AN

EXPOSITION,

WITH

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS,

UPON THE BOOK OF

RUTH.

This short history of the domestic affairs of one particular family, fitly follows the book of Judges, (the events related here, happening in the days of the Judges,) and fitly goes before the books of Samuel, because in the close it introduces David: yet the Jews, in their Bibles, separate it from both, and make it one of the five Megilloth, or Volumes, which they put together toward the latter end; in this order, Solomon's Song, Ruth, Lamentations, Ecclesiastes, and Esther. It is probable that Samuel was the penman of it. It relates, not miracles or laws, wars or victories, or the revolutions of states, but the afflictions first, and afterward the comfort, of Naomi; the conversion first, and afterward, the preferment, of Ruth. Many such events have happened, which perhaps we may think as well worthy to be recorded. But these God saw fit to transmit the knowledge of to us; and even common historians think they have liberty to choose their subject. The design of this book is,

I. To lead to providence; to show us how conversant it is about our private concerns, and to teach us in them all to have an eye to it, acknowledging God in all our ways, and in all events that concern us. See 1 Sam. 2. 7. 8. Ps. 113. 7-9.

II. To lead to Christ, who descended from Ruth, and part of whose genealogy concludes the book, from whence it is fetched into Math. 1. In the conversion of Ruth the Moabitess, and the bringing of her into the pedigree of the Messiah, we have a type of the calling of the Gentiles in due time into the fellowship of Christ Jesus our Lord. The afflictions of Naomi and Ruth we have an account of, ch. 1. Instances of their industry and humility, ch. 2. The bringing of them into an alliance with Boaz, ch. 3. And their happy settlement thereof, ch. 4. And let us remember the scene is laid in Beth-lehem, the city where our Redeemer was born.

RUTH, I.

CHAP. I.

In this chapter we have Naomi's afflictions. 1. As a distressed housekeeper, forced by famine to remove into the land of Moab, v. 1. 2. II. As a mourning widow and mother, bewailing the death of her husband and her two sons, v. 3-5. III. As a careful mother-in-law, desirous to be kind to her two daughters, but at a loss how to be so, when she returns to her own country, v. 6-13. Orpah she parts with in sorrow, v. 14. Ruth she takes with her in fear, v. 15-18. IV. As a poor woman sent back to the place of her first settlement, to be supported by the kindness of her friends, v. 19-22. All these things were melancholy, and seemed against her, and yet all were working for good.

1. NOW it came to pass, in the days when the judges ruled, that there was a famine in the land. And a certain man of Beth-lehem-judah went to sojourn in the country of Moab, he, and his wife, and his two sons. 2. And the name of the man was Elimelech, and the name of his wife Naomi, and the name of his two sons Mahlon and Chilion, Ephrathites of Beth-lehem-judah. And they came into the country of Moab, and continued there. 3. And Elimelech, Naomi's husband, died; and she was left, and her two sons. 4. And they took them wives of the women of Moab; the name of the one was Orpah, and the name of the other Ruth; and they dwelled there about ten years. 5. And Mahlon and Chilion died also both of them; and the woman was left of her two sons and her husband.

The first words give all the date we have of this story. It was in the days when the Judges ruled, v. 1. not in those disorderly times when there was no king in Israel. But under which of the judges these things happened, we are not told, and the conjectures of the learned are very uncertain. It must be toward the beginning of the judges' time, for Boaz, who married Ruth, was born of Rahab, who received the spies in Joshua's time. Some think it was in the days of Ehud, others of Deborah; the learned Bishop Patrick inclines to think it was in the days of Gideon, because in his days only we read of a famine by the Midianites' invasion, Judges 6. 3, 4. While the judges were ruling, some one city, and some another, Providence takes particular cognizance of Beth-lehem, and has an eye to a King, to Messiah himself, who should descend from two Gentile mothers, Rahab and Ruth.

I. A famine in the land; in the land of Canaan, that land flowing with milk and honey. This was one of the judgments which God had threatened to bring upon them for their sins, Lev. 26. 19, 20. He has many arrows in his quiver; in the days of the judges they were oppressed by their enemies; and when by that judgment they were not reformed, God tried this, for when he judges, he will overcome. When the land had rest, yet it had not plenty; even in Beth-lehem, which signifies the house of bread, there was scarcity. A fruitful land is turned into barrenness, to correct and restrain the luxury and wantonness of them that dwell therein.

II. An account of one particular family distress-ed in the famine; it is that of Elimelech. His name signifies my God a King; agreeable to the state of Israel when the judges ruled, for the Lord was their king. It was a work only in their affliction, that God was their's, and that he reigns for ever. His wife was Naomi, which signifies my amiable or pleasant one. But his sons' names were Mahlon and Chilion, sickness and consumption, perhaps because weakly children, and not likely to be long-lived. Such are the productions of our pleasant things, weak and infirm, fading and dying.

