AN

EXPOSITION,

WITH

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS,

OF THE

GENERAL EPISTLE OF JUDE

Completed by Mr. J. Billingsley.

THIS epistle (as some few others are) is styled general or catholic, for that it is not immediately directed to any particular person, family, or church, but to the whole society of Christians of that time, lately converted to the faith of Christ, whether from Judaism or Paganism: and it is, and will be, of standing, lasting, and special use in and to the church as long as Christianity, that is, as time, shall last.

Some of the chief things contained in it summarily, are, 1. An account of the penman of it, a character of the church, the blessings and privileges of that happy society, v. 1, 2. 2. The occasion of writing this epistle, v. 3. 3. A character of evil and perverse men, who were already sprung up in that infant state of the church, and would be succeeded by others of the like evil spirit and temper in after-times, v. 4. 4. A caution against heartening to and following after such, from the severity of God toward the unbelieving murmuring Israelites at their coming out of Egypt, the angels that fell, the sin and punishment of Sodom and Gomorrah, v. 5—7. 5. To these the apostle likens the seducers against whom he was warning them, and describes them at large, from v. 8 to 13, inclusive. 6. Then (as specially suitable to his argument) he cites an ancient prophecy of Enoch foretelling and describing the future judgment, v. 14, 15. 7. Enlarges on the seducers' character, and guards against the offence which honest minds might be apt to take at the so early permission of such things, by shewing that it was foretold long before that so it must be, v. 16—19. 8. Exhorts them to perseverance in the faith, fervency in prayer, watchfulness against falling from the love of God, and a lively hope of eternal life, v. 20, 21. 9. Directs them how to act toward the erroneous and scandalous, v. 22, 23. And, 10. Closes with an admirable doxology in the two last verses.

This epistle (as most of the rest do) consists of,

I. A preface or introduction, v. 1, 2.

II. The body of the epistle, v. 3 to 23, inclusive.

The general scope of it is much the same with that of the second chapter of the second epistle of Peter, which having been already explained, the less will need to be said on this.

It is designed to warn us against seducers and their seduction, to inspire us with a warm love to, and a hearty concern for, truth, (evident and important truth,) and that in the closest conjunction with holiness, of which charity, or sincere unbiased brotherly-love, is a most essential character and inseparable branch.

'the truth we are to hold fast, and endeavour that others may be acquainted with and not depart from, has two special characters.

1. It is the truth as it is in Jesus, Eph. 4. 21.

2. It is truth after (or which is according to) godliness, Tit. 1. 1.

I he gospel is the gospel of Christ; he has revealed it to us, and he is the main Subject of it; and therefore we are indispensably bound to learn from thence all we can of his person, nature, and offices: in difference as to this, is inexcusable in any who call themselves Christians; and we know from what fountain we are wholly and solely to draw all necessary saving knowledge.

Further, it is also a doctrine of godliness: whatever doctrines favour the corrupt lusts of men, cannot be of God, let the pleas and pretensions for them be what they will. Errors dangerous to the souls of men soon sprang up in the church. The servant slept, and tares were sown. But such were the wisdom and kindness of Providence, that they began sensibly to appear and shew themselves, while some, at least, of the apostles were yet alive to confute them, and warn others against them. We are apt to think, If we had lived in their times, we should have been abundantly fenced against the attempts and artifices of seducers; but we have their testimony and their cautions, which is sufficient; and if we will not believe their writings, neither would we have believed or regarded their sayings, if we had lived among them and conversed personally with them.

We come now first to consider the preface or introduction to this epistle, v. 1, 2.
JUDE.

1. JUDE, the servant of Jesus Christ, and brother of James, to them that are sanctified by God the Father, and preserved in Jesus Christ, and called: 2. Mercy unto you, and peace, and love, be multiplied.

Here we have,
1. An account of the penman of this epistle, Jude, or Judas, or Judah. He was name-sake to one of his ancestors, the eldest son of Jacob, though not the first-born of his sons; out of whose loins (lineally, in a most direct succession) the Messiah came. This was a name of worth, eminency, and honour; yet, 1. He has a wicked name-sake. There was one Judas, (one of the twelve,) surnamed Iscariot, (from the place of his birth,) who was a vile traitor, the betrayer of his and our Lord. The same names may be common to the best and worst persons. It may be instructive to be called after the names of eminently good men, but there can be no inference drawn thence what we shall prove, though we may even thence conclude what sort of persons our good parents or progenitors desired and hoped we should be. But, 2. Our Judas was quite another man. He was an apostle, so was Iscariot; but he was a sincere disciple and follower of Christ, so was not the other. He was a faithful servant of Jesus Christ, the other was his betrayer and murderer; therefore here the one is very carefully distinguished from the other. Dr. Manton's note upon this, is, that God takes great care of the good name of his sincere and useful servants. Why then should we be prodigal of our own or one another's reputation and usefulness? Our apostle here calls himself a servant of Jesus Christ, esteeming that a most honourable title. It is more honourable to be a sincere and useful servant of Christ than to be an earthly king, how potent and prosperous soever. He might have claimed kindred to Christ according to the flesh, but he waves that, and rather glories in being his servant.

Observe, It is really a greater honour to be a faithful servant of Jesus Christ than to be akin to him according to the flesh. Many of Christ's natural children are his enemies, guilty of prodigality and want of natural affection in him as Man, but from infidelity and obstinacy in themselves; which should make the descendants and near relatives of persons most eminent for sincere and exemplary piety, jealous over themselves with a godly jealousy. A son of Noah may be saved in the ark from a flood of temporal destruction, and yet be overwhelmed at last in a deluge of divine wrath, and suffer the vengeance of eternal fire. Christ himself tells us, that he that heareth his word, and doeth it, that is, he only, is as his brother, and sister, and mother, that is, more honourably and advantageously related to him than the nearest and dearest of his natural relatives, considered merely as such. See Matt. 12. 48-50.

