AN

EXPOSITION,

WITH

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS,

OF THE PROPHECY OF

HAGGAI.

The captivity of Babylon gave a very remarkable turn to the affairs of the Jewish church, both in history and prophecy. It is made a signal epocha in our Saviour's genealogy, Matth. 1. 17. Nine of the twelve minor prophets, whose oracles we have been hitherto consulting, lived and preached before their captivity, and most of them had an eye to it in their prophecies, foretelling it as the just punishment of Jerusalem's wickedness. But the three last (in whom the Spirit of prophecy took its period, until it revived in Christ's forerunner) lived and preached after the return out of captivity; not immediately upon it, but some time after. Haggai and Zechariah appeared much about the same time, eighteen years after the return, when the building of the temple was both retarded by its enemies, and neglected by its friends. Then the prophets, Haggai the prophet, and Zechariah the son of Iddo, prophesied unto the Jews that were in Jerusalem, in the name of the God of Israel, even unto them, (so we read Ezra v. 1.) to reprove them for their remissness, and to encourage them to revive that good work when it had stood still for some time, and to go on with it vigorously, notwithstanding the opposition they met with in it. Haggai began two months before Zechariah, who was raised up to second him, that out of the mouth of two witnesses the word might be established. But Zechariah continued longer at the work; for all Haggai's prophecies, that are recorded, were delivered within four months, in the second year of Darius, between the beginning of the sixth month and the end of the ninth. But we have Zechariah's prophecies dated above two years after, Zech. vii. 1. Some have the honour to lead, others to last, in the work of God. The Jews ascribe to these two prophets the honour of being members of the Great Synagogue, (as they call it,) which was formed after the return out of captivity; we think it more certain, and it was their honour, and a much greater honour, that they prophesied of Christ. Haggai spoke of him as the Glory of the latter house, and Zechariah as the Man, the Branch. In them the light of that Morning-Star shone more bright than in the foregoing prophets, as they lived nearer the time of the rising of the Sun of righteousness, and now began to see his day approaching. The LXX. make Haggai and Zechariah to be the penman of Ps. cxvii. and of Ps. cxlv. cxlvii. and cxlviii.

HAGGAI, I.

CHAP. I.

In this chapter, after the preamble of the prophecy, we have, 1. A reproach of the people of the Jews for their dilatoriness and slothfulness in building the temple, which had provoked God to contend with them by the judgment of famine and scarcity; with an exhortation to them to resume that good work, and to prosecute it in good earnest, v. 1., 11. The good success of this sermon, appearing in the people's return and close application to that work, wherein the prophet, in God's name, animated and encouraged them, assuring them that God was with them, v. 12., 15.

1. In the second year of Darius the king, in the sixth month, in the first day of the month, came the word of the Lord, by Haggai the prophet, unto Zerubbabel the son of Shealtiel, governor of Judah, and to Joshua the son of Josedech, the high priest, saying, 2. Thus speaketh the Lord of hosts, saying, This people say, The time is not come, the time that the Lord's house should be built. 3. Then came the word of the Lord by Haggai the prophet, saying, 4. Is it time for you, O ye, to dwell in your ceiled houses, and this house lie waste?
5. Now, therefore, thus saith the Lord of hosts, Consider your ways. 6. Ye have sown much, and bring in little; ye eat, but ye have not enough; ye drink, but ye are not filled with drink; ye clothe you, but there is none warm; and he that earneth wages, earneth wages to put it into a bag with holes. 7. Thus saith the Lord of hosts, Consider your ways. 8. Go up to the mountain, and bring wood, and build the house; and I will take pleasure in it, and I will be glorified, saith the Lord. 9. Ye looked for much, and lo, it came to little; and when ye brought it home, I did blow upon it. Why? saith the Lord of hosts. Because of my house that is waste, and ye run every man unto his own house. 10. Therefore the heaven over you is stayed from dew, and the earth is stayed from her fruit. 11. And I called for a drought upon the land, and upon the mountains, and upon the corn, and upon the new wine, and upon the oil, and upon that which the ground bringeth forth, and upon men, and upon cattle, and upon all the labour of the hands.

It was the complaint of the Jews in Babylon, that they saw not their signs, and there was no more any prophet, (Ps. Ixxiv. 9.) which was a just judgment upon them for minding and misusing the prophets. We read of no prophets they had in their return, as there were in their coming out of Egypt. Hos. i. 10. God stirred them up immediately by his Spirit to exert themselves in that escape; (Exod. i. 5.) for though God makes use of prophets, he needs them not, he can do his work without them. But the lamp of Old Testament prophecy shall yet make some bright and glorious efforts before it expire; and Haggai is the first that appears under the character of an especial messenger to declare the word of the Lord had been long foretold, (as when prophecy began, 1 Sam. iii. 1.) and there had been no other vision. In the reign of Darius Hystaspes, the third of the Persian kings, in the second year of his reign, the prophet was sent; and the word of the Lord came to him, and came by him, to the leading men among the Jews, who are here named, v. 1. The chief governor. 1. In the state; that was Zerubbabel, the son of Shealtiel, of the house of David, who was commander-in-chief of the Jews, in their return out of captivity. 2. In the church; and that was Joshua the son of Josedech, who was now high priest. They were great men, and good men, and yet were to be stirred up to their duty when they grew remiss. What the people also were faulty in they must be told of, that they might use their power and interest for the 경우에는 of it. The prophets, who were extraordinary messengers, did not go about to set aside the ordinary institutions of magistracy and ministry, but endeavoured to render both more effectual for the ends to which they were appointed, for both ought to be supported. Now observe,