It was famine in Beth-lehem, into the country of Moab, on the other side Jordan, for subsistence, because of the famine, v. 1, 2. It seems there was plenty in the country of Moab, when there was scarcity of bread in the land of Is-rael. Common gifts of providence are often bestowed in greater plenty upon those that are strangers to God, than upon those that know and worship him. Moab is as easy from his youth, while Israel is consumed over with temptation, Josh. 23. 11, not because God loves Moabites better, but because they have their portion in this life. Thither Elimelech goes, not to settle for ever, but to sojourn for a time, during the dearth, as Abraham, on the like occasion, went into Egypt, and Isaac into the land of the Philistines. Now here, 1. Elimelech's care to provide for his family, and his taking his wife and children with him, were, without doubt, commendable, and the providence of God in letting them be provided for, had not the fault of God's people, that they had made haste to leave them, 1 Tim. 5. 8. When he was in his straits, he did not forsake his house, go seek his fortune himself, and leave his wife and children to shift for their own maintenance, but, as became a tender husband and a loving father, where he went, he took them with him, not as the ostrich, Job 39. 16. But, 2. I see not how his removal into the country of Moab, upon this occasion, could be justified. Abraham and his family, when they were sojourners in Canaan, and it was agreeable to their condition to remove; but the seed of Israel were now fixed, and ought not to remove into the territories of Canaan. What reason had Elimelech to go, more than any of his neighbours? If by any ill husbandry he had wasted his patrimony, and sold his land, or mortgaged it, (as it should seem, ch. 4. 3, 4,) which brought him into a more necessitous condition than others, the law of God had obliged his neighbours to relieve him; (Lev. 25. 35,) but that was not his case, for he went out full, v. 21. By those who tarried at home, it appears the famine was not so extreme, but that there was sufficient to keep life and soul together; and his charge was but small, only ten sicles of silver. But if he could not be content with the short allowance with which God provided him, he took up with, and in the day of famine could not be satisfied, unless he kept as plentiful a table as he had done formerly, if he could not live in hope that there would come years of plenty again in due time, or could not with patience wait for these years, it was his fault, and he did it by dishonesty and the good land he had given them, waken the hands of his brethren, when he should have been willing to take his lot, and done no ill example to others. If all should do as he did, Canaan would be dispeopled. Note, It is an evidence of a discontented, distrustful, unstable spirit, to be weary of the place in which God hath set us, and to be for leaving it immediately, whenever we meet with any uneasiness or inconvenience in it. It is folly to think of escaping that cross which, being laid in our way, we ought to take up. It is our wisdom to make the best of that which is, for it is seldom that changing our place is mending it. Or if he would remove, why to the country of Moab? If he had made inquiry, it is probable he would have found plenty in some of the tribes of Israel, those, for instance, on the other side Jordan, that bordered on the land of Moab; if he had that zeal for God and his worship, and that affection for his brethren, which became an Israelite, he would not have persuaded himself so easily to go to sojourn among Moabites.

IV. The marriage of his two sons to two of the daughters of Moab after his death, v. 4. All agree that this was ill done; the Chaldee says, They transgressed the decree of the word of the Lord, in taking strange wives. If they would not stay unmarried till their return to the land of Israel, they were not so far off but that they might have fetched them wives from thence. Little did Elimelech think, when he went to sojourn in Moab, that ever his sons should thus join in affinity with Moabites. But those that bring young people into bad acquaintance, and take them out of the way of public ordinances, though they may think them well-principled, and armed against temptation, know not what they do, nor what will be the end thereof. It does not appear till it is too late. Some were so wrought upon by the proselyted to the Jewish religion, for Orpah is said to return to her gods, v. 15. The gods of Moab were her's still. It is a groundless tradition of the Jews, that Ruth was the daughter of Eglon king of Moab, yet the Chaldee paraphrase inserts it; but this and their other tradition, which he inserts likewise, cannot agree that Boaz, who married Ruth, was the same with Ibzan who judged Israel two hundred years after, 2 Sam. 21. 10. But see, v. 12. 4. V. The death of Elimelech and his two sons, and the disconsolate condition Naomi was thereby reduced to. Her husband died, v. 3. and her two sons, v. 5. soon after their marriage; and the Chaldee says, Their days were shortened, because they transgressed the law in marrying strange wives. See here, 1. That wherever we go, we cannot remain in death, whose fatal arrows fly in all places. 2. That we cannot expect to escape death, out of the way of our duty. He that will save his life by any indirect courses shall lose it. 3. That death, when it comes into a family, often makes breach upon breach. One is taken away, to prepare another to follow soon after; one is taken away, and that affliction is not only improved, and therefore God sends another of the same kind. When Naomi had lost her husband, she took so much the more complacency, and put so much the more confidence, in her sons; under the shadow of those surviving comforts, she thinks she shall live among the heathen; and exceedingly glad she was of these goards, but, behold, they wither presently, green and growing up in the morning, cut down and dried up before night; buried soon after they were married, for neither of them left any children. So uncertain and transient are all our enjoyments here. It is therefore our wisdom to make sure of those comforts that will be made sure, and which death cannot rob us of. But how desolate was the condition, and how disconsolate the spirit of poor Naomi, when the woman was left of her two sons, and her husband! When these two things come upon her in a moment, come upon her in their perfection, by whom shall she be comforted? Loss of children and widronth! Isa. 47. 9.—51. 19. It is God alone who has wherewithal to comfort those that are cast down.