Furthermore, In that the apostle Jude styles himself a servant, though an apostle, a dignified officer in Christ's kingdom: it is a great honour to the meanest sincere ministers, (and it holds proportionably as to every upright Christian,) that he is the servant of Christ Jesus. They were servants before they were apostles, and they were but servants still. Away then with all pretensions in the ministers of Christ to lordly dominion either over one another, or the flocks committed to their charge. Let us ever have that of our dear Redeemer in actual view: It shall not be so among you, Matt. 20. 25, 26. And brother of James, to wit, of him whom the ancients style the first bishop of Jerusalem, of whose character and martyrdom Josephus makes mention, and ascribes the horrible destruction of that city and nation to this wicked cruelty, as one of its principal causes.* Of this James, our Jude was brother, whether in the strictest or a larger (though very usual) acception, I determine not. He however reckons it an honour to him, that he was the brother of such a one. We ought to honour those who are above us in age, gifts, graces, station; not to envy them, yet neither to flatter them, nor be led merely by their example, when we have reason to think them act wrong. Thus the apostle Paul withstood his fellow-apostle Peter to the face, notwithstanding the high esteem he had for him, and the affectionate love he bare to him, when he saw that he was to be blamed, that is, really blame-worthy, Gal. 2. 11, and following verses.

II. We are here acquainted to whom this epistle is directed; namely, to all them who are sanctified of God the Father, and called. I begin with the last, called, that is, called Christians, in the judgment of charity, further than which we cannot, nor in justice ought to go, in the judgments or opinions we form or receive of one another; for what appears not, is not, nor ought to come into account in our dealings with the censures of one another, whatever abatements the divine goodness may see fit to make for an honest, though misplaced zeal; or the like. The apostle (more especially) says, (though it is not) to judge of secret or hidden things, (things drawn into the light before the time,) lest our rash and preposterous zeal do more harm than ever it has done good, or I am afraid ever will do. The tares and wheat (if Christ may be Judge) must grow together till the harvest; (Matt. 13. 28-30.) and then he himself will, by proper instruments, take timely care to separate them. We ought to think the best of every man till the contrary appear; not being forward to receive or propagate, much less invent, disadvantageous characters of our brethren. This is the least we can make of the apostle's large and excellent description of charity, (1 Cor. 13;) and this we ought to make conscience of acting up to, which till we do, the Christian churches will, as alas! they are at this day, be filled with envying and strife, confusion and every evil work, Jam. 3. 16. Or, the apostle may speak of their being called to be Christians, by the preaching of the word which they gladly received, and professed cordially to believe, and so were received into the society and fellowship of the church, Christ the Head, and believers the members; real believers really, professed believers visibly.

Christians are the called, called out of the world, the civil spirit and servitude, and not the world, to higher and better things, heaven, things unseen and eternal; called from sin to Christ, from vanity to seriousness, from uncleanness to holiness; and in this pursuance of divine purpose and grace; for whom he did predestinate, them he also called, Rom. 8. 30. Now they who are thus called, are;

1. Sanctified; sanctified by God the Father. Sanctification is usually spoken of in us, not the Father, but the Holy Spirit; yet here it is ascribed to God the Father, because the Spirit works it as the Spirit of the Father and the Son. Note, All who are effectually called, are sanctified; made partakers of a divine nature; (2 Pet. 1. 4.) for without holiness no man shall see the Lord, Heb. 12. 14.

Observe, Our sanctification is not our own work. If any are sanctified, they are so by God the Father, not excluding Son or Spirit, for they are one, one God. Our corruption and pollution are of ourselves; but our sanctification and renovation are of God and his grace; and therefore if we perish in our iniquity, we must bear the blame; but if we be sanctified and glorified, all the honour and glory must be ascribed to God, and to him alone. I own it is hard to give a clear and distinct account of this, but we must not deny or disregard necessary truth, because we cannot fully reconcile the several parts of it to each other; for, on that supposition, we might deny that any one of us could stir an inch from the place we are at present in, though we see the contrary every day and hour.

2. The called and sanctified are preserved in Christ Jesus. As it is God who begins the work of grace in the souls of men, so is he who carries it on, and perfects it. Where he begins he will perfect; though we are fickle, he is constant; he will not forsake the work of his own hands, Ps. 138. 8. Let us not therefore trust in ourselves, nor in our stock of grace already received, but in him, and in him alone; still endeavouring, by all proper and appointed means, to keep our souls as ever we would hope he should keep us.

Preserved; from the gates of hell, and to the glory of heaven.

Preserved in Christ Jesus. All who are preserved, are preserved in Jesus Christ; in him as their Citadel and Strong-hold; no longer than they abide in him, and solely by virtue of their union with him.

3. The apostolical benediction; Mercy to you, &c. From the mercy, peace, and love of God all our real enjoyment of this life, all our hope of a better.

(1.) The mercy of God is the spring and fountain of all the good we have or hope for; mercy not only to the miserable, but to the guilty.

(2.) Next to mercy is peace, which we have from the sense of having obtained mercy. We can have no true and lasting peace but what flows from our reconciliation with God by Jesus Christ.

The song of Moses and the people of Israel sung out of the land of Egypt; from peace springs love; his love to us, our love to him, and our brotherly love (forgotten, wretchedly neglected grace!) to one another.

These the apostle prays may be multiplied, that Christians may not be content with scraps and narrow scantlings of them; but that souls and societies may be full of them. Note, God is ready to supply us with all grace, and a fullness in each grace. We are not straitened, if we are straitened, in him, but in ourselves.

3. Beloved, when I gave all diligence to write unto you of the common salvation, it was needful for me to write unto you, and exhort you that ye should earnestly contend for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints.

We have here the design of the apostle in writing this epistle to the lately-converted Jews and Gentiles; namely, to establish them in the Christian faith, and a practice and conversation truly consonant and conformable therunto, and in an open and bold profession thereof; especially in times of notorious opposition, whether by artful seduction, or violent and inhuman persecution.

But then we must see to it very carefully, that it be really the Christian faith that we believe, profess, propagate, and contend for; not the discriminating badges of this or the other party; not any thing of later date than the inspired writings of the holy evangelists and apostles.

Here observe, 1. The gospel-salvation is a common salvation, that is, in a most sincere offer and tender of it to all mankind to whom the notice of it reaches: for so the commission runs, (Mark 16. 15, 16.) Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature, &c. Surely God means as he speaks, he does not delude us with vain words, whatever men do; and therefore none are excluded from the common salvation, of that number of nations, but they who obstinately, impenitently, finally exclude themselves. Whoever will, may come and drink of the water of life freely, Rev. 22. 17.

