been the better for his sufferings, if this covenant had not been, which gives them warrant to lay hold on the same; e'er faith can act on Christ's sufferings, it must have this reason laid down, that it hath a warrant by virtue of this covenant to lay hold on them. 3^{dly}, The knowledge and offer of this mysterious contrivance of grace, is also necessary, and doth concur to bring about this freedom. This must be manifested, that there is such a covenant, wherein the ground is laid down, and a warrant given, by virtue of this covenant to make use of Christ's satisfaction, and to obtain the benefit of it. This is implied in that word, his knowledge; so Rom. x. it is said, How shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? which says plainly that there cannot be faith, except knowledge preceed. I observe this the rather; because many think to come to heaven without knowledge, and so continue still in their ignorance; but before faith can be found there must necessarily be some measure of knowledge of those things, that are necessary to be known; As, that we are sinners, and that we are lost in ourselves, that Jesus Christ is the alone propitiation for sin, and that according to the covenant of grace, they that believe on him shall be absolved and set free. 4^{thly}, There is a concurring of faith, for taking hold of this benefit of offered salvation through Christ, how faith concurs curs with Christ's satisfaction, in order to the making of our peace with God, we shall not now stand to speak particularly; only in general, it is by his knowledge that it justifies; for, though he have sufficient righteousness, and though the covenant give warrant to take hold of it, yet, if there be not an actual taking hold of it, it will not profit us: Therefore, Rom. iii. 22. and ix. 30. it is called, The righteousness which is by faith in him; And Rom. iv. 5. the apostle saith, To him that worketh not, but believeth on him that justifieth the ungodly, his faith is counted to him for righteousness. It is not faith without it's object Christ, nor the object Christ without faith; but it is faith taking hold of him as its object, by which we have access to plead for absolution; without Christ our faith will do us no good; and without faith Christ will not profit us; for without faith we have no title to Christ: And each of these should be put in their own room and place; Christ in his room, and faith in its room; as the condition on which his purchase is made offer of to us.

More particularly, let me, first consider the title that Christ has in these words, he is called the Lord's Servant, and his righteous Servant.

1st, As for Servant, it has a respect to him as Mediator, as this whole chapter with chapters xlii. 1. and lii. 13. do abundantly clear. Christ Jesus then, is Mediator, i. e. the Lord's Servant; or he, in performing the office of Mediator, is his Father's Servant; so the Lord calls him, Psal. lxxxix. 19. when he says, I have laid help upon one that is mighty, I have found David my servant, &c. for he is there speaking of Jesus Christ, with whom the covenant of grace, as with the head of the confederate party, is principally made. It imports these four, which may be as so many reasons of this designation, 1. An humiliation, and inferiority in respect of God, as it is said, Phil. ii. He humbled himself, and became of no reputation; in which respect, he himself says, that the Father is greater than he; and that he is sent, that he came not to do his own will, but the will of him that sent him. This holds forth a great wonder, in the dispensation of grace, that the Father's Fellow and Equal, he that was Lord and Master of all, should become a servant in the work of redemption, for the saving of souls. This must sure be a great work, wherein the Son becomes a servant; as it must be a great wonder, that grace so far condescended, as to make him, who is the Prince of life, to become a servant; and we should view it as a much greater, and far more momentous concern, than we use to do, to have a soul saved. 2. It imports his prerogative, as being singularly and eminently God's Servant; he is called, Heb. xiii. 20. The great Shepherd. So may he be called the great Steward, and Deputy over the Lord's house; so then, he is a singular, choice, and non-such servant; 'Behold,' says Jehovah, Isa. xlii. 1. 'my Servant whom I uphold, mine elect in whom my soul delighteth.' Though all be God's servants, yet in this respect, he is singularly a servant, as he is great Lord deputy, made head over all things to the church, who was before all things, and is preferred to all things. This is very comfortable to believers, to consider, that though our Lord Jesus be a servant, yet he is a choice and singular Servant, Administrator, and Steward for their good; it being for them that he becomes a servant. 3. It imports the particular task, or work that is laid on him, and the commission that he hath got, to follow, and prosecute that work, which is the main reason of this designation of a servant; because he is intrusted with carrying on the great work of the redemption of elect sinners; therefore he says, 'I came not to do my own will, but the will of him that sent me, and to finish his work; and I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do;' because he is particularly intrusted with the bringing about of that work. He hath got so many given him to redeem

and save, to whom he is appointed a Shepherd, a Head, and Overseer or Bishop; therefore he calls himself the good Shepherd: And is called by the apostle, the Shepherd and Bishop (or Overseer) of souls; and of all that are given him he loseth none, but maketh account of them all: And this is yet more comfortable, when we consider that Christ is not a servant simply, but a servant commissioned to gather in souls, to bring home the lost sheep of the house of Israel; this is his office, and service, even to satisfy for the sins of such, to destroy the power that the devil hath over them, and to subdue sin in them. 4. It implies this, that the work which he performs in the redeeming of souls is so acceptable to God, and doth so mightily concur and co-operate, to the promoting of his design, that the Lord owns every thing that he performs, as performed by his great Ambassador; and by him, who hath the trust of all the affairs of his house committed to him; so that our Lord Jesus, in performing the work of redemption, cannot but be acceptable to Jehovah; because it is a performing of that with which he hath intrusted him; therefore, John iv. he says, that it is his meat to do his Father's will, and to finish his work; and to this purpose, he says to his supposed father, and to his mother, Luke ii. 49. Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business? It is his business, and because it is so; it is so accounted of, and comes to be so in the end; and therefore, in the 10th verse of this chapter it is said, The pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in his hand.

2dly, As for his being the Lord's righteous Servant; he is not only a servant, but an excellent servant; not righteous simply, as he is God only; nor righteous simply, as he is man; but righteous in the administration of his offices, and in the discharge of the great trust committed to him. Whence observe, that our Lord Jesus in performing of the office and work of mediation and redemption, is most truly and faithful: There is not any the least fault or failing in his performing of it; he is the Lord's servant, that never wronged his master, who never miscarried in his commission, nor mismanaged it in the least. Saith he, I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do. If we look a little to the qualifications, that shine eminently in the administration of his office, they will make out this; for he administers them, 1st, Wonderful wisely. 2dly, Very tenderly. 3dly, Most diligently and effectually. 4thly, With all faithfulness. Thus doth he entirely and holily, without the least degree of unrighteousness perform all the trust committed to him, and that both towards God, and towards the sheep; so as he is eminently, by the Lord's own testimony, his righteous Servant, with whom he is well-pleased, and cannot but be well-pleased. It will not be needful to separate these qualifications of his service, in the administration of his offices. In speaking to them, we shall only desire you to take notice of some few places of scripture that hold them forth; the first whereof is that, Isa. xl. 11. 'He shall

' feed his flock like a shepherd, he shall gather the
' lambs with his arms, and carry them in his bosom,
' and gently lead those that are with young.' Never shepherd was so careful of his flock, for he feeds them, and in feeding them waits diligently on them, and takes them to those places where it is best for them to feed. He thinks fit now and then, it is that the dogs should hunt them, yet he is so loving and tender of them, that he gathers them with his arms; and he is so wise and skilful in conducting them, that he gently leads them that are with young; that is, such of them as are in pangs of the new-birth, he will by no means over-drive. Well then may he have this name, of the Lord's righteous Servant. The next place is, Isai. xliii. 1, 2, 3, 4. 'Behold, my Servant
' whom I uphold, my elect in whom my soul delight-
' eth, I have put my Spirit upon him, he shall bring ' forth

' forth judgment to the Gentiles, he shall not cry, nor
 ' lift up, nor cause his voice to be heard in the street.
 ' A bruised reed shall he not break, and the smoking
 ' flax shall he not quench, he shall bring forth judg' ment unto truth, &c.' Is there not here a wonderful commendation that the Father gives to the Son, and that the gracious Master gives to the righteous Servant in his offices. He is his elect, choice Servant, in whom his soul delights, he does not cry, nor lift up his voice; he is busier about his work, than in making any noise about it; there is no frowardness in his way, but he is tender of souls that are like to a bruised reed, and smoking flax; he will not break the one, nor put out the other; where a soul is weak, or wounded, he will not break or bruise it, by a rough touch, or word; and where there are the least breathings of sincere desires after him, he will not quench, nor stifle them; though the task be great that he hath in hand, he fails not in going thro' with it; he desists not from it, nor is he discouraged under it, notwithstanding of all the wrath he hath to meet with in his way; therefore when the cup is in his hand, of which his holy human nature in some sense feared to drink, yet he takes it pleasantly, saying, But for this cause came I unto this hour, and prosecuted his work courageously and constantly, till he bring forth judgment to victory, and till he gain his point; this shews him to be a most choice and faithful Servant. A 3^d place is Isai. lii. 13. Behold my Servant shall deal prudently, &c. It cannot be imagined, what a spiritual, safe, and skilful way he hath in the saving of souls, and how wisely and prudently he pursues that work. There is a 4th place, Psal. lxxxix. 19, 20. I have laid help upon one that is mighty, I have exalted one chosen out of the people, I have found David my servant; the enemy shall not exact upon him, &c. He is so wise and powerful, that the devil shall gain no ground of him, but he shall gain ground of the devil, and defeat him; so that we come after only to gather the spoil. 'He is able to save to the uttermost' (as it is, Heb. vii. 26.) all that come unto God through him.' And near the close of that chapter it is said, 'Such an High-priest became us, who is holy, harmless, separate from sinners, made higher than the heavens.' These are his qualifications, he is an holy and harmless High-priest, a sweet and innocent Mediator, by whom there was never any hurt; his ill was never heard of, in the place where he was; he is undefiled, pure, and spotless, in the management of all the trust committed to him; there was never any thing done by him, of which it could be said, that it might have been done better; he is separate from sinners, and so another kind of High-priest than those who were before him; and all this, both as to God, so as he could say, and go to death with it, It is finished; and as to them that were entrusted to him, so as he could say, Of all that thou hast given me, I have lost none; he makes a full and faithful account of all committed to him.
 that

This is a plain, and yet a most useful truth; For use of it; behold here, and wonder at the way of grace, that not only gives a Mediator, but such a Mediator, who is faithful over the house of God. This is the very life of our consolation, that we have an able Mediator, a good Shepherd, a wise, prudent, tender one, and faithful; and indeed, it would well become us to wonder more, that the Lord, in the way of his grace, hath thus condescended; and it should exceedingly provoke us to be thankful on this account, that not only there is a way of grace, but such a way of grace found out and established, whereby we have such an high-priest, that manages all so well, and so skilfully. O have ye ever suitably prized this, that God hath given such a righteous and faithful Mediator and servant? I fear many suffer this most observable dispensation to pass without due observation; tho' tho' the Lord Jehovah speaks not of him, without commending him, yet wretched and ungrateful we, can, alas! speak of him, and hear him spoken of, with hearts very little affected. Believers may be ashamed of this, we think lamentably little of him, we esteem not suitably of him; when we see him, there is scarce any form or beauty seen in him wherefore we should desire him, we do in a great measure undervalue this way of the administration of grace, that should be in a special manner ravishing to us, that we are thereby brought under such conduct and management.

The 2d use is for believers comfort and encouragement. O! they are happy, that have committed themselves to him, as to a faithful shepherd and overseer: They may be sure that he is a notable and non-such overseer, as might be more fully cleared, if we did descend to the particulars of believers wants. Have they little grace? Is it scarce smoking? He is not a rigid task-master, like to the Egyptians; nay, nor like to the law, he quenches not the smoking flax. Are they staggering, because of apprehended or real weakness, and their hearts shaking as the trees in the wood, or rather like so many straws? They may with comfort give him the oversight of them; he will not break the bruised reed; he will bear the heaviest end of his own yoke. Have they a straying disposition? Are they like young wanton lambs leaping out from the rest? He will gather them with his arms; and when he takes a rougher way, yet grace shines still in it. Are they fainting and dying away? He will take them into his bosom; he will lead the blind; he bears the weak; he hath a way of supporting his own that is most tender. 'My grace,' says he to Paul, 'is sufficient for thee; my strength is made perfect in weakness.' Are there any of them with child (to speak so) or is their bringing forth quick and lively? He gently leads those that are with young, and will not suffer them to miscarry, in the bringing forth; he will 'not put new wine into old bottles, he 'will not cause to travel, and not make to bring 'forth.' The Lord hath given believers such a servant as they stood in need of, even a righteous servant, suited every way to their condition, who will not be behind, nor wanting, in looking to the least of the flock under his care and over-sight.

It serves therefore, in the 3^d place, to reprove the suspicions and jealousies that believers have often of Christ, who are disposed to say with the Psalmist, Psal. lxxvii. 'I said, my hope and my strength is perished from the Lord, will the Lord cast off for ever? Will he be favourable no more? Is his mercy clean gone for ever? Doth his promise fail for evermore? Hath he forgotten to be gracious? &c.' Nay, the jealousy and unbelief of some serious souls will sometimes talk at this rate, I may give it over, this work will never do with me. Beware, I beseech, you of this; for the language of it is, that our Lord is not a righteous servant. Let therefore your spirits be calmed, and pray the Lord to command a calm in them which are committed to him. Bespeak your souls, as David did his, Psal. xlii. 'Why art thou 'cast down, O my soul? And why art thou disquiet- 'ed in me? Trust in God,' for he is faithful, as if he had said, that hath the over-sight of me. And essay with Paul, to be in a frame to say, 'I know whom I 'have believed,' and so shall not be ashamed; 'I 'am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I 'have committed to him, against that day.' I know that he is such a Christ, that I commit myself to, who is skilful, tender, and faithful, in keeping that which is given him. And is not this a most comfortable ground of quietness, that our Mediator is such as cannot miscarry? And may it not shame believers, when either they adventure upon any thing themselves alone without him; or, when they commit themselves to him, and yet do not so entirely trust him, but entertain suspicions and jealousies of him, and think, because their spark is not a fire, or a flame, but smoaks only, that therefore it will die out, and be utterly quenched, as if he could not keep it alive, and increase it; and because they cannot guide themselves, think that they will utterly miscarry, as if he had not arms to carry them. Indeed presumption is to be abhorred, but such as are fled to him, should trust in him so far as to keep up their hearts in him, and should study to be chearful in him, and to walk up and down in his strength. This is certainly called for from you; therefore be content to be borne by him, where you cannot go alone yourselves.

Use 4. Is he such a righteous servant? Then let me say, are there any of you that need to fear, or to have the least hesitation, to commit yourselves to him? And should it not be a motive to press you to believe in him? For he says, John vi. 39, 40. that it is his commission and service to keep them, which are committed to him, and to raise them up at the last day, and to give them eternal life; and he is righteous and faithful in performing of it. If so, then commit the salvation of your souls to this righteous servant; 'commit your souls in well-doing to him, as unto a faithful Creator.' Never be at peace, nor at ease, till ye be under his charge and keeping; and though ye be as little lambs, weak, or heavy with young, it is the less matter; if ye be of his flock, ye shall be preserved. Is it possible that ye can be right if ye be from under his care and custody? Nay, it is utterly impossible, that ye can be secure, but under his care; and it is as impossible, but that ye must be safe, if ye be under his care and oversight. And therefore endeavour to be within the reach of it, and count yourselves happy, when you do sincerely trust in him, and believe that ye are in great hazard, when ye trust most to yourselves. What a shame will it be to many, who have heard that Christ was such a servant, and yet they would not accept of his service to bring them safe to heaven? Thus it stands with you, to whom he is spoken of in the gospel, ye shall be found either to have accepted or rejected him, according as by faith ye yield yourselves to him, or by unbelief ye refuse to accept him: Let not this word slip, as many have done. And the Lord himself make you wise, to make choice in time of the service of this righteous servant, for your justification and salvation!

S E R M O N L I.

Verse 11.—By his knowledge shall my righteous Servant justify many, &c.

IF we had such thoughts of the salvation of our own souls, as the Lord had, and still hath of the salvation of souls, we could not but be more seriously concerned about them, and more affected how we may have them saved. This work of the salvation of sinners before the world was (to speak with reverence) did concern the persons of the glorious Godhead; and was singled out, and made choice of, as an employment worthy of the Son of God, who was chosen for this very work, that by him many might be justified and saved; for the accomplishment of which, he became a servant: Must it not then be an excellent work, work, that none but he could be trusted with, who is Heir of all things, and by whom the world was made?

We shewed you the meaning of these words the last day, and observed two things from this designation, that our Lord has here. 1. That our Lord Jesus in the work of mediation, and of the redemption of sinners, was God's servant, not so much to denote his being inferior, as Mediator to the Father, and thereby to hold forth his being commissioned for this service, and the Lord accepting of him in it. 2. That our Lord Jesus did excellently discharge this trust committed to him. Therefore he is not only called a Servant, but my righteous Servant, as having most faithfully acquitted himself, and as being fully approved of, and accepted in the trust committed to him. When the Lord speaks so of Christ, it ought mightily to engage us much to love God, who hath given such a faithful Mediator and Servant, and also Jesus Christ, that condescended to take the trust of poor sinners salvation, and that doth so kindly discharge it. There are some things here, that may be briefly hinted at, and then we shall come more closely and particularly to the words.

1st then, Observe, That it is a privilege and prerogative to be God's servant; therefore it is mentioned here as a part of the Mediator's privilege. It is true, he was singularly and eminently a servant, even the Lord's choice servant, in whom his soul delighted, and does delight, above what any other can be capable of; yet to be a servant to God, to take direction from him, to do his will, to seek his honour, and give obedience to him in what he calleth for, is certainly a privilege, and a great one; yea, it is spoken of as a privilege of glorified saints in heaven, Revel. xxii. 3. His servants shall serve him; and if it be a privilege in heaven, we should think it so here on earth. And yet if the language of our hearts were known, there would be found a secret disdaining of, and repining at the service of God, and a saying on the matter, 'Let us break his bands asunder, and 'cast away his cords from us.' But know ye what you are doing? Even disclaiming and despising that which is your great privilege. All those that are in heaven, and all those who are in a right frame on earth, count it their privilege to be his servants: And we are commanded to pray, Thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven; or, be thou served on earth, as thou art in heaven. Therefore it ought to be accounted of, as a privilege, as a great and glorious privilege, to be his servants.

2dly, observe, That the Lord can tell exactly and infallibly, how every servant carries himself; who are idle and slothful, and who are good and faithful servants; who are righteous servants according to their measure, and who not. Will he take notice how Christ carries himself in his service and trust, and will he not take notice of others? Most certainly he will; and therefore, Matth. xxv. and Luke xix. he calls the servants to a reckoning, to whom the talents are given; and as they have made use of them, and improved them, or not, so doth he commend and reward them, or not. There are none of us, but have got one talent and trust or another, and no doubt, there will be much to reckon for. I am afraid, that when he calls us all to an account, though there will be some to whom it will be said, Well done, good and faithful servant, there will be many of whom it will be said, Thou evil and slothful servant; and the slothful servant will be found to be the ill servant, and amongst other aggravations of his guilt, this will be one, that he was unlike to Christ the righteous servant.

3dly, observe, That the right improvement and discharge of the trust committed to us, and of our service to God, is a commendable and honourable thing. It is recorded here to Christ's commendation, that he was a righteous Servant, even faithful over the house of God, in all things; and proportionably is the commendation of the ordinary under-servants, when they, in their places and stations perform their service honestly and faithfully, so as they may be accepted of God on his account. The day is coming, when every man's work will be rewarded; and as we sow, so shall we reap. In that day, if we had all the world, we would give it, to hear that word from Christ's mouth, Well done, thou good and faithful servant: But few will have that testimony. You think it much now, to have a name of fidelity amongst men, and to be esteemed such as keep your word, and will not break your promise (and it is good in so far, that it be so) but many such will be found to have broken many a word to God, and falsified many a promise. Think upon it, and lay it to heart, that it will be better to have a word of testimony from God in that day, and to have it said to you by him, faithful servant, thou improvedst well the little that I gave thee, it was laid out, and expended not so much to buy or build fine houses, as it was for me, and my honour; whatever place, station, capacity, or employment thou wast in, thou endeavouredst to do good in it; and when thou couldest not do my work, for my people, and for my honour, thou wast praying for them; and when thou hadst an opportunity to hear my word, thou didst not slight, nor let that slip. This, I say, will be better than a great name, and testimony from, and amongst men. But alas! we fear that it shall be said of many, you had many opportunities of getting, and doing good; but what use made ye of them? It had been better that ye had never heard them, it had been better that ye had been in want, than to have had all these riches; and to have had none, rather than to have had such and such a lucrative, or gainful place and employment which ye improved not for God. It is a fore matter, that we should preach, and you should hear these general truths of the gospel, from day to day, and that yet they do not sink into your hearts. You will not readily deny, that there is a day of reckoning coming; and that it will be a great favour to be recommended of him in that day; and yet how few do by their practice evidence, that they lay weight on it? It is very sad that religion should be so trifled with; many of you will come to church, and seem there, and in your other carriage, as if you were going to heaven, when in the mean time, you have few serious thoughts either of heaven or of hell. But in a day wherein ye shall stand trembling before his tribunal, and shall there receive the sentence of an evil and slothful servant, ye will find to your loss, that these truths were of great moment, though now you take but little notice of them.

4thly, In general observe, That it is only proper and peculiar to our Lord Jesus to be God's approved servant, so as to be without all ground of reproof in the discharge of his duty and trust; and indeed there is no righteous servant, in this sense, but he only, who, according to the very rigour of the law, was such; the law could not charge him with any the least violation of it, or want of conformity unto it; for he fulfilled all righteousness. We spake to this on verse 9. and shall not now insist on it; only it is a fore matter, that this truth should be called in question, and called an untruth in these days; and that men should say, that this designation and title is not proper to Christ, but that it is common to all true Christians, as if they were all free from sin; and that not by the imputation of Christ's righteousness to them, but by their own doing of righteousness. Lord save us! what an high injury is this to the Son of God? and what gross ignorance is here of the corruption of man's nature, which in the best and holiest of meer men, is never in this life finally expelled, as the scriptures of the Old and New Testament most convincingly vincingly clear ; and what an injuring is this of the truth of God, which holds forth our Lord Jesus, as chosen to be, and who is designed by this name, The Lord's righteous Servant? Now, if there were any more properly so called, we could not say that it were meant of him. But it is not very profitable to insist in speaking of these dotages and fooleries.

But to come more particularly to the benefits that flow from, and come by this righteous Servant, and from the service intrusted to him, and so faithfully managed and discharged by him, By his knowledge, saith Jehovah, he shall justify many; that is, his service is to absolve sinners, and set them free from the guilt of sin, and from the curse that naturally they are under and liable to.

Looking on these words in the connexion with the former, we shall observe three or four things, e'er we come to the more close and particular consideration of them in themselves.

The 1st of which is this ; that the justifying of many sinners, even of all the elect, is the special trust committed by Jehovah, to the Mediator ; it is in this especially wherein his service consists. Would ye then know, what is the employment of this righteous servant? It is even this, He shall justify many; he shall procure their absolution from the guilt of sin, and from the curse of God, and shall set them free from the judgment which the law hath against them, whereby they are obliged to the curse, for disobedience thereunto. This we may consider, 1. As it relates to God ; and so it imports, that the justification of sinners is very acceptable to him ; for it is that for which he hath given a commission to the Mediator ; and what he hath commissioned him with, the performance of it must needs be acceptable to him : Therefore, that which is here called the Lord's service, is called the Lord's pleasure, verse 10. to wit, to see a poor sinner brought in by the Mediator, and on the

account of his satisfaction justified ; he is pleased with it, and takes it well. 2. It may be considered as it has respect to the Mediator ; and so it shews the Mediator's design and work ; it is that wherein he is employed, even to have elect sinners brought from under the curse of God, and freely justified through himself. So that if ye would know what is the sum, and effect of Christ's errand, and work in the world, here it is, He came to save sinners ; as it is, 1 Tim. i. 15. He came to seek and to save that which was lost ; to bring home the lost sheep on his shoulder, to seek and to find the lost goat, and to reclaim prodigals ; as it is, Luke xv. this is his meat and his drink, his work and business ; as himself says, John iv. 34. My meat is to do the will of him that sent me, and to finish his work. And Luke ii. Know ye not that I must be about my Father's business ? Which is to rescue poor sinners from the devil, and to engage them to God, that their sins may be pardoned. 3. It imports the Mediator's meetness for this service, that he is furnished, fitted, and qualified for, as well as concerned with the justifying of sinners, and setting them free before the throne of God. He hath all fulness in him to pay their debt ; therefore, Rev. iii. 19. he bids sinners come and buy of him eye-salve, gold, and white raiment ; he hath eye-salve for the blind, gold to enrich the poor, garments for the naked ; and, in a word, every thing that is needful for sinners. It is comfortable to hear that Christ is a servant ; but to hear that this is his service, to justify sinners, and that he is so well fitted for it, makes it so much the more comfortable : And were we suitably sensible of sin, and did we thoroughly believe this truth, our hearts would laugh within us, as Abraham's once did, to know that this was given to Christ in commission, to justify sinners ; and that he is so well fitted for this undertaking, that he is commissioned about, and employed in ; especially now, when he is so busy about his work and employment ;

ployment; for though he be ascended on high; yet he hath received gifts for, and given them to men, even for the rebellious, that God the Lord might dwell among them, as it is, Psal: lxxviii. compared with, Eph. iv. This is the end of the ministry and ordinances, even to further this work of the justification of sinners, that by acknowledging, and making use of Christ, this work may be brought about; and this effect made to follow; this is the end of fast-days and sacramental-opportunities, even to engage perishing sinners to come and treat with him about the concerns of their souls. These are special reasons for putting him to exercise his office in justifying them; and this day this scripture is fulfilled in your ears, and you should entertain it in your hearts, that our Lord Jesus is pursuing his commission, and performing his service; keeping up the treaty; and inviting and persuading sinners to come to him; that the pleasure of the Lord may prosper in his hand. And therefore know assuredly, that this is it, that Christ is employed in; and concerned about, even to have sinners freed from the guilt of sin, and from wrath by his righteousness. It is not only, nor mainly to have them brought to the church, and to his supper; or to have them made formal; and to abstain from cursing, swearing, and profanity, (though these will follow of course) but it is to have them brought to himself; and justified. And we have these two words to say to you further on this matter; 1. There is here good ground of encouragement to a poor soul, that would fain make use of Christ for pardon of sin. This is even it that Christ is entrusted with; it is for this end that he is commissioned of the Father; and will he not, think ye, do that which he is entrusted with, and for which he is mainly sent; This is, saith he, John vi. 39. the will of him that sent me, that every one that seeth the Son, and believeth on him, should have everlasting life; and that I should raise him up at the last day: which is in sum, that by his knowledge many shall be justified. And it is added, For he shall bear their iniquities, to anticipate and answer an objection: for a sensible sinner might say, how can I be justified, that have so many sins? Here is a solution of that doubt, He shall satisfy for them. All these words are full of consolation, being the heart and life of the gospel, as any thing that comes so near to Christ's commission, and unfolds so much of it, is. A 2^d, word is this, that ye mistake Christ's errand, work, and service very far, who think to content him with this; who would give him the name of a Saviour, and yet would be saving of yourselves without him; who would compliment him, as it were with fair pretensions, but will have none of his physic, or of his cures, nor will renounce your own righteousness, and make use of his for your justification. This shews one of these four things, either that he is not commissioned, and trusted for this end; or that he is not meet for that trust; or, that he is not faithful in it; or else that ye can do the work without him, and that there is no need of his office; and which of all these can abide the trial before God? And yet it shall be upon one of these that ye shall be found to have despised Christ, and to have refused to permit him, (so far as ye could hinder, and obstruct) to do his Father's business; and if ye refuse him, there will be a most dreadful reckoning betwixt God and you.

2^{dly}, observe, That this particular trust concerning the justifying of sinners, our Lord Jesus doth most righteously, diligently, skilfully, tenderly and faithfully discharge. It was his Father's will that he should be baptised, and fulfil all righteousness; and more especially that he should justify many. In this he is very skilful, and faithful, and it is on this account he is called the good Shepherd, and that he is said to lay down his life for his sheep; that he is called a faithful High Priest, and is said to be one that is able to save

*to the uttermost those that come unto God through him; and that he is holy, harmless, and separate from sinners, fit to make peace betwixt God and sinners, another sort of priest than Aaron was, or any that were before him; he is in a word, such an High Priest as became us, and as we stood in need of, who needed not to offer sacrifice for his own sins, he had no more to do, but to satisfy for us. The prophet Isaiah, chap. xl. 11. tells how tender he is in bringing souls to heaven, he gathers the lambs with his arms, he carries them in his bosom, and gently leads those that are with young: And chap. xlii. 3. that a bruised reed he will not break, and the smoking flax he will not quench. And it is said, 1 John ii. If any man sin, we have an Advocate with the Father, and who is he? Jesus Christ, the righteous; righteous in the faithful managing of his trust, by making sinners peace with God. Would ye know then, in what respects, or, on what account it is, that Christ is called a righteous Servant? We answer, in these respects. 1. Though we have transgressed and broken the law, yet he hath not, and God will not frown on him. 2. In this respect, that he pleads for no sinners pardon, but he can fully pay their debt, and hath done it; if he seek one thing from God, he yields in another, and according to the covenant of redemption exactly proceeds; for he is a propitiation, he seeks nothing but he pays for it, and wrongs not him in the least who hath trusted him; the Lord Jehovah is not a loser, but hath his honour restored by him. 3. In respect of his keeping faith to the persons that have need of him, for whom he hath undertaken; he is not only faithful to the master, but to the children and servants; he owns and acknowledges them, when they come to him under their necessities; he is to them every way suitable and answerable to his place and trust, in doing good to sinners.*

Use. Had we sensible sinners to speak to, sinners

groaning under a body of death, with pricked hearts crying out, what shall we do for the wrongs that we have done to God? Sinners under a holy fear, least they spoil and mar the agreement, and so hazard their own souls, had we, (I say) such sinners, to speak to; there is good news here to them. The trust of saving souls is committed to a faithful shepherd, it is not committed to yourselves, for if so, it had been a doleful trust, but it is committed to him, that hath the sheep by name given to him, to be kept by him, and he will not suffer them finally to miscarry; and what more would ye have? A salvation, and a price is much, but it is more to have a Saviour, to make the application of his purchase, a bishop of souls to justify, and carry sinners through, to make it sure before God, and to make it good to them; the sinner may rest satisfied, which in the sense of sin hath betaken himself to Christ to be justified by his righteousness, and for obtaining of pardon, and for making the application of what by his sufferings he hath purchased. We can but say little to this purpose to you, who care not for your souls, and are not sensible of your sin, for he came to save sinners; and if any such do trust him with the salvation of their souls, he is faithful, and will not suffer them to perish.

3dly, From comparing these words, by his knowledge he shall justify many, with the former, he shall see of the travel of his soul, and shall be satisfied; we observe, that our Lord Jesus is never satisfied with sinners, nor content, till he be employed by them in this piece of service, even to justify them by his knowledge, or by faith in him; he has not satisfaction for the travel of his soul till this be, and this is it which satisfies him: He cares not for compliments, great professions of respect of religion, and Hosanna's without this: He wept over Jerusalem, notwithstanding of those, because of the want of this: He cares not for Martha's cumbersome service, but is content with Mary's sitting down to hear and receive his word; if he has not this employment, no other thing will content him, as we may see in those three parables, Luke xv. When the lost sheep is missing, he is not satisfied till it be brought home; the making of the house clean will not please him, if the lost piece of money be not found; the finding whereof occasions those words, Come and rejoice with me. And when the prodigal returns, then, and not till then, are uttered these joyful words: This my son was dead, and is alive; he was lost, and is found. Then comes the mirth, and all the minstrels employed. Would ye lay the hair of your head under Christ's feet? Would ye give him thousands of rams, and rivers of oil, and the first-born of your bodies, for the sin of your souls? All these will not please him, if ye have not yourselves justified by his knowledge, nothing will content and satisfy him but that. The reasons are, 1. Because he has not his work intrusted to him, on any other terms; (if I may speak so) for as the Father delights to see the work which he hath trusted him with, prospering, so doth he. 2. Because he has not the native trust and honour of his office, till he has this, but counts himself to be like to an ambassador, who comes to court a wife for the king his master, who is well entertained, but receives a refusal of what he came for. It was the disciples commendation, John xvii. That they received his word; and though all other things could be, if this be not, he never has true respect. 3. Because without this people can never love Christ; for it is this benefit of justification, and pardon of sin, that much engages to love and praise him: Because (the redeemed say and sing, Rev. v. ix.) thou hast redeemed us to God by thy blood; thou art worthy to receive all praise, dominion, power, and glory, It is impossible that they can have a suitable esteem of him, and love to him, who are not justified by him; and therefore they that believe not on him to justification, are called despisers of him, and treaders of the blood of the covenant under foot; and they fall under that sad complaint which is made, John i. 11. 'He came unto his own, and his own received him not; he was in the world and the world was made by him, and the world knew him not.' There is then a necessity laid upon you, either to give him employment in this, or to lie under his displeasure, and to be made accountable for standing in the way, so far as ye could, of his satisfaction. The Lord hath so ordered the way of his grace, that not only doth he invite and allure sinners, but also he lays strong bonds on them for their good, and leaves it not indifferent to them, to make use of Christ, or not, for their justification; but they must either take this way, or have God and the Mediator to be their enemies, in the greatest measure, and in the highest degree; chuse you then, whether ye will satisfy Christ Jesus or not? If you say, how shall he be satisfied? the answer is, even by your betaking of yourselves to him, and by improving his righteousness, for your peace with God, and for your justification before him; humbly pleading guilty at the bar of justice, and begging pardon, and acceptance on the account of his satisfaction, and by faith discovering your discharge and absolution, that so the application of his purchase being obtained, the conscience may be quieted thereby. And do ye think this a matter to differ with Christ about? That he would have you justified, and that ye will not; that he would have you washed in his blood from your sins, and that you had rather lie still in them; Think ye this reasonable? And yet thus it stands with you, and we declare it to you in his name, that Christ and you shall never be friends, except on these terms; that ye acknowledge your sins and natural enmity against God, and welcome heartily the news of a Mediator, and embrace his righteousness, trampling your own under your feet, as to all expectation of justification by it; that in a word, you do by faith take hold of the offer of salvation through him in the gospel, resigning yourselves absolutely to him, and founding your humble plea before God there-upon. This is the shield of faith that quenches the fiery darts of the devil, and that which gives wings to the soul, to flee to heaven upon; and we know well this is no unfriendly message, nor evil bargain, and you may have it of him; he is indeed a wise and very skilful manager of souls, that commit themselves unto him. Why do you not then in his own way, hazard your souls on him? Were sinners hazard known, and what solid confidence they may have, in putting their souls in Christ's hand, they would be thronging in upon him, to lay hold on his offer, which is like a banner displayed, and spread out in this word of the gospel, to which every one may put his hand. This is the very sum of the gospel, to pray you to be reconciled to God, to admit of the Mediator and to give him a commission, (to speak with reverence) or rather to entreat him to make your peace, that is, to commit the saving of your souls to him, that if justice were pursuing you, ye might be found in him, not having your own righteousness, but his, and in him have one answer to all accusations, not thinking yourselves the less sure, that you have given up your own righteousness, and betaken yourselves to his, who knows but souls might get good at such a time, if this were made use of, and believed. O! So faithful as he is, he dare give his word and seal, that he will take care of you; and this is his end in the word and sacraments, that sinners might be brought to trust in him, in giving him the employment to justify them; that they being in themselves poor, may come to him for gold to enrich them; being naked, may come to him for garments to cloath them; being ungodly, may come to him that he may

may justify them. But alas, people are for the most part senseless and regardless of their sin and misery, and therefore he has no employment from them; many are very brave and secure here, and have no legal bar on them to keep them from the sacrament of the Lord's supper, who yet have sleepy and senseless souls, and are ruining and destroying themselves. This we assure you is the condition of many of you, who never made a right use of Christ, and of his righteousness, and yet will boast of your faith, and of your good heart to God. Away with your old presumptuous faith, acknowledge your unbelief and presumption; say not ignorantly, that ye will do as ye can, though ye cannot do as ye would; you are unsound at the heart, mistaken about your spiritual state, and know that the devil by a deceitful heart is speaking out of you such language, for its enemies we are commissioned to reconcile, and it is lost sinners that Christ came to seek and save; and ye see not yourselves to be such; and therefore you care not for such offers of grace: But ah! many of you, if grace prevent not, will have a cold welcome from Christ at that day, and will be made sadly to smart, for the slighting of many precious opportunities, which God did put into your hands, the which to improve you had no hearts.

ISAIAH LIII. Verse 11.

THERE hath been much spoken from this sweet scripture of our Lord Jesus his sufferings, and somewhat also of the promises made to him, that his sufferings should not be for nought. In these words, we have a compendious explication of the effects that flow from them, by which he shall be satisfied for them all, which you may understand in these four. 1. The great benefit itself, that is held forth here, and that is justification. 2. Those to whom it shall come it is many, so that his having a seed, spoken of, verse 10. is expounded here by this, that many shall be justified. 3. The way how this is derived to them, by his knowledge, which we shewed, is to be understood of faith in him. 4. The ground from which this flows, and on which it is built, and that confirms it; for he shall bear their iniquities; and as it is in the following verse, he bare the sin of many, and therefore they must be justified; it being but reason, that those many, whose iniquities he bears, and whose debt of sin he pays, should be justified.

We may speak more particularly to the explication of each of these as we come to them. We shall then first expound and give the meaning of this word justification, or to justify, ere we come to the doctrine, because it will serve to clear it, and will make way for it; and so much the rather as it is the very hinge of the gospel, and that on which our salvation depends, though yet but very little, and very ill understood, there being many that cannot tell what it is, though there be not many words more frequently mentioned in the scripture, and though it be that whereby a person is translated from the state of enmity, into the state of friendship with God.

As for this word, to justify, or justification then, there are three senses given of it; two whereof are erroneous, and the last only is according to the mind of the spirit of God, speaking in the scripture, which we shall clear and confirm.

1. Some take this word physically, as if it were to make just, by the infusing of habitual grace, or by a physical or real change; and so taken, it is the same with that which we call sanctification, but in all the scripture, we know not one place where necessarily the word is so to be understood, although this acceptance of the word, is the great rise of the Popish error, in that controversy concerning justification. 2dly, Others take it for God's revealing, manifesting, or declaring the way, how a guilty person comes to be just; and so to justify, is for ministers to teach the way to people, how they may live holily; as it is said, Dan. xii. 3. They that turn many to righteousness, &c. by which sense, some wickedly and blasphemously detract from Christ's satisfaction, as if his justifying were no more, but a teaching of sinners the way how to be justified, to wit, by living holily and justly. But the words that follow in the text, for he shall bear their iniquities, destroy that exposition; for it is by Christ's bearing the punishment of the elects iniquities, and for paying of their debt, that they come to be justified; therefore the one is given for a reason of the other. 3dly, Considering the word according to the meaning of it in scripture, we take it for a legal, or court word, borrowed from men's courts, wherein a person arraigned for such a crime, is either condemned or absolved;

absolved; and when he is absolved, and declared to be acquitted or made free from that which is laid to his charge, he is said to be justified; so it is before God, and in his court: Justification is the freeing of a sinner from the charge that the law giveth in against him, and the absolving and declaring of him to be free from the guilt of sin, and from the punishment thereof, which by the sentence of the law is due to him. The former two senses are for making of a man to be inherently holy, or without a fault, which is, as if a guilty man, or a criminal, being arraigned before a civil court of judicature, were declared to be innocent. But the true meaning of the words sets forth a man arraigned before God's tribunal, and charged with guilt, and found faulty, but absolved, and acquitted, not because he wants sin, but because his debt is payed, and his sins satisfied for by a surety; even as a man that is called before a civil court, for such a sum of money, and is found liable to the debt; but his surety coming in, and paying the debt for him, there is both in reason and law just ground, why that man should be absolved, and declared free of the debt: So is it here, Christ Jesus taking on and satisfying for the debt of the elect, and procuring absolution for them, for whom he hath payed the price, there is reason, and ground in law, that they should be justified and absolved: all these opinions agree in these two. 1. That men naturally have sin, and that they must account for it. 2. That this justification, whatever it be, where it is, doth fully absolve and acquit the sinner, and makes him free of sin, as to the guilt, the punishments and consequents of it, death and the curse, as if he had never had sin: But the difference lieth here, that this last acceptation of the word, absolves a man, though he have sin in himself, by the interposing of a surety, who pays his debt, and procures the sentence of absolution to him. And in this sense, justification is, as if a man were standing at the bar of God's tribunal guilty, and having a witness of his guilt in himself, and God, out of respect to the Mediator, his satisfaction, and payment of his debt, which he hath laid hold upon by faith, does pronounce that sinful person to be free, absolved, and acquitted from the guilt and punishment of sin, and doth accordingly absolve him upon that account: So then justification is not to be considered, as God's creating and infusing of gracious habits in us, but the declaring of us to be free, and acquitted from the guilt of sin, upon the account of Christ's satisfying for our debt.

This we shall find to be very clear, if we consider how the word is taken, both in the Old and New Testament, as namely, Isa. v. 23. 'Woe unto them that justify the wicked for a reward, and take away the righteousness of the righteous from him.' And Prov. xvii. 15. 'He that justifieth the wicked, and he that condemneth the just, even they both are abomination to the Lord.' Where the plain meaning of the word can be no other than this, that when a judge pronounces a man to be just, although he be unjust, it is a wicked thing which the Lord abhors. And so, Psal. li. 4. That thou mightest be justified when thou speakest, that is, that thou mightest be declared to be so: And, Matt. xi. 19. Wisdom is justified of her children. 2. We will find this meaning of the word to be clear, if we consider justification, as distinguished from sanctification; for in that Popish sense, they are both made one and the same; but they are distinguished in scripture, as 1 Cor. vi. 11. Such were some of you, but ye are washed, but ye are sanctified, but ye are justified; where he looks on these two benefits of justification and sanctification as distinct, and distinguished the one of them from the other. Now sanctification being the grace that renews our nature, and makes an inward spiritual change, justification must needs be that act of God's grace, that takes away the

guilt of sin, and makes the sinners to be friends with God, through Christ's righteousness; and so is a relative change of their state. 3. It will be clear, if we consider to what it is opposed in scripture, it is not opposed to sinning, as sanctification is, but to these two. 1. To the charging of a sinner with somewhat unto condemnation: And 2. To the act of condemning. Now the opposite to condemnation, is absolution, as is clear, Rom. viii. 33. Who shall lay any thing to the charge of God's elect? It is God that justifies, who shall condemn? &c. God's justifying is put in as opposite to the charging of the elect, and to the condemning of them, therefore none of these can be; and so justification there has both respect to the part of an advocate pleading, and declaring a man to be free, and to the part of a judge pronouncing him to be absolved and justified, which well agrees to our Lord Jesus, who justifies his people both ways. 4. It may also be cleared from parallel scriptures, where justifying is called reconciling; as 2 Cor. v. 18, 19, 20. 'God was in Christ reconciling the world to himself, not imputing their trespasses unto them, and hath committed to us,' &c. and how that comes to pass, is told in the last verse, 'For he made him to be sin for us, who knew no sin, that we might be made the righteousness of God in him:' So that to be made the righteousness of God, is to be justified; and to be justified, is to be made friends with, or to be reconciled to God; and that not by working a moral change, but upon the account of Christ's satisfaction, bringing us into friendship with God; so, Eph. i. 6. where to be justified is expounded, to be made accepted in the beloved. And what else is that, but to be in good terms with God, to have him passing by all quarrels, as having nothing to say against us, but accepting us through Christ as righteous. So, Acts xiii. 38, 39. 'Be it known unto you, that through this man is preached unto you forgiveness of sins, and by him

‘ all that believe, are justified from all things, from ‘ which you could not be justified by the law of ‘ Moses.’ A place that clearly holds forth that all the elect are naturally chargeable by the law, as being guilty of the breach thereof, and that they cannot be absolved from it by ought in themselves; so they are through faith in Jesus Christ freed from it: As if the Lord had said, ye are freed from the sentence of the law, because, through Christ is preached unto you remission of sins, and there is a way found out for your absolution, from the guilt of sin, who believe, and from all the consequents of it. 5. It is clear from the text, because it is such a justifying, as hath in it Christ’s being sentenced in our room, as the cause of it; now he was sentenced in our room, not by having sin infused in him, which were blasphemous to think,
 but by having our sin imputed to him; and therefore our justification must be our absolution, by having his righteousness imputed to us, as is clear throughout this chapter; therefore it is said, ‘ He hath carried ‘ our sorrows, and borne our grief. He was wound‘ ed for our transgressions, he was bruised for our ‘ iniquities, by his stripes we are healed, he laid on ‘ him the iniquities of us all:’ And in these words,
 ‘ By his knowledge shall my righteous Servant justify ‘ many; for he shall bear their iniquities.’ It is a justification that comes to us by Christ’s taking on him our debt; and this we cannot imagine to be other-ways, but by a legal change, he coming as a surety in our room, and we having absolution, by virtue of his satisfaction, so that the meaning of the words in short is, as if the prophet had said, would ye know what ye have by Christ’s sufferings? Even this, to wit, that many, as many as whose iniquities he bore, and satisfied for, shall be acquitted, and absolved from the guilt and punishment of their sin, through his satisfaction;
 they shall be freed from the sentence and curse of the law, which they deserved, and shall be declared righ-

teous through the righteousness of their surety, which they have laid hold upon by faith.

Hence observe, 1. That all men and women, even the elect themselves, are by nature liable to an arraignment before the judgment-seat of God; that they are justified supposes a bringing of them, as it were, before his tribunal, e'er they can be justified, and have the sentence of absolution passed in their favour. The apostle takes this for granted, Rom. xiv. 10. We shall all stand before the judgment-seat of Christ: And Heb. ix. 29. It is appointed for all men once to die, and after that comes the judgment. There is a solemn decree past, that all men shall die, so every man shall be brought to a reckoning and judgment. And Acts xvii. 31. He hath appointed a day in which he shall judge the world in righteousness, &c. and that cannot be reversed. See 2 Cor. v. 10. For we must all appear before the judgment-seat of Christ; we must, there is an unavoidable necessity, for it. For further clearing and confirming of this, you should know, that there are three courts, that especially the hearers of the gospel are liable unto, and which we should prepare for; they are all put together, Rom. ii. 12, 15, 16. There is, 1. The court of the word, wherein God keeps a justice-seat, or tribunal, condemning the wicked, and absolving the righteous: As Christ says John xii. The word which I speak shall judge you in the last day: And this is it that the apostle hath in that forecited place, Rom. ii. 12. As many as have sinned in the law, shall be judged by the-law. A 2d court is the court of conscience; and this is more broad and extensive, reaching all men without, as well as within the church; wherein God hath his own way of accusing and passing sentence upon sinners; as verse 14, 15. When the Gentiles who have not the law, do by nature the things contained in the law; these having not a law, are a law unto themselves, which shew the work of the law written in their hearts; their conscience also bearing bearing witness, and their thoughts the mean while accusing, or else excusing one another. A 3d court or judgment-seat, is that which is more discernible, distinct and terrible, and that is the judgment-seat of God, when he shall convene all and every one before himself immediately, and shall judge and pass sentence upon them; whether this be done to a particular person, or to the whole world, as verse 16. In that day when God shall judge the secrets of men by Jesus Christ, according to my gospel.

Use. We would have you confirmed in the faith of this truth, that there are none of us, but we are liable to all these courts; and therefore ye should live so, as you may be in a posture fit for this appearing; many of us, alas, live as if we were never to be called to an account, and as if there were no tribunal that we were to appear before.

2dly, Observe, That all men and women, even the elect themselves are naturally, and as in themselves obnoxious to condemnation, and liable to the sentence of it before God's tribunal; for Jesus Christ his justifying of them, and procuring their absolution implies thus much, that they as considered in themselves are liable to, and cannot receive another sentence than that of condemnation. It says that not only they have sinned, but that because of their sin, they are liable and obnoxious to condemnation; that for their sin God's curse is due to them, John iii. 18, 36. He that believes not is condemned already; and he that believeth not shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him. The sentence is standing against him unrepealed, even that sentence which we have, Gal. iii. 10. Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things written in the book of the law to do them. The sinner comes no sooner to look to the court of the word, nor to the court of his own conscience, but that sentence is laid before him; and when he comes before God, he can expect no other thing, the Lord proceeding proceeding according to the rule of the word. So Rom. iii 19. 'We know that whatever thing the law saith, it saith to them who are under the law, that every mouth may be stopped, and all the world may become guilty before God;' which supposeth a lialleness to his curse, and a subjection to the judgment of God, as the word is rendered in the margin; there are none, as considered in their natural condition, who have a word to say against it. To clear it a little, you should consider two things in the law, as it is a covenant of works, under which all men are by nature. 1. The directive, or commanding part of it, that carves out man's duty, and so is the rule of righteousness to men and women; and what is not conform to the commands and directions of it, is sin, and hath guilt with it. This is most certain, that the law, even as to believers, is a rule of righteousness, according to which they are to walk. 2. There is in it the sentence of a curse, whereby the person that sins, is not only declared to be guilty, but liable to God's wrath and curse. This may be separated from the former. The law was, no doubt, a law of righteousness to man in his innocency, and is so to the believer still, who is absolved from the curse of it; but yet the believer, as considered in his natural condition, is not only guilty, but stated under the curse; and this is the meaning of the doctrine, that naturally not only are all men sinful, but they are stated under the curse of God. The law says on the matter; man and woman, thou hast not abiden in what is written, and therefore thou must die, thou art liable to the curse, which will fall, if it be not prevented. If there were any need of reasons to prove this, they are not wanting; it is so, 1st, That the Lord may humble all flesh, as the apostle says, Rom. iii. 19. That every mouth may be stopped, and that all the world may become guilty before God. It is so ordered that his grace may shine the more conspicuously ; when the person is found guilty, and obnoxious to the curse by the law, grace shews itself to be wonderful in pulling the sinner from under the lash of the law. As Isaac was set free, and a sacrifice was accepted in his room ; so the sinner is set free, and the Mediator in his satisfaction, is accepted in his room. To this purpose it is said, Rom. xi. 32. God hath concluded them all in unbelief, that he might have mercy on all ; not that he shews mercy on all that are in unbelief ; but this is the meaning, that it might be mercy to all that should have benefit by the Mediator, and mercy alone to the elect, both Jews and Gentiles. It is on this ground, that Eph. ii. 3. the apostle not only saith, Ye were dead in sins and trespasses ; but also turning it on himself, he adds, And we are all the children of wrath, even as others, liable by sin to the curse of God, if it had not been graciously prevented.

Use 1. Let all of us take a view here of our natural condition ; and indeed, it were the better for us that we were the more frequently viewing it. What is it, will you say ? It is even this, That you are liable to appearing before God's justice-seat ; ye are all guilty, and by the sentence of the law, under God's curse, and condemned already ; because God hath said, He that sins shall die. We are, I say, all thus by nature.

Use 2. It gives a great commendation to the grace of God in Christ Jesus, it makes grace wonderfully glorious, in that it takes the sinner at such a pinch. We shall not dispute here, nor is it needful, nor edifying, whether God might have forgiven sin freely, without any intervenient satisfaction to his justice, seeing he hath declared his mind, concerning that in his word, Ex. xxiii. 7. I will not justify the wicked, And, That will by no means clear the guilty, and Gen. iii. The day thou eatest, or sinnest, thou shalt surely die. This is it that puts a man, as considered in his natural condition, to be as it were in hell, while he is on earth, and puts him in such a near capacity to the wrath of God, if we may so speak; and to the actual undergoing of it, that there needs no more but the blowing out of the breath to put him in the pit; yea, while he is living, he is a prisoner in chains, till the day of execution comes, if grace reprieve him not; ye should think much of grace, O! how very much! If ye were seriously comparing these two together, to be so near hell, and yet as it were, to have a ladder set up for you to ascend to heaven by, and in such a way, as by Christ's becoming a curse. They will certainly never esteem much of the grace of God, and of the love of Christ, they will never think much of their own hazard, nor will they ever in earnest make use of Christ's righteousness, who have not some quick and lively impression, and sense of this their condition by nature; and therefore, when ever you go to read, to hear, to pray, or to meditate, account yourselves, as naturally arrested before the court of God, and obnoxious to his wrath; this would allay your pride, and make Christ's offers in the gospel lovely to you.

Use 3. This shews, that those who have any good of Christ, are much in Christ's debt, and have in themselves no cause to boast of it. If this be true, even of the elect, that they are all once under the sentence of condemnation, else they could not be justified, and absolved by Christ; you that think yourselves to be something, what have you to boast of? Who hath made you to differ, and what have ye, but what you have received? It becomes you well, therefore, to be humble, and to put a high value upon Christ, as the apostle doth on the same consideration, Gal. ii. 20. when he says, Who loved me, and gave himself for me; that makes him relish sweetly to the believer; and this is the ground of his triumph, Rom. viii. 33, 34. 'Who shall lay any thing to the charge of God's elect? It is God that justifieth, who is he that condemneth? It is Christ that died, yea, rather that is risen again,' &c. This way of justification makes Christ's death wondrous lovely, and it is on this that the song of the redeemed is founded, Rev. i. 5. 'Unto him that loved us, and washed us from our sins, in his own blood, and hath made us kings and priests unto God, and his Father, to him be glory, and dominion for ever and ever, Amen.' And that new song, Rev. v. 9, 10. 'Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof, for thou wast slain and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood,' &c. It is an evil sign, when people can talk at a high rate of their hope of being justified, when, in the mean time, they have so little estimation of Christ, and their hearts are so little warmed with love to him, who is so lovely to believers; and when they can so confidently make application of his purchase to themselves, and yet cannot tell when their hearts were ever in the least measure ravished with the consideration of Christ's love, neither did it ever relish to them, nor were their hearts ever in the least engaged to him, on that consideration.

Use 4. All of you, who are lying in this natural condition, and know not what your hazard is, who are living in your wickedness, or at best, in your hypocrisy, civility, formality, not regenerate, or born again, but have still the same faith, and love that ye were born with, and no other; what is your posture? You are not in Christ, but lying naked, obnoxious to the wrath and curse of God, condemned already; and what if your breath go out in this doleful condition? What if a palsy or apoplexy overtake you suddenly? What if a stone fall upon you, e'er you go home out of this place? There is even but that much betwixt you and hell; ye are liable to be arrested before the court of God's justice; and how will it be with you when you come there? And when it shall be said, that such a person hath broken the law, and therefore away with him; for he judgeth according to mens works; are there none of you afraid of this? Do ye believe it to be a truth? O! that ye did, who are lying contentedly, and secure in your natural condition, and it does not trouble you; will ye yet lie still contentedly in this dreadful state? Is it possible that ye can be well in this condition? Tho' ye should heap up riches as the sand, ye cannot look into the Bible, nor into your own heart, but it curses you; ye cannot look to the bar of God's justice; but the sentence meets you, Depart from me, ye cursed. This is the truth of God, and if there be any here lying still in black nature (and we are not sure that all are renewed) think then upon your case. O! that ye saw your posture. The hand-writing coming forth on the wall did not so affright Belshazzar, as the curse would affright you, if it were believed. And 2dly, If this be your natural condition, and if you believe it to be truly so, we would expostulate with you, and even wonder, 1. How comes it to pass, that so many of you lie still in your natural condition, and endeavour not a change of your state? It will be wondered at by angels, and by all the elect, yea, and even by the reprobate, that never heard of Christ, that so many heard the gospel, and had the offer of Christ, and yet did not stir up themselves to make use of him. Is it not a wonder that people can sleep secure under the curse of God, and bless themselves, till their iniquities be found to be hateful? To be in this condition, and to sleep quietly under it, will have a doleful wakening. 2. How is it that so few take pains to try how it is with them? If any of you lay under an execution of an hundred pound, ye would not be secure, till ye knew that ye were freed from it; And if it be true, that this is your condition by nature, to be under the standing sentence of the law, and the curse of God, how is it you never try whether you are delivered from that condition? I ask the most prophane men among you, were ye never under this sentence? If ye say, not; the word of God will stand up against you, and say to you, that ye are liars ; and if ye be under it, is it not hazardous to be so ? But I fear, that many of you dream, that the wrath of God wears away as ye grow up. 3. Do you never think of coming to judgment, and of God's proceeding in judgment against you ? Think ye not that ye shall die, and after death come to judgment, according to the general appointment to pass upon all men ? How comes it to be, that ye are not thinking on it, and what will be the Judge's procedure towards you ? He will judge you according to this word, and all that are out of Christ, and not justified by him, will be cast into the pit of hell : There is no new sentence to be past, or to be executed upon you, but that which was standing over your head before. 4. Do you know how long he may treat with you, or how long ye may be in a capacity to have your state changed ? Are there not many taken suddenly away, of whose state we shall not judge, but may it not be so with you ? Why are ye then so secure, and why decline ye the word, and refuse to let it search you, while ye know not whether the curse be removed, and whether the sentence be changed, or recalled ? Some of you perhaps will say, The Lord knows that, it is not for us to know ; and that is saying, that ye do never so much as essay to know, and to arrive at clearness about your state. Others of you will, it may be, say, that ye hope all will be well, and yet that at the best is but a guessing, but ye would be loth to speak so of an execution that were past against you, about a sum of money, in any poor court of judicature on earth ; and will ye suffer this terrible sentence to stand over your head, in the court of God's justice, and not study to be satisfied and assured on solid and good grounds, that it is repealed ? If ye did really believe that it was once so with you, and that yet ye are in hazard of this sentence, ye would not, ye could not, I am sure, ye should not be at rest, till ye knew that it were removed ;

moved; it would put you to make use of Christ in good earnest for your peace, and to seek to have the evidence of the repealed sentence and of your absolution sealed up in your bosom: And this is the thing that we aim at in this, even that as ye might not have a terrible meeting with God before the bar of his justice, that ye would seek to have the curse that ye are naturally lying under, removed, and to have your peace made with God, and to have some well-grounded clearness about it, that ye might live comfortably, and die with solid confidence and Christian courage, without which ye can do neither.

S E R M O N LIII.

ISAIAH LIII. Verse 11.

Verse 11. He shall see of the travel of his soul, and shall be satisfied: By his knowledge shall my righteous Servant justify many: For he shall bear their iniquities.

THE way of absolving a guilty sinner, consistently with the justice of God, is the great sum and scope of the gospel; even to shew how a lost sinner, obnoxious to the sentence of a transgressed law, may, without prejudice to the justice of God come to be justified; we are persuaded, that there is nothing of greater concernment to sinners; and if we knew our debt, and our hazard, we should think, that there is nothing of greater concernment to us in particular. The sum of the covenant of redemption consists in this, that is the chief thing aimed at in all this chapter, wherein the prophet lets us see, 1. What is the great thing that satisfies justice; and for this end much hath been spoken of Christ's sufferings, and soul-travel. 2. He lets us see, what is the benefit that we receive by Christ's sufferings, and that is justification, tification, or absolution from the guilt of sin, and from the curse which it deserves. 3. He shews us the way how this benefit is derived, and it is by his knowledge; this, saith he, shall be the great result of Christ's sufferings, many shall be justified; and this shall be the way how it shall be derived to these many, and that is, by his knowledge, or by faith in him, resting on his righteousness and satisfaction.

We opened the meaning of the words last day, and took notice of two doctrines from them, 1. That all men and women have a judgment to abide before God, an arraignment and indictment there, to which they must answer, they must all come to receive a sentence from God. 2. That all men naturally are liable to the sentence of condemnation; this is supposed; for as much as sinners are only justified by faith in Christ, the sentence of the law, and of the covenant of works is standing against them, and over their heads, who are not by faith united to Christ Jesus, and justified by his righteousness.

The 3d doctrine (which is almost the very words of the text) that now we intend to speak to, is this, that though all men naturally be obnoxious to the sentence of the law, and to the curse of God; yet there is a way laid down, how a sinner so obnoxious, may be justified, and freed from that sentence, and this is by faith in Jesus Christ only. If any doctrine be of concernment for us to know, and to be well and experimentally acquainted with, this is of concernment to us; by his knowledge shall my righteous Servant justify many. There are three things in this doctrine implied, which by one and the same labour may be proved, and therefore we shall put them together, 1. That although all men be naturally obnoxious to the wrath and curse of God, yet he hath appointed a way how guilty sinners may be justified and absolved. 2. That the way of attaining to this benefit of justification, and freedom from the curse, is by faith in Christ's righteousness;

righteousness; it is by his knowledge, faith the text. 3. That there is no other way by which a sinner, obnoxious to the curse, can be justified, but by faith in Christ's righteousness only. The sense of this last branch of the doctrine is not only, that there is no other mean to satisfy justice, but Christ's merit and satisfaction; but that there is no other way, but the way of faith to obtain the application of his satisfaction; whereby many questions may be answered; but our purpose is to shew, how a guilty sinner may be justified.

And therefore we shall 1st give you a general view of the truth of the doctrine, by confirming it from scripture, in all the parts of it. 2^{dly}, We shall speak more particularly to the several branches of it. And 3^{dly}, To the way of attaining justification, in the several causes of it, as it is here discovered.

As for the confirmation of it by scripture, if we look through the gospel, it is our Lord Jesus Christ his own doctrine, which he preached, and the way which he laid down therein, for justifying and saving a sinner. So John iii. where it is three or four times repeated. As verse 16. 'God so loved the world, 'that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever 'believeth on him, should not perish, but have eternal life. Verse. 18. He that believeth on him, is 'not condemned, but he that believeth not is condemned already, because he believeth not in the 'name of the only begotten Son of God. Verse. 36. 'He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life, 'and he that believeth not the Son, shall not see life, 'but the wrath of God abideth on him. And verse '14, 15. As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, so must the Son of man be lifted up, that 'whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but

‘ have eternal life.’ And this is the same as saying, he that believes shall be justified, Mark xvi. 16. ‘ He that believeth, and is baptized, shall be saved, but he that believeth not shall be damned.’ These are the terms on which the apostles are by Christ warranted to preach the gospel, and to make the offer of life to every creature; and therefore, if we look forward to their preaching, we shall find it to be in the same strain. As Acts xiii. 38, 39. ‘ Be it known unto you therefore, men and brethren, that through this man is preached unto you the forgiveness of sins, and that by him all that believe in him are justified from all things, from which ye could not be justified by the law of Moses.’ Where, while Paul is summing up the whole message that he had to deliver, he goes upon the same ground; and wherein we have these three clearly held forth, 1st, That all men are liable, as in their natural estate, to God’s curse, and by the law cannot be justified. 2^{dly}, That there is a way laid down, through Jesus Christ, to obtain justification and remission of sins. 3^{dly}, That the way how sinners come by this, is faith in Christ; all that believe are justified. Look to the epistles, especially those written to the Romans and Galatians, where this question about justification is expressly, and designedly handled, and we shall find, that it is the sum of both; as Rom. iii. where having said, verse 23. that all have sinned, and come short of the glory of God; and so, that all are liable to God’s judgment, he subjoins, verse 24. Being justified freely by his grace, through the redemption that is in Jesus Christ; which is the great mean of our justification; and then he adds, verse 25. Whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation through faith in his blood; where we have the mean of the application, to wit, faith; and chap. iv. To him that worketh not, but believeth on him that justifieth the ungodly, his faith is counted for righteousness; which place demonstrates this, that an ungodly person, person, taking hold by faith of Christ's righteousness, may be, and is justified and absolved, and freed from the guilt of sin, as if he had never sinned. So Gal. ii. 15, 16. We who are Jews by nature, and not sinners of the Gentiles, or not without the covenant as they are, 'knowing that a man is not justified by the 'works of the law, but by the faith of Jesus Christ; 'even we have believed in Jesus Christ, that we might 'be justified by the faith of Christ, and not by the 'works of the law, for by the works of the law shall 'no flesh be justified;' which place shews not only this, that through faith in Christ is justification and life to be had, but it also excludes all other ways of justification, Knowing that a man is not justified by the works of the law, but by faith. But that which we are now speaking to, is only the positive part of the doctrine, to shew that a guilty sinner, obnoxious to the curse, may by faith come to be justified, and made free from the guilt of sin, and from the curse, as if he had never sinned, nor ever been under the curse.