6. Then she arose, with her daughters-in-law, that she might return from the country of Moab: for she had heard in the country of Moab how that the Lord had visited his people in giving them bread. 7. Wherefore she went forth out of the place where she was, and her two daughters-in-law with her: and they went on the way to return unto the land of Judah. 8. And Naomi said unto her two daughters-in-law, Go, return each to her mother's house: the Lord deal kindly with you, as ye have dealt with the dead, and with me. 9. The Lord grant you that ye may find rest, each of you in the house of her husband. Then she kissed them: and they lifted up their voice and wept. 10. And they said unto her, Surely we will return with thee unto thy people. 11. And Naomi said, Turn again, my daughters, why will you go with me? are there yet any more sons in my womb, that they may be your husbands? 12. Turn again, my daughters, go your way; for I am too old to have a husband. If I should say, I have hope, if I should have a husband also to-night, and should also bear sons; 13. Would ye tarry for them till they were grown? would ye stay for them from having husbands? nay, my daughters; for it grieveth me much, for your sakes, that the hand of the Lord is gone against me. 14. And they lifted up their voice, and wept again: and Orpah kissed her mother-in-law, but Ruth clave unto her. 15. And she said, Behold, thy sister-in-law is gone back unto her people, and unto her gods: return thou after thy sister-in-law. 16. And Ruth said, Entreat me not to leave thee, or to return from following after thee: for whither thou goest, I will go: and where thou lodgest, I will lodge: thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God. 17. Where thou diest will I die, and there will I be buried: the Lord do so to me, and more also, if thou but depart from me. 18. When she saw that she was steadily minded to go with her, then she left speaking unto her.

See here, The good affection Naomi bore to the land of Israel, v. 6. Though she could not stay in it while the famine lasted, she would not stay out of it when the famine ceased; though the country of Moab had afforded her shelter, and supply in time of need, yet she did not intend it should be her rest for ever, no land should be that but the holy land, in which the sanctuary of God was, of which he had said, This is my rest for ever. Observe,

1. God, at last, returned in mercy to his people; for though he contended long, he will not continue always. As the judgment of oppression, under which they often groaned in the time of the judges, still came to an end, after a while, when God had raised them up a deliverer; so here, the judgment of famine: at length God graciously visited his people in giving them bread. Plenty is God's gift, and it is his vocation which, by bread, the staff of life, holds our souls in life. Though this mercy be the more striking when it comes after famine, yet if we have constantly enjoyed it, and never knew what famine meant, we are not to think it the less valuable.

2. Naomi then returned, in duty to her people. She had often inquired of their state, what harvest they had, and how the markets went, and still the tidings were discouraging: but like the prophet's servant, who, having looked seven times and seen no sign of comfort, at last discerned a cloud, no bigger than a man's hand, which soon overspread the heavens; so Naomi, at last, has good news brought her of plenty in Beth-lehem, and then she can think of no other than returning thither again. Her new alliances in the country of Moab could not make her forget her relation to the land of Israel. Note, Though there be a reason for our being in bad places, yet when the reason ceases, we must by no means continue there. For though the ordinances, and forced presence with wicked people, are great afflictions, but when the force ceases, and it is continued of choice, then it becomes a great sin. It should seem, she began to think of returning immediately upon the death of her two sons: (1.) Because she looked upon that affection to be a judgment upon her family for lingering in the country of Moab; and hearing this to be the voice of the rod, and of him that appointed it, she obeyed and returned. Had she returned upon the death of her husband, perhaps she might have saved the life of her sons; but when God judgeth, he will overcome, and if one affliction prevail not to awaken us to a sight and sense of sin and duty, another shall. When death comes into a family, it ought to be improved for the reforming of what is amiss in the family: when relations are taken away from us, we are put upon inquiry, whether, in some instance or other, we are not out of the way of our duty, that we may return to it. God calls our sins to remembrance when he slays a son, 1 Kings 17. 18. And if he thus hedge us up with thorns, it is that he may oblige us to say, We will go and return to our first Husband, as Naomi here to her country, Hos. 2. 7. (2.) Because the land of Moab was now become a melancholy place to her. It is with little pleasure that she can breathe in the air in which her husband and sons had expired; or on that ground in which they lay buried out of her sight, but not out of her thoughts; now she will go to Canaan again. Thus God takes away from us the comforts we stay ourselves too much upon, and solace ourselves too much in, here in the land of our sojournings, that we may think more of our home in the other world, and by faith and hope may hasten towards it. Earth is embittered to us, that heaven may be endured.