The application of it is made to all believers, and only to such; it is made to the weak as well as to the strong. Let none discourage themselves on the account of hidden decrees which they can know little of, and with which they have nothing to do. God's decrees are dark, his covenants are plain.

All good Christians meet in Christ the common "Head, are actuated by one and the same Spirit, "are guided by one rule, meet here at one throne "of grace, and hope shortly to meet in one common "inheritance;" a glorious one to be sure, but what or how glorious, we cannot, nor at present need to know; but such it will be as vastly to exceed all our present hopes and expectations.

2. This common salvation is the subject-matter of the faith of all the saints. The doctrine of it is what they all most heartily consent to; they esteem it as a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, 1 Tim. 1. 15. It is the faith once, or at once, once for all, delivered to the saints; to which nothing can be added, from which nothing may be detracted, in which nothing more or less should be altered. Here let us abide; here we are safe; if we set a stone in our pathway, we are in danger of being either entangled or seduced.

3. The apostles and evangelists all wrote to us of this common salvation. This cannot be doubted by those who have carefully read their writings. It is strange that any should think they wrote chiefly to maintain particular schemes and opinions, especially such as they never did nor could think of. It is enough that they by their gracious office to us, by inspiration of the Holy Ghost, all that is necessary for every one to believe and do, in order to obtain a personal interest in the common salvation.

4. They who preach or write of the common salvation, should give all diligence to do it well: they should not allow themselves to offer to God or his people that which cost them nothing, or next to nothing; little or no pains or thought, 2 Sam. 24. 24. This were to treat God irreverently, and man unjustly.

The apostle (though inspired) gave all diligence to write of the common salvation. What then will become of those, who (though uninspired) give no diligence, or next to none, but say to the people, even in the name of God, quiescumque etiam in lucem venire—what comes next; who, so that they use scripture-words, care not how they interpret or apply them? They who speak of sacred things, ought always to speak of them with the greatest reverence, care, and diligence.

5. They who have received the doctrine of this common salvation, must contend earnestly for it. Earnestly, not flippantly. They who strive for the Christian faith, or in the Christian course, must strive lawfully, or they lose their labour, and run great hazard of losing their crown, 2 Tim. 2. 5. The wrath of man worketh not the righteousness of God, Jam. 1. 20. Lying for the truth is bad, and scolding for it is not much better. Observe, They who have received the truth, must contend for it. But how? As the apostles did; by suffering patiently and courageously for it, not by making others suffer if they will not presently embrace every notion that we are pleased (proved or unproved) to call faith, or profession. We must suffer ourselves to be robbed of any essential article of Christian faith, by the cunning craftiness or specious plausible pretences of any who lie in wait to deceive, Eph. 4. 14. The apostle Paul tells us, he preached the gospel (mind it was the gospel) with much contention, (1 Thess. 2. 2.) that is, (as I understand it,) with great earnestness, with a hearty zeal, and a great concern for the success of what he preached. But if we will understand contention in the common acceptation of the word, we must imperiously consider with whom the gnatish contended, and how; the enlarging on which would not be proper to this place.

We have here the occasion the apostle had to write to this purport; as evil manners give rise to good laws, so dangerous errors often give just occasion to the proper defence of important truths.

4. For there are certain men crept in unawares, who were before of old ordained to this condemnation, ungodly men, turning the grace of our God into lasciviousness, and denying the only Lord God, and our Lord Jesus Christ.

Here observe, 1. Ungodly men are the great enemies of the faith of Christ, and the peace of the church. They who deny or corrupt the one, and disturb the other, are here expressly styled ungodly men. We might have truth with peace, (a most desirable thing,) were there none (ministers or private Christians) in our particular churches and congregations but truly godly men—a blessing scarcely to be looked or hoped for on this side heaven. Ungodly men raise scruples, start questions, cause divisions, widen breaches, merely to advance and promote their own selfish, amitious, and covetous ends. This has been the plague of the church in all past ages, and I am afraid no age is, or will be, wholly free from such men and such practices as long as time shall last.

The late excellent Mr. Henry's pious and charitable note on this passage (and I wish it were duly laid to heart by all of us who yet survive,) is, that nothing cuts us off from the church, but that which cuts us off from Christ; namely, reigning infidelity and ungodliness.

We must (as he goes on excellently) abhor the thought of branding particular parties; I add, or persons, with this character; especially of doing it without the least proof, or, as it too often happens, the least shadow of it.

Those are ungodly men who live without God in the world, who have no regard to God and conscience.

They (as the good man goes on) are to be dreaded, and consequently to be avoided, not only who are wicked by sins of commission, but also who are ungodly by sins of omission; who, for example, restrain prayer before God, who dare not reprove a rich man, when it is the duty of their place so to do, for fear they lose his favour, and the advantage they probably themselves have from, who do the work of the Lord negligently, &c.

2. They are the worst of ungodly men, who turn the grace of God into lasciviousness, who take encouragement to sin more boldly, because the grace of God has abounded, and still abounds, so wonderfully; who are hardened in their impieties by the extent and fulness of gospel-grace, the design of which is to induce men from sin, and bring them under God. Thus therefore to wax wanton under so great grace, and turn it into an occasion of working all uncleanness with greediness, and hardening ourselves in such a course by that very grace which is the last and most forcible means to reclaim us from it, is to render ourselves the vilest, the worst, and most hopeless of sinners.

3. They who turn the grace of God into lasciviousness, do in effect deny the Lord God, and our Lord Jesus Christ; that is, (as Mr. Henry well expresses it,) they deny both natural and revealed religion.

They, as he justly goes on, strike at the foundation of natural religion, for they deny the only Lord God; and they overturn all the frame of revealed religion, for they deny the Lord Jesus Christ. Now this great design in establishing revealed religion in the world, was, to bring into unawares.