For further confirmation of the doctrine, consider these four things, and ye will see from them good reason for it; only remember this, that justification looks always to a judicial procedure, as we hinted before, wherein the Lord is, as it were, on the throne, and the guilty sinner at the bar, pleading through Christ's righteousness and satisfaction to be absolved; which is even as if a debtor arrested for debt, should plead for a release, not because he is not owing the debt, or because he hath paid the debt, but because his surety hath paid it for him. This being supposed and remembered, ye should, we say, consider these grounds or reasons, for confirming the doctrine. 1st, The sufferings that Christ hath endured, and the satisfaction that he hath made, in the room of sinners, as the next words discover, For he shall bear their iniquities; and verse the last, He shall bear the sins of many;

nay, this is the great scope of the chapter ; therefore it is said, That he hath borne our griefs, and carried our sorrows, and that the Lord hath laid on him the iniquity of us all ; this is a ground of confirmation. 2dly, Consider, how that there is not only a sufficient price payed, but there is a covenant of redemption allowing him to pay it, and accepting it of his hand, as complete payment, and satisfaction for the elects debt ; and except there be a view to this covenant, faith hath not a sufficient ground to rest on for justification thro' Jesus his satisfaction ; because otherways we see not a reason, why his sufferings can be accepted for us. For suppose, (if such a supposition may warrantably be made) Christ to have suffered, yet it was free for God to have accepted that as a satisfaction for our debt, or not ; but the consideration of the covenant of redemption removes that doubt, and gives faith a ground to lay hold on Christ's sufferings, as satisfactory to the justice of God ; because, in the covenant of redemption, it is so transacted, and agreed upon, betwixt God and the Mediator ; therefore the apostle speaking, Heb. x. 8, 9. and forward, from Psal. xl. of this covenant, shews, that when sacrifices and offerings will not avail, Christ comes in saying, ' Lo, I ' come, in the volume of thy book it is written of ' me, I delight to do thy will, O ! my God ; by ' which will, saith the apostle, we are sanctified ;' and had there not been such a will, his sufferings had not been useful to us. 3dly, Consider the offer that is made in the gospel to sinners, which is the object of our faith ; for the covenant of redemption is not the ground, and object of our faith, though it clears the ground and reason of our faith ; but it is God's offer in the gospel, according to that place, Mark xvi. 15, 16. ' Go ye and preach the gospel to every creature, ' he that believeth, and is baptized shall be saved ;' he warrants them to go, and make it known to all to whom they shall preach, that there is remission of sins to be had through faith in Christ; and this is a ground to faith, when God makes offer of Christ's satisfaction in the gospel, on condition, that we believe, and accept of him; when we by faith close with the offer, it gives us, as it were, an assignation to Christ's purchase; the gospel says, as Paul doth, Acts xiii. 38. 'Be it known to you, that through this man is preached to you remission of sins, and by him all that believe are justified;' and faith consents to that, as giving God credit, and accordingly closes with, and rests upon it, as the ground of its plea before God; so that when the question comes to be asked, what have ye to answer the law, and to pay your debt with? Faith, or the believing sinner answers, I have nothing of my own, but there is a satisfaction in Christ, according to the covenant of redemption, which is holden out, and made offer of to me, for defence, against what the law, or justice can say; and I betake me to that. And this is the native and kindly act of faith in justification, when it makes use of this defence, and trusts to it alone: This is even it that Paul means, Philip. iii. 9. compared with verse 8. I count all things loss, that I may win Christ, and be found in him; that when it was asked, Paul where art thou? I may have it to say, I am here, Lord, even in Christ, and in his righteousness. This is the ground of his plea, having disclaimed his own righteousness, as to his justification before God, and he will have no other defence but that. 4thly, Consider the end of all these, to wit, of Christ's sufferings, of the covenant of redemption, and of the offer of the gospel; it is the praise of the glory of his grace, that God may make it known, that he is gracious, and freely gracious, without respect to any thing in the sinner. This end is set forth in these two places put together, one is, Rom. iii. 26. 'To declare I say, his righteousness, that he might be just, and the justifier of him which believeth in Jesus, that he might be just, that is, one that will fulfil his threatnings and therefore he hath provided one to satisfy his justice; and one that is faithful in keeping his promises, and therefore he is the justifier of them that believe in Jesus; the other place is Eph. i. 6. where, when the apostle hath spoken of election, predestination, and adoption, he sets down the end of all, to wit, To the praise and glory of his grace, wherein he hath made us accepted in the beloved; and this is that which makes all sure; for God cannot fail to justify the sinner that believeth in Christ, as he is offered in the gospel, because that is the very end of his justifying sinners, the praise of the glory of grace, which he will not lose, but must certainly, and will infustrably obtain.

The uses we may make of this doctrine are four in general, the 1. whereof is for information; and it is such a lesson of information, as without it, all the preaching of the gospel is to no purpose; and the hope of eternal life would be utterly lost, if such a doctrine were not in the gospel, that through faith in Christ a sinner may be justified. Would any know then how they may be absolved? This answers the question, and tells us that it is through faith in Christ's righteousness, and no other way. And if we really believed the former two doctrines, 1. That we must all come before the tribunal of God: And 2. That we are all obnoxious to the curse of God, we would think this were a very important question to be put, how such a guilty sinner may be absolved and justified? And indeed, if it be not clear in this point, it is, as to any fruit, in vain for us to preach, and for you to hear, or to think of coming to heaven; which is in a word, that a sinner through resting on Christ's righteousness according to the covenant of grace, may come to be absolved, and freed from the guilt, of sin, and from the curse, as if he had never sinned, nor been liable to that curse.

For further clearing of this use, consider, 1. What

justification is. 2. What we mean by faith; and 3. what are the causes of this justification spoken of in the text. 1. By justification in this place, is not to be understood the making of a person perfectly holy, nor to have grace infused into him, for that is sanctification. But it is to be absolved, and declared free, in respect of the guilt of sin, and of the curse, as if a man had never sinned; as it is said, Ephes. i. 6. Wherein he hath made us acceptable in the beloved. It is an act of God's free grace, whereby our sins are pardoned, and we accepted as righteous in his sight, &c. (as our catechism hath it) as if our sin had never been. 2. When we speak of faith, we mean not a general historical faith, that devils, or reprobate men may have, and whereby an assent of the judgment is given, to the truths of the word, though indeed justifying faith doth presuppose that; neither by faith do we mean such a faith whereby a man doth at the very first believe, that he is pardoned, and which puts away all doubting, and lifts him up in his own conceit, to the height of assurance, about the obtaining of the thing. It is the Antinomian presumption, to believe at first hand, that I am justified and pardoned. But it is such a faith, that takes hold on Christ's righteousness, made offer of in the gospel, that I may obtain justification and pardon of sin through him; according as it is said, Gal. ii. 16. We believed in Jesus Christ, that we might be justified by the faith of Christ. It is an actual closing with the offer of Christ's righteousness, and a submitting to the terms of it, for justification; the soul's founding of all its defence before God, on Christ's righteousness, and purchase offered to it in the gospel, and resting on it, for life and salvation. As suppose there were a multitude of rebels, to whom pardon were by proclamation offered, on condition, that at such a time they should lay down their arms, and come in; and if one of them were challenged, and called to a reckoning after his coming in, for his rebellion, the ground of his plea would not be, that he never was in rebellion, but that such an offer was made, and that he did hazard his life on it. So it is here, a sinner is a rebel against God by nature, and being in rebellion, hath the offer of pardon, and life made to him, on condition that he close by faith with Christ's righteousness, and the sinner doth by faith give God credit, and hazards his soul on that; whereas unbelief (to follow the similitude) is, as if a rebel hearing of such a pardon offered, would not think that a sure way to escape, but would either plead innocent, or take him to some other shift. This then is the faith that I speak of, which actually closes with and makes use of God's offer of Christ's righteousness for absolution.

3dly, Consider the causes of justification. And there are three in the words, 1. The meritorious cause that hath procured, and bought this benefit, in Christ's satisfaction, his bearing their iniquities: He shall justify many, for he shall bear their iniquities. 2. The instrumental cause, condition, or mean, or way, how that benefit is derived to us, is faith, called here his knowledge. It is the faith we spoke of just now; faith taking hold of such a promise, and resting on God's faithfulness for the making of it good. It is this which gives the soul a title to Christ's righteousness, which formerly it had not, and makes Christ's purchase of due to belong to it, by virtue of God's offer; and consequently the benefit of justification is derived to it, by its taking hold of the offer, which otherways it could not partake of. 3. The formal cause, wherein justification properly consists, is this, even God's absolving or judicial pronouncing of the sinner to be free, and his accounting of him as righteous, on account of Christ's righteousness imputed to him, and taken hold of by his faith. Where the sentence is past, we need not curiously enquire. For, as the sentence of condemnation stands in the word,

while the sinner is unbelief; so by believing in Christ, he hath absolution in the word, as John iii. 18. He that believeth in him is not condemned. And this sentence of the word is as effectual, for absolving of the sinner, as if the sentence were pronounced in an immediate way, or with an audible voice from heaven, by God, with the sinner's name, and fir-name in it. And therefore let me commend this, with the other places I named before to you, that from them ye may learn to find the way, how a sinner is absolved and justified. It is Christ's satisfaction that makes the amends, and is the meritorious cause; it is God's word that makes the offer of that satisfaction; and it is our faith begotten, and quickened by God's Spirit, that taketh hold of it; and justification itself is God's absolving, and accepting of the person, as righteous in his sight, who is fled to Christ's righteousness. And thus though God's grace and mercy be the efficient cause that admits of the ransom, yet neither is grace in us the formal cause, nor is grace in God the meritorious cause, but it is that which lays down the way how a satisfaction shall be provided, and accepts of it, when provided, and of the sinner on account of it, when by faith he betakes himself to it.

Use 2. Seeing there is such a way of justification provided, and by the gospel brought to light, revealed and made manifest, as it is in, Rom. i. 17. and iii. 21. since I say, that mystery, which before was hid, is disclosed, and life and immortality brought to light by the gospel, let me earnestly intreat you, that you would make use of this mean and way of justification, for the obtaining of absolution before God. The end of preaching is to reveal this righteousness; and to engage sinners to make use of it, to submit to it heartily, or all will be to no purpose.

For pressing this Use a little further, consider the great concern of this application, and what may induce you to mind it. And to this purpose, 1. I would ask you, whether ye believe that by nature ye are liable to God's curse, and that ye must appear before his judgment-seat ; if found in a state of nature when ye appear, it will be a woful sentence, you will meet with from God ; but if you believe this, that by justification you have sin pardoned, whether ye shall be eternally happy, or eternally miserable ; if this be of great concernment, then surely obedience to this exhortation is of great concernment, because there is no other way to obtain absolution but this. 2. Consider, that it is the very design of the gospel, and of this benefit that is made offer of to you therein, which all the nations that have not the gospel want, the privilege being denied to them. God makes offer of a way to you, how ye may be justified ; and ye profess your desire to learn it, and to get it practically made use of, and improved, and (as Paul hath it, Philip. iii. 8, 9, 10.) that ye may know Christ, that ye may win him, and be found in him. And it is the sum of the gospel, as we have it, Acts xiii. 38. ' Be it ' known unto you, men and brethren, that through ' this man is preached unto you remission of sins, ' and by him all that believed are justified.' This is even the time that the Lord is making this proclamation, that was before prophesied of, and published by Isaiah, by his knowledge shall my righteous Servant justify many. This is it that is even now revealed, declared, and made manifest to you, that by Christ Jesus alone righteousness is to be attained. And if it be of such concernment, that for this very end, God hath sent his Son to die, and hath sent this gospel to declare, and make offer of this benefit of his death unto you, it is no doubt, greatly of concernment to you, to make use of it, when it comes to you. 3. Consider, that if the Lord's proclamation of it, have not that effect, to engage you to Christ Jesus, for the obtaining of righteousness through him, it will leave you in a worse condition than it found you in. It is not now, whether ye will perish or not; though that be a great matter (the most barbarous Heathens will readily think, that God's justice is terrible to meet with) but it layeth these two in the ballance. It is either a most inconceivable condemnation, beyond what others who have not heard the gospel, will come under, if the offer be slighted; or eternal salvation, if it be embraced: Woe to thee Chorazin, woe to thee Bethsaida, saith the Lord, Matth. xi. 21, 22.) for if the mighty works which are done in thee, had been done in Tyre and Sidon, they would have repented long ago. And it shall be more tolerable for Sodom in the day of judgment, than for Capernaum, who, because they were lifted up to heaven, in respect of a glorious dispensation of gospel-ordinances, and improved them not, shall be cast down into hell. And whereon is this dreadful denunciation founded? Even on this ground, just now hinted at, the gospel was more plainly and powerfully preached to them, than it was to Tyre and Sidon, to Sodom and Gomorrah, who had Lot's testimony, but Christ's and his apostles testimony, in a manner, swallowed up that, which testimony they slighted. Now ask yourselves whether this gospel hath not sounded loud in your ears? Have ye not heard it? Yes verily. We may here allude to that word, Rom. x. 16. doubtless ye have heard, the sound thereof is come to you, and ye shall never have that to object, that ye heard it not. This text, and this same sermon on it, and others, will bear witness, that through Jesus Christ ye had a way laid before to you, for remission of sins and for justification; and what will follow? Either ye must betake yourselves to Christ's righteousness for justification, and study to be holy, or else ye will bring upon yourselves a more terrible condemnation than came upon the inhabitants of Sodom and Gomorrah, who were consumed and burnt quick, by fire and brimstone from heaven. And therefore there is reason here for all to look well about us, what use we make of this benefit offered to us, that we miscarry not, and make not ourselves most inexcusable, for slighting of it.

I shall here speak a little to some sorts of persons, that ought chiefly to lay this to heart. 1. To some that are so utterly careless and indifferent, in making their peace with God, that to this day, all warnings, threatnings, and dispensations that they have met with, could never prevail with them, once to make them so far serious, as to ask that question, what they should do to be saved. To whom much preaching is but a beating in the air, to whom such preaching is fruitless, and Christ useles. It is of these that he speaks, Matt. xxii. Who being invited to the wedding, They made light of it, and went away, one to his farm, another to his merchandize. There is a generation of such persons amongst us, to this day, who never thought seriously of the gospel, nor of this doctrine, which is the substance and life of the gospel, and without which we can enjoy no mercy, nor benefit held forth and made offer of in the words; but slight pardon of sin, and think little of justification, who will, the day is coming, when it will be much thought of, and when many of you, if God prevent not, would give all the world for an offer of it, and would be glad to be burnt with the world, or covered with, and smothered under a hill, or mountain, rather than come and receive your fearful doom, and sentence from the judge, because ye had this favour in your offer, and made not use of it. A 2d sort are a prophane company, who, if their carriage be looked on, it says plainly, nay, it openly proclaims, that such men believe not, that there is a judgment coming; otherways they durst not for a world, live as they do. Is this, think ye, the way to be justified, to be laughing, sporting, gaming, tippling and trifling away your time; in spending it in decking and dressing of your bodies; in bestowing of more time in one day, than ye do in eight, or many more days on the soul? To be glutting yourselves with the world, to be following the desires of your hearts, and the sight of your eyes? Profane as ye are, think upon it, for we declare even unto you, that there is a way how the ungodly may be justified, held forth, and offered in this gospel; and if ye contemn it, God shall vindicate his grace, and your trampling on it shall return on your own head. A 3^d sort are such as have never been made sensible of their sin, nor of the difference betwixt God and them: We invite the filthy to come and wash, sinners to come and get pardon, the ungodly to come and be justified; but, alas, we cannot find sinners who walk under the due sense of their sin to preach to. I dare say, that to many of you, the doctrine of justification is in some respect needless, I am sure for the present uselefs, for ye were never convinced of your sin, nor of your hazard, but thought that ye were always sure of your justification; ye never reckoned yourselves, to speak so, to be on the borders of hell; God always, ye think, loved you, and perish who will, ye will not perish: These, and such as these, have been your thoughts of yourselves, and of your state. And we have more difficulty to prevail with you, to think seriously of making your peace with God, than we should really have in this, to prevail with Pagans, or with adulterers and murderers, whose natural consciences would sooner be awakened than yours. Justification is not a serious matter to many of you, ye think to slip through God's judgment. If ye be asked, whether or no ye be absolved. Yes, that we are, will ye say, long since: But, ah! how came ye to be absolved? Were ye ever chased, and did ye ever flee for refuge to the hope set before you? Were ye ever pursued by the law to Christ, and were ye ever made cordially to close with him, and to found your plea on his righteousness? It will be strange, if so many shall slip into heaven and never know know how ; we grant there may be some brought in, who have not distinctly discerned the manner how ; but that almost whole congregations, and countries should be made friends with God, and never know, or at least never be made sensible of the quarrel, we profess, we see not through it, it is to us an unintelligible riddle and a paradox. Therefore be entreated to reckon over again ; though there be a justification through the blood of Christ, to be gotten, yet assure yourselves, that ye are not in the way to it, while ye continue senseless of your sin, and of your hazard. A 4th sort are those, who think that they have nothing to do with this doctrine ; they are rich, they are wise, they are of honest rank, and have a name and commendation in the place where they live, and they have, it may be, some school-craft, and learning, and therefore they are persuaded, that they cannot miss justification. And where is there one person amongst man, if it be not some poor person, even it may be poor in the world, that ever thinks that the severity of the law, or the threatnings thereof concern them ? But are there any more ways to heaven than one ? Or is there one for the rich, and another for the poor ? Do not all come in at this door ? Is not this the way, even to be sensible of your sin, and to flee to Christ for life ? And yet are there not some amongst you, that cannot endure to think of hell, to dread it, (or as we use to speak) to think yourselves to be on the borders of it ? Because ye are thought something of, able to pursue your business, and have some parts and abilities ; but there are many more rich, more wise, and learned people than you are, in hell, that were never absolved before God, nor ever shall ; yet there is a propenseness in great men, in rich men, and in men of parts to slight this doctrine : But such have in some respect more need to give all diligence, to make their calling and election sure, than many others, and yet ye go not so far as they do, who yet go not the just length.

length. A 5th sort are such as never knew any inward work, or exercise of the Spirit of God upon their consciences, but have lived with a sort of wholeness of heart all their days. If any be called to take notice of this doctrine, they are called to take notice of it. There is a generation, saith Solomon, Prov. xxx. 12. which are pure in their own eyes, and yet are not washed from their filthiness. They conclude they are absolved, but never look inward, to see if there be ground to bear that conclusion. 6^{thly}, And lastly, there are a sort that are formal, and hypocritical, they were never grossly profane, but they were as little truly and seriously religious; ye had need therefore, to take heed whereon ye found your peace, and beware that ye take not the form of godliness for the power of it, especially when the form is come to so great a height. And seeing this way of justification is held out to you through Christ, we exhort and beseech you all, and especially those of such sorts as we have named, to look well that this grace be not received in vain. In a word, these two sorts should take special heed to this doctrine. 1. Some that mind not religion at all. 2. Others, who if they mind it, mind it not in the way of grace, but as it were by the works of the law. We declare to you, that justification is by faith in Jesus Christ, and by resting on his righteousness; as many as take that way, they may be assured to speed; and they that mistake and do slight that way, shall never come to heaven, for there is no other name given, whereby a sinner can be saved, but the name of Jesus only. He is the way, the truth, and the life; and no man cometh to the Father but by him.

S E R M O N LIV.

THERE is, as I said lately, nothing of greater concernment to a sinner to know, than these two, 1st, What it is that satisfies justice, and makes a sinner acceptable before God. 2^{dly}, To know how that may be attained, or what way it is to be applied. And this verse shortly, but very clearly answers both. 1. That which satisfies justice, is the travel of Christ's soul, or his sufferings. 2. The way how this is applied, derived, or communicated, is set down in the latter part of the verse, By his knowledge shall my righteous Servant justify many, for he shall bear their iniquities. This is the effect of Christ's sufferings; that many by them shall be absolved from the guilt of sin, and from the curse: And this is the way how these many come to be thus absolved; it is by believing on him; for thus his satisfaction is accounted theirs, as if they themselves had satisfied. We proposed, the last day, this doctrine to be spoken to from the words; That there is a way through faith in Christ, and resting on his sufferings, by which a sinner, obnoxious to God's curse, may attain to be justified, and declared free before the throne of God. This doctrine implies these two things in general; 1st, That there is such a thing possibly attainable by a guilty sinner, as justification. 2^{dly}, That justification is to be attained only by faith in Jesus Christ, resting on his righteousness; by his knowledge shall he justify many. As there is a necessity to be absolved, so there is a necessity to take this way for absolution; because this, and this only is held forth to be the way, how justification justification is to be attained ; it is by Christ's knowledge, which, in short is by faith in him.

We discoursed somewhat of the positive part of this truth the other day ; which is of great concernment ; the understanding thereof, being the very hinge of the gospel, and that wherein, in a special manner the gospel, and covenant of grace differs from the law and covenant of works, and pointing out a way for coming by righteousness and life through Christ, in opposition to the law, as a covenant of works, that holds out a way to righteousness and life through our own performances.

We touched also at some uses of the doctrine for directing of you to the believing and making use of Christ, for coming at peace with God. It would follow now, that we should speak a little to the use of refutation, that flows natively from this doctrine. For if this be the way, and the only way of the justification of a sinner before God, to wit, by, or through faith in Christ's righteousness ; then all those ways that lead not sinners to resting on Christ's righteousness alone, for justification and peace, must be inconsistent with the gospel, and so to be rejected, and abhorred, whether they be in doctrine, or in practice. And we choose the rather to speak a word to this, because it will clear the doctrine of justification by faith the more, when we come to consider those corruptions and errors that are foisted in by heterodox men, in this great truth of God, to the perverting and corrupting thereof ; and it will the more provoke us to thankfulness to God, who hath graciously delivered us from these snares, errors, and corruptions ; an error and mistake here about the substance of this truth being such, as tho' we held all other truths incorrupted, will ruin us.

There are, we suppose, four sorts of errors especially, that contradict this grand truth, concerning justification by faith in Christ's righteousness, to which we shall speak a little. The 1st is, That old rooted error of Papists, who, in this point, enervate, and overturn the whole way of the gospel; and because this is what a great part of the Christian world hath been deluded with, tho' it be in these days little thought of by many, and because it is not one single error, but as it were a chain of very momentous and fundamental errors, we shall insist a little, in laying it out before you, and ye should not so much look on it, as a controversial, or meerly speculative, as a grossly practical error, and such as is naturally rooted in all men; ye should also look upon it, with holy fear, and jealousy over yourselves, lest inadvertently ye slide into it; and withal, ye should look on it, and make use of it, as a motive, to provoke you to love the truth the more, and to be, as I said, the more thankful to God, who hath freed you from that dark, heavy and comfortless way of justification by works, which is now impossible.

It may be that this error of Papists will not be thought much of by some, when they hear that they speak of justification by Christ, and by his merits, and by faith, as well as we Protestants do; but it is the more dangerous, that they do so; and therefore, ere I shew their way of justification, and the inconsistency of it with the gospel, I would have you to advert to these three things. 1st, That in this matter of justification, though Papists acknowledge the name, yet they do not acknowledge the thing itself; so that the controversy is not so much, what justification is, as whether there be such a thing as justification at all, taking it to be a thing distinct from sanctification and regeneration, which they in effect deny; for if the form constitute justification, and if to them, the form of justification be the infusing of habitual grace in the soul, then it is nothing different from regeneration and sanctification; and therefore when they speak of justification, they speak of it in this sense; for a justified person to them, is a man renewed and made holy, even as to warm or to heat water, is to make that hot which before was cold; so justification to them, is to make a sinful person just, because of inherent righteousness in himself. 2dly, When they speak of justification, they make a two-fold justification; the first whereof is, that which they call the justification of a wicked person, or of an unrenewed man, when grace is at first infused into him, which they grant a man cannot of himself condignly merit. The second is of a man's growing, or increasing in grace, when he attains to more grace, and to more glory; grace and glory being of the same nature, (wherein they and we do not differ.) And to this second justification, they make necessary a man's proper merit of works; for they say, that the first justification will not avail for those who come to age, though to a child it be sufficient; because their attaining of glory, who are at age, is the proper hire of their works, which supposes holiness; and therefore, when they say, that Christ's merit procures justification, their meaning is, that it procures the first justification, but not the second; this is in effect to say, that it buys habitual grace, as a stock to a man, wherewith he may trade; but when they come to speak of heaven and glory, which is obtained, as they say, by the second justification, that is come at by the man's own trading with that stock of habitual grace; and so the man's trading, or trafficking with this stock comes in, as that which procures, wins, and merits the prize. 3. Tho' they use the same names that we use, as of faith and pardon, or remission of sin; yet there is very great difference betwixt them and us, as to the thing; for they count nothing to be faith but historical faith, which the devils have; and for remission of sin, they divide and distinguish betwixt the removing or remission of the blot of sin, and the removing and remission of the punishment of sin; and they say, that in the first justification, the blot of sin is expelled, by the infusing of habitual grace, even as darkness is expelled by the coming in of light; but as to the punishment of sin, they leave a man to satisfy in part for himself, after his justification.

Now, as we said, because there is not one error or two here, but a concatenation or chain of many errors; therefore, for further clearing of the truth, and discovering of these errors, ye should consider, that when the question is proposed, this is the true state of it; what that is on which a sinner may ground his peace before the tribunal of God's justice, as a solid defence, to answer all the challenges of the law, and whereupon he may expect to be absolved, and admitted to heaven. They say that it is inherent holiness wherewith a man's soul is sanctified, renewed, and made conformable to the image of God; which, say they, is of that nature, that it cannot but make the person acceptable to God; so that in coming before God's tribunal of justice, he hath in himself wherewith to answer all the charges that his own conscience, or the law can bring against his inward and habitual grace and sanctification. It is true, they grant, that God works this grace in them, and that men are not naturally born with it, and that Christ's merit procures the bestowing of this grace; but yet they say, though a man do not merit this first grace, yet he must dispose himself for it, by the exercise of his free will, faith, alms-deeds, and the like; and so he makes himself congruously meet for, and capable of sanctification, and habitual grace, without which God does not bestow it. And if we look to the instrumental cause, they take in the sacraments of baptism, penance, and extreme unction, as means whereby God worketh that grace, (and that, as they say, by the very work wrought) if he be a man come to age, and if there be not opportunity of receiving the sacrament, he hath it in his vow, which comes in place of the sacrament; by which means they have these two effects: The first is a positive bringing in of grace into the soul. The second is, privative, whereby the blot or spot of sin is expelled, as heat expels cold, or light expels darkness; and this they call remission of sin, when grace removes or drives it out, so that the soul is not polluted with it. And because all this takes in but the guilt of sin, which they say is removed in the first justification; they have a second justification, whereby they say that the punishment of sin is removed, and whereby they merit glory; and here come in their donations, fastings, pilgrimages, preregrinations, &c. whereby they make amends to God; and because they cannot make a full amends here, they have their purgatory and soul-masses; and so they have not only God to satisfy, for the wrongs which they have done to him, but heaven to procure by their own merits; for they lay down this as a ground, that glory in its perfection is the proper reward of merit, which, say they, is not founded on God's promise; for that were to reward his merit, which to them is absurd, tho' they grant an intrinsic worth to be in both: But it is merit, in strict justice, for and by which they expect heaven and glory; and having heaven, to procure by their own merit, because they cannot merit it, especially if man's nature be looked on as corrupted; they invent two things, or forge two devices for that: 1st, To deny concupiscence to be sin; and 2dly, To distinguish betwixt mortal and venial sins; and venial sins they make to be consistent with merit, in which they take in a world of things as not deadly. And if a man have not merit enough of his own, they have a treasure of merits of many saints, who have satisfied for more than their own guilt amounted to, and have merited more than heaven for themselves; and the Pope being by them supposed to have a right and power to dispense these merits, he gives to them that want, a right to such

such a faint's merits: And when all is done, they confess that this way of justification is not certain, that it cannot give peace, that it may be lost, and that being lost, it cannot be recovered, but by a new grace gotten by the sacrament of penance; the very rehearsing of which things may let you see, how unlike their justification is to the gospel, and to the way of justification that it lays down; and what ground of thankfulness we have to God, who hath not only contrived, but revealed unto you, a more solid and comfortable way of justification. 1. Though their way hath much pains, and labour, and toil in it; yet ye see what it amounts to, and how much uncertainty, anxiety, and horror do accompany it; neither do they ever attain to justification before God by it. And this is the 2^d thing we would speak a word to, even to shew that this way of justification is inconsistent with the gospel, and that wherein a soul can neither have solid peace nor comfort; and we shall speak a little to this first, in general, and then secondly, more particularly. 1st, In general, their way of justification is the re-establishing of the covenant of works; for it supposeth, that God hath conditioned life to none, but on condition of their works, which in their value are meritorious. It is true, they first allow to Christ's merit thus much, that he hath thereby procured this merit to their works, and secondly, that he hath procured to them habitual grace, to work these works; though, as we said before, they must dispose themselves for that grace. But that doth not alter the nature of a covenant of works, seeing the terms are still the same. For consider Adam before the fall, he was to expect life, according to the terms of the covenant, do this and live; and here the terms of the covenant are the same, though their use be different; and if the scriptures do oppose these two, that if it be of grace, it is no more of works; contrary thereto then sure is this way of justification, that that puts a man to the same terms of the covenant that Adam had to expect life by, and must necessarily be inconsistent with the gospel. This will be the more clear, if we consider, how they themselves illustrate their meriting by the works of the saints, by Adam's meriting of life while he stood; the which meriting flows from an intrinsic worth in themselves, without respect to Christ's merits; and if the covenant of works hath these same terms, then their justification, no doubt, must be a re-establishing of that covenant.

2. The scripture speaks of our obtaining justification and righteousness always in this sense, to wit, by God's imputing the righteousness of Christ to us, not only for coming at the first grace, but for attaining heaven and glory. It is that which Paul depends upon, when he comes before God, Phil. iii. That I may be found in him, not having mine own righteousness, which is by the law, but the righteousness which is thro' the faith of Christ; he lays by the one, and betakes himself to the other, as his only defence, and that whereon he doth ground his plea before God. Now this being the scripture way of justification, and their way being quite contrary to it, (for if they were asked, how think ye to answer before God? they must say, by the merits of their good works) it must needs be inconsistent with the grace of the gospel, and that which Paul would by no means hazard his peace upon. We shall find nothing more frequently mentioned in scripture, for the making of our peace with God, than covenanting with God, the imputation of Christ's righteousness, and justification by faith; but all these three are here, in their way of justification, shut out and excluded; for they have no such thing as covenanting, they scorn the imputation of Christ's righteousness, as but a putative and imaginary thing, and they cannot endure justification by faith.

But 2dly, and more particularly, behold and consider, how universally it corrupts, and even destroys

the doctrine of the gospel. 1. It corrupts and destroys the nature of grace; for it placeth it on man's free will, he must dispose himself for it, and gives him liberty to choose, or reject it as he pleaseth; and it makes that flow from man himself that satisfies God's justice, as if remission of sins were not free. And in the second place, justification and admission to heaven and glory. It utterly excludes grace, and takes in merit, and makes heaven the proper reward of man's own merit. 2^{dly}, It enervates the merit of Christ, and his purchase, tho' it seem in words to acknowledge it; because it neither admits of the merit of Christ, as the satisfaction to justice, by which the punishment is taken away; nor to be that by which life is procured, but it takes in works, satisfaction by penance, whippings, pilgrimages, &c. and all that it leaveth to Christ's death is the procuring of a new covenant of works, and the buying of a stock of habitual grace to man to spend for himself; but it lays not the removing of the punishment, on Christ as our Surety, in our name satisfying the justice of God for our sins; but it leaves it on ourselves, and on our keeping the covenant of works, as that whereto the promise is made. 3^{dly}. It overturns the nature of God's covenant; for either it makes no covenant at all, or it transforms the covenant of grace into a covenant of works, putting us to expect life through the merits of works; for they will have no promise of life to be made on condition of Christ's merit, laid hold upon by faith, but on condition of our own works alone; for though they pretend that it may be called Christ's merit, because, say they, he hath procured grace to work these works; yet in effect their way of justification, is to restore us to that covenant which Adam had, and to ability to keep the same terms, though as we said, the rise be different. 4^{thly}. It is inconsistent with our natural state, for it supposes man before conversion to have a free will to good, and ability lity to dispose himself to receive grace, and gives him a hand in turning himself to God, as if he were not dead in sins and trespasses; and so the sovereignty of God is bounded and limited to wait on a man so disposed, and so disposing himself. 5thly. It destroys the nature of God's law, as it is inconsistent with his holy law, to have such and such lusts abounding within, and not exact a reckoning for such branches of it, as they call venial sins. 6thly. It overturns the scripture doctrine concerning sin, for it makes many sins to be in effect no sins. 7. It corrupts and destroys the nature of all the sacraments, and makes new sacraments, that God never appointed, and gives them power to work that which God never gave them, as if the very works wrought did confer grace. 8thly. It is inconsistent with the justice of God; as if forsooth, such poor trifles and toys as these, which they intervent, were satisfaction enough to his justice; yea, as if some men could more than satisfy justice, and could not only merit heaven for themselves, but also help to merit heaven for others; and as if God were bound in proper justice to the creature; and that not only on the account of this promise, but also, if not mainly on the account of merit of condignity. All these things are involved in this popish way of justification, and inconsistent with the truth of the gospel; and we have mentioned them, to let you see, that it is not one error that is here, but a complication of errors. And truly, if there be not an abhorrency of Popery, because of this gross error of justification, there is but little ground to expect, that men will keep at suitable distance from it in other things.

It was an evil that soon arose in the primitive church, and which the apostle disputes against, Rom. ii. 3, and 6. because he preached justification by grace, and not by the works of the law, some were ready to abuse that sweet doctrine, and to say, Let us sin, that grace may abound; and let us do evil, that good may come of it; whose damnation, says he, is just; and he follows these objections, and insists much in answering of them: And, O! But this is damnable, from the abounding of God's grace, to take the more liberty to sin; and yet what other language have the lives of many, but this? Because justification and happiness are not builded on our works, therefore we may live as we list. But if you abuse God's grace, and sin the more, God shall charge it to you; this gospel shall never do you good, God will require it of your hands; your sins and plagues are multiplied above any that have lived under black Popery. I dare say, many of you would probably have had a greater restraint on you from sin, and would have been more charitable and forward in many external good works, if ye had been professing Papists, than now ye are, being professing Protestants; a judicial stroke on you, for the abusing of grace. And is this the fruit of the gospel? No certainly, grace was never preached, that men should grow cold and indifferent in the practice of good works, but that through the laying hold on Christ's righteousness, they might have peace with God, and that through the study of holiness, God might be glorified; therefore study the exercise of faith so, as ye exclude not holiness; and study holiness so, as ye mar not the freedom of grace; and put these two together, which are the compend of the gospel, when suitably practised.

THIS blessed death and soul-travel of our Lord Jesus, hath been good news to many; and it is the ground of all the hope of life that ariseth from the word to a sinner. It should never be tasteless, nor disrelishing to us, in mentioning, reading, or thinking of it; but it should in reason make sinners glad, that ever there was such a subject to be spoken of, and to be considered. It must certainly be a great affair that brought the Son of God to die; the salvation of sinners is a great work, tho' many of us think but very little of it.

The sum and scope of Christ's sufferings and death, are briefly held forth in these words, By his knowledge shall my righteous servant justify many; where we have,

1. The great benefit that comes by his death, which is justification, or the absolving of sinners from the guilt of sin, and from the curse of God, due to them for sin, by Christ's interposing himself to become a sin-offering; there is a way laid down, how sinners may be relieved. 2. The parties made partakers of this benefit, and they are called many. 3. The way how it is derived to these many, it is by his knowledge, that is by, or thro' faith in him.

We have spoken somewhat of the benefit itself, justification; which is the thing aimed at, for the most part, in preaching, and all other ordinances, that God may by the righteousness of his Son in the gospel, carry on the justification of sinners, through their knowledge of him, or by causing them to rest upon his righteousness by faith, in order to their salvation: It is sad, that in this point, which is of so great concernment, so many should go so far wrong, and mistake so grossly; that it is no great matter, in some respect, whether they be called Christians, or not: This being the advantage of a Christian, that he hath a way to justification, and absolution from sin, and wrath before God, revealed to him, which others have not; who, if he come short of this, or fall into gross errors about it, he hath little or no advantage beyond Heathens, who may have more of the fat of the earth, and of the things of the world, than those who are within the visible church have; but in this, in a special manner, the Christian excels, and goes beyond the Pagan, or Heathen; that he hath a way laid down to him, how he may come to be reconciled to God, and freed from wrath, and from his curse due for sin; which we have shewed to be by fleeing to Christ, and by faith resting on his righteousness, and satisfaction; for Christ the Surety having paid the debt, by laying down a price fully satisfactory to divine justice; and this satisfaction being offered in the gospel, upon the condition of receiving him; a sinner giving his consent to God's offer, and closing therewith, may confidently expect, according to that offer to be justified, and no other ways.

We shewed you one particular, great, and gross error, wherewith those, who are under the darkness of Popery, are wofully carried away, which we did the rather touch upon, because though it be a doctrinal error in respect of them, and disputed for by them; yet in respect of the practice of many Protestant Christians, it's very rise and ordinary; that is, to mistake, err, or go wrong in the way of making of their peace with God: And there are three sorts especially, who do exceedingly mistake, err, or go wrong here; those of whom I mean, and am now speaking, are not such as are maintaining, disputing, or writing for such errors, but such as count themselves to be sound Protestant Christians, and haters of the gross Popish error; that we spoke somewhat to the last day. The first sort are those who, to this hour, never laid down any solid reckoning how to make their peace with God, or what way to come at absolution before him; these persons do in practice deny, whatever may be their professions, that there is a necessity of justification, for preventing of their eternal ruin and destruction; they live from their birth, with a hope of coming to heaven, without looking looking how they may obtain justification before God, they never saw nor laid to heart their need of it. Are there not many hearing me to day, that are of this number? Who will needs keep up confidently their fancied hope of heaven, and yet never knew what it was to answer a challenge for sin, or a threatning of the curse, for the breach of God's law from Christ's righteousness, nor did they ever place, and arraign themselves before God's tribunal, as guilty, nor did they ever think seriously of the way of making their peace with God, by taking hold of Christ's righteousness. A second sort are the generality of legal professors; I do not say, that they are legal in their practice; that is, that they make it their business to keep the law, for they are as little concerned, or careful in that as any; but they are legal in this respect, that when it comes to the making of their peace with God, they know nothing but the law to deal with, as that man spoken of, Matt. xxv. that got the one talent, and was utterly careless to improve it; yet when it comes to a reckoning, he stands and sticks to the rigour of the law, Master, saith he, lo, here thou hast that which is thine; just so, such will be ready to say, we have no more grace than God hath given us, we have a good heart to God, we are doing what we can. Here come in profane men, mere civil men, and hypocrites, and more especially the mere civil men, who do much in the duties of the second table of the law, and they will profess that they do mind judgment and a reckoning, but as if they had been bred and brought up in a Popish school, they soist in a legal righteousness instead of Christ's, as the ground of their justification before the tribunal of God. Ye may take these instances of this sort of persons, which are very common, and who in their practice almost in every thing agree with the Popish doctrine. The first instance is of such persons that know nothing of the imputation of Christ's righteousness,

yet if we speak of it, they will fall into such expressions as these, we can do nothing of ourselves, there is no goodness in us, it is God's grace that must do our turn; yet in the mean time it is not Christ's righteousness, they lay down to themselves as the ground of their justification, but the good which they have done as they suppose in Christ's strength, and the grace which is given them to work, and do that good by, which is the same thing with the Popish way of justification; as if Christ had procured an ability to us to keep the law ourselves, in order to our being justified thereby. Hence they will believe, pray, hear the word, praise, and go about other duties, and will profess that they acknowledge Christ in these; and that they have the grace from him to perform them; he furnishes the stock, and they trade with it; and so for the attaining of life, they are obliged to their own trading; which is in words to pretend grace, but really to put our own works and righteousness in the room of Christ's righteousness, as the ground, or meritorious cause of justification; for the grace given to us, enabling us to work, is not Christ's righteousness, but our own, because given to us, and working in us; and so it is always ourselves, and our own righteousness, not Christ, and his righteousness that we rest upon. A 2^d instance is, of some that speak of Christ, and of attaining life through him; yet it is not in respect of his merit, but in respect of his strength; for such will say, we hope through Christ's strength to come to heaven; their meaning wherein is, that he will help them so to repent and believe, so to be holy, and resist temptations, as they shall come to heaven thereby, as the deserving cause of their coming thither. It is true, there is something right here, when in its own place, if Christ wholly were rested upon, for justification put in the first place, and his merit rested upon for that, it were good that his strength were leaned to, and made use of, for performing the duties ties of sanctification; but when his strength is rested upon, as the alone thing, and when we look not to Christ's purchase and merit, as the ground of our acceptance, but to Christ as enabling us to do duties, to the end that we may give God a recompence thereby: At the best it is but he and we together, but this certainly is wrong; for nothing is proposed as a satisfaction to God's justice here, but what is immediately our own. A 3^d sort are somewhat wiser, who, it may be, think that any thing that is in themselves, is not worth the naming; but partly through Christ's merit, and partly thro' what they have, and can do themselves, or by these joined together, they hope to be saved. This was the doctrinal error of the Galatians, who attributed justification to Christ, and to the works of the law jointly. This way ascribes to Christ's righteousness thus much, that it makes our own righteousness to be accepted, as the ground of our justification before God, which in some respect is worse than the covenant of works; for the covenant of works sought a perfect righteousness, but this way offers an imperfect righteousness; and to amend, and to eke out our imperfect righteousness, it takes in the righteousness of Christ; but there is no such covenant, or way of justification in scripture; for God made but two covenants for men to attain life by, one of works, which is now impossible; the other of grace, by which only it is possible to attain justification and life. This makes a third covenant or contrivance, by a mixture partly of some works in us, and partly of some grace in Christ, to make up what is wanting in our works; and yet this way is very pleasing to our nature, and that to which we are much inclined for justification; for men are naturally disposed to think that they give Christ enough, when they allow his righteousness, to make up what is defective in their room. It is true indeed, that Christ's merits do wash our duties, but our duties never come up to be the ground of our justification in whole, or in part; which is evident from this, that ere Christ make our duties; or performances acceptable, he makes our persons first to be accepted; and that once being done, then any thing performed by us, in Christ's strength according to the will of God, is acceptable also.

But now we proceed further in the words of the text; and before we come to the causes of our justification, we shall briefly observe two or three things that lie obviously in our way. The 1st whereof is this, that the absolving of a sinner, through the imputation of Christ's righteousness, is the proper and native result of Christ's purchase, and the great intendment of it; his sufferings and soul-travel were undergone to procure justification to many; so that if we would know what is the fruit of Christ's soul-travel, here it is; By his knowledge shall many be justified: therefore, Rom. v. 9. It is attributed to his blood, Being justified by his blood, we shall be saved from wrath; and 2 Cor. v. ult. He was made sin for us, who knew no sin, that we might be made the righteousness of God through him. That which I mean is this, that Christ's intendment in his dying, was to redeem, and really and actually procure absolution, and justification before the throne of God, to so many as should believe on him: Or we may take the doctrine these two ways, which yet come both to the same account. 1. Thus, that the thing which Christ intended in his death, was not a meer possibility, that sinners might be justified, not to lay down a conditional way of their justification, whereby they might come, or not come to it, and so to make it possible; but that which he intended was, that their justification might follow absolutely. I do not mean instantly, and without the intervening of a condition; for here his knowledge comes in, as the condition; but that which I mean is, that he died, that their justification might actually and certainly follow as a fruit of his purchase; in a word, word, his death and sufferings were, not to make justification possible to all, but that so many as he engaged for might be absolutely justified; or that many, that is, all the elect might be actually justified, because he shall bear their iniquities, therefore by his knowledge they shall be justified.

We observe it for these ends, or, uses. 1. To give an answer to that question, what is the native result of Christ's death to his people? We say, it is their absolute and actual justification. Those that would extend the grace of God, and the death of Christ so broad and wide, as to leave out none, say in effect, that the design thereof was to lay down such a way, as makes it possible to all to be justified, and yet such a way as makes it possible that none at all shall be justified, for it hangs justification on the free-will of the creature; and so in striving to make grace broader than God allows, they come to make it none at all, by leaving it on man's free-will, whether it shall be effectual or not. But blessed be God, the covenant of God was not on these terms; for it is said here, That by his knowledge he shall justify many. 2. It gives us these two practical uses. 1. It shews, what should be our intendment, in our making use of Christ's death, and that is, that we may be justified and absolved by it, even to make use of it, for attaining pardon of sin, and peace with God. If this be overlooked and neglected, all other fruits of it are useless. It will avail but little to be a member of the visible church, to be baptized, and to be admitted to the Lord's supper, to have literal knowledge of the principles of religion, to have a gift of preaching, or of prayer, &c. these will not justify. The peculiar thing aimed at, in Christ's death, and that which his people aim at, and have to rejoice in, is justification through his knowledge, which is always to be understood without prejudice to the study of holiness.

2. It affords us this Use, Whoever would have ab-

solution before God, should know that this was the very thing engaged for to Christ, and his intendment in his death; that sinners believing on him, might be absolutely and actually justified by him; it was not simply to propose justification to them, but that absolutely they might be absolved from the curse of God due to them for sin. And now, may I not ask, whether this is more encouraging to sinners, to have Christ procuring justification only conditionally to them, or to have the thing absolutely conferred upon them? This is a ground whereupon believing sinners lift up their heads confidently, and expect justification through his righteousness: It is this that was promised to Christ, and it is this that is the native fruit of his death, without which it will be fruitless; and this may remove the great obstruction that a sinner, when he is serious, seeth lying in his way, to wit, the want of righteousness, and the fear of not being absolved, the want of inherent righteousness in himself, which makes him liable to the curse of the law, when he seeth upon what terms Christ died; first, To procure a righteousness to them that wanted righteousness; and secondly upon these terms, that sinners, through faith in him, might be justified, and freed from the guilt of sin, as if they never had sinned themselves. Considering this to be his intendment, according to the terms of the covenant of grace, what have they, or what can they have to terrify or affright them from expecting the fulfilling of this promise? Because the contrivance of the covenant of redemption, is to buy justification absolutely, and not the possibility of it only, not to buy grace to us, whereby to justify ourselves; but justification itself, so as we may be beholden to him alone for it.

Again, 2dly, When we say that the justification of a sinner, is the proper result of Christ's death, it may be thus understood; that the righteousness whereby a sinner is justified, is immediately Christ's death and purchase purchase, as to the meritorious cause of it; the knitting of these two together, He shall see of the travel of his soul, and shall be satisfied; and by his knowledge shall my righteous Servant justify many, doth hold it forth, to be Christ's death and purchase. The travel of his soul is, and must be the ground on which a lost sinner is justified before the throne of God; this both confirms what we formerly proposed concerning this doctrine, and also shews that the justification of a sinner is not by inherent holiness; whence comes that, I pray, which makes a sinner acceptable before God? It is not from habitual, nor actual inherent grace, but from Christ's righteousness, laid hold on by faith, that embraceth it, and adhereth to it. But from the latter part of the words, we shall have more particular occasion to speak to this, where these two are knit together; by his knowledge shall my righteous Servant justify many, for he shall bear their iniquity; therefore we do now pass it.

The object of this benefit is many; many ordinarily in scripture implies these two things. 1. A great number, and so it shews the extent of the object; that is, that Christ shall purchase and redeem many, or by his death procure justification to many. 2. A restriction, and thus many is opposed to all; and so the meaning is, there shall many be justified by Christ's death, but not all; and therefore as none can from these words plead for an universality in justification, so neither can they in redemption, for he only bare their iniquities, whom by his knowledge he justifies.

Looking on these many, in this two-fold consideration, we may make these observations from it: 1st; Taking it extensively, observe, 1. That the righteousness of Christ is of itself able to justify many; it is a righteousness that can satisfy for the sins of many; or thus, that in the covenant of redemption, there is an intended application of Christ's righteousness and purchase to many. 2. That there are many, who shall indeed partake of Christ's righteousness, and be justified by it. It is not one, or two, or a thousand; but as it was intended to justify many, so it shall be actually applied to many, for their justification. 3. Comparing the former words, He shall see of the travel of his soul, and be satisfied; with these words, By his knowledge shall my righteous Servant justify many. Observe, That Christ is not satisfied for the travel of his soul, except many be justified by it; or thus, It is Christ's satisfaction, that many make use of him, and that by making use of him, come to be justified by him; as afterward we shall see. These many, are all those that believe, all those that have this true and saving knowledge of him, and do rightly acknowledge him.

The proving of one of these doctrines will prove them all; that Christ's righteousness is able to justify many, that many shall be justified by it. It is said, Mat. xx. 28. That he came to lay down his life a ransom for many. And Rom. v. 5. That the gift of grace which is by one man, Jesus Christ, hath abounded unto many. And verse 19. As by one man's disobedience many were made sinners, so by the obedience of one shall many be made righteous. Let these four things be put together and considered, and it will be found, that there is no just ground to quarrel with these doctrines. 1st, The native worth, and intrinsic value that is in the satisfaction of Christ. It is the blood of God, of the person that is God; it is an offering that flows from a willing and chearful giver, which makes it the more acceptable. He was content, with delight, to pay the price; there cannot be a limiting or bounding of this worth or value, because there cannot be any bounding or limiting of the person that gives the value to it, if it be considered in itself. 2^{dly}, Consider the freeness of the offer, which takes in many; our Lord communicates very freely, what he hath bought very dear; and it is done with respect to his taking in

of many, to take away all exceptions from the poor and needy, and from them that want money. 3dly, As the terms are free, so the offer is very broad, and comprehensive, as we see, Isaiah lv. 1. Ho, every one that thirsts come to the waters. And Rev. xxii. Who-soever will, let him come, and take of the water of life freely. And we find these expressions, all that believe, and who-soever believes, to be frequently used in scripture; which takes in all that will yield themselves to him on the terms of the covenant, to close the agreement with him. 4thly, Consider God's end in the justification of sinners, which is to make his grace to shine and to triumph, and to make its victory over mens sins conspicuous and glorious, by being beyond it; not in respect of the number of persons, but in this respect, that as Adam's one sin brought death on many, so the death of Christ hath brought justification to many; as it is, Rom. v. The judgment was by one to condemnation, but the free gift is of many offences unto justification; whereas Adam's one offence brought death to many, here the relieving of one sinner is the procuring of freedom to many; because in that respect Christ is a satisfaction for many offences. But it may be objected here; is it not said, that the way to heaven is strait, and few there be that enter in thereat? They are thin sown, if we may so say, that are heirs of this inheritance. I answer, by a distinction; tho' they be comparatively few, yet considered in themselves absolutely they are many; or they are simply many, though comparatively but few: Consider and compare them with the multitude of reprobates that are even in the visible church, they are few; yet if ye will consider them in themselves, they are many: And it is most true that is spoken, Rev. vii. 9. I saw a number which no man could number. If we look since the beginning of the world, how some are taken in this age, and some in that, some of this nation, and some of another, they will be found to be but few, when

when all nations are put together, yet in themselves they are many. There are these three uses of it, which may be reasons why it is mentioned here. The 1st is, to let us see the largeness of the extent of the worth of Christ, and of the allowance of grace, in reference to the justification of sinners through him, which should make us stand, pause, and wonder. It had been much, if grace had saved but one, more if it had saved a thousand, or twenty thousand. But O! what ground of admiration, when many are saved by it. This is the native end, why it is put in here; even to shew, that it is not for nought that Christ died, it shall be a blessing to many. I mark it; because though the presumptuous thoughts of many lead them to extend the merits of Christ to all in the visible church; yet it may be that in others there are two narrow limiting thoughts of the extent of his merits, and of the allowance of grace, as to the number of the elect that shall be saved. It being certain, that as we are in hazard, and ready to abuse any thing, so this; if it be said, that they are many that are justified, we are ready to exclude none; and if it be said, that they are few, we are ready to make grace as it were a niggard and churl, and to contract, and to narrow too much the application of it.

The 2^d Use of it (which is a second reason, why this word many is put in here) may serve for encouragement to sinners, and to hearten them to essay to get this benefit of justification made their own; many think (and in some respect it is a truth) that it is a singular thing to come by justification; and hence they conclude, that they shall never get it; and indeed if the truth of its singularity and rareness made them careful to obtain it, it were a profitable use of it; but when it makes them heartless, to attain it, it is a wrong and prejudicial use of it. But sinners, there is here ground of encouragement, provocation, and stirring up to you, to seek after justification through Jesus

Jesus Christ; because there are many that are the objects of it. The righteousness of Christ, is a righteousness that will save many. It is an article of the covenant of redemption, that Christ shall have many; the promise will give title and right to many, he will not be content, if he get not many; now putting these together, it cannot but be very great encouragement to seek, and a strong ground to expect justification on this account; because 1st, that which a believing sinner obtains, is justification, pardon of sin both original and actual, and it is complete actual justification, not only the procuring the offer of it, but the application of it, Justification from all things, from which we could not be justified by the law of Moses, and justification never to be reversed. 2dly, This justification is designed for, and allowed to many, the stepping in of some before others doth not wrong them; and there needs not be disputes about election; for the text says, that the allowance of grace is to many. 3dly, It is Christ's satisfaction that he procures many to be justified, and the more that step to, to lay hold on this benefit, he hath as it were the more satisfaction. And if the sinner should say, I know not if I be included in that number; the terms of the covenant run to all that believe. If there be a flying to Christ by faith for refuge, there needs not be anxious disputing, whether the sinner will speed; but there should be a stepping forward, many have received good and many will receive good, and there is room sufficient for as many as will yield themselves up to Christ, and rest upon his righteousness. It is a large mantle that covers thousands, and the Lord will have thousands to be hidden under it, and justified by it.

3dly, It serves to be a most terrible ground of inexcusableness to those, to whom Christ's righteousness is spoken of, and offered in the gospel, who yet neglect to make use of it, that he was content to lay down his life, to make a ransom for many. None

needs to say, I knew not if I should be welcome; he said, it was for many; tho' he said not, It was for all, yet it is for all that will believe in him; and therefore it is not, nor shall be, because he hath confined the benefit to few, that ye are, or shall be excluded; but because, tho' he extended the benefit to many, yet ye excluded yourselves; and none of you, who hear his gospel, shall have it to say, I betook myself to Christ by faith, but he refused to admit of me, and he would have no more than he had. There are many who please themselves with such a word as this, when they hear that many will be saved; but it will be the dearest bought doctrine that ye heard, it had been in some respect better, that ye have heard that it was but two or three that will come to heaven; because the hearing of many's coming thither will greatly aggravate your guilt, who neglect so great a salvation.

Therefore take two or three caveats from this doctrine. And 1st, Beware of being secure; because there are many that shall be justified, there are many more that shall perish: compare those that perish with those that will be saved, and it will be found, that they are but a handful that will be saved, and that swarms and multitudes will go to hell; therefore, when ye hear that the door is opened to many, let it encourage you to enter in; but remember this, that more will be excluded, and perish, than will enter in and be saved. The scripture says, Many are called, but few are chosen, even in respect of the called within the visible church. 2^{dly}, Consider that grace enlarging of this benefit, to take in many, will be your greatest charge and aggravation who shall miss, and come short of it; Therefore let us fear, lest having a promise left us of entering into his rest, any of us should seem to come short of it. When this door is opened to us, we should by all means fear coming short, or not entering through unbelief; for it will be worse with us than if the door had never been opened. People ordinarily dinarily think not so much to miss, or come short of a priviledge, which but one or two have but access to ; but when it is such a priviledge as is made attainable by many, the missing of it galleth and tormenteth the more ; and when many shall come from the east, west, south, and north, and shall sit down with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, in the kingdom of heaven, what weeping and gnashing of teeth will it cause to them, who shall be secluded ? And therefore 3dly, Beware of thinking that there is the less diligence, or fear required, because we say, that many will be justified ; for tho' there be many that are redeemed, and many that shall be justified, yet all these come to be justified through Christ's knowledge : And therefore such as are ignorant and profane, can take but little or no comfort hence, while they continue to be such ; though there be many that are justified, yet none but believers are justified ; and none can warrantably look on themselves to be believers, but such as are sincere students of holiness. I would not therefore have you lay weight, either on many, or few's being justified, except by way of motive, but on the way that ye take to come by the end ; though a great many more were saved than will be, if ye take not the way of faith and holiness, to come to salvation, ye will not get yourselves shrouded in the croud, but though there were never so few damned, ye shall make up the number. In a word, it is ground of encouragement to a poor sinner, that would fain be justified in God's own way ; it is also ground of shame and confusion of face to the unbeliever, that restrains the benefit of Christ's purchase, and shuts himself out, when grace doth make use of such expressions to bring him in ; and it will be ground of conviction to all that have so wide a door opened to them, and do not strive to enter in. It may be, many of you think little of this now, but in the day when many shall be taken into the kingdom of heaven, and others shut out, it will be known to be a matter of greatest concernment. If once we could induce you to be in earnest in this one thing, there were a great point gained on the hearers of the gospel, and until it be seriously minded, there is nothing that we can do in religion, that will be to any purpose.

S E R M O N LVI.

Verse 11.—By his knowledge shall my righteous Servant justify many, &c.

IT is a great matter to have the solid impression of Christ's fulness on our spirits, and to be thoroughly persuaded, that there is a righteousness to be had in him; yet the consolation is not compleat, unless there be a clearness in the way, how this righteousness is applied and come by, and a kindly yielding to follow that way; for tho' we know that Christ died, and that there is a righteousness purchased, yet there are many that are never justified, and that shall never be saved by it; and therefore it would not be so much, to know that there is such a thing, if he had not laid down a way how we may be partakers of it; which way can no more fail and misgive, than Christ's righteousness can; and these words hold out the way, By his knowledge shall my righteous Servant justify many. That is, through faith in Christ many shall be made righteous; his satisfaction shall be accounted the believer's, whereby it shall come to pass, that they shall be as really justified, as if they had born their own iniquities; because his bearing of them shall be accounted theirs.

We spake 1/2 of this in general, that there is such a thing as justification, or God's absolving of a sinner, who

who by his own iniquity is liable to the curse. 2dly, That this justification is the proper effect of Christ's death. 3dly, From the object of it; that they are many, yet not all who are justified, many being put as a medium betwixt two extremes, neither including all, nor taking in a very few. Having passed by these more general doctrines, we would now speak a little to this great benefit of justification, in reference to the particular causes that concur to the attaining of it, which will lead us to a more distinct consideration of it; there is a ground for them all in the text; and therefore we shall put them together, that we may have a short view of this great benefit complexly.

There are commonly six clauses assigned to, or made necessary to concur in justification, tho' we know not well how to express them, so as ye may take them in, because of the ignorance of many of you. 1. There is the efficient cause, and that is God, the party that doth justify. 2. The end, or final cause, and that is his own glory. 3. The meritorious cause, or that which procures it, or the ground on which God justifies, and that is Christ's merit. 4. The inward instrumental cause, by which we get a title to, and an interest in Christ's merit, and that is faith. The formal cause, or that wherein justification consists, and that is imputation of Christ's righteousness to the sinner upon his acceptance of it, and the absolving of the sinner by virtue of his righteousness. 6. The external instrumental cause, and that is the word of God, by which this justification is revealed, and wherein God declares and passes the sentence.

For the first, ye should for clearing of it remember what we spake in our entring on this doctrine; that this word justification is a legal, or judicial word; and we are to conceive of God, who is the party offended, as the judge; and of the sinner arraigned, and brought before his tribunal to be judged, as a delinquent; the law gives in the libel, or indictment, lays the charge or accusation : The sinner's conscience and actions are so many witnesses proving the breaking of the law, and him to be obnoxious to the curse on that account. In this we say that God is the efficient cause, and so we may take the words, By his knowledge shall my righteous Servant justify many, actively and efficiently to look to Christ, as having this power, as he is God ; which is proper to God alone, as is clear, Rom. viii. 34. It is God that justifies. 1 Cor. iv. 4. Tho' I know nothing by myself, yet I am not hereby justified, but he that judgeth me is the Lord ; and this is a reason of the former, to wit, that no other can absolve but God, the party offended, who is judge.

We take notice of it for this practical Use, which the apostle makes of it, which is to teach us to lay less weight upon others, thinking well of us, or absolving us, and on our own absolving ourselves. The Lord chargeth some thus, Luke xvi. 15. Ye are they which justify yourselves before men, but God knows your hearts. Paul will not justify himself, for that is God's place and prerogative. How many are there, who take another person's testimony for God's, and think, that since others love, respect, and commend them, they are in a good condition, and well enough ; but, alas ! Is that person God ? Except mens testimony be founded on the grounds that are held forth in the word (and if so, then it is God's testimony) it will not do the business, nor avail you any thing ; except there be a sentence of absolution pronounced and past by him, their sentence, or yours will be recalled. Tho' many of you do not down-right profess this, yet many of you practically fall into it ; always remember that it is God that justifies, and that his absolution is different from mens, and from your own ; many have good thoughts of you, and so may ye of yourselves, when God may have none.