2. The good affection which her daughters-in-law, and one of them especially, bore to her, and her good relations to their good affection.

1. They were both kind to her, and accompanied her, some part of the way at least, when she returned toward the land of Judah. Her two daughters-in-law did not go about to persuade her to continue in the land of Moab, but if she was resolved to go home, would pay her all possible civility and respect at parting; and this was one instance of it, they would bring her on her way, at least, to the utmost limits of their country, and help to carry her luggage as far as they went. It does not appear she had any servant to attend her, v. 7. By this we see both that Naomi, as became an Israelite, had been very kind and obliging to them, and had won their love, in which she is an example to all mothers-in-law; and that Orpah and Ruth had a just sense of her kindness, for they were willing to return into Israel. It was a sign they had dwelt together in unity, though they were dead, by whom they had been taken, and then came. Though they retained an affection to the gods of Moab, (v. 15,) and Naomi was still faithful to the God of Israel, yet that was no hindrance to either side from love and kindness, and all the good offices that the relation required. Mothers-in-law and daughters-in-law are too often at variance, (Matth. 10. 35.) and therefore it is the more commendable if they live in love; let all in that relation aim at the praise of God.

2. When they had gone a little way with her, Naomi, with a great deal of affection, urged them to go back; (v. 8, 9.) Return each to her mother's house. When they were dislodged by a sad providence from the house of their husbands, it was a mercy to them that they had their parents yet living, that they had their houses to go to, where they might be welcomed and easy, and were not turned out into the wide world, where Naomi would at first be a companion in theirown mothers would be more agreeable to them than their mother-in-law, especially when their own mothers had houses, and their mother-in-law was not sure she had a place to lay her head in, which she could call her own. She dismisses them, (1.) With commendation: that is a debt owing to those who had conducted themselves well in any relation, they ought to have the praise of it, Ye have dealt kindly with the dead and with me; that is, Ye were good wives to your husbands that are gone, and have been good daughters to me; and not wanting to your duty in either relation. Note, When we and our relations are parting, by death or otherwise, it is very comfortable, if we have both their testimony, and the testimony of our own consciences for us, that while we were together, we carefully endeavoured to do our duty in the relation. This will help to allay the bitterness of parting; and while we are together we should labour so to conduct ourselves, as that when we part, we may not have cause to reflect with regret upon our miscarriages in the relation. (2.) With prayer. It is very proper for friends, when they part, to part with prayer. She sends them home with her blessing; and the blessing of a mother-in-law is not to be slighted. In this blessing she twice mentions the name Jehovah, Israel's God, and the apostle's name, God; this was more suitable to daughters to look up to him as the only Fountain of all good. To him she prays in general, that he would recompense to them the kindness they had showed to her and her's. It may be expected and prayed for in faith, that God will deal kindly with those that have dealt kindly with their relations, He that watereth, shall be watered also himself; and, in particular, that they might be happy in marrying again; The Lord grant that ye may find rest, each of you in the house of her husband. Note, [1.] It is very fit, that according to the apostle's direction, (1 Tim. 5. 14.) the younger women, and he that rules, should seek the young widow, etc., to marry, beget children, and guide the house. And it is also meet, lest those who have approved themselves good wives, should not again be blessed with good husbands, especially those that, like these widows, have no children. [2.] The married state is a state of rest, such rest as this world affords, rest in the house of a husband, more than can be expected in the house of a mother, or a mother-in-law. [3.] This rest is God's gift, grace of an extraordinary nature, qualities found in our outward condition, God must be acknowledged in it. There are those that are unequally yoked, that find little rest even in the house of a husband. Their affection ought to make those the more thankful, to whom the relation is comfortable; yet let God be the Rest of the soul, and no perfect rest thought of on this side heaven. [3.] She dismissed them with great affection; she kissed them; she pressed her hands with affection to give them, but silver and gold she has none. Her tenderest kiss shall be the seal of such a true friendship, (as though she never see them more) she will, while she lives, retain the pleasing remembrance of. If relations must part, let them thus part in love, that they may (if they never meet again in this world) meet in the world of everlasting love.