Note, They who deny our Lord Jesus Christ, do in effect deny the only Lord God. To deny revealed religion is virtually to overcome natural religion, for they stand or fall together, and they naturally yield light and force to each other. Would to God our modern deists, who live in the midst of gospel-light, would seriously consider this, and cautiously, diligently, and especially exactly see, that it is that linders their receiving the gospel, while their profess themselves fully persuaded of all the principles and duties of natural religion! Never two tallies answered more exactly to each other than these do, so that it seems absurd to receive the one and reject the other. One would think it were the fairest way to receive both, or reject both; though perhaps the more plausible method, especially in this age, is to act the part of Jesus.

4. They who turn the grace of God into lasciviousness, are ordained unto condemnation; so Mr. Henry, and, no doubt, it is a great truth. They, as he speaks, sin against the last, the greatest, and most perfect remedy; and so are without excuse. They who thus sin, must needs die of their wounds, of their disease; are of old ordained to this condemnation, whatever that expression means. But what if our translators had thought fit to have rendered the word in the original, (which I shall not trouble the English reader with,) of old fore-written of, as persons who would through their own sin and folly become the proper subjects of this condemnation, where had the harm been? Plain Christians had not been troubled with dark, doubtful, and perplexing thoughts about reproubation, which the strongest heads cannot enter far into, can indeed bear but little of, without much loss and damage. Is it not enough that early notice was given by our inspired writers, that such seducers and wicked men should arise in later times, and that every one, being forewarned, should be fore-armed against them?

5. We ought to contend earnestly for the faith, in opposition to those who would corrupt or deprive it; such as are crept in unawares; a wretched character, to be sure, but often very ill applied by weak and ignorant people, and even by those who themselves creep in unawares, who think their ipse dixit should stand for a law to all their followers and admirers. Surely faithful, humble ministers are helpers of their people's joy, peace, and comfort; not lords of their faith! Whoever attempt to corrupt the faith, we ought to contend earnestly against them. The more busy and crafty the instruments and agents of Satan are, to rob us of the truth, the more solicitors should we be to hold it fast, and always provided we be very sure that we fasten no wrong or injurious characters on persons, parties, or sentinels.

The fair warning which the apostle, in Christ's name, gives to those, who having preferred his holy religion, do afterwards desert and prove false to it.

5. I will therefore put you in remembrance, though ye once knew this, how that the Lord, having saved the people out of the land of Egypt, afterward destroyed them that believed not. 6. And the angels which kept not their first estate, but left their own habitation, who were not pleased with the posts and stations the supreme Monarch of the universe had assigned and allotted to them, but thought (like discontented ministers in our age, I might say in every age) they deserved better; they would, with the title of ministers, be sovereigns, and in effect their Sovereign should be their minister—do all, and only, what they would have him; thus war broke the main and immediate cause or occasion of their fall.

Thus they quitted their post, and rebelled against God, their Creator and sovereign Lord; but God did not spare them; (high and great as they were,) he would not truckle to them, he threw them off, as a wise and good prince will a selfish and deceitful minister; and the great, the all-wise God, could not be ignorant, as the wise and best of earthly princes are, what designs they were hatching.

After all, what became of them? They thought to have dared and outfaced Omnipotence itself; but God was too hard for them, he cast them down to hell. They who would not be servants to their Maker and his will in their first state, were made captives to his justice, and are reserved in everlasting chains under darkness. Here see what the condition of fallen angels, which yet we know nothing of, was ordained. Preaching is not designed to teach us something new in every sermon, somewhat that we knew nothing of before; but to put us in remembrance, to call to mind things forgotten, to affect our passions, and engage and fix our resolutions, that our lives may be answerable to our faith.

Though ye know these things, yet (as good Mr. Henry says) ye still need to use them better. There are many things which we have known, which we have unhappily forgotten. Is it of no use or service to be put afresh in remembrance of them?

Now what are these things (I use the very words of the late excellent Mr. Henry, which, in this exposition—designed, and accordingly modelled, as a small part of the continuation of his—I always do where I well can) which we Christians need to be put in remembrance of?

1. The destruction of the unbelieving Israelites in the wilderness, v. 5. St. Paul puts the Corinthians in mind of this, 1 Cor. 10. The ten first verses of that chapter (as the scripture is always the best commentary upon itself) are the best explication of this fifth verse of this epistle of Jude. None therefore ought to presume upon their privileges, since many who were brought out of Egypt by a series of amazing miracles, yet perished in the wilderness by reason of their unbelief. Let us not therefore be high-minded, but fear, Rom. 11. 20. Let us fear, lest, a promise being left us of entering into his rest, any of you should seem to come short of it, Heb. 4. 1. They had miracles plenty, they were (as Mr. Henry styles it) their daily bread; yet even they perished in unbelief. We have greater (much greater) reason therefore than they had; let their error (their so fatal error) be our awful warning.

2. We are here put in remembrance of the fall of the angels, v. 6. There were a great number of the angels who left their own habitation, who were not pleased with the posts and stations the supreme Monarch of the universe had assigned and allotted to them, but thought (like discontented ministers in our age, I might say in every age) they deserved better; they would, with the title of ministers, be sovereigns, and in effect their Sovereign should be their minister—do all, and only, what they would have him; thus war broke the main and immediate cause or occasion of their fall.

Thus they quitted their post, and rebelled against God, their Creator and sovereign Lord; but God did not spare them; (high and great as they were,) he would not truckle to them, he threw them off, as a wise and good prince will a selfish and deceitful minister; and the great, the all-wise God, could not be ignorant, as the wise and best of earthly princes are, what designs they were hatching.

After all, what became of them? They thought to have dared and outfaced Omnipotence itself; but God was too hard for them, he cast them down to hell. They who would not be servants to their Maker and his will in their first state, were made captives to his justice, and are reserved in everlasting chains under darkness. Here see what the condition of fallen angels, which yet we know nothing of, was ordained. Though ye know these things, yet (as good Mr. Henry says) ye still need to use them better. There are many things which we have known, which we have unhappily forgotten. Is it of no use or service to be put afresh in remembrance of them?

Now what are these things (I use the very words of the late excellent Mr. Henry, which, in this exposition—designed, and accordingly modelled, as a small part of the continuation of his—I always do where I well can) which we Christians need to be put in remembrance of?