For the 2d, to wit, the final cause, it is clear here also, by comparing the former verse with the word going

going before, in this verse; and ye may take it in this observation; that the glory of God, and of the Mediator, is the end that God hath before him, in the justifying of sinners; therefore it is called the Lord's pleasure, or delight, and the Mediator's satisfaction; because he hath purposed to himself therein the glory of his grace especially, and also of others of his attributes, as his end, and so hath a kind of longing desire, and thirst after it; for the Lord being absolutely glorious cannot but love his own glory, and being the infinitely pure, all-sufficient good he cannot but love himself and his own glory; and therefore for attaining of this end, he justifies and absolves poor sinners: Now God is glorified here two ways. 1st, He has the glory of his grace exceedingly magnified thereby, as is clear, Ephes. i. 5. Having predestinated us to the adoption of children by Jesus Christ to himself, according to the good pleasure of his will to the praise of the glory of his grace; it is the Lord's pleasure, to glorify his grace, when a sinner liable to wrath is fully justified, and entitled to heaven. 2dly, He has thereby the glory of his justice, and righteousness, which takes in the glorifying of God's holiness and wisdom; he is seen here to be a holy God, who will needs testify his dislike of sin, wherever it is: A just God, that will needs punish it: A gracious God that will pardon: And such a wise God, as finds out the way, how, both to punish and pardon, without any the least imputation, either to his justice, or to his mercy and grace; and so he shews himself to be infinitely just, gracious, wise and holy, in the justification of sinners. These we may see, Rom. iii. 24, 26. Being justified freely by his grace, through the redemption that is in Jesus Christ. There justice and grace shine clearly, justification is free, yet there is a price laid down, and a satisfaction made to justice; and the 26th verse shews the end, to wit, To declare his righteousness, that he might be just, and the justifier of them who believe in Jesus; he hath indeed found a way, how to pardon sin, but so as it is through a redemption, or by the exacting of a price, he may be seen to be just, who will not pardon sin without a satisfaction: Justice appears in this, that Christ is put to pay a great price, and that he may be seen to be gracious, he hath laid down a way, how the price that was to be payed by Christ, might be imputed to, or reckoned, on the account of the guilty sinner, and that he might thereby be absolved: and thus justice and grace may kiss each other, in this admirable contrivance: and altho' none almost except Socinians deny the justice of God, in the justification of sinners, yet as they do doctrinally, in substance deny it; so many of us, who profess to abhor their doctrine, do practically deny it also.

And therefore, as the 1st Use of it, let me speak a little to unbelievers, and ask you, what think ye will become of you? ye must either betake yourselves to Christ's satisfaction, or ye must resolve to satisfy for yourselves. Secure hypocrites think of nothing but grace, and that God will always be gracious, and never suffer themselves to think of the necessity of a satisfaction to be made to his justice: and thus they slight, and in a manner deny his justice, as if he were not to be glorified in that attribute, as well as in his grace and mercy: whereas there is no other way to declare God to be just, in the justification of them that believe but this, which brings them to Christ's satisfaction.

Use 2d. It is ground of great consolation, and encouragement to a poor exercised soul, sensible of sin, whereupon to expect justification. It is God's end in justifying sinners to set forth the glory of his grace; and is it not much that God should contrive such a way for glorifying of himself, as should carry along with it good to us, yea, such a way as should issue in our good; which comes in as a subordinate end, to the glorifying of his grace, as the ultimate end?

end? May not this be an encouragement to them, to seek after justification on these terms, and for this end?

Use 3d. It shews, that as many as submit not to the way of this righteousness, and of justification by grace, are thwarting God's end; they set themselves to hinder and obstruct it, even that he should not be glorified in his justice and mercy: they do what they can, that God should neither be just nor gracious. But he will be just in condemning them, whether they will or not; though he be not glorified in his grace, as to them, they setting themselves, what they can, to hinder it, yet in his justice he shall most certainly be glorified. O! that men and women believed how great their guilt is, who are standing in the way of the glorifying of God's grace: it will be found in some respect, to be greater than the guilt of those abominable sins of adultery and murder, in the day of the Lord: and yet many of you will be found to have done this, and to have come short of righteousness.

For the 3d, that is, the meritorious cause, take it in this doctrine; that the meritorious cause, that procures our justification, and with respect to which God justifies a sinner, is the alone merit and satisfaction of Christ Jesus: and this arises from the text, on these two considerations. 1st, Because this justification is laid down, as an effect of Christ's soul-travel, and suffering: if justification be the proper and immediate effect of Christ's sufferings, then his soul-sufferings must be the meritorious cause of it, we cannot imagine another: he purposeth by his sufferings, for the elect, that they shall by his knowledge be justified, therefore they must be absolved, and justified, by his interposing to take on him their debt, and so his sufferings must be the procuring cause of it. The 2d consideration is taken from the words following, He shall justify many, for he shall bear their iniquities: If

Christ's bearing of our iniquities be the ground of our justification, or that by which it is procured, then his sufferings must be the meritorious cause of our justification, or that on account whereof we are justified: Because his bearing of our iniquities can no other ways be the cause of our justification, but by his interposing to merit the same for us by his sufferings. Would ye know, as if the prophet had said, how Christ's sufferings shall be the cause of our justification, here it is, he shall bear our iniquities; and therefore our justification flows therefrom: the Lord, by the prophet, hath so knit these two together, that his sufferings, both go before, and are subjoined to his justifying of many, that it may be put out of question, that the Mediator's sufferings, is the alone meritorious cause of his pronouncing the sentence of justification, and of accepting and accounting us as righteous before him.

This is not in so many words professedly controverted, or denied by the Papists, with whom we here deal: For they grant that Christ by his sufferings procures grace, and God's acceptation of our good works, in so far as they are rewarded beyond their condignity. But to make the difference betwixt them and us the more clear, we shall mention four things from the doctrine, and speak a little to them. We say then, that Christ's satisfaction is not only the meritorious cause of justification, but also 1st, It is the nearest and most immediate cause. 2^{dly}, The alone meritorious cause. 3^{dly}, The meritorious cause, as contradistinguished from, and opposed to our works, and inherent righteousness. 4^{thly}, It is the meritorious cause, as inherent in him and as imputed to us: These four are clear in the text, and may very well be deduced from the doctrine.

1st Then, we say, it is not only the meritorious cause, but the next immediate cause, causa propinqua (as we use to speak in the schools) of our justification;

tion; so that if it be asked, what is the cause or ground on which God absolves a sinner, or the next immediate thing, that he hath a respect to in his justifying of him? It is Christ's merit, his soul-travel and suffering. Papists deny this, and make the next immediate cause to be the grace infused in us, that which is called, gratia gratum faciens: But if ye ask the prophet, what is the ground, I mean the next immediate cause, on which justification is derived to many? he tells us, that it is not the inherent righteousness of those who are justified; but that it is Christ's soul-travel and his bearing of our iniquities: Hence, 1 Cor. i. 30. Christ is called our righteousness, He is, saith the apostle; made of God unto us, wisdom, righteousness, &c: not only by Christ have we a righteousness; that makes us acceptable to God, but his righteousness is ours, and God's respecting of us, in, or through it making us acceptable:

2dly, Not only is his righteousness the meritorious cause, but it is the only meritorious, or the alone meritorious cause; and herein Papists and we differ. They grant that Christ's satisfaction is the meritorious cause; but remotely only, as it procures inward or inherent grace, by which we merit; but they will not have it to be the only meritorious cause, but will needs have our own works to merit also, and that properly; whereas the prophet speaks of justification, as the effect of Christ's soul-travel only; and if so, then there can be no other thing admitted, for there cannot be two social or joint meritorious causes; therefore throughout the scripture, when the merit of justification is attributed to Christ, it excludes all other things, and is opposed to our own works; which is the third thing:

3dly, Then we say, that Christ's righteousness is the meritorious cause of our justification, as contradistinguished from, and opposed to our own inherent righteousness, or works; and herein also Papists and we differ. They grant indeed a meritorious influence to Christ's righteousness; but that is, say they, as it makes our own righteousness meritorious, not as contra-distinguished from, and opposed to our own righteousness, but as having influence on it. Now these are directly opposed in scripture; I shall only name that one clear place, Phil. iii. 9. That I may be found in him, not having mine own righteousness, which is of the law, but that which is by the faith of Christ. Where Paul consulting, and resolving what he will take himself to, as his defence at the bar of God, we see,

1. That it is his scope and design, that in the day of judgment, he may be found in such a case and posture, that he may be able to abide the trial. And
2. that he speaks of two righteousnesses, the one is his own, that is the inherent grace which he hath gotten, and the works which he hath done; the other is the righteousness of Christ without him, which is by faith. Now when he makes his reckoning, he is so far from joining these two together, as con-causes, or social causes of his justification, that he opposes them. That I may be found in him, not having mine own righteousness; in him, without my own, or, not having my own, &c. in him, as having given up, denied, and renounced my own righteousness; he will not admit of that on any terms, in less or in more; so clearly doth he, as to his justification before God, seclude his own righteousness, and betake himself to Christ's righteousness alone, as contradistinguished to his own.

4thly, We say, that Christ's righteousness as it is in him, and imputed to us, or made ours by imputation, is the alone meritorious cause of our justification and salvation; so as that which he hath purchased is reckoned, and accounted the sinners, as if it were his own inherently and personally. This I also gather from the words, By his knowledge shall my righteous Servant justify many, for he shall bear their iniquities. Would ye know, as if the prophet had said, how Christ is the meritorious cause of justification? Thus it is, because he shall bear their iniquities; if he hath taken on him the burden of their sins, and had their sins imputed to him, then it will follow by proportion, that they are justified by the imputation of his righteousness to them; and there is nothing that the scripture doth more inculcate than this, that we are justified by the righteousness of Christ, without us, and imputed to us, or reckoned ours; we by faith laying hold upon it, and God's accepting of it for us, makes it become ours; and yet there is nothing that we do more practically err in, and which Papists do more scorn and flout at, wholly enervating the way, and contrivance of grace, by excluding and shouldering out the righteousness of Christ, calling it in derision, a putative, or merely fancied, and imaginary righteousness, (as if there were no reality in it) and by bringing in, and establishing their own righteousness; though it be very clear from this, and many other scriptures, that Christ's righteousness must be ours by imputation, because he bare our iniquities. He became our righteousness, by paying of our debt, as our surety, and no other ways; the scripture never speaks of his being our righteousness, by procuring ability to us, to pay our own debt.

I shall clear this 4th branch a little further, because it will serve to clear the rest, that is, that Christ's righteousness, as it is in him, and imputed to us, is the only meritorious cause of our justification. And if we consider, 1. The way of justification that is used among men, this will be the more plain; there being two covenants, by the one of which life was once attainable, and by the other of which it is now attainable. 1. The covenant of works, which absolves a man that never brake it, which is, as when one among men, or before mens courts, is declared to be free, because he was never owing the debt. 2. The covenant of grace, that provides a surety to pay the sinners debt, upon whose payment thereof, being had recourse to by faith, there is access in law, to the sinner for absolution; even as it is in mens courts, though the principal debtor hath nothing to pay, yet if the surety pay the debt, it is the principal debtor's clearing; and if he should be again charged to pay the debt, his immediate defence would be, that the surety had payed it already. So it is here, the Lord hath borrowed, and made use of this way, that is used among men, to make the mystery of justification, which passeth in the court of God, the more to clear us; it is as if one should alledge, that such a person is owing so much, and he should say, I cannot be charged with it, and upon what ground? Not, because I am not owing the debt, but because such a one has payed it for me; so says the apostle, Rom. viii. 34. Who shall lay any thing to the charge of God's elect; it is God that justifieth; who shall condemn? It is Christ that died, &c. The defence proposed before the tribunal of God, is Christ dying, and that is as much as he hath payed the price, or debt, who then can charge it on the principal debtor? And the frame and contexture of the words shew, that it is a judicial procedure, for they suppose a charge, or a libel, and a sentence, and the meritorious cause of the sentence of absolution is, that Christ hath died.

2dly, If we consider the nature of the two covenants, and compare them together, it will be clear, the Papists confound the two covenants; for works to them are the condition of both covenants, making use of that place, Matth. xix. 17, 21. Keep the commands; if thou wilt be perfect, sell all thou hast, and give to the poor; quite contrary to the scope of it; for therein Christ is putting the man to a thing impossible to himself, to bring him to see the necessity of a Mediator, and discover his unsoundness, when he will not forego his possessions for him. But the scripture doth so clearly difference the covenant of grace and the covenant covenant of works, that they are opposed to each other : for the covenant of works sayeth, do this, and live ; and the covenant of grace sayeth, If thou shalt believe with thy heart in the Lord Jesus, and confess with thy mouth, thou shalt be saved. And therefore the account of ones being justified in the covenant of grace must be different, from the account whereon one is justified in the covenant of works, otherways they could not be opposite ; the covenant of works respects the inherent righteousness, as the condition ; the covenant of grace respects faith taking hold of the righteousness of Christ ; and therefore his righteousness must justify, as being in him without us, and as imputed to us ; it cannot be our righteousness within that justifies ; for so, it would be the same with the covenant of works ; for though Christ did procure inherent righteousness to us, it makes no difference in the condition itself, which is works.

3dly, It will be clear, if we consider how the scripture speaks of Christ's righteousness becoming ours, even as our sins became Christ's, and was the cause (if we may so speak) of his condemnation ; that is, as he became liable to the curse, that as he stood a legal person in our room, he became guilty, and liable to the payment of our debt ; for otherways it is abomination once to speak of his condemnation ; and if his righteousness became ours, as our sin became his, then certainly his righteousness is the cause of our justification, as it is in him inherently, and in us by imputation only. The blasphemy of Antinomians is most detestable, and not at all pleaded for, even by Papists, and therefore we stand not on it here. Now our sin became Christ's by imputation, therefore his righteousness must be ours the same way. If it were asked, how we are justified ? The text answers, he shall justify many, because he shall bear their iniquities. The prophet makes his sufferings to be the antecedent, whereof our justification is the consequent, for his bearing bearing of our iniquities is given as the reason of our justification. This also is clear, 2 Cor. v. ult. He was made sin for us who knew no sin, that we might be made the righteousness of God in him. In which words the Spirit of the Lord doth so explain, bound, and inculcate this, that there can be no rational exception against it, nor evasion from it; he was made sin, that is, a sin-offering, or an offering for our sin; though there was no guile found in his mouth; though he had no sin, neither was capable of sin, yet he was made a sacrifice for our sin; as he was made sin, so are we made the righteousness of God in him. If any should ask, what is it to be made righteous? The apostle answers, even as Christ was made sin, the same way are we made righteous; and that is, by imputation of Christ's righteousness to us, and not by our own merit; we have no more merit than he had sin; but as he was accounted to be the sinner, though free of sin in his own person; so a believing sinner is accounted righteous, though without any merit in himself, because God hath engaged in his covenant, to make Christ's righteousness forth coming to the believer; though that were enough, yet the Spirit of the Lord addeth a further word, in him, to answer that question, whether Christ hath procured inherent holiness to us, that thereby we may be justified? no sayeth he, that is not the way, our righteousness is in him, and not inherent in us, even as the sin imputed to Christ is inherently in us; so the righteousness whereby we are justified, is inherently in him.

4thly, It may be clear from this, that frequently it is called a righteousness that is attained by faith, and that it is opposed to our own righteousness and working; now it cannot be conceived, how we can get a righteousness by faith, but by pleading that his righteousness may be imputed unto us. Rom. iii. 22. It is called the righteousness which is by faith; and verse 25. Whom God hath set forth for a propitiation through faith faith in his blood; and chap. iv. verse 5. To him that worketh not, but believeth on him that justifyeth the ungodly, his faith is counted for righteousness; faith taking hold of his righteousness offered to sinners in the gospel, his righteousness so taken hold of, becomes a propitiation to pacify God towards the sinner, as if he had satisfied in his own person. Even as if a company of men had been in rebellion, and a proclamation of pardon comes forth from the king, because he is satisfied by a great friend, who hath payed their ransom; which proclamation of pardon runs on these terms, who ever will lay down arms, and come in, and accept of the king's pardon that is procured, and made offer of, shall be acquitted of the guilt of rebellion, and received into favour, who, when ever they are challenged, will plead their absolution on that friend's procurement, and offered on such terms in the proclamation. Now suppose (as I hinted before, not long ago) that when these rebels have yielded themselves, and accepted of the terms, if any of them should be called to answer at the bar, or the king's bench, as being challenged for his rebellion; his answer and defence would be, that such a proclamation was made to us, and I laid down my arms, and accepted of the pardon; this in justice would be admitted, and accepted for their release, because that procurement or procured pardon becomes the person's, according to the terms of the proclamation. It is even so here, we are rebels against God, Christ Jesus steps in, as the great friend of sinners, and satisfies divine justice for us; and thereupon the proclamation comes out, as it is, Acts xiii. 38, 39. 'Be it known unto you, men and brethren, that through this man is preached unto you the forgiveness of sins; and by him all that believe are justified from all things, from which ye could not be justified by the law of Moses.' When the sinner is arraigned before the tribunal of God, he hath two acts of his

his faith; one that submits to God, and to his way of absolving sinners, and another that pleads for absolution, not on the terms of his own innocency, but on the terms on which Christ's satisfaction is made offer to him; and so faith justifies, as it takes hold of the meritorious cause, and builds its defence at God's bar, on Christ's righteousness alone. Its the procurement of the Mediator that it pleads upon, and in this sense the imputed righteousness of Christ, and the righteousness of faith are one and the same, because faith takes hold of the righteousness without us; which can be no other but the righteousness of Christ.

5thly, It is clear from the plain and direct expressions of scripture to this purpose. Take but these few, as Rom. iv. 3, and 22. compared with Gen. xv. 6. Abraham believed God, and it was counted to him for righteousness: He had the promise of Christ to come, and received and rested on it; it was not his faith, but the promise of the Messiah rested on by faith, that was imputed to him for righteousness; and verse 6. Even as David describeth the blessedness of the man to whom God imputeth righteousness without works. It is not, blessed is the man who is holy (though such a man is seriously studying to be holy, albeit not in order to his justification thereby) but blessed is he to whom righteousness is imputed without works; and he confirms it from Psal. xxxii. Blessed is he whose transgression is forgiven, and whose sin is covered; blessed is the man to whom the Lord imputeth not iniquity. Blessed is the man to whom the Lord imputes righteousness, tho' he have it not in himself; so, 2 Cor. v. 19. God was in Christ reconciling the world unto himself, not imputing their trespasses unto them. Jesus Christ is the reconciler of the world to God by his own merit; being God and man in one person, the efficacy of his sufferings reconcileth the world of the elect, and how is this purchased reconciliation applied? By not imputing their trespasses unto them: That which is here called led justification, is there called not imputing of transgression, through that righteousness which Christ hath purchased, or through offering up of himself in a sacrifice to God, to satisfy his justice.

6thly, We might say, that this way of justification through the imputation of Christ's righteousness, ought to be admitted, according to Papists themselves; for, 1. They grant that young children, who cannot merit, are justified and admitted to glory by Christ's merit, as the immediate and very cause of their justification, and why not also of those that are at age? Is he not the common cause? What absurdity is in the one more than in the other? Is not the justification of both alike free? Tho' there be difference in the manner of application, yet in the meritorious cause, there is no difference; and seeing to children, Christ is the meritorious cause of their justification, why not also to those come to age? 2. They will grant an imputation of the righteousness, and merits of other saints to them that want of their own, as to the removal of temporal plagues, and the taking them out of purgatory; and if they grant that there may be an imputation of the merits of saints, why deny they the imputation of the merits of Christ, as to the removal of eternal wrath? Is there any probability, that there can be any imputation of the one, and not an imputation of the other? 3. They allow an imputation of Christ's merits, as to the procuring of the first grace without faith apprehending him; and if, by their own doctrine, it be not absurd to speak of Christ's merit, as to the infusion of grace at first, why shall it be thought absurd to speak of Christ's merit, as to the procuring of glory? 4. They grant, that there is an imputation of Christ's righteousness, as to the procuring of glory in a higher degree (tho' they say, that it is a far better life, which comes by our own works) and why not, as to the procuring of glory in a lower degree, yea, both of grace and glory, and of every good thing? We have insisted on this the more, 1st, Because it is the main foundation of our faith, and the end of it, and the great scope of the gospel, 2dly, Because there are so many great about this, and a gross mistake in this is remediless, mistakes when we come even before the tribunal of God. 3. Because it serves much to clear this truth; for we would have you to know, that it is not enough to speak of Christ's merit as the cause of our friendship with God; a Papist will do that who yet leaneth not to Christ's merit alone, but to his own, at least in part, and in conjunction with Christ's; and therefore we would now and then speak of this, because there is such horrible ignorance of it, tho' a fundamental truth.

Therefore 1st, Make this Use of it to inform yourselves in the causes of your justification; and to reduce them to questions and answers to yourselves; so that if ye ask what is the efficient cause of justification? It is God the party offended. What is the final cause of it? It is his glory. What is the meritorious cause? It is Christ's merits, or his righteousness imputed to us. What is the inward instrumental cause? It is faith, &c. according to the solid answer given in our Catechism, to that question, What is justification? It is an act of God's free grace, wherein he pardoneth all our sins, and accepteth us as righteous in his sight, only for the righteousness of Christ imputed to us, and received by faith alone. Where the efficient cause is God's free grace, Christ's righteousness the only meritorious cause, and the only inward instrumental cause? God's pardoning of all our sin, and excepting of us as righteous. Remember well, that it is not Christ's righteousness, as having a merit in it, to procure inherent righteousness, but as it is imputed to us, and accounted our's that justifies us. Thus ye will remember the difference betwixt Christ's righteousness and our own; and as for the external instrumental cause, it is holden out in these words of our catechism, in the description of faith, as he is offered to us in the gospel. All these causes must, according to this dispensation, concur to our justification and the pardoning of our sins.

The 2d Use serves to teach us to be on our guard against the Popish error of justification by works; tho' we are here mercifully kept free, yet the land is tempted in several corners of it, to shuffle by Christ's righteousness, and to bring in mens own righteousness or holiness, as the ground of their acceptation before God. There are some appearances of it within a few miles of this place. And since this error draws souls away from that which is their right, and only defence before God, that is Christ's righteousness, it cannot but ruin them; which should make you all to look about you, and upon this account to abhor it. It is one of the great delusions of the man of sin, which being once admitted, will with your own consent, bring you again in bondage to a covenant of works.

Use 3. Follow this way in your practice in your seeking after justification, renounce your own righteousness, and lean to Christ's righteousness alone. What better are many of us in our practice than Papists? If ye ask many, what is it that satisfies the justice of God? Some will answer, 1st, Their good prayers, or their good works; and if they have done a fault, they shall make amends. 2^{dly}, Others will say, That they have a good heart to God, and they mind well, what though its but little, that they do. Others will thank God, that they have been kept from gross evils, and that he hath helped them to pray, and wait on ordinances. 4^{thly}, Others will say, we can merit nothing, but we hope through Christ's righteousness, our holiness and prayers will be accepted; not as duties, or fruits of faith, but they think to make these two concur, as the ground of their justification; to

The 4th use serves for great consolation to a poor sinner, that hath no righteousness of his own, and who, without this, would never have peace; what would any of you think, or say, if ye had your prayers and good works to present to God, for the ground of your justification? But here is a way for the most profane and graceless to be justified, which we do not mention to encourage wickedness, or an indifferency, as to the having or wanting of inherent grace and holiness; God forbid we should; but to hold forth the excellency of this way of justification by grace, whereto, if ye kindly submit, ye may come to be justified. It is not your own righteousness, whether ye have less or more of it, that justifies you; for on that ye must not depend, but endeavour to make this sure and certain: Therefore let not this grace be offered to you in vain; if ye slight it, it will be a fearful charge, and will make you one day stand with a silent mouth, and an empty hand, when ye shall be charged, because ye have not laid hold on this righteousness, which only can answer all charges; and ye shall stand naked before God; because ye had this robe of Christ's imputed righteousness, for covering of your nakedness offered you, and would not put it on. This is it that bare David, Abraham, and Paul through, and all other believers; yea, that which, to say so, carried our Lord Jesus through, who was justified in the Spirit, as he stood in the room of elect sinners; and believers in him may be fully assured of their justification thro' his imputed righteousness, not that which is his essential, but suretiship righteousness; therefore press forward to make use of it; and let God himself bless through Christ what hath been said to you to this purpose.

S E R M O N LVII.

ISAIAH LIII. Verse 11.

Verse 11.—By his knowledge shall my righteous Servant justify many, for he shall bear their iniquities.

THESE words shew the great scope and design of the covenant of redemption, and of Christ's sufferings agreed upon therein; which have been so much insisted on in the former verses, and that's in a word, that there may be a way laid down, how a sinner may be justified; therefore there is the greater need, that this point be well studied, in all the causes of it.

It follows now that we consider this part of the words, which holds out the mean, by which this benefit is made our's, and that is, by his knowledge, which holds forth the instrumental causes of our justification. It is ordinarily so called, and we see no cogent reason inducing us to a change of the designation. Faith here is called knowledge; not as it were a bare speculative notion, such as devils may have, but because knowledge is a principal antecedent to faith, and faith is consequent to, and supposes preceding knowledge; as we may see, Rom. x. How shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? Thus faith is exprest by knowledge, John xvii. 3. This is life eternal, to know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ, &c. Now it cannot be eternal life, to know by a meer notional or speculative knowledge; for several reprobate men exceed many believers in this; but it is to know so as to believe in God, and to rest on the Mediator for life through him; as it is, 2 Pet. i. 3. He hath given unto us all things that pertain to life and godliness, through the knowledge of him, &c. Meer speculative knowledge cannot be the condition of the promises; for they are made to the men that believe, which believing takes in not only the act act of the mind knowing and assenting but of the will consenting and closing with the object known; and this will be the more clear from these two; 1st, That by knowledge here is meant, that by which justification is made our's, or applied to us, and that which intitles us to it; now mere speculative knowledge doth not that, but it is faith embracing him who is made known. 2^{dly}, If we compare that which is attributed to knowledge here with that which is attributed to faith elsewhere, Rom v. 1. Being justified by faith, we have peace with God; and Rom. iii. 25. He is the justifier of him which believeth in Jesus; we shall find, that what is called knowledge here, is called faith there; so that we may, without hesitation, take the meaning of the words thus, My righteous Servant shall by faith in him justify many, who, by his bearing of their iniquities shall be absolved, and set free; therefore what is spoken of knowledge in the doctrine, we may look on it as agreeing to and meant of faith.

We shall here insist a little on this doctrine, which is implied in the words, that justification through faith, or the obtaining of the pardon of sin, through Christ's righteousness, taking hold of by faith, doth necessarily presuppose knowledge, in the person that may expect it; or thus, faith where it is saving, and such as justifies, hath always knowledge going along with it, otherways faith could not be called knowledge, there may be knowledge without faith, but there can be no faith without knowledge, and so consequently a sinner cannot expect justification without knowledge; for making out of this, ye may consider these things. 1. Faith is of itself nothing but as it lays hold on some object, how can faith lay hold on an object except it know it? as the word, is, Rom. 10. How can they believe except they hear? Can any person rest on an unknown Mediator? that sure, were not faith but a blind guessing; it is just, and if ye should say that ye believe such a thing, when yet ye cannot at all tell what what it is, which is not faith, but as I said, blind guessing, and presumption. 2. Faith as justifying is always holden forth, as making use of, and giving credit to that which is revealed in the word; hence we that hear the gospel, have that revealed to us therein, binding us to the belief of it, that heathens have not; as it is, Rom. i. 17. I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ; for therein is the righteousness of God revealed from faith to faith. Where it is necessarily presupposed, that the revealing of the righteousness of the gospel, (which here comprehends the knowing of it) must go before faith, and as a person grows in faith, he grows in the knowledge of it; hence also, they are said to be strong in faith who are strong in knowledge; and they are said to be weak in knowledge, who are weak in faith, Rom. xiv. 1. and xv. 1. because they knew not that the ceremonial law was taken away, and particularly the difference of meats, and so durst not hazard on some things, which their Christian liberty allowed them in. 3. Consider, that in justification God would have a sinner to proceed as a man doth, who makes his defence before an earthly tribunal of justice; who, if he plead well, and on good grounds, he succeeds the better; and as it is dangerous, in a weighty cause depending, to have an ignorant advocate, who puts in a wrong defence; so is it here, and in this case to be ignorant; hence Rom. x. it is given as the reason of the Jews miscarriage in the point of justification, but being ignorant of the righteousness of God, they went about to establish their own righteousness; that is, being ignorant of that which God would accept for righteousness, they thought to patch up one of their own; and so is it still; for some hope to speed by their prayers; others by their good heart to God; a third sort put in their good works, if not in express words, yet practically; all which may let us see the necessity of knowledge to justification. 4. Consider, that there must be repentance, tance, ere a sinner can be justified, which supposeth knowledge; for he must needs know his sin, and that his own righteousness will not avail; and so long as he is ignorant he cannot repent, nor renounce his own righteousness; for while he is so, he cannot know what is sin, and what is not sin, what is faith, and what is presumption, unless it be by guess; and persons will never be suitably affected with sin by guess. The apostle Paul, as it is, Rom. vii. 9. Before the law came, I was alive; that is, before it came to him in the knowledge of its spiritual meaning, and plain extent of it; while he was a Pharisee, he was alive in his own esteem; but when the commandment came, sin revived, and he died; he then saw need of other righteousness than his own. We preach to you sometimes the necessity of repentance, and of your being humbled, and that ye should deny your own righteousness, and betake you to Christ's; but except there be knowledge of your unrighteousness, it is as if we should bid you wash where there is no spot seen. 5. Look forward to the duties of holiness, which are necessary though not to justify you, yet that ye may live as it becomes justified persons, though not to make peace, yet to glorify God and to keep up friendship with him. Now can any know, or do duties, who are ignorant of them? Hence it comes to pass, that some venture on sin, taking it to be duty, and are affrighted sometimes at duty, as if it were sin. 6. Consider your own peace, and in order to it, there is a necessity of knowledge, else there will be still a doubting, whether ye are right or wrong. Hence it is said, Rom. xiv. He that doubteth, or doeth doubtfully, shall be damned; for he hath a sentence in his own conscience, against himself, tho' he may be doing that which on the matter is right. 7. In a word, ignorance puts us out of frame, to make use of many excellent opportunities and privileges; we know not what use to make of the word, of the sacraments, or

of Christ. How many have lived a considerable number of years strangers to the advantages that are to be obtained by him, through their want of knowledge? Therefore, John iv. Christ says to the Samaritan woman, If thou hadst known who it is that asked it of thee, thou wouldst have given him drink, and he should have given thee living water; where he insinuates, that her ignorance was a great cause why she kept at such a distance from him. It is hardly possible, that so many poor souls should abide at such a distance from Christ, if they knew him. There is no desire after that which is unknown; and therefore many do live at such a distance from Christ, because they have not so much as the literal knowledge, or historical faith of his worth.

The uses we make of this doctrine are three: 1st, Take it for granted, if ever you would see the face of God, that there is a necessity of knowledge; for knowledge is a piece of God's image, as well as holiness; and knowledge is commanded as well as holiness. Knowledge was placed in the first man Adam, as well as holiness; and when we are renewed after the image of God, in conformity to the second Adam, we are renewed in knowledge; and not only so, but knowledge is a mean of the exercise of faith, of repentance, and of holiness; and if such a thing be needful, by the necessity of a mean, in order to an end: If obedience to a command, or, if the thing itself that is to be known be needful, then knowledge must be needful. It is true, we would beware of extremities here; as either to say on the one hand, that there must be such a high degree of knowledge; for in the speculative part of knowledge, to speak so, reprobates may go beyond believers; or, upon the other hand, to think that knowledge is enough, and that there needs no more but knowledge, as alas, many do rest upon their knowledge, and therefore we should beware of separating these two, knowledge and faith.

If it be asked here, what knowledge is requisite to justification? I would speak a word to this question, not so much for satisfying of curiosity, as for your instruction, who are more ignorant, and to shew the necessity of the thing, and to give you a short view of those things that are necessary to be known about this matter; and therefore, 1st, Ye must know God that justifies you, e'er ye can be justified; as it is, John xvii. 3. This is life eternal, to know thee the only true God, and him whom thou hast sent, Jesus Christ. If ever ye be absolved before such a judicatory, ye must know your judge. That there is one God, that he is one in his essence, and that there are three persons, yet so, as the Trinity of persons doth not hinder or obstruct the unity or oneness of the God-head, 1 John v. 7. There are three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost, and these three are one. Study then to know God, who is your judge, not so much out of curiosity, seeking to know how the persons differ, as to their manner of subsisting, as how to be fixed in the faith of the thing. 2^{dly}, Ye should know yourselves, and what may be charged on you before God. Can men carry it rightly before a judge, or, before a judicatory, if they know not how it stands with them? And this will lead you to know the state and case wherein ye were made at first, and the covenant of works, which God made with man at the beginning, when he gave to him the promise of life, upon condition of obedience, and that ye are liable to the curse, due for the breach of that law and covenant, else ye will never know your hazard; and knowing the breach of that law and covenant of works, it will make you, through God's blessing, to seek after justification, which otherwise ye will never do. And so ye are to know, that the first covenant was broken by Adam, and that this made him and all his posterity liable to the curse, as being guilty of this transgression; and this takes in the knowledge of original sin, even of the sinful estate wherein ye were born, and of your actual sins. 3dly, Ye must know, how a sinner, lying in such a state and case, under sin and wrath, may come to be absolved; and this leads you to know, that there is a new covenant made thro' a Mediator, in which there is a promise of life and salvation, thro' believing in him, which, Rom. x. is called the law of faith, which gives a sinner ground of hope to be justified by the righteousness of a surety, and leads him to know the defence, that he may, and ought to plead upon before God. And there is here presupposed, as a necessity of knowing yourselves, so a necessity of knowing the law, and covenant of works (for if we plead innocent in any one sin, whereof we are guilty, it may hazard our eternal ruin) and a necessity of knowing Jesus Christ, who is the meritorious cause of our justification; that he became man, and did take to himself a true human body, and a reasonable soul; that by the union of his two natures, he might be God and man in one person, in reference to which he must needs be known; for if we know him not to be man, we cannot understand how divine justice is satisfied; and if we know him not to be God, we cannot understand how the human nature can be sustained, and supported, and carried through in satisfying the justice of God; and withal, a necessity of knowing how the Mediator procures this justification; and this leads us to know his offices, how he was a priest, and interposed betwixt God and sinners, and made himself an offering for our sin, and maketh intercession for us; how he was a prophet, and how, when the thing was unknown, to wit, how a sinner might have peace with God, he revealed it of old by his prophets, in the Old Testament, and by his apostles and ministers in the New Testament, and doth by his Spirit enlighten the soul, to understand the difference betwixt justification by faith and justification by works; how he is a king to subdue sin in us, to mortify our corrupt nature, that will still boast till it be subdued, to guide us in his way, to fight our spiritual battles in us, and for us, and to manage all his and our enemies; otherwise, if we know not this, though we were justified just now, we should be led captive by sin and Satan to our ruin within an hour, but knowing him to be King, it gives faith a just expectation of perseverance and victory. 4thly, As we must know what Christ is, so we must know what is in Christ, and what is communicated and applied to sinners by him, and so the condition of the covenant of grace, which is faith, whereby we come to be united to Christ; and that this faith is not a bare assenting to the truth, but a closing with, and a resting on him; for we can never believe, except we know what faith is. 5thly, It is needful, that we know what duty is called for, from a justified person; to wit, repentance and holiness, because tho' he justifies none for repentance, yet he justifies none but penitents: and he requires repentance from all whom he justifies; Except ye repent, saith Christ, ye shall all likewise perish, for the curse lies at the door; and we are so to repent, as that with grief, and hatred of sin, we turn from it unto God, with full purpose of heart, and endeavour after new obedience. 6thly, There is also a necessity of the knowledge of Christ's ordinances (though not absolutely in order to justification) to know the sacraments, and how they represent Christ, and the benefits that come by him; and how they do ratify and confirm the believer's right to him, and those good things promised through him. Let me intreat you, believers, and as many as look for justification, to study thoroughly to know, that these things are necessary to be known; even to know God, and yourselves, and what ye may be justly charged with before him, that your mouths may be stopped; and also to know Jesus Christ and his offices, (for ye can never upon just ground expect justification, except ye know know who hath procured it) to know what God requires of those who are justified; in a word, study so much as may bring you to know your lost estate, and the remedy thereof, and how to found your defence, when ye come before God, &c. And if ye would study thus to know God, and know yourselves, and your natural condition, and Jesus Christ, and the way how ye come to be justified through him, and your duty to him, and so make a catechism to yourselves out of these few heads, it were a short and sure way to come to knowledge.

The 2d Use serves for reproof and conviction to them that lie still in ignorance, which is a most sinful and dangerous condition; for if knowledge be a duty, and if ignorance be a sin, and such a sin as hazards the soul, then what a woful case are many of you in, who now hear me? Laying aside all other sins, I am even ashamed to speak of the great ignorance that is among you. How many of you are there that cannot give any tolerable account of your catechism? Who know not your natural state and condition, nor the way how to come at peace with God, nor any ground for your faith to rest on, nor Christ, nor his offices? And alas! if it be so, what better are ye than Heathens? Sure ye are much worse, because ye have despised knowledge. Can the gospel give you faith, to whom it never gave knowledge? There are several sorts of persons, to whom I would here speak a word. 1st, There are some that never lay the necessity of knowledge to heart, betwixt whom and Turks and Pagans there is, in this respect, but little difference; and yet such will be ready to say, we live, and do as well as we can; that there may not be a quarrel or controversy betwixt God and us. But is it possible but there must be a quarrel, if it were but on this alone account, that ye think there is none? O! that ye would consider, what a sin ignorance is. When the devil appeared in the world, he made it a great part of his first work to extinguish and put out the light of knowledge; and by this means he labours still to keep people in ignorance; hence the apostle says, 2 Cor. iii. If our gospel be hid, it is hid to them who are lost, whose eyes the god of this world hath blinded. Profanity and error are great baits and snares; but ignorance carries more to hell than both these do; for ignorance fostereth and cherisheth, if it do not also beget profanity and error; as the apostle Peter insinuates, when he says, that the ignorant or unlearned, wrest or pervert the scriptures unto their own destruction. Much ignorance, and conceit of knowledge, will soon and easily make people loose, and become a pray to error, and also to profanity: Must not ignorance then be an evil thing, when it leads the way to so many other sins, and at last to hell and destruction? Hence it is, at least in part, that the kingdom of Satan is called the kingdom of darkness; and sure they are very proper subjects of his kingdom, who are ignorant; and is it possible, think ye, that people can think of God, or of their duty aright, or have any solid peace, who are in that condition? They are just like to one sleeping on the top of a mast, in great hazard, and yet utterly senseless of it. Look but to two or three words, that hold forth the dreadful danger and hazard of your condition, who are ignorant. The first is that, 2 Thess. i. Christ will come in flaming fire, to render vengeance to all them that know not God, and obey not the gospel. The second is, Hosea iv. My people perish for want of knowledge. The third is, Isaiah xxvii. This is a people of no understanding, therefore he that made them, will have no mercy on them. Think not then little of ignorance, neither think yourselves to be well, so long as ye live in it. A 2d sort will readily grant, that ignorance is an evil thing, and that knowledge is good and desirable; but yet they take no pains to have their ignorance cured, and removed, or to attain knowledge. They are secure and confident, confident, though poor, blind and wretched, and make their ignorance a cloke of excuse for their other sins. Hence some will say, we have been poor ignorant ones, and we hope that God will not lay sin to our charge: Oh! what delusion and desperate danger is here! If it be asked, (and it would become us well to enquire into it) what can be the reason of this horrible gross ignorance that is among us? which is such that we are almost hopeless of many of you, if some extraordinary work of God's spirit fall not in on your minds and hearts; very often these go together, that the most ignorant are the most confident; the causes of this may be several, as, 1. Persons undervaluing the practice of religion; let the most ignorant persons be in earnest in the practice of religion, and they will readily thro' God's blessing, seek after, so as to come at some measure of knowledge. This is the fountain of your ignorance, that ye are not in earnest in religion: Then shall ye know, (saith the prophet Hosea, chap. vi.) if ye follow on to know the Lord. Excuse not your ignorance, and want of knowledge, by your not being book-learned, by your want of time and leisure, and by other such shifts: If ye were in good earnest, and serious in seeking after the knowledge of the things of religion, ye would in some measure understand, and apprehend them. But ye come and hear, and sit for an hour, and take no heed to what is spoken; ye will not read the Catechism, nor ask a question about what ye are ignorant of, nor will take heed to what is said, when others are examined. There are none of you, but if ye were in earnest, ye might come to some good measure of knowledge; because they were sometimes as ignorant as ye are, and as incapable, who yet have come to knowledge; and these will be witnesses against you, who had the same gospel, the same seasons and means of knowledge, and yet continued still in your ignorance. 2. Many of you do not ponder the

sinfulness and hazard of ignorance; for ye continue as secure, as if God would never lay it to your charge. Ye would not lie in the sin of drunkenness, or of swearing, or of any other such things without a challenge, but ye can lie still in your ignorance, and in the sin of not profiting by the means which ye are under, and yet dispense with yourselves therein; and ye secretly say within yourselves, if we be well other-ways, we hope knowledge will not be required of us. But will not, think ye, God's image be required to be in you? Are not faith, repentance and holiness required? And can any of these, I pray, be without knowledge? Do you see any touched with the impression of their sin and guilt, but as soon as they fall to the study of knowledge; And who continue to be ignorant, except stupid persons, who never saw their hazard? which is an ordinary companion and attendant of ignorance. A 3^d cause is negligence and slothfulness. The wise man says, The hand of the diligent maketh rich, and slothfulness brings on poverty; in every thing, if ye compare people together, ye will find that wherever any are soberly and seriously diligent, God blesses it; so that we may gather, and conclude their diligence from their knowledge. There are many here, who, I suppose are very ignorant; but let me ask you, what time and pains have ye ever bestowed on the study of knowledge? Ye hear preaching, and ye read a chapter of the Bible now and then; but that is not enough, for ye may be present here, and yet not hear to any purpose. How many come to hear the preaching of the word, from whom, thro' their own fault, devils come, as so many crows on new sown land, and snatch away the word that is sown? and it is never known, that such seed was sown; for most part, ye either hear negligently, or ye quickly forget all that ye hear; ye never speak of it in your families, neither take ye any time for reading, and pondering the Catechism: How many ny of you did ever set any days, or hours apart to study knowledge? Ye will cry out against pretended enthusiasms and inspirations, as delusions, and there is good reason for it: But how shall ye get knowledge, if ye will be at no pains for it? Your practice says, ye expect it should come by immediate inspiration, without all use of ordinary and appointed means. 4. Others will say, that they would fain know, but they are very dull and incapable; and it is often true, that they are so. But are such in earnest, out of love to knowledge, studying to come by it? It is said of some, 2 Thes. ii. Because they received not the truth in love, God gave them up to strong delusions, to believe a lie. There are many, who study knowledge, but not from a right principle, nor from a right motive; it may be, that they may get their token to come to the Lord's supper, to avoid shame when they are examined, or that they may be able to talk: It is just with God to let such want knowledge. 5. Many go not about the use of ordinary means, as having therein need of God's blessing, and of his Spirit to help them rightly to apprehend his mysteries, they pray not for knowledge as God's gift; how many of you, when ye take up the Catechism to read, fall down on your knees, to seek God's blessing on your reading thereof? When John is speaking of the benefits that come by Christ, this is put in among the rest, And hath given us understanding, that we may know him that is true, 1 John v. 20. If therefore ye would know God aright, seek his blessing in the use of his own appointed means.

The 3d Use serves to exhort you to, and to commend the study of knowledge to you, as a necessary, commendable, and profitable duty; can we hope to prevail with you in any thing, if we prevail not with you in this, even to lay the necessity of knowledge to heart? will not the excellency of the object, the authority of God commanding it, the advantages that come by it, with the prejudices that attend and follow the want of it, commend it to you? will ye ever be persuaded to seek after faith and holiness, that will not be persuaded to study knowledge? It is a wonder how many of you can have the confidence to say, that ye keep your hearts to God, when you are so void of the very form of religion, which much consists in knowledge; for it is that wherein it is kepted, and whereby through grace it is suitably exercised; sure ye can never have the power of religion, who want the form of it; therefore let me exhort you all, especially such of you, as have some eminency above others to study knowledge, let the more aged study it, and let those that are younger study it, if the time of youth go over without it, it is one to many if ever the loss be recovered and made up again; and ye that can read, and have time and parts, study the knowledge of God; many of you will be very sad and dreadful spectacles in the great day, when ye shall be charged with this, that ye never judged precious Jesus Christ to be of that much worth, as once to put you seriously to the study to know him; this is no fable nor fiction, but a sad truth, when men value and esteem any thing, be it science or art, they will be at pains and give diligence to know it, because they prize it. Therefore for helping you to the study of knowledge, take these few directions, and a caveat or two in the close. 1. Let none put themselves without the reach of this exhortation, let none say, we are too old to learn, if ever ye think to be justified by Christ, knowledge concerns you greatly; it were a commendable thing to see aged men and women carefully, and conscientiously reading the catechism; and could we once but get you under the impression, and conviction of this, as a duty, we should think that much were gained. 2. Spend some time about this in private weekly; it may be, it were fit that some of you did so daily, ye spend much time more idly; if you knew

the hazard of ignorance, ye would even take some set time to study knowledge, and this would not need to be counted any wronging of, or incroaching upon your Christian liberty; as you stint something for prayer, may ye not stint something to read the Catechism, or to go to some family, where ye that cannot read yourselves, may have one to read it to you; and to several, I may add for a help to this, that ye would take a part of that time, which ye spend on tipling; is it not obvious, that the person that is ofttest in the ale house, or in the tavern, is ordinarily the most stupidly ignorant; tell me whether it is better spent time to take an hour, in two or three days, and bestow it in reading of the scriptures, or of some good and edifying book, whereby you may come to knowledge; and to grow in it, than to take several hours every day almost, in an ale house, or tavern, many of you, as it is well known, will sit down in such places, at four or five a clock in the after-noon, and continue till eight or nine at night; how much ye drink, I speak not of that, but sure ye mispend much precious time, and much debauch your own spirits. What if by such doings, ye be laying a ground for this challenge; Sir, you lived in such a place, under such means, and you spent your time so and so, you might have been freed from the guilt of mispending of your time, and of your ignorance, had you taken a part, or the whole time, and spent it in the study of knowledge; would not this be better for your families, better for your souls, and better for your bodies? Would it not prevent much sin, and much reproach? And therefore, if ye lay any weight on the welfare of soul or body, bestow more time in the study of knowledge. That sin of tipling brings along with it many other sins, and would it not be well done to put some duty, and even this duty in particular, in the place of it? Others of you, that drink and tipple not away so much of your time, ye know what time ye spend walking on the plain-stones, and in prattling and talking of idle and unedifying subjects, in drolling and jesting, or in sitting over the fire, as we use to speak, in your houses, doing nothing; when will ye take some of that time in seeking after knowledge? Others of you, that follow your callings, will ye leave your work a little sooner than ye use to do, on the saturday evening, or take the sabbath afternoon for this work; some of you may study knowledge in your shops, others may do it in your houses, if ye would but give over to walk up and down in the streets, when ye are not at all called to do so. 3. Make conscience to improve the means of knowledge which ye have; read especially the Bible, and also the grounds of religion, compendiously summed in the catechisms, lesser and larger; ye have frequent preaching and catechising, therefore study to get something, and put every day's lesson to another; and this would, through God's blessing, increase your knowledge; for instance, take this lesson to day, that nothing can justify but the righteousness of Christ, laid hold on by faith; take another with you the next day, and let not one day's lesson drive out another. Let the husband and the wife, the children, and servants, compare their notes, or what they remember of sermons together; be often speaking of what ye hear, in your families: Ye have, it may be, some neighbours, who would be content that ye come in to them; or, it may be they have children who can help you; make use of such means and persons, and that would both help your knowledge, and evidence your love to the communion of saints. 4. Be in the use of the means, with an eye to God for his blessing on them, pray to him for opened eyes, and that he would give you an understanding to know him. There is a stupidity in many of you, that makes all that ye hear to go by you, and as it were, to slide off you; so that if it were known, some would wonder how there could could be such ignorance amongst them that frequently hear the gospel. 5. Any light of knowledge that ye have, be tender of it in your practice; God ordinarily refuseth to give more, where that which he hath given is not used well; where men do not like to retain God in their knowledge, or where the truth is detained in unrighteousness, it provoketh God to give up to a reprobate mind, as the apostle tells us, Rom. i. If ye continue in my word, says Christ, John viii. 31, 32. then are ye my disciples indeed, and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall set you free. And John vii. 17. If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine whether it be of God, or whether I speak of myself. He that goeth conscientiously and constantly about the duties of holiness that he knows, he shall increase in knowledge.

There are also some things that more generally conduce to knowledge, as that, magistrates, ministers, elders, parents, masters of schools, and masters of families do their respective duties. 1. Then let me desire you to see to the education of the youth, I mean of the children of the meanest and worst, to bring them up at schools. It is sad to consider, how many young ones of graceless, careless, and ignorant parents, are brought up to the devil; it were no great business to help them that cannot entertain them at school. O! that we were all willing to contribute to such a work; it might help them to know something of God, or to be civil at least; it would also remove the excuse, that we frequently meet with from many, to wit, that they cannot read. And if parents will not be seriously concerned in this themselves, God requires us to take some course to bring up their young ones in the knowledge of God; and truly, if this external easy mean be neglected, we can expect little of other means. If this were minded, it might be an ornament to the city; and the burden would not be so very great, if it were once put to the trial. Will ye ye that are parents, and able, be induced to put your children to the school? If ye be not able, make it known. I know there are some who will drink more in one day sometimes, than would keep their children at the school for many days; and I suppose, that there are but few who can say, that it is mere necessity that hinders them. Are there any of you that can say, ye would fain bring up your children at school, and ye spake to magistrates, or to church-session for help, and that it was refused you? It is your part to seek for help, that are really unable; and it lieth on you, to see to it yourselves who are able; and while ye neither do yourselves, nor seek help from others, ye are utterly inexcusable. 2. I would commend to you the necessity of using private means, and that ye would not lay all the weight of your profiting on your being in the church, and on your coming to be catechised, or to hear others catechised, but give diligence in private to come to knowledge, else it will be long ere ye thrive and profit. Ye that are in one family, when ye come home from sermon, confer together now and then, and be speaking of what ye hear on the sabbath, betwixt sabbath-days, and when ye can find any to answer a doubt, or question to you, make use of the opportunity. Though we could go through you all twice a year in examination and catechising, it will be to no purpose if this be neglected; but as ye should be careful to keep your children at school, so ye should be busy in your families, in all family duties. This was wont to be the old way of God's people, and it would make hearing of sermons profitable. 3. I would commend you to careful attendance on, and conscientious making use of the ministry of the word, the great ordinary mean of knowledge; and that ye who are most concerned would be thinking of the great conveniency, if not necessity, of more labourers. If it were known how numerous a people we are, how many hundreds every one who labours among you, hath under his charge, how little time we have to visit you all particularly, and what abounding ignorance there is in the greatest part of the people, I suppose it would be thought, that the charge of any one of us might require two to discharge it suitably; which we do not press to spare our own labour and pains, but to stir you up to a necessary duty. The effecting of the thing is not impossible; and it is a work and duty well becoming you, and worthy of you; the Lord himself persuade you to mind it! I shall close all with a caveat or two. 1. Beware of placing over much religion in knowledge, or of being puffed up with your knowledge, when ye attain to any measure of it. 2. Beware of counting mere knowledge to be faith; but when ye come to know and discern the object, be sure that ye take hold of, and rest upon that which the eye of faith discerns; the land is, to say so, far off, and within the vail, cast therefore the anchor of hope there. 3. Beware of thinking, that ye merely of yourselves can acquire any sound and saving knowledge, or fetch it from yourselves; we bid you not study the knowledge of God as ye study other common things; there are here requisite humility, fear, reverence, love to the truth, dependence on God, prayer to him, and acknowledgment of him. Let me again seriously commend this study to you, and thro' it let me commend Christ unto you, whom to know is life eternal, to him be praise for ever.

ISAIAH LIII. Verse 11.

Verse 11.—By his knowledge shall my righteous Servant justify many, for he shall bear their iniquities.

IF any thing should be studied with diligence, sure this should be, even to be clear how we may come to be at peace with God, how we may be absolved and justified, when we come to reckon before him. It is no curiosity, singly and diligently to make inquiry here; although the unfaithfulness, and pride of some unhappy men, have made the study of it unpleasant, by corrupting, and making crooked God's plain and strait way of making our peace with him, and of our being justified before him.

We have begun to speak of the great mids, or mean, by which this righteousness, that justifies a sinner before God is derived, or, by which we come to have a title to, and an interest in it: And as we have great need to be clear in that righteousness, which will be a good defence before the tribunal of God's justice, that we propose not one that will be refused and rejected; so we have as great need to be clear in the way, how that righteousness may be made ours, seeing many are, and will be condemned, notwithstanding of Christ's righteousness, because there is no application of it made by them to themselves.

We shewed you that by knowledge here is meant faith, as the scriptures in the New Testament (which hold forth justification to be by faith) make clear: It being evident, that no meerly speculative knowledge can intitle to this justification; yet it is called knowledge, 1st, Because faith necessarily presupposes knowledge; if it be not a part of it, yet certainly it is a necessary antecedent of it. 2^{dly}, Because, tho' there be not an evidence to reason in all the things which we believe, yet there is a certainty; and faith has this name, because it makes men certain of those things which it receives, as if it were a science or knowledge. 3^{dly}, To distinguish it from all other sorts of knowledge, and to bound and include it, mostly at least within this object, Christ, by his knowledge, or as the word is better rendered, by the knowledge of him shall my righteous Servant justify many; which shews, that it's not knowledge taken largely

that he means, but knowledge with respect to Christ, the great object of it; as it is, 1 Cor. ii. 2. I determined to know nothing among you, but Jesus Christ, and him crucified: And saith Paul, Philip. iii. 8. I count all things to be but loss, for the excellency of the knowledge of Jesus Christ my Lord. Ye will ask then, how do knowledge and faith differ, seeing wherever there is faith there is knowledge, though not contrary ways, wherever there is knowledge there is faith? We shall not insist on this, but briefly we conceive, that knowledge discovers the object, and faith takes hold of the object, and rests upon it; knowledge is the eye of the new creature, discovering such a thing; and faith is the hand that catcheth hold of, and embraces that thing that is discovered; or thus, knowledge is like to the head, that takes in such a notion, and faith is as the heart that closes with it; therefore, Rom. x. it is said, with the heart man believes unto righteousness, and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation. I know many take knowledge for faith, which at the best is but historical faith; and it is as if a man who is a drowning, should see another casting in a strong rope to him, and he sees, and knows such a thing, but takes no hold of it, and therefore perisheth; or as a seaman's discovering good ground to cast anchor on, but not casting forth his anchor thereon, is exposed to the violence of the storm, and so shipwrecked; knowledge discovers the ground, but faith casts the anchor on it.

We spake of this general doctrine, that knowledge is a necessary thing as being presupposed to faith, and particularly, the knowledge of Jesus Christ; therefore it is called, The knowledge of him; because its Christ Jesus which is the object of faith; therefore our study of knowledge should especially be with reference to him. There are two sorts of persons, who are utterly ignorant, and yet are defective here. 1st, There are some that love and study to be scholars, but Christ is not the object of their knowledge ; it is not the knowledge spoken of here, to be well skilled in philosophy, in tongues, in mathematics, &c. which we discommend not ; nor is it to be able, speculatively to dispute and discourse of divinity, but it is the knowledge of Christ's righteousness, and to study experimentally, and practically to make use of it, and to be cloathed with it ; as one says well ; If we know him we know all, and if we know not him, though we know all, we know nothing ; therefore though Paul was a very learned man, and a great scholar, yet says he, 1 Cor. ii. 2. I determined to know nothing among you, but Christ Jesus, and him crucified. A 2d sort are such, as want not affection to truth, nor love to piety, yet to them the studying of this doctrine, that concerns Christ, and his offices, is somewhat tasteless, and wearisome ; they would be at hearing of duties, cases, and questions spoken of ; though we may in some respects say, that none of these are objects of faith, properly, at least as it is justifying ; but means to guide you to make use of, and to carry suitably to the priviledges that are in the covenant. Hence many have good affection, that are very shallow in their knowledge of Christ, and think but little of preaching, and books that hold out the doctrine concerning Christ, because they come not so close to practical things and cases, whereas if they were better settled in the true knowledge of Christ, it would answer all their cases, and resolve all their questions and doubts ; let therefore these be well looked to, and this by no means be nauseated, or slighted ; though knowledge of the truths of God be necessary, yet it is especially the knowledge of Christ that is necessary.

There is another thing supposed here, that serves to clear the doctrine of justification, which we shall observe, e'er we speak of faith itself particularly, because it is antecedent to it, and it is this, that the gospel is a necessary external mean, for promoting

of our justification; for faith as we shewed, presupposes knowledge, and knowledge presupposes the revelation of God's mind in the gospel, and if knowledge be necessary to faith, then the gospel must be necessary; for it is said, Rom. i. 17. that by it the righteousness of God is revealed from faith to faith; there is great need to observe all the steps of this doctrine well, and this among the rest; the gospel is not a thing that is bred in nature's breast; or what men by nature have the knowledge of; nay, it is foolishness to the wise men of the world, as we may see, 1 Cor. i. We preach Christ crucified, to the Jews a stumbling block, and to the Greeks foolishness. Faith comes by hearing, as it is Rom. x. 17. and hearing by the word of God; and in the same chap. v. 14, 15. How shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? and how shall they hear without a preacher? and how shall they preach except they be sent? Where the apostle clearly, and convincingly infers the necessity of a lawfully called ministry for preaching of the gospel, and for carrying on the work of justifying and saving faith: The reason is, because, if there be a necessity of faith, and if no faith can be without knowledge, then there must necessarily be something to reveal it; I speak here of the ordinary way of God's revealing himself. What he may do extraordinarily, towards dumb and deaf persons, to idiots and young children, I meddle not with that, but leave it to himself as a secret, which he thinketh not fit to impart to us. I call the gospel the external mean, of promoting our justification, in four respects. 1. Because it lays before us the object of our faith, for in it, (as it is, Rom. i. 17.) is the righteousness of God revealed, &c. and Rom. iii. 21, 22. it is said, Now the righteousness of God without the law is manifested, &c. we should never know the way how a sinner comes to be at peace with God, and to be justified, without the gospel. 2dly, Because it not only reveals the object of faith, but it makes offer of it; and hereby a sinner that hears the gospel, hath warrant to embrace and make use of Jesus Christ's righteousness, and to rest upon it; and therefore if temptation should say to the sinner, though Christ died, what is that to thee? Faith hath this to reply, the gospel calls me, and that warrants me to come to him, and to make use of his death. The promise, as it is, Acts ii. is, to as many as the Lord our God shall call; and in this respect, the promise is our right and evidence, whereby we come to have a claim to Christ. 3dly, Because God makes use of the word preached, for engaging of sinners to Christ and for making them to take hold of him; it is true, that it is not powerful of itself, and without the spirit, yet it is the ordinary mean that God makes use of; therefore saith the apostle, 2 Cor. x. 4. The weapons of our warfare are not carnal; though they be weak in themselves, yet they are mighty through God, to the pulling down of strong holds: And in this respect the gospel not only offers life, but through God's blessing, as a mean begets life; and by the Spirit accompanying it, sinners are engaged to take hold of Christ, and to rest on him for salvation. 4thly, Because this word being taken hold of, and closed with, contains the pronouncing of the sinner's absolvitur, or of his absolving sentence, when he says, If thou believest, thou shalt be justified and saved, upon supposition of believing, the sentence stands good to the believer, Thou art past from death to life; there being no condemnation to them who are in Christ Jesus.

The 1st use serves to clear that which we hinted at before, in naming this for a cause of justification; though it be the external instrumental cause, yet it is a cause.

The 2d use serves to teach you to put a price on the gospel; it is the bane both of profane secure sinners, and of a sort of vain giddy people among us, that they prize

prize not the preaching of the gospel, as the external instrumental cause, that concurs in the justification of sinners; but if ever ye be absolved, ye will be beholden to this preached gospel; I will not say always to the preaching, but sure to the gospel that is preached. This on the one hand reproves those who will be ready to say, that they have faith, who yet never knew the gospel to do them good; and such also who seldom come to hear, and who never care for preaching; and upon the other hand, it reproves those, who, when they are tottering, reeling and wavering and beginning to incline to error, reproach the preaching of the gospel, having, it may be, slighted it before in their hearts; whither, when Satan once gets them, he tosses them in a great measure, as he pleases, and makes them so giddy, by frequent turning about, that they scarcely leave to themselves a foot of scripture-ground to stand upon. But as ye respect the glory of Christ, the good of your souls, and your absolution before God, esteem much of the gospel; for it is the power of God to salvation; and if ever ye come to heaven it will be by this gospel, as the external mean. Those nations that never heard it will think you to be most desperately wicked and miserable, who have had it, and yet so unworthily slighted it.

For pressing of this use a little, take two or three directions in reference to it. 1. Walk under the conviction of the necessity of the gospel; for there is no absolution without it. It is true, God might have taken another way, but on the supposition, that he hath appointed faith to be a mean to justification, and that faith supposes knowledge, then certainly knowledge doth suppose a necessity of hearing the gospel. Ye will never value preaching, nor any other ordinance of Christ, if ye see not a necessity of them, and know them not to be for your good. 2. Study to know what is the main end and design of, and what is the advantage that is to be had by the ordinances. Many

come to the preaching of the gospel, to hear and learn some lesson for informing their judgment; some come to receive directions, in reference to some particular duty; some to have their doubts resolved, none of which are to be disallowed of in themselves, but rather so far to be commended; but how few come to it, as to a mean to carry on, and bring about their justification; and to bring them out of a state of nature, into a state of grace? It is the sum of Paul's preaching, and the end of it, as the divine historian shews, Acts xxvi. 8. To open blind eyes, to turn them from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God, that they may receive forgiveness of sins, and an inheritance among them that are sanctified by faith that is in him. 3. Aim in your practice to carry on this design, even to put a close to the treaty concerning justification betwixt God and you; when ye attend on preaching, and hear us declare in the name of the Lord, that a believing sinner hath access to have his sin taken away, and to be justified through the imputation of Christ's righteousness, ye should step to, hearing this proclamation made of the pardon of sin, by one of Christ's ambassadors in his name, and accept of, embrace, and cordially close with it, even just now, at this very time. 4. This should be the great design both of preachers and hearers; of preachers to follow that way of preaching most, that lays open the mystery of faith in Christ; and of hearers to love that way of preaching best, not so much that which fills the head with notions, as that which serves to help to close an agreement betwixt God and you.