I. What the sin of the Jews was at this time, v. 2. As soon as they came up out of captivity, they set up an altar for sacrifice, and within a year after laid the foundations of a temple, (Ezra iii. 10.) they then seemed very forward in it, and it was likely enough that the work would be done suddenly; but being served with a prohibition some time after from the Persian court, and charged not to go on with it, they not only yielded to the force, when they were actually under it, which might be excused, but, afterward, when the violence of the opposition was abated, they continued very indifferent to it. had no spirit or courage to set about it again, but seemed glad that they had a pretence to do it. Thus it stood. Then how could God, being offended for God, be driven off from their work by storm, yet they must return to it as soon as the storm is over. These here did not so, but continued loitering, until they were refreshed and reminded of their duty. And that which they suggested one to another was, The time is not come, the time that the Lord's house should be built; that is, 1. Our time, for we have not the money yet recovered, after our captivity, our losses are not repaired, nor have we yet got beforehand in the world; it is too great an undertaking for new beginners in the world, as we are; let us first get our own houses up, before we talk of building churches; and in the mean time let a bare altar serve us, as it did our father Abraham. They did not say that they would not build a temple at all, but, 'Not yet: it is all in good time.' Note, Many a good word is put by being put off, as Felix put off the prosecution of his convictions to a more convenient season. They do not say that they will never repent and reform, and be religious, but, 'Not yet.' And so the great business we were sent into the world to do, is not done, under pretence that it is all in good time; there is no out of it. 2. 'The Lord's house is not, the doing of it; for (say they) the restraint laid upon us by authority in a legal way is not broken off, therefore we ought not to proceed, though there be a present connivance of authority.' Note, There is an aptness in us to misinterpret providential discouragements in our duty, as if they amounted to a discharge from our duty; when they are only intended for the trial and exercise of our courage and faith. It is bad to neglect our duty, but it is worse to vouch Providence for the patronizing of our neglects.

II. What the judgments of God were, by which they were punished for this neglect, v. 6. 9. 11. They neglected the building of God's house, and put that off, that they might have time and money to mend their secular affairs; and the second cause was, they were not suffered to have a sufficient income to turn to the work; they were called to a more expensive piece of work, under this pretence, that they must provide for their families; their children must have meat and portions too, and until they had got beforehand in the world, they cannot think of rebuilding the temple. Now that the punishment might answer to the sin, God in his providence kept them still behindhand. And that poverty which they thought to prevent by not building the temple, God brought upon them for not building it. They were sensible of the smart of the judgments, and every one complained of the unseasonable weather, and the great losses they sustained in their corn and cattle, and the decay of trade; but they were not sensible of the cause of the judgment, and the ground of God's controversy with them; they did not, or would not, see and own that it was for their putting off of the building of the temple that they lay under these manifest tokens of God's displeasure; and therefore God here gives them notice that this was it for which he contended with them. Note, We need the help of God's prophets and ministers to expand to us, not only the judgments of God's mouth, but the judgments of his hands, that we may understand his mind and meaning in his doings as well as in his words. It discovers to us, not only wherein we have offended God, but wherein God shows himself offended at us. Let us observe,

1. How God contended with them. He did not send them into captivity again, nor bring a foreign enemy upon them, as they deserved, but took the correcting of them into his own hands; for his mercies are great. (1.) He that giveth seed to the sower, doth not bless imposition upon the seed sow'd, and then it never prospered; they had nothing, or next to nothing, from it. They sowed much, v. 6. kept a deal of ground in tillage, which, they might expect, would turn to a better advantage than usual, because their land had long lain fallow, and had enjoyed its sabbaths. Having sowed much, they looked for much from it, but it withered; not withered so that they were disappointed; they bring in little, very little; (v. 6.) when they have made the utmost of it, it comes to little; (v. 9.) it did not yield as they expected, Isa. v. 10. The seed of an honest shall yield an ephah, a bushel's sowing shall yield a peck. Note, Our expectations from the creatures are often most frustrated when they are most raised; and then we look for much it could not bring, that to expectation may be from God only, in whom it will be outdone. We are here told how they came to be disappointed; (v. 10.) The heaven over you is zaid from dew; he that has the key of the clouds in his hands, shut them up, and withheld the rain, when the ground called for it, the former or the latter rain, and then of course the earth would have been dry. This is what the natural man does when he changes the appointment of God, and as brass, the earth is as iron. The corn perhaps came up very well, and promised a very plentiful crop, but, for want of the dews at eating-time, it never filled, but was parched with the heat of the sun, and withered away. The restored captives, who had long been kept bare in Babylon, thought they should never want, when they had got their own land possession again, had that at command too. But what the better are they for it, unless they had the clouds at command too; God will make us sensible of our necessary and constant dependence upon him, throughout all the links in the chain of second causes, from first to last; so that we can at no time say, "Now we have no further occasion for God and his providence." See Hos. ii. 21. But God not only withheld the cooling rains, but he appointed the scorching heats, (v. 11.) called for a drought upon the land, ordered the weather to be extremely hot, and then the fruits of the earth were burnt up. See how every creature is that to us, that God makes it to be, either comfortable or afflictive, serving us, or incommoding us. Nothing among the interior creatures is so necessary to the world as the heat of the sun; that is it that puts life into the plants, and reneweth the face of the earth at spring. And yet, if that go into an extreme, it undoes all again. Our Creator is our best Friend; but if we make him our Enemy, we make the best friends we have among the creatures our enemies too. This drought God calls for, and it came at the call; as the winds and the water are at the call of the mastiff; it was universal, and the ill effects of it were general; it was a drought upon the mountains, which, lying high, were first affected with it, the mountains were their pastures-ground, and used to be covered over with flocks, but now there is no grass for them. It was upon the corn, the new wine, and the oil; all failed through the extremity of the hot weather, even all, as the rays of the sun, obey him, it was withered. Nay, it had a bad influence upon men; the hot weather ensheathed some, and made them weary and faint, and spent their spirits; it inflamed others, and put them into fevers. It should seem it brought diseases upon cattle too. In short, it spoiled all the labour of their hands, which they hoped to eat of, and maintain their families by. Note, Meat for the belly shall not be in vain in the Lord, if we labour for the meat which endures to eternal life. For the hand of the diligent, in the business of religion, will infallibly make rich, whereas, in the business of this life, the most industrious often lose the labour of their hands. The race is not to the swift, nor the battle to the strong. (2.) He that gives bread to the eater, denied his blessing upon the bread they ate, and then that did not nourish them. The cause of the withering and failing of the corn in the field was vinden was for want of rain; but, beside that, there was great heat, and a scorching wind, which they brought home. (1.) When they had it in the barn, they were not sure of it; I did blow upon it, saith the Lord of hosts, (v. 9.) and that withered it, as buds are sometimes blasted in the spring by a spring frost, which we see the effects of; but know not the way of. I did blow it away; so the margin reads it, which is much for the completion of his answer, which they brought home. (2.) When they had it upon the board, it was not that to them that they expected; "Ye eat, but ye have not enough, either because the meat is wavy, and not satisfying, or because the stomach is greedy, and would not be content without it; or, because you have not a sufficient digestion, and so are not nourished by it, nor does it answer the end, or you have not enough, because you are not content, nor think it enough. Ye drink, but are not cooled and refreshed by it, ye are stinck, and have not enough to quench your thirst. The new wine is cut off from your mouth, (Isa. i. 5.) nay, and you drink your water to be measured, and with astonishment; you have no comfort of it, because you have not a plenty of it, but are still in fear of falling short. (3.) That which they had upon their bags, did them no good there; "Ye clothe you, but there is none warm, your clothes so soon wear out, and are old, and grow thin, because God blows upon them; contrary to what Israel's did in the wilderness when God blessed them, and God knows that money is a common reward, and men warm us upon us when he quicks the earth Job xxxix. 17. (4.) That which they had in their bags, which was not laid out, but laid up, they were not sure of; he that earns wages by hard labour, and has it paid him in ready current money, puts it into a bag with holes; it drops through, and wastes away insensibly. Everything is so scarce and dear, that their spend (Isa. iv. 14.) money as fast as they get it. These that lay up their treasure on earth, put it into a bag with holes; they lose it as they go along, and they that come after them pick it up. But if we lay up our treasure in heaven, we provide for ourselves bags that wax not old, Luke xii. 33. 2. Observe wherefore God thus contended with them, and stopped the current of the favours promised them, that they might improve the gift of God that makes life rich as fast as they get it. These that lay up their treasure on earth, put it into a bag with holes; they lose it as they go along, and they that come after them pick it up. But if we lay up our treasure in heaven, we provide for ourselves bags that wax not old, Luke xii. 33.
only find them, but are most likely to have other things added to them, so they who neglect and postpone those things, will not only lose them, but will justly have other things taken away from them. And if God cross us in our temporal affairs, and we meet with trouble and disappointment, we shall find this is the reason. We dare not be assured that God's own left undone, and we seek our own things more than the things of Jesus Christ, Phil. ii. 21.