1. The destruction of the unbelieving Israelites in the wilderness, v. 5. St. Paul puts the Corinthians in mind of this, 1 Cor. 10. The ten first verses of that chapter (as the scripture is always the best commentary upon itself) are the best explication of this fifth verse of this epistle of Jude. None therefore ought to presume upon their privileges, since many who were brought out of Egypt by a series of amazing miracles, yet perished in the wilderness by reason of their unbelief. Let us not therefore be high-minded, but fear, Rom. 11. 20. Let us fear, lest, a promise being left us of entering into his rest, any of you should seem to come short of it, Heb. 4. 1. They had miracles plenty, they were (as Mr. Henry styles it) their daily bread; yet even they perished in unbelief. We have greater (much greater) reason therefore than they had; let their error (their so fatal error) be our awful warning.

2. We are here put in remembrance of the fall of the angels, v. 6. There were a great number of the angels who angel, when, contending with the devil, he disputed about the body of Moses, durst not bring against him a railing accusation, but said, The Lord rebuke thee. 10. But these speak evil of those things which they know not: but what they know naturally, as brute beasts, in those things they corrupt themselves. 11. Woe unto them! For they have gone in the way of Cain, and ran greedily after the error of Balaam for reward, and perished in the gainsaying of Core. 12. These are spots in your feasts of charity, when they feast with you, feeding themselves without fear: clouds are without water, carried about of winds: trees whose fruit withereth, without fruit, twice dead, plucked up by the roots; 13. Raging waves of the sea, foaming out their own shame; wandering stars, to whom is reserved the blackness of darkness for ever.

He calls them filthy dreamers, forasmuch as delusion is a dream, and the beginning of, and inlet to, all manner of filthiness.

Note, Sin is filthiness; it renders men odious and vile in the sight of the most holy God, and makes them, as Solomon, as penitent, or as punished to extremity, and without resource) vile in their own eyes, and in a while they become vile in the eyes of all about them.

These filthy dreamers dream themselves into a fool's paradise on earth, and into a real hell at last: let their character, course, and end, be our seasonsable and sufficient warning; like sins will produce like punishments and miseries.

1. They defile the flesh: the flesh or body is the immediate seat, and often the irritating occasion, of many horrid pollutions; yet these, though done in and against the body, do greatly defile and grievously maim and wound the soul; fleshly lusts do war against the soul, 1 Pet. 2. 11. and in 2 Cor. 7. 1. We read of filthiness of flesh and spirit, each of which, though of different kinds, defiles the whole man.

2. They despise dominion, and speak evil of dignities; are of a disturbed mind and a seditions spirit; forgetting that the powers that be, are ordained of God, Rom. 13. 1. God requires us to speak evil of no man; (Tit. 3. 2.) but it is a great aggravation of the sin of evil-speaking, when what we say is pointed at magistrates, men whom God has set in authority over us, by blaspheming or speaking evil of whom, we blaspheme God himself.

Or, we may understand it here with respect to religion, as some do, which ought to have the dominion in this lower world; such evil-speakers despise the dominion of conscience, make a jest of it, and would banish it out of the world; and for the word of God, the rule of conscience, they despise that; the revelations of the divine will go for little with them; they are a rule of faith and manners, but not till they have explained them, and imposed their sense of them upon all about them.

Or, as others account for the sense of this passage, the people of God, truly and specially so, are the dignities here spoken of or referred to, according to that of the Psalmist, (Ps. 105. 15.) Touch not mine anointed, and do my prophets no harm.

They speak evil of, &c. Religion and its serious professors have been always and everywhere where evil spoken of: though there is nothing in religion but what is very good, and deserves our highest regards, both as it is perfective of our natures, and subservient to our truest and highest interests; yet this sect, as its enemies are pleased to call it, is every where spoken against, Acts 28. 22.

On this occasion the apostle brings in Michael the archangel, 9. Interpreters are at a loss what is here meant by the body of Moses. Some think, that the Devil contended that Moses might have a public and honourable funeral, that the place where he was interred might be generally known; hoping thereby to draw the Jews, so naturally prone thereto, to a new and fresh instance of idolatry. Dr. Scott thinks that by the body of Moses we are to understand the Jewish church, whose destruction the Devil strengthened for, as the Christian church is called the body of Christ in the New-Testament style. Others bring other interpretations, which I will not here trouble the reader with.

Though this contest was mighty eager and earnest, and Michael was victorious in the issue, yet he would not bring a railing accusation against the Devil himself; he knew a good cause needed no such weapons to be employed with his defence; it is said, He durst not bring, &c. Why durst he not? Not that he was afraid of the Devil, but he believed God would be offended, if, in such a dispute, he went that way to work; he thought it below him to engage in a trial of skill with the great enemy of God and man, which of them should out-scold or out-rail the other. A memorandum, says good Mr. Henry, to all disputants, never to bring railing accusations into their disputes. Truth needs no supports from falsehood or scurrility. Some say, Michael would not bring a railing accusation against the Devil, as knowing be forbad that he would be too hard for him at that weapon. (Mr. Henry.) Some think the apostle refers here to the remarkable passage we have, Numb. 20. 7—14. Satan would have represented Moses under disadvantageous colours, which he, good man, had at that time, and upon that occasion, given but too much handle for. Now Michael, according to this account, stands up in defence of Moses, and, in the zeal of an upright and bold spirit, says to Satan, The Lord rebuke thee. He would not stand disputing with the Devil, nor enter into a particular debate about the merits of that special cause; he knew Moses was his fellow-servant, a favourite of God, and he would not patiently suffer him to be insulted, nor let the truth be buried under the just indignation cries out, The Lord rebuke thee: like that of our Lord himself, (Matt. 4. 10.) Get thee hence, Satan. Moses was a dignity, a magistrate, one beloved and preferred by the great God; and the archangel thought it insufferable that such a one should be so treated by a vile apostate spirit, of how high an order soever. So the lesson hence is; That we ought to stand up in defence of those whom God owns, how severe soever Satan's "instruments are in their censures of them and their "conduct." They who censure (in particular) upright magistrates, upon every slip in their behaviour, may expect to hear, The Lord rebuke thee; and divine rebukes are harder to be borne than careless sinners now think for.