The 3d Use serves to make a sad discovery of many of you. Is this gospel the eternal mean of justification? Then see if ye ever knew any benefit ye received by it. Ye will it may be say, that ye are in friendship with God: But how, I pray you, came ye by it? There is little change for the better in your knowledge, and as little in your practice, ye are as much

given to covetousness, tippling, lying, swearing, pride, vanity, &c. as ever; and are these, think ye, the fruits of justification? Do you think that to be justification, which is neither from the word, nor conformable to it? If God would commend this to your hearts, I think it might alarm you to more serious thoughts of your condition. I put it to your conscience, if ye can conceive any difference betwixt you, and those that never heard of the gospel? Ye are baptized, and hear preaching, &c. but, alas! it is none of these that justifies; they are only useful as they lead you forward to the making use of Jesus Christ. Again, let me ask you, what effect hath preaching upon you? Hath it convinced you of sin? No; how then can it convince you of righteousness? Therefore, if ye would make sure of justification indeed, try it by the word. 1st, What was it that put you to seek after righteousness and justification? Were ye ever convinced of the need of it? And if ye have been convinced, was it by preaching of the word? 2^{dly}, If ye have been convinced of your sin and misery, where sought you for a remedy? Were ye led by the word, to seek a plaister to heal that wound of conviction? 3^{dly}, What was it that warranted you to take hold of that word, or that gave you a right to it? I know that ye will say, that it was Christ held forth in the word, that ye did betake yourselves to; but what weight laid ye on God's call in the gospel, warranting you to lay hold on the promise of righteousness, and pardon of sin through Christ? I know there are many, who tho' there had not been a call from God, would have confidently stepped forward to the promise; but were ye ever like to Peter's hearers, prick'd in your hearts, and made to say, men and brethren, what shall we do?

More particularly, we come to speak of this word, as it respects the inward mean, or the inward instrumental cause of justification, which is faith; for there is this order and method; 1. The sinner is convinced, and made sensible of sin, and brought to reckon for it, in his own conscience before God. 2. There is Christ's being held forth, interposing himself to take on him the sinners debt, and satisfying the justice of God for it, which is the meritorious cause. 3. There is God's offer in the gospel, holding forth Christ's righteousness to lost sinners, and calling them to make use of it. 4. Upon this there is faith's receiving of the offer, and resting upon Christ, and his righteousness for life, which (to speak so) is the inward instrumental cause taking hold of the external, and as I said of Christ in it. 5. And lastly follows God's imputing the righteousness of Christ to the sinner, and absolving him, by virtue of that righteousness from the guilt of his sin, as if he had never sinned.

In speaking of this inward instrumental cause, five things should be cleared, which we suppose are implied in the words ; 1. The necessity of faith, held forth, as the mean by which justification is received. 2. The immediate object of justifying faith, and that is Christ's sufferings, or Jesus Christ, as suffering, travelling in soul and paying our debt. 3. The act of this faith, on this object, which is not a bare speculative knowledge, or a mere historical faith, but something that really acts on Christ, with respect to his sufferings. 4. The effect of this faith taking hold on Christ, and that is justification, which is not the making a sinner to be just, by inherent righteousness, but the actual absolving him from the guilt of sin, and from God's curse, the changing of this state, and the bringing him from under the curse, into good terms with God. 5. The manner how faith concurs in producing, or bringing about this effect ; wherein we have this general, that faith hath a peculiar influence in the justification of a sinner, that no good work nor any other grace hath. There is none of all these things but what is in this miserably declined generation controverted ; I shall only endeavour to clear the positive part, part, and let you see what is truth in these things, whereby ye may be brought to discover, and abhor the errors that are contrary thereto.

The 1st doctrine then is this ; that before a man can be justified and absolved from the curse of God due to him for sin, there is a necessity of faith in our Lord Jesus Christ. This is clear from the words, and from that which hath been said in the opening of them. If it be by his knowledge, or the knowledge of him, that many are justified, then it cannot be that they are justified before they come to the knowledge of him, or from eternity ; as we proceed, take two or three words of advertisement, and then we shall confirm the doctrine. 1st, When we speak of justification, it is in respect of our being absolved and freed, not from the pollution of sin, but from the guilt of it, as it makes us obnoxious to the curse ; the clearing of the effect will clear this more. 2dly, When we speak of faith, it is not to be understood as if it were a declaration, or a manifestation of our justification ; or, it is not to be understood of faith in the height of full assurance, and as it is a plerophory, but of faith, as it is a laying hold upon Christ. 3dly, When we speak of the necessity of faith, in order to justification, we mean not, as if there was such an absolute necessity of it in itself, that God could not do otherwise, or justify without it ; but we mean a necessity, in respect of the order which God hath laid down, and held forth in the gospel, which is by the knowledge of his Son to justify many ; and from these considerations many arguments of our adversaries are made very little regardable, yea utterly void.

For confirmation of the doctrine then, 1st, Consider these scriptures that expressly limit, confine, and bound justification, and pardon of sin, to the person that doth believe ; so Rom. i. 17. The righteousness of God is revealed from faith to faith ; as it is written, the just shall live by faith. Rom. iii. 24, 25. Being justifi- ed freely by his grace, through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus, whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation thro' faith in his blood, &c. Col. iii. 22. God hath concluded all under sin, that the promise by faith of Jesus Christ might be given to them that believe. Acts. xiii. Through this man is preached unto you the forgiveness of sins, and by him all that believe are justified from all things, from which they could not be justified by the law of Moses. Consult the scriptures, and ye will find, that Paul clears both these questions; 1. Who are justified? All that believe. 2. When are they justified? When they believe. 2dly, Consider these scriptures, that place all men, before believing, in a state of wrath, and they will furnish a second ground for this, as John iii. 18. He that believeth on him, is not condemned; but he that believeth not, is condemned already; he lies under the covenant of works, and is condemned, as considered in himself; tho' God may have a purpose to make a change of his state; so Eph. ii. 1, 2, 3. You hath he quickened, who were dead in trespasses and sins, wherein in time past ye walked, and were children of wrath even as others, &c. And vers. 12, 13. We were sometimes without Christ, being aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenant of promise, without hope, and without God in the world; but now in Christ Jesus, ye who sometimes were far off, are made near by the blood of Christ. And verse 8. By grace are ye saved, through faith, and that not of yourselves, it is the gift of God, not of works, lest any man should boast. It is faith that gives the title, which we had not before. 3dly, Consider, that the scriptures do expressly make believing to precede justification, and make justification to be an effect, or rather a consequent of faith, to which faith necessarily concurs, as all these places, which say, that we are justified by faith in Christ, do clear; as Rom. v. 1. Being justified by faith, we have peace with God, through our Lord Jesus Christ; which place looks on faith's

faith's concurring in justification with a kind of causality, Rom. iii. 22, 25. The righteousness of God, which is by faith of Jesus Christ unto all, and upon all them that believe, &c. Ephes. ii. 8. By grace are ye saved, through faith. See more fully to this purpose, Gal. ii. 16. where the apostle designedly, as it were, sets himself to confirm this truth; for speaking of the way, how sinners come to be justified, and as it were, entering into the debate, he says, Knowing that a man is not justified by the works of the law, but by the faith of Jesus Christ, even as we have believed in Jesus Christ, that we might be justified by the faith of Christ. In which place we have three things considerable, to make out the point. 1. He compares the concurring of faith, to justification, in the covenant of grace, to the concurring of works to justification, or to the obtaining of life in the covenant of works; as works did justify, in the covenant of works, so does faith in the covenant of grace. Now certainly, the performing of works in the covenant of works, behoved to go before justification that way; therefore the want of works made Adam to come short of justification by works. 2. He looks on faith, and speaks of it, as concurring to justification, with a respect to Christ, and never looks on it in this matter, as a grace considered in, and by itself, but as acting on Christ in a peculiar manner. 3. In express words, he says, We have believed in Christ Jesus, that we might be justified; which clearly implies, that they could not be justified before they believed; and we may well and easily gather, that the justification here meant is that which is real and actual, and not the declaring of a man to be justified to himself, else works might declare a man to be justified to himself, as well as faith; but he contra-distinguishes faith and works here, and opposes the one to the other.

The 1st use serves for clearing of this truth, That there is a necessity of faith's taking hold of, and resting on Christ, e'er we can be absolved and justified; and so both these errors of Antinomians fall to the ground. 1. That by which they assert, that those who are justified were justified from eternity, and were never under God's curse: And 2. That faith is not necessary to the attaining of justification, but only to a person's knowledge that he is justified; and so they say, that faith enters us not in the covenant, which is false, it being the terms or condition on which God proposeth, and promiseth pardon in his covenant; as is clear, John iii. 18. Whosoever believes shall not be condemned, but shall have everlasting life. And Mark xvi. 16. He that believes, and is baptized, shall be saved, with this opposition, He that believeth not shall be damned; faith being that which enters us in the covenant; for either sinners are justified before they can be in covenant with God, which is an absurdity, and inconsistent with God's covenant, or it is by faith that they entered in the covenant.

The 2d use serves to demonstrate the absolute necessity of believing and taking hold of Christ; if absolution and justification be necessary, faith must be necessary. And therefore, if Christ be preached unto you, and if by him all that believe are justified, take hold then, I beseech you, of the offer; receive, embrace, close with it, and let your very hearts open to it, without which ye can never expect to be justified before the tribunal of God. Now let God himself bless this same word to you thro' Jesus Christ!

ISAIAH LIII. Verse 11.

Verse 11.—By his knowledge shall my righteous Servant justify many, for he shall bear their iniquities.

SOME further and more serious apprehensions of our sin and hazard, would make the reading of these

these words to be refreshing, and welcome to us ; the fixed thoughts of an arrestment laid upon us, to appear before God's tribunal, and to reckon for our debt, would make us think much of a surety ; the want whereof makes the glad tidings of the gospel to be tasteless, and without relish. This is the great scope of these words, to shew how a summoned sinner arraigned at God's bar, may be justified, and freed from the charge that he is liable to ; for, says the prophet, By his knowledge, who is the Surety of the covenant, shall many be justified. That which we left last, was this, that faith in Christ, received and resting on him, is necessary for the attaining of justification ; so that in God's way, these are so linked and knit together, that no one shall be justified but a believer ; though there be a righteousness in Christ, yet it shall be derived, and communicated to none come to age, but to those, who by faith betake themselves to Christ : What way the Lord takes with infants, elect infants, I mean, is not that which the prophet aims to speak of ; though it be Christ's righteousness that is communicated to them, as well as it is to them who are at age, yet as to the manner of communicating it, God hath his own way which we know not.

Now that we may learn, in speaking to these truths, not only to get some light for informing of our judgment, but also some help for our practice ; take two or three uses, ere we proceed any further.

The 1st use then is, to let you see the absolute necessity of believing in Christ Jesus, and that it is as necessary for the attaining of our justification, as Christ's dying is ; for our justification is an effect flowing from several causes, and the want of any of them will mar it. There must necessarily be a concurrence of them all, to bring it about, and therefore though there be an excellent worth in Christ's righteousness, yet there is a necessity of faith, to lay hold upon it, and to make it ours. God's order in the covenant discovered

ed this, wherein he hath knit the promise of pardon of sin, and of justification to faith, and resting on Christ; and there is good reason for it, as 1st, The Lord will have a sinner to know how many he is obliged to Christ, which faith contributes much unto; for faith stands not in the way of the freedom of justification, but rather commends it; for the Lord would have us know, that we hold our life of him; and not to receive him by faith, is an evidence of highest presumption, therefore it is said, Rom. iv. 16. It is by faith that it might be of grace. God hath chosen this way, that the freeness of his grace, in pardoning of sin may be seen. 2^d, The Lord by this lets the unbeliever know, that the reason of his own ruin is of himself; there shall not be one believer found, that shall have it to say, that the blame lay on God, or on Christ, because the offer was made to them on condition of receiving it by faith; and they not performing the condition, their guilt is aggravated by their slighting of the offer. It is true, that we are now dealing with them, who down right deny the truth of this doctrine; but, alas, what better are they, who do in their practice deny it, and live senselessly and securely under the gospel? We conceive that there are three sorts of persons, that have need of a word to be spoken to them here. 1. Such as live carelessly, and securely, as we just now said, as if God required nothing of them at all; as they were born, they know not how, so they live, they know not how; and when they are pressed to a change of their state and way, they make excuses, partly from the sinfulness of their nature, that they can do nothing, partly from the abundant grace of God, that he must do all. But it will never excuse you, that ye wanted grace, and had a sinful nature; for whom, I pray, can ye blame for it? Ye that trust only in his mercy, if ye continue to do so, shall never get good of it; for he hath said that he will justify and save none but the believer; there is none other that hath the promise of pardon; it is not made to any thing that is to be brought forth, or done by your own strength, or by the strength of nature, or of free-will; but God hath laid down this order and method, and made it known that ye should believe, and receive the offer of Christ in the gospel. Renounce your own righteousness, and betake you to Christ's righteousness, otherwise ye cannot on good ground expect to be justified. 2. Others will set about many things that are good, but the work of believing they can never be brought to mind or own; they will make a sort of conscience of prayer, of keeping the church, of reading the scriptures, &c. But to give obedience to the command of believing, they mind it not, they can live and die without it. This was the woful and soul-ruining practice of the Jews of old, as we are told, Rom. ix. They took much pains to come by righteousness, but they attained it not, because they sought it not by faith, but as it were by the works of the law, for they stumbled at that stumbling stone; when they had gone part of the way, as it were, and come to the stone of believing, there they fell and brake their necks. Hence there are many who promise heaven to themselves, and think that they have done something for it, who yet never laid hold on Christ for their justification; but let me tell you, that though you could go the greatest length in holiness that ever any did since Adam's fall, it will not avail you, if ye neglect faith in Christ. I say not this to dissuade you from the duties of holiness, God forbid; but to divert you from seeking justification by them; study the duties of holiness, but seek always by all means to be found in Christ, and in his righteousness, and not in the righteousness of your duties, as to your justification. It is true none that have any tolerable measure of knowledge, will profess down right, that they lean to holy duties, yet many are so ignorant, that they cannot distinguish betwixt faith and

and works; and there are not a few, who have a hope of heaven, such as it is, who never knew any thing of the exercise of believing. A 3^d sort are those who because of some common favours that they have received, as evidences of God's care and kindness, conclude their justification. It may be, some have had now and then deep convictions, or have had tears in prayer, or at a sermon; others it may be have had some joy now and then at hearing the word; others will, it may be, dream of such and such heavenly things, and have, as they suppose, a vision of them in their sleep, and some joy will follow on it, when they are awaked; others may have met with many deliverances by sea and land, and God hath dealt well with them, and their children, in external things; but alas, these things may befall unbelievers; not one of them, nor all of them together, if there be no more, will justify; ye should rather try these things, whether they be evidences of special love or not, by your believing; if they have faith in Christ carried along with them, it is well; if ye can say, that after ye believed, ye were sealed with the holy Spirit of promise, and that your joy followed upon your closing with, and resting upon Christ, ye have no reason to question it; but where such tastes go before, and are without believing, they are to be suspected.

Use 2^d, We would commend this to you, as a ground of trial of yourselves, if ye be justified, if ye have seriously had a sense of sin, and embraced God's offer of the righteousness of Christ, and rested on it. Make this once sure, that ye have been sensible of sin, that ye have been beaten from your own righteousness, that ye have fled to Jesus Christ, and closed with his righteousness offered in the gospel; then this will naturally follow, that by his knowledge thou art justified; his word speaks it out plain to thee. It may be that some think this to be a broad mark, and that others will think it narrow; yet it is a solid mark, and no other thing is or can be a mark, but as it implies this ; though some may presumptuously gather from it a broad conclusion, yet it will be found to be as straitning and searching a mark, when well considered, as other marks and evidences are, that we cannot at first so easily lay hold on ; and therefore we would say, that it is not every one that thinks he believes, but it is such as really believe, who have this evidence ; and for preventing of mistakes, we shall follow this evidence of justification, to wit, faith, to the very rise of it. 1. It supposes a charge and summons, as it were, given to the persons, to appear before God. 2. There is a sentence discovered, standing against them, and over their heads, by the covenant of works. Now what can ye say to these two ? Where I desire you not so much to speak your light, as your practice and experience. What a charge, or summons was put in your hands ? Have ye read the libel of your sins ? and have ye seen the breaches of the law, and your liahness to the curse of God for the same ? If so, then, what means the good opinion that many of you have of yourselves ? This is even the thing that the apostle saith of himself before his conversion, Rom. vii. 9. Before the law came, I was alive ; but when the commandment came, sin revived, and I died. That is, before the charge was put in my hand, and I summoned to appear before God's bar, I had a good opinion of myself, and I thought that all was well ; but when I came to view the law in the spiritual meaning, and broad extent of it, I saw myself lost and gone, and that conceit fell. These three then usually preceed faith, 1st, That a person hath had a good opinion of himself. 2^d, That this person is summoned or charged to answer at God's bar. 3^d, That the person is made to pass sentence on himself, as lost and undone, by reason of the law's sentence and curse standing over his head unrepealed. Now how hath it been with you as to these ? The most part are quite of another disposition than Paul was ; they think they are well enough, because they never discovered their rotten condition ; but try well how it is with you, go in and see if ever ye discovered in yourselves. 1. An inclination to establish your own righteousness. 2. Were ye ever under a work of the law, humbling you ? and 3. Were ye ever in your own apprehension lost ? If so, then ye are such as Christ came to call. 2dly, In the next place consider what ye betook yourselves to, for answering that charge, and for a remedy of that lost condition ; there is no remedy, but the offer of Christ's righteousness in the gospel. Some being charged with guilt, betake themselves to prayer, and that is well done so far ; but if ye hold there and go no further, it is not right. It is here, as it was with those, who lived under the law, who, when they had sinned, made use of sacrifices, and the greatest part held there, and went no further ; whereas the believer looked through the sacrifices to Christ ; so if ye hold at prayer, and other duties, and go no further, these will not profit you. But know ye what it is to go to prayer, and in prayer to go to Christ, and rest on his sacrifice for your acceptance ? I fear there is great ignorance here ; the most know not what they have done, when they were charged ; or, if they did any thing, they prayed ; or, if they went any further on, they looked to the promise of God's mercy ; but that is not far enough gone. How many such are there, who have made their prayer their only intercessor, and have presumed to step in on God's mercy, without a Mediator ? 3dly, Suppose that ye have betaken yourselves to Christ, as to the remedy ; come on, and try how your union hath been made up with him. Where did ye seek and find him ? Christ Jesus is to be found in the gospel, in the ministry of the word ; therefore that is put in, on good reason, in the definition of faith given to us in the catechism, That it is a resting on him, as he is offered in the gospel.

But

But I fear and suppose that many have another Christ (to speak so) whom they have gotten without knowing, or making any use of the word, or offer of the gospel, which is the power of God for salvation to them that believe. 4thly, Wherewith did ye take hold on him? or how did ye act on him? was it by faith or not? There are many, who act on him, as they think, by prayer, not indeed as the meritorious cause, but as the efficient cause of justification, praying for pity and pardon from him; but this is not to take hold of Christ's righteousness by faith. Others think, that if they can love and serve him, and please him with duties, they will engage him to give them pardon; and in this they have (to speak so) an underhand covenant of works; they will do something to please the Mediator, and wherein they come short, they expect that he will make it up, and this is very ordinary in practice. If ye ask some, what hope have ye of justification? They will answer, through Christ's righteousness, and that is good so far: but ask them again, how they will get it? they will answer, that they will do what they can or may, and they hope that he will pity them; ye should look upon your own hearts, and see whether it be not secretly making something of this kind, the ground of your title to Christ, and of your justification. And yet all this may be, and often is in them that will not stoop to the way of grace, nor submit themselves to the righteousness of God. They will speak of Christ's righteousness, and yet they will needs give him some compensation, and so come never really to renounce their own righteousness, and to flee unto his, and to present it as their defence before God.

There is here ground for all that neglect Christ, and do not by faith take hold of him, to look for a most dreadful sentence, and ground for others, who seek righteousness through faith, to look for a most comfortable sentence; 1. Then, is this a truth, that justification is through faith in Christ? then many of you are not justified; and if the Lord prevent it not, ye will never be justified; If so, then it must be a most dreadful thing not to believe; if ye would know what is your condition, ye may read it, John iii. 18, 26. He that believeth not is condemned already, and he shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him; and Gal. iii. 10. As many as are of the works of the law, are under the curse; for it is written, Cursed is every one that continues not in all things written in the book of the law to do them. If ye really believed this, many of you would be under horror, to hear what a sad condition ye are in, even condemned already, and having the wrath and curse of God abiding on you; because the word curseth and condemneth all that are not in Christ by faith. This, I fear, belongs to very many, who are altogether secure and careless, and yet are in reputation amongst us. And is it not very sad to be professing fair, to have the offer of life, and to be treating with God about your peace, and yet to be still in the state of enmity with him; so that if death were within twenty four hours of you, ye could have nothing to expect, but the ratifying of this sentence of God's curse upon you; we are sure there is as much in this, as might in reason put you by all means to study. 1. To be believers, for without faith ye are never over the borders of God's curse, which may lay a chace to you, and put you to the necessity of fleeing to Christ for refuge. 2dly, To take some pains to try, whether ye be in the faith, as the apostle exhorts, 2 Cor. xiii. 5. 'Examine yourselves, whether ye be in the faith, prove yourselves, know ye not your ownelves, how that Christ is in you, except ye be reprobates?' His meaning is, know ye not, that this is a truth, that ye are in a reprobate or unapproved condition, except Christ be in you; and Christ is in none, but in the believer. If so, ought ye not to try yourselves, if ye be in the faith, if ye be believers. There is no ordinary way to obtain the sure and comfortable knowledge of it but by trial; and if ye be not believers, is there not reason, and is it not of concernment, to endeavour by trial; to come to the knowledge of it? As this is ground of terror to the unbeliever, so it is ground of notable consolation to the believer, who, if he were even put to the reckoning with Paul, I was a blasphemer, a persecutor, injurious, yet here is hope for him, that he shall be found in Christ, not having his own righteousness, but Christ's; believing in Christ will obtain justification to such a person; his righteousness taken hold of, and put on by faith, is as pleasing and acceptable to God, as the unrighteousness of the sinner is displeasing to him. This was it that made David to sing sweetly, Psal. xxxii. Blessed is he whose transgression is forgiven, whose sin is covered; Blessed is the man to whom the Lord imputeth no iniquity; to wit, through the imputation of Christ's righteousness; as the apostle clears, Rom. iii. As the first branch of the use shews the necessity of faith, for sending sinners to Christ, so this branch is a sweet motive to draw them to him; and if there were more sensible sinners amongst us, whose own righteousness misgives them, and who are brought to that pass, that the jailor and Peter's hearers were in, crying out, what shall we do to be saved? This word, believe in the Lord Jesus, and ye shall be saved, would make them come in cheerful, as he did, from the brink, not only of temporal, but of eternal death.

2dly, Consider these words, as they hold forth the object of justifying faith, as to it's object, and effect, and in it's concurring to produce this effect; and here there are mistakes, and errors, both in the doctrinal and practical part of all these. 1st, The object of it then is him, Jesus Christ, the knowledge of him, or the faith of him, or faith in him, as other scriptures have it: Or, looking more nearly to the words, it is faith in him, as suffering, as satisfying for sin, as in soul-travel, bearing our iniquities. Hence observe, that Christ Jesus his righteousness held forth in God's promise of free grace, is the native and proper object, that saving and justifying faith takes hold of, and rests upon; or to the same purpose, the saving grace of faith that justifies, is that faith that does peculiarly apply and rest upon Christ Jesus, held forth in God's promise in the gospel, as the righteousness of a sinner that believes on him. Hence the prophet calleth it here, not knowledge more generally taken, but the knowledge of him, and that as he is held forth in this chapter, to wit, as surety for sinners, and suffering for their debt. This will be clear, if we consider all those scriptures, that make offer of the pardon of sin; for it is offered not on the condition of faith, in a more general notion of it, but on condition of faith in him; so Rom. v. 22, 24, 25. 'The righteousness

 ' of God, which is by faith of Jesus Christ, unto all,
 ' and upon all them that believe: being justified freely
 ' by his grace; through the redemption that is in Je' sus Christ, whom God hath set forth to be a propi-
 ' tiation through faith in his blood.' Rom. v. 1.
 ' Being justified by faith, we have peace with God,
 ' through our Lord Jesus Christ.' John i. 12. 'To
 ' as many as received him, he gave power to become
 ' the sons of God, even to as many as believe in his
 ' name;' where the faith that hath the promise of justification, and the privilege of adoption annexed to it, is called the receiving of Christ, and believing on his name.

It may also be cleared, and confirmed by good reason. 1. Faith does not justify as it is considered in itself as an act, but as it relates to, and unites with Christ, as the meritorious cause of justification. 2. Neither does faith justify as it looks to every object which the word holds forth, but as it respects Christ, offered in the gospel, whom it receiveth; because there is no other thing that can bear the soul's weight and burden; therefore he as offered in the gospel must be the object of faith, as it is saving and justifying. 3. The terms of the covenant, and God's offer clears it also: for God's offer of justification is not on these terms, that a sinner shall believe his word in the general, but that he believe on his Son whom he hath sent, and receive him, as those scriptures cited before, to wit, John iii. 16, 18. and Mark xvi. 16. shew, where the terms are set down, whereon God offers life to sinners. 4. If we could imagine a man to have all knowledge, and all faith, if faith act not on Christ as Redeemer, and Surety for such as come to him, it will not avail us, nor be counted to us for righteousness, which may also confirm this truth.

The uses of this doctrine are such as serve both to clear the nature of faith, and to direct us in our practice.

The 1st use then serves, to clear the truth. As the Papists corrupt many truths, so they corrupt this truth, concerning the nature of justifying and saving faith, in these three, 1st, In the object. 2dly, In the subject. 3dly, In the act of it. As for the object of this faith, they make it to be every thing that God reveals, and sometimes they take in their own traditions: The reason is because they give not faith a causality in justification, nor the capacity and place of a thing, acting on Christ peculiarly, but take it in as a common grace, or at the best, as a grace that is radical, and gives life to other graces, but never as taking hold of Christ's righteousness, which quite overturns the way of justification through faith in him; for faith that layeth not hold on his righteousness cannot justify; and their making the object of faith to be so broad, doth enervate both the immediate merit of Christ's righteousness, and the exercise of faith on it. 1st, Then we grant that there is an historical faith requisite, as to the whole word of God; yet we say that the faith that justifies, is properly that faith that singles out the righteousness of Christ, and takes hold of it; so that it is not our believing, that the world was made, that there will be a day of judgment, nor our believing that a Saviour, of sinners is come into the world, and hath suffered, &c. that justifies; but it is a closing with, a receiving of, and resting on that Saviour, a singling out of the promise that makes offer of him; (as for instance where it is said, If thou believe on the Lord Jesus, thou shalt be saved) and pitching on that, and resting on him held forth in the promise; faith gives the soul footing here, whereas before, it's case was very desperate. 2dly, We may clear what we are to look to, as the object of justifying and saving faith, by our putting in these three words, or expressions in the doctrine, to wit, Christ Jesus his righteousness held forth in the promise of God's free grace in the gospel; and which are needful to be taken in, though it be not always necessary, that we be explicate in the embracing of them. 1. There is need of taking in Christ's righteousness, because it is our defence at the bar of God's justice; even as a debtor whose debt the Surety hath payed, hath that to answer when he is charged for it, that his Surety hath payed it. 2dly, There is need to take in this, held forth in God's promise in the gospel, because though Christ be the object of justifying faith, and his righteousness be the ground of the soul's defence before God, yet God's promise must be looked on by faith for the making use of Christ, and his righteousness, and as a warrant to rest on him, and to expect justification through him. And thus faith hath Christ's fulness, or his full and compleat satisfaction for righteousness, and God's faithfulness impledged, that the believer shall be accepted through it; and it is on his ground, that faith sometimes looks on God as able sometimes as faithful; Therefore it is said, Heb. vii. 25. He is able to save to the uttermost; and Heb.

xi. Sarah judgeth him faithful who had promised: Whereupon there is a closing with the offer in the promise, and a looking to obtain that which is promised as if they had a righteousness of their own; and this the apostle calls the law of faith, Rom. iii. 27. because to justification there is beside the payment of the debt, a law declaring the man to be absolved, requisite; and the sinner having God's offer and promise, that upon his accepting of Christ's righteousness he shall be justified, instructs, that his debt is paid by his Surety, and that therefore he ought to be, and is accordingly absolved; and tho' God's promise be not so properly a law, yet the apostle calleth it so, and it is a solid defence to the soul that is fled to Christ, who may thus reason, I have no righteousness of my own, but Christ's righteousness by proclamation is offered to me in the gospel, and I have heartily received it, and God is faithful to make good his promise to me; and this looks to Christ as he is revealed in the gospel. 3. There is need to put in this word, The promise of God's free grace; because hereby the sinner is made to see whence the promise came, and of what nature it is, and gives ground to take hold of the promise, and of that which is made offer of in it. The promise is of free grace; therefore is called the covenant of grace; so Ro. iv. 16. It is of faith, that it might be by grace, to the end the promise might be sure to all the seed: For if it were not of grace, the sinner would never think himself sure, nor would he know if such a sinner might take hold of such a promise; but considering that the promise is of grace, and his acceptation is of grace, as is often repeated, Eph. i, ii, and iii chapters, these three are the great warrant that a sinner hath to rest himself on, a compleat Mediator; a faithful God promising to answer all grounds of fears, doubts, and jealousies, and free grace which answers all charges that may come in to hinder his closing with, and his resting on the promise;

mise; for if it should be said, how darest thou lay hold upon the promise? the answer is, It is free, it is not the mount that may not be touched, but it is Jesus the Mediator of the new covenant, &c. It is grace that is the rise, the end, and the condition of it. These are the three on which faith yields itself to Christ, and which are the object of it, on which it dare hazard; and on which it does hazard; and these three are revealed in the gospel of the grace of him that is faithful, and cannot deny himself. May we not then say, O! sinners, if ye will believe that you have a good resting-place, a sure foundation, a tried corner-stone; as it is, Isaiah xxviii. cited Rom. ix. where the apostle hath it, He that believes on him shall never be ashamed, there is a sufficient Surety, a full Mediator, there is a faithful God, that will keep his word, and there is a free covenant and promise, softer for a bruised soul to roll itself over upon, then any bed of the finest downs is for a weary and crazy body; this is a Chariot paved with love for the daughters of Jerusalem. Single out Christ from all that is in the word without slighting any part of it, and believe in him, and rest upon him; let him have more weight placed upon him than ye do on any thing else beside; he is able to bear it, and God will never be displeased with you for so doing, but will keep his word to you that do betake yourselves, or that have betaken yourselves to him; He that believeth shall never perish nor come into condemnation. O! know what a ground ye have to rest upon, it is even the substance and marrow of all the word of God; ye have Christ and his fulness, God and his faithfulness, grace and its freeness; and are there such three things beside? Or is it imaginable, or possible that there can be any beguile, or failure here? Spare not then to lay the weight of your souls upon it, let it be the foundation of your peace, and let it answer all charges that may be, whether for many, or for great and grievously aggravated sins; only by faith

take hold of this righteousness, and rest upon God's faithfulness and free promise, to make it forth-coming to you; but upon the other side, O! how greatly will it aggravate your guilt, that had such a remedy in your offer, such a tried corner-stone, elect and precious, to rest upon, and yet ye made no use of it. Let me exhort, beseech, and even obtest you, That ye receive not this grace in vain; but as Christ is laid for a sure foundation, so come to him, and build upon him, that ye may not be ashamed in the day of the Lord, when all that believe not, how presumptuously soever they may hold up their heads now, shall be ashamed and confounded, world without end. O! happy, thrice happy will they all be found to be then, who have trusted in him.

Verse 11.—By his knowledge shall my righteous Servant justify many, for he shall bear their iniquities.

THE knowledge of Christ was wont to be much thought of by the people of God, and to be in high estimation among them; and we may say, it was deservedly so; considering that it is by his knowledge, that justification was derived to them, and is derived to us. This is that which the Lord is clearing by the prophet here, to wit, how the benefit of Christ's sufferings and purchase may be derived, and communicated unto a sinner; which these words (tho' but few) are purposely made use of, to clear even that his sufferings should not be in vain, but that he should see a seed, and tho' that seed should not be all men, yet they should be many; and the way how these many should come by the benefit of his suffering is also held forth; and that is, by his knowledge, who is the righteous servant. We shewed you, that this doth upon the matter look to faith, and is meant of it, and confirmed it by other parallel scriptures, which say, that through faith in him, all that believe are justified: We came also to speak of this faith which justifies, and did propose five things to be spoken of concerning it, (and indeed if any thing be of concernment, this is, if a right to Christ and his purchase be of concernment, then sure it must be of concernment to know, how we come by that right.) 1. The necessity of it. 2. The object of it. 3. The act of it. 4. The effects that flow from it. 5. The manner of its concurring in the attaining of justification. We spoke of the first, to wit, of the necessity of faith, and shewed, that tho' there be a full satisfaction laid down to merit and procure justification, yet it is applied to none but to believers, and not till they believe.

2. We spoke also to this, that faith, as it justifies, looks not to all the word of God, as its object, but mainly and principally to Christ, and to the word only, in so far as it holds out Christ in the promises and offers of God's grace, as it is here called the knowledge of him, or faith in him.

We now proceed to hint a word for clearing of a question, and it is a new and very late one, to wit, whether justifying faith lays hold on Christ as a Saviour and priest only, or whether it lays hold on him not only as a priest to save, but also as a king to command? 'Tho' this doth not look at first blush to be of any great moment, and that such an inconsiderable-like difference is not to be stood upon; yet we shall find, that this last wants not its own influence on altering the common and ordinary, and (as we conceive) the solid received doctrine, concerning the way of justification, if we should admit it. And therefore we answer the question from the text: that Christ considered as suffering, and bearing our sins, and so as offering offering himself in a sacrifice, is the object that justifying faith, as such takes hold of; therefore the connexion of these two is clear in this verse, He shall see of the travel of his soul and be satisfied; and by his knowledge shall many be justified; and again it is subjoined, as the reason why many shall by faith in him be justified; because he shall bear their iniquities. By the knowledge of him that offered himself in a sacrifice, many are justified; and many are justified, because he bears their iniquities; which will infer this, that faith considers him as satisfying for the iniquities of his people, in its acting on him for justification, and pardon of sin. It is true, Christ's offices are not divided, and it is not true faith, if it take not hold of him, in all his offices; but as there are several evils in us, which his offices do meet with, and are suited unto, so should faith take hold of them, and make use of them for curing and removing of these evils. He is King, Priest, and Prophet; and faith takes hold of him as a King to command, and subdue us to himself; as a Prophet, to illuminate us, and cure our blindness; and as a Priest, to satisfy divine justice, and to procure the pardon of sin. As we are not to separate, so we are not to confound these; we use not to say that Christ as a Prophet doth justify us, nor that as a Priest he doth illuminate us, no more should we, nor can we well say, that as a King he satisfied justice for us. The same blessed God is wise, righteous, holy, faithful, just, merciful, &c. yet he is diversly considered in respect of our conceiving and making use of him, according to our need; so it is here. For clearing whereof, observe these things;

1. The scriptures speaks of, and points Christ out in his sufferings, as the object of justifying faith, Rom. iii. 25. Whom God hath set forth for a propitiation through faith in his blood; where the blood of Christ, and he as suffering is proposed as faith's object; so, 1 Cor. i. We preach Christ crucified. 1 John ii. We have

have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous, and he is the propitiation for our sins; where he is held forth in his sufferings, as the propitiation that faith layeth hold on, John iii. 14. As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, so must the Son of man be lifted up, that whosoever believeth on him, &c. where Christ lifted up, and as dying on the cross, is made the object of justifying faith; even as the brazen serpent, lifted up, was the object that they looked to, when they were stung and cured. 2. It is also clear from the law's libelling and charging us for the debt of our sin, that makes us liable to condemnation; and faith being the mean of our justification, and absolution from the debt, it must needs look to the Surety's paying our debt, and so answering the charge, which was done in his death; for he paid our debt, satisfied the penalty of the law, and came under the curse in suffering death; as is clear, Gal. iii. 10th verse being compared with verse 13. So Rom. viii. 34. 'Who shall lay any thing to the charge of God's elect? It is God that justifies, who shall condemn? It is Christ that died;' which is brought in as faith's answer to the charge; the charge cannot be denied, for we are guilty of so many sins, and therefore liable to condemnation; but faith faith, Christ hath died: It proposes him dying as a satisfaction for answering the charge, and for obtaining of absolution. 3. Christ as suffering and satisfying justice is our righteousness, and therefore must be the object of faith, as it is justifying; whereupon it pleads an absolution before the throne of God; so that when we come to plead and sound our defence before God's throne, it is not on this, that Christ is a king, and hath subdued us, but it is on this ground, that he is our Priest, and hath satisfied divine justice for us, and paid our debt, and procured a discharge to us. So the apostle speaking of Christ's sufferings, Col. ii. says, 'That he blotted out the hand-writing of ordinances that was against us, and took it out of the way,

‘nailing it to his cross.’ It is Christ as suffering that is the ground of our peace; and therefore faith as justifying must so consider him. Tho’ we desire to move nothing needlessly, yet laying it once for a ground, that justifying faith lays hold on Christ as a King, this will follow as a consequence, and as we suppose, as a reason, that our obedience to Christ as a King, hath the same influence, and the same causality in our justification, that faith’s resting on Christ’s satisfying for us as a priest hath; because as Christ’s priestly office gives us a warrant to rest upon him for justification, so would his kingly office, (if it were the object of justifying faith as such) when taken hold of for our obedience. We have touched on this 1st, That ye may see the warrantableness of this doctrine which is received in the churches of Christ, and that ye may consider Christ as the High-priest of your profession, and plead justification from his sacrifice, acting faith upon him accordingly. 2^{dly}, That we may put a bar against the introducing of justification by works, under one pretext or another, how specious soever, seeing the scripture so directly opposes faith and works in our justification; for if we once admit that Christ, as a King, is the object of justifying faith as such, it would overturn the distinct way of faith’s acting upon Christ’s righteousness, for answering the charge put into the sinner’s hand by the law; and when the soul hath a charge for sin, would put it to look what obedience it hath given to Christ, as a King, to answer that challenge or charge by, and would in the same manner also put the soul to gather the ground of its peace from the one as well as from the other, that is, both from Christ’s righteousness, and from its own obedience, not only as an evidence, but a social cause, or not only to its own sense, but as to the effect.

We come now to speak of the act of faith as justifying, called here knowledge, and the knowledge of him, to shew that it points at justifying faith; for if it were not so, it were the same with common knowledge, whereby we believe any history of the Bible; but this being justifying knowledge, it must be knowledge of another kind. We shall here clear, 1st, Wherein the act of justifying faith consists. 2^{dly}, Remove some mistakes about it, and make some use of it.

For the first, we suppose there are these four requisite in, or to justifying faith, though not always in the same degree. 1. That there be a distinct knowledge in some measure of the object; an antecedent that faith presupposes, and for which cause faith has the name of knowledge here and elsewhere in scripture, the antecedent being put for the consequent; for faith hath always knowledge with it, though knowledge hath not always faith. 2. That there be an assent to the thing known; as when we know that we are sinners, and that it is the blood of Christ that must cleanse us from sin, we must assent to the truth of these, as Christ says, John viii. If ye believe not Moses his writings, how shall ye believe my words? If ye assent not to the truth of that he hath written, how can ye believe my speaking? Both these are in the understanding, and if there be no more, this makes but historical faith. 3. When the soul knows it is a sinner, and under the curse, and that Christ is a Saviour, and that there is salvation to be obtained by such a mean, and that he is an able Saviour, and hath assented to the truth of these. There is a consenting of the heart to that truth conditionally proposed, and made offer of, that is, to receive Christ as he is offered in the gospel; which in scripture is called a receiving of him, John i. 12. To as many as received him, &c. And this is an act of the will, respecting Christ as offered, and a price proposed that will make the soul happy where faith accepts. 4. There is a resting on Christ received as a great price, which is also an act of the heart, or will, called in scripture a committing ourselves to him, a leaning on him, or rolling ourselves selves on him; which we conceive to be the same that Paul hath, Philip. iii. 9. That I may be found in him: When the soul places its safety here, and trusts to Christ's righteousness alone, as contradistinguished to its own. These two last acts are properly the essence of faith as justifying, and they are well held forth in the catechism, where faith is described to be a saving grace, whereby we receive and rest upon Christ as he is offered in the gospel. We shall illustrate it in a comparison made use of before to this purpose. Suppose there were a number of rebels, that had incurred the prince's displeasure, and were guilty of treason by the law: Suppose also the prince's son, or some courtier hath satisfied for them, and procured their pardon and peace, upon which there comes out a proclamation, that if they will submit, and yield themselves, and lay down their arms, they shall be pardoned, and admitted to friendship, as if they had never rebelled. These rebels must know, 1. That there is an act of favour past, and a proclamation made on such terms. 2. They must have a general faith and assent to the thing, and that there is no question but such a thing is done. 3. There is a consultation of the understanding with the will, whether they will admit of, and receive it, and trust themselves to it. And then, 4. There is the heart's consenting to accept of the offer of grace, on the terms of the proclamation, and a resting on it, which is a trust of their defence to it, that if ever they should be called to an account, they will make use of such an act of grace, and of the proclamation for their defence and safety, and trust to it, and to his faithfulness who made the proclamation, believing that he will fulfil his word and promise. It is just so here, in a sinner's acting faith for justification. We may instance and illustrate it also in the example of the prodigal, wherein we may find something of all this. When he had been in the height of his distraction and madness, in his natural condition, it is said, he came to himself, he knew and believed that there was meat enough in his father's house, and resolved to go home; upon his knowledge follows his resolution, and his will consents, I will arise and go, which supposes his faith of an offer of meat, on condition of his going; and then there is that whereon he grounds his defence, I will say, Father, I have sinned; I will disclaim all, and betake me to thy grace, implied in the word Father; he resolves to fix his defence on this ground, and upon this comes home.

More particularly, 1. Knowledge of the object rested upon is necessary, Rom. x. How can they believe on him of whom they have not heard? It is not possible we can believe what we know not. And as every other step hath some doctrinal mistake, and some practical, so hath this. The doctrinal mistake is that error of Papists, unworthy to be refuted; they say there is no knowledge requisite to faith; yea, some of their prime men have said, that faith is rather ignorance than knowledge; but surely then faith would not be called knowledge, if it might rather be defined ignorance; but this they maintain to keep the people in ignorance of the gospel, and it is the ground of many more errors, and much delusion: It is even as if a blind man could go well in a slippery place where are many pits; for knowledge is no less necessary to faith, than eyes are to such a man. The practical errors in this are such as we find in many of you, who think ye can believe well; but ask, and put you to it, ye cannot tell what.

2. There is an assent requisite to the object known, which is what we call historical faith, and this is to be confirmed in the general truths contained in the gospel, as that Adam was made according to God's image, that he fell, and brake the covenant of works, and made himself, and all his, liable to God's curse, that we are by that covenant under God's curse, that Christ Jesus the Son of God, according to the covenant

nant of redemption, entered himself Surety for the elect, that he really died and payed their debt, that his purchase is made offer of in the gospel, and that according to the covenant of grace, there is a real absolution from sin, and an eternal happiness to be had at the great day, through embracing of him. There must be an assent to the truth of these things; for it is impossible, that they who think not themselves sinners, and that mind not a day of judgment, and a reckoning, will ever close with Christ, and depend on his righteousness. I fear there are but few hearers of the gospel that come the length of devils in believing, and yet all will needs be accounted Christians. We would here upon the one hand disclaim the Popish error, that placeth all the essence of faith in the understanding, which is somewhat strange, seeing they scarce think knowledge of the thing to be believed necessary; the reason is, because they know, or at least own nothing more of the concurrence of faith in justification than obedience to a commandment; they think it is a duty and obedience to a commandment to assent to any truth, therefore they take this general historical faith to be the only faith, as they take holiness to be the only ground of their peace, when they are called to an account; and thus faith, as a part of their holiness comes in, but they admit of no particular respect to faith's taking hold of Christ's righteousness, as the immediate ground of their peace: Upon the other hand, we would seclude the vain faith of many professors, who some way believe all that is in the Bible, so as they question nothing therein; they know no other faith but this; yet if this were justifying faith, the devils should have it, for they believe and tremble, they believe there is a God, that Christ is the Son of God, that they that believe shall not perish, that God is faithful, &c. But this historical faith is not enough, 1st, Because (as I just now said) it may be in reprobates and devils. 2. Because the scripture expresly differenceth this sort of faith; from saving faith, many were called believers, to whom Christ would not commit himself, as it is, John ii. 24. For, though they believed it to be truth which he spake, yet they rested not on him; so in the parable of the sower, Matt. xiii. there are three grounds that receive the seed, which imports, in two of them at least, a kind of believing, but the fourth ground is only good. 3. Because this faith acts upon every revealed truth alike, and assents to all passages recorded in the Bible alike; as well on, and to that, Paul left his cloak at Troas, and the like; as that, this is a faithful saying, that Christ came into the world to save sinners, and such like; but according to that ground formerly given, faith, as it justifies, acts on Christ only; and therefore this bare assent to the truth of the word cannot be justifying faith, because it acts no otherways on Christ, than it doth upon other things. Ye should therefore know a difference in your practice betwixt these two, the crediting the truth of a thing, and your actual receiving, and resting upon that truth; as for example, a man proposeth marriage to a woman, and she believes that he is in earnest, and not in scorn, yet there is a great difference betwixt that and her actual consenting to marry him: So it is here, the man may believe that Christ doth really make offer of himself to him, and yet be far from cordially receiving of him. Or take it in the example made use of before; suppose that some of the rebels we spake of, believe the proclamation to be a truth, yet thinking it hard to be under the bands of government, they do not embrace it. If it be objected here, that the scripture often calls justifying faith a believing that Christ is the Son of God, which is no more than this assent of the judgment, or historical faith; for answer, it should be considered of whom the scripture there speaks. 1. It is of Jews for the most part, who had the faith of the Messiah generally among among them; and no question, the believers of them, such as the profelyted Eunuch, Martha and Mary had the faith of the Messiah satisfying divine justice, and of their justification through his satisfaction; but the great question of the Jews was, whether Jesus the son of Mary was the Messiah or not; and it being revealed, and believed that he was, the other followed; they willingly rested on him, to say so, as the Messiah.

2. Believing of Christ to be the Son of God doth not exclude, but include their consenting to the receiving of Christ, but it holds forth also their assent to, and persuasion of that truth that was then debated, that he was indeed the promised Messiah, and the Son of God, for the devils confessed him to be the Son of God; and none will say, but there was more in their believing him to be the Son of God, than in the devils believing it, who never believe unto salvation as they did. 3. Consider that as sometimes knowledge is put for faith, so this assent may be put for faith where yet more is implied in it, especially considering that, Rom. x. faith is called faith of the heart, with the heart man believeth.

For the 3d, to wit, the receiving act of faith, which differs from the former, as we shewed in the examples hinted at before, it looks to the covenant of redemption betwixt Jehovah and the Mediator, it accepts of the terms of the covenant, as they are proposed in the gospel, and consents to the same; and as God proposes the righteousness of Christ, it submits to it; which Paul, 1 Tim. i. calls a saying worthy of all acceptance, to be welcomed and believed as such; and the believers mentioned, Heb. xi. are said not to have received the promises, but to have seen them afar off, and to have embraced, or saluted them. This receiving is no physical or natural act, as if we were to receive such a thing by the mouth, or bodily hand; it is an act of faith in the heart, proportioned and suited to this spiritual agreement, or marriage proposed in the covenant of grace; and it is like a man consenting to a civil bargain, or like a woman's consenting to marry a man.

The 4th and last act, is a resting on him, which is still the same faith, but another act of it. Not as if there might be a receiving, and not resting, or a resting and not receiving; or as if we were to difference them in respect of time; but faith is said to receive, as it respects the gospel-offer of Christ, and his satisfaction; and it is said to rest or rely, as it respects Christ and his satisfaction, the thing offered and received, with regard to the charge to which it is liable. It is here that it rests, and to this it betakes itself, as to its defence, when challenged. It is difficult to difference these two, or peremptorily to say, whether Christ's righteousness be received, or rested upon; yet it is made our defence, because it is closed with, and we make them two acts of the same faith, though it is hard to make the one of them to be the effect of the other, or the one of them to be antecedent to the other, in respect of time at least; as a proclamation of pardon being made to rebels, they say this proclamation gives a freedom from the law's pursuit, because they have embraced it; and these rebels make that the ground, if ever they be challenged, whereupon they found their defence; they have this to depend on, and upon this they rest: Though none of these acts can well be said to be before, or after the other in respect of time. For clearing of this a little more, consider that this resting may be looked on either passively, or actively; passively, in respect of the believer's acquiescing in Christ, and assuring himself that all shall be well; this is not that act of faith that is called for to justification, but supposes the person to be justified, for he must be justified e'er he can rest, or acquiesce in it: actively, in respect of our resting on him that we may be justified, as the apostle hath it, Gal. ii. 16. And this, Isaiah v. 6. is called a

taking hold of God's covenant. It is an actual committing of ourselves to him, that we may obtain peace, or a leaning on him; as suppose one was to rest upon a staff; it doth not only imply the effect, his having of ease, but also and firstly, his leaning to or resting on it, in order to ease; therefore it is said, Mat. xi. 28. Come unto me all ye that are weary and heavy laden, and ye shall find rest. The act that justifies is this last and active act; the act of coming, or leaning, or resting; and the passive act of acquiescing, or assurance is that which follows upon it, as a fruit and effect of it; and thereby we humbly conceive, that it is not safe, to define justifying faith by assurance, or to say that wherever faith is, there is assurance. It is rather a resting on Christ that we may have rest, and a ground of defence, and reason to be proposed, if we should be charged with the debt of sin.

The Uses are, first, To remove the difficulties; as namely, it may be asked here, is there no confidence nor assurance in this active act of faith which is the essence of it? We answer shortly, there are three sorts of confidence pleaded for, that are far from the nature of faith, and yet faith wants not its own confidence and assurance, if it be taken in a right sense. The 1. is for a man to believe, that Christ died for him in particular, at the first hand, and to think that he hath no more to do, but to believe that Christ died, and suffered for him, and that thereupon he is justified; for this layeth a ground for universal redemption against the current of the scriptures, and can never be a ground of interest in Christ's righteousness; it supposes that to be done already, and admits not the soul, to concur by believing for coming to the application. And yet this is very rife amongst people, I believe that Christ died for me, and shed his precious blood for me; and so long as they can maintain this presumption, and not suffer themselves to admit of any debating, and questioning, whether they have ground and reason for it, or not, they think they have faith enough. But this is no act of faith, nor of the nature of true justifying faith, which is to take hold of Christ offered, that we may come to be absolved through him; therefore, whenever the scripture puts us to believe, it commands us to take hold of Christ offered, and not at first hand to believe, that he died for us in particular. I suppose many are carried away with this presumption, that will to their cost at last find it to be otherways. 2. Others think that all faith consists in this, to believe that God loved them from all eternity, and that they are already justified, which is the Antinomian way. They believe not that they may be justified, which was Paul's way, Gal. ii. 10. but they believe that they are justified. And this also presupposes an universal redemption, and to press it upon you, were to bid you all believe that God hath loved you, and pardoned you from all eternity, which were to bid you believe a lie; for we know well from the scriptures of truth, that God hath not loved all from eternity; and yet this is the faith that many of you presumptuously practise. We are naturally some way Antinomians, Papists, and Arminians in our practice; and the way of error is more consistent and current with our nature, than the way of truth. But, O! presumptuous hypocrites, will you daringly and without any ground, believe God's love to you? God shall shake you out of that confidence, and blow upon it, and make it to vanish. Ye cry out on them that live in error yet ye practise these same errors (to speak so) as fast as ye can. We cannot by much preaching get you brought to the knowledge of the truth, but ye can drink in error e'er ye hear of it; and it will ruin your souls, if grace prevent not; and many of you shall find that thus you have destroyed yourselves. A 3^d sort of rotten confidence is that which some have, who cannot say they are for the time justified, yet they have a perswa-

sion to get heaven, and to be justified e'er they die, or that at death they will be sure of it, and they know well they shall not despair. This is also naughty presumption, and continued in, as hazardous as utter desperation, and killeth more souls than despair doth ; for such rest quietly in their hope of being freed from wrath, and having their peace made with God, and yet never go to Christ to have it done. This is like that man's presumption, that says, tush, I shall have peace, though I walk in the imagination of my own heart, God is gracious and merciful, and I hope he will not be so severe as he is called.

Yet 2dly, We say that the right exercise of faith wants not it's own confidence, comfort, and assurance, when taken in a right sense, much whereof is attributed by some to the definition of faith ; for some mistake faith, and others are mistaken, or misunderstood in their speaking of faith ; some divines that write of faith, speak of it's being an assurance, designing it at it's height ; yet generally they take in, and presuppose the active act of faith, resting on Christ ; others define it by these two acts, a receiving of, and resting upon Christ ; therefore we would never conceive of them, at least of many of them, as making this assurance to our sense to be essential, and absolutely necessary to the being of justifying faith ; much less would we think, that they misunderstand and pass by the true acts of receiving and resting upon Christ ; only some of them having to do with Papist's, who place faith in the understanding, add an assurance of faith to the former acts ; in which we say there is a ground of confidence, or a conditional assurance ; upon supposition that souls receive Christ, and rest upon him, they may be confident, that that is a ground that will not fail them, they may be confident, that he will not deceive them ; a confidence in this, that they may step to, or lean upon Christ, and not fear that he will fail them, or that they may without all fear of hazard cast themselves on Christ; therefore he is called a tried, elect, precious Corner-stone, a sure Foundation; and indeed that is no small ground of confidence, that when a soul comes to Christ by believing, it may be sure he will not fail it. 2dly, Being sure that we have committed ourselves to Christ (which supposes faith's being put to exercise and practice) there may be a confidence in this respect, we may be sure he will not fail us in particular. 2 Tim. i. 12. I know in whom I have believed, and that he is able to keep that which I have committed to him, and that, I shall not be ashamed; he puts both these together, I know that he is able, and that he will not fail me, I shall not be ashamed; so Rom. viii. I am persuaded that neither death, nor life, &c. shall be able to separate us from the love of God that is in Christ Jesus; if souls have received the offer, they may be sure it will not misgive them. 3dly, Add, that this actual, or active resting on Christ may be separate from the sense of it, or from the passive act of faith, or quietness that follows on resting on Christ; for there is a resting on Christ, which is very faith itself, and not the effect; come and ye shall find rest; coming is before finding of rest, to our sense at least; we are not to knit this passive rest, with the other active act of resting, as if it were impossible to rest on Christ without present sensible ease; beside, it is this active resting that gives us right to Christ, and not the passive, Gal. ii. 16. We believed that we may be justified; this necessarily goes before our believing that we are justified.

To close with a word of more particular use, let me exhort you to lay less weight on your bare thinking that ye believe, on your present ill grounded hope and peace; aim, and endeavour to act, and exercise faith on Christ actively, receiving and resting on him for obtaining peace; this practice of faith is the very language of the doctrine of justification; that seeing there is such ground of justification laid down, the righteousness righteousness of Christ, and that it is proposed to you, and seeing this is the very act of justifying faith, to receive and rest on Christ, as he is proposed and offered, when this offer is made to you, let your faith receive, take hold of and consent to the same; and ground and found your defence here, for answering all challenges that the law and justice may present against you. That there was a Saviour offered to you, and that ye received him, and rested upon him, will be a ground that shall bear you out when ye come before God, and except this be made sure, our speaking and your hearing of faith will be to no purpose.

Verse 11.—By his knowledge shall my righteous Servant justify many, for he shall bear their iniquities.

THIS is a great assertion, and of mighty moment, and unto this knowledge of Christ, the justification of many is attributed; and indeed if we knew what an advantage and benefit it were, there would be nothing more studied than how to obtain it; for it is the very inlet, and opens the door to glorification; and if to be happy in the enjoyment of God be a benefit of great concernment, than this of justification must be so.

We proposed to speak of the way how this benefit is applied, and that is by faith, set forth under this expression, his knowledge, or the knowledge of him, and touched on the benefit of faith, and the necessity thereof, for attaining justification, God having so ordered it in the covenant, that none others should be justified but such as have faith. 2dly, We spoke also to the object of this faith, Christ Jesus, as our righteousness and peace; So that Christ becomes in a peculiar manner the object of faith; because it is only in Christ it can find a shelter, therefore it is only to Christ that it flees, when the sinner is pursued. 3dly, We spake likewise of the nature of this faith, or it's act, it being the heart's trusting itself to Christ's righteousness, whereon it hazards the weight of it's peace, and relies here. And as all the terms of justification are borrowed from law, wherein there is supposed a charge, a tribunal, and a judge; so is this resting in like manner; it is in effect an arraigned person's making of Christ's righteousness, his legal defence against all challenges; the substance of the phrase is in that of Philip. iii. 9. That I may be found in him not having my own righteousness, &c. Where presupposing an arraignment and charge, whereto does the apostle betake himself, and what is his refuge? It is Christ and his righteousness, even to be found in him; as if the question were proposed, Paul, what wilt thou do in the day of judgment? what wilt thou trust to for a defence in that day? To which he answers, not to my own righteousness, but this is it, even to be found in him; which he explains to be the having of his righteousness by faith, that is the righteousness of Christ by faith taken hold of by me, which faith shuts up as it were Paul in that righteousness, and hides him, so, as he is past over, as if there were no unrighteousness at all in him.

The effect of this faith follows; when a person is chased, and hath fled unto, and laid hold on Christ, the effect, I say is, he shall be justified. We may consider this several ways, and for explication's sake I shall briefly pass over some of them.

1st, Then, according to the exposition of the words, take this observation, that there is such a thing as justification distinct from sanctification. The benefit of justification follows on faith's taking hold of Christ, because it is such a benefit as follows Christ's taking on our sin; By his knowledge shall he justify many, for he shall bear their iniquities. Now sanctification is not that, but the infusing of holiness in us, and is the work of God's Spirit, inwardly working a change in the man. We did some way clear and confirm this in the exposition of the words, and shewed you how sanctification differeth from justification; now ye are justified now ye are sanctified, says the apostle, 1 Cor. vi. making them distinct benefits. To clear it a little further, two things are to be considered in sin, both which are to be removed by Christ, but differently: 1. Something that defiles and pollutes us, and makes us unlike to God's image; hence sin is in the scripture compared to boils and sores, and menstruous cloaths; and is called filthiness. 2dly, There is a guiltiness that follows on this, whereby we are not only presupposed unclean, but are made liable to the law's denunciation, wherein it is said, Cursed is every one that continueth not in every thing written in the book of the law to do it. Now if we speak of the removing of these two, justification takes away the guilt of sin, when the sinner is pursued before God's tribunal, he is discharged by the imputation of Christ's righteousness, to which he is fled for refuge; the law absolves him not because he wants sin, but because the Mediator hath satisfied for his sin, and that satisfaction is by faith laid hold of; sanctification takes away the pollution, and blot of sin, the person that had these boils and sores is cleansed, or healed, or is a healing, and under cure.

Use. We observe this only as we pass along, because it serves to clear all that concerns justification; and therefore when we speak of justification by Christ's righteousness, 1. It is not as if we had a righteousness communicated to us, and were made actually holy, but it is the imputation of Christ's righteousness to us.

The

The confounding of these two does ill, and is very prejudicial, not only to the Papists, but to others, who think they are justified, when they think they have some good frame, which being wanting, they suspect their justification. 2. The meaning is not as if Christ's righteousness were our sanctification, which is the error of the Antinomians, who make all sanctification to be justification, even as the Papists make all justification to be sanctification. Therefore we should learn to distinguish these two, yet not so as to separate them.

2dly, Observe, That this effect, viz. justification, is not only or mainly the sense of being pardoned and absolved, but it is real absolution and pardon itself; because this justification that follows faith, is that which Christ hath purchased by his soul-travel, and bearing of our iniquities, and intitles the justified person to him, and makes him to be of his seed; and that is, not to have the sense that we are justified, but actually to be justified. And here there is another mistake to be adverted to, to think justification to be the evidence of that which is past before we were born, yea, from eternity.

The third, and main thing in this effect, is, That laying hold on Christ by faith, as he is offered in the gospel, does, before God, serve to the justifying of a sinner, and the absolving of him from the guilt of sin; that is, when a sinner, sensible of sin, is brought to lay hold on Christ's righteousness, then follows God's absolving of him, as if he had never had sin, or had satisfied for his own sin; which is not only held forth here, but is frequently spoken of through the Epistles, and is the justification that stands in opposition to the way of the works; to wit, when a poor sinner, sensible of sin, is persuaded by God's Spirit to flee unto, and rest upon Christ's righteousness offered in the gospel, upon which follows God's absolving of him. This doctrine takes in the substance of the text,

By

By the knowledge of my righteous Servant shall many be justified.

There are several things to be cleared in the prosecuting of this, which we shall speak briefly to for clearing of that question of the catechism, what is justification? because this doctrine holds out the form of it, and deduceth it in this order. 1st, A sinner is here supposed to be living under God's curse, according to that, Gal. iii. 10. Cursed is every one that continues not in all things written in the law. This is man's condition by nature. 2^{dly}, It is supposed that Christ becomes Surety for elect sinners, and takes on him their debt, and satisfies for them, on condition that if they shall believe on him, they shall be justified, and have his satisfaction imputed to them, and that the Lord Jehovah accepts of the Mediator's satisfaction, and engageth to make out the condition. 3. The Lord, in the word of the gospel, hath revealed this, and hath comprehended the way of a sinner's justification in the gospel-covenant and promises, and makes offer of it to all that hear of it, saying, 'He that believes in the Son shall not perish, but have eternal life, and all that believe in him shall be justified from all things, whereby they could not be justified by the law of Moses.' This is the external instrumental cause of justification, that holds out the way to life, which supposes the former. 4. When this is made offer of in the gospel, there is the operation of God's Spirit on the soul, enlightening the mind of the sinner, convincing him of his hazard, chasing him to Christ, and powerfully persuading him to take hold of his righteousness made offer of to him, whereupon the soul comes to put forth the act of faith, and to rest upon his righteousness; as when it was said by Philip to the eunuch, Acts viii. If thou believest thou mayest be justified, the soul answers, I believe in Christ the Son of God; whereupon it becomes an agreement. And this is the inward mean, or instrumental mental cause of justification. 5. Then follows God's imputing to that sinner, that receives Christ as he is offered, and rests upon him by faith, his righteousness, and Christ's payment and satisfaction to justice is counted his, and according to this his sins are pardoned for the merit of that righteousness, and he himself is accepted and accounted righteous, as if he had never sinned; and he hath such a sentence past on him, as is held forth in those words of, Psal. xxxii. 1. Blessed is the man whose transgression is forgiven, whose sin is covered, to whom the Lord imputes no iniquity.