3. The two young widows could not think of parting with their good mother-in-law, so much had she good affection of them; that was not upon them, they not only lifted up their voice and wept, as loath to part, but they professed a resolution to adhere to her; (v. 10.) Sure we will return with thee unto thy people, and take our lot with thee. It is a rare instance of affection to a mother-in-law, and an evidence that they had, for her sake, conceived a good opinion of the people of Israel. Even Orpah, who afterward went back, would have gone with her, had she seemed to have been the better引导 with Naomi. The sad ceremony of parting, and the tears shed on that occasion, drew from her this protestation, but it did not hold. Strong passions, without a settled judgment, commonly produce weak resolutions.

4. Naomi sets herself to dissuade them from going along with her, v. 11. 13. If she had had any sons in Canaan, or any near kinsmen, whom she could have expected to marry the widows, to raise up seed to them that were gone, and to redeem the mortgaged estate of the family, it might have been some encouragement to them to hope for a comfortable settlement at Beth-lehem. But she had no sons, nor could she think of any near kinsman, likely to do the kinsman's part, and therefore argues that she was never likely to have any sons to be husbands for them, for she was too old to have a husband; it became her age to think of dying and going out of the world, not of marrying and beginning the world again. Or, if she had a husband, she could not expect to have children, nor if she had sons, could she think that these young widows would stay unmarried, till her sons that should be yet born, would grow up to be marriageable. Yet this was not all, she could not only not propose to herself to marry them like themselves, but she knew not how to maintain them like themselves. The greatest comfort of that poor condition to which she was reduced, was, that she was not in a capacity to do for them as she would. It grieved me more for your sakes, than for my own, that the hand of the Lord is gone out against me. Ob. serve, (1.) She judges herself chiefly aimed at in the affection; that God’s quarrel was principally with her.
"The hand of the Lord is gone out against me.
I am the sinner, it is with me that God has a contending, I take it to myself." This will become us when we are under affliction; though many others share in the trouble, yet we must hear the voice of the rod, as if it spoke only against us, and not bil-ting the rebukes of it at another’s houses, but making them to ourselves. (2.) She laments most the trouble that redounded to them from it.
She was the sinner, but they were the sufferers,
It grieveth me much for your sakes. A gracious generous spirit can better bear its own burden, than it can bear to see it a grievance to others, or others drawn any ways into trouble by it. Naomi could more easily want herself, than see her daughters want. She therefore turneth to my daughters, for
ahs. I am in no capacity to do you any kindness.
But did Naomi do well, thus to discourage her daughters from going with her, when, by taking them with her, she might save them from the idolatry of Moab, and bring them to the faith and worship of the God of Israel. Naomi, no doubt desired to do that. But, [1.] If they did come with her, she would not have them to come upon her account; for she does take upon them a profession
of religion, only in complaisance to their relations,
to oblige their friends, or for the sake of company,
will be converts of small value and of short continuance. [2.] If they did come with her, she would have them to make it their deliberate choice, and to sit down first and count the cost, as it concerns those to do, that may take up a profession of religion. It is good for us to be told the work ought. So she explains her course with him who, in the heat of zeal, spoke that bold word, Master, I will follow thee whithersoever thou goest; ‘Come, come,’ says Christ, ‘canst thou fare as I fare? The Son of man hath not where to lay his head; know that, and then consider whether thou canst find in thy heart to take thy lot with me,’ Matt.
8. 19, 20. Thus Naomi deals with her daughters-in-law. Thoughts and proposals by serious consideration, are likely to be kept always in the imagination of the heart; whereas what is soon ripe,
is soon rotten.
5. Orpah was easily persuaded to yield to her own corrupt inclination, and to go back to her country, her kindred, and her father’s house, now
when she stood fair for an effectual call from it.
They both lifted up their voices and wept again,
(v. 14.) being much excited with the tender conversation Naomi had; but it had a different effect upon them; to Orpah it was a savour of death unto death; the representation Naomi had made of the inconveniences they must count upon, if they went forward to Canaan, sent her back to the country of Moab, and served her an excuse for her apostasy.
But, on the contrary, it strengthened Ruth’s resolution, and her good affection to Naomi, with whose wisdom and goodness she was never so charmed, as she was upon this occasion; thus to her it was a savour of life unto life. 1. Orpah kissed her mother-in-law; that is, took an affectionate leave of her, bid her farewell for ever, without any purpose to follow her hereafter as he that said he would follow Christ, when he had buried his father, or bidden them farewell that were at home. Orpah’s kiss showed she had an affection for Naomi, more loath to part from her; yet she did not love her well enough to leave her country for her sake.
Thus, many have a value and affection for Christ,