III. The reproach which the prophet gives them for their neglect of the temple-work, (v. 4.) "It is time for you, O ye, to dwell in your ceiled houses, to have them beautiful and adorned, and your families settled in them. They are not content with walls and roofs for necessity, but they must have for giaty and fancy. "It is high time," says one, "that my house were wainscotted." "It is high time," says another, "that mine were painted." And God's house, all this time, lies waste, and nothing is done in it. "What," says the prophet, "is it time that you should have your honour pleased, and not time you should have your God pleased?"

How much is there in the reverse of David's, who could not be easy in his house of cedar, while the ark of God was in curtains, (2 Sam. vii. 2.) and of Solomon, who built the temple of God, before he built a palace for himself. Note, Those are very many strangers to their own interest, who prefer the conveniences and ornaments of the temporal life before the absolute necessities of the spiritual life, who are full of care to enrich their own houses, while God's temple in their hearts lies waste, and nothing is done for it or in it.

IV. The good counsel which the prophet gives to them who thus despised God, and whom God was therefore justly displeased with.

1. He would have them reflect; Now therefore consider your ways, (v. 5.) and again, v. 7. Be sensible of the hand of God gone out against you, and inquire into the reason; think what you have done, that has provoked God thus to break in upon your comforts; and think what you will do, to testify your repentance, that God may return in mercy to you. Note, It is the great concern of every one of us, to consider our ways; to set our hearts to our ways, (so the word is,) to think on our ways, (Ps. cxix. 59.) to search and try them, (Ps. li. 3.) to consider them, (Ps. cvi.) and to consider the end thereof, (Prov. iv. 26.) to apply our minds with all seriousness to the great and necessary duty of self-examination, and commencing with our own hearts concerning our spiritual state, our sins that are past, and our duty for the future; for sin is what we must answer for, duty is what we must do; about these therefore we must be inquisitive, rather than about events which we must leave to God. Many are quick-sighted to pry into other people's ways, who are very careless of their own; whereas our concern is to prove every one his own work, Gal. vi. 4.