We may confirm this either as to the positive part, that by believing a sinner is justified; or as to the negative part, that there is no other way possible whereby a sinner can be justified, but by believing: So that this great effect follows from a sensible sinners taking hold of Christ's righteousness by faith. Ye may look upon a few scriptures to this purpose; as namely, Gal. ii. 16. where the apostle, entering into the debate, lays down this conclusion, knowing that a man is not justified by the works of the law, but by faith in Jesus Christ, even we have believed in Jesus Christ, that we might be justified by the faith of Christ; as if he had said, we have taken this way for the attaining of this end, believing that we might be justified. The apostle speaks here, 1st, of a justification by faith which is opposite to works; and as he ascribes it to faith, so he denies it to works. 2^{dly}, He makes it exclusive, and will have no other thing to concur in the matter at least, but faith; knowing that a man is not justified by works, but by faith. 3^{dly}, He holds forth his own, and other believers practice; even we have believed, that we might be justified; as if he had said, we took this way of faith to be absolved before God, which by the law, or the works of the law, would never have been. See also to this purpose the Epistle to the Romans i, ii, iii, iv, and v. chapters, especially iii and iv. In chap. iii. verse 25. when he is

is summing the doctrine of justification, he says, Whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation through faith, to declare his righteousness for the remission of sins, &c. where Christ's righteousness is called a propitiation through faith; and faith is held forth as the channel in which justification runs; and in the words following the believer is declared to be the object of it. So chap. iv. it is described in the instance of Abraham, particularly in verse 5. To him that worketh not, but believeth on him that justifieth the ungodly, his faith is counted for righteousness; where the apostle proposes two ways of a person's aiming to be justified; the first whereof is, when a man worketh, and on that account seeks to be justified, and that way is rejected. The second is when a man hath no works, or worketh not on that account to be justified by them, but by faith betakes himself to Christ's satisfaction, and that way is established; for that man's faith is counted for righteousness, and is the ground of his peace before God. We gave some scriptures before for this, and shall not therefore now insist. There is also good reason why it cannot be otherwise: 1st, If we consider what man is in himself, ungodly, rebellious, having nothing to present unto God; but when a righteousness is presented to him by way of offer, and he is through grace brought to accept of the offer of the righteousness of another, nothing can be conceived to be brought to receive it but his faith; and if Christ's satisfaction be his justification, and if it be faith that takes hold of it, we have a clear reason why justification is attributed to faith. 2^{dly}, Consider, that this contributes most to God's end, which is to glorify himself, especially in his grace, in the justification of sinners, even to hold forth the manifold riches of his grace, and nothing contributes to this so much, and so well, as that which speaks the sinner to be empty; and nothing empties the sinner more than faith, it being the great act of faith to bring the

soul off its own bottom, and to stop all boasting, to drive it out of itself to be found in him; therefore it is said to be of faith, that it might be of grace, Rom. iv. 16. as if he had said, if it were by any other thing, it could not be by grace, but faith claims nothing but the righteousness of Christ to rest on. He hath paid the price, and made the satisfaction, and that satisfaction is mine, faith faith, because it was offered to me, and I have been brought to lay hold on it; and the nature of this pleading stops the mouth of the creature, and proclaims justification to be alone the effect of God's grace, and of Christ's procurement. 3dly, Consider, that if it depended on any other thing, our justification could never be perfect. When we speak of justification, and call it perfect, it is not so to be understood, as if faith were perfect, but Christ's satisfaction which is our righteousness, and which faith lays hold on is perfect, though our faith be weak. Hence it is, that the weak believer is justified as well as the strong. All who look unto Christ, tho' with a weak-sighted eye, get salvation through him as well as Abraham; because his righteousness is perfect, which weak faith takes hold of as well as strong faith. Now, if justification were founded on ought within us, it could never be perfect; but by him all that believe are justified from all things, from which they could not be justified by the law of Moses; and one of them made as free as another. It is not here, as if one part of the debt were scored and blotted out, and not another; but all is blotted out; because the righteousness presented before God's tribunal, and imputed to us, which is the defence that faith gives in, is perfect.

The uses are many and comfortable. 1st, It serves for our direction; if any were asking, how they may come to be justified? this doctrine answers, by faith in Jesus Christ, by being convinced of your sin, and taking hold of Christ's righteousness offered to you in the

the gospel, and by making that your defence before God. And is not this a lesson worth the learning? which the whole word of God aims at, even to instruct you how to make your peace with him. It is by the knowledge of Christ, or by faith in him, by resting on him, as he is offered in the gospel; and this cannot but be a solid and safe way of justification; because we have God's word for it, it is founded on his faithfulness, and on the transaction made betwixt God and the Mediator; we have also the experience of all the saints for it, Abraham before the law, David under the law, and Paul since the law, all of them were led the same way. Ye should take notice of this, not only as the great question in catechizing or examination, but as the ground whereon ye would build your peace, if ye were dying; there is a perfect righteousness in Christ made offer of to you in the gospel, on condition ye will receive him as he is offered; and if ye so receive him, it shall be yours, and ye shall at God's bar be absolved; the righteousness of Christ shall be as effectual for your absolution, as if it were inherent in yourselves; and faith shall unite you to him, and make you one with him.

And therefore 2dly, (which is the great use of all this doctrine) Here there is ground laid down to any that would be justified, how they may obtain it, and a warrant to propose justification, as a thing attainable through faith in him; ye have it in your offer on these terms, and therefore let me earnestly entreat you to accept of the offer. If this be the way of justification, take this way, seeing there is an absolute necessity of faith in every one that would receive justification, make it sure that ye are indeed fled to Christ, and that it is his righteousness, which ye make your defence before the bar of God's tribunal. We shall branch forth this use of exhortation in these two or three words: 1st, When Christ is spoken of in the gospel, let him be by faith received; and if ye would know what this is, labour first to know, and to distinguish the difference betwixt self-righteousness and that righteousness which is by faith; for many are so ignorant, that they know neither the one nor the other, or at least not the one from the other. Secondly, When ye are come to know the difference betwixt these two, and are soberly weighing what ye should trust to, in your coming before God, with indignation shuffle out, and cast by, disclaim and renounce your own righteousness, and flee to the righteousness of Christ; here faith will have a double work, upon the one hand to reject self-righteousness, and upon the other hand to rest upon the righteousness of Christ alone, according to that, Philip. iii. 9. Thirdly, When ye have gotten your own righteousness abandoned, and Christ's righteousness closed with, there is a necessity to cover and hide yourselves in it, that ye may never, so much as in your own opinion, be found out of it. It alludes to the city of refuge, wherein, when once entred into, and abode in, the person was safe, but if he was at any time found without, he was in hazard of being killed by the avenger of blood; which held out not only the act of faith fleeing to Christ, but it is abiding in him, being hid in him, containing and keeping itself in him, and continuing to plead its defence on that ground. There may be in a fit of sad exercise a renouncing of our own righteousness, but when that is over, and we begin to conceit something of that which we have done, we are ready to forget Christ's righteousness, and to lean to our own; and that is in a manner to come out of Christ, and from our city of refuge, if ever we were in him. Faith, as it betakes itself to Christ, so it states itself in Christ, where only it dare abide the trial. 2. We would commend this to you, as the great ground of your peace and hope, even that ye would put it to the trial, and make it sure, whether ye be in the faith or not. It is true, there are many beguiled in

in this, and take themselves to be in the faith when they are not; and others question their faith, and their being justified without just ground, yet it is impossible to arrive to clearness of interest in Christ, or to the having of any solid and comfortable hope of enjoying God, except there be some clearness that we are in the faith, and have indeed betaken ourselves to Christ; which cannot be obtained without putting it to the trial; other evidences serve to clear our justification, as they clear our faith, and as they prove faith, so they conclude and prove our justification, and the issue promised. Now if believing be such an evidence of justification, and of a well-grounded hope of heaven, is there not reason we should put it in good earnest, and frequently to the trial, and seek to know whether we be in the faith or not? The apostle, 2 Cor. xiii. 5. doubles his exhortation to this purpose, Examine yourselves, if ye be in the faith, prove your own selves, know ye not your own selves, how that Jesus Christ is in you, except ye be reprobates? We do the rather press this; because, if we were serious in the trial, there would, through God's blessing, be more faith in some, and less presumption in others; and those that have faith, would have more peace and comfort in it. But that which makes many content themselves with a counterfeit, instead of real faith, is, that they put it not to the trial; and that which makes them who have faith to want peace, and live in much anxiety, is, that they do not more prove themselves, as to their faith. These are then the two main points of believers duty, by faith to take hold of Christ, and to rest on, and in him, and by trial to make it clear and sure to themselves, that they are believers; and these two are the great design of all this doctrine, to persuade us to believe, that we may be sure, and to persuade us to study to be sure and clear in it, that we may be comforted thereby.

ISAIAH LIII. Verse 11.

THE doctrine of justification through faith in Christ Jesus was wont to be much thought of among the people of God; it is called, Gal. iii. 8. The preaching of the gospel to Abraham, when God foretold him of a way of justification and salvation, through Christ's coming of him, That in him all the nations of the earth should be blessed; this was the telling of good news to him; and we are sure it is as good news now as ever it was, and would be so to us, if we could look on it spiritually, as they did; for there is as great hazard in sin, and the curse is as terrible and insufferable, and the love of God as desirable now as they were then.

We have for some days been speaking of this doctrine of justification, and it will be much to speak and hear of it profitably; we desire not to insist on what may be useless, but we conceive there is some necessity in insisting on this. It is our own negligence and ignorance that makes many things of this kind to be very unuseful, even so that we scarcely conceive them, and we are made heartless in speaking of them, because to many they are, as if spoken in a strange language, which is, and should be for a lamentation.

The last thing we proposed, was to hold forth the mean by which justification is attained, to wit, faith; which we observed, to shew how faith concurs in the attaining of justification. Few or none ever denied faith to be necessary for the attaining of justification, neither can any that read the word of God with the least consideration, but have that impression of it; but the

the great thing wherein the difference lies, and wherein men miscarry, is, in attributing to faith the right or wrong manner of its concurrence, in the attaining of this effect. Tho' these things may at first view, look like merely notional speculations, and such as do not concern Christians practice, yet there is no error in doctrine about this matter, but there is something in people's practice that looks like it, and is influenced by it, and its men's inclination to error in practice, that it makes them as it were to coin errors in judgment.

We shall observe two generals further, and proceed; the 1st whereof is, that faith hath a peculiar way of concurrence for the attaining of justification, which can agree to no other grace, nor work, nay, nor to faith itself, considered as a work; therefore justification of many is here derived to them by knowledge, or by faith in him, that is by faith in Christ, as excluding all other things, it's by faith that justification is derived and applied to us, and by faith we come to have a right to it, and an interest in it.

The 2^d is, That however faith concurs for attaining of justification; yet it is not faith of itself, or by any virtue or efficacy in itself, but as taking hold of Christ as the object of it, that it justifies; therefore it is said to be by the knowledge of him, or by faith in him; it is by receiving him, uniting us to him, and resting on him, that we are justified.

We shall shortly explain both these branches, and come to some practical use of them together.

1st then, We say that there is something in justification attributed to faith, that cannot agree to any other thing; which is implied in many scriptural phrases, and in this text, in as far as it is said, that by his knowledge, or by faith in him, justification is attained. And therefore, when we are said to be justified by faith, we affirm that faith hath a peculiar way of concurring for the attaining of justification, which can agree

agree to no other grace, as to repentance, love, meekness, patience, &c. nor to prayer, almsdeed, or any other good works or work. For confirming of this, consider, 1. That we are said to be justified by faith in opposition to works, and that there is something attributed to faith which is denied to works. Generally this is clear in those epistles written to the Romans and Galatians; particularly Rom. iv. 2, 3. if Abraham were justified by works, he hath whereof to glory, but not before God; for what says the scriptures? Abraham believed God, and it was counted to him for righteousness; now to him that worketh is the reward not reckoned of grace, but of debt; but to him that worketh not, but believeth on him that justifieth the ungodly, his faith is counted to him for righteousness; where most clearly and convincingly, believing and working are directly opposite the one to the other. And Gal ii. 16. We who are Jews by nature, knowing that a man is not justified by the works of the law, but by the faith of Jesus Christ, or as the word is, no not by faith; that is, a man is not justified by works, but by faith, even we have believed in Jesus Christ, that we might be justified by the faith of Christ, and not by the works of the law; where the apostle cannot more purposely and pressingly make a difference betwixt any two things, than he doth betwixt these two, justification by works, and justification by faith. And in all this discourse, it cannot be said, that the apostle only excludes works in respect of merit, or works, as they look to the works of the ceremonial law; for he opposeth faith, and all sorts of works, or works in whatsoever respect, as inconsistent. It is not one or two sorts of works, but all sorts of works of the law; and there can be no works, but such as are commanded by the law, which are excluded. Now if the apostle seclude all these, what are the works that we can be justified by? 2. Consider the peculiar phrase, that the scripture useth to this purpose, and where we are said to be

be justified by faith, there is a sort of causality attributed to faith, that can be attributed to no other grace, nor works. Hence the righteousness of Christ is called the righteousness of faith; and we are said to be justified by faith in his blood. So Phil. iii. 8, 9. I count all things to be but dung, that I may win Christ, and be found in him, not having mine own righteousness, which is of the law, but that which is through the faith of Christ, the righteousness which is of God by faith. And Rom. iii. 25. Whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation through faith in his blood. Many more such phrases there are; and truly it would look very unlike the scripture, to expound these scripture-phrases of a righteousness of works, or by works. 3. Consider how the apostle opposeth the two covenants, the covenant of works made with Adam, and the covenant of grace made with believers in Jesus Christ, Rom. x. 5, 6. Moses describeth the righteousness of the law, that the man which doth these things shall live by them. The righteousness of the law speaks of doing, by which we come to be justified; but the righteousness of faith, or the covenant of grace, speaketh on this wise, the word is near thee, even in thy mouth, and in thy heart, that if thou confessest with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thy heart, that God raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved; where the apostle opposeth these two covenants, not in respect of merit only, as if the one were inconsistent with grace, and not the other; but he opposeth them in this, that the righteousness of the one covenant is in doing, and the righteousness of the other covenant is by believing; and therefore, according to this opposition, whatever is a man's doing is not the ground of his peace and justification before God; because the righteousness of his doing is the condition of the covenant of works; and the righteousness of the covenant of grace is quite of another nature; to wit, Believing in him who justifieth the ungodly. 4. Consider that the thing that is the ground of our justification before God, is Christ's righteousness inherent in himself, and imputed to us, for the covering of our nakedness; because he, as our Surety, hath paid the debt. Hence it follows, that faith hath another way of concurring in justification, than any other thing can have; because it is faith which receives and puts on that righteousness, which no other thing doth; That I may be found in him, faith the apostle, Phil. iii. 9. not having mine own righteousness, but the righteousness which is by the faith of Christ: So that to be in him, is to have his righteousness, and this righteousness is put on by faith. Only take two words of advertisement e'er we come to clear the other branch of the doctrine; the 1st is this, when we speak of the peculiarness of the way of faith's concurring in justification, so as no other grace or work doth, we design not to weaken or cry down the necessity of repentance, and of other graces, nor of good works, the very thoughts whereof we abhor, but to give every one of them their own, and the right place; and therefore it is a gross calumny to say, That we affirm, that the study and practice of holiness and good works is not necessary; we only cry them down on this account, that when we come before God, our works, or holiness, are not to be presented to him as the ground of our justification, and absolution, but the righteousness of Christ that faith takes hold of; and in this we say, that faith peculiarly concurs as no other grace doth; because it is fitted with an aptitude to receive and apply Christ's righteousness, which no other grace is. As we say, it is by the eye that a man sees; tho', if he had not a head and brains, he would not see; so tho' faith and holiness, or good works, be not separate, yet faith is as it were the eye of the soul, that discerns and takes hold of Christ's righteousness. The 2^d is this, That when we speak of good works, we speak of them as the apostle doth, Tit. iii. 5. where he

faith, Not by the works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his mercy he saved us; and by good works denied in the point of justification, we understand all that is our own doing, not excluding only some things that were so accounted in the time of darkness, as alms-deeds, and the like, but (as we have said) all that is our own doing.

The 2d branch is, That this peculiarness of faith's concurring in justification, is not from any efficacy in faith, or from faith considered as our deed or work, but as it acts on Christ as the object of it; and therefore when it is said, Rom. iv. 3. that Abraham believed God, and it was accounted to him for righteousness, the meaning is not, as if God had accepted his believing, as an act or work for his righteousness, and that it was accounted as a perfect grace; but the meaning is, that Christ Jesus the promised seed received by faith, or his betaking himself to the righteousness of Christ held forth to him in the promise, was accounted his righteousness, as if he had had an inherent righteousness of his own; and so faith is imputed not in respect of its act, but in respect of its object; by his union with Christ thro' faith, Christ's satisfaction became his. To clear it a little, take these considerations: 1. Consider faith as a grace in us, and so it cannot be imputed for righteousness; for in that respect it is a work, and is excluded by the apostle's opposition, made of grace and works; it must therefore be faith considered as acting on its object. 2. Consider that in scripture, to be justified by Christ, by his blood, and by faith, are all one; because when it is said, we are justified by Christ, or by his blood, it takes in Christ and his blood laid hold on by faith; therefore sometimes Christ, sometimes faith, is called our righteousness; because as Christ considered, as suffering, and satisfying is the meritorious cause of our justification, so faith is the instrumental cause taking hold of his satisfaction, which is our righteousness. Both are necessary in their own way, and Christ's righteousness implies faith, and faith implies Christ and his righteousness, the one implies the other necessarily. 3. Consider the phrases used in scripture to this purpose, as where we are said to be justified by faith, it ever respects Christ, and where we are said by faith to put on Christ, it is not faith considered as righteousness of itself, but it is faith considered as acting on Christ and his righteousness; therefore it is the righteousness which is by faith, the righteousness which is in Christ, and by faith, taken hold of by us, and becoming ours.

The uses are several. 1. For information and conviction, and we should, 1. be informed in, and understand well the meaning of this doctrine, when we say, that faith is necessary to justification, and concurrith in attaining of it, as no other thing doth, that ye may give it its right place, and may make no confusion of these things that are distinct. 1st, We deny not works, notwithstanding of all that we have said, to be necessary, more than we do faith; but the great difference is concerning the giving of faith and works, or faith as it is a work, an equal share, in respect of causality in our justification; and therefore we should beware with Papists to attribute a sort of condignity to faith, as if it merited eternal life, which flows from their ignorance of God's covenant; for they think, that since he commands us to believe, and promiseth life to believing, that there is a merit in believing, as they fancy there is in prayer, alms-deeds, and other duties, or good works. But in this respect, as it is a work in us, the apostle excludes faith, and makes our justification free; whereas, if faith in justification were considered as a work meriting our justification, it would not be free. And although there be no Papists in profession here amongst us, yet it may be there are some, and that not a few, that think God is obliged to them, because they believe, and that expect heaven and life eternal on that ground; even as when they pray, they think they should be heard for their praying; and when they give alms, that they should be rewarded for the same, as a meritorious work. 2dly, Neither do we understand, when we say that faith is necessary to justification, and concurrcth in the attaining of it, that by believing we are disposed to be holy, and so more enabled to justify ourselves, which is also a Popish error, wherein, I fear, many professors of the gospel amongst us are, who think they are obliged to their faith, because it disposeth them to hear, read, pray, and the like, and so enableth them to work out a righteousness to themselves, whereby they expect to be justified. This is another fault and error to be guarded against; for though we give faith a radical virtue, to keep life in other graces, yet so considered, it is still a piece of inherent holiness, and pertains to sanctification, and not to justification. 3dly, When we say, that faith concurs in the attaining of justification, we do not say that it concurs in the same manner that repentance, prayer, and good works do concur. But it may be said here, seeing we grant, that good works and duties are necessary, what then is the difference? I answer, in these two. 1. Faith is the proper and peculiar condition of the covenant of grace, and not our works, or holiness, whereof faith considered as a work, is a part. Works is the condition of the covenant of works, for it says in this manner, The man that doth these things shall live by them; but the covenant of grace in opposition to it, says, If thou believe with thy heart in the Lord Jesus, and confess with thy mouth, that God raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved; as it is, Rom. x. what works is in the one covenant, faith is in the other covenant, and that as it is opposed to works, and to faith itself, as it is a work in us. 2. There is a peculiarness in faith's concurring for the attaining attaining of justification, in respect of its instrumentality, in taking hold of Christ for our justification, or in receiving and resting upon him, as we said before, for that end; for when Christ is offered in the gospel, faith flees to him, receives him, takes hold of him, and rests on him; neither repentance, nor prayer, nor any good works, have an aptitude and fitness to receive Christ, and present his satisfaction to God as the ground of the sinner's defence, as faith hath. And therefore it is so often said by divines according to the scripture, that faith is the instrumental cause of our justification; which we shall clear in two or three similitudes, which the scripture makes use of. 1st, Christ compares himself to the brazen serpent lifted up in the wilderness, John iii. 14. man by sin is stung deadly; as the Israelites were by the fiery serpents; Christ Jesus as suffering, and hung, or lifted up upon the cross, is proposed to our faith to look upon, as the brazen serpent was proposed to them that were stung, and put up on a poll for that end. And as there was no healing to the stung Israelites, except they looked to it, and the cure followed to none but to those who did behold it; so Christ Jesus proposed as the object, and meritorious cause of justification, justifies none but such as look to him by faith. And although they were to look to the brazen serpent, yet their look gave them no efficacy to the cure, but it flowed from God, ordaining that as a mean of their cure. Even so it is not from any efficacy in faith considered in itself, that sinners are justified, but it is from Jesus Christ the object, that faith eying him lifted up, as the Saviour of the elect, and his satisfaction as appointed of God for that end, doth justify; and therefore it may well be called an instrumental cause, because it is not Christ abstractly considered, that justifies, more than it was the serpent considered abstractly, without their looking to it, that did cure, but Christ considered and laid hold of by faith. And in this respect faith is said to justify, even as the eye looking to the brazen serpent put them in capacity of the cure, though the cure flowed from God's appointment, and not from their looking; so is it in faith's concurring for the attaining of justification. A 2^d similitude is that of miraculous faith, we find it often said by the Lord in his working such cures, Thy faith hath made thee whole. There was no efficacy in faith itself for producing the cure, but it was the mean by which the cure was transmitted to the person under such a disease; so it is in believing, in order to our justification. It is by believing on Christ, that our spiritual cure in justification is transmitted to us, and we are said to be justified by faith, because by faith it is conveyed to us. A 3^d similitude for clearing that faith may well be called the instrumental cause of justification, may be this, even as the advocate's pleading may be called the instrumental cause of the client's absolving. As suppose a man whose surety hath payed his debt, were cited to answer for the debt, his advocate pleads his absolution and freedom from the debt, because his surety hath payed it; although the debt was payed, yet the man had not been absolved, if it had not been so pleaded on his behalf; so the concurrence of faith in the sinner's justification, is to place Christ's satisfaction for his defence before God, and to plead his absolution on that ground. The believing sinner's faith says, it is true, I was owing so much debt of sin, but Jesus Christ my Surety to whom I am fled hath satisfied for it, therefore I ought to be absolved; and the law allows of this sort of pleading, and upon this ground; in which respect faith concur-reth in attaining, and may well be called the instrumental cause of our justification. I shall say no more on this use, but these two words. We may partly regret our great ignorance, that we know so little of the use of faith in our justification. And partly we may lament the great confusion that is in these times, wherein men are set to overturn such a clear truth, as if faith had no instrumentality in our justification, but as if it, and other duties and works were equal sharers and alike in it: Which, 1. Overturns the nature of God's covenant of grace, in making works the condition of it, as if there were no difference betwixt the two covenants of works and of grace. 2. It hath this miserable evil attending it, that it shoulders out Christ's righteousness, and shuffles in an inherent righteousness of our own, as our defence when we come immediately before the throne of God; whereas the gospel leads us to a righteousness without us, and imputed to us, this way leads us to seek righteousness in ourselves; whether works, or faith, as a work, be made the ground of our justification, it is all one.

A 2d. Use of this, and the other doctrine formerly spoken of, is for direction, and practical information. Would any know justification by Christ? here is the way; it is by faith in him; when Christ Jesus and his satisfaction is made offer of in the gospel, for justifying all self-condemning sinners, that lay hold on him, sinners by faith fleeing to him, and resting on him, get a title to his righteousness, that cannot but save them; so that if it were ist, asked, What is that which a man appearing before the throne, dare venture to present to God, as the ground of his defence? It is answered, Christ's righteousness, his satisfaction. 2. If it were asked, how comes one to have a title and right to that righteousness, so as he may own and present it for his defence? It is answered, that it is attained by believing in him. 3. If it be asked, how comes faith to get a title to that righteousness; is it by any virtue or efficacy in faith, as a working in us? It is answered, no, but it comes to have title to it, by going out of itself, by receiving and taking hold, and making use of the worthiness that is in Christ's righteousness, which is as a garment, able to cover the sinner's nakedness, and to hide all his spots, spots, and as a compleat ransom to pay all his debt. And thus we see here upon the one side, a necessity of faith in order to justification, and upon the other side, a warning, not to count grace, and the righteousness of Christ, the less free, that faith hath an instrumentality in the application of it, faith having two things that it pleads upon. 1. Emptiness, and need in itself, whence it arrogates nothing to its own pleading. But 2. Founds its defence on the good ground it hath to propose. And therefore, as upon the one hand, we should know that there is a way to come by justification, by taking hold of Christ's righteousness by faith; so upon the other hand, we should be afraid to let any thing cleave to us from our faith, as if we had a meritorious, or efficient hand in, or were to be thanked for our obtaining justification; for as a beggar, in receiving an alms, can alledge no merit to be in his receiving or calling for it, so no more does faith's receiving mar the freedom of our justification, by any merit in it.

Use 3. Seeing faith concurs instrumentally in the attaining of justification, there is here clear ground to exhort you, by faith to receive Christ, and to commend to you the exercise of believing, because without it ye cannot be justified, and by it ye shall certainly be justified.

Use 4. Here, O! here is ground of consolation to poor sinners, sensible of sin, trembling at God's bar, as being obnoxious to the curse, that by receiving of Jesus Christ they may be absolved from the debt of sin, and freed from the curse. Therefore, if there be any such here, put forth your hands, and receive what is in your offer; open your soul's mouth wide, and let in Christ, and he will fill it, faith having, as to our spiritual life, the same place, that the mouth hath to the body as to the entertaining of the natural and bodily life, it opens and receives what is needful to keep in the life of the body.

Use 5. This serves exceedingly to humble a sinner; whether it be a sinner aiming, and seeking to be justified, or a sinner that hath attained justification, in so far as there is no ground of boasting here. If ye be aiming to be justified, it may humble you, for what can ye contribute to it? Being enabled, ye can indeed receive what is offered, and that is all; neither can ye receive except ye be enabled, as we said before. It serves also to humble such as are justified. Have ye righteousness? its not your own, but Christ's. It is from him only that you have it. If it should be said, ye believed, and may boast of that; I ask, what did ye when ye believed? Did ye any more but this? Ye pleaded guilty, and did consent to take Christ's righteousness, and the pardon of sin through him freely; and what matter of boasting, I pray is here? none at all. Thus this doctrine contributes both to make those who are seeking pardon, and those who have received pardon, humble. Where is boasting then? it is excluded. By what law? By the law of works? No, but by the law of faith, as it is, Rom. iii. 17. The believing sinner does nothing, and hath done nothing towards the procuring of his own justification, but has all freely.

We shall close and shut up the whole of this doctrine by proposing some few considerations as conclusions from it. 1. See here a necessity of being acquainted with the truths of the gospel, and with this truth in particular, concerning justification, (whereof, alas, many are very ignorant) seeing there are so many ways to go wrong, and so many do go wrong about it, we had need to be the more clear in the right way. If there were more knowledge of this, and of other truths, we might speak and hear with more profit, and if ye did not please yourselves with meer and airy notions, but sought to be settled in what ye hear of other truths, and of this in particular, it would contribute much to your peace, and free free you from many doubts and difficulties. A 2^d consideration is, that there is much need to walk in holy fear, in studying this, and other truths, there are so many ways to err, and a wrong step here so is very dangerous. It were exceeding profitable to be more in the study of justification, that is of the very marrow of the gospel, and is deservedly accounted to be articulus stantis, aut cadentis ecclesiæ; but ye should come to it in fear, being jealous of your own ignorance, and shallowness of capacity rightly to conceive of it, especially, when new questions are rising, and started concerning it. And as Paul and David studied this way, and held it forth to others, as the way whereby they went to heaven, and whereby others must come to it. So we commend to you to follow them. A 3^d consideration is, if faith be so necessary to justification, as without it ye cannot be justified, is there not reason that ye should study to be distinct, and clear that ye have faith, and that ye are indeed believers? This is one of the great uses of the doctrine. If there be no way but faith, and if in studying to make your calling and election sure, study to make this sure, by putting yourselves to the trial, if ye be taking this way, as the apostle most pathetically exhorts, 2 Cor. xiii. 5. Examine yourselves, if ye be in the faith, prove your own selves, &c. It is truly matter of wonder to think, how so many men and women are so soon satisfied in the matter of their believing, which yet is so tickle and difficult a business, we would have none to be jumbled and confounded about it, who desire to be serious in the thing, yet we would have all wakened, and put to diligence; many men have taken pains to go wrong in this matter of justification, and how few of you have taken pains to go right in it? and how is it that many of you obtain it so easily? seeing the apostle, Rom. ix. calls it a stumbling stone to many and a rock of offence. Surely if it be so, your coming at it by guess, and ignorantly it is to be suspected ; and therefore on this consideration ye should be awaked, to put yourselves more seriously to the study of it, and to try yourselves, if ye be come well to it, for it is the special, yea the only ground of your peace before God. There are many of you, who in a manner think it impossible to miscarry in this ; for ye know that there is no way to be justified but by faith ; and yet if many of you were put to it, ye know not the manner nor way how faith justifies, which shews that it is not so easy a matter as ye think it to be. A 4th consideration is this, that in speaking of justification, and faith's peculiarness, or peculiar way of concurring in it, ye should beware of crying down works, as to their usefulness, or necessity. This was an error that soon entered in the church ; as soon as Paul cleared and pressed the doctrine of justification by faith, some arose, who (as James shews in the second chapter of his Epistle,) affirmed, that works were not needful, but faith would save them, no, says James, that faith is dead and vain that wants works. And therefore remember, 1st, That though we tell you that works are not properly the condition of the covenant of grace, yet we say that faith and works are never separate in a justified person ; sound faith cannot but work, and promote the study of holiness. 2. We say, although works concur not in the obtaining of pardon of sin, yet we say they are needful to salvation, and to peoples entry into heaven ; for the apostle saith, Heb. xii. 17. That without holiness none shall see the Lord. Though it is faith that makes our friendship, yet it is by holiness that it is entertained, and it is holiness whereby our communion is kept up with God ; therefore, Col. i. 12. we are said by it to be made meet to be partakers of the inheritance of the saints in light ; for it transforms us unto God's image. 3. Works are necessary, tho' not to procure our peace, yet for the entertaining of our peace, and except we have works, we cannot have have a solid proof that our justification by faith is real. And in this respect, James says, chap. ii. that Abraham was justified by works, that is, by his works he was declared to be a justified person; as to the justification of his person, he was justified by faith, before Isaac was born, but by his offering up of Isaac, and other fruits of his faith, he was declared and manifested to be a justified man, and made suitable to the covenant that he was engaged in with God. Therefore, as the sum of all, be exhorted to study the exercise of faith and holiness, so as each of them may have its own room and place, for that will be your advantage, and without this, no other thing will advantage you. Now God himself that calleth for both, sanctify and enable us for both.

Verse 11.—For he shall bear their iniquities.

IT is a thing that can neither be easily believed, nor yet understood, how by Christ's knowledge, or by faith in him, many shall be justified; in these words the prophet adds a reason, that both confirms and clears it, it shall be, faith he, that many shall be justified through faith in him, for he shall bear their iniquities; he shall take on, and pay their debt; and so it is a reason confirming the former truth, and shewing that it cannot be otherways, but they must be absolved through faith in him, because he bears the punishment due to them for their sin. It serves also to clear how justification is attained by faith, to wit, not by any virtue or efficacy, that is in faith, abstractly considered, as if believing of itself would avail, but by virtue of Christ bearing their iniquities, and making making satisfaction for them, which faith lays hold on; so that when he said by his knowledge shall many be justified; it is not by any efficacy attributed to their believing, but by virtue of Christ's righteousness and satisfaction, which only faith gives a title to, and is the mean and way by which a believer comes to it, and so it serves for explication of the former truth. So that if the question be asked, how can sinners be justified by believing? It is here answered, because Christ shall take on him their debt, and the righteousness purchased by him shall redound to them, and be reckoned theirs; it is the same on the matter, with that which we have, 2 Cor. v. last verse, He that knew no sin, was made sin for us, and what follows? That we might be made the righteousness of God in him, which clears that this way of justification which the gospel holds out, is not by any efficacy, or worth in faith itself, nor by any inherent qualifications in the person that believes, but this is the ground of it, Christ's bearing of our iniquities; the elect were sinners, and Christ hath taken on him their iniquities, therefore they cannot but upon their fleeing to him by faith be justified, when they plead his satisfaction for their defence before God, their absolution must needs follow. This is the scope of these words, which are as it were the bond knitting all the rest together, and containing the foundation whereon our justification is founded. There are only three words here that need a little of explication. 1. By iniquity is not meant sin formally taken. We shewed when we spake of the 6. verse, that Christ was not the sinner formally considered, that being inconsistent with his holy nature, and with the personal union of the man-head with the God-head, but the meaning is, that he took on him the punishment due to our iniquities, or the punishment that our iniquities deserved. 2. When he is said to bear their iniquities, it imports a burdensome bearing, or his bearing it with a weight, and that there was a weight in it as it is said, verses 3. and 4. He was a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief; surely he hath borne our griefs, and carried our sorrows; and therefore the apostle, 1 Pet. ii. 24. saith, He himself bare our sins in his own body on the tree, when he was made a curse for us, as it is, Gal. iii. 13. he did bear our sins, by coming under the curse that was due to us for them; in a word, his bearing of our iniquities is a real satisfying of the justice of God for them, by interposing his own blessed back, and taking the strokes that were due to us. 3. When it is said, their iniquities, it relates to the many, that in the former words are said to be justified through his own knowledge, it is spoken of the iniquities of the elect, and believers who through Christ are made friends with God; and therefore these being the many, they cannot but be justified, because Christ hath paid their debt, according to his engagement. These words, as almost every other verse of this chapter contain the substance of the gospel. Take shortly five or six observations from them, which we shall put together. The 1st is, That the person who is to be justified by faith in Christ, is naturally lying in iniquities; this is supposed, when it is said, that Christ shall bear their iniquities, even the iniquities of them who are to be justified through faith in him.

I observe it for these ends and uses, which will shew why it is so frequently taken notice of. 1. That the freedom of God's grace may appear the more in their justification. They are sinners even as others are, and it is grace that makes the difference; therefore their justification must be free. If then any would have good, or have received good by the gospel, and by Christ offered to them therein, let them know that it is freely. 2. That a believer who is justified, should be very humble; for he was a sinner as well as others, and is still a sinner in part; therefore it becomes him to walk softly, with a stopped mouth mouth, and to be tender and compassionate towards other sinners; there is not a believer, but the weight of his iniquities would have borne him down to hell, had not Christ interposed, and taken them on him; and therefore he ought to be both humble and thankful. 3. That sinners, who have the offer of Christ's righteousness in the gospel, may not despair, how great soever their sins be. Indeed, if they resolve to continue in sin, or to sin that grace may abound, they need not expect pardon. 4. To confound and stop the mouths of all self-righteous men, as having nothing to do with Christ; he came to take on iniquity, and to bear it; He came to seek and to save that which was lost, and hath not a commission to save self-righteous persons; For he came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance; and so long as they continue in that condition, they cannot look on themselves as persons whom he came to call, neither can they take any comfort in, or from his coming.

The 2d observation is, That wherever iniquity is, it is a burden, a heavy burden. There is nothing more heavy than sin, it being that which presses the guilty person to the lowest hell; it brought the fallen angels out of heaven into the pit. Ye may take an instance or two of its weight on a sinner, when he becomes sensible of sin, Psal. xxxviii. 4. My iniquities, says David, are gone over my head, as a heavy burden they are too heavy for me. It is true, sins are not always weighty to peoples sense, yet in themselves they are weighty, and some time they will be found to be so by the sinner. So, Psal. xl. 12. Innumerable evils, says the Psalmist, have compassed me about, my iniquities have taken hold of me, so that I am not able to look up, they are more than the hairs of my head, therefore my heart faileth me. In a word, if the wrath of God, and his curse be heavy, sin must be heavy. Is not that heavy which damned and drowned the old world, and will burn and bury in ashes this world that now is standing? Is not that heavy, which hath brought so many weighty curses on the creatures, and subjected them to vanity? Is not that heavy, that brings by its weight so many thousands and millions to hell? and that made our blessed Lord to cry, yet without all sinful anxiety, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? and, My soul, is heavy to the death. And is it not that which makes the Lord to say, that he is pressed, with his professing people's sins, as a cart is pressed with sheaves? All the indignation and opposition of the men of this world is nothing to him, in comparison of the sins of his people. He can break through briars and thorns, and consume them together, but the iniquities of his people are said to press him, to shew the abominable loathsomeness and weightiness of them.

Use 1. It may make us wonder, that men and women think so little of sin. There are many that will tush at an accusation, or threatening for sin; but let me tell you, that mountains of lead, yea, tho' all this world turned into one mass, or lump of lead, it should not be so heavy as sin should be to you; your drunkenness, filthiness, covetousness, and lying, the wandring of the mind in private duties of worship throughout the week, and in public duties on the Lord's day, your neglect of prayer in secret, mocking at piety, &c. shall (however light now) one day be found to be weighty, when as it is, Revel. vi. 6. Ye shall cry to the hills and mountains to fall upon you, and hide you from the wrath of the Lamb. A mountain would be thought light in that day; but the face and wrath of the Lamb shall be terrible; therefore either give up with sin, and study holiness, or make you ready for this dreadful posture, that ye would wish to have a hill or a mountain tumbling on you, and yet shall not have that wish granted. What mean ye, O atheists! and desperately secure pleasers of yourselves, with your idols, that ye dare thus lie and live under this burden? Will ye be able to come before the throne of God with it upon your back? It is a truth, that sin is such a burden as will sink you to the pit, if ye seek not in God's way to shake it off in time.

2dly, If it be such a burden, make this twofold use of it. 1. Beware of keeping still upon you the burden of past sins, but sensible of them, seek to be suitably affected with them, betake yourselves with all speed to Christ, and cast yourselves and your burden on him. It is for this reason that faith is called a leaning on Christ; because, when the burden of sin is like to break the sinner's back, faith casts himself and his burden on Christ. 2. For the time to come study holiness, and take on no more of this burden; always remembering, that when ye take on the debt of the least sin, or seek to blindfold, as it were, the conscience, and to put out the eyes of it, that ye may sin the more securely, and with the greater liberty, ye are all the while but heightening of your burden, and making the weight of it the more intolerable. And is that wisdom, think ye, to be taking on a burden of that which will press, crush, sink, and drown you eternally, under its grievous and unsupportable weight?

3dly, Observe, That as heavy a burden as sin is, Christ stooped down, and took it on his blessed back, John i. 29. Behold the Lamb of God that taketh away, or beareth, and by bearing taketh away the sin of the world, 1 Pet. ii. 24. Who his ownself bare our sins in his own body on the tree. So the just suffered for the unjust. Heb. ix. ult. He was once offered to bear the sins of many. Whether it was the same very burden that the elect should have borne, or the equivalent of it, we will not now debate, having spoken somewhat more particularly to it before; either of them being according to the terms of the covenant of redemption, and accepted by the principal creditor, yet it would seem he did bear the curse in the essentials of it, and in that respect came under the same burden. He died because it was threatned, The day thou eatst, thou shalt surely die, and the soul that sins shall die; and he died a cursed death, because a cursed death was threatned, as it is, Gal. iii. 10. compared with 13. and so came under the curse. Here is love indeed, and the kindness of a true friend, that when sin was such a heavy burden, Christ came in betwixt the elect and it, and took it on himself, and stood at the bar of God, as chargeable with our debt, which was really charged on him; as it is, Isaiah l. 6. He gave his back to the smiters, and his cheeks to them that pluckt off the hair; he hid not his face from shame and spitting; all those buffetings of profane soldiers, were but little to that weight of wrath that was laid on him, which made him to groan when he was to take that cup which in the garden he drank up, and which made him sweat blood, and cry out, ‘ My soul is exceeding sorrowful ‘ and heavy even unto death, and, Father, if it be ‘ possible, let this cup pass from me, yet not my will, ‘ but thine be done.’ O! what a weight was it that made him so cry out? There needs no more to prove that he bare our sins, and what we were owing was exacted of him, and that his sufferings are indeed a satisfaction to justice for them, even for the sins of all the elect.

The uses are two, 1. It serves to clear and confirm this truth, that our Lord Jesus his sufferings were a real satisfaction to justice for the sins of the elect; and that by his sufferings he was indeed put to bear their iniquities, and that they were not only, nor mainly for an example; though we may well make that use of them; but he was made liable for our debt, we sinned, and he suffered and satisfied for our sin, we wasted our stock, and became bankrupts, he paid our debt. 2. It serves highly to commend to us the love of God, that gave his Son, and of the Mediator, that came to buy and redeem elect sinners at so dear a rate rate, and to take on him such a weighty burden to ease them of it. Are there any here (as we hope there are) that know the weight of sin? O! that they would highly esteem this, even Christ's taking on him the burden of sin, and laying it aside, having satisfied justice for it, and loosed the knot of the law, and of the curse that tied it to them. To become man was much, but to bear the burden of our sins was more. Angels wonder at this, that he who is their Head should become so low, as to place himself before God's tribunal, and undergo the suffering of death, and taking on him the weighty burden of the elects debt, satisfy for it. If we were in a right frame of spirit, we could not hear this word, but it would ravish our hearts, and put us to a pause, and holy non-plus; but the most part, alas! walk lightly under the burden of sin, without ever considering what Christ hath done to remove it from off his people; nay, I am afraid that believers, who have ground to be lightened, through Christ's condescending to bear their burden, do not as they ought acknowledge him, who hath taken the burden off them.

4thly, From comparing these words with the former, 'Many shall be justified, for he shall bear their iniquities,' observe, Christ's bearing of their iniquities, and his satisfaction for our sins, is imputed to us as the immediate ground of our absolution, and justification before God. So that if it were asked, What is the ground on which a sinner is justified before God? the text answers, because Christ hath born their iniquities, he hath paid the debt, even as (to make a comparison for clearing of it) when a debtor is pursued, and hath nothing to pay, yet he pleads that the debt cannot be exacted of him, because his surety hath paid it; and the ground on which that debtor is absolved, is his declaring that the surety hath paid the debt, which being done, he is set free; so is it here, the believer he is God's debtor, Christ Jesus is his surety, who hath paid his debt; who, when he is brought to the bar of God, and somewhat is laid to his charge, he pleads upon the ground of Christ's satisfying for his debt, and that therefore he ought not to be put to answer for it himself, according to that word, Rom. iii. 34. Who shall lay any thing to the charge of God's elect? It is God that justifies, who shall condemn? and the reason follows, It is Christ that died, he hath paid the debt.

Use. Among other things, there are two consequences that follow upon this doctrine, that serve to clear the doctrine of justification. 1. That the righteousness whereby we are justified is imputed to us, and accepted of God, as if it were our own. Ye are sometimes hearing of imputed righteousness, and it is of great concernment to you to know it well, yet I am afraid, that many of you are very ignorant of it; I shall therefore, in a word or two explain it, by comparing the two covenants. The righteousness of the covenant of works is an inherent righteousness, as it is, Tit. iii. 5. Not by works of righteousness which we have done; it is a righteousness of our own doing, made up of our praying, hearing, and other duties, as they are acts of ours. The righteousness of the covenant of grace is an imputed righteousness, that is, when Christ's doing and suffering is accounted ours. Take both in this comparison; the righteousness of the covenant of works is like a debtor, or tenant, his paying of his own debt or rent, by his managing his business providently and dextrously, and none other is troubled with it. The righteousness of the covenant of grace is like one that hath spent all, and hath not one penny to pay his debt or rent with, but hath a worthy, able and responsal surety, who hath paid for him. Both being pursued, and brought before the judge, the first man is absolved, because what he was owing he paid it at the term precisely; the other man grants, that he was owing the debt, but

pleads, that his surety hath paid it, and the law accepts of the surety's payment, and pursues the debtor no further, but absolves him. So it is here, when the believer comes to stand at God's bar, it is nothing in himself that he pleads upon, but it is Christ's sufferings, who said on the cross, it is finished, the debt of my people is fully paid; and faith pleading for absolution on that ground, according to the law of faith, he is absolved, as if he had paid the debt himself, or had been owing none. If then it should be asked, believers, what ground have ye to expect to be justified? the prophet answers here, Christ hath borne our iniquities, and this is the believers defence; and therefore see here a possibility to reconcile these two, that some men scorn and flout at, as irreconcilable, to wit, how one can be a sinner, and yet righteous; he may be sinful in himself, and yet righteous, thro' the imputation of Christ's righteousness; so, 2 Cor. v. ult. He was made sin for us, who knew no sin, that we might be made the righteousness of God in him, Rom. iv. 5. To him that worketh not, but believeth on him who justifieth the ungodly, his faith is counted for righteousness. The man ungodly in himself is justified through the satisfaction of Christ, imputed to him for righteousness, and laid hold on by faith, as if he had not sinned, or had actually satisfied himself.

2dly, This consequence followeth, that it serves to clear how faith justifies; as when we say, faith is our righteousness, and is imputed to us for righteousness, we are not to look on faith properly, as a grace in us, and divided, or abstracted from the object, no, by no means; but as it is a laying hold on the object; It is faith in him that justifies; and through his knowledge shall many be justified, because he shall bear their iniquities. Faith justifies by virtue of Christ's satisfaction, and as taking hold of it. Faith does not justify, as it is an act of grace in the sinner, but as a closing with Christ the object of it, even as it is in the similitude we made use of before, it is not enough that the surety hath paid such a man's debt, but that the man must prove it by producing the discharge; the producing whereof is the cause of his absolution in law; yet the virtue that makes the discharge so to concur, is not the discharge itself, but the surety's payment, or satisfaction mentioned, and contained in the sinner's discharge; even so it is here, it is Christ's righteousness that concurrereth, as the meritorious cause of the sinner's absolution, and faith concurs as the instrumental cause, in the pleading of that defence, whereon justification follows, as an effect of these causes. - We know not when, or if ever hereafter we may have occasion to speak so much to the doctrine of justification: Therefore let me press the study of it upon you again and again. Seek to know what this imputed righteousness is, and how different from that which is in yourselves; what is the true meaning of it, as a main hinge of the gospel, without which the covenant of grace can never be understood aright, the ignorance whereof makes many live in security upon the one side, and keeps many in much anxiety upon the other.

5thly, Observe, That altho' Christ Jesus hath borne the iniquities of many, even of his own people, yet not the iniquities of all men and women, but only the iniquities of them that shall be justified, and brought to the actual possession of that which he hath purchased. This may be made out from these three in the text: 1st, The relative their, it is their iniquities, which are borne by Christ, that shall be justified, and who these are, the former words tell, Through his knowledge shall he justify many. 2dly, The connection made by the prophet betwixt these two, many shall be justified, for he shall bear their iniquities. All whose iniquities Christ hath borne shall be justified. It could not be an argument to prove their justification, if Christ should bear the iniquities of others, or of all men and women, multitudes of whom are never justified; for it might be objected, that Christ bears the iniquities of those many who are never justified, which would be quite contrary to God's covenant, and exceedingly mar the consolation of the believer; beside that it would make the prophet's reasoning here inconsistent and impertinent. 3dly, Consider these words, not only as they stand in connection with the former, but as they are a reason why in justice such should be absolved; and so they will also clear the doctrine; for so considered, they imply that it is just, that the believer should be justified; even as when the surety hath paid the debt, it is just that the principal debtor should be absolved; and upon the other hand, it is not just that the debtor for whom the surety hath not satisfied should be absolved. The words will bear this two-fold consequence; for he joins these two, their being absolved, and Christ bearing their iniquities, and being made liable to their debt; and he consequently disjoins these two, Christ's not bearing the iniquities of others, and their not being absolved; and so although Christ hath borne the iniquities of many, that is of the elect, and hath satisfied and suffered for them, yet not for all, but only for the many, who in due time shall through his knowledge, that is, through faith in him, be justified; and those who are left to pay their own debt, Christ never died for them. It were very unlike the prophet's reasoning, to say that such a man is in hell, and yet Christ bare his iniquities.

Use 1. It serves to confirm the former truth. Would ye know whose iniquities Christ hath borne? It is of as many as are justified, the iniquities of such he bare, and of no more. 2. It serves to provoke you that have received this privilege in Christ, to be very thankful. This is it that makes the song of praise delightful, Rev. v. 9. Thou hast redeemed us to God by thy blood, out of every kindred, tongue, and nation; because because it is not a common, but a peculiar, special mercy, if any be so.

6thly, From the connection observe, That although Christ hath not borne the iniquities of all men and women, yet he hath borne the iniquities of all that believe, and none ever believed on him, but they may conclude that he hath borne their iniquities, and on that plead their justification, through his satisfaction. Although there be a restriction upon the one side, yet there is none on the other; all are not justified, but those only, whose iniquities he hath borne; yet all who through his knowledge, or faith in him, are justified, their iniquities he hath borne. And hence it will follow, that no person hath believed, but Christ hath borne his iniquities. Not that the man's believing is the cause of Christ's bearing; for his bearing of the man's iniquities is the cause of his believing; but it is to shew the connection betwixt his bearing and the man's believing; and that his believing is the evidence of Christ's bearing of his iniquities. And this is more comfortable than the doctrine of universal redemption a thousand times; for it joins Christ's dying and the justification of all that believe on him. So that there are none, that by faith betake themselves to him, but they may expect freedom from the curse, and absolution before the throne of God; whereas the doctrine of universal redemption saith, that Christ died for all, yet all shall not be saved, and I wot not whether I shall be saved or not, and what ground of anxiety is this? but this doctrine hath solid consolation in it, Christ hath not died for all simply, but for all believers, he hath borne all their sins; but I have betaken myself to him by faith, therefore he died for me, he hath borne my iniquities, and I shall never bear them myself, but be justified.

I suppose we need not insist much on the confirmation of this. 1. It is impreguably proved from the reasoning of the prophet in this place; that all that are believers cannot but be redeemed and justified, because he hath borne their iniquities, who by faith betake themselves to him. 2. If faith in Christ be a saving fruit of his death, and if none can believe but those, whose iniquities he hath born, then wherever faith is, the person may conclude, that Christ hath borne his iniquities, and that he shall be justified; but faith in Christ is a saving fruit, and effect of his death, for he hath purchased it among the rest of those spiritual blessings spoken of, Ephes. i. 3. Where we are said to be blessed with all spiritual blessings in him; and it being a promise of the covenant of grace, it cannot but be purchased by the death of the testator Jesus Christ; therefore, &c. 3. It is clear also from the apostle's reasoning, Rom. v. 10. For if when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son, much more being reconciled, we shall be saved by his life. Will he not, who hath payed such a dear price for us, to purchase reconciliation to us, make it good by bestowing on us the the fruit of his purchase?

The 1st Use serves to vindicate this our doctrine, concerning Christ's dying for, and bearing the iniquities of believers only, which is most unjustly loaded with reproaches, and debated against by mens cavillings, as if it were a comfortless doctrine; sure it is more comfortable, more sure, and more agreeable both to the wisdom and grace of God, than the doctrine of universal redemption is. For put these together, that all believers are redeemed and justified, that Christ hath borne their iniquities, that faith is a saving grace, and a fruit of Christ's death, that such as believe may conclude their justification, and that Christ will make good the benefits of his purchase to them, what want believers that may be for their comfort? Whereas, if we should lay it for a ground, that Christ died for all, what comfort were in that? For all are not justified and saved, but only believers; yea, yea, by the doctrine of universal redemption, though ye were even now believers, ye could not conclude that ye should be saved, because ye might fall from it again: But our doctrine of justification hath solid consolation; for, Rom. i. 16. It is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believes. And, Rom. iii. 2. It is unto all, and upon all them that believe. And it makes the believer sure of his perseverance, for it is an express article of the covenant. We shall only say this, that ye will find, that all that in doctrine, or practice make the way to heaven widest, they make it most unsure, and they are in greatest confusion, and indeed it is impossible it can be otherways; for if men go once out of God's way, which is the strait and narrow way, they can never be solidly sure, because there is no solid ground of confidence but in it.

The 2 Use serves to answer a question, that some out of curiosity puzzle themselves with, which if it were soberly and wisely followed, would be no curiosity, and it is this. How shall I know if Christ died for me? Answer, make it sure that ye believe, and then ye shall be sure of the benefits of his death. For if he hath borne the iniquities of those that believe, and if there be no way to make it sure he hath borne our iniquities but by believing, it is a needless stir and noise that is made, about the knowledge of election, and of Christ's intention in his death; for though we should say that he died for all, it would not comfort, except we said also, that all go to heaven. But are ye burdened with sin, and have ye by faith fled unto Christ? and do ye actually rest upon him? Then ye may on that ground conclude your interest in Christ's death, and from that ascend to election. That which makes many believers to be in hesitation as to this, is their never making it clear to themselves, whether they have believed; and therefore, if ye would see your election and interest in Christ's death, put the matter of believing to a point; for it is the door whereby you enter into other secrets of God, such as election is; and there is no other way to enter into it. Therefore these two are knit together, John vi. 39, 40. This is the will of him that sent me, that of all that he hath given me, I should lose nothing. And if it should be asked, how shall I know, who are given to Christ to be redeemed by him? The next verse answers, ‘This is the will of him that sent me, that every one which seeth the Son, and believeth on him may have everlasting life, and I will raise him up at the last day.’ Would ye then know who are given and redeemed? They are believers, I mean of such as are come to age, for none will make the question concerning infants; and therefore if ye would know the way of coming to the knowledge of your justification, redemption, and election of God, begin at the lowest step of believing, and make that sure, and all the rest will follow of course; but if ye mistake and overlook this, and will go up to the top of the ladder, per saltum, and at the first, it will be just with God, that ye never come at the knowledge of those secrets, which were in his heart before the world was.

Use 3. It is matter of consolation to the believer, who may as certainly conclude an interest in Christ’s death, as if he had heard the transaction of redemption read over, and had seen his name in the book of life, for our Lord saith, John iii. 16. God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have eternal life. If thou be a believer, thy name is there, Christ hath borne thine iniquities, and what consolation is that to them who are clear concerning their faith? But, alas! it says there is much rotten, unsound and slippery faith among us, and also much faith that is but little lively, that there is so little solid comfort following it.

believing, the advantages of it, and the necessity of our endeavouring to be clear that we do believe; if these two go together, justification and believing, then there is a necessity of believing; and if these two go together, clearness about our believing, and the knowledge that Christ did bear our iniquities, then there is in some respect a necessity, that we know we believe, otherways we can have little or no comfort in Christ's bearing of our iniquities, and of our being given to Christ to be redeemed by him. From these two the advantages of believing may appear, therefore to make all sure, justification, Christ's bearing of your iniquities, and your being given to Christ to be redeemed by him. From these two the the advantages of believing may appear, therefore to make all sure, justification, Christ's bearing of your iniquities, and your being given to Christ, make it sure that ye are in the faith, and this way give all diligence to make your calling and election sure. And the Lord himself prevail with you so to do.

S E R M O N LXIV.

Verse 12. Therefore will I divide him a portion with the great, and he shall divide the spoil with the strong, because he hath poured out his soul unto death; and he was numbered with transgressors, and he bare the sins of many, and made intercession for transgressors.

THERE hath been a compendious sum of the covenant of redemption delivered by the prophet in this chapter, wherein, what is required as the price for elect sinners from the Mediator, is held forth on the one side, in a large description of his sufferings; and what is proposed as the fruit that should follow, and

and the satisfaction that the Mediator should have for his sufferings, is on the other side also laid down; as that 'he should see his seed, and prolong his days, ' and the pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in his ' hand: That he should see of the travel of his soul ' and be satisfied, and that by his knowledge many ' shall be justified.' In this verse, we have a summary re-capitulation, and repetition of this mutual agreement; only it is proposed in a different method, for before what was required and undertaken by the Mediator, was first set down, and then the promises made to him were next set down. Here the method is altered, and the promises made to the Mediator are first set down, and the conditions required of him last set down; it may be, to shew the oneness of the covenant, and the mutualness of the terms of it; and that though, as to our conceiving and understanding of it, there be something first, and something last, yet with God there is no such thing, but it is one present act. The promises made to the Mediator are in two expressions, with an inference in the word, Therefore, knitting this to what went before, I will divide him a portion with the great, and he shall divide the spoil with the strong. In short, the similitudes here used are taken from conquerors, and victors, who having been in a war and fight, and having defeated and routed all their enemies, and put them off the field, have a glorious deliverance, victory and triumph, and a great spoil, as the fruit of war. And so the meaning is, that the Mediator by his undertaking to satisfy for the elect, should have a great fight and combat with many enemies, but he should lose nothing by it; he should have a notable deliverance, an excellent victory, and glorious triumph, great glory and spoil; so that as there was never war like his, nor enemies like those that he had to encounter with, so there should never be such victory, triumph and spoil, as our Lord Jesus should have. The word portion is not in the original, but

but well supplied. It is only, I will divide him many, as the word is often used, and he shall divide the spoil with the strong, that is, he shall in dividing the spoil be above the strongest.

The words infer, and take in these three. 1. A great defeat of and victory over all the Mediator's enemies, the devil, death, and the curse. He has a great victory over them, and gives them a great defeat, so that they are quite beat off the field, as dividing of the spoil imports, Psal. lxxviii. 12. She that remained at home divided the spoil; and Isa. ix. 3. As men rejoice, when they divide the spoil. 2. The great number of captives that our Lord in his victory, and triumph takes and brings off; that is, he gets a great booty, which is that spoken of in the words before, By his knowledge many shall be justified; and it is that which is exprest in that Ps. lxxviii. 8. Thou hast ascended on high, thou hast led captivity captive; that is, those that were formerly captives thou hast redeemed from their captivity, and led them captive that carried others captive; as the people of God pray, Psal. cxxvi. 4. Turn again our captivity. 3. It takes in the excellent victory, the great triumph and glory, that the Mediator should have by this means; He is exalted above every name that is named; that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, of things in earth, and of things under the earth. For further clearing of it, we shall recommend to you two or three places in which is like there is an allusion to this as that Col. ii. 14, 15. Blotting out the hand-writing of ordinances that was against us, and contrary to us, taking it out of the way, and nailing it to his cross; tearing as it were the obligation that the law had over the elect, by his paying of their debt: And having spoiled principalities and powers, he made a shew of them openly, triumphing over them in it. There is his victory and triumph: He combats with, subdues, and treads under his foot all his and his peoples enemies, by

satisfying the justice of God for the elects debt, and spoils them of many souls that were led captive by them; and triumphed openly over them, declaring himself to have gotten the victory in a most majestic manner. A second place is, Phil. ii. 8, 9. Being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross, wherefore God hath highly exalted him, and given him a name which is above every name; that at the name of Jesus, every knee should bow, of things in heaven, in earth, and under the earth, and that every tongue shall confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father. This is his victory, triumph and glory, such as none in heaven or earth ever had, or shall have the like. A third place is that, Eph. ii. 20, 28, 22. He raised him from the dead, and set him at his own right hand, in the heavenly places, far above all principality, and power, and might, and dominion, and every name that is named, not only in this world, but also in that which is to come, and hath put all things under his feet, and gave him to be head over all things to the church; whether they be devils, or good angels, or men, saints militant, or triumphant, he is above them all, all are made subject to him, and he is the head of his church.

The expressions run in different persons. The first is in the first person, I will divide him a portion. It is a promise of God the Father to the Mediator, for his attaining the victory, as it is said, Ephes. i. 20. God raised him from the dead. The second expression is in the third person, He shall divide the spoil, to shew that the Mediator God-man concurred in attaining the victory; therefore, Rom. i. 4. He is said to raise himself; and in that it is said, I will divide; and he shall divide, it is to hold out the Mediator's attaining and possessing of what was promised, and to shew that there is nothing promised to the Mediator but actually he is, and shall be put in the full possession of it.

The last part of the words holds forth the conditions on the Mediator's side, in four expressions. 1. Because he hath poured out his soul unto death; that is, because he willingly condescended to die, he gave up, or poured out his soul to death. 2. He was numbered with transgressors; he had a reproached and shameful life, and a reproached and cursed death. He was thought the worst in the world, so that Barrabbas a murderer was preferred unto him. It also points forth the respect that his death had to a satisfaction for the sins of the elect, he was legally numbered, and counted amongst transgressors, though he was no transgressor. 3. He bare the sins of many, which expounds the former, and says this much, that not only he simply died, and died a shameful death, but that he died for this end, to bear, and by his bearing to remove the sins of the elect; for it relates to the many that in former words are said to be justified by his knowledge. And it cannot be but these many shall be justified, because he did bear their sins, as to the punishment and curse due to them, and whosoever sins are borne by Christ, these are and shall be justified; and therefore he must be victorious, and have a glorious triumph and deliverance, because he lays down his life for his sheep, as it is, John x. 17. Therefore doth my Father love me, because I lay down my life, and take it up again. And by the way it is a strange thing, that the only begotten Son of God, should be loved on this account, accepted, and glorified in this work, even because he poured out his soul unto death, out of zeal to his Father's glory, in prosecuting the work of sinners redemption. 4. And he made intercession for the transgressors; which points out the application of his death, and the benefit thereof to the many, whose sins he bare, he died to take their sins away, and interceeds to have his purchase made effectual. For though this be applied usually to his prayer on the cross, yet that is but one particular of his intercession, which is of larger extent, and therefore it is noted as a condition required of the Mediator, that he must not only die, but also interceed, that the benefits of his death might be made good to them, for whom he died.

Thus ye see, we have the sum of God's covenant here, as if the Lord were proposing to the Mediator, now, Son, if thou wilt pour out thy soul unto death, and thereby bear the sins of my elect people, and make intercession for them, thou shalt lose nothing by it, thou shalt have a glorious victory and triumph, and a great spoil. In the words before, the Mediator having accepted the terms of the covenant, and performed them, though not actually at that time, but in the purpose and decree of God, which now are actually performed, therefore the promises are turned over in a concluded covenant, and in an absolute right to him.

What needs further explication, we shall endeavour to reach it, as we speak to the observations, and because the words for the most part yield the same doctrines that have been spoken to before, we shall not insist on them.

1st, Then from the repetition, observe in general, that the nature and terms of the covenant of redemption betwixt God and the Mediator, is a profitable doctrine, and useful to be understood and believed by the people of God. Therefore it is so clearly proposed, and again and again repeated, and laid before their eyes, and summed and repeated in this verse, to keep them in mind of it. Those that know the covenant of redemption, as that which hath in it the sum of all the foundations of our faith, and the ground of our access to God, and of our peace with him, they will easily grant this, that it is very necessary to be studied, known and believed. For, 1. By it we know what we may expect from God, because what we are to expect, is promised to Christ in this covenant, as to our head, this portion with the great, and this dividing the spoil with the strong; he hath it as our head.

2. Because

2. Because we know by this covenant, how we come by these things promised: and that is, by pouring out of his soul unto death, bearing of our sins, and interceding for us; which supposes, and includes our betaking of ourselves unto him by faith. 3. Because by this covenant, the rich and free grace of God hath its due glory; for there is nothing considered here, as the reason of setting captives free, but Christ's paying of the price; it comes freely to us, as a gift bestowed.