and yet come short of salvation by him, because they cannot find in their hearts to forsake other things for him. They love him, and yet leave him, because they do not love him enough, but love other things better. Thus the young man that went away from Christ, went away sorrowful, Matt. 19. 22.
But, (2.) Ruth clave unto her. Whether, when she had gone from home, she was resolved to go forward with her or no, does not appear; perhaps she was before determined what to do, out of a sincere affection to the God of Israel, and to his law, of which, by the good instructions of Naomi, she had some knowledge.
6. Naomi persuades Ruth to go back, urging, as a further inducement, her sister’s example; v. 15.
Thy sister-in-law is gone back to her people, and thereof our course gone back to her gods; for whatever she might have done while she lived with her mother-in-law, it would be next to impossible for her to show any respect to the God of Israel, when she went to live among the worshippers of Chenaosh. Those that forsake the communion of saints, and return to the people of Moab, will certainly break off their communion with God, and embrace the idols of Moab. Now, return thou, after thy sister; that is, ‘If ever thou wilt return, return
now. This is the greatest trial of thy constancy; stand this trial, and thou art mine forever.’ Such effences as that of Orpah’s revolt, must needs come,
that the more we use the comforts of the gospel,
our conduct may be made manifest, as Ruth was upon this occasion.
7. Ruth puts an end to the debate, by a most solemn profession of her immoveable resolution ever to forsake her, nor to return to her own country and her old relations again, v. 16, 17. Nothing could be said more fine, more brave, than this; she seems to have had another spirit, and another speech, now that her sister was gone, and it is an instance of the power of the word, how under the resolute choice of the better part. Draw me thus, and we will run after thee. Her mother’s dissuasions make her the more resolute; as when Joshua said to the people, Ye cannot serve the Lord, they said it with the more vehemence, Nay, but we will.
1. She begs of her mother-in-law to say no more against her going, ‘Entreat me not to leave thee, nor to return from following after thee; for all thy entreaties now cannot shake that resolution which thy instructions formerly have wrought in me; and therefore let me hear no more of them.’ Note, It is a great vocation and unseasonableness to those that are resolved for God and religion, to be tempted and solicited to alter their resolution. They that would not think of it, would not hear of it. Entreat me not. The margin reads it, ‘I fear me not.’ Note.
We are to reckon those against us, and really our counterparts, that would hinder us in our way to the heavenly Canaan. Our relations they may be,
but they cannot be our friends, that would dissuade us from, and discourage us in the service of God, and the work of religion.
2. She is very particular in her resolution to clave to her, and never to forsake her; and she speaks the language of soul and spirit, and heaven. She is so in love, not with her mother’s beauty, or riches, or gaiety, (all those were withered and gone,) but with her wisdom, and virtue,
and grace, which remained with her, even in her present poor and melancholy condition, that she resolves to cling to her. (1.) She will travel with her;
‘Whither thou goest I will go, though to a country
I never saw, and which I have been trained up in a house of Lamanites, I will not forsake thee, and country, yet with thee every road shall be pleasant.
[2.] She will dwell with her; ‘Where thou lodgest I will lodge, though it be in a cottage, nay, though it be no better a lodging than Jacob had,
when he had the stones for his pillow. Where thou settest up thy staff, I will set up mine, be it where it will go. (C.) She will twist her interests with her; Thy people shall be my people. From Naomi's character she concludes certainly, that that great nation was a wise and understanding people; she judges of them all by her good mother, who, wherever she went, was a credit to her country, (as all those should study to be, who profess religion to the better country, that is, the heavenly,) and therefore she will think herself happy if she may yea, or any of these, "Thy people shall be mine to associate with, or to be comfortable to, and to be concerned for." (4.) She will join in religion with her; thus she determined to be her's, usque ad aras—to the very altars, "Thy God shall be my God, and farewell to all the gods of Moab, which are vanity and a lie. I will adore the God of Israel, the only living and true God, trust in him alone, serve him, and in every thing be ruled by him. This is to take the Lord for her God." (5.) She will gladly die in the same bed. Where thou diest will I die: she takes it for granted they must both die, and that, in all probability, Naomi, as the elder, would die first, and resolves to continue in the same house, if it might be, till her days also were fulfilled; intimating likewise a desire to partake of her happiness in death; she wishes to die in the same place, in the house of her dying after the soul. She might have said, Where thou diest will I die the death of the righteous Naomi, and let my last end be like hers. (6.) She will desire to be buried in the same grave, and to lay her bones by her's; There will I be buried; not desiring to have so much as her dead body carried back to the country of Moab, in token of any remaining kindness for it; but Naomi and she having joined souls, she desires they may mingle dust, in hopes of uniting together, and being together for ever in the other world.