2. He would have them reform; (v. 8.) "Go up to the mountain, to Lebanon, and bring wood, and other materials that are wanting, and build the house with all speed, put it off no longer, but set to it in good earnest." Many are quick-sighted of other people's ways, and slow at amended of whatever we find amiss in them. If any duty has been long neglected, that is not a reason why it should still be so, but why now at length it should be revived; better late than never. For their encouragement to apply themselves in good earnest to this work, he assures them, (1.) That they should be accepted of him in his ways, that they were willing to spend and be spent, and that was encouragement enough to apply themselves to it with alacrity and resolution, and to go through with it, whatever it cost them. Note, Whatever God will take pleasure in, when it is done, we ought to take pleasure in the doing of, and to reckon that indulgence enough to set about it, and go on with it in good earnest; for what greater satisfaction can we have in our own bosoms than in contributing any thing toward that which God will take pleasure in? It ought to have b. on the top of our list of things to be done, that nothing be neglected which is likely to be received of God. Though they had foolishly neglected the house of God, yet, if at length they will resume the care of it, God will not remember against them their former neglects, but will take pleasure in the work of their hands. Those who have long deferred their return to God, if at length they return with all their heart, must not despair of his favour; (2.) That he would have them make haste to set God's name in their mouths, (as the Lord their God had sent him,) and the people did fear before the Lord. 13. Then spake Haggai, the Lord's messenger, in the Lord's message unto the people, saying, I am with you, saith the Lord. 14. And the Lord stirred up the spirit of Zerubbabel the son of Shealtiel, and Joshua the son of Josedech, the high priest, with all the remnant of the people, obeyed the voice of the Lord their God, and the words of Haggai the prophet, (as the Lord their God had sent him,) and the people did fear before the Lord. 15. In the fourth and twentieth day of the sixth month, in the second year of Darius the king.

As an ear-ring of gold, (says Solomon,) and an ornament of fine gold, so valuable, so acceptable, in the sight of God and man, is a wise reprover after an obedient ear, Prov. xxv. 12. The prophet here was a wise but faithful reprover, in God's name, and he met with an obedient ear. The foregoing sermon met with the desired success among the people, and that met with due encouragement from God. Observe,

1. How the people returned to God in a way of duty. All those to whom that sermon was preached, received the word in the love of it, and were wrought upon by it. Zerubbabel, the chief governor, did not think himself above the check and command of God's word; he was a man that had been eminently useful in his day, and serviceable to the interest of the church, yet did not plead his former merits, in answer to this reproof for his present remissness, but submitted to it. Joshua's business, as high priest, was to teach, and yet he was willing himself to be taught, and willingly received admonition and instruction. The remnant of the people, (and the whole body of them was but a remnant; in very few of the many thousands of Israel,) they also were very pliable, they all obeyed the voice of the Lord their God, and bowed their neck to the yoke of his commands, that he might take care of his honour, v. 12. Their father said, Sons, go work to-day in my vineyard, in my temple; and they no only say, We go, sir, but they went immediately.

(1.) They looked upon the prophet to be the Lord's messenger, and the word he delivered to th Lord's message to them: and therefore received it, not as the word of man, but as the word of Almighty God; they obeyed his words, as the Lord their God had sent him, v. 12. Note, In attending to God's ministers, we must have an eye to him that sent them, and receive them for his sake, while they act according to their commission.

(2.) They did fear before the Lord. Prophecy was a new thing with them. They had had no special messenger from heaven of a great while, and therefore now that they had one, and but one, they paid an extraordinary regard to him; whereas their fathers, who had many prophets, mocked and misused them. It is sometimes so, that when good preaching is most scarce, it does most good, whereas the many that is raised in plenty, isgetrout. I may not say that they saw with their own sin to be the cause of those judgments, then they feared. Note, A holy fear of God will have a great influence upon our obedience to him. Serve the Lord with fear; if we fear him not, we shall not serve him.

(3.) The Lord stirred up their spirits, v. 14. [1.] He excited them to their duty, and put it into their hearts to go about it. Note, Then the word of God has its success, when God by his grace stirs up our spirits to comply with it; and without that grace we should remain stupid, and utterly averse to everything that is good. It is in the day of a divine power that we are made willing. [2.] He encouraged them in their duty, and with those encouragements enlarged their hearts, Ps. cxix. 32. When they heard the word, they feared; but, lest they should sink under the weight of that fear, God stirred them up, and made them cheerful and bold to encounter the difficulties they might meet with. Note, When God has work to do, he will either find a way, or make a way; and such he made, 1. In this case, v. 15.

(4.) They applied themselves to their work with all possible vigour; They came, and did work in the house of the Lord, their God, every one, according as his capacity or ability was, lent a hand, some way or other, to further that good work; and this they did with an eye to God as the Lord of hosts, and as their God, the God of Israel. The consideration of God's sovereign dominion of the world by his providence, and his covenant-relationship to his people by his grace, should stir up our spirits to act for him, and for the advancement of the interest of his kingdom among men, to the utmost of our power.

(5.) They did this speedily; it was but on the first day of the sixth month that Haggai preached them this sermon, and by the twenty-fourth of the same month, little more than three weeks after, they were all busy, working in the house of the Lord their God, v. 15. To show that they were ashamed of their delays hitherto, now that they were convinced and called, they were resolved to delay no longer, but to strike while the iron was hot, and to set about the work while they were under convictions. Note, Those that have lost time, have need to redeem time; and the longer we have loitered in that which is good, when we are convinced of our folly, the more haste we should make.

2. How God met them in a way of mercy. The same prophet that brought them the reproach, brought them a very comfort, encouraging word; (v. 13.) Then spake Haggai, the Lord's messenger, in the Lord's message, in his name, and as from him, saying, I am with you, saith the Lord. That is all he has to say, and that is enough; as that word of Christ to his disciples is, (Matt. xxvii. 20.) Lo, I am with you always, even to the end of the world. I am with you; I will forgive your neglects hitherto, and they shall not be remembered against you; I will remove the judgments you have been under for those neglects, and will appear for you, as I have in them appeared against you. I am with you, to protect you against your enemies that bear ill will to your work, and to prosper you, and to give you success in it; with you, to strengthen your hands, and the hand of them that are with you, and to bless the work of your hands. Note, Those that work for God have with them; and if he be for us, who can be against us? If he be with us, what difficulty can stand before us?

CHAP. II.