2dly, And more particularly, observe, that though our Lord Jesus Christ, in the work of sinners redemption, had a sore combat and fight, yet he hath a glorious deliverance, triumph and victory; it was the greatest, forest, and most furious assault that ever was heard of, that our Lord Jesus encountered with. As the remembrance and consideration of what hath been spoken, of his being in an agony, and sweating drops of blood; of his praying, that if it were possible, that cup might depart from him; O! his crying, my God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? &c. will most convincingly make out, the justice of God pursuing him for all the guilt of the elect, principalities and powers being engaged against him; the devil, the prince of this world, having all his instruments at work, some to nod the head, some to mock and scourge him, &c. yet he did abide it all: 'He gave his back to the smiters, and his cheeks to them that pulled off the hair, and hid not his face from shame and spitting;' and had a most glorious victory and triumph over all: What we said in expounding of the words somewhat clears it; and those words, John xii. 13. Now is the judgment of this world, now shall the prince of this world be cast out, to point out his victory over the world, and the devil; and also those words, Col. ii. 14, 15. He spoiled principalities and powers; he unclothed them, and left not a whole rag on them; he by a strong hand pulled all the elect from them, and left none of them in their possession; he brake open the prison doors, and set them all at liberty. This was indeed a great victory. He also hath a great spoil of many captives, and great glory, being exalted in our nature, at the right hand of the Majesty on high, having a name above every name; that at the name of Jesus every knee might bow; and that passage, Ephes. i. 20, 21. is to the same purpose, He hath put all things under his feet, &c. If we look to reason it cannot be otherways. 1. If we consider what our Lord Jesus was in his person, being the Son of God, he cannot but be glorious; John xvii. 5. he prays, Father, glorify me with that glory which I had with thee before the world was. Though by being man, he became of no reputation, and a vail was drawn over the declarative glory of the Godhead in his person for a time, yet he remained still the Son of God, and glorious in himself; and it cannot be but he that is God must be glorious in his exaltation, when that vail that obscured his glory is taken away. 2. His office, as Mediator, and head of the elect proves it. He that was appointed head over all things to the church, could not but be great and glorious; and therefore when that of Psal. x. 10. is cited by the apostle, Acts. ii. 24. and xiii. 35. it is said, that it was impossible that death could keep him. 3. It will be clear, if we consider the work itself wherewith he was intrusted, it being a work that was so well liked of, and approved by God, he could not but have a glorious victory and deliverance. Therefore says he, John x. My Father loveth me, because I lay down my life for my sheep; and Philip. ii. 8. it is said, Because he humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, therefore God hath highly exalted him. It was the contract betwixt God and the Mediator, that he should first become low, and then be exalted, and therefore he behoved to be exalted, and made very glorious.

obscure the glory of the Mediator, from the consideration of his sufferings; for though he was low, yet he is now exalted, he had a most noble, excellent and glorious victory and triumph over all his enemies. There are none of us all, but shall at the day of judgment, when he will be seen to be judge of quick and dead, (which is a part of his triumph) having so many redeemed slaves, at his back, have a confirmation of this truth in our bosom. And indeed it is no small part of religion to have this point deeply impressed on our hearts; that our Lord Jesus, who was once low, is now exalted to such glory. If we look to it, we shall find a great part of our deadness and unsoundness lies here; and that is the reason his greatness appears so little in our eyes. Alas! We do very much undervalue him; but his humiliation being for us, it should not make us think the less of him, nor make us lessen the high esteem we should have of him, but should in reason make us value him the more.

Use 2. It is a most comfortable doctrine, in reference to all ups and downs of time, and to all the straits that his church and people can be put to. It cannot be ill with Christ, and it shall not be ill with them; he may have contests, but he shall have, yea he hath got the victory, he once died to die no more; all that he hath now to do, is to make application of his purchased redemption, and to divide the spoil: to observe what of his purchase is yet in the devil's possession, and to rescue and set it free. He hath got the possession of the kingdom, and it must, and it shall go well, let the world rage, and let the sea roar, and the floods lift up their voice, and the mountains be cast into the sea; whatever confusions and overturnings come, or whatever troubles be, our Lord Jesus hath got the victory, and is dividing the spoil; he will take no other division, than what Jehovah hath made, and carved out to him; it will not be what devils, or men, what great men, kings, princes, parliaments, potentates, armies, &c. are pleased to give, or allow to him, but he must needs have the portion promised him with the great, and the spoil with the strong; he shall certainly get that, and none shall be able to bereave him, or take any of it from him, yea, none shall possess a foot of ground bestowed on him and his followers; he shall have a church, and ordinances dispensed therein, where he intends it; and souls shall be gathered to him, from all quarters, as they were given to him, and shall disappoint all the malice, and proud opposition of devils and men; all that the Father hath given to him shall come to him, without all peradventure, or possibility of misgiving; they shall not by all their opposition and persecution, be able to keep any one of the given ones, from coming to him, in the reason agreed on betwixt Jehovah and him. And 2dly, It is comfortable to God's people, as to their own particular case. Corruption is a strong and formidable enemy, the devil is a restless enemy, and goeth about like a roaring lion seeking whom he may devour, the world is a deceitful, ensnaring enemy, and doth often in a manner even overwhelm them; but our Lord Jesus hath the victory, and the dividing of the spoil; those that remain at home, the most contemptible persons shall divide the spoil. This is it that Job comforts himself with, chap. xix. I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth, to wit, as sole and absolute conqueror, the victory being intirely on his side, with these eyes shall I see him, and no other for me, though worms destroy this body: Believers, O! Believers, there is a good day coming. He hath got the victory, and so shall ye: The God of peace shall bruise Satan under your feet shortly: And whatever wrongs ye suffer, and whatever straits ye be under now, while the wicked are in prosperity, there will be a new decision, yea, a new decision ere long, all shall be snatched from wicked men, but your cup shall run over; there shall be no more fighting, no more parties to give you battle, or to oppose you, when he shall have beaten all enemies off the field. It will be a poor and sorry portion that many will have in that day, who did not trust to Christ's spoil, when ye believers shall be sharers with him in it.

Use 3. This is an evidence that it is both hard, and difficult to contend with Christ, and to be found in opposition to him. I speak not so much of public contests, such as Pilate, Herod, the scribes and Pharisees had with him, and which many great ones of the earth still keep up against him, who will find the smart of their opposition ere long; but of all that contend with him in his ordinances, and who say by their practice at least, let us break his bands asunder, and cast away his cords from us, as it is, Psal. ii. and we will not have this man to reign over us, as it is, Luke xix. he will say, Bring out these mine enemies and slay them before me. Beloved hearers, the day is coming when all of us will stand before him, and shall see him divide the spoil; and woe, woe will be to that person that day, that would not submit to his government. O! what a dreadful thing will it be to be slain before the Mediator, to have the Prince of life taking holy pleasure in thy death, because thou sided with the devil, and the lusts of thine own heart, because thou resisted and quenched his Spirit, and barracaded the way of his access to thee, and would not let him in, to reign in thy heart, nor yield thyself as a subject to him? But it shall be well, unspeakably well with Christ, and all that are his in that day, he, and they shall triumph most gloriously: The splendour, spiritual state, and majesty of that triumph shall infinitely transcend all that hath been looked at with wonder in the most glorious triumphs of the greatest emperors, kings, or captain generals in the world.

3dly, Consider

3dly, Consider what this spoil is, even to see his seed, and to justify many, and to have them brought in to him, and made partakers of his grace and glory: Observe, that it is a part of Christ's victory, triumph, and glory to have the devil defeated and thrown out of souls, and to have them converted, justified and saved through his blood. When he is triumphing over enemies, as it is, Col. ii. 14, 15. what is he doing? He is even tearing the bond that was against the elect, and blotting out their debt, in that he triumphs most gloriously; so, Psal. lxxviii. Thou hast ascended on high, thou hast led captivity captive, there is his triumph and spoil, even a company of poor slaves redeemed by him. 'The weapons, says the apostle, 'of our warfare are not carnal, but spiritual, and 'mighty through God, to the bringing down of 'strong holds, and leading every thought and imagination lifted up against God captive unto the obedience of Christ:' There is Christ's victory and triumph. What are the strong holds that he batters, storms and takes? He makes some proud hearts to stoop and yield to him, and carries some that were rebels to him, captive to his obedience: O! happy captivity! It is not meant in respect of bondage, but in respect of voluntary subjection to him. This is a most noble, and lovely victory and triumph, a glorious day indeed which is ours, as well as his, it being the redeeming of poor captive sinners, and bringing in of many followers to the Lamb; and therefore, verse 11. it is called satisfaction for the travel of his soul, and the justifying of many: That is the spoil and the prey: verse x. it is called the pleasure of the Lord; and in this verse, his portion and spoil. What doth our blessed Lord Jesus take to himself, what doth this David claim, or take to him as his spoil, who is the alone Monarch of this great universe? It is a number of poor sinners; 'Come to me,' says he, 'ye 'blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared

‘pared for you:’ He hath no more, he seeks no more, but so many souls as he designed to do good unto; when the Lord divided the nations, as it is, Psal. cxxxv. he chose Jacob for his portion. If we consider a little more particularly, we shall find the justification, and salvation of sinners to be our Lord Jesus his victory, triumph, and spoil; because herein he is victorious, and triumphs, and has the glory of his obedience, faithfulness, grace, power, and love; the glory of the Mediator shines manifestly and conspicuously in all these here. 1. The glory of his obedience, when he hath it to say, as it is John xviii. 9. Of all that thou hast given me, I have lost none. He has so many souls committed to him of the Father to redeem, and when he hath done, and performed the work, and brought them in, he hath the glory of his obedience to his Father, who saith to him, Thou art my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased. 2. The glory of his faithfulness. According as he did engage, and undertake to Jehovah, he hath kept his word, and there is a necessity lying on him, that it should be so, that of all committed to him, he should lose none, but present them without spot or wrinkle, or any such thing; therefore he is called the faithful Shepherd, because he loses none of the sheep that are given him. 3. The glory of grace, and infinite love. The more that are saved, the more grace and love shines forth in paying their debt and ransom, and in bringing them in to be partakers of his love; therefore, John xvii. he says, That the love wherewith thou hast loved me, may be in them, and I in them; he would have the love communicated by the Father to him, to be in them, that it may be known that he hath loved them, as the Father hath loved him. There cannot be such a proof and demonstration of love as this. It is evidenced in his exaltation, as their head, and in their being brought where he is. 4. The glory of power shines forth here that trampled upon and triumphed over all difficulties, that were in the way of saving elect sinners. And, O! what difficulties there are in the way of saving sinners? he having the devil and the world without, and a deceitful heart, and a changeable humour within themselves to encounter with; so many sins to mortify, and snares to lead through; yet none plucks his sheep out of his hand; therefore, 1 Pet. i. they are said to be kept by the power of God, through faith unto salvation. In a word, as it was the manner in ancient times for conquerors to ride in great triumph, and all their prisoners led before or after them, at their back; so our Lord, for manifesting the glory of his grace, faithfulness, and power, brings so many sinners through to glory, and hath a greater train than ever any conquerer had, and he counts it his glory to have many lost souls saved. John xvii. Thine they were, and thou gavest them me, and I am glorified in them; how is that? I have given them thy word, and they have received it. He counts himself glorified in sinners submitting to him, in their believing on him, and in their receiving pardon from him. Now let me say, that if we were making choice of a doctrine to warm the heart of a sensible sinner, to shame unbelief out of the world, and to give impregnable ground to depend on Christ, here it is, that our Lord Jesus placeth his victory, glory, triumph and spoil in this, even in doing good to sinners, and in having sinners receiving good of him; it is his portion, when the world is divided, that ye have a number of lost sinners to save, as his share; and though he be the heir of all things, and the first-born, yet he loves that better than a thousand kingdoms, when he hath his spoil and prey as he pleaseth; this is it, and he chuseth no other. O sinners! do ye esteem this a little thing? Had he placed his glory in crushing under foot all the prisoners of the earth, or in bringing the world to nothing, who could have said what dost thou? But when he placeth his glory and triumph in this, to overcome the devil, to cast him out of souls, to relieve poor sinners, and to bring them in to acknowledge him as the author of eternal salvation, and as the author and finisher of their faith, if ye would have something to wonder at, is it not here? He will burn the world to ashes, and leave it, and will cast many kings and great men into hell; and yet he gathers poor elect sinners out of that burnt heap, as it were, as the thing he hath designed for his spoil; he hath no more, he seeks no more, and yet he gets no gain of these poor sinners for all this.

And therefore, as the 1st Use of it, wonder at this. Will it not be a glorious day, when Christ is crowned, and hath all redeemed sinners with him, with harps in their hands, singing salvation, glory, and power to the Lamb? O! wonder, that there is not only a Saviour, and life, and salvation to be had through him, but that it is such a salvation as is wonderful in this respect, that he counts it his glory and triumph to have many sinners saved, when he might have glorified himself in sending us all to hell. May we not wonder at this? and yet we ought to believe it, the little faith we have of it makes it to be so little wondered at? Ah! sinners for the most part believe not that Christ esteems so much of the saving of sinners; and therefore they wonder not at it, and are not suitably affected with it.

Use 2. There is here a sweet and solid ground for quieting and settling the faith of sensible sinners, who would have a foundation for their faith. Christ counts it his glory and triumph to save such as ye are; and if ye perish that depend on Christ and his righteousness for life, Christ shall want his glory and triumph; and may not that serve and satisfy you, that your salvation is his glory and triumph, which he will not come short of? The Father hath here promised it, and he shall not, he cannot be without it. Sinners he must have, and shall have to be saved, because his victory, triumph, and spoil depend on it. A wonderful condescension of grace that all these are linked and coupled together, as it were, sinners salvation, Christ's victory, triumph, and spoil, and God's glory in his grace, love, faithfulness, and power. Ye reflect, no doubt, on God's faithfulness, who suspect and are jealous of your salvation, if indeed you do by faith betake yourselves to Jesus Christ.

Use 3. Doth Christ esteem so much of the salvation of sinners, that he counts it his victory and triumph, his portion and spoil? Then 1st, All that give not Christ their souls to be saved, do what they can to lessen Christ's portion, and to frustrate him of his glory. 2^{dly}, If ye would do Christ service that is most acceptable to him, give him your souls to be saved by him, frustrate not his grace, lay your sins on him, and look for salvation, thro' him in his own way. He came to fight with principalities and powers, and to overcome them, and by a strong hand to rescue souls from them; and so ye should follow him; for that is his satisfaction, his portion, and spoil; there is here a strong and effectual motive to persuade to faith in Christ, and a stronger and more effectual cannot be thought upon. It will be Christ's triumph to pull you out of the talons of the devil; and if he do it not, ye on the matter allow the devil some way to have the victory over Christ, which is yet impossible; but the devil will certainly have the victory over you, to whom ye will be slaves and drudges for ever. There is also ground of great terror, and dreadful warning to such as yield not to Christ, because they do what they can to impede his victory; when he comes by his ordinances, to turn them from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan to God, they thwart with him. The day is coming, when this doctrine will be comfortable to some, and terrible to others, when there shall be none of us, but we shall see it confirmed with our eyes, when he (as a man dividing his spoil after the victory) shall say to those on his right hand, Come ye ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you; and to others, Depart from me ye cursed into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels; even as if a conqueror should take some prisoners, and make them sons and heirs, and set them upon thrones, and should cast others into perpetual prison, who loved not liberty. And indeed it will be a fearful prison to be in hell with the devil and his angels. Either we shall be part of Christ's portion and spoil in that day, or he will refuse, disown or reject us, leaving us to be an everlasting prey to the devil; happy they whom he chuseth, and wo to them eternally whom he refuses. God give us wisdom to lay these things to heart.

S E R M O N LXV.

Verse 12. Therefore will I divide him a portion with the great, &c.

THIS covenant of redemption is a great contract, there were never such parties as the Lord Jehovah, and the Mediator; and we may say, there were never such conditions and articles in any agreement as are in this. The verse now read doth contain the sum of that which was agreed upon betwixt these parties; the promises upon Jehovah's side made to the Mediator, and what he shall have on his accepting of the offer, and performing of the condition required of him; and what are the terms proposed to the Mediator, and the conditions which he is to perform, or rather hath performed.

1. There are two things promised to the Mediator, I will divide him a portion with the great, a fair and large victory, and a good and glorious deliverance, and

and he shall divide the spoil with the strong. As those that are conquerors and victors use to share most largely and deeply in the spoil, so our Lord Jesus shall have a rich spoil, many redeemed souls, a bride whom he shall present blameless to the Father; these are the spoil, and the jewels that he fights for, and the prey he chooseth; when the world is burnt, and the rest are sent to hell, he gathers out so many for himself. 2. The conditions on the Mediator's side are four; he comes to this victory and triumph, because, He hath poured out his soul unto death, because he was numbered with transgressors, because he bare the sins of many, and because he made intercession for transgressors; therefore shall he be sure of all this.

Altho' there be no express name of a covenant here, yet ye see the thing; because as in covenants amongst men there are two parties, and their engagements are mutual, and the performance of those engagements in the one depends on the performance of the other; so is it here. 1st, The parties are Jehovah, and the Mediator. 2^{dly}, There are two things promised to the Mediator, a glorious victory and a rich spoil, the justifying of many. 3^{dly}, The conditions on the Mediator's side, on which the performance of the promises depends; he condescends to die, and to die willingly, to be numbred with transgressors, to bear their sins, and to make intercession for them; this Jehovah condescends to accept of, and upon this many, to wit, all elect sinners are justified through him, as it is verse 11.

1st, From the promise made to Christ (where the person is changed) I will divide him a portion with the great, and he shall divide the spoil with the strong, I will grant him such a thing, and he shall obtain it, take this general observation, as the reason of it, that all the promises made by Jehovah to the Mediator are certain, and shall actually be performed, I will grant this to him, and he shall have it. The connection

doth also confirm it; ‘because he hath poured out ‘his soul unto death.’ So Psal. lxxxix. 34, 35.
 ‘Once I swore by my holiness, that I will not lie un‘to David; my covenant will I not break, nor alter
 ‘the thing that is gone out of my lips;’ and indeed it cannot but be so, if we consider either the person that makes the promise, he is God unchangeable in himself, absolutely faithful, and cannot deny himself, once I have sworn, and I will not lie unto David; or the party to whom the promise is made, he is the Mediator God-man, in whom the Father is well pleased;
 and the Mediator having performed what he undertook for the elect, there is no ground to question the performance of the promise made to him.

The Use we may make of it is very comfortable;
 that whatever is promised to the Mediator, in reference to particular, private, or public mercies, all shall be most certainly and infustrably performed; Christ is the party to whom the promises are made, and Jehovah cannot fail to perform what is promised to the Mediator, more than the Mediator hath failed in performing what he undertook. Now it is promised to the Mediator, Psal. cx. 3. ‘Thy people shall be will‘ing in the day of thy power, in the beauties of holi‘ness, from the womb of the morning, thou hast the ‘dew of thy youth:’ Where there are these things promised to Christ, 1st, That his people shall be made willing in the day of his power, which is expounded in that, John vi. 44. No man can come to me, except the Father who hath sent me draw him; God takes away
 the stubbornness and frowardness that is in the elect, and makes them pliable to embrace, and receive, and give up themselves to Christ. 2^{dly}, That his people shall be numerous, the youth of his womb shall be numerous, as the dew in the morning. 3. They shall be holy and shining in holiness, in the beauty of holiness. Again, it is promised to the Mediator, that all believers in him shall be justified; as it is, ver. 11.
 ‘By

‘ By his knowledge shall my righteous Servant justify
 ‘ many ;’ and this is according to that, John vi. 39,
 40. ‘ This is the will of him that sent me, that of all ‘ that he hath given me, I should lose none ; and this ‘ is the will of him that sent me, that every one that ‘ seeth the Son, and believeth on him may have ever‘ lasting life.’ The poor sinner that by faith betakes himself to God’s promise, the promise cannot fail
 him, because the Mediator is considered as the party to whom the promise is made, and the absolute salvation and redemption of believers is in the same place promised ; though they be in hazard through many sins, indwelling lusts, temptations, and snares, to be drawn away, yet ‘ they shall have eternal life, they ‘ shall never perish, none shall pluck them out of his ‘ hand, he shall see his seed, of all that are given ‘ him, he shall lose none.’ This should commend believing to us, as a sure bargain ; because the ground of our faith is articted betwixt God and the Mediator, and it is as impossible that it can fail, as it is impossible that God can be unfaithful, and that the Mediator can fail in that wherein he is engaged. Again, if ye look to promises of public mercies, as that he shall have a church in the world, and that we shall be continued and preserved, &c. these promises shall certainly be performed ; as that Psal. ii. 6. ‘ I have set ‘ my King upon my holy hill of Zion, ask of me,
 ‘ and I will give thee the heathen for thine inheri-
 ‘ session.’ A fruit of which promise, is our preaching, and your hearing the gospel here this day, and the promise, Psal. lxxxix. from verse 20. and forward, ‘ With him my hand shall be established, and my arm
 ‘ shall strengthen him, the enemy shall not exact
 ‘ upon him, nor the son of wickedness afflict him ; I ‘ will beat down his foes before his face, and plague
 ‘ them that hate him, I will set his hand on the sea,
 ‘ and his right-hand on the rivers ; I will make him

‘ my first-born higher than all the kings of the earth,
 ‘ my mercy will I keep for him, his seed shall endure
 ‘ for ever, if his children forsake my law, then I will ‘ visit their transgressions with the rod: Nevertheless ‘ my loving kindness I will not utterly take from him, ‘ nor suffer my faithfulness to fail.’ There is, Hos. iii.
 a promise of the ingathering of the Jews. And, Isa.
 ix. 6. it is said, that ‘ the government shall be upon ‘ his shoulders, and of the increase of his government
 ‘ there shall be no end.’ And Rev. xi. 15. it is proclaimed, ‘ The kingdoms of this world are become ‘ the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ.’ All these, and many the like promises, shall be accomplished, though the world should be turned upside down every month, or every year. The ground of the church’s continuance and preservation is not, because such and such persons govern; otherwise, what would have become of the church when antichrist prevailed? but the promise made to the Mediator.
 Here lieth the Christian’s peace, when he hath to do with accusations; it is impossible that the believer in Christ can perish: And here is insured the church’s preservation, even by God’s promise to the Mediator that he shall have a seed, and that many shall be justified, that he shall divide the spoil. And though we see but very little appearance of the spreading of the gospel amongst the Jews and Pagans, or where anti-christ reigns, the visible church being now for many years rather incroached upon than extended, yet there is not one word here promised, but it shall be accomplished. And this is both a ground of our peace, and of our confidence in prayer; as it is, Psal. lxxii.
Prayer also shall be made for him continually, and daily shall he be praised. Two sweet exercises, daily to be praying for that which is in the pattern of prayer, let thy kingdom come, and daily to be praising him for the coming of his kingdom.

But 2dly, What is spoken of Christ the Mediator’s part, we have it for granted, that there is nothing spoken of, but it is, or shall be performed; the Father engages to perform to him whatever promises are made to him; because he hath performed whatever he undertook; and although Isaiah, long ere the Messiah came in the flesh, spake of it as a thing done in the time past, when as yet it was not actually done, yet he doth so, because it was as certain as if it had been already done. Observe hence, that there is no part of Christ's undertaking as a Mediator in the covenant of redemption, but it is, and shall be actually performed. O! but there are two responsal and faithful parties in this covenant; it is not God, and Adam who brake the covenant, and plaid the traitor, but it is God upon the one side, and the Mediator Immanuel, God with us, on the other side: Therefore there is faithfulness on the Mediator's performing according to his undertaking, as well as there is faithfulness in God's performing whatever he hath spoken of him, or promised to him. I shall only give two or three testimonies for this; the 1st is, Mat. iii. 14. and xvii. 5. This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased; he undertook to satisfy the elects debt, and hath accordingly performed it; so that the Father is well pleased. A 2^d is, John xvii. 4. where he appeared before the Father, and useth it for an argument for 'his glorifying him with the same glory which he had with the Father before the world was: I have glorified thee on earth, I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do.' I have had a task, and piece of work committed to me, and now it is performed. And those other words he hath on the cross, are remarkable to this purpose, it is finished; now the task and work is ended, I have no more to do, but presently to pass to the victory, and to the dividing of the spoil. And a 3^d testimony is our Lord Jesus' ascension to heaven, and the glory that he will appear in, at the day of judgment, when his kingdom shall be

be consummate; that shall be a proof and testimony, that he left nothing undone, that was given him to do, that he bare the sins of many, that he gave his back to the smiters, and his cheeks to them that pulled off the hair, and that he satisfied justice freely, and ascended to heaven; as it is, 1 Tim. iii. 16. Great is the mystery of godliness, faith the apostle, God manifested in the flesh, justified in the spirit, fully absolved, as having performed all whatsoever he undertook, seen of angels, and raised up unto glory.

Use. This is also, tho' a general, yet a very comfortable doctrine to the people of God, in as far as from it they know, that there is no more to be paid to the justice of God for the sins of the elect; it hath received full satisfaction, the Surety hath paid all their debt, and is now exercising his office, for applying to them his purchase, making intercession for them, overseeing them, proving a tutor to them, guiding them, and all that concerns them and his church; even doing all things well, managing the affairs, of his Father's house, as a son, and he cannot but guide all well; Other sheep, faith he, I have, which are not of this fold, them I must bring in, and they shall hear my voice, and I give them eternal life, and they shall never perish; a most pregnant ground of comfort to the believer, that his eternal well-being cannot but be sure; because it hath the faithfulness of the Father and the Mediator engaged for it; if Jehovah perform the promises made to the Mediator, and if the Mediator perform his engagement to Jehovah, and raise up believers at the last day, then it must follow, that their salvation is sure. This is the main ground on which believers peace is founded; and here we may allude to that, Heb. vi. 18. 'He hath sworn by two immutable things, wherein it is impossible for God to lie, that the heirs of promise, who are fled for refuge to lay hold on the hope set before them, may have strong consolation;' even so here, there are two immutable things, to wit, God's promise to the Mediator, and God will, and must keep his word to him. And the Mediator's engagement to God, he will, and must keep his word to him; and indeed we have good proof of both already; for it was this management that made the Father send the Son of his love, out of his bosom, to be incarnate, and to undergo the work of elect sinners redemption; and it was this engagement that made the Mediator die, of whom the Father exacted the price, till he declared himself satisfied and well-pleased. Now when these things that seemed most difficult are accomplished, what can fail?

1. Then there is here ground to fix our faith upon, and indeed there is need to fix it rightly. The ground that our salvation, and perseverance in the faith is founded on, is not our continuing to pray, to believe, and to love God, but this engagement betwixt the Father and the Son; and it is the cause procuring the other, as a necessary and infallibly certain effect; it is mainly on this; that believers should rest quiet and confident. 2. It should make believers humble and cheerful, seeing though they be weak in themselves, yet here they have a hold for every hand, as it were Jehovah's word, and the Mediator's word for their safety. 3. It does much commend believing, and the state of a believer, who hath such ground of assurance; the greatest monarch on earth hath not such ground of assurance for his dinner or supper, as the poor believer hath for eternal life; for the word spoken by Jehovah to the Mediator, and the undertaking of the Mediator to Jehovah cannot fail; and the believer hath that to rest upon, as the ground of his assurance.

More particularly, the articles on the Mediator's side are, as I said, in these four expressions, [he hath poured out his soul unto death; he was numbred with the transgressors; he bare the sins of many; and made intercession for the transgressors.] 1. He must die, die, expressed in these words, He hath poured out his soul unto death; which implies three things; 1st, That it is an article of the covenant of redemption, and of the Mediator's undertaking, that he should die for sinners; and so it is a needless, curious, unwarrantable dispute, whether fallen man might have been redeemed any other way; or whether a drop of his blood was not enough to redeem man; because we see here it is determined, and articulated in the covenant of redemption, that he should die, Jehovah will have the Mediator dying; and whatever be possible to God's sovereignty (which we would not make to clash with his justice, nor his justice with his sovereignty) this may bound and limit us, that it is concluded in this covenant of redemption, that the Mediator should lay down his life. And it being concluded, it is certain, 1. That God hath given man a law, threatening him, that if he should break that law, he should die. 2. That all mankind, and so the elect, have broken that law, and so are liable to the threatening and curse. 3. That the Mediator became Surety, and undertook to satisfy for the elects debt, it was necessary that he should die, because he undertook to pay their debt, and to satisfy for their sin, which was death by the law to them, and so the justice of God is vindicated; he cannot be called unjust, nor partial, nor unholy, though he do not actually punish every sinner that hath sinned in his own person; because God's holiness and justice appear conspicuously, that he would rather execute what was due to the elect in his own Son, than that their sins should go unpunished. And considering the nature of the Mediator's death, that it was a violent and cursed death, and which had extreme anguish and sorrow going before and along with it, it shews that the Lord hath purposely taken that way to make it known how bitter a thing sin is, how terrible a thing his wrath is, and how holily severe his law is, and to let all know that it is a dreadful thing to contend tend with him, who did so put his own Son to it.

Use 1. This doctrine, tho' it hath been spoken to before, is a sovereign doctrine, yea, the sovereign doctrine, and corner-stone of religion, that Christ hath died for the sins of his people: It gives us access to preach the gospel, which is therefore called, The preaching of Christ crucified. Know therefore, and believe, that the Mediator died, and that it behoved him to die; for it was required as a condition of the covenant of redemption, to be performed by him, to which he yielded and consented. O! what love is here to article such a thing before sinners had any being; it was more than to be hungry, and thirsty, and weary. He behoved to die, and to be made a curse. When sacrifices and burnt-offerings would not do, he says, Lo, I come, in the volume of thy book it is written of me, I delight to do thy will, O my God, I heartily accept of thy proposal.

Use 2. It speaks an alarming word to all you who are secure atheists, and care not for the wrath of God. O! what will become of you, when the wrath of God and you shall meet? If sin brought the Surety to death, O! what wrath shall you come under, when you shall be put to reckon for your own sin? The smiting of the shepherd was more than if all the sheep had been smitten, and tho' now ye think little of sin, yet the day comes wherein ye shall know to your cost, that it is an evil and bitter thing to depart from God; and that it is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God.

Use 3. See here the necessity of making use of Christ's death. Either you must do it, or die, and come under the curse of God yourselves, there is not a medium. If ye have sin, how will you have put by, and satisfied for? not by your prayers, much less a laugh or smile; nor by your living an honest life, as ye call it. Christ had infinitely more of this than any of you, and yet he got not sin so easily put away. We may here allude to that, Eccl. viii. 8. There is no discharge in that war, neither shall wickedness deliver them that are given to it. Death, when it hath a commission, and God's terror backing it, O! how will it handle the secure stubborn sinner, when the hand of God shall pursue him eternally? Alas! what are many doing that never fear the wrath of God, that suspend, put off, and delay the making of their accounts, and all endeavours to die to sin, and live to righteousness, and either pass over their days as atheists, or as formal hypocrites? And such are some of you that hear me this day, who never seek to be found in Christ, nor to improve his death to the mortifying of sin. What will ye do in the day when ye shall be called to a reckoning? Ye will curse the day that ever ye heard the gospel, and that it was concluded that Christ should die, it will be the favour of death to you, through all eternity, and will be the most soul-searching and tormenting word that ever ye heard of.

Use 4. It is a comfortable and encouraging word to sensible sinners; such as betake themselves to Christ, may be sure to receive good from him; for he hath paid the price already, and hath given his word for it, That such as believe in him should never perish, but he will raise them up at the last day. Ye should not think that it will be displeasing or dissatisfying to the Father, or to the Son, that ye come to him, and take hold of him; for it was for that end that God sent him, and that he laid down his life, and died (but he dies no more) it will be no trouble to him, but satisfaction to his soul for all the travel of it, to make application of his purchase to you; and seeing it will not displease, but be most acceptable to him, that ye believe on him, and be saved by him; and since unbelief casts shame in a manner upon him, why do ye not betake yourselves unto him by faith for his satisfaction, and your own salvation.

out his soul unto death, which implies two things. 1. The intenseness of it; it was an uncouth and strange death, not only was his body afflicted but his soul was poured out. 2. It looks to his good will, readiness and cheerfulness in dying; Father, (as if he had said) must I die? and wilt thou have my soul sorrowful and heavy? I am content to be so, thou shalt have my life; he comes not to die upon his own terms, but casts down his blessed life at his Father's feet, and plentifully gives it out to the uttermost; so that he will not, as it were, leave one drop of his blood, but will needs pour it out in abundance, even all of it.

Hence observe, that our blessed Lord Jesus was most hearty in laying down his life for sinners, was most cheerful in undertaking, and most willing and cheerful in executing what he did undertake. He makes not two words in the bargain, (to speak so) but when sacrifice and offering will not do, as it is, Psal. xl. then says he, Lo, I come, in the volume of thy book it is written of me, I delight to do thy will, O my God. There is no standing nor disputing here on the Mediator's side, but a present, willing and cheerful undertaking; therefore, Prov. viii. he says, though he was continually with the Father, even from everlasting, yet his delights were with the sons of men, rejoicing in the habitable parts of the earth; e'er ever the world was made, e'er ever there was a sinner in being to be redeemed, he rejoiced before hand, thinking there would be such an opportunity to manifest his good will, grace and mercy. And if we look through the gospel, how often shall we find this made good? No man taketh my life from me, but I lay it down of myself, and I take it up again. And when they came to take him, and Peter drew his sword, he said, could not I have commanded twelve legions of angels? but all that is written of me must be fulfilled. I have engaged to lay down my life, and it must be; and I have a baptism to be baptised with, and how am I straitened till it it be accomplished? And when it came to be accomplished, though he gave evidences of his power, in making them fall backward, who came to apprehend him, yet he raises them again, and goes with them; and when they mock and buffet him, and nod the head at him, and bring him to the bar, and question him; and when they said, ‘If thou be the King of Israel, come down from the cross, and we will believe thee,’ which we may think he could have done, though they were but tempting him; yet in all these he was silent, and never opens his mouth, till he come to that, it is finished; he never spake a repining word. It was wonderfully much to suffer, and to die so cheerfully, but to pour out his soul unto death, to take his life in his own hand, and to be so holily prodigal of it, as to pour it out, there having never been such a precious life, and so precious blood poured out, this was much more.

Use. It shews what esteem you should have of souls, and every one of your own souls. Our Lord Jesus poured out his soul unto death for souls; he values souls so much that he gave his precious life for them; therefore, it is said, 1 Pet. i. 19. ‘We are not redeemed with corruptible things, as silver and gold, but with the precious blood of Christ.’ If he esteemed so much of souls, what will it be thought of, when ye waste your souls, and ye know not whereon? he bought souls dear, and ye sell them cheap, for a little silver and gold, or for that which is worse, and far less worth. What an unsuitableness is there betwixt Christ’s estimation of souls, and yours, betwixt his buying them at so dear a rate, and your casting them away, for that which is very vanity? What do the most part of you get for your souls? some a bit of land, some a house, some a little pleasure, some a little sport, and others the satisfaction of their lusts, or a moment’s sinful mirth: O pitifully poor bargain! What will become of the mirth, or lust, or pleasure, of this house, or of that land, when kings, and great men will lie crawling, like so many worms before the Lamb? Ye will not get your houses or land with you, ye will not have leave to wear your brave clothes, you will have no silver nor gold in your purse in that day; and suppose ye had it, the redemption of the soul is precious, and ceaseth for ever by any such price. It is a wonderful thing, that when Christ esteems so much of souls, sinners should esteem so little of them; is it not just that such souls go to hell, when they esteemed them so little worth?

Use 2. It should teach you to love, and heartily to welcome this Lord Jesus Christ. What argument of love and of trust, what motive to welcome him can there be, if this be not? That he spared not his life, but poured it out unto death for sinners. How long shall we halt betwixt Christ and Belial? We can not endure to mortify a lust, to want our sport and laughter, or a bit of our credit or honour, though it should cost us the want of Christ. But, O ingrate fools! Is that a becoming requital to him, that took his innocent soul in his hand, and poured it out for sinners, and when he was some way melted, like lead in the fire of God's wrath, was content to pour it forth abundantly, out of love to their salvation? Should it not rather call for love to him, for trusting and receiving of him, and to suffering for his sake, if he call you to it? Will ye draw back to hazard your life for him, that poured out his soul for sinners? It should rejoice a soul to think how willingly and cheerfully he suffered; but, alas! how reluctantly and unwillingly come ye under suffering for him? However, let me commend these three words to you. 1. Love him, for even publicans will love those that love them, and give Christ love for love. 2. Believe and trust him; what ground is there to suspect him? it is his glory to do good to sinners, and he counts them his triumph and spoil, to make conquest of them; he poured out his soul unto death, as the word is, Phil. ii. he emptied himself; which seems to look to this word of the prophet; and is not that warrant sufficient for you, to trust and believe him, and to lay the weight of what concerns you upon him? And 3. Welcome him, which is a fruit of faith and love; he is a sweet wooer, he is that good shepherd that laid down his life for his sheep; he gave himself for his church, as it is, Ephes. v. Therefore, I say, welcome him. This is the great thing the gospel aims at; such expressions are a great depth; and it would require time to read, to ponder them, and to wonder at them; and we should be much in praying for a right understanding of them.

3dly. From the connection because he hath poured out his soul unto death, observe, that our Lord Jesus his willing condescending to die, is most acceptable to the Father; therefore he says, I will give him a portion with the great, and he shall divide the spoil with the strong, because he hath done so and so. And all the promises made to him confirm this. Those are wonderful words, John x. 17. Therefore does my Father love me, because I lay down my life for my sheep. The only begotten and beloved Son of the Father cannot but be loved, yet he says therefore, or on this account, does my Father love me; that is, as I am Mediator, the Father's minister or steward, in this work of the redemption of sinners; and because I so willingly and cheerfully lay down myself for them, he hath given me this victory and glory. So well pleasing to God is the willing and cheerful death of the Mediator, that it should be admired by us, and should have this weight laid on it by us, that seeing cheerfulness in obedience is so acceptable to God, we should study it, for he loves a cheerful giver, and cheerfulness in any duty. It is comfortable we have this word to speak of to you; many nations never heard of it, and ye should make some other use of it, than if ye had never heard of it: O! but it will be dreadful to such have heard of it, and do slight it, their souls shall be poured out into hell, even squeezed, and wrung eternally by the wrath of God ; therefore look not lightly on it, do not think all this transaction of grace to be for nought ; if we were but serious, we would wonder what it means : Alas ! We are indifferent to make our peace with God, and yet it must be made e'er the matter can be brought about. It is a great evidence of the stupidity, senselessness, and absurd unbelief of many, that they think nothing of sin and wrath, and of the hazard that their souls are in, and that they look at peace with God as an easy business ; but one day it will be found to be a great matter to be at peace with him, that sin is bitter, and wrath heavy ; and that to be on good terms with God, is better than a thousand worlds. God himself make you to think seriously on it in time.

S E R M O N LXVI.

ISAIAH LIII. Verse 12.

Therefore will I divide him a portion with the great, &c.

THERE was never any agreement so seriously entered into as this betwixt Jehovah and the Mediator, never any contract was of such concernment and weight ; it is therefore no marvel it be insisted upon.

The prophet hath been holding forth the terms and conditions of it on both sides, and now he sums them up in the last verse, that the business may be left clear and distinct, setting forth what the Lord Jehovah engageth for to the Mediator, and what the Mediator engageth for to Jehovah ; only with this difference, that in the former part of this chapter, the Mediator's engagement is first set down, and then what are the promises that the Lord Jehovah made to him, but in this verse where the covenant is resumed, resumed, what the Lord engageth for to the Mediator is first set down, and then what the Mediator is to perform in the last place, to shew (as I said) the mutualness of the covenant of redemption, and that it is one agreement, one link whereof can never be loosened on either side.

In the last part of the verse, what the Mediator is to perform, it is set down in four expressions, as past and done, because of the certainty and efficacy of the Mediator's sufferings, and of his performing what he undertook, and of divine justice its acceptation thereof. The 1st is, Because he hath poured out his soul unto death; it was proposed to the Mediator to die, which he undertook, and in the execution goes cheerfully about it; He poured out his soul unto death, without desiring any abatement; grace and love (to speak so with reverence) were so liberal and prodigal of the life of our Lord Jesus, for the salvation of lost sinners, that his blessed soul was separated from his body, and he made obnoxious to the curse, which most willingly he underwent; his life or soul was poured out unto death. The 2d is, he was numbered with the transgressors, which implies three things. 1. It supposes that he was indeed no transgressor, there was no guile found in his mouth, yet he behoved to stoop so low, as to be reckoned among, or numbered with transgressors. As the former expressions hold forth the painfulness of his death, so this holds forth the ignominy of it. He not only died, and behoved to die, but he was looked upon as a despicable person, even so despicable, that Barabas a thief and robber was preferred unto him. Of this we spake from verse 3. He was despised and rejected of men. 2. It implies mens ingratitude, that when our Lord came to redeem them, they did not count him worthy to live, but looked on him as a transgressor. This was also fulfilled in the history of the gospel, as John xviii. 30. They say unto Pilate, If he were not a malefactor, we would would not have delivered him unto thee. 3. It implies the low condescendence and depth of the love of our Lord Jesus Christ, which hath no bottom; he will not only die, but die a shameful and curfed death, and take on reproach and ignominy with the debt of sinners, when they are despising him; the surety must not only die, but die a shameful death. Some deaths are creditable and honourable, and men will with a sort of vanity affect them; but it must not be so with our Lord Jesus, when he entered himself the sinners surety; he must not only die, but be despicable in his death, as it is, chap. 1. 5. He gave his back to the smiters, and his cheeks to them that plucked off the hair; he hid not his face from shame and spitting; because it was so articulated and agreed upon; when he was reviled, he reviled not again. O! What condescending love shines forth here in the Mediator! It was much to pay the debt, and die, but more in his dying to be counted the transgressor; much to be surety, but more to be counted the bankrupt; as if some wicked and perverse officer, seizing on the surety, should not only arrest him for the debt, and exact it of him, but account and call him the bankrupt debtor, yet bears all patiently. It should learn us to bear reproach for him, he bare much more for us than we can bear for him; he was railed at, reviled, buffeted, and spat on; they in derision said unto him, Hail King of the Jews; they mocked him, nodded the head at him, hanged him up between two thieves, as the most eminent malefactor of the three. And Mark saith, chap. xv. 28. that this scripture was fulfilled, which saith, And he was numbered with the transgressors. God appointed it, and the Mediator had condescended to it, and therefore it behoved so to be. We spake to the matter of this before, and will not now insist on it any further. The 3^d is, He bare the sins of many; which is also causal, as the former are. It is put in here, 1st, To shew the end of his dying, and the nature of his death. His death was a cursed death; but not for his own sin, but for the sins of others, even to pay the debt that was owing by his elect; the many here are the same many spoken of in the former verse, who by his knowledge are justified. It is not the sins of all that Christ bare, but the sins of many, and the many whose sins he bare, are the many that are justified, and all who are justified, their sins he bare, and of no more; so that as many as have their sins borne by Christ are justified; and whoever are justified, had their sins borne by him.

2. It shews also, how the sins of these many are taken away, it was by Christ's bearing the punishment due for their sins; this is that which we spake to from verse 6. The Lord hath laid on him the iniquities of us all. In a word, it is this, the Mediator articleth, and agreeth to take on him the guilt of the sins of the elect, tho' not their sins themselves formally considered; he took the deserving or burden of their debt. Of this we have also spoken before, and will not therefore insist any more particularly on it.

The 4th and last article, or part of the condition required of the Mediator, is, he made intercession for the transgressors. There was more required of him than to die, and to die such a death for the elects sins. He must also make application of his death, and he will do that likewise; whereupon is founded his intercession, that the benefit of his death and satisfaction may be applied, and made good to them, which is set down in these words, He made intercession for the transgressors, wherein also we are to carry with us the thoughts of his condescending love, who not only will satisfy for the elects debt, and procure to them righteousness and eternal life, but when they continue in opposition to him, will make intercession for the application thereof to them, he having a number given to him, not only to pay their debt, by dying for them, but also actually to apply the benefits of his death and purchase to them; according

according to that, John vi. 39. This is the will of him that sent me, that of all that he hath given me, I shall lose nothing, but raise them up at the last day. These four do plainly and summarily comprehend the Mediator's engagement in the covenant of redemption, as to his priestly office; and having spoken somewhat of the first three, we shall insist a little on this last, concerning his intercession.

For clearing whereof, when he prayed on the cross, Luk. xxiii. Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do, this was in part fulfilled. But his praying, or making intercession for transgressors, is to be considered two ways. First, As he was a man under the law, and so he was to pray for other transgressors, than the elect only; as Stephen following his example did, Acts vii. 60. when he said, Lord, lay not this sin to their charge. 2. As he is Mediator, and so he prays only for the elect; as is clear, John xvii. 9. And his intercession thus considered is always effectual, and runs in the channel of the covenant of redemption, and is commensurable, and of equal extent with his death. His intercession in the first sense is more largely extended; he might, considered as man under the law, have interceded for his enemies, that were not elected; therefore we take his intercession here in the second sense, as he is Mediator; and as Matthew, ch. viii. 17. applies his bearing of our griefs, and carrying of our sorrows spoken of verse 4. of this chap. to his carrying of our temporal bodily infirmities, so there may be an allusion to this, in the Lord's prayer on the cross. We mark this distinction, because Arminians, that pretend to an universal redemption, plead also for an universal intercession; and on this ground, they say, that Christ prayed for many that went to hell. But we answer, that our blessed Lord Jesus, did not there, if he prayed for any such, intercede as Mediator properly, but as man under the law; even as in his prayer in the garden, when his holy human nature

sinlessly feared to take the bitter cup, he prayed, Father if it be possible, let this cup depart from me; and it was agreeable to the human nature, to seek innocently to eschew the drinking of such a cup; but, when, in the same prayer, he speaks as Mediator, he says, not my will, but thine be done; and for this cause came I unto this hour. So when he preached as man, and a minister of the circumcision, he says, O! Jerusalem, Jerusalem, how often would I have gathered thee, and thou wouldst not; whereas, if we consider him as Mediator, he doth what he will; and calleth none but they come, and willeth none to be gathered, but such as are gathered. The intercession here meant, is that which is an article of the covenant of redemption, and a piece of Christ's priestly office, to which the promise in the first part of the verse is made; and therefore we have clear reason to speak of it, according as the New Testament holds it out to us.

1. Then we observe this doctrine from it, that according to the covenant of redemption, our Lord must not only die, but also interceed for transgressors, or sinners; or, it is a part of our Lord's office agreed upon in the covenant of redemption, that he should be intercessor for transgressors. It is on this ground, that its said, Ps. cx. 4. The Lord hath sworn, and will not repent: thou art a priest for ever, after the order of Melchisedeck: He is a priest after Melchisedeck's order, and not after the order of Aaron; and Rom. viii. 34. he is said to be at the right hand of God, making intercession for us. It is said likewise, Heb. vii. 25. that he is able to save to the uttermost all that come to God by him: seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for them: So, 1 John ii. 1. its said, if any man sin, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous; and frequently elsewhere, it is in scripture attributed to him. If it be asked, why must Jesus Christ the Mediator to be an intercessor? We answer, for these three reasons. 1st, It was suitable to the glory of God, that the great Lord deputy, appointed for the ingathering of elect sinners, should be furnished with this office ; and his intercession is derived from it, Heb. vii. 25. He is able to save to the uttermost, seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for us. He cannot fail in proving himself to be an able Saviour, because he lives for ever to interceed. 2. It is suitable and meet for the glory of the Mediator, and of his priest-hood, that he should not be a priest for a time only but for ever ; therefore, when he is brought in as a Priest, Psal. cx. compared with Heb. vii. he is preferred to the order of Aaron, and said ‘ to be a Priest for ever, after the order of Melchisedeck, by so much as he is Surety of a better testament. They were many, because they were not suffered to continue ; but this man, because he continueth for ever, hath an unchangeable priest-hood.’ 3. It was meet, in respect of the consolation, that believers in him have from this his intercession. There had been a defect in the consolation of believers, if he had not been intercessor ; but seeing, as it is, Heb. x. 19. ‘ We have such a high Priest over the house of God, we have boldness to enter into the holiest, by a new and living way, and may draw near with full assurance of faith.’ And that which gives us this boldness, is that, as it is, Heb. iv. 15, 16. ‘ We have not an high Priest which cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities, but was in all points tempted like as we are.’ Then follows, ‘ Let us therefore come boldly unto the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy, and find grace to help in time of need.’ 4. We may add, that it is suitable for this reason, to wit, if we consider and compare the type with the antitype, Exod. xxx. 10. and Levit. xvi. compared with Heb. ix. The high Priest had sacrifices prescribed to him for himself, and for the people, when he went once in the year, into the most holy, with the blood of the sacrifice, which signified, that Christ after the laying ing down of his life, was to enter into heaven, there to appear in the presence of God for us, Heb. ix. 24.

This is a point which may yield us many and great uses, as 1st, For information, to clear us about Christ's intercession. 2dly, For consolation, to shew us the advantages that flow to believers from it. 3dly, For direction in duties, to learn us what use we should make of it. And 4thly, For reproof and conviction, for, and of the sin of our much slighting and neglecting this part of Christ's priestly office.

As for the first, it serves, we say, for information; and to let us see that we have an excellent high Priest, who is not only answerable to the type, in dying, but also in interceding, who died, that he might make application of what he purchased by his death.

For further clearing and prosecuting of this use, we shall speak a little to some few questions. As, 1. What this intercession is? 2. Who interceeds? 3. For whom? 4. For what? 5. How this intercession is performed? 6. What are the grounds on which it is founded.

For the first, what this intercession is in general? and for clearing it, we shall consider, 1. What it is not; and 1. There is here no humbling of the Mediator in the way of supplication, as he prayed when on earth, or as we pray, or as one man intreats, or interceeds with another. That way of interceding is inconsistent with his exaltation, his humiliation being perfected and past, and he being now exalted at the right hand of God. 2. It is no verbal thing, no bringing forth, or uttering of words. There is no such language in our Lord's intercession; so that we are not to conceive of his intercession, as if he made a formal prayer. That manner of dealing, or proceeding is not now betwixt God and the Mediator. 3. Neither doth this his intercession consist in any new particular act of his will, as if he did act, or will something that he did not before; therefore he is said to live for ever, to make intercession, and to abide a Priest continually. His intercession is continual, as is clear, Heb. vii. 3, 25. his being in heaven, and appearing there in our name, is his intercession. And therefore, 2. Let us see in the next place, what it is; and more generally, we may consider it in such expressions as the scripture makes use of to hold it forth by; and in the similitude and analogy whence it is borrowed, for it is a borrowed thing, as the covenant of redemption is, from compacts among men, because we cannot take in divine and mysterious things, except they be express after the manner of men to our capacity. Such is this, as if a king's son were interposing for a person not in good terms with the king, or, for whom he would have some benefit from the king his father. The similitude seems indeed to be drawn from this, yet it must not be restrained thereto; therefore, 1 John ii. 1. he is called an Advocate with the Father; and yet he doth not plead our cause verbally, as we said before; and 1 Tim. ii. 5. There is one God, and one Mediator betwixt God and man; where the apostle is speaking of praying. And here he is said to make intercession for us, as the high priest did in name of the people. In a word, it is our Lord Jesus Christ's making, what he hath purchased, and is promised to him in the covenant of redemption, effectually good for the behoof of his people, as if he were pleading their cause, as an advocate in heaven; which is so held forth, for the help of our faith; that the Mediator having made his testament, and confirmed it by his death is looking well that his death, and the benefits purchased to elect sinners thereby, may be made effectual: and is as it were waiting as an advocate at court, to procure and bring about this business, according to that, John xvii. 19, 20, 24. For their sakes I sanctify myself, that they also may be sanctified, &c. Neither pray I for these alone, &c. And Father, I will that these whom thou hast gi- ven me, may be with me, where I am: It is even that all may be made good to them for whom he sanctified himself, and the effectual making out of that which he hath purchased to them, that is called his intercession.

2dly, Who makes intercession? It is not enough that Christ, as man makes intercession; but it is Christ Mediator God and man in one person: It being an error of the Papists, to make the intercession of Christ, to be a thing performed by the human nature only, which lesseneth the consolation of believers, and is inconsistent with the union of the two natures, and detracts from the weight that his Godhead gives to his intercession.

3dly, For whom does he interceed? There are here extremes on both hands to be avoided. 1st, Some make his intercession too broad, as if he interceeded for all the world. This he expressly denies, John xvii. 9. I pray not for the world; and his intercession, being grounded on his death, and satisfaction, it must be of equal extent therewith, and must relate to the covenant of redemption, wherein so many were given him to be redeemed by his death. 2dly, Others make his intercession too narrow, in making it only for them that actually believe. He also refutes this opinion, John xvii. 20. by saying, neither pray I for these alone, but for all that shall believe on me through their word. And it is always on this ground that he interceeds, to wit, because they are given, so that it is for the elect converted, or unconverted, that he interceeds. The reason why we mark this, is, to overturn thereby two corrupt distinctions, that are made use of, to bring in an universal intercession, as well as an universal redemption. 1st, Some make his intercession common to all; but we according to the scripture, acknowledge no such intercession to belong to Christ, especially as Mediator; however he might, as man under the law, have prayed for some that shall not be actually saved, as he commands one man to pray for other men, yet not for all men simply. 2dly, Others make a conditional intercession for all, as they make a conditional redemption of all; and make both absolute for believers only; which is also corrupt; for considering the object of his intercession as Mediator to be only the elect, as indeed they are, it overturns both this, and the former opinion; if he prayed not for all, he died not for all: the one whereof is grounded on the other.

4thly, For what doth he interceed? In general, for all that is conditioned to him in the covenant, for the behoof of his people; he prays for the fulfilling of all the articles of the covenant; as that all the elect, who are not regenerate may be regenerate, and made believers, that many through his knowledge may be justified, that those that are regenerate and believers, and by faith have betaken themselves to him, may be justified, pardoned, and received into favour, friendship and fellowship with God, that believers may be kept from temptation, that temptations may be prevented, and they made to persevere, that Satan may not make their faith to fail them, as he designs, and the Lord gives account of his design, Luke xxii. 32. Satan hath sought to winnow you, but I have prayed that thy faith fail not, that they and their prayers and service may be accepted, that the suits and supplications that they present, and put up in his name may have a hearing, that they may be armed against the fear of death, that they may be carried on in the gradual advances of sanctification to the end of their faith even the salvation of their souls, that they may be glorified, and be where he is to behold his glory; in a word, he interceeds for every thing needful, his intercession being as extensive as his purchase.

5thly, How doth he perform this part of his priestly office for his people? It is performed by his entring into the most holy place, in our nature and name, as having satisfied justice, and overcome death, where he

he appears before God for us. So that we are to look to Christ's being in heaven, not simply, as glorifying himself, or as glorified in himself, for himself; but as our head, and forerunner, to answer all that can be said against his elect, for whom he suffered, and satisfied; as it is, Heb. ix. 23, 24. 'It was therefore necessary that the patterns of things in the heavens should be purified with these, but the heavenly things themselves with better sacrifices; for Christ is not entered into the holy places made with hands, which are the figures of the true, but into heaven itself, now to appear in the presence of God for us.' So that our Lord Jesus by his entering into heaven doth declare (I mean materially,) his victory in our name, and appears there, as a public, and not as a private person. His going into heaven is not to be looked on, as that of Moses or of Elias, but as the entry of him who is head of the elect, in whose entry there is a declaration of his purpose and design; for by the power of his Godhead, he convoyed himself in thither; so that he hath taken possession in our name, and according to the covenant declares, that those whose rooms he sustains, may and must be admitted to glory; and we must conceive an especial efficacy in his being there, for procuring to them what he hath purchased. 2. His intercession is performed through the efficacy of his blood and satisfaction flowing from the nature of the covenant, which hath a moral, real cry, for making effectual what he by his death hath procured: as the apostle speaking of Abel's blood, and of making application of Christ's blood, Heb. xii. 24. saith, It speaketh better things than the blood of Abel; for Abel's blood had a demerit in it to cry guilt, and could not but have a curse following it, because God had cursed the shedder of blood; but Christ's blood, considered as the price of redemption for the elect, hath an invaluable and unconceivable merit, and worth in it, and must have a cry for the blessings blessings purchased to them by it. 3. He performs this his intercession by his constant care, and by his continual willingness, and actual willing, that what he hath purchased for his elect people may be applied to them, that such and such persons may be brought to believe, that upon their believing they may be pardoned, delivered from snares and temptations, kept in favour with God, may be accepted in their performances, &c. for he had that prayer, John xvii. 20, 24. and he continues to have that same sympathy. His way on earth was always sinless, but now is glorious and majestic, suited to his glorified state; he continues to interceed according as he intended, and his actual willingness is a main part of his intercession, which is not in renewing of acts, so to speak, but in his continued desire, and willingness, that what good he hath purchased, may be conferred, according to the covenant; for Christ in heaven is still a true man, and hath a will, as he had on earth, continuing to seek that they may be glorified with him, for whom he satisfied. And this actual willing, desiring and affecting, that such a thing should be, is called his intercession, because it cannot but be so esteemed, as to have the effect to follow, according to the covenant, as he says, John ix. 41, 42. I thank thee Father, that thou hast heard me, and I know that thou hearest me always. This, as to his actual willing, cannot but be in heaven. However, we are sure that he is there, and in our name, and that his death, and the shedding of his blood have an efficacy, to bring about what he hath purchased; and that his will and affection are the same, and have an efficacy with them, and the effect certainly following; so as nothing can go wrong there, more than a man that hath a just cause in a court of judicature, and an able advocate, with much endeavour pleading it before a just judge, can be wronged, or lose his cause.

excellency of his person, who, though he be man yet he is God also, equal with the Father, the brightness of his glory, and the express image of his person, as it is, Heb. i. 2. which cannot but add weight to his intercession, as well as to his satisfaction; the person that interceeds being God. The 2d, is his satisfaction, which is the ground of his intercession; for upon his satisfaction he maketh intercession: even as if a surety should say, I have payed such a man's debt, and therefore he ought to be absolved; therefore, 1 John ii. 1. 2. these two are joined, we have an Advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous, and, he is the propitiation for sin: So, Rom. xviii. 34. they are joined, It is Christ that died who is at the right hand of God, and maketh intercession for us. 3dly, The covenant of redemption is the great ground on which his intercession is founded. Such and such persons are given to Christ, and such privileges, and benefits offered to be conferred upon them, on condition the Mediator would undertake, and satisfy for them, and he having undertaken, and payed the price, there is good ground for his interceeding, for the making application of the purchase: Therefore he says, John xvii. Thine they were, and thou gavest them me, &c. This gives him right to plead, and interceed for them; seeing he hath endured soul-travel for them, he ought to see his seed, and to have many justified, and freed from the curse and condemnation that they were obnoxious to, that so he may receive the fruit of his sore soul-travel.

In and from the consideration of these, we may gather what is the nature of Christ's intercession, and how we may make use of it, and how particularly we should beware of a carnal mistake that is in many about his intercession, as if he were praying in heaven, as a distinct party from God; it is true, he is a distinct person of the glorious trinity, but not a distinct party in interceeding, as some ignorantly conceive of him; who therefore think him easier to have access to than the Father, and therefore will pray him to pray the Father for them; as if, when they prayed to him, they were not praying to the Father, or as if they were not one object of worship. This flows from ignorance of the nature of Christ's intercession, and is unbecoming a Christian; for supposing a man to rest by faith on Christ, the Father is content, and well-pleased to pardon him, as well as the Son is, because he is engaged in the covenant of redemption so to do; and if he be not a believer, neither the Father nor the Son will respect him. Our making use of Christ's intercession doth consist rather in founding of our hope of speeding with God on it, as on his satisfaction, than in putting up of prayer to him, to interceed for us, as if he were to pray in heaven, as he did on earth; or as one man interceeds for another. The point is sublimely spiritual, and some way critical; and I indeed fear to enter on more uses, at least for the time; only remember, that he is an intercessor; and learn to make right use of him, as an intercessor; and the Lord himself make good the benefit of his intercession to us.

Verse 12.—And he made intercession for the transgressors.

IF Christ were known in the greatness and vast extent of his worth, O! how lovely would he be? How incomprehensibly full are his offices of consolation to his people? But the mean and low thoughts we have of him, and the poor consolation we feed on, do evidence much ignorance of him, and much unbelief of the solid worth and fulness that is in him, and in his priestly office in particular. And yet, O! how full of consolation is it? Such a High-priest became us, Heb. vii. 26. even such a High-priest as sinners had need of. There hath been much spoken of one part of his priest-hood, to wit, his sacrifice, and offering up of himself, in the former verses of this chapter. Now ere the prophet concludes, he gives a hint of the other part of his priestly office, to wit, of his intercession, a main commendation of Christ's fulness; it is that which evidenceth him to be a Saviour, able to save to the uttermost such as come unto God through him, because he lives for ever to make intercession for them; as it is, Heb. v. 25. and it is a part of the consolation of God's people, that Jesus Christ hath this office by the Father's allowance; and that it is articulated in the covenant of redemption betwixt the Father and him, that as he shall pour out his soul unto death, be numbered with transgressors, bear the sins of many, so he shall make intercession for the transgressors; therefore, Heb. vii. 21. he is said to be made an High-priest with an oath, by him that said unto him, Psal. cx. 4. The Lord sware, and will not repent, thou art a Priest for ever, after the order of Melchisedeck. He was a Priest on earth, by offering himself in a sacrifice, and by interceding for elect sinners, and he is a Priest in heaven by his intercession, and therefore is preferred to all the priests on earth, Who did not continue by reason of death, but he continues for ever, and none can find him wrong, to speak so with reverence of him.
in

We shewed in our entering on this verse, that this his intercession is not to be confined to his prayer on the cross, that was but one evidence, or particular instance of it, but it takes in his whole intercession; because the scope of the prophet here is to hold forth, as what God promised to him on the one hand in the covenant of redemption, so on the other what he interceeds for; and so his intercession viewed in the covenant of redemption, takes in his whole intercession, especially as it is performed in heaven, by virtue of his sacrifice once for all offered up when he was on earth.

We observed the last day, that according to the covenant of redemption, our Lord Jesus Christ behaved not only to die, but to be an intercessor, or that it belongs to our Lord's priestly office, agreed upon in the covenant of redemption, not only to offer up himself in a sacrifice, and to die, but to make intercession for his people; he made intercession for the transgressors; or as the rest may be read in the future time; so this, he shall make intercession for the transgressors; but for the certainty of the thing, it is set down in the præterit, or past time, the Father did take his word, and so it passed as done in the court of heaven.