3. She backs her resolution to adhere to Naomi with a solemn oath; The Lord do so to me, and more also, (which was an ancient form of imprecation,) if I go not with her unto death. An oath for confirmation was an end of this strife, and would leave a lasting obligation upon her, never to forsake that good way she was now making choice of. (1.) It is the law that he that taketh a wife in his own house, or that dieth without issue, should not separate them one from another; (Gen. xxvii. 27.) *She could promise to die, and be buried in the same place, but not at the same time: it might so happen, that she might die first, and that would part them. Note, Death parts those whom nothing else will part. A dying hour is a parting hour, and should be so thought of by us, and prepared for. (2.) It is resolved that nothing else should part them; not any kindness from her own mother; for Naomi was wisely minded to keep herself among them; nor any unkindness from Israel, nor the fear of poverty and disgrace among them. No, I will never leave thee.

Now this is a pattern of a resolute convert to God and religion; thus must we be at a point. First, We must take the Lord for our God. "This God is my God for ever and ever:" I have avouched him; am his people; and therefore I will, as long as I live, prize him, and be his, and give him the first place in my heart. Secondly, We must take his people for our people in all conditions; though they be a poor despised people, yet, if they be his, they must be our's. Thirdly, Having cast in our lot among them, we must be willing to take our lot with them, and to fare as they fare. We must submit to the same yoke, and draw in it faithfully; take up the same cross, and carry it cheerfully; go where God would we should go, though it should be into haustment, and to lodge where he would have us to lodge, though it be in a prison; die where he will have us to die, and lay our bones in the graves of the upright, who enter into peace, and rest in their beds, though they be but the graves of the common people. Fourthly, We must resolve to continue and persevere, and herein our adherence to Christ must be closer than that of Ruth to Naomi; she resolved that nothing but death should separate them; but we must resolve that death itself shall not separate us from our happiness in Christ, and then we may be sure that death itself shall not separate us from our happiness in Christ. Fifthly, We must bind our souls with a bond never to break these pious resolutions, and swear unto the Lord that we will cleave together. Fast bind, fast find. He that means honestly, does not start at assurances.

Lastly, Naomi was hereby silenced, v. 18. When she saw that, Ruth was steadfastly minded to go with her, (which was the very thing she aimed at in all that she had said, to make her of a steadfast mind in going with her,) when she saw that she had gained her point, she was well satisfied, and left off speaking to her. She could desire nothing more than that solemn protestation which Ruth had just now made. See the power of resolution, how it puts temptation to silence. Those that are unresolved, and go in religious ways without a steadfast mind, tempt the tempter, and stand like a door half open, which invites a thief; but resolution shuts and bolts the door, resists the Devil, and forces him to flee.

The Chaldee paraphrase thus relates the debate between Naomi and Ruth. Ruth said, Entreat me not to leave thee, for I will be a proselyte; Naomi said, We are commanded to keep sabbaths, and good days, on which we may not travel above a thousand cubits; (a sabbath-day's journey;) Well, says Ruth, whither thou goest, I will go. Naomi said, We are commanded not to carry all night with Gentiles; Well, says Ruth, where thou lodgest, I will lodge, Naomi said, We are commanded to keep six hundred and thirteen freecets; Well, says Ruth, what- ever thy people keep, I will keep, for they shall be my people. Naomi said, We are forbidden to worship any strange god; Well, says Ruth, thy God shall be my God. Naomi said, We have four sorts of deaths for malefactors, stoning, burning, strangling, and slaying with the sword; Well, says Ruth, where thou diest, I will die: and wheresoe'er they lay their graves, there will I be buried.

19. So they two went until they came to Bethlehem. And it came to pass, when they were come to Bethlehem, that all the city was moved about them; and they said, Is this Naomi? 20. And she said unto them, Call me not Naomi, call me Mara: for the Almighty hath dealt very bitterly with me. 21. I went out full, and the Lord hath brought me home again empty: why then call ye me Naomi, seeing the Lord hath testified against me, and the Almighty hath afflicted me? 22. So Naomi returned, and Ruth the Moabitess, her daughter-in-law, with her, which returned out of the country of Moab: and they came to Beth-lehem in the beginning of barley-harvest.

Naomi and Ruth, after many a weary step, (the fatigue of the journey, we may suppose, being somewhat relieved by the good instructions Naomi gave to her proselyte, and the good discourse they had together,) came at last to Beth-lehem. And they came very seasonably, in the beginning of the barley harvest, which was the first of their harvests, that of wheat following after. Now Naomi's own eyes might convince her of the truth of what she saw; but she was not of the country of Moab; she had visited his people in giving them bread, and Ruth might see this good land in its best state; and now they had opportunity to provide for winter. Our times are in His hands; both the events, and the time of them.