In this chapter, we have three sermons preached by the prophet Haggai, for the encouragement of those that are forward to do good work for God. I. The Lord sends the builders that the glory of the house they were now building should, in spiritual respects, though not in outward, exceed that of Solomon's temple, in which he has an eye to the coming of Christ, v. 1. 2. He assures them that though their sin, in delaying to build the temple, had retarded the prosperous progress of all their other affairs, yet now that they had set about it in good earnest, he would bless them, and give them success; v. 10, 19. In the third, he assures Zerubbabel that, as a reward of his pious zeal and activity herein, he should be a favourite of Heaven, and one of the ancestors of Messiah the Prince, whose kingdom should be set up on the ruins of all opposing powers, v. 20, 23.

1. In the seventh month, in the one and twentieth day of the month, came the word of the Lord by the prophet Haggai, saying, 2. Speak now to Zerubbabel the son of Shealtiel, governor of Judah, and to Joshua the son of Josedeck, the high priest, and to the residue of the people, saying, 3. Who is left among you that saw this house in her first glory? and how do ye see it now? is it not in your eyes in comparison of it as nothing? 4. Yet now be strong, O Zerubbabel, saith the Lord; and be strong, O Joshua son of Josedeck, the high priest; and be strong, all ye people of the land, saith the Lord, and work: for I am with you, saith the Lord of hosts. 5. According to the word that I covenanted with you, when ye came out of Egypt, so my Spirit remaineth among you: fear ye not. 6. For thus saith the Lord of hosts, Yet once, it is a little while, and I will shake the heavens, and the earth, and the sea, and the dry land; 7. And I will shake all nations and the Desire of all nations shall come, and I will fill this house with glory, saith the Lord of hosts. 8. The silver is mine and the gold is mine, saith the Lord of hosts. 9. The glory of this latter house shall be greater than of the former, saith the Lord of hosts: and in this place will I give peace, saith the Lord of hosts.
Here is,
I. The date of this message, v. 1. It was sent on the twenty-first day of the seventh month, when the builders had been about a month at work, (since the twenty-fourth day of the sixth month,) and had got it is proud forwardness. Note, Those that are laborious in the service of God shall receive fresh encouragements from him to proceed in it, as their case calls for them. Set the wheels agoing, and God will oil them.

II. The direction of this message, v. 2. The encouragements here are sent to the same persons to whom the precepts in the foregoing chapter are directed; for they that are guided by the convic\-tive word, shall be healed and bound up by his consolations. Speak to Zerubbabel and Joshua, and the residue of the people, the very same that obeyed the voice of the Lord, (ch. i. 12.) and whose spirits God stirred up to do so; (ch. i. 14.) to them are sent these words of comfort.

III. The message itself. In which observe,
1. The discouragements which they laboured under, who were employed in this work; that which was such a damp upon them, and an alloy to their joy, when the foundation of the temple was laid, was still a clog upon them—that they could not build such a temple now as Solomon built, not so large, so stately, so sumptuous a one as that was. This fetched tears from the eyes of many, when the dimensions of it were first laid; (Ezra iii. 12.) and still it made the laborers and their brethren with the great disparity between this house and that, one could remember the gold with which it was overlaid; another the precious stones with which it was garnished; one could describe the magnificence of the porch, another of the pillars—and where are these now? This weakened the hands of the builders; for though our gracious God is pleased with us, if we do in sincerity as well as we can in our service, yet must we needs be pleased, not only with ourselves, unless we do as well as others, whose abilities far exceed ours. And it is sometimes the fault of old people, to discourage the services of the present age, by crying up too much the performances and attainments of the former age; with which others should be provoked to emulation, but not exposed to contempt. Say not thou, that the former days were better than these, (Eccles. vii. 10.) but think God that there is any good in these, bad as they are.

2. The encouragement that is given them to go on in the work, notwithstanding; (v. 4.) Yet now, though this house is likely to be much inferior to the former, yet be strong, O Zerubbabel, and be strong, O Joshua. Let not these leading men give way to this suggestion, or be disheartened by it, but do as well as they can, when they cannot do so well as they would; and let all the people of the land be strong too, and work; and if the leaders have but a good heart on it, it is hoped that the followers will have the better heart. Note, Those that work for God ought to exert themselves with vigour, and then to encourage themselves with hope that it will end well.

3. The grounds of these encouragements. God himself says to them, Fear ye not; (v. 5.) and he gives good reason for it.

1. They have God with them, his Spirit and his special presence; Be strong, for I am with you, saith the Lord of hosts, v. 4. This he had said be fore; (ch. i. 13.) I am with you. But we need to have these assurances repeated, that we may have strong consolation. The presence of God with us, as the Lord of hosts, is enough to silence all our fears, and to help us over all the discouragements we may meet with. When the Jews had hosts against them, but they had the Lord of hosts with them, to take their part and plead their cause. He is with them, for, [1. ] He adheres to his promise; his covenant is inviolable; and he will be always theirs, and will appear and act for them, according to the word that he covenant\-ed with them when they came out of Egypt. Though he have foreseen that all will not be well, he will not make his faithfulness to fail. [2. ] He dwells among them by his Spirit, the Spirit of prop\-hecy; when he first formed them into a people, he gave his good Spirit to instruct them; (Neh. ix. 20.) and still the Spirit, though often grieved, and provoked to withdraw, remained among them. It was the Spirit of God that stirred up their spirits to come out of Babylon, (Ezra i. 5. ) and now to build the temple, Hag. i. 14. Note, We have reason to be encouraged as long as we have the Spirit of God remaining among us to work upon us, for so long as we have God with us to work for us.