We cleared this point, and proposed four uses of it; the first whereof was to inform us concerning Christ's fulness, to discover his unsearchable riches, and to let us see what an excellent High-priest we have, that continues an intercessor: Not only hath he once for all offered up his sacrifice, as the high-priest under the law did once a year, but hath entered within the veil, to interceed, and thereby to make the benefits of his purchase effectual to them, for whom his sacrifice was offered: Even as Levit. xvi. (where the rules for the high-priest's offering are given) after he had offered the sacrifice, he took the blood, and entered within the vail, and by the sacrifice, and his going in to pray, he made atonement for the people typically; answerable to this our Lord Jesus, by his once offering hath perfected for ever those who are sanctified: And by his going within the vail, he executes his part of this priestly office, in interceding for transgressors.

In prosecuting this use, we answered some questions, which now we shall not repeat; but there is a short question or two, that further may be asked, which will clear the former, ere we go to the next use. And the

the 1st is, If our Lord, before he came in the flesh, discharged this part of his priestly office? The reason of the question or doubt is, because in the New Testament, his intercession is always, at least very ordinarily, subjoined to his ascension. The 2^d is, How his intercession now differs from his intercession before his incarnation, or in what respects the consolation of believers, that flows from his intercession, is stronger now, than the consolation of believers flowing from it, was before he was incarnate? As for the first, it cannot be denied, but Christ was an intercessor ever since he had a church in the world; for it is a part of his priestly office, and he was made a Priest, by the eternal oath, in the covenant of redemption, Psal. cx. 4. The Lord hath sworn, and will not repent, thou art a Priest for ever. And he is said to have an unchangeable priesthood; and there being but one way of access for sinners to heaven by Christ, who is called, The Lamb slain from the beginning of the world, it must be held for a sure conclusion, that his intercession is as old as his sacrifice. And he was intercessor before his incarnation in these three respects: 1. In respect of his office, being designed to be intercessor; for, as we said, being designed to be Priest, and being Mediator before his incarnation, he must be intercessor also: For that way he did mediate, and the benefits that came to sinners from the beginning were the effects of his intercession; therefore, 1 Tim. ii. 5. it is said, There is one God, and one Mediator between God and man, the Man Christ Jesus; and there was never another real Mediator, however Moses might be called a typical one. 2. He was intercessor before his incarnation, in respect of the merit of his future sacrifice. He did not before his incarnation intercede by virtue of his sacrifice actually offered, as now he doth, yet there was virtue which flowed from his sacrifice to be offered, to the people of God, as well then as now when it hath been long since offered.

The sins of all that ever were pardoned, were pardoned on the account of his sacrifice, and so also the spiritual benefits that did redound to them, did redound to them through his intercession then, as now, by virtue of the same sacrifice, because of the nature of the covenant, wherein it was agreed, that this sacrifice should be of the same efficacy before his incarnation, as after: For the day and hour were agreed upon, when he should offer that sacrifice; therefore it is said, that in due time, and in the fulness of time, he came and died. 3. He was intercessor before his incarnation, as after it, in respect of the effects that followed on it, to the people of God, then and now. The people of God before his incarnation had communion with God, and access to him, though not generally, in that degree of boldness; they presented their prayers through, and were beholden to the same Christ, for a hearing, as we are, and therefore his intercession before his incarnation extended to them, as to us in these respects, but with this difference, that he procured these benefits to them by virtue of the covenant, and the efficacy of his blood to be offered; and now he procures them to his people, since his incarnation and ascension, by virtue of the same ascension, and by virtue of the efficacy of the blood offered.

As to the 2d, How his mediation and intercession now differs since his ascension, from his intercession before it, as to the strengthening of the consolation of the people of God? For answer, 1. We lay down this for a conclusion; that though our Lord Jesus was Mediator both before his incarnation, and now, yet since his ascension, he hath a new way of mediation and intercession, that exceedingly abounds to the strengthening of the consolation of his people; therefore it is ordinarily subjoined to his ascension, because of his new manner of discharging that his office. It is true, there is no addition to that grace which is infinite in him, as if he could be more gracious, or as if in respect of the covenant, there could be larger promises, as to essential things contained therein; but by taking on him our nature, he hath a new way of being affected, and a new way of discovering his affection to us, and is capable of another manner of touch with the infirmities of his people now that he hath human bowels, though glorified, and glorious; and the faith of his people hath ground superadded, whereupon to expect the communication of that grace, mercy, and goodness that are in him; though all the effects that followed to his people, before his incarnation, had respect to his future incarnation; so these effects had respect to his future intercession, in our nature, as well as to his dying, and laying down of the price, for those that were admitted to heaven ere he came in the flesh, were admitted the same way that we are.

But 2dly, and more particularly, if it be asked wherein this addition to the consolation of God's people, by his intercession, after his ascension appears or manifests itself? We answer, in these six particulars, which will also serve to illustrate the manner of his interceding. 1st, It appears in this, that he appeareth in heaven in our nature; now the man Christ is in heaven interceding, and, as an advocate, answering for pursued sinners; or, as ambassador and legat, negotiating the affairs of them that are given him of the Father; as it is, Heb. ix. 24. He is not entered into the holy places made with hands, but into heaven itself, to appear now in the presence of God for us: Where the apostle having been speaking of the excellency of his priesthood before, and comparing him with the type, he says, that he is not entered into the typical tabernacle, but into heaven itself, to appear in the presence of God for us. And this is a solid ground of consolation to a poor believing sinner, that he hath Christ in his own nature in heaven, interceding, that what he performed before, by virtue of his office, and of the efficacy of his sacrifice to be offered, when he should be incarnate, he now being incarnate, and ascended, performs it so, we having God in our nature, who became a man like unto us, to take care of the affairs of his people; and if any new question arise, or debate be started, to disturb the peace of his people, he will defend their cause, and keep it from miscarrying. 2dly, Their consolation is stronger in this respect, that he is in heaven, by virtue of the efficacy of his sacrifice already offered; as the high-priest, when he had offered the sacrifice, took the blood with him within the veil, and interceded for the people, so our Lord Jesus is not now interceding by virtue of his sacrifice to be offered, but by virtue of his sacrifice already offered, having entered into heaven, and taken the efficacy of his sacrifice with him, to enter it, if we may so speak, in the book of God, to stand on record; nay, he standeth there himself, to keep the memory of his blood fresh, and by each appearance of him there, who is never out of the sight of the majesty of God, there is still a representation of the worth and efficacy of his sacrifice, and for whom, and for what he was offered. 3dly, There is by the man Christ his being in heaven, this ground of consolation superadded, that he hath a sympathy with sinners, otherwise than before, not as to the degree, nor as to the intenseness of his grace and mercy, but as to the manner how he is affected; so that he hath the true nature, and sinless affection of a man, and so hath bowels to be wrought upon, which appeared while he was on earth. Although we cannot conceive the manner how he is touched otherways than God abstractly considered can be, and otherwise than an angel in heaven can be touched; as we may see, Heb. iv. 15. ‘ We have

‘ feeling of our infirmities; but was in all things ‘ tempted as we are, yet without sin;’ and it behov-

ed him to be like unto his brethren, that he might be a merciful and faithful High-priest, and have compassion on the ignorant, and them that are out of the way. He is sinners friend, that is, intercessor, and such an intercessor that interceeds from the impression that the holy and inconceivable sympathy which he hath with his members, hath upon him; as his expression to Paul speaks forth, Acts ix. Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? counting himself a sufferer with his people, which cannot but have its own influence on his intercession, and add to the consolation of his people; that what he interceeds for the procurement of to them, is some way on this ground, as being a favour to their glorified head. 4thly, Beside this sympathy he hath also a longing to have all the wants and defects of his people supplied and made up; and to have all the promises made to him, in behalf of the elect fulfilled: Not any such longing, as may in the least incroach on, or be inconsistent with the glory, and glorified state of our blessed Lord Jesus; but considering, that there is a near relation betwixt him and his followers, he being the Head, and they the members, and that he hath a sympathy and affection according to that relation, it is answerable and suitable that he should desire, and some way long for the perfecting of his body the church, which Eph. i. is called the fulness of him who filleth all in all; and he hath no question, though a pure and regular, yet a most lovely and strong desire, and longing to have his body perfected, to have the elect gathered and brought in: As he had on earth a longing to have the work finished, which was given him to do. And this cannot but be an important part of his intercession, and very comfortable to his people, his longing to have such and such a person converted, such and such a person more mortified, and more perfected, and is made more conformable to him. Those words; Heb. x. 13. give ground for this, From henceforth expecting till all his enemies be made his footstool; and what is spoken of this expecting of what is there mentioned, may be applied to other things; he is sure expecting till all these promises concerning his seeing of a seed, and the justifying and glorifying of many be fulfilled; because that was promised him in the former verse; and expecting till he divide the spoil with the strong, as is promised in the former part of this verse. Now our Lord Jesus having laid down his life, what is he doing in heaven? Even longing till these promises be fulfilled; not that he hath any longing that implies a defect in him simply, for he is absolutely glorified, and glorious, yet such longing as is consistent with his glorified state; as the souls in heaven are perfectly glorified, yet they have a longing for the union of their bodies, for the perfecting of Christ's mystical body, and for the union of all the members in a soul and body with the head, so Christ considered as Mediator, God-man in heaven hath a longing and holy desire which agrees with his office, and is a qualification thereof, and doth no ways interrupt his happiness, that what concerns his elect may be perfected; therefore it is said in the verse before, He shall see of the travel of his soul, and shall be satisfied; importing that it is a new satisfaction to him, to have a sinner brought to believe in him, and that he was waiting and longing for it. 5thly, He hath an actual waiting, and continuing desire, that what he hath purchased to such and such persons may be applied. And this is not simply to will, for he had that on earth, but a declaring of it in heaven, that such and such things may be good, and made effectual for the behoof of his members, that what he intended, in laying down his life, may be brought to pass. It is the Mediator God-man willing it; whose will, as man, being perfectly conformable to the will of God, cannot be gainsaid in whatsoever he willeth for the persons given him; and this is answerable to that, John xvii. 24. Father, I will that these whom thou hast given me, may be with me, where I am, &c. I will that such and such things engaged to me for them may be made good, that such and such persons be pardoned and brought safely through, that they may be preserved from temptation, may have their prayers heard; that they may be made to persevere, and may be glorified; so that we cannot imagine a case wherein God's people have need, and a promise in the covenant, but there is an actual willingness in Christ to have the need supplied, and the promise applied, according to the terms of the covenant. 6thly, We may consider it here, not only Christ's willing that such a thing be done, but his effectual doing of it. And as this is a part of his intercession, so it holds him forth to be a noble intercessor. Compare John xiv. 13, 16, 26. and xv. 26. and xvi. 7. In chap. xiv. verse 13. he says, Whatever ye ask in my name I will do; which we suppose respects Christ as Mediator, to be trusted as great Lord-deputy in our nature, to answer the prayers of his people, when put up according to the will of God. Chapter xvi. verse 26. speaks of the Father's sending the Comforter, and chap. xv. 26. of the Mediator's sending the Comforter; so doth chap. xvi. 7. in one place it is, What ye ask, I will do; and in another place it is, that the Father will do, it is all one; but it is to shew, that what the Father doth, he will do it by the Son the Mediator, and he will actually perform it. And these three expressions, I will pray the Father, and I will send, and the Father will send, hold forth this, that as the Father doth by the Son, so this is a part of Christ's intercession, effectually to procure and send to us what we have need of. 7thly, In all this there is in the man Christ an adoration of the Father, which, though it be not such as is unsuitable to his exalted and glorified state, yet is every way becoming him that is man, and in that respect, is at his Father's right hand. I shall only say further here, that tho' we cannot tell how he interceeds, yet by his being in heaven, we may confidently expect it will be performed from the man Christ, from him who is God-man in one person; and so his intercession with the Father is his actual procuring, and doing such a thing, and that not as God simply, but as Mediator; therefore these two words are put in the forecited expressions, Whatsoever ye ask in my name, I will do it, that the Father may be glorified in the Son, and whom the Father will send in my name; that is, by virtue of my procurement, by virtue of my sacrifice and intercession; and the sending of the Comforter shews, that it is performed by him that is God-man, out of the respect he hath to his members, and on the account of his office, which he pursues for their edification; and so there is enough to answer the question, and afford abundant consolation to his people, which is the next Use.

Use 2. To shew the sweet consolation that flows from this part of Christ's office: O! what favouriness and unsearchable riches are in this part of his name? That our Lord Jesus, as intercessor, appears in the presence of God for us. We shall speak here to these five things, 1. Wherein this is comfortable? or to the extent of it. 2. To the advantages that follow on it. 3. To the grounds of this consolation, which are confirmations of it. 4. To this, at what times, and particular occasions the people of God may, and ought in a special manner to make use of, and comfort themselves in it. And, 5. On what terms this consolation is allowed, that they grow not vain, and proud of it.

For the first, Our Lord's intercession gives a four-fold ground for consolation, that makes it wonderful. 1st, In its universality, as to the persons to whom it is extended; not indeed to all men in the world, but to all that will make use of it; and though it were simply of universal extent to all men in the world,

yet it would comfort none but such as made use of it. And that vanity of the Arminians, that extends Christ's death, and intercession to all, can truly say no more for solid comfort; for they are forced to say, that Christ died, and intended his death for many that will never receive good of him; but we say all that he intended should have good of his death, do receive the intended good of it. Yet we say, that whoever will make use of him, shall have good both of his death and his intercession; so Heb. vii. 25. He is able to save to the uttermost, all that come unto God through him; though the cause seemed to be desperate, and the sentence pronounced, Cursed is he that continues not in all things written in the law, yet he is able to save them; therefore, 1 John ii. 2. it is said, If any man sin, O! strange words, we have an Advocate. What! an advocate for any man? Yea, for any man that will make use of him: For as we shewed before, though it is true that his intercession is bounded to his elect, yet it is as true, that he refuses no cause that is rightly given him to plead; If any man sin we have an Advocate: He will not say to such poor souls, I will not be for you, I have done all that I can do, but it is against me; neither will he stand hard for a reward; he will not say, I will have this or that ere I undertake your cause for you; but if any man sin; if any man see his need, and will employ him, whether he be a great man or mean man, whether he be poor or rich, bound or free, whether he be an old sinner that has lived in security, hypocrisy, or prophanity, or be a secure professor, whether he be young or old; if any of you all that are here will come to him, he will not refuse to be employed by you: By him therefore, as the apostle exhorts, Heb. xiii. 15. let us offer praise to God continually, and as praise, so the sacrifice of other duties, and they shall be accepted; as the offer of the gospel runs universally, and excludes none but those, that by their unbelief exclude themselves, so his intercession runs universally. If any man sin, and will employ him, he is an Advocate at hand. And seeing it is Christ, and Christ as intercessor for transgressors, that we are speaking of, as the ground of sinners consolation, let me desire you, as I go along, to remember, that this word speaks to you, men and women; and if there be any of you that have a bad cause to plead, any debt that ye would fain be freed of, any sin to be pardoned, or your peace to be made with God, here is an Advocate, and the very best, offering even himself to be employed: Such an Advocate, as it is said, John xi. I thank thee, Father, for I know thou hearest me always: This was true while he was on earth, and will be true to the end of the world.

2dly, The extent of this consolation appears in respect of all cases. As his intercession secludes no person that will make use of him, so it secludes no case, tho' it look like a lost cause, and though the conscience had pronounced the sentence; God is greater than the conscience, and can loose from it, tho' the act were past in the law, he can cancel it. And here comes in the triumph, Rom. viii. 33, 34. Who shall lay any thing to the charge of God's elect? It is God that justifies. Will the devil, the law, the conscience, or any thing lay ought to the charge of the man whom God justifies? No; why so? It is Christ that died: But that is not all; alas! may the soul say, how shall I have the benefit of Christ's death? I cannot apply it, and make use of it; he answers that, he is also risen again, who is even at the right hand of God, and there maketh intercession for us; to wit, that his purchase may be applied, and there needs no more, you will have no more, ye can seek no more, and that closes the triumph. There is no sin before, nor after conversion, no sin of ignorance, no sin against light, no enemy, no temptation, whatever it be, but this word answers all, Who can lay any thing to the charge of God's elect? Where Christ takes the sinner's case in hand, who will stand up against him, him, he is too strong a party. If Satan stands at the High-priest's hand, it is the Lord that rebukes him, Zech. iii. he as it were puts him from the bar. 3dly, The extent of this consolation appears, in respect of the degree, and height of the perfection of the salvation that comes by Christ's intercession, to all that make use of him in all cases; Heb. vii. 15. He is able to save to the uttermost. The word is very significant, he is able to save perfectly, to perfection, and to perfection at the height of perfection; and what more would you have? He can save from corruption, and put you without the reach of it; he can save from wrath that it shall not come near you; he can save from all the effects of sin and wrath; he will not leave a tear on the cheek of any of his own e'er all be done; and this is the ground of it, For he lives for ever, to make intercession for us. If any should say, he may save from one sin, but not from another, or he may bring me on some part of the way to heaven, and then leave me there, it is folly, says the apostle, to think so; For he is able to save to the uttermost, because he lives for ever to make intercession. Although he died but once, yet that cannot mar the application of the benefits purchased by it; for he is intercessor, and he that procured thy entring in the way, will carry thee on in it; he that procured a sanctified conviction to come in, will go thro' with it; he that procured thy justification, and pardon of sin, will also apply it to thy conscience, and bring forth an intimation of it, when he thinks fit, and sanctify thee thoroughly. And this is indeed great consolation to a sinner, that he who hath begun the work will perfect it, and he will not leave it till it be at such a height of perfection, as it cannot be desired to be any higher. 4thly, The extent of this consolation is such, that it reacheth to all times. There is not a believer in any place or case, that is wrestling with any difficulty that can come wrong to Christ; he is ever in readiness to be employed. There is not an hour nor moment that he hath his door shut; he died once, but now lives for ever, to die no more, and he lives for ever to make intercession; he is entred into immortality, to make effectual what he hath undertaken in favour of his people; he is always at the bar; and when his own people are but little employing him, he is minding their affairs night and day, watching over them every moment. See Luke xxii. where the Lord saith, Peter, Satan, hath sought to winnow you, but I have prayed for thee, that thy faith fail not. Satan gave in a bill against Peter, when he knew not of it, but the Lord repelled it. The greatest cheat, or the most subtile adversary, that steals out a false action, cannot circumvent him; he is still waiting at the bar that nothing come in against his people to their prejudice; and if it do come in, it is that he may crush it in the first motion. O! how doth the consolation of believers stream out here! He will not cry, nor lift up, nor cause his voice to be heard on high! a bruised reed will he not break, and the smoking flax will he not quench, until he bring forth judgment unto truth; He will not contend, nor say man or woman, how is this, that thou hast put thyself in the mire, and wouldst have me to take thee out of it, that thou bringest a broken plea to me, and seekest of me to right it? He will not ask, whether ye have money; all his employment is free; nor will he put you back till to-morrow, nor bid you wait till another time; morning and evening, and at midnight he is ready; and when the elect sinner hath little thought, he is watching over his need, preventing many temptations, keeping from many ill turns, casting many accusations from the bar, that the devil and the law put in. Therefore study his offices more, and this among the rest. We much wrong him, in not studying of them, and not acquainting ourselves with them, that we may feed upon them. Himself unfold to us his name, and to him be praise.

O! That sinners were seriously considering how much they are obliged to Christ! he hath, in the former words, poured out his soul unto death for sinners, and was wounded for transgressors; and yet that was not all; tho' sin was our Lord's death, he hath not fallen out with sinners, put having got the victory over all enemies, and sit down at the right-hand of God, he makes intercession, and to make it the more full, it is said, he makes intercession for transgressors: All his offices have an eye to sin and sinners, and this part of his office among others.

We began to speak of an use of comfort that flows from this; and truly, if any doctrine be comfortable, this is; that sinners have an advocate with the Father. What would sinners do, when their peace is broke, and there is a door shut betwixt God and them, and he is withdrawn from them, and the conscience is wakened, and they cannot think on God, but it is troublesome to them, if they had not a friend to go to, with whom the Father cannot but be well-pleased?

The consolation being a main part of the use of this doctrine, and the ground of believers boldness with God, in discoursing of it, we proposed five things to be spoken to. 1. To shew the largeness and extent of the consolation that flows from this ground, and of this we spake. 2. The particular advantages that the scripture attributes to Christ's intercession, and the consolation that is in them. 3. The particular times, when especially believers are called to make use of this consolation. 4. Some grounds for assuring them to make use of it. And, 5. Some caveats, or advertisements to them that would warrantably comfort themselves from it.

To proceed now, to speak to these last four things. 1. The particular advantages that the scriptures attribute to Christ's intercession; and if we view them, we shall find that there is nothing that may be useful to a believer, either as to a particular or publick mercy, but it is knit to Christ's intercession.

1st, For private mercies. 1. Look to the beginning and growth of our spiritual life, and the pouring out of the spirit; it is made the fruit of Christ's intercession, John xiv. 16. I will pray the Father, and he shall send the Comforter; and John xvi. If I go not away, the Comforter will not come. This is the consolation of a believer labouring under deadness of spirit, barrenness and unfruitfulness, that the pouring out of the spirit is a remedy of that, and the pouring out of the spirit is a fruit of Christ's intercession. It is this that procures the first conviction of the spirit to the elect lying in a state of nature; it is this that continues these convictions, and procures the spirit's quickening them, John xvi. 8. If it should then be asked, how a person lying in the dark state of nature has any good? It is answered, that it is Christ's intercession that answers the end. 2. It is from Christ's intercession, that we are kept from many temptations, or when they assault, that they prevail not utterly over us. The devil lies always in wait, and we are often secure; but our Lord Jesus, watcheth the rebound of the temptation, and wards it off, as to the designed prejudice, Luke xxii. 32. Simon, Simon, Satan hath desired that he may have you, that he may winnow you, but I have prayed for thee, that thy faith fail not. There are many temptations that he keeps off, that they beat not on us, and when they assault us, he breaks the power of them, that the believers sinks not under them, hence it is that we are kept standing.

Otherwise what would become of us? When David fell in adultery, and Peter denied his master, what would have become of them, had it not been for this? There would be no living for us, in the multitude of temptations, if he were not interceding for us. What could we foresee of Satan's snares? What strength have we, weak and ignorant as we are, to resist temptations? What could we do with corruption, when it rises like a flood upon us, and Satan forceth his assaults, as if he were speaking with man's voice or mouth, bidding us do this or that? But there is an intercessor that pleads our cause. 3. We have by this intercession the preventing of many judgments temporal and spiritual; when the axe is laid to the root of the tree, and it is found barren, and justice cries, and the command comes out, Cut it down, why cumbereth it the ground? How comes it, that the axe strikes not? Why is it not hewed down? Because there is an efficacy in Christ's intercession for sparing of it a little longer; as it is, Luke xiii. 6. The dresser of the vineyard says, spare it for this year, and it is granted. O! we should have a most sinful and miserable life, if there were not an intercessor at God's right hand. 4. Disposition for duty, and help in the performance of duty flows from his intercession; it is this that makes us pray, and that gives us boldness in prayer, and in other duties, that there is such an High-priest over the house of God, as it is, Heb. x. 19, 20, 21. It is this that gives us ground of approaching to God, and to expect a hearing; and as it is, Luke xiii. 7, 8. it is digging and pains that makes the barren fig-tree fruitful. 5. It flows from this, that our prayers are heard, though there be much infirmity in them, and that they are not cast back in our faces as dung, but are made savoury to God; it is through the efficacy of his intercession. We have a type of this, Rev. viii. 4, 5. where John sees an angel come and stand at the altar, 'having a golden censer, and there was given

' unto him much incense, that he should offer it up, ' with the prayers of all saints, and the smoke of the
 ' incense which came up with the prayers of the saints
 ' ascended up before God.' It was savoury and acceptable to God, and made the prayers of all the saints acceptable. For the stress of God's accepting their prayers is laid on the smoke of his incense; it is he that takes the mangled and maimed prayers of his people, and presents them to God; and when they would be cast back as the supplication of an enemy, he, as great master of requests, through the acceptation that he hath with God, makes them acceptable;
 we should have no ground to pray with confidence, nor to be heard with acceptance, if there were not a golden censer in his hand. 6. We have from his intercession an answer to all accusations. There is much debt on our score; the law pursues hard, and curseth us for our habitual enmity, and all the particular acts of it, and his intercession is the last defence on which the triumph of faith rises by steps. Rom. viii. 33.
Who shall lay any thing to the charge of God's elect? Is it because they want a charge? No, for there is the devil, the law, and the conscience to charge them; but it is God that justifies, Who shall condemn? It is Christ that died, yea, rather that is risen again, who is at the right hand of God, and maketh intercession for us: We have a High-priest there that hath paid our debt, and pleads that the application of his purchase may be made good, and, who I pray, will lay any thing to our charge in that court where God is Judge, and Christ is Advocate? 7. More particularly, our Lord, by his intercession, taketh away the guilt of our holy things; for when we approach to God in worship, there is a carnalness and pollutedness in the best things we do, much irreverence, much unbelief, much want of humility, zeal, sincerity, and tenderness; so that all our righteousnesses are but as filthy rags: But the high-priest, Exod. xxxviii. 28. hath on his forehead, holiness

holiness to the Lord: And his office is, To bear the iniquity of the holy things of the children of Israel, that they may be accepted before the Lord; and in this he was a type of Christ the great High-priest going in unto heaven, to make intercession for his people, who bears not only their iniquities, but the iniquity of their holy things. Aaron answers for them, as the type, our Lord Jesus as the anti-type, he being eminently holiness to the Lord, and having holiness on his forehead, and being so well-pleasing to the Father. However our prayers and praises, and other parts of service be but little worth, yet he makes them acceptable, and procures that they be not rejected, when he is for this end employed and made use of. 8. We shall find, that strength to bear through under a cross, and a good deliverance from under the cross, comes from him, as intercessor. O! so attentive as he is, when his own people are under the cross, his bowels are then moved, though not as they were on earth, yet certainly they want not their own holy motions, suitable to the glorious estate whereunto he is exalted. Therefore, Acts ix. he cries from heaven, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? And Stephen, when stoned to death, sees him standing at the right hand of God, executing this part of his priestly office; one part thereof is to keep off a cross, and another part thereof is to help to have it honourably borne, and to have victory over it. 9. Our perseverance in the faith, and perfect glorification are fruits of Christ's intercession, so that his own people cannot but persevere, and be glorified, because he interceeds for them. This is it that is spoken to several times, John xvii. especially verses 15. and 24. In the 15. verse, I pray for them, that they be kept from the evil: He prays for them, that they may be kept from the evil of sin especially; he prays for them, that they may be kept that they fall not from the truth: And verse 24. Father, I will that those whom thou hast given me, be where I am, to behold my my glory. That longing and effectual desire and will of his, presented by him in heaven, is continuing still effectual for all the saints in the church militant. There is ground of quietness and comfort from his intercession, and by virtue of it they have hope, that not only present snares and temptations shall not prevail, but those that are to come; therefore the apostle, Rom. viii. 38. to his speaking of Christ's intercession, subjoins his highest triumph, I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life, principalities, nor powers, things present, nor things to come; and because it is impossible to number all things, he says, nor any other creature shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord. Now, if all these be put together, besides many more that may be gathered from scripture, what wants a believer for his own private and particular consolation, which this one word, that Christ is an intercessor, doth not answer?

But 2. There is not only consolation for a believers particular condition from this ground, but also in reference to the public case of God's church. There are four things especially, that seem very heavy to the church, and public work of God; in reference to all which we will find consolation from this ground. The-1. Is the fear of a scarcity, or weakness of the public ministry; that being the great gift which he hath given, for the edifying of his body, and it being a prejudice to the church, when she hath not pastors, according to God's own heart: But compare Ps. lxxviii. 18. with Eph. iv. 8, 12, 13, 14. and we will find that his intercession answers all that fear; in the Psalm, it is said, Thou hast ascended on high, thou hast led captivity captive, thou hast received gifts for men, supposes his seeking of, or making suit for them, or as the word is, thou hast received gifts in the man, that is, being in our nature, he procured them: And Ephes. iv. It is said, he gave gifts to men; and compare these two places with a third, to wit, Acts i, 4. Where he bids bids his apostles tarry at Jerusalem till they see the promised spirit; and immediately, after his ascension, as it is, Acts ii. He poured it out, which abode on them, in the likeness of cloven tongues of fire: it is likewise said, John xi. 39. that the spirit was not given, for Jesus was not yet glorified; All which shews an influence that Christ's ascension hath on the pouring out of the spirit, and on the gifts given to men, whether ministers, or others: There is nothing amongst men generally less esteemed of, than a ministry, some would have none at all, others would have them of such a stamp as would please and humour them, but our Lord hath received gifts to give unto men; and he that poured out such gifts on the apostles, and others, hath what gifts he pleaseth, and sees needful for his churches edification yet to give: and that he gives such gifts to men, that his people are not praying much for, whence is it, but for his intercession? Therefore, Revel. i. We will find that he delights in this property, as a piece of his spiritual state, and grandeur, that he holds the stars in his right hand, such is his respect to them, and it is his right to dispose of them. 2. It is a great difficulty to the church of God, to think of the mighty opposition that is made by enemies: Mahomet, Heathens, Antichrist, false brethren, threatening to swallow up the little flock, the church of Christ, who is like a bush burning with fire and not consumed: But for this there is consolation in Christ's intercession, according to that word, Heb. x. 13. He sat down on the right hand of God, from henceforth expecting, till his enemies be made his footstool; He hath this for his suit at the Father's bar, and is backing it; upon this it followed, and as a fruit of it, that all the first persecutions were broken; on this it hath come to pass, that Antichrist's kingdom is tottering; and it is on this ground, that his bringing down, and utter ruin, will be accomplished. Hence it is most emphatically said, 1 Cor. xv. 24. that he must reign till he hath put all enemies under his feet : According to the promise made by Jehovah to him, Psal. cx. 1. The Lord said to my Lord, sit thou on my right hand, till I make thine enemies thy foot-stool. He cannot but be an intercessor, and if so, his enemies must come down. For who, I pray, will be able to stand, when he gives in his complaint against them? who will plead Antichrist's cause, and other persecutors, when he appears against them? And he is so certain of his enemies being made his foot-stool, that he is waiting till he see it done; he must reign till then, and disappoint all the malice and might of devils and men.

3. It is a difficulty to the church and people of God, to think on such great confusions as are in the world; there are but few judicatories that are for Christ; but few governors higher or lower that do consult his honour, or regard him; it is others that have the throne and court, and the managing of affairs, than friends and favourers of his interest, for most part. But here the consolation lies, that there is a court in heaven, that gives out orders, where the church hath an advocate constantly attending, where the devil and the world hath none: Jesus Christ is the church's Advocate, and intercessor there. Daniel chap. x. 13. hath a word to this purpose; 'The prince of the kingdom of Persia withstood me one and twenty days, but Michael the chief prince came to help me:' And verse 21. 'There is none in all the court of Persia that holdeth with me in these things, but Michael your prince.' The great intercessor was at court, looking that nothing went wrong, seeing that no decree were past to the prejudice of the people of God, and his work, in the time when they were building the temple. 'He,' Zech. vi. 13. is said, 'to build the temple of the Lord; to bear the glory, and to be a priest, sitting and ruling on his throne,' having the government committed to him. What hazard then is there here, when heaven guides all, when the church

church hath an Advocate at the court, to see, as I said, that nothing go wrong; when Michael the prince is there, and sees all the acts and decrees of the court, and readeth them, yea, draweth them, and looks well that there be nothing in them hurtful to his church? And, O! may we not, and should we not thank God for this? 4. A fourth thing that troubles the church of God, is the abounding of offence in herself, and the spreading of error, which like a flood threatneth to drown the church; and great stormy winds come, that are like to blow down the house of God; offences and stumblings abound, and errors, which, I just now said, as a flood are like to drown all. When the devil is put from the throne, and gets not violence acted, he turns about, and falleth on another way, and vomits out this flood of error, to devour the woman and her child; but our Lord hath a vote here also. After the persecution of the heathens is over, Revelation vii. 1, 2. John sees an angel ascending from the east, the great lord keeper, or chancellor of the Father's council, the supreme deputy over all under officers, that hath the keeping of the great seal of the living God, and there is nothing valid till it be sealed by him. And mark the time when he appears; it is when the winds are holden, and ready to blow, as verse 1. but he cries with a loud voice, 'Hurt not the earth, nor the sea, nor the trees, till we have sealed the servants of God in their fore-heads:' Stay, saith he, a little, ere these winds blow, that will carry the most part off their standing, ere that delusion go forward, there are some servants of God that must be marked, and put without the reach of the hazard, and then the wind shall have leave to blow. What reason then of anxiety is there, or could be here, if the solid and lively faith of this intercessor, and Advocate, his being in heaven, and thus interceeding, were in our hearts?

2dly, As to the particular times and occasions, when the people of God should more especially make use of this ground of consolation, and comfort themselves in it. (I speak not of Christ's intercession simply, but of the consolation that flows from it,) 1. In their languid and lifeless conditions, when the body of death comes in on them, like a wave of the sea, and is ready as it were to drown them; they ought to comfort themselves in this, that they have an intercessor that can rebuke that. When temptation is violent, and a person fears he be undone, he hath somewhat here to hold himself by, Jesus Christ is intercessor. He prays that my graces fail not, that my faith and patience be not undone, that the devil have not his will of me; the man would be desperate, if he were not in heaven, and interceding; but he gathers confidence from this ground, and says, 'I shall not die, but live, and see the salvation of God; for he is able to save to the uttermost, all that come unto God through him, seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for them:' And therefore, although I cannot be out of the reach of this temptation, yet he can rebuke it, and break the force of it. And hence are those comfortable words, Heb. ii. ult. For that he himself suffered, and was tempted, he is able to succour them that are tempted. Sometimes it will not reach a believer's condition, that Christ suffered; but this doth, when he comes and finds that he was tempted. It is true, there was no corruption in him, and temptations had no sinful influence on him, therefore the more comfort to us; he is the stronger to overcome them in us. Yet he was set upon and assaulted by the temptation; he was tempted, and this is a consolation. When Joshua the high priest is in his duty, Zech. iii. and the devil is at his right hand to resist him, and mar him in it, and he can do, or say little himself, the Lord charges him with authority from disturbing his servant in his work. A great consolation it is, when

when the temptation is strong, and we weak, when the devil is violent, and we are despairing to resist him, that there is a High-priest at hand, whose office is to do it. A 2^d time is, when accusations are very fresh, when the charge of ones debt is given in, long and large, and the law is severe in exacting, and justice in pressing hard, and the conscience cannot deny, nor resist, and the man hath nothing to pay his debt, but he is like to be hauled to the prison, and there is none to undertake for him; then come in those words, 1 John ii. 1, 2. I write these things to you, that ye sin not; I give none a dispensation to sin, but if any man sin, we have an Advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous. And this is the ground of Paul's triumph so often mentioned, Rom. viii. 34. Who shall lay any thing to the charge of God's elect? It is God that justifies, &c. Though the charge should be given in, what is the matter, there is a way to be freed from it, there is an Advocate at the right hand of God in heaven, who became surety for, and paid the elects debt, and is now interceding for them; and who can loose the cause when he pleads it? And here he quiets, and comforts himself, giving a defiance to challenges, and all that can be libelled against him. A 3^d time and occasion is, under a cross condition, when Christians have the world on their tops, and there is confusion in public things, and there is darkness and indistinctness in our private condition; it ought to comfort us, that we have an Advocate in heaven, who pleads our cause, and will not despise the suit of the poor and needy. A 4th time is, when we ourselves cannot interceed for ourselves, when we pray, but our prayers are much mangled, and little worth, and we think shame to look upon them; we would then look on what account our prayers are put up, if on the account of Christ's intercession, a sigh, a groan, a broken word, nay, a breathing will be accepted. The intercessor hath his own incense to perfume it with,

and it is accepted on the weight that it hath from him; and though our prayer be but as the shadow of prayer, if there be honesty in it, it is a comfort, it will be accepted on that account; whatsoever ye shall ask the Father in my name I will do. And Revel. viii. he accepts the prayers of all saints, the weakest as well as the best; for the best goes not up but by his censer, and incense, and the weakest goes up that same way. And there is in some respect no distinction of believers, and of their fervent, or not fervent prayers there, if sincere, the fervour of Christ's intercession, and the favour of his incense makes all go up, and be accepted, because the reason of God's hearing of our prayers is not in us, else he could hear none of them; but it is in his intercession, which is of equal worth, and extent to all sincere prayers of sound believers; he is able to save to the uttermost, all that come unto God through him; though there be no ability nor worth in themselves, because he lives for ever to make intercession for them. But the two last things will clear this yet more.

3dly. Though this may seem strange, yet it is true, if we consider the grounds warranting us to make use of his intercession, and to draw this consolation from it; and they are four. 1. That his intercession supposes a defect in us, a libel and charge given in against us, else what need we to have an advocate and intercessor? If our plea were just and good as from ourselves, we needed not one to undertake for us, the judge would absolve us; but the defects that are in us, make necessary this part of his office, which supposes us to have infirmities, else we needed not an high-priest, if we were like Adam in his innocency, for he wanted not an intercessor; and therefore in the text it is for the transgressors that he makes intercession; and 1 John ii. 2. If any man sin, we have an advocate, &c. all the stress of Christ's intercession, and the grounds wherein he pleads, are in himself; and

and therefore none need to stand back, because there is nothing in themselves ; We have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous, and he is the propitiation : Christ hath in him a fulness to pay the debt himself, and he pleads on that, and nothing in the creature. He says not, let them be pardoned, because they have not sin, nor because they have such and such qualifications, but because I have been a propitiation for them, I have payed their debt ; therefore he is called the righteous, because he hath reason for that which he seeks ; he hath payed for what he seeks, and therefore it cannot but be granted. 3. There is a freedom in the application of all, the application is free grace every way, and that is clear from the parable of the barren fig-tree. What could the tree say, when justice pleaded it should be cut down ? There is nothing in it to procure a delay, but the gardiner stands up and says spare it, and he will take pains on it, and apply what is needful. Causes are not here cast back because the party is poor, nor because he hath much debt on his score. No, If any man sin, he hath an advocate, the thing is obtained without money, and without price. Would ye then have a priest that suits you well ? Ye shall have him, and have him freely ; if ye employ him to undertake for you, he will do it freely, and it is his honour so to do. 4. It is free and effectual, it cannot miscarry ; for who pleads ? Is it not the Son ? before whom pleads he ? It is before his own Father, who heareth him always ; for whom doth he plead ? It is for them who are the Father's own elect, and his also ; Thine they were, and thou gavest them me ; and all mine are thine, and thine are mine. It is for them whom the Father loves as well as he ; what does he seek and plead for ? for that which is covenanted ; and he pleads for it, according to the terms of the covenant. Therefore it is sure, that though heaven and earth may be mixed, and overturned, yet none can loose a link here. It is

is impossible, but what he interceeds for, he must obtain; and for whom he interceeds, he prevails, and that is for all that employ them.

4thly, For advertisement or caveat, it may be asked here, if all may comfort themselves in Christ's intercession? Some will think, that were well indeed, but on the contrary, it would make the consolation of all unsure; therefore there are four qualifications of a person that may, and only may warrantably take the consolation whereof we have spoken. 1. It is a person that hath betaken himself to Christ's satisfaction; for there are two parts of the priestly office, his satisfaction and his intercession, and there is no dividing of them, nor making use of them, but in the right order. First he satisfies, and then interceeds; we must receive him in this order. 1. In his satisfaction to divine justice, and it is on this ground that we must found our righteousness, and plead for absolution; and whoever have made this use of his satisfaction may, in the 2d place, comfort themselves in his intercession, because it is grounded on his satisfaction, 1 John ii. 2. for whom he interceeds, for these he is a propitiation, and he is a propitiation for all who by faith hath betaken themselves to him. This is the very hinge of our consolation, even to acknowledge our debt, and betake ourselves to him, according to the covenant trusting for salvation on that ground. 2. It is those who are endeavouring after and practising the duties of holiness, wrestling with a body of death, and exercising themselves to godliness, that may warrantably comfort themselves in Christ's intercession; as Paul, who, Rom. vii. being put to it in the conflict with his corruption, comforts himself thus, I thank God through Jesus Christ our Lord. Though they be sorely harrassed with a corrupt nature, yet they may expect deliverance, through virtue of his intercession: therefore Rev. viii. Christ's incense (as I have often said) and the saints prayers go up together. Laziness and security hath not this consolation; but if a person be praying, and be serious, though weak in it, he hath an advocate, who, when it comes to be asked, what shall be thought of such an one's sacrifice? he pleads that it may be accepted. 3. It is the person that not only is aiming to do duty, but is denied to it, laying no stress upon it, despairing to get victory over corruption in his own strength, or to have his prayers heard through any worth that is in them; and not daring to trust himself, but leaving all he does at Christ's feet, to make it acceptable; which leads to the 4th thing requisite, (viz.) when persons, whether their duties be of worth or not, Jesus Christ is made by them the end of all; they lay the stress on him as to the performance of them, and to have them accepted when they are performed, and without him all they do, would ye hopeless in their esteem. This was typified in the peoples giving the sacrifices to the priest to be offered; and though it were but two turtle doves, or two young pigeons, they were brought to the priest, as well as other sacrifices. But such as consider not the iniquities and sinfulness that is in themselves, and adventure to go to God without him, cannot lay claim to this consolation, which runs always on this ground; Heb. vii. 25. He is able to save to the uttermost all that come unto God through him, seeing he ever lives to make intercession for them. Is there not then ground of consolation, and such as there is reason to bestow a sermon upon, to teach us how to be clear in it, and how to use it? You that seclude yourselves from this consolation, O! Ye reject a good life for yourselves, and hazard your own cause, that will most certainly go against you, because ye put it not in the right hand; which the Lord give you wisdom to amend, and give us all the right use of this through Jesus Christ.

S E R M O N LXIX.

Verse 12.—And he made intercession for the transgressors.

IT would be a very great consolation, and a main furtherance in all the parts of religion, to have this solidly believed, that Christ Jesus, who is the express image of his Father's person, and the brightness of his glory, is now in heaven in our nature, and hath it for his work to be interceding for transgressors. We are every day reaping the good of this intercession, in reference to many evils that are kept off us, and in reference to many mercies bestowed on us, that we pray not at all, or but little for. And we never come to hear a sermon, but we are obliged to it; it being a peculiar fruit of his intercession, that gifts are given to men, and that the gospel is sent through the earth; and if ever any receive good from a sermon, it is by virtue of this intercession, seeing he hath said, that he will pray the Father, and that he will send the Comforter; and whenever we come to hear a sermon, there should be a revising of the thoughts of Christ's intercession, and a stirring up of ourselves to have the faith of it lively in its exercise.

That which we spake to the last day, was concerning the comfort that flows from this; and indeed if any doctrine be comfortable, this must be comfortable, that we have such a friend in the court of heaven, invested with this office of an Advocate and intercessor for us.

Use 3. Of exhortation, seeing there is such an office where-with Jesus Christ is invested, and such an officer that bears this office, to be an Advocate for sinners, then sinners should be exhorted to learn to improve, and to make use of this Advocate, and of his office. Since he hath this office of an intercessor, O! do not despise such a mercy, neglect not such an advantage, but learn to make use of him, and in your worship and applications to God, approach by, and through him. The ground of this use of exhortation is clear in the words, and from the nature of the thing; for if Christ Jesus bear these offices, and if he bear them for us, then sure we should improve them. If he be a King, we should make use of him, for subduing sin in us; if a Prophet, we should improve that office, for attain-

ing of light, and saving knowledge from him; and if he be a Priest to satisfy divine justice, and to make intercession, we should improve both parts of that office. The necessity of our improving of Christ's intercession appears from this, if we consider in what terms we stand with God. Have we any boldness or access of ourselves? Is not the door shut against us? And is there not a stated controversy standing betwixt God and us? And can we have any access but by his means? The necessity of it is further clear, from the order that God hath laid down in the way of his administration of grace; why, I pray, hath he appointed a Mediator and intercessor? Is it not for a good reason? even for consolation and encouragement of sinners to draw near, who, if they be in earnest, cannot but be affected with fear to approach unto God; and is it possible to come unto God, and not through this door? and is it not ingratitude to neglect it, seeing he hath contrived this new and living way of access unto him?

But to discourse more particularly of this matter, which is as difficult a thing to speak of aright, and to practise suitably, as any part of religion, if especially he himself teach us not; for sometimes we will make use of his sacrifice and satisfaction, when we know not how to make use of his intercession; for either we will do all ourselves, and so forget the intercessor, or we will do nothing, and give it over as desperate, as if our great concern were hopeless, and as if it were needless, or useless to lay any stress on Christ's intercession. And thus whether we apprehend ourselves to be in better, or in worse case, he is much neglected. That therefore we may the better know how to make use of Christ's intercession; we shall, 1st, In the general, shew what it is to improve it. 2^{dly}, Speak to some particular cases, wherein it is in a special manner to be improved. 3^{dly}, Satisfy and remove some objections, or answer some questions that may be moved about it. 4^{thly}, We shall give some characters of one that is serious and tender, in improving of his intercession.

For the first, it is indeed a thing so difficult to improve Christ's intercession aright, that we cannot easily tell how to conceive of it, it being a considerable part of the mystery of faith, to go to God by a Mediator and intercessor; however, we shall, 1st, Shew some mistakes that are to be eschewed.

3. We shall illustrate it by some similitudes, for the further use of it. 1. Then, when we speak of improving Christ's intercession, and of going to God by him, we should shun these mistakes. First, Beware of thinking that there is a going to the Mediator in a distinct, or in a different manner from what is in going to God, for he is God; or, that we may go to God at one time, and to the Mediator at another time, beseeching him that he would use his interest with God for us, as a courtier makes friends with the king, the offended party for a rebel, we should beware of this: For it divides in our apprehension the Godhead, that cannot be divided; for if we consider the Mediator as the object of our worship, he is to be considered as God; though we may, and are also jointly to consider him as Mediator, and on that account to make use of him: And if we consider him as God, we must consider him as the same God with the Father, and the Holy Ghost; but to have this imagination of him, that we are to speak to him, as to another party, or not as God, is to make him another thing, which is unbecoming that apprehension, and estimation that we ought to have of the unity of the blessed Godhead. 2dly, Beware of thinking that there is a greater facility or easiness to have access to the Mediator, than to have access to God, or that it is more easy to have access to the second person of the trinity, than to the first, or third person. We are afraid that there be mistakes here also, as if the Mediator were more easy to be dealt with than the majesty of God; or as if there were more easy access unto him; whereas he being the same God, and so considered, there are the same grounds, whereon sinners may have access to the Father, as to the Son; for if we look on a sinner repenting, and believing, he is as welcome to the Father as to the Son; but if we consider the sinner as not repenting and believing, he is neither acceptable to the Father, nor to the Son. It is true, the Son being considered as man, there is a sympathy, that the second person united to our nature hath, which is not in God abstractly considered, yet this is not so to be understood, as if the mercy of the Mediator, having the two natures so united in his person were of larger extent than the mercy of God, or as if he could be merciful when God is not: For there cannot be a greater mercy than that which is infinite, and this is the essential attribute of the Father, Son and Holy Ghost; only this sympathy in the Mediator's is to be considered, to strengthen and confirm our faith, in our application to God, that we have him to approach to in our nature; but it is not to give us any new ground of having easier access to Christ than to God: But, asⁱ we said, only to confirm our faith, in having access to God. Hence it is that Jesus Christ is always proposed as the means, whereby and through whom a sinner comes to God, so that we have access with boldness, not to the Mediator as a distinct party, but to God through and by him: Therefore there is the same common way of application to God, and to Christ, the same covenant and promises, the same exercise of repentance, of faith and of prayer, which gives us access to God, and that gives us access to the Mediator.

3dly, Beware of placing and improving the Mediator's intercession in words, or petitions directed to the Mediator; which I apprehend, is the use that the most part make of his intercession: To put up such petitions as I am afraid to mention, as namely, O! Mediator at the Father's right hand plead for me; as if the Mediator were a distinct party from the Judge, to whom we must speak for interceding with the Judge, which still leads us to look on the Mediator as another different party, or as having other terms whereupon he dealeth with sinners, as if there were another way of making use of him, and of application to him, and on other grounds than of, and to God, the contrary whereof we have shewed; whereas the right improving of his intercession consists rather (as will afterward appear) in faith's application to God in him, and laying stress on his intercession for access and acceptance of our persons and services; when we make it the ground of our address to God, the ground on which we draw near; and this we may and should do, when we name Christ, or pray to him as God, with respect to his office of being intercessors; even as when we look to him by faith, to have sin pardoned, there is a looking to him as God, with respect to his offering and satisfaction to the justice of God, on which account we expect to be pardoned.

But 2dly, To explain this a little more, we shall shew wherein this exercise of faith, in making use of the Mediator's intercession, doth mainly consist, and for the more clear setting forth thereof, we shall speak to these two, 1st, To some things presupposed. 2dly, To some things wherein more properly it consists: To both which we would premise this, that when we spake of making use of Christ's intercession, there are two extremes to be avoided. One is, when persons go to God ignorant of Christ, and do all that they do, as if they were constantly friends with God, and in good terms with him, and had need of none to make their peace, or to keep up, and maintain their peace with God, which is in effect the way laid down in the covenant of works, when Adam was a friend. Another extreme is, when persons go to God by Christ, yet do not lay that stress on his intercession as becomes them; when not only they want confidence, which the other hath, though on a wrong ground, but do not lay the burden on the right shoulder, but go to God faintly and discouragedly, as fearing to trust to Christ's intercession. There is a necessity to guard against both these; for there must be such an use made of Christ's intercession, as we dare not go to God without him, and yet a concurring act of faith, inclining us to go to God by him, and to lay the stress of what we seek and expect, on him, and on his intercession. Now the things that are presupposed to the right improving of Christ's intercession, guard against the first extreme, and these things wherein it properly consists, guard against the other extreme.

First, Then the things presupposed are 1st. A conviction of our natural sinfulness, not only of the distance that is betwixt God and us, but of the quarrel and enmity, and that by our deserving we may justly have the door of access to God shut upon us. That is it that puts the sinner to ask for an intercessor, and to make use of him, as those who have provoked a great person, fear to go to him alone but seek for the mediation of some special friend or favourite.

2^{dly}, There is presupposed a consenting to, and acceptation of Christ's satisfaction, as the ground of our peace with God; for there is no making use of his intercession till this ground be laid, because all the efficacy that is in Christ's intercession, results from and is founded upon his satisfaction, 1 John ii. 2. If any sin, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous, who is the propitiation for our sins: He procures nothing by his intercession, but through the virtue of that blood, which he offered in a sacrifice to satisfy justice. And therefore in improving of his intercession, this method must be followed; there must first be a betaking of ourselves to his satisfaction, as the ground of our peace, whereupon we plead for peace, and for every thing else that we stand in need of; except this be, all the imaginations that we can have of Christ's intercession (as if we would first prevail with Christ, conceiving that he will soon be engaged, and then have hopes of prevailing with God) if his satisfaction be not understood, it will be to no purpose; for as we shewed before, in the first use of this point, he interceeds only for his own people, who are sincere sincere believers in him, and have closed with him in his satisfaction, as we shewed from Rev. viii. it is only the prayers, sighs and groans of all saints that are offered up by him, I mean, none can comfortably conclude, that he interceeds for them, but believers and saints: And therefore till his satisfaction be rested on, as the ground of our peace, we can look for no benefit by his intercession. 3dly, There is beyond this required, the conviction and impression of our own unsuitableness, to keep up friendship and fellowship with God, through our remaining corruption, and the prevailing of temptation, without a Mediator; and withal an approbation of God's way, who hath appointed a Mediator for that end, and a desire to keep up communion with him by a Mediator. So that suppose we were clear, that our sins are pardoned, yet we should know, that this conviction and impression is necessary to induce us to make a daily use of this part of the Mediator's office; for we may have conviction of the first part, that is, that we cannot make our peace without Christ's satisfaction, and yet we may be defective, as to our walking under due conviction of the second, that is, of a necessity of keeping up of our communion with God, by virtue of his intercession; which is, as if a rebel, being reconciled and made a friend, by the procurement of some great person, yet having to do with the king, should not dare to go unto him, without the man that was instrumental in making his peace; or we may allude to Absalom's coming home by Joab's procurement, who was three years at Jerusalem ere he saw his father's face, and had a new dealing with Joab for that end; so it is very suitable to the way of grace, and shews that our being, and standing in grace is free, not to dare to go to God, even when our peace is made, without the Mediator. 4thly, After all this, there is a necessity of the faith of the Mediator, or intercessor, his being at the right hand of God, ready to solicit our cause, through whom we may have access, when there is reason enough in ourselves, why we should be kept at the door; and though we dare not go ourselves alone, yet to adventure to go through him to God. And though this be but the doctrinal faith of the thing in general, yet it is necessarily presupposed, as well as the rest, that when a conviction rises, and the conscience says, how dare thou go to God? Faith may answer, because there is a friend there in our nature; when the sinner is convinced of sin, the conscience accuseth, and the law condemns, and there is some sad expectation of the drawing forth of the sentence;

tence; there is an act of faith that convinces of a Saviour, whose satisfaction, if it be made use of and improved, all will be well. This we say, is necessarily presupposed to the right improving of Christ's intercession.

2dly, These 4. being presupposed, it follows, that we shew what properly it is, to make use of Christ's intercession, or, wherein it consists. And 1. When faith hath laid hold on Christ's satisfaction for peace with God; in the improving of his intercession, there is an act of faith whereby we actually stir up ourselves to approach unto God, upon the stress we lay on his intercession, that when the soul sees itself secluded considered in itself, yet it will go forward trusting to that, so that if an accusation come in it's way, and say, what ground hast thou to look that thou wilt be welcome to God? the soul says, none in myself, but there is a friend before me, with whose satisfaction I have closed for my peace, and I lay this stress on his office, and on God's call to make use of him, that on the ground of his interceding with God, I dare hazard to go forward. Even as if a rebel, after his peace were made, had some business to do with the prince, and hearing that there is a friend at court, yea, the same friend that made his peace, he thinks that a good time, and fit season, to go and present his suit, expecting to succeed through his means: And this keeps always the stress and honour of our obtaining any thing we seek, as a prerogative to Christ, and stop's the person's own mouth, from looking to any thing in itself to boast of, even as the rebel hath no cause to boast of his having a hearing from the prince, but gives the thanks to him who, as he made his peace, so also procured him a hearing, according to those words, Heb. x. 21. Having an High-priest over the house of God, let us draw near with full assurance of faith, expecting a hearing: and that, Heb. iv. 15, 16. Seeing we have an High-priest, who was tempted in all things, like as we are, yet without sin, let us therefore come boldly unto the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy, and find grace to help in time of need. This is the first step of improving Christ's intercession, when the justified sinners is at a stand, on some new accusation for guilt, and dare not go forward, nor adventure to approach unto God, but on this account, that there is a Mediator, and advocate at his right hand whom he may trust to present his suit to God.

2dly, There is an act of faith, as in undertaking, so in expecting and waiting upon God, for obtaining a hearing of our suit, on this account, that Jesus Christ is an intercessor in heaven
for

for such as employ him. And this guards against, both the failings before mentioned, to wit, against anxiety on the one hand, and presumption on the other: against anxiety and fainting, when as there is not only a proposing of our desire, but a waiting for, and expectation of a hearing from God; against presumption, and turning carnal, when the expectation of a hearing is not founded in our own righteousness, but on the intercession of Christ. This is it which we have, Dan. ix. 17. compared with Jonah ii. 4. in the ii. of Jonah 4 verse. he says, Then I said, I am cast out of thy sight, yet will I look again towards thy holy temple; the which look was in effect, a looking towards the intercession of Christ the Messiah; the temple with its sacrifices been typical of him, and the mercy-seat that was there, being typical of his intercession. It is as if unbelief had suggested, O Jonah, now Jonah, what will become of thee? thou art a lost man, and needst not pray any more; yet, says he, I will look again towards thy holy temple; and though he knew not well, now being in the belly of the whale, where the temple stood, yet his faith having a suitable exercise on the Messiah signified by the temple, and his looking, being an act of faith, carried in his suit to God, which was accepted. And indeed this is a main thing, by which a poor believer that is cast down comes to stand sure again. The other place is, Dan. ix. 16, 17. Where, when he is serious, and repeating his petition, he hath these words, Cause thy face to shine upon thy sanctuary, which is desolate for the Lord's sake; and to let it be known what he meant by saying, for the Lord's sake; which looks to him who was to be intercessor in our nature, he expounds it in the following words, ‘O! My God, incline thine ear, and hear; open thine eyes, and behold our desolations; for we do not present our supplications before thee, for our righteousnesses, but for thy great mercies. That is an improving of Christ’s intercession aright, not to pray directly to him as a distinct party, but to pray for mercy upon the account of his intercession; for what is for mercies sake in the latter, is for the Lord’s sake in the former, viz. because, by him, and by virtue of his intercession, mercy is imparted to us. And this is a main use to be made of Christ’s intercession, to wit, to have upon that ground an expectation of a hearing, or to found our expectation of a hearing on that account, and let it bear the stress of it, as well as it can. 3. The right improvement of Christ’s intercession hath this act of faith; that altho’ there seem to be many difficulties and long delayings, yet faith, upon the account of his intercession, will continue its expectation of a hearing, and its looking for, of what the person hath sought, and stands in need of, whatever cross dispensations thwart its expectation, and whatever signs of anger appear in the way of its obtaining, it waits for all that. Though Jonah be in the belly of the whale, and the weeds wrapped about his head, yet will he look towards his holy temple. So though a soul have no life, nor sense, no inward feeling, no arguments in the mouth, yet acting on Christ's intercession by faith, it will not leave, nor give over its suit, considering, that though it hath no ground of expectation of good from itself, yet from Christ's intercession it hath, which is the improvement of that, Heb. vii. 25. He is able to save to the uttermost, all that come to God through him, &c. If there were never so strong objections from unbelief, and carnal reason, and if it should be suggested, you have such and such difficulties, that cannot be overcome lying in the way of your salvation, and there is nothing in you concurring to make out your salvation, yet faith says, He is able to save to the uttermost, or, as the word is, he can save to the full, or beyond all. And what is the ground? Because he ever lives to make intercession. And this is the main thing to be taken notice of, in improving of his intercession, when the sinner hath presented his suit, or request to God, through the Mediator, to have his mind quieted, on the account of Christ's intercession, that it shall be answered, even as a man, who having a cause to plead, and having an able advocate, who says to him, I will warrant your cause, quiets himself, because of his undertaking. So proportionably there is a stress laid on Christ's intercession by faith trusting to him, which makes the soul to be without anxiety. And this continued act of faith doth not at all nourish sin, but strengtheneth rather to oppose sin, and quiets the mind, and makes more humble, and causes a tranquillity in the soul, in bands as well as in liberty, because it lays the stress of its success with God, not on its own argumenting, but on the Mediator's intercession. For as we shewed from Revel. viii. the prayers of all saints go up from his censer, the weakest, as well as the strongest, because it is his incense that makes them savoury. 4. There is an improvement of Christ's intercession, when any thing is obtained, whether it be a mercy in preventing such and such a stroke, or the bestowing of such and such a favour, and that is, when faith derives not that mercy from, nor attributes it to its own praying, though it did pray, and pray somewhat seriously, but derives it from, and attributes it to the virtue and efficacy of Christ's intercession, and counts itself obliged to that, as the rise of all the person's good, and again by him returning thanks to God for it. But this is a little proof of improving Christ's intercession. Sometimes when we want what we would have, and are restrained, we will improve all means to obtain, yet when we have obtained, there is but little acknowledgment of him therein; which acknowledgment is our duty, John xiv. 13, 14. Whatsoever ye ask in my name, I will do, that the Father may be glorified in the Son. And in this sense we ought to walk in the use of every mercy, as bearing the acknowledgment of Christ's intercession; and to be affected with love to God, and should withal have a new impression of our obligation to God, upon the account of his intercession; whereas the most part of people take their mercies, and think not themselves obliged to him for them; neither do they own him with thankful acknowledgment of them, when they have got them; even as a man who hath got a favour through the mediation of another, and should forget him, would be very ungrateful. The making use of Christ's intercession in this respect, is the improving of it, for the awaking of our thankfulness, and the confirming of our obligation to him. If we look through our life, is there any day, or hour, but we stand in need of something? and are enjoying something? And the improving Christ's intercession thus, would make the thoughts of Christ always fresh and lovely to us, but we seek, and enjoy, as if a Mediator were not in heaven; but as we acknowledge him in praying to him, when we have need, so when any thing is received, we should acknowledge, that we have received it, and do enjoy it on the account of his intercession, who obtained it for us.

3dly, We observed, that this might be illustrated by similitudes, and there are these three, whereby it may be illustrated. The 1st is, (if we may call it a similitude) the comparing of the use of his intercession, with the use of his satisfaction, (wherein there is a resemblance.) We make use of his satisfaction, when we are convinced of our natural sinfulness and enmity, and that we cannot make our own peace ourselves, yet hearing of his satisfaction, and having an offer of it, and believing that it is able to answer for us, we hazard on that ground, to close with God in the covenant. And tho' the sense of peace come not for a long time, yet we with confidence wait for it, because the ground on which we depend for it cannot fail. Proportionable to this, we make use of Christ's intercession, when under an accusation, we are convinced of a quarrel, and dare not approach to God; yet hearing, that there is an intercessor in heaven, who will undertake for them that employ him, we venture confidently on that ground, to propose our suits unto God, and notwithstanding of difficulties, expect and wait for an answer. It may be objected here, that it seems there is no difference betwixt the improving of his satisfaction, and the improving of his intercession. Answer, There is no difference, in respect of the things sought, nor in respect of the acts of faith, whereby we make use of the one, and of the other, nor in respect of the grounds whereupon; for Christ hath payed the debt of them for whom he interceeds, he hath purchased the same things for which he maketh intercession, they are the same acts of faith that make use of both. It is the same covenant and offer, that warrants us, to come to his satisfaction for peace, that warrants us to make use of his intercession for the application of peace; there is only this difference, that by his satisfaction he procures us peace, and a right to it, and our peace is made by his laying down before God the price, which we by faith take hold of; but when he interceeds, he hath nothing to pay, but interceeds for what he hath purchased. Therefore the scripture fixes the application of his purchase upon his intercession. He hath bought peace, and every good thing that we stand in need of by his death; and by his intercession, he procures and makes the application. Therefore it is on this ground, that the Spirit is poured out; as among men, it is one thing to make peace, and another thing to bring the offended person into familiarity with the offended party. So it is the same faith acting on Christ's satisfaction, for being brought into covenant with God, as the meritorious cause that acts on Christ's intercession, for application of that which he hath purchased; but under a different consideration, looking on his satisfaction as procuring, and on his intercession, for application of the same things. A 2^d similitude to clear it, is, the people under the law making use of the high-priest. There were two parts of the high-priest's office, or two things, wherein the people made use of him. 1. For offering sacrifice. 2. For intercession. The high-priest went into the most holy once a year, and sprinkled the blood, and prayed for the people; in which time they were standing without, praying, in the hope of having their prayers made the more acceptable. This was by God's appointment typically to prefigure our Lord's

Lord's intercession in heaven. It is true the high-priest's praying for them was nothing to the soul's advantage, of him or them, if Christ was not made use of, both by him, and by them; yet he was typical, and to shew this much, they were to improve Christ's intercession, as well as his sacrifice and satisfaction; therefore, Luke i. 10. when Zacharias went in to pray, the whole multitude of the people was without, praying. A 3^d similitude (which we hinted at in our going along) is drawn from that way which is used among men, for bringing two parties that are at variance, to be reconciled, and agreed; which, though we are not to conceive in that carnal manner, yet it holds as to the substance of the thing. As if the offending party durst not go alone to the party offended, but should carry along with him a friend, that hath place and power to prevail with the other; when he undertakes to go along with him, contrary to his deserving, he will expect confidently to have a good hearing; and if any would say to him, how dare you go to such an one, whom you have so provoked? he would answer, because I have a friend before me, that will make intercession for me; and when by that friend's intercession, he has a favourable hearing, and his suit granted, he comes away rejoicing, professing his great obligation to that friend; so is it here as to the thing, though as was said, we should guard against carnal conceptions of God and the Mediator, as distinct parties to be made application to. We shall insist no further at present: O! that there were seriousness to improve his blood and satisfaction, for washing us from the guilt of sin, and for making our peace with God, and his intercession, for upholding our peace and communion with God, and for the attaining of every good, that he hath purchased and promised, which is the sum of all. God help us to the practice of it, and to be conscientious in it.