V. 10. But these speak evil of the things which they know not, &c. They who speak evil of the guarded process, and whose souls which they know not; for if they had known them, they would have spoken well of them; for nothing but good and excellent can be truly said of religion; and it is sad that anything different or opposite should ever be justly said of any of its professors; a religious life is the most safe, happy, comfortable, and honourable life that is.

Observe, Men are most apt to speak evil of those persons and things that they know least of. How much had never suffered by slanderous tongues, if they had been better known! On the other hand, retirement screes some even from just censure.

But what they know naturally, &c. It is hard, if not impossible, to find any obviate enemies to the Christian religion, who do not in their stated course live in open or secret contradiction to the very principles of natural religion: this many think hard and unchristianable; but I am afraid it will appear too true on the day of the revelation of the righteous judgment of God. The apostle likens such to brute beasts, though they often think and boast themselves, if not the wisest, yet at least the wittiest, part of mankind.

In those things they corrupt themselves; that is, in the plainest and most natural and necessary things; those that lie most open and obvious to natural reason and conscience; even in those things they can refute defense, and defile themselves: the fault, whatever it is, lies not in their understandings or apprehensions, but in their depraved wills, and disordered appetites and affections; they could and might have acted better, but then they must have offered violence to those vile affections which they obstinately chose rather to gratify than mortify.

V. 11. He represents them as followers of Cain, and representing such profane people, who thought little, and perhaps believed not much, of God or a future world; as greedy and covetous, who, so they could but gain present worldly advantages, cared not what came next; rebels to God and man, who, like Core, ran into attempts in which they must assuredly perish, as he did.

V. 12. These are spots in your feasts of charity—the sacrilegious or base feasts, so much spoken of by the apostle; these are done by arrogant means of mischance to be admitted among them, but wore spots in them, defiled and defiling. Observe, It is a great reproach, though unjust and incidental, to religion, when they who profess it, and join in the most solemn institution of it, are in heart and life unsuitable, and even contrary to it.

These are spots. Yet how common in all Christian societies living on earth, the very best not excepted! Be not entertained by a visible profession of religion. The Lord remit it in his due time and way; not in men's blind and rigorous way of plucking up the wheat with the tares; but in the heaven we are waiting, hoping, and preparing for, there is none of this mad work, there are none of these disorderly doings.

When they feast with you, they feast themselves without fear. Arrant gluttons, no doubt, they were such as minded only the gratifying of their appetites with the daintiness and plenty of their fare: they had no regard to Solomon's caution, Prov. 23. 2.

Mr. Henry's note on this passage, is, In common eating and drinking; a holy fear is necessary, much more in feasting; though we may sometimes be more easily and insensibly overcome at a common meal than at a feast; for, in the case supposed, we are hushed, and, as it were, covered, and, sometimes, at least to some persons, the plenty of a feast is its own antidote, as to others it may prove a dangerous snare.

Clouds they are without water; which promise rain in time of drought, but perform nothing of what they promise. Such is the case of formal professors, who, at first setting out, promise much, like early-blooming trees in a forward spring, but, in comparison, bring forth little or no fruit.

Carried about with winds; light and empty, easily driven about this way or that, as the wind happens to sit; such are empty, ungrounded professors, an easy prey to every seducer. It is amazing to hear many talk so confidently of so many things of which they know little or nothing, and yet have not the wisdom and humility to discern and be sensible how little they know! How happy would our world be, if men either knew more, or practically knew how little they know!

Trees whose fruit withereth, &c. Trees they are, for they are planted in the Lord's vineyard, yet fruitless ones.

Observe, They, whose fruit withereth, may be justly said to be without fruit. It is a sad thing when men seem to begin in the Spirit, and end in fleshly carnal such is almost as common a case as it is an awful one.

The text speaks of such, as being twice dead; one would think to be once dead were enough; we none of us, till grace renew us to a higher degree than ordinary, love to think of dying once, though this is appointed for us all. What then is the meaning of this being twice dead? Take Mr. Henry's answer.

Let it be, that there had been once dead in" their natural, fallen, lapsed state; but they seemed to recover, and, as a man in a swoon, to be brought to life again, when they took upon them "the profession of the Christian religion; but now 'they are dead again by the evident proofs they have given of their hypocrisy; whatever they seemed, they had nothing truly vital in them."

Plucked up by the roots; as we commonly serve dead trees, and only those to which we expect no more fruit; they are dead, dead, dead; whyumber they the ground? Away with them to the fire.

V. 13. Raging waves of the sea; boisterous, noisy, and clamorous; full of talk and turbulence, but with little (if any) sense or meaning; foaming out their own shame; creating much uneasiness to men of better sense and calmer temper, which yet will in the end turn to their own greater shame and just reproach. The Psalmist's prayer ought always to be that of every honest and good man: "Let integrity and uprightness preserve me; (Ps. 25. 21.) and if it will not, let me be unpreserved." If honestly signify little now, knavery will signify much less, and that in a very little while. Raging waves are a terror to sailing passengers; but when they are got to port, the waves are forgotten, as if no longer in being; their noise and terror are now past and done.

Wandering stars; planets that are erratic in their motions, keep not that steady, regular course which the fixed ones do, but shift their stations, that one has sometimes much ado to know where to find them. This confusion carries in it a lively emblem of false teachers, who are sometimes here and sometimes there, so that one knows not where nor how to find them. In the main things at least, one would think something should be fixed and steady; and this might be without infallibility, or any pretensions to it in us poor mortals. In religion and politics, the great subjects of present debate, surely there are certain stars in which wise and good, honest and disinterested men might agree, without throwing the populace into the utmost anguish and distress of mind, or blowing up their passions into rage and tumult, without letting it to them know what they say, or where they affirm.

To whom is reserved the blackness of darkness for ever. False teachers are to expect the worst of punishments in this and a future world: not every one who teaches by mistake any thing that is not exactly true; (for who then, in any public assembly, dares open a Bible to teach others, unless he taught himself and superior to the angels of God in heaven?) but every one who pravicates, dissemblers, will lead others into by-paths and side-ways, that have opportunity to make a gain or prey of them, or (in the apostle's phrase) to make merchandise of them, 2 Pet. 2. 3. But enough of this. As for the blackness of darkness for ever, I shall only say, that this terrible expression, with all the horror it imports, belongs to false teachers, truly, not sandierously so called, who corrupt the word of God, and betray the souls of men. If this will not make both ministers and people cautious, I know not what will.