2. They shall have the Messiah among them shortly—him that should come. To him bare all the prophets witness, and this prophet particularly foretold, v. 6. Now the Lord make thee strong, this is his coming, that it should not be long ere he came; Yet once, it is a little while, and he shall come. The Old Testament church has but one stage more (if we may say so) to travel; five stages were now past, from Adam to Noah, thence to Abraham, thence to Moses, thence to Solomon's temple, thence to the captivity, and now yet one stage more, its sixth stage's journey, and this comes the soul of the Messiah's kingdom. Let the Son of man, when he comes, find faith on the earth, and let the children of promise continue still looking for him, for now it is but a little while, and he will come; hold out, faith and patience, yet awhile, for he that shall come, will come, and will not tarry. And as he then said of his first appearance, so now of his second, Surely I come quickly. Now declining his coming it is here foretold,

[1. ] That it shall be introduced by a general shaking; (v. 6.) I will shake the heavens, and the earth, and the sea, and the dry land. This is applied to the setting up of Christ's kingdom in the world, to make way for which, he will judge among the heathen, Ps. cx. 6. God will once again do for his church as he did when he brought them out of Egypt; he then shook the heavens and earth at Mount Sinai; with thunder and lightnings and earthquakes he shook the sea and the dry land, when lanes were made through the sea, and streams fetched out of the rock. This shall be done again, when, at the sufferings of Christ, the sun shall be dark\-ened, the earth shake, the rocks rend; when, at the birth of Christ, Herod and all Jerusalem were troubled, (Matt. ii. 8.) and he is set for the fall and rising again of many. When his kingdom was set up, it was with a shock to the nations; the oracles were silenced, idols were destroyed, and the powers of the kingdoms were moved and removed, Heb. xii. 27. It speaks the removing of the things that are shaken. Note, The shaking of the nations is often in order to the settling of the church, and the establishing of the things that cannot be shaken.

[2. ] That it shall issue in a general satisfaction. He shall come, as the Desire of all nations—desirable to all nations, for in him shall all the families of the earth be blessed with the best of blessings—long expected and desired by the good people in all.
that being long since destroyed, we must conclude that our Lord Jesus is the Christ, is he that should come, and we are to look for no other. It was also the glory of this latter house, First, that, before the coming of Christ, it was always kept free from idols and idolatries, and never polluted with these abominable things, as the first temple often was, (2 Kings xxi. 11, 12,) and in this its glory exceeded all the glory of that. Note, The purity of the church, and the strict adherence to divine institutions, are much more its glory than external pomp and splendour. Secondly, That, after Christ, the gospel was preached in it by the apostles, even all the world, under the ministry of God, and all the glory of the earth, was made subject to God, even in the temple in which he dwells, and makes a living temple, behold, it is more glorious than Solomon's temple, and will be so to eternity.

(4.) They should see a comfortable end of their present troubles, and enjoy the pleasure of a happy settlement; In this place will I give peace, saith the Lord, in this place will I give them abundance of peace, and it shall be comfort of their heart, and peace, when God be with us, peace is with us. But the Jews under the latter temple had so much trouble, that we must conclude this promise to have its accomplishment in that spiritual peace which Jesus Christ has by his blood purchased for, and by his last will and testament bequeathed to, all believers, (John xiv. 27.) that peace which Christ himself preached, as the Prince of peace, and gives, as the Prince of peace. God will give peace in this place; he will give his Son to be the Peace, Eph. ii. 14.

10. In the four and twentieth day of the ninth month, in the second year of Darius, came the word of the Lord by Haggai the prophet, saying, 11. Thus saith the Lord of hosts, Ask now the priests concerning the law, saying, 12. If one bear holy flesh in the skirt of his garment, and with his skirt do touch bread, or potage, or wine, or oil, or any meat, shall it be holy? And the priests answered and said, No. 13. Then said Haggai, If one that is unclean by a dead body touch any of these, shall it be unclean? And the priests answered and said, It shall be unclean. 14. Then answered Haggai, and said, So is this people, and so is this nation before me, saith the Lord; and so is every work of their hands, and that which they offer there is unclean. 15. And now, I pray you, consider from this day and upward, from before a stone was laid upon a stone in the temple of the Lord; 16. Since those days were, when one came to a heap of twenty measures, there were but ten: when one came to the press-fat, for to draw out fifty vessels out of the press, there were but twenty. 17. I smote you with blasting, and with mildew, and with hail, in all the labours of your hands; yet ye
This sermon was preached two months after that on the former part of the chapter. The priests and Levites preached constantly; but the prophets preached occasionally: both were good and needful; we have need to be taught our duty in season, and out of season. The people were now going on vigorously with the building of the temple, and in hopes shortly to have it ready for their use, and to be employed in the services of it; and now God sends them a message by his prophet, which would be of use to them.

I. By way of conviction and caution. They were now engaged in a very good work, but they are concerned to see to it, not only that it be good for the matter of it, but that it be done in a right manner, for otherwise it would not be accepted of God. God sees there are many among them that spoil this good work, by going about it with unsanctified hands, and under a zeal for building, and but no advantage to themselves by it; these are here convicted, and all are warned thereby to purify the hands they employ in this work, for to the pure only all things are pure, and from the pure only that comes which is pure. This matter is here illustrated by the established rules of the ceremonial law, in putting a difference between the clean and the unclean, which made many of the appointees of the law were conversant. Hereby it appears that a spiritual use is to be made of the ceremonial law, and that it was intended, not only as a divine ritual to the Jews, but for instruction in righteousness to all, even to us upon whom the ends of the world are come, to discover to us both sin and Christ, both our disease and our remedy. Now observe here,

1. What scope of law there was. It is ordered to inquire of the priest concerning it; (v. 11.) for their lives should keep this knowledge, and the people should inquire the law at their mouth, Mal. ii. 7. Haggai himself, though a prophet, must ask the priest concerning the law. His business, as an extraordinary messenger, was, to expound the providences of God, and to give directions concerning particular duties, as he had done, ch. 1. 8. 9. But he would not take the priests' work out of their hands, who were the ordinary ministers, and whose business it was to expound the ordinances of God, and to teach the people the meaning of them, and to give the general rules for the observation of them. In a case of that nature, Haggai must himself consult them. Note, God has given to his ministers diversities of gifts, and calls them out to do diversities of services, so that they have need one of another, should make use of one, and be helpful one to another. The prophet, though divinely inspired, cannot say to the priest, I have no need of thee, nor can the priest say so to the prophet. Perhaps Haggai was therefore ordered to consult the priests, that out of their own mouths he might judge both them and the people committed to their charge, and convict them of worse than ceremonial pollution. See Lev. x. 10, 11.