ALTHOUGH this be a most necessary thing, and that whereof we have daily and hourly use, even to be improving Christ's intercession; and although it be one of the most excellent, and most comfortable things that a Christian hath to look to in his walk; there being no condition, but there is a ready help for it here; yet this is our sinful misery, that either through our blindness, or our indifferency, we are much out of capacity, to improve aright so rare a priviledge. For as much as we have heard of it, are there not many of us that cannot tell how Christ's intercession is to be improved? Sure we may know that if ever we do it, there is no thanks to us for the doing of it. And indeed it is of such a nature, that we even cannot well tell, whether it be better to speak of it, or to be silent, being so little able to make any thing plain, of such a mysterious, yet very important point.

Ye may remember the doctrine that we proposed to speak to was this; that our Lord Jesus hath this for a part of his office, to make intercession for transgressors, being a real priest, he not only offers a sacrifice, but goes in, and hath gone within the vail, with the virtue of his sacrifice, to appear before God in heaven for us. As all the offices of Christ are advantageous, and should be well studied by us, this hath many advantages with it, and we should improve it, lest we frustrate ourselves of the many priviledges that are in this one doctrine, that Jesus Christ makes intercession for transgressors, or sinners.

We shewed the last day wherein the improving of Christ's intercession doth consist; we shall now instance some cases, wherein believers, in a special manner are to make use of it. 2. We shall give some directions for clearing some questions, or for answering some doubts about it. And 3. We shall assign some characters of such as are rightly improving Christ's intercession.

For the first, Christ's intercession ought to be made use of in as many cases as are possibly incident to a believer, and therefore we are not to restrict it to one case more than to another, although indeed there be some wherein more especially we are called to improve it. Now to clear it, that there are some cases cases wherein, in a special manner, the believer is to make use of this office of Christ's interceding for transgressors, it may be instanced in these. 1. A believer hath either liberty, or he is in bonds; and there is a special watchfulness called for in both these cases, that the intercession of Christ be not slighted.

1. When he hath liberty, and his spiritual condition thrives, he prays, and his heart melts in prayer, he hath what he would have; the exercises of religion become pleasant, and he hath no will to part with them. In this case the believer is to beware, lest he mistake Christ's intercession; for then he is ready to think that he cannot but be well, and his prayers cannot but be heard, because he has liberty to put them up; and it is then often that he is apt to lay the stress on Christ's intercession. To improve Christ's intercession aright in such cases, these two things are to be observed. 1. That his intercession be acknowledged as the fountain, and procuring cause of that liberty and liveliness, and so we are to be silent before God, and not to boast of it. For, as we shewed, the pouring out of the Spirit is a special fruit of Christ's intercession; it being by virtue thereof that gifts are given, and grace to worship God in a spiritual manner. 2. That we beware of thinking that our prayers are in a fitness, or that they put us in a fitness of access to God, because of that liberty, except by virtue of Christ's intercession, any more than if we had not a word to say. There is in our unbelief and presumption a secret inclination, to lay the stress of our acceptance on our own liberty; whereas, Revel. viii. the prayers of all saints must come up before God, having the smoke of his incense to make them acceptable. In which respect, in a case of liberty, Christ's intercession is improved, when we depend not on our own liberty, and it is not made the ground of our confident application to God, but Christ's intercession only. Again, 2. When the believer is in bonds in some eminent manner, so that he cannot pray, he scarce hath a word to speak to God; he goes it is true about the duty, but he does not succeed; his prayer relishes not to himself, he is like one speaking, but not praying; his heart is not warmed, neither is there, at least to his own apprehension, any connexion betwixt his words; whereupon he is ready to think, that his prayer is as good as no prayer, because of that inclination that is in all of us, to rest on our own praying, without making use of the intercession of Christ. The reasons why in this case we would press the making use of his intercession, are these. 1. Lest we faint and grow weary in prayer, which cannot but befall us, if his

intercession be not made use of. 2. Lest we lose the estimation of the excellent worth of Christ's intercession, which is exceeding derogatory to him that is mighty to save, and on whom help is laid; it being especially for such a time and case, that he is held forth as such an intercessor. Now there is a twofold improvement of Christ's intercession called for in this case. When the believer is in bonds, and cannot so much as sigh, but it is called in question, whether it be accepted, though yet the man is serious, 1. There is an improving of it for obtaining of that which we have been aiming at, tho' we cannot open our cause, nor make known our requests to God; yet to expect what we have been aiming at, and seeking after, by virtue of Christ's intercession; for as ill composed as our prayers have been, yet because they are founded upon the intercession of the Mediator, and we expect a hearing on that account only, it being his intercession that makes our prayers acceptable, it can make a poor prayer acceptable also; whereupon the soul rests quiet, and expects a hearing on this ground, because, as we said, the prayers of all saints go up from his censer, and with his incense; and none are thrown back that are put up through him, and by virtue of his intercession. Hence sometimes looks, sometimes thoughts, sometimes broken words, and groans that come up before God, are acceptable, and have a return. The reason is, because, through the intercession of the Mediator, the prayers of all saints are acceptable. This is even as if a man should trust his able advocate with the managing of his cause, although he cannot express himself satisfiably to himself in it. Hence we have these words often, John xiv. and xvi. Whatever ye ask in my name believingly, ye shall receive; and whatever ye ask in my name, I will do it; that is, when ye ground the expectation of your being heard in prayer on me, and my mediation. When people because of their short-comings in prayer, give over the expectation of a hearing, and a return of their prayers, in so far they give over a dependance on his intercession; only ye should remember the terms on which a person is warranted to make use of his intercession; for when he follows not his way in the improving of it, we cannot expect to speed, or have benefit by it. 2. A believer in his bonds should expect liberty, through the virtue of his intercession. And this is another way, how we should improve it in this case, when we are bound up, that we cannot stir in prayer; then we should have an eye to the efficacy of Christ's intercession, (this is of continual vigour and efficacy, even when we are very dead, indisposed, and lifeless) for the attaining attaining liberty and liveliness. This indeed has a respect to the efficacy of his mediation, when we cannot speak one word to work up ourselves to a disposition for that work. And these two go well together, to be improving his intercession, for obtaining what we need for the time present, and for the time to come, and when we are in bonds, to be improving it for liberty and freedom.

2dly, There is an improving of Christ's intercession called for, both when we aim to obtain any thing, and when we have obtained that which we desired. 1. In our aiming to have or obtain, we should improve it, that our addresses to God may be in his name, and our faith of obtaining may be founded on Christ's intercession, and not on our own, and that our faith may be stayed, and fixed in expectation of the thing. The improving of Christ's intercession in this respect leads us, 1st, To the right way of prosecuting our suits to God. And 2dly, It quiets and fixes us in expecting of an answer; and when this is wanting, Christians are either discouraged, and know not how to pursue their cause, or else they are carnally secure, and presumptuous, which is very ordinary; for either, as I have said, we are under an anxious fear, so that we know not how to go about duty with any hope of success; or else we grow secure and careless in duty.

2dly, There is a right use made of Christ's intercession, when we have obtained any benefit, which keeps the soul in a frame always acknowledging itself to be his debtor; this makes Christians, when they have got any thing, to be humble, and helps them to a sanctified use of the thing received; whereas, when this is forgot, though persons may be seemingly humble, when they are praying for a thing in his name, yet when they have got it, they grow carnal, and some way wanton, and he is forgotten, as if the benefit had never come from him; but on the other hand, when there is an acknowledgement of Christ's intercession, when any thing is obtained, it keeps, as I said, the person humble, and holily afraid, when he hath got it as well as when he was seeking it, and it makes people wary in using, and fearing to abuse any benefit they have received, least it be found a wrong and indignity done to Christ and his intercession.

3dly, We may instance the improving of Christ's intercession, both in a most sad, and in a most cheerful condition. In reference to both which we should make use of Christ's intercession; and it being generally one of these conditions that we are in, either a more sad, or more cheerful one, we should think ourselves defective and faulty as to our duty, when we suit and conform not our way to our condition.

1. If it be a more sad condition, whether we be spiritually sad, the soul being heavy, and refusing to be comforted, or whether we be under a temporal outward disconsolate condition, there Christ's intercession is to be applied to in both; for a believer cannot be in any so disconsolate a condition, but he may draw refreshing from this fountain, in reference thereto; and when we make not use of his intercession in each, as it occurs, either anxiety and discouragement grows, or we turn to some unwarrantable and crooked means or way for deliverance from such a condition.

Now to make use of, and to improve Christ's intercession aright, in such a disconsolate condition and case. 1. The soul should gather, and compose itself, to search and see what is useful in Christ's intercession for it's case; seeing there cannot be a case imagined, but Christ's intercession is a cordial for it, upon which, as a solid ground, the soul may be satisfied, that it cannot miscarry in that, for which it is now in so much bitterness; seeing Christ Jesus hath the managing of it's cause. Hence it may reason thus, although I was unwatchful, and this condition came on me unawares, and I was surprized with it, yet it is not any surprize to him; he was not sleeping, though I was; he knew what was coming, though I knew not; therefore this will not hurt, nor prejudice my main cause, because it comes through his hand. 2. There is an improvement of his intercession in this case, when the deliverance though desperate as to us, is yet hopeful by virtue thereof; and when this is made the only, or main ground of our hope, to wit, that there is a friend at the court of heaven, who can order our cause, and make such a thing work for our good, it puts spirits in us to pray, and actively to go about the use of the means; whereas, when we use not the means, or use them without due respect to Christ's intercession, the work of salvation becomes heartless, hopeless and desperate.

2dly, If our condition be, or seem to be more solacious and cheerful, there should be an improving of Christ's intercession, lest our cheerfulness grow carnal, which it cannot otherways be, but when he is acknowledged to be the author of our solace, and cheerfulness, when he is depended upon for the continuance of it, and when the praise of it is returned to him. It sets bounds to the heart, that it grow not carnal, in which respect, those things wherein others grow carnal, such as health, strength, meat, drink, apparel, commodious dwelling, the the recovery of themselves and children, or of other near relations or dear friends from sickness, &c. are thus spiritualized, and made spiritually refreshing to the people of God; because there is no right enjoyment of them, but as coming thro' Christ's intercession, and returning of thanks to him for them; hence, Heb. xiii. 15. it is said, by him therefore let us offer the sacrifices of praise to God; there being the same reason for to praise in our spiritual cheerfulness, that there is to pray in our heaviness and difficulties; he that is the ground on which we ought to found our prayer, is also the ground on which we ought to build our praises; and it is he that puts life in, and value upon, the one as well as the other.

4thly, We may instance it in this case, when the believer is under accusations of conscience, it is then a special season to make use of Christ's intercession, and to put the libel in his hand to answer it; which is done by faith's resting on him as a priest, for the obtaining of an absolution from that charge, altho' we cannot answer it ourselves, yet expecting an answer through him according to that famous place, Rom. viii. 34. Who shall lay any thing to the charge of God's elect? Who will accuse them? Among other reasons of the interrogation, which hath the force of negation, this is one; It is Christ who died, yea, rather who is risen again, who is at the right-hand of God, making intercession for us: This furnisheth an answer to the charge put into their hands; or, when the believer is under calmness and tranquillity, his intercession should be improved; for there cannot be a sanctified calmness without depending on him, by virtue of whose satisfaction and procurement we have it, and by virtue of whose intercession it is continued.

The reasons why we have hinted at these things, are 1st, To hold forth to you the use of Christ's intercession; for the believer cannot be in any case, but he hath to do with it. 2dly, To shew our great obligation to God, who hath given us such an intercessor for all these cases. In this one word there is stored up a treasure of consolation, for all circumstances that a Christian can be in. 3dly, That we may be helped in our duty of improving and making use of him according to the several circumstances we are, or may be in; for tho' his intercession be mainly to be made use of, when we come to pray, yet not only then, but at other times, and in other cases, as when we fear any hazard, when we need any good thing, when we expect it, or would be cheerful on the receipt of it, and when we are in any difficulty, and know not what to do, we shall find something called for from us, in reference to his offices, and to this in particular. 4thly, Because making this use of Christ's intercession commends Christ, and makes him lovely to us; and indeed, that which makes believers think so little of him, is in part, at least, the little improving of his intercession, which should be made use of in the least things; for when we need any thing, we should look up to God thro' him, and found the hope of receiving it on this ground; because there is an intercessor: If this were the practice of believers daily, they would see a necessity of thinking much of him. O! when shall we be serious and constant in the use of this part of his office? 5thly, Because it may serve also for ground of conviction to many that are called Christians, and who go through many cases and difficulties, and yet know not what it is to acknowledge him in his intercession. O! it is a sad thing for people to bear the name of Christians, and yet if they want any good thing, and can have it another way, they neglect and disown him; and if it be well with them, and they obtain what they would have, they sacrifice to their own net, and he is slighted.

The next thing in order, is, to remove some objections, and to answer some questions concerning this improvement of Christ's intercession, in the manner that we have spoken of, and there will frequently be many of them in our carnal minds. Now for the removing of these objections or doubts, I shall lay down some grounds for direction, that may answer any doubt of that kind, which may arise partly from the doctrine, it being a puzzling exercise to some, that they think they know not how to improve Christ's intercession, or else that they never did it aright, or possibly, both these may be their exercise.

The 1st ground I would lay down is this, 'That ye should remember that there is an unsearchableness in this mystery of the Godhead, in the mystery of God's becoming man, and in the mystery of the Mediator his taking on him these offices, to exercise them in our nature, and in speaking or thinking of them, there is a necessity to silence that which our curiosity would propose for satisfaction about them; as namely, how there are, or can be three persons in the Godhead, and yet but one God? How one of these persons can be man? And how it is, that by him we have access to God the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost? There is silence required in these things, which leads to the next direction. 2. We should study satisfaction in the matter of the truth itself, rather than be poring into the manner of profound mysteries, especially such as concern the blessed Godhead, which is higher than the heavens, broader than the earth, deeper than the sea. That is, we should study rather to know that there is such a thing, than how it is: And in this particular, we know that the Son of God became man, took on him our nature, and in our nature died, rose again, and ascended to heaven, sat down on the right-hand of God, and makes intercession for us. These are clear: But if we ask, how these things can be? That God can be man, and the two natures can be in one person, and how God can interceed? They are things much above our reach, and not so properly the object of our faith; for our consolation lies not so much in knowing how such a thing is, as in knowing that it is: And I make no question, but there are many who pray in faith, because there is an intercessor, who, if the question were asked, how he performs that work? they could not well tell, if at all: Those that know most of it, are but very ignorant of it, and can say but little. The Lord in his goodness hath so ordered the matter, that he hath given ground for the faith of his people, to walk on in their duty, but will not satisfy their curiosity; and truly if we will seriously reflect, we shall find that these things which most easily disturb us, are questions about the manner, and not about the matter of things, we do not doubt but the Son of God is God, that the Holy Ghost is God, and that he proceeds from the Father and the Son; that the second person of the trinity became man, &c. But the perplexing question is, how these things are or can be? The Lord hath made it necessary to be believed, that there is one God, and three persons in the Godhead; but to be in reason satisfied, as to the how, or manner of their subsistence and operations, that is not required as necessary; so is it here in this matter of Christ's intercession: And therefore this second direction is, that ye should study clearness in the grounds that ye are to go upon, in the using of his intercession; but ye should not be curious in seeking satisfaction about the manner of it.

3. In our addresses to God, and in our improving of Christ's intercession, we should beware of imagining, or framing in our imagination representations to ourselves of him, who is the object of our worship, or of the manner of the Mediator's intercession, as if we had seen him or heard him, with our bodily eyes or ears; a thing that sometimes is troublesome, as well as it is sinful, and which we are not called to; yea, if it were possible to attain to any representation of this kind, yet it is but a representation of our own forming, and so a breach of the second command. And therefore in going to God through the Mediator, never represent to yourselves one party standing beside, or by another; for that is but a diverting of the soul from the exercise of faith on a purely spiritual and simple object, (and derogatory to the majesty of God. And whenever such representations are made, or rise in the imagination, or in the mind) we should pray to God for crushing of them. It is from this that many of our doubts and questions arise, and there is no loosing of them, but by the abandoning of them. If there were a possibility to conceive something like God, yet the Lord abhorreth that; and Deut. iv. 15. and xii. 30. all similitudes and representations of God are forbidden.

4. In our addresses to God through the Mediator, we should fix our faith on what is revealed in the word, seeking rather to understand God and Christ, as they are revealed in it, than without the word, to seek satisfaction to our curiosity; we should from the word study to understand the attributes of God, his omniscience, omnipotency, omnipresence, wisdom, grace and mercy, purity and holiness, sovereignty, and absolute dominion in guiding all; and as being at such an infinite distance from, and infinitely above all creatures, that thereby a right impression of God may be wrought in the heart; we should likewise study clearness in the promises made concerning Christ and his offices; and in application to God, we should fix our faith on these known grounds; believing we shall be heard, and satisfy ourselves with it. Moses, Exod. xxxiii. is under a vehement longing to see God, I beseech thee, saith he, shew me thy glory: The Lord tells him, that he cannot see it, and live, but he will make his goodness pass before him; he will let him see as much as is fit; and chap. xxxiv. when he gives him his answer, it is not any glorious visible brightness he lets him see, but he proclaims his name to him; The Lord, the Lord God, merciful and gracious, &c. and comparing the words with the scope, they intimate to us that there can be no saving knowledge of God, but as he is revealed in the word; and by that we are to be fixed in the faith of the excellency that is in him: and in going to him by prayer, through the Mediator, we should guard against any representation, and fix our faith on clear promises and attributes, as the scripture holds him forth.

5. We should endeavour rather to have a composed frame of spirit, with holy reverence in the exercise of fear, faith, and love, and of other spiritual graces, than to fill our understanding with things merely speculative, and less practical and profitable. And supposing that we are in some measure clear, in what is revealed of God, and of his attributes and promises in the word, in as far as our faith will warrant us to put up such and such suits to God through the Mediator, and that we come to him in holy reverence, we are rather to exercise our graces, and have an eye downward, in reflecting on ourselves, seeking to be clear, in what is called for in a worshipper of God, than to be curiously poring and prying into the object of our worship, himself; and therefore let this be well studied, even to be clear in that wherein we are concerned, and which we do not question, nor make any doubt of; as namely, that we should be in a composed frame of spirit, in holy reverence, and under the due impression of the majesty of God, and then there will be the less hazard of doing wrong; whereas, if we divert from this, and seek to satisfy ourselves in the manner of knowing of God, we shall but puzzle ourselves, and spoil the frame of our own spirits, and bring ourselves under an incapacity of going about duty in a right manner.

Thus much we have spoke to on the third part of the use of exhortation, wherein we allow a sober and solid understanding of the things of God; as far as may be profitable for founding of our faith, and for guiding of our practice, but not to satisfy curiosity; for if we once go to chase, and follow question upon question, in what concerns the doctrinal and speculative part of this doctrine, we shall run ourselves aground; and therefore God having made these things wherein our duty necessarily lies, clear, that there is no hazard of going wrong in following of it, we should study those things that are clear; (which might be another direction) and not suffer our minds to run out either on groundless or unprofitable speculations. God himself help to the suitable practice of these things; and to him be praise.

Verse 12.—And he made intercession for the transgressors.

IT is a great mercy that God hath bestowed such a Mediator on sinners, that he hath given such an High-priest, that can be touched with the feeling of sinners infirmities, so as to make intercession for them; and O! it is a great mercy to be helped to make a right use of him. When these two go together, gether, to wit, a Saviour offered and furnished with all these offices of King, Priest, and Prophet; and a soul sanctified, and guided by the Spirit of God, in making use of him according to these offices, it is a wonderful and unconceivably gracious dispensation; and it is no doubt a very valuable mercy to be helped to make use of this part of Christ's office, to wit, of his intercession. This is that whereof we have begun some few days since to speak to you; and for the better clearing of it, we endeavoured to answer some doubts or questions that may have arisen, and possess the minds of some, while we have been discoursing of, and opening this matter. That which we would now speak a little to, is a subject of that nature, that considering our shallowness in understanding of these things, we cannot easily tell, whether it be better to speak or to forbear speaking of any doubt or question, lest one occasion another; and therefore most certainly there should be much sobriety here, and an abandoning all sinful curiosity, lest unseasonable and intemperate desires to know either what is not to be known, or what we cannot know, mar and obstruct our improvement of what we do or may know. Several things doubted of may be moved and objected here; but we shall only speak a word for the clearing of these four: 1. Something concerning the object of worship, and particularly of prayer in general. 2. We shall consider how the Mediator is the object of our prayer, or how he may be prayed unto. 3. A word more particularly, in reference to the form of some particular petitions, and to what seems most warrantable from the word in these. 4. We shall answer some practical doubts that have, or may have, some influence on the consciences of some Christians. But as I said, we had need, in speaking and hearing of these things, to be awed with some deep impression of the majesty of God in our hearts, lest we meddle carnally with matters of a most sublimely spiritual and holy nature. For clearing the first then, we lay down these assertions: The first whereof is, That as there is one worship, so there is no formal object of worship but God: This is clear; because the worshipping of any with divine worship, as namely with believing in them, or praying to them, supposes them to have such attributes of omniscience, omnipotency, supremacy, &c. as are only agreeable to the majesty of God: For we cannot pray to one, but we must believe that he hears us, and so that he is omniscient; that he is able to help us, and so omnipotent; that he is above all, and so supreme; as it is, Rom. x. 14. How shall they call on him, in whom they have not believed? There can can be no divine object of worship to settle the soul upon, but where the essential attributes of the Godhead are; and it is on this ground that we reject vocation of saints and angels; adorability being the essential property of the majesty of God, as well as eternity and immutability are. There can be no adoring or worshipping of any, but where there is adorability in the object that is worshipped by that worship; and there is none capable of worship but God, supremacy being due and essential to him only. Secondly, That tho' there be three persons in the glorious and blessed Godhead, distinct, yet there are not three distinct objects of worship, but one object of worship only; the Father is not one object of worship, the Son another, and the Holy Ghost a third: But the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost are the same one object of worship; and when we pray to one, we pray to all: The reason is clear; because tho' there be three persons in the Godhead, yet there is but one essence in the Godhead; and the divine essential properties (which are the grounds on which we adore God) are essential, and agree to all the persons of the Godhead; the Father hath not one omnipotency, and the Son another, neither are there two omnipotents, but one omnipotent God; and so in other attributes, they are the same essential properties of the Godhead, and incommunicable: And therefore tho' the Father be another person, and, (as some use to speak) alius, yet he is not another thing, or aliud, but the same God with the Son and Holy Ghost: And altho' the persons have a real distinction amongst themselves, yet none of them are really distinct from the Godhead; and so there is but one object of worship; and therefore, tho' sometimes all the persons be named, yet it is not to shew any distinction in the object of our worship, but to shew who is the object of our worship, to wit, one God, yet three persons, or in three. Thirdly, That tho' in prayer to God, we may name either the Father, the Son, or the Holy Ghost; yet whosoever we name, it is always the same God, Father, Son, and Holy Ghost that is worshipped. And this followeth well on the former, and may be the use of it: For, if the Father be God, and if we worship him as God, we cannot worship him but we must worship the Son, and Holy Ghost with him; because they are the same God, having the same essential attributes. And therefore, fourthly, Whosoever we pray to, and name one of the persons, we should not conceive that he is more worshipped that is named, or that we pray less to him that is not named; as it may be in the same prayer, when a person begins at first, he names the Father, and

and when he hath proceeded a little, he names the Son. Men should then beware of thinking that there is a difference in the object they are praying to; or, as if they began to pray to one of the persons, and now they are praying to another, as a distinct party; for it is still the same God, who is the object of worship. We observe it, to teach you calmness, soberness, and composedness of frame in approaching to God; wherein people should beware of curious tossing in their mind and imagination what may be the object of their worship, and of suffering it to run in any curious itching way on the distinction of the persons; but should stay their mind upon one God in three persons, and seek after no more. The second is, How the Mediator is the object of our prayers, or may be prayed unto? And for clearing of this, we would propose these considerations: 1st, That it is a certain truth, that the person that is the Mediator is the object of our worship, and may be prayed unto, because he is God, the second person in the Godhead; and therefore, Acts vii. at the close, a direct prayer is put up to him by Stephen, Lord Jesus, saith he, receive my spirit. 2^{dly}, We say this, That the adoration and worship that is given to the Mediator, is not of any distinct kind from that adoration and worship that is given to the Father and the Holy Ghost, but the same supreme divine worship; for he is the same God with the Father and Holy Ghost; and altho' he be Mediator, it derogates nothing from his Godhead; and the scripture speaking of no divine worship but one, we are therefore not to conceive him to be worshipped with less confidence, fear, or reverence than the other persons of the trinity: For there is no such worship in scripture, and to give him less, would derogate from the majesty of Jesus Christ, who is God equal with the Father and the Spirit: For, altho' as Mediator he be inferior to the Father, yet the person whom we worship, is God equal with the Father, and the Holy Ghost. 3^{dly}, The worshipping of Jesus Christ Mediator, and the giving of him divine worship, is not the worshipping of any other object, but of the same, to wit, God, who is made flesh, and is manifested in our nature by the union of the second person of the Godhead, with the human nature which he hath assumed and taken to him; upon which it follows, that Jesus Christ must be the same object of worship, and that our worshipping of him, is the worshipping of God; and that our praying to him, is praying to God the Father, Son, and Spirit. And there is reason to take heed to this; because, when we in prayer are speaking to the Mediator, thoughts may come in, as if we were not so immediately and directly speaking to God, as when we name the Father. 4thly, Consider, that Christ Jesus being worshipped with this divine worship, as the one object of worship (for as we shewed, there cannot be two objects of divine worship) it will follow, that Christ Jesus, as God, is worshipped; for tho' it be the person that's Mediator and man that is worshipped, yet it is not the person as man but as God, that is worshipped; and the reason is clear, because it is not Christ Jesus as man, but as God that hath these properties of God, to be omniscient, omnipotent, infinite, supreme, adorable, &c. and therefore as upon the one hand, we say that Christ God died, and suffered, because he being God and man in one person, the person that was and is God died, and suffered, tho' the Godhead, did not suffer, neither can suffer; so upon the other hand, we say, that Christ-man is prayed unto, because he who is God-man is prayed unto as God; but tho' there be an union of the two natures in the Mediator's person, and tho' the properties of the one nature be sometimes attributed to the other, because of the strictness of the union, yet we must still keep the properties of each nature distinct, and in our worshipping and making application to him, consider him accordingly. As to be finite, agrees to his human nature, and is to be attributed to that; and to be infinite, agrees to his divine nature, and is to be attributed to him in respect of that. To clear it a little, (if it be possible for us to clear it) we must conceive in our worshipping of God, in the person of a Mediator, a threefold object of our worship; (for so divines use to distinguish, and we would hold close by them) 1. The material object, or the object which we worship, that is the person we pray to. 2. The formal object of our worship, or that which is the ground or account on which we worship that person. 3. The object of our consideration, in our worshipping of that person on that account; as for instance, 1st, The man Christ Jesus is the person whom we worship or pray unto; but 2dly, The formal object of our worship is Christ's Godhead, and we pray to him on that account; because he is the eternal, infinite, omnipotent, supreme, &c. in respect of his divine nature. 3dly, In our worshipping of this Mediator, on this account or ground, the mind may be induced to it, on consideration that the person whom we worship as God, is also the Mediator and man; and this proposes no new object of worship, but gives a motive to induce us to worship him, and warms the heart with love to him; as when we go to pray to him, the mind may consider him as one that died. Now so considered, he is not the object of our worship ; because it holds him forth as humbled, and suffering ; yet our so considering him strengthens faith, to expect what we need from him, and it induces us to pray to him, and engages us to love him ; even as the people of Israel, in praying to God, sometimes used that title, our Redeemer, that brought us out of Egypt : Yet the ground, and account on which they worshipped him, was his being the eternal, infinite, and omnipotent God ; and the consideration of his works were but motives to induce them to worship him, and to strengthen their faith, in expecting what they stood in need of from him : So is it here ; for if it were possible to conceive, that the Mediator that died were not God, we should not pray to him ; for God is the alone object of divine worship ; yet to consider that he is God, and yet died, is an inducement to us to pray to him, and it strengthens our faith to consider, that he is God, and also man, one that died, and hath also entered himself in this near relation to us.

For the 3^d, (which will help to clear the former) that is, the form of such petitions as may be used, in petitioning the Mediator ; we may insist the less upon it, if (as hath been said) we consider these things : 1. That there is but one object of worship. 2. That this one object of worship is God. 3. That in worshipping the Mediator, we do not divide that object of our worship. However, we shall speak a few words for clearing this matter, first, What form seems most allowable here ; secondly, For clearing of somewhat, which we hinted at the other day, concerning one particular form of petition. First then, This is clear, that we may pray directly to the Mediator, by naming him, as Stephen does, Acts vii. at the close. Secondly, That the Mediator, when prayed to, may be considered as such by us ; for there is a difference betwixt that which is considered by us, in the act of our worship, and that which is the object of that act ; and (as we said) the motive that induces us to that act is the knowledge of him as Mediator. Thirdly, That he may be considered as Mediator and Redeemer, and have these names and titles ; because they serve to strengthen our faith, and to warm our affections to him ; even as when the people of Israel prayed to God, they remembered that he was their Redeemer and Deliverer, and had wrought so and so for them : And these were motives to induce them to pray, and served to strengthen their faith in praying to him ; yet the grounds and reasons on which they worshipped him, were his own infinite glorious majesty. Fourthly, It is clear, that when the Mediator is prayed unto, something may be sought from him, that agrees to the office of the Mediator. For instance, He may be prayed unto, to take to him his government, and to exercise it, to give gifts unto men, to gather his own elect, to make his will effectual for the ingathering of them, &c. yet even then a difference should be put betwixt the object of our suit, and the matter we sue for, which belongs to him as Mediator. Yet as God, he is the object of our suit and prayer: This seems to be hinted at, Psal. xlv. when the Psalmist is speaking of the Son the Mediator, he says, Gird thy sword upon thy thigh, ride prosperously; let the king's arrows be sharp in the hearts of his enemies; which seem clearly to relate to Christ's executing his office as Mediator; yet look to the title he gives him, and the ground or account on which he puts up his prayer, it is the consideration of him as God; therefore, he says, O thou most mighty! a divine attribute pointing him out to be God; and thy throne, O God, saith he, is from everlasting, &c.

Now as for the 2d thing, If all this be granted, it may then be asked, why we seem not to be satisfied with that manner of expression, or form of petition, which we hinted at the other day, Lord Jesus, make intercession for me, plead for me, with, or before, the Father. Seeing we allow such a petition as this, Lord Jesus, make me partaker of thy intercession, and the like, as warrantable, when we put it up with reverence and faith, the same object of worship being invoked with them both. Answer 1. We say, that the use and improving of Christ's intercession, is not to be restricted to this manner of expression, or form of petition; and it was for this end we observed it: For it cannot be said, that then only we make use of Christ's intercession, when we use this form; and so it is not essential, nor necessary to the making use of Christ's intercession. This is the fault that is in it, as if there were no use of his intercession, but but when this form of petition is used; where^{as} we shewed, that it is mainly the exercise of faith, resting on his intercession, whereby it is improved; and so one may be using this form of words, and yet not be improving his intercession; and another may not use this form of words, and yet be improving it, when faith is exercised on it; and therefore, to improve his intercession, is rather by the exercise of faith to rest on it, than in any such form of words to pray to him; and that we should not think that Christ's intercession is made use of, when the Father is prayed unto, or when such a form of words is not used, but place it in the exercise of faith alone. 2. We say, if such a petition be well understood, it is not simply sinful or evil, if so be our meaning in it amount to this much, Lord Jesus, let me be partaker of the benefits of thy intercession, even as we may pray, Lord Jesus, let me be partaker of the benefits of thy satisfaction; yet we say, it should be well understood and qualified: And a person in putting up such a petition should consider well, that he is not praying to any other object of worship but God, and that his meaning should be the same as if he were praying to the Father, and said, Father, let me be accepted through the intercession of the Son. And thus the one is an improving of Christ's intercession, as well as the other; for although the altering the nomination of the person may strengthen faith, yet it is never to be so understood, as if there were a different object in worship, or as if there were less use made of Christ's intercession, or the benefits thereof, in the one form than in the other. Yet, 3. We say there is often an aptness to miscarry in this form of petition; therefore ye should consider and examine, 1st, If it doth not often flow from a wrong informed judgment within, and if it hath not a tendency in it, to obscure the nature of the unity of the object of our worship, and so it readily disposes us to favour this opinion, that praying to the Mediator is not the same that praying to God is, as if there were two distinct objects of worship. Or, 2^{dly}, Whether you be not apt to consider the person that is Mediator to be of less glory and majesty than the Father, and to consider the Father to be of less loving kindness and tenderness to sinners than the Son, and other things of that kind, which move people to put up such a suit in such a form, and makes it so difficult to keep the thoughts of one object of worship under such a form, than otherways it would be. Yet, 4. We say it may be used by, and accepted of God, from many that have not that distinctness and clearness in the distinguishing of their thoughts, in this mystery that is requisite, because there may be real faith under such a form of words, (tho' there be infirmity in the making use of Christ's intercession) and God respects that wherever it is. And under such a form there may be two things. 1. A soul-sensibleness, that the person hath no access to God, but through a Mediator. 2. A resting on the Mediator for acceptance; and where these two are, tho' the form be used, it may be accepted; and if faith be, though this form be not, it spoils not the person's acceptation; for no question, many of the people of God, both before Christ came, and some time after, had not that distinct knowledge of Christ's intercession, as now it is held forth; as Christ says to his disciples, John xvi. 24. Hitherto ye have asked nothing in my name; and Cornelius mentioned, Acts x. and others, their prayers were accepted of God, though they rested by faith on the Mediator in a more confused and dark way, and had not that distinctness in them, of making use of him, which was afterward more clearly. And therefore 5. and lastly, Though we will not be peremptory in condemning such a form altogether, yet we think it more safe to abstain from any such form of words, in the use of Christ's intercession, as may have in them any appearance of, or tendency to the dividing of the object of our worship, or the Mediator from his God-head, especially in praying with, or for others, where it may stumble more than edify; and when it is used, it should be very warily and well guarded, remembring always that the improving of Christ's intercession consists more in faith's resting on it, and in making address to God through him, and according to the usual manner of the scripture, than in any other thing whatsoever.

The 4th thing we proposed to speak to, was some practical doubts or questions, that may puzzle some Christians, who, having observed what hath been spoken on this subject, may be ready to think, and say, that the improving of Christ's intercession is to them a greater mystery than ever it was; many times they have prayed and minded it not, and when they do mind it, they are not distinct in their improving of it, and so they are never like to come to the knowledge of it. For answer, 1. Ye should look to what is essential to the improvement of Christ's intercession, and make that sure; and if ye ask, what it is? it takes in these four, and where they are, his intercession is made use of, though there may be darkness in many other things. 1. That a person pray to God, and that he be called on and worshipped. 2. That our addressès be not founded on any thing in ourselves, but that there be a renouncing of our own righteousness, as it was with Daniel, Chap. ix. 18. We do not present our supplication unto thee, for our own righteousness, &c. 3. That there be a believing of our acceptance through Jesus Christ, though there be a distance bewtixt God and us, yet there is a way through Christ to remove that distance, and obtain nearness to him. And 4. Upon that account to enter our suit, and to put up our prayers to God, disclaiming our own righteousness, pleading on the account of God's mercy, through Christ, as Daniel doth; Not for our own righteousness, but for thy mercies sake, and for thy names sake. Now suppose that some souls should not be able to answer several questions about the object of worship, and the improving of Christ's intercession;

intercession; yet if they call upon God, if they renounce their own righteousness, not knowing any ground in themselves to lean to, or to put up their suit on, and make use of Christ for the ground of their acceptance with God; and if it were asked them, what gives you ground to expect a hearing of your prayers? they would answer, even the same that gives us ground to expect pardon of sin; and we could never expect to obtain either without a Mediator; they are amongst them who are improving Christ's intercession; and such would silence other questions, if they be clear in this. We answer, that there may be a real use made of Christ's intercession; and it may be accounted so, where there is much darkness in the understanding of it; as appears by these instances, of Cornelius, Acts x. and of the disciples, John xvi. who prayed not on the account of their own righteousness, or of the covenant of works; (for they made confession of their sin) yet the Mediator, and his intercession were not so distinctly as such, considered by them in their so doing, for they did not distinctly understand him; as Christ says, Hitherto ye have asked nothing in my name; yet there was an actual resting on him by faith, and their prayers were no doubt accepted of God, he not being so distinctly known to be the intercessor as now he is; and therefore there is required a more distinct use of him now, and not a resting on him indefinitely, but particularly and distinctly, he being clearly revealed now to be the Mediator. 3. We answer, that believers may sometimes make use of Christ's intercession, in approaching to God by him, and yet themselves not know distinctly that they are doing so; as we see in the disciples, John xiv. 4. Christ says, Whether I go ye know, and the way ye know; and verse 6. speaking of coming to the Father by him; he says, I am the way, the truth, and the life, and yet, verse 5. Thomas says, Lord, we know not whither thou goest, and how can we know the way? But the Lord replies to him, and says that they have both known him and the way: As also believers may sometimes through want of clearness and distinctness, be at a loss how to make use of Christ's intercession, or because they want that measure of distinctness they desire, think that they are doing nothing, as to the use of his intercession, and yet the work of God's Spirit, think that they are doing nothing, as to the use of his intercession, and yet the work of God's Spirit, though they know it not, may be leading them. For it is in this, as it is in the use of his satisfaction, a believer may be making use of Christ's satisfaction, and be justified by it, when he knows not that it is so, or possibly cannot not well tell what it is to make use of it, which may quiet many risings or reasoning that may be in their minds about this matter. 4. We answer, that explicite thoughts of Christ's intercession are not always necessary, nor requisite; as we are to design God's glory, as to the main end, in all our undertakings, so we are to pray in the name of Christ; but as it is not requisite that there be always in every part of the action, an actual minding of God's glory; but that being laid as our principle, which we walk by, and the strain of our walk and conversation, tending to that end, it is and will be accepted before God, although there be not in every thing we do explicite thoughts of his glory; so is it in our praying in Christ's name, and in improving of his intercession; there may be a virtual, though not an actual and explicite resting on it. The soul having laid down that for a ground and principle, that it is not for any thing in me, that I do expect a hearing, but it is through Christ, and all the confidence that I have to be heard, it is through him. 5. We answer, that a poor soul, that knows not well what to do in this case, should eye God's promise, to be guided in the use of Christ's intercession without anxiety; as it is, John xvi. 26. In that day ye shall ask in my name. As if he had said, it hath been your fault, that ye have not hitherto prayed in my name, at least with that distinctness that ye ought; but I give you my word for it, ye shall pray in my name. And when through confusion, we are ready to faint, we should eye this promise, to be guided in the use of his intercession. 6. We should learn rather to observe in our worshipping of God, that which is practical, and serves to bring us under an awe and reverence of the majesty of God, than give ourselves to that which doth indispose and disquiet us. And I shall close all with this, that we should even admire, how souls are carried and brought to heaven, or that we should be suffered to pray, and that God breaks not out upon us, and we should study to be deeply humbled for our ignorance of God, and of Christ, and account ourselves to be highly indebted to him for teaching us to make a right use of him, seeing we are so ready to miscarry, even when we desire, and endeavour to make use of him.

Verse 12.—And he made intercession for the transgressors.

THE greatest privileges that we have by the gospel, do often hold forth the greatest aggravations of those sins, that are committed against so great and excellent privileges. Now the Lord's giving us a Mediator, and making this one part of his mediation, to wit, to make intercession for transgressors, or sinners, is certainly one of the great privileges of the gospel; and therefore, we had need to fear, lest by our abusing, and not improving aright this privilege, it prove an aggravation of our guilt. And this is the last thing that we shall speak to, from these words; that seeing our Lord Jesus is invested with this office, to be an intercessor, then it must be a ground of expostulation with and reproof of those, who shall be found slights of his intercession; for, if it be a mercy that we have it, and if many advantages be received by it, then it must be a grievous sin, a matter of just complaint, and great shame, that sinners should have such an Advocate and intercessor provided for them, to take and plead their cause so freely, and to manage it so wisely as he doth, and yet to slight him, and not put that trust in him, as to commit their cause to him.

In prosecuting of this Use, we shall 1. shew, that there is such a sin, as not improving of Christ's intercession, and how it is fallen into. 2. The causes of it, or whence it comes, that people so much mistake this part of Christ's office. 3. The great inconveniences that follow on it, and the great prejudices that are sustained by it. 4. We shall hint at some symptoms and evidences, where this sin is. And, 5. Speak a word to the remedies thereof.

For the first, that there is such a sin, it may be clear from a few considerations, that may be obvious to every one of us. 1. It may be clear from the effect. What is the cause that so many speed so little in prayer, that they pray, and yet have not a hearing, so that in the day of judgment, it will be found that many prayed, and that their prayers were thrown back, as dung upon their faces, They sought to enter, and were not able, as it is, Luke xiii. And this will be found to be the reason of it, that they went to God, but took no notice of him, who is the way, the truth, and the life; for where Christ's intercession is improved, there is an effect following; for God hath laid it down for a solid ground, that whosoever believeth in him shall not perish, and whatsoever ye ask in my name, it shall be granted; and therefore, where there are many petitions put up to God, and no answer at all, there is sure a default in peoples making use of Christ; for God is faithful, and will perform his promise. 2. And more particularly, all the members of the visible church may be reduced to these three ranks, and we shall find a defect, as to the making use of Christ's intercession in them all, though not of the same degree, or rather of the same kind. 1st, Either they are prophane, and have not so much as a form of religion, and such do slight Christ, and his intercession altogether. Or 2^{dly}, They are hypocrites, that make a fashion of prayer, but come not to God by him, but go the nearest way forward, and put up their suits upon the account of their own righteousness; as they ground their justification on it, and not on Christ's satisfaction. Or 3^{dly}, They are such as have something of God in them, and so are believers; and even in such there is often a great defect, as to this; as Christ saith to the disciples, John xvii. 24. Hitherto ye have asked nothing in my name; he doth not charge them meerly for not praying; he grants that, but ye have not asked in my name, that is, ye have not made use of my intercession, as ye should have done; although there be not such a defect in them, as there is in the former two sorts, yet they are guilty of shortcomings, and not improving of Christ's intercession, as they should. And therefore. 3. It will be more clear, if we consider the particular cases incident to believers, wherein we shall find, that but very seldom Christ's intercession is improved in any of them. As 1st, if the believer hath liberty in prayer, he is ready to be satisfied, and to conclude that he cannot but be heard, because he hath liberty; there is not therefore so just regard had to Christ's intercession; and it is often more difficult to prevent this sin, when liberty is enjoyed, than when it is wanting; because, though liberty be good and desirable in itself, yet through our corruption and pride, it is often abused; even as when Christians attain to some good measure of holiness, it is in some respect more difficult to rest upon Christ's intercession, when we have liberty in prayer, than when we are in bonds, and under restraint. 2. Upon the other hand, if we look to a believer when he is straitned, and it goes not well with him in prayer; there is then ordinarily a great defect in making use of Christ's intercession, as if it could not in that case avail us; and upon this follows anxiety and fretting, and the believer is ready to conclude, he shall be nothing the better for prayer, and that it is better not to pray than to pray so; whereas an eye to Christ's intercession would give the mind some quietness. 3. If there be an ill and very necessitous case, or if there be accusations, and some commotion, discomposure and disquiet in the spirit, there is too often little respect to Christ; if quietness and calmness be, there is also hazard of sitting down on that, and we are too apt to forget that we hold it of him; and indeed it will be found difficult, when we have, or want these, in either the one case or the other to be making right use of his intercession.

Secondly, The causes of this sin, and whence it comes to pass, that people slight the use of Christ's intercession. 1. There is a great difficulty in it. 2. There is in us a natural averfeness to, and enmity against it. 3. There is a readiness to pitch on something else, and to mistake and overlook this. Now let all these three be put together, and we shall see the reason and way, how people fall into this fault.

1. I say there is a difficulty in the thing, it being one of the most purely spiritual sublime and self-denying things in all the gospel, and one of the greatest exercises of faith; and we know that all such things have to our nature a great difficulty. 1. It is a difficulty to bring a man to be but formal in religion. 2. There is a difficulty, when he is made formal to make him serious, even in a legal manner, and to be any thing affected with the exercise of repentance, and of other duties, so that he be not grossly dissembling. 3. When he is made thus serious, it is a difficulty to bring him from resting on that seriousness; and to prevent him from depending on these duties, which he hath performed. And therefore when the Lord hath once brought his disciples to pray, and to be sincerely engaged therein, he trains them on to pray in his name, and so to have their prayers rightly qualified.

2. If we consider our nature, we shall find that there is an averfeness and backwardness therein to it, as there is averfeness in us, to all things that tend to the making us deny ourselves, and lay the weight of every thing on Christ; this thwarts our pride, and goes not well down with us. Of such a nature is this; for our need of Christ's intercession implies, that we of ourselves are at a distance from God, that we have broken covenant, and are not to be trusted without a Mediator, and there is in our nature a secret sort of disdain of this, we cannot naturally endure it. Hence, Rom. x. it is said of the Jews, that being ignorant of God's righteousness, that they did not submit nor stoop to the same, but sought to establish their own righteousness.

3. There is a readiness to acknowledge almost any other sin, rather than this; and therefore people may be longer under it than under many other sins, and yet not accuse themselves for it, though they may for lying, swearing, sabbath-breaking, and the like, but they sleep more securely in this sin than in most others; it is a sin easily fallen into, and a sin not easily recovered from, or parted with, because it is a gospel-sin, that the light of nature reacheth not, and that the conscience doth not so easily convince of. It is against nature's light to neglect prayer, or to take God's name in vain, but this runs in the channel of the gospel, to pray in the name of Christ, and to make all our address to God through him. The sinful neglect thereof cannot be discovered, but by gospel-light, and we find by experience, that many will be convinced of, and have accusations of gross sins, who yet will have not to accuse themselves for the neglect of this duty; even as it is easier to convince people of a breach of the law, than of not believing in Christ; many will grant that ignorance of God is a sin, and that irreverence, and wandering in prayer are sins, who yet will stand and stick at this, and cannot be convinced, but that they still believe in Christ, and make use of his intercession.

For the third, to wit, the inconveniences and prejudices of this evil, they are very many. We shall only hint at them, for they are directly opposite to the good that is received by the improving of Christ's intercession. 1st, It makes many prayers to be fruitless and to no purpose, though people should weary themselves in prayer, yet it is all lost labour, and the Lord will say, as it is, Isaiah i. When ye make many prayers, yet I will not hear, if Christ's intercession be neglected; whereas but one word put up in Christ's name hath a gracious hearing. 2^{dly}, It makes many prayers, and other duties to be lifeless; no duties goes well with people, neither can it when Christ is slighted, seeing it is by faith in him, that we have life derived to us, whereby we are made lively in every thing. 3^{dly}, It hath much anxiety following on it, to be praying, and to have no expectation of a hearing; for if we look no further than to something in ourselves, it is but a poor foundation of quietness and peace. 4. It hath this prejudice, that it inures, habituates and accustoms us to a low esteem of Christ, and makes us want many sweet experiences that we might have of his usefulness.

nels and worth, and it entertains a disrespect of Christ, whereas the using of his intercession keeps up an esteem of him, and makes the thoughts of him refreshing, and it is very well with the soul while he is esteemed of, but it is impossible it can be well when he is not in request.

Now, ye may easily gather what all this aims at, even that ye may not satisfy yourselves with the form of duty, but that ye may look that it be rightly discharged, so as Christ in his offices, and particularly in his priestly office, and more particularly in this part of it, be made use of. It may be, there are some here that have been called Christians these 20, 30, or 40 years. But I would inquire of you, what use have ye made all the while of Christ's intercession? The neglect of this is a sin against mercy, a sin against your own souls, and the cause of many other sins: Therefore take it among others reproofs, that not only ye have neglected prayer, lived in ignorance, and taken his name in vain, but ye have also long professed faith in Christ, and yet have not made use of Christ's intercession; this will be amongst your saddest accusations when ye come to sickness, and to your death-beds, and ye will have it heavily charged on you, that there hath been great slighting, and ignorance of Christ, even when ye thought that ye were praying to him.

In the 4th place, To clear it yet further, we shall 1st, Hint at some symptoms or evidences of neglecting of Christ's intercession. 2^{dly}, At some characters of a person that is making use of Christ's intercession aright. 3^{dly}, At some directions that may help to the suitable performance of this duty, and, 4^{thly}, At some motives, and encouragements to it.

First, For the symptoms or evidences of disowning, and slighting of Christ's intercession. 1st, This is one, when there is little walking under the impression of the need of his sacrifice, when people walk without due conviction of the distance that is betwixt God and them; for Christ's intercession flows from his satisfaction, and the improving of his satisfaction flows from the conviction of our natural distance from God, when people are not sensible of their enmity, and of their vileness, and see not their need of washing, when they have a whole heart, and little exercise of repentance, and of self-loathing, it is a great evidence, that there is little or no use made of Christ's intercession. The 2^d symptom is deep security, and much self-confidence. Where these are, Christ's intercession is little, or not at all made use of, when a soul makes no question of, nor hath any doubt about its own peace, or about its praying, or having a hearing. This is indeed self-confidence, and does flow from the

the former, to wit, ignorance of our distance from God; which is clear both from experience, and from scripture. They that make least use of Christ's intercession, and have most carnal confidence, seldom condemn themselves; Thus the Pharisee stands, Luke xviii. and prays, saying, Lord, I thank thee, &c. The greatest part of most peoples prayers is this thanksgiving on carnal grounds, whereas the poor publican dare not come near; but when the Pharisee comes boldly forward, he stands afar off, and says, Lord, be merciful to me a sinner; who, as if he had said, hath a respect to the covenant of grace, and so to the improving of Christ's intercession. It is certainly an ill sign when people go with confidence to their prayers, and rise up from them without all fear of being denied, and said nay. A 3^d symptom of not making use of Christ's intercession, is, when people have too much anxiety, which is a fault that a believer may fall into, when he hath no ground from himself to propose to God why he should hear him, and when he cannot answer his own accusations, and is therefore discouraged; which says, that he trusts not much to Christ, and to his intercession. A 4th symptom is, when duties of worship become burdensome, when it wearieth people to pray, to sanctify the Lord's day, &c. when these are cumbersome to them; the reason whereof is, because they take the burden wholly, or mostly on themselves, and lay it not on Christ; whereas, were he rightly made use of, it would be found to be a truth, that his yoke is easy, and his burden light, as himself saith, Matth. xi. 30. A 5th symptom is, when people are not thankful for any mercy they receive, and are not wondering, how it comes that they have such mercies as they have, when they think little of their daily bread, of ordinances, of access to God in prayer, &c. Souls that are improving Christ's intercession think much of any mercy, because the least mercy is quite without the reach of the merit of ought they can do, and must come to them by the mediation of another.

As to the 2^d, to wit, the characters or evidences of a person making use of Christ's intercession. The first may be this, a constant using of Christ's satisfaction, when the soul is never quiet, but when it hath a respect to it, when it doth always either implicitly or more expressly use his intercession, and leaves the stress of duties and mercies upon him; hence a soul will be under thorough conviction of its enmity, and very eager in its desire after peace, and will have expectation of obtaining it through him. A second evidence is, when people in their approaches to God, have faith and fear going together; anxiety and fear without faith are not good, and self-confidence without fear is as ill; but when faith and fear go together, they are good. Fear that arises from the impression of our own unworthiness, and discovered distance, and faith from the discovery of Christ's fullness, keeping the mind in peace, looking over its own unworthiness to his worthiness, like that spoken of Noah, Heb. xi. By faith, Noah moved with fear, prepared an ark: Presumption will not admit of fear; and therefore, when the hypocrite's hope fails him, he turns anxious; because the ground that he depends on is shaken: Neither is that which is supposed to be faith, good, without fear, for it turns to security; but fear is good, having confidence mixed with it; for it says, that there is a trusting to somewhat else, rather than any thing that is in the soul. Thirdly, They that make a right use of Christ's intercession, betake themselves to it, when in a manner they have given over, and been formerly hopeless, like those spoken of, Psal. cvii. Then they cry in their distress, &c. many have confidence, because they were never disturbed nor shaken, and have attained to quietness this way, even as it is in the matter of making peace with God, many will profess that they always had it, even from their youth up, they never doubted of it, which speaks its unsoundness; but it is a solid evidence of faith, when the soul hath once been alarmed and shaken; and this gives it confidence, that Christ hath satisfied, and makes intercession, and they betake themselves to that. Fourthly, Where Christ's intercession is improved and made use of, it will be ground of rejoicing, and comfort to think on it, when souls themselves can do little, being bound up, and under bonds; yet they cheer themselves, and bless God, that they know that they have an Advocate. I apprehend there are many to whom it was never refreshing, nor matter of gladness, that he is an Advocate; or that he stands in such a relation to plead for sinners, surely such have not made use of him. A fifth evidence is this, When any thing is attained, the improving of Christ's intercession makes persons thankful and humble, if the soul have liberty, it is not puffed up with it, because it considers, that it is a mercy come through Christ's intercession, it hath received it, and therefore should not boast; it is not of its own procurement, but it is obliged to free grace for it. Sixthly, The soul that is improving Christ's intercession, when it obtains not, it gives not over, but continues adhering to him and waiting for attaining of that which he is seeking; the case of such a person is never quite desperate; because, tho' he obtain not to day, he knows it is possible to attain tain it at another time. Seventhly, It is a difficulty to the believer, to have Christ's intercession rightly depended on, and made use of when he prays; this is as great a difficulty to him, as to be furnished with words, and greater. As it is one part of his concern in prayer, to have words, affection, and reverence, so likewise it is another part of his concern to have his prayer accepted thro' Christ's intercession. It is here as in justification; its one part of his exercise to do duty, and another part of his exercise not to depend on it, but betake himself to Christ's righteousness only, for his acceptance; but other persons that make not use of Christ's intercession, if they have words, and any appearance of affection, they think all is well enough; but it is a believer's exercise, to see that his mind miscarry not on his dependance on Christ. Eighthly, Souls that are improving Christ's intercession, their confidence is not up or down, according to their liberty, words or reasons which they attain to in prayer, but they are pleased or displeased, according as they have committed what they seek to Christ. Hence a word or look will sometimes quiet the soul, when at another time many hours prayer will not do it. For this is sure, so long as we rest on ourselves, the soul has never true peace; and that which makes us depend on Christ, is the exercise of faith, and not liberty, nor the multitude of words; at another time a believer will rise from prayer, and not seriously look, whether Christ hath been depended on, or not, but is quiet, because he hath prayed; whereas, when Christ's intercession is improved, he is satisfied on that ground, that it is God that is prayed to, through Christ; it is that which gives him ground of confident to expect an answer, and on that his soul rests, when he hath done praying. And therefore we would commend this to you, in the place of many questions that might be moved from what ye have heard, even to carry a distinct answer in your bosom to these two things, whether when ye are going to pray, or when ye have done with prayer, 1. To whom are ye to pray, or have ye been praying to? Was it the great God, that one God, the maker of all things, who ought alone to be worshipped, that being properly and formally the object of your worship, and particularly of this your prayer. 2. Upon what ground do ye venture to put up a suit to this great God, and what is it that gives you confidence to expect an answer? It is not for any righteousness or worth in yourselves, or in your prayers, but for Jesus Christ, for his satisfaction and intercession's sake. When we can give a distinct answer from our conscience, in reference to these two, tho' there be no such distinctdistinctness in other things, to wit, that it is God ye pray to; and that ye expect a hearing on Christ's account, it is right.

For the third thing, What is it that will help us to make use of Christ's intercession? First, consider that it is our duty: Souls often mind not, that God hath not simply bid them pray, but commanded them to pray in the name of Christ; he hath not bid you simply approach to him, but to approach to him in and by Christ. This should be remembered, else we forget the half of our duty, to wit, the manner how we should come to God, which is a main, if not the main part of it. Secondly, We should remember, and think upon our condition by nature, that upon the one side, God is a consuming fire, and we on the other, like dry stubble, and that there is no approaching to him, without a Mediator. There were the less hazard of going wrong, if people were walking under the suitable impression of their sinfulness and misery by nature; the want whereof makes too much forwardness, in approaching to God without Christ. Therefore we commend to you all, and especially when ye go to prayer, to endeavour to be under deep impressions of your own sinfulness and baseness; as we see it was with Abraham, Gen. xviii. Behold, now I have taken on me to speak to the Lord, who am dust and ashes. Thirdly, Remember the promise of God's hearing you thro' Christ, and his promise of leading you in all necessary truth, and always perform duty in this manner. Mind, I say, 1st, The promise of hearing, that it is not a promise to hear simply in what we pray for, but in what we pray for with other requisite qualifications of prayer, and with this in particular, that it be in Christ's name; hence is, asking in his name, so often mentioned, John xiv. 13, 14. and xvi. 23, 24, 26. To remember that there is a promise of hearing, draws a soul to pray to God, and to consider that the promise is made to praying thus qualified, to wit, that it be in Christ's name, it binds the soul to this method; because otherwise it forfeits the promise, if it observe not the due qualification. I fear there are too many, who look on the promise as absolute. It is true, tho' there are absolute promises in the covenant, yet there are other promises that have qualifications and conditions, whereof this concerning hearing of prayer is one, and we are to expect the performance of the promise, when we seek after the qualification and condition. 2dly, Remember Christ's promise whereby as he hath engaged, to lead us in all necessary truth; so he has required us, to put up your prayers in his name, John xvi. 24, In that daye ye shall ask in my name, &c. To consider aright of this promise, gives some ground of confidence to attain the performance of it, and keeps the soul in dependance on him, and makes it to be easy in the duty of improving Christ's intercession; and this is a main part of religion. Learn therefore to put these things together. 1. Think it a mercy that ye have a warrant and leave to pray. 2. That ye have a promise to be heard. 3. That ye have a Mediator to interceed for you. 4. That a promise is given you to learn how to make use of him, and that though the use of his intercession be difficult, and many do mistake it, yet by the eyeing of the promise, ye may attain to the right use thereof; ye should by all means eye the promise, that ye be not mistaken; it may be there is a look now and then to liberty, and it is good in itself, but there may be a defect here; that ye look not to Christ to be helped, to pray with liberty, and to be guided to pray in his name, so as to lay the stress of your being heard on his intercession.

4^{thly}, When there hath been an eyeing of the promise, not only for the thing we seek, but also to be guided in the seeking of it, ye should be often taking a review of yourselves in, and after prayer, whether ye be indeed praying, and have prayed in Christ's name, that when the soul looks back, and sees that it hath much neglected Christ, it may observe itself in this evil, and disclaim it, and settle itself on a right foundation. In a word, there should be looking well on the one side, that Jesus Christ be the foundation we build on, and on the other side, that when we eye Christ, and build on him, we be not afraid to venture ourselves on him. For into one of these extremes we readily run, either to trust to some other thing else rather than Christ, or, if we see no thing else to trust to, and be necessitated to eye him, we distrust him, and are loath to trust to him.

5^{thly}, And lastly, if we consider well, we shall see good ground, 1st, to press, 2^d. to encourage us to this way, not to be doing duty only, as men under the law, but as Christians, men under the gospel, with respect to Christ's satisfaction and intercession. And First, For pressing it, consider that there is a necessity of it in reference to as many prayers as are accepted of God. If it be necessary to have a hearing. It is necessary to pray in Christ's name. It may be many think it to be but an indifferent thing, that we have been pressing, all the while that we have been speaking of Christ's intercession; but indeed it is of more moment, that our pressing you to any external duty of prayer; for the external duty of prayer, though it must needs be performed, is yet but the carcase; this is the soul and life of prayer, and therefore let me exhort and beseech you, never to satisfy yourselves with a legal performance of the most spiritual duties in themselves, except ye attain to a Christian way of them; that is, that they be done in Christ's strength, that ye rest on him, for the acceptance of them; it is as necessary to worship God in and by the Mediator, as it is to worship the only true God, and not to worship a false or strange God. I make no question but most part of the hearers of the gospel do destroy themselves here, by resting on their legal performances, and not making use of Christ. Secondly, For your encouragement, consider that it is most advantageous and profitable. These words in the promise are broad and full, Whatever ye ask in my name, I will do it; and the promise is frequently repeated in those forecited chapters of John; O! What calmness, tranquillity, peace, and victory over anxiety, what patience in waiting, whether when in bonds or liberty, do flow from the exercising of faith on this ground, to wit, that we have an advocate in heaven with the Father! Further consider the great ground of confidence that hath been given us, that we shall speed in this way, which would stir us up, and encourage us to it, which will manifestly appear, if we join these two together. 1. That this blessed advocate is our brother, that he was made like unto us in all things except sin, that he is a fellow-feeling High-priest, that is touched with our infirmities, that he refuseth to grant no suits of his people, that are for his glory, and their good; that he saves all to the uttermost that come unto God by him; none could ever say, that he refused to take their cause in hand, when they indeed committed it to him, it cannot but be successful; for as he is man, so he is God, and he is heard always: This blessed Mediator (as I just now said) refuseth the suit of none, and no suit is refused him. And now, what can we say more to you, for your encouragement to make use of him? It is no stranger that we have to go to; and there is good ground of confidence, that when we go, we shall succeed; therefore let him be resorted unto more and more, and bless God heartily, that he hath given such an High-priest unto sinners, Who is able to save to the uttermost, all that come unto God through him. To this God, who can effectually teach us to make use of the Mediator every way, and particularly in his intercession, suitably and successfully; and, who is able to do exceeding abundantly above all we ask or think, according to the power that worketh in us, be glory in the church by Christ Jesus, throughout all ages, world without end. Amen.