The doom of this wicked people is declared.

14. And Enoch also, the seventh from Adam, prophesied of these, saying, Behold, the Lord cometh with ten thousand of his saints, 15. To execute judgment upon all; and to convince all that are ungodly among them of all their ungodly deeds which they have ungodly committed, and of all their hard speeches which ungodly sinners have spoken against him. 16. These are murmurers, complainers, walking after their own lusts; and their mouth speaketh great swelling words, having men's persons in admiration because of advantage.

This prophecy of Enoch we have no mention made of in any other part or place of scripture; yet now it is scripture, that there was such prophecy; one plain text of scripture is proof enough of any one point that we are required to believe, especially when relating to a matter of fact; but in matters of faith, necessary saving faith, God has not seen fit, blessed be his holy name he has not, to try us far; there is no fundamental of Christian religion, truly so called, which is not inculcated over and over in the New Testament; by which we may know what the Holy Ghost does, and consequently we ought, to lay the greatest stress upon. Some say that this prophecy of Enoch was preserved by tradition in the Jewish church; others, that the apostle Jude was immediately inspired with the notice of it: be that how it will, it is certain that there was such a prophecy of ancient date, of long standing, and universally received in the Old Testament church; and it is a main point of our New-Testament creed.

Observe, Christ's coming to judgment was prophesied of as early as the middle of the patriarchal age, and was therefore even then a received and acknowledged truth.

The Lord cometh with his holy myriads; including both angels, and the spirits of just men made perfect. 17. What a glorious time will that be, when Christ shall come with ten thousand of these! And we are told for what great and awful ends and purposes he will come so accompanied and attended, namely, to execute judgment upon all.

Observe, It was spoken of then, so long ago, as a thing just at hand; 'Behold, the Lord cometh; he is just a coming, he will be upon you before you are aware, and, unless you be very cautious and diligent, before you are warned to meet him comfortably, He cometh.' 18. To execute judgment upon the wicked. 19. To convince them.

Observe, Christ will condemn none without precedent, trial, and conviction; such conviction as shall at least silence even themselves; they shall have no excuse or apology to make, that they either can or dare then stand by; then every mouth shall be stopped, the Judge and his sentence shall be clear and the impartially approved and applauded, and even the guilty condemned criminals shall be speechless, though at present they want not bold and specious pleas, which they vent with all assurance and confidence; and yet it is sure that the mock-trials of prisoners in the jail among themselves, and the real trial at the bar before the proper judge, soon appear to be very different things.

I cannot pass this fifteenth verse without taking notice how often, and how emphatically, the word ungodly is repeated in it; no less than four times; ungodly men, ungodly sinners, ungodly deeds, and, as to the manner, ungodly committed. Godly or ungodly signifies little with men now-a-days, unless it be to scoff at and deride even the very expressions; but it is not so in the language of the Holy Ghost.

Observe, Omissions, as well as commissions, must be accounted for in the day of judgment.

Observe further, Hard speeches of another, especially if ill-grounded, will most certainly come into account at the judgment of the great day. Let us all take care in time. "If thou, " says one of our good old puritans, "smite (a miscall'd heretic, or) a schismatic, and God find a real saint like thee, look thou to it, how thou wilt answer it." It may be too late to say before the angel, that it was an error, Excl. 5. 6. I only here allude to that expression of the divinely inspired writer.

In the sixteenth verse the apostle enlarges further on the character of these evil men and seducers, they are murmurers, complainers, &c.

Observe, A murmuring complaining temper, included among them, lay men under a very ill character; such are very weak at least, and for the most part very wicked; they murmur against God and his providence, against men and their conduct; they are angry at everything that happens, and never pleased with their own state and condition in the world, as not thinking it good enough for them.

Such walk after their own lusts; their will, their appetite, their fancy, are their only rule and law. Mr. Henry's note here, is, That they who please their sinful appetites, are most prone to yield to their ungovernable passions.

Lastly, The apostle here gives exhortation to those to whom he wrote, which, with the doxology in the two last verses, concludes the epistle.

17. But, beloved, remember ye the words which were spoken before of the apostles of our Lord Jesus Christ; 18. How that they told you there should be mockers in the last time, who should walk after their own ungodly lusts. 19. These are they who separate themselves, sensual, having not the Spirit. 20. But ye, beloved, building up yourselves on your most holy faith, praying in the Holy Ghost, 21. Keep yourselves in the love of God, looking for the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ unto eternal life. 22. And of some have compassion, making a difference: 23. And others save with fear, pulling them out of the fire; hating even the garment spotted by the flesh. 24. Now unto him that is able to keep you from falling, and to present you faultless before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy, 25. To the only wise God our Saviour, be glory and majesty, dominion and power, both now and ever. Amen.
foretold by the apostles of our Lord Jesus Christ; and consequently, the accomplishment of it in the event, is a confirmation of your faith, instead of being in any case an occasion of shaking and unsettling you therein."

1. They who would persuade, must make it evident that they sincerely love those whom they would persuade; “Bitter words and harsh usage never did, nor ever will convince, much less persuade any body.”

2. The words which inspired persons have spoken (on all,) duly remembered and reflected on, are the best preservative against dangerous errors; this will always be so, till men have learnt to speak better than God himself.

3. We ought not to be offended if errors and persecutions arise and prevail in the Christian church; this was foretold, and therefore we should not think worse of Christ’s person, doctrine, or cross, when we see it fulfilled. See 1 Tim. 4. 1. and 2 Tim. 3. 1. and 2 Pet. 3. 3. We must not think it strange, but comfort ourselves with this, that (in the midst of all this confusion) Christ will maintain his church, and make good his promise, that the gates of hell shall not prevail against it, Matt. 16. 18.

4. The more religion is ridiculed and persecuted, the faster hold we should take and keep of it; being forewarned, we should shew that we are fore-arm’d; under such trials we should stand firm, and not be snared hereby.