Now the rules of the law, in the cases pronounced, are,

1. That he that has holy flesh in his clothes, cannot by the touch of his clothes communicate holiness; (v. 12.) If one bear holy flesh in the skirt of his garment, though the garment is thereby so far made a devoted thing, as that it is not to be common use till it has first been washed in the holy place, (Lev. vi. 27.) yet it shall by no means transmit the holiness to the other members of the body or to make them the better to those that use them.

2. That he that is ceremonially unclean by the touch of a dead body, does by his touch communicate the uncleanness. The law is express, (Numb. xix. 22.) Whosoever the unclean person touches shall be unclean; yet this Haggai will have from the priest's own mouth; for concerning these things we find he was not wont to be afraid to have the advice of our ministers. The sum of these two rules is, that pollution is easier communicated than sanctification; that is, (says Grotius,) There are many ways of vice, but only one of virtue, and that a difficult one. Bonum oritur ex integris, malum ex quolibet defectu-Good is produced by whole, evil by that which is amiss. It is a very easy thing for any to lose grace, but to be cured of it; and after they are become unclean, it is a great matter to be made clean again.

2. How it is here applied; (v. 14.) So is this people, and so is this nation, before me. He does not call them his people, and his nation, (they are un worthy to be owned by him,) but this people, and this nation, as if he would make it appear, that though they thought their offering of sacrifices on the altar would sanctify them, and excuse their neglect to build the temple, and remove the curse which by that neglect they had brought upon their common enjoyments; "No," says God, "your holy flesh and your altar will be so far from sanctifying your meat and drink, your wine and oil, to you, that your common enjoyment of God's temple will bring down upon you two and thirty times more evil and mischief than your sacrifices too; so that while you continued in that neglect, all was unclean to you, nay, and so is this people still: and so they will be; on these terms they will still stand with me, and on no other,—that if they be profane and sensual, and morally impure, if they have wicked hearts, and live wicked lives, I will take these things, and lay them hard at the temple while it is building, and though they offer ever so many and costly sacrifices there when it is built, yet that shall not serve to sanctify their meat and drink to them, and to give them a comfortable use of it; nay, the impurity of their hearts and lives shall make even that work of their hands, and all their enjoyments, unclean, and an abomination to God." And the case is the same with us. They whose devotions are plausible, but whose conversation is wicked, will find their devotions unable to sanctify their enjoyments, but their wickedness prevailing to pollute them. Note, When we are employed in any good work, we should be jealous over ourselves, lest we render it unclean by our corruptions and mismanagements.

II. By way of comfort and encouragement. If their hearts be right with God, and their eye single in his service, they shall have the benefit of it. God will take away the judgment of famine wherewith they have been corrected for their remissness, and will restore them great plenty. This they are called to consider, and to observe whether God would not be the utmost as good as his word, and by his providence remarkably continue and re compensate their performances of this matter. To make this the more signal, let them set down the day when they began to work at the building of the temple, to raise the structure upon the foundations that had been laid some time before. On the twenty fourth day of the sixth month, they began to pre-pake materials, (ch. i. 13.) and now on the twenty-fourth day of the ninth month, they began to lay a stone upon a stone in the temple of the Lord; let them take notice of this day, and observe,

1. How they were gone behind their estates before this day. Let them remember the time when there was a sensible waste and decay in all they had, p. 16. A man came to his garner, expecting to find a heap of twenty measures of corn, so much he used to have from such a piece of ground, or so much used to be left at that time of the year, or so much he took it for granted there was when he fetched the last from it; but he found it unaccountably diminished, and when he came to measure it, there were but ten measures; it was run in, and dried away, in the keeping; or vermin had eaten it, or it was stolen. In like manner, he went to the wine-press, expecting to draw fifty vessels of wine, for so much he used to have from such a quantity of grapes; but they did not yield as usual, for he could get but twenty. This agrees with what we had, ch. i. 9. Ye looked for much, and it came to little.

Note, It is our folly that we are apt to raise our expectation from the creature, and that we have need of this day, even a hundred times over, to teach us how much more abundant, and we commonly disappointed, and the more we expect, the more grievous the disappointment is. In the stores and treasures of the new covenant we need not fear being disappointed, when we come by faith to draw from them.

But this was not all; God did visibly contend with them in the weather; (p. 17.) I smote you with blasting, winds and frosts, which made every green thing to wither, and with mildews, which choked the corn when it was knitting, and with hail, which battered it down, and brake it, when it was grown to some maturity; thus they were disappointed in all the labour of their hands, while they neglected to lay their hand to the work of God, and to labour in that. Note, While we take no care of God's interest, we cannot expect he should take care of ours. And when he thus walks contrary to us, he expects that we should return to him, and to our duty. But this people either saw not the hand of God in it, (imputing it to chance,) or saw not their own sin as the provoking cause of it, and therefore turned not to him. They went on in a high hand, and indulged under these reproofs, so that God's hand was stretched out still, for the people turned not to him that smote them, Isa. ix. 12, 13. They might easily observe, that as long as they continued in neglect of the temple-work, all their affairs went backward. But,

2. Let them now observe, and they should find that from this day forward God would bless them; (p. 18, 19.) "Consider now whether you begin to change your way toward God, you do not find God changing his way toward you; from this day, when you fall to work about the temple, consider it, I say, and you shall find a remarkable turn given for the better to all your affairs. Is thy seed yet in the barn? Yes it is, and not yet thrown into the ground, the fig-tree and the olive-tree have not as yet brought forth, so that nothing appears to promise a good harvest and vintage next year; nature does not promise it; but now that you begin to apply yourselves in good earnest to your duty, the God of nature promises it; he has said, From this day I will bless you. It is the best day's work you ever did in your lives, for from hence you may date the return of your prosperity." He does not say what they shall be, but, in general, I will bless you; and those that know what are the fruits flowing from God's blessing, know they can desire no more to make them happy. I will bless you, and then you shall soon recover all your losses, shall thrive as fast as before you went backward; for the blessing of the Lord, that maketh rich, and those whom he blesseth, are blessed indeed." Note, When we begin to make conscience of our duty to God, we may expect his blessing; and this two of life is so known by its fruits, that one may discern almost to a day a remarkable turn of Providence, in favour of those that return in a way of duty; so that they and others may say that from this day they are blessed. See Mal. iii. 10. And whose is wise will observe these things, and understand by them the loving-kindness of the Lord.

20. And again the word of the Lord came unto Haggai, in the four and twentieth day of the month, saying, 21. Speak to Zerubbabel, governor of Judah, saying, I will shake the heavens and the earth; 22. And I will overthrow the throne of kingdoms; and I will destroy the strength of the kingdoms of the heathen; and I will overthrow the chariots, and those that ride in them; and the horses and their riders shall come down, every one by the sword of his brother. 23. In that day, saith the Lord of hosts, will I take thee, O Zerubbabel my servant, the son of Shealtiel, saith the Lord, and will make thee as a signet: for I have chosen thee, saith the Lord of hosts.

After Haggai's sermon ad populum—to the people, here follows one, the same day, ad magistratum—to the magistrates; a word directed particularly to Zerubbabel, the governor of Judah, who was a leading, active man in this good work which the people now set about, and therefore he shall have some particular marks put upon him; (p. 21.) Speak to Zerubbabel, governor of Judah, speak to him by himself; he has thoughts in his head, far above those of the common people, as wise princes are wont to have, who move in a higher and larger sphere than others. The people of the land are in care about their corn-fields and vineyards; God has secured that they shall prosper, and we hope that will make them easy; but Zerubbabel is concerned about the community and its interests, about the neighbouring nations, and the revolutions of their governments, and what will become of the few and feeble Jews in those changes and convulsions, and how such a poor prince as he is, should be able to keep his ground, and serve his country.

"Go to him," says God, "and tell him it shall be well with him and his remnant, and let that make him easy." 1. Let him expect to hear of great communications in the nations of the earth, and let them not be a surprise to him; behold, he is told of them before; (p. 21. 22.) I will shake the heavens and the earth. This he had said before; (p. 6. 7.) and now says it again to Zerubbabel; let him expect shock, shudders, universal convulsions; the world is like the sea, like the wheel, always in motion, but sometimes in a special manner turbulent. But, blessed be God, if the earth be shaken, it is to shake the wicked out of it, Job xxxviii. 13. In the apocalyptic visions, earthquakes bode no ill to the church. Here the heavens and the earth shall be shaken, the skies pressed by immense power, and the earth, by strong pres-mane, be overthrown; their day will come to fall.
(1.) Though they be ever so powerful, the strength of their kingdoms shall be destroyed; they trust in chariots and horses, (Ps. xx. 7.) but their chariots shall be overthrown, and those that ride in them, so that they shall not be able to attack the people of God, whom they persecute, or to escape the judgments of God, which persecute them. (2.) Though there appear none likely to be the instruments of their destruction, yet God will bring it about, for they shall be brought down, every one by the sword of his brother. This reads the doom of all the enemies of God's church, that will not repent to give him glory; it seems likewise designed as a promise of Christ's victory over the powers of darkness; his overthrow of Satan's throne, that throne of kingdoms, the throne of the god of this world; the taking from him all the armour wherein he trusted, and dividing the spoil. And all opposing rule, principality, and power shall be put down, that the kingdom may be delivered up to God, even the Father.

2. Let him depend upon it, that he shall be safe under the divine protection, in the midst of all these commotions, v. 23. Zerubbabel was active to build God a house, and therefore God makes the same promise to him as he did to David on the like occasion—that he would build him a house, and establish it, even in that day when heaven and earth are shaken; this promise refers to this good man himself and to his family. He honoured God, and God would honour him; his successors likewise in the government of Judah might take encouragement from it; though their authority was very precarious as to men, yet God would confirm it. And this would contribute to the stability of the people over whom God had set them. But this promise has special reference to Christ, who lineally descended from Zerubbabel, and is the sole Builder of the gospel-temple.
(1.) Zerubbabel is here owned as God's servant, and it is an honourable mention that is hereby made of him, as Moses and David my servants. When God destroys his enemies, he will prefer his servant. Our Lord Jesus is his Father's Servant in the work of redemption, but faithful as a Son. Isa. xl. 1. (2.) He is owned as God's elect; I have chosen thee into this office; and whom God makes choice of, he will make use of. Our Lord Jesus is chosen of God, 1 Pet. ii. 4. And he is the Head of the chosen remnant; in him they are chosen. (3.) It is promised that, being chosen, God will make him as a signet. Jeconiah had been as the signet on God's right hand, but was plucked thence, (Jer. xxii. 24.) and now Zerubbabel is substituted in the room of him. He shall be near and dear to God, precious in his sight, and honourable, and his family shall continue till the Messiah spring out of it, who is the Signet on God's right hand. This speaks, [1.] The delight the Father has in him; in him he once and again declared himself to be well pleased. He is set as a seal upon his heart, a seal upon his arm, is brought near unto him, (Dan. vii. 13.) is hid in the shadow of his hand, Isa. xlxi. 2. [2.] The dominion the Father has intrusted him with, Princes sign their edicts, grants, and commissions, with their signet-rings, Esth. iii. 10. Our Lord Jesus is the Signet on God's right hand, for all power is given to him, and derived from him. By him the great charter of the gospel is signed and ratified, and it is in him that all the promises of God are yea and amen.