V. 19. These are they who separate, &c. Observe, 1. Sensualists are the worst separatists; they separate themselves from God, and Christ, and his church, to the Devil, the world, and the flesh, by their ungodly courses and vicious practices; and that is a great deal worse than separation from any particular branch of the visible church on account of opinions, or modes and circumstances of external government or worship; though many can patiently hear with the former, while they are plentifully and almost perpetually railing at the latter; as if no sin were damnable, but what they are pleased to call schism.

2. Sensual men have not the Spirit, that is, of God and Christ, the Spirit of holiness, which whoever has not, is none of Christ’s, does not belong to him. Rom. 8. 9,

3. The worse others are, the better should we endeavour and approve ourselves to be; the more busy Satan and his instruments are to pervert others in judgment or practice, the more tenacious should we be of sound doctrine and a good conversation, holding fast the faithful word, as we have been (divinely) taught, holding the mystery of faith in a pure conscience, Tit. 1. 9. 1 Tim. 3. 9.

V. 20. Building up, &c. Observe, The way to hold fast our profession, is, to hold on in it; having laid our foundation well in a sound faith, and a sincere upright heart, we must build upon it, make further progress continually; and we should take care with what materials we carry on our building, namely, gold, silver, precious stones, not wood, hay, stubble, 1 Cor. 3. 12. Right principles and a regular conversation will stand the test even of the fiercest trial; but whatever we mix of base alloy, though we be in the main sincere, we shall suffer loss by it; and though our persons be saved, all that part of our work shall be consumed; and if we ourselves escape, it will be with great danger and difficulty, as from a house on fire on every side.

Praying in the Holy Ghost. Observe, 1. Prayer is the nurse of faith, the way to build up ourselves in it; when it is missed, is, to continue instant in prayer, Rom. 12. 12.

2. Our prayers are then most likely to prevail, when we pray in the Holy Ghost, under his guidance and influence, according to the rule of his word, with faith, fervency, and constant persevering importunity; this is praying in the Holy Ghost, whether it be done by, or without a set prescribed form.

V. 21. Keep yourselves, &c. 1. “Keep up the grace of love to God in its lively vigorous acts and exercises in your souls.” 2. “Take heed of throwing yourselves out of the love of God to you, or its delightful, cheering, strengthening manifestations; keep yourselves in the way of God, if you would continue in his love.”

Looking on the mercy, &c. 1. Eternal life is to be looked for only through mercy; mercy is our only plea, not merit; or if merit, not our own, but another’s, who has merits for us what otherwise we could have laid no claim to, nor have entertained any well-grounded hope of.

2. It is said, not only through the mercy of God as our Creator, but through the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ as Redeemer; all who come to heaven, must come thither through our Lord Jesus Christ; for there is no other name under heaven given among men by which we must be saved, but that of the Lord Jesus only, Acts 4. 12. compared with v. 10.

3. A believing expectation of eternal life will arm us against the snares of sin; (2 Pet. 3. 14.) a lively faith of the blessed hope will help us to mortify our cursed lusts.

22. And of some have compassion, &c. Observe, 1. We ought to do all we can to rescue others out of the snare of the Devil, that they may be saved from (or recovered, when entangled therein, out of) dangerous errors, or pernicious practices. We are not only (under God) our own keepers, but every man ought to be (as much as in him lies) his brother’s keeper; none but a wicked Cain will contradict this, Gen. 4. 9. We must watch over one another, farther, have a watchful eye on each other, and set a good example to all about us.

This must be done with compassion, making a difference. How is that? We must distinguish between the weak and the wilful.

1. Of some we must have compassion, treat them with all tenderness, restore them in the spirit of meekness, not be needlessly harsh and severe in our censures of them and their actions, nor proud and lofty in our conduct toward them, not implacable, not averse to reconciliation with them, or admitting them to the friendship they formerly had with us, when they give evident or even strongly hopeful tokens of a sincere repentance: if God has forgiven them, why should not we? We infinitely more need his forgiveness than they do, or can do our’s; though perhaps neither they nor we are justly or sufficiently sensible of this.

2. Others save with fear, warning upon them the terrors of the Lord; “Endeavour to frighten them out of their sins; preach hell and damnation to them;” so good Mr. Henry.

But what if prudence and caution in administering even the most just and severe reproofs, be what are primarily and chiefly here intimated (I do but offer it for consideration;) as he had said, “Fear lest you frustrate your own good intentions and honest designs by rash and imprudent management, that you do not hinder, instead of reclaiming, even where greater degrees of severity are requisite, than in the immediately foregoing instance.” We are often apt to over-do, when we are sure we mean honestly, and think we are right in the main; yet the very worst are not needlessly or rashly, or to extremity, to be provoked; lest they be thereby further hardened, through our default.

Hating even the garment, &c. that is, keeping yourselves at the utmost distance from what is or appears evil, and designing and endeavouring that others may do so too; avoid, as Mr. Henry speaks,
AN

WITH

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS,

OF THE

REVELATION OF ST. JOHN THE DIVINE

Completed by Mr. William Tong.

It ought to be no prejudice to the credit and authority of this book, that it has been rejected by men of corrupt minds, such as Cerdon and Marcion, and doubted of by men of a better character; for that has been the lot of other parts of holy writ, and of the divine Author of the scripture himself. The image and superscription of this book are truly sacred and divine, and the matter of it agreeable with other prophetical books, particularly Ezekiel and Daniel; the church of God has generally received it, and found good counsel and great comfort in it.

From the beginning, the church of God has been blessed with prophecy; that glorious prediction of breaking the serpent's head, was the stamp and support of the patriarchal age; and the many prophesies there were concerning the Messiah to come, were the gospel of the Old Testament. Christ himself prophesied of the destruction of Jerusalem; and about the time in which that was accomplished, he intrusted the apostle John with this book of revelation, to deliver it to the church as a prediction of the most important events that should happen to it, to the end of time, for the support of the faith of his people, and the direction of their hope. It is called the Revelation, because God therein discovers those things which could never have been sifted out by the reasonings of human understanding; those deep things of God, which no man knows, but the Spirit of God, and those to whom he reveals them.