Notice is here taken,

1. Of the discomposure of the neighbours upon this occasion; (v. 15.) All the city was moved about them. Her old acquaintance gathered about her, to inquire concerning her state, and to bid her welcome to Beth-lehem again. Or perhaps, they were moved about her, lest she should be a charge to the town, she looked so bare. By this it appears that she had formerly lived respectably, else there had not been so much notice taken of her. If those that have been in a high and prosperous condition, break, or fall into poverty or disgrace, their fall is the more remarkable, and they say, Is this Naomi? The woman of the city said it, for the word is feminine. They with whom she had formerly been intimate were surprised to see her in this condition; she was so much broken and altered with her afflictions, that they could scarcely believe their own eyes, or think that this was the same person whom they had formerly seen, so fresh and fair, and gay; Is this Naomi? So unlike is the rose, when it is withered, to the rose that was blooming. What a poor figure does Naomi make now, compared with what she made in her prosperity! If any asked this question in contempt, upbraiding her with her miseries, ("Is this she that could not be content to fare as her neighbours did, but must ramble to a strange country? See what she has got by it!") their temper was very base and sordid; nothing more barbarous than to triumph over those that are fallen. But we may say, you have asked for compassion and commiseration; "Is this she that lived so plentifully, and kept so good a house, and was so charitable to the poor? How is the gold become dim?" They that had seen the magnificence of the first temple, wept, when they saw the meaness of the second; so these here. Note, Afflictions will make great and surprising changes in a little time. When we see how sickness and old age have changed the fair, and sweet, and gentle temper, we may think of what the Beth-lehemites said, Is this Naomi? One would not take it to be the same person. God, by his grace, fits us for all such changes, especially the great change!

II. Of the composure of Naomi's spirit. If some upbraided her with her poverty, she was not moved against them, as she would have been, if she had been in prosperity; but, with a great deal of pious patience, bore them, and all the melancholy effects of her affliction; (v. 20, 21.) Call me not Naomi, call me Mara, &c. "Naomi signifies pleasant or amiable; but all my pleasant things are laid waste; call me Mara, bitter, or bitterness, for I am now a woman of a sorrowful spirit." Thus does she bring her mind to her condition, which we all ought to do, when our condition is not in every thing to our taste. Note,

1. The change of her state, and how that is described, with a pious regard to the divine providence, and without any passionate murmurings or complaints. (1.) It was a very sad and melancholy change. She went out full; so she thought herself when she had her husband with her, and two sons. Much of the fulness of our comfort in this world arises from agreeable relations. But she now came home again empty, a widow, and childless, and, probably, had sold her goods, and of all the effects she took with her, brought home no more than the clothes on her back. So uncertain is all that which we call fulness in the creature, 1 Sam. 2. 5. Even in the fulness of that sufficiency may be no strength. But there is a fulness, a spiritual and divine fulness, which we can be emptied of; a good part which shall not be taken from those that have it. (2.) She acknowledges the hand of God, his mighty hand, in the affliction. "It is the Lord that has brought me home again empty; it is the Almighty that has afflicted me." Note, Nothing conduces more to satisfy a gracious soul under an affliction, than the consideration of the hand of God in it. It is the Lord, 1 Sam. 3. 18. Job 1. 21. Especially to consider, that he who afflicts us, is Shaddai, the Almighty, with whom it is folly to contend, and to whom it is our duty and interest to submit. It is that name of God by which he enters into covenant with his people, I am God Almighty, God All-sufficient, Gen. 17. 1. He afflicts us as a God in covenant, and his all-sufficiency may be our support and supply under all our afflictions. He that supplies us of the creature, knows how to fill us with himself. (3.) She speaks very feelingly of the impression which the affliction had made upon her; He has dealt very bitterly with me. The cup of affliction is a bitter cup; and even that which afterward yields the peacable fruit of righteousness, yet for the present, is not joyous, but grievous, Heb. 12. 11. Job complains, Thou writest bitter things against me, Job. 13. 26. (4.) She owns the affliction to come from God as a controversy; The Lord hath testified against me. Note, When God corrects us, he testifies against us, and contends with us, (Job 10. 17.) intimating that he is displeased with us. Every rod has a voice, the voice of a witness.

2. The composure of her spirit with this change. "Call me not Naomi, for I am no more pleasant, either to myself or to my friends, but call me Mara, a name more agreeable to my present state." Many that are debased and impoverished, yet affect to be called by the empty names and titles of honour they have formerly enjoyed. Naomi did not so; her humility regards not a glorious name in a dejected state; if God deal bitterly with her, she accommodates herself to the dispensation, and is willing to be called Mara, bitter. Note, It well becomes us to have our hearts humbled under humbling providences. When our courage is broken down, our spirits should be brought down with it. And then our troubles are sanctified to us, when we thus comport with them; for it is not an affliction in itself, but an affliction rightly borne, that does us good.

Peridistis tota melia, si nondum misera esse diciだし。—So many calamities have been lost upon you, if you have not yet learned how to suffer. Sen. ad Helv. Tributum works patience.

CHAP. II.

There is scarcely any chapter in all the sacred history, that stoops so low as this; it makes no pretensions to be read as a poem of any sort; it is a collection of hints to a poor person as a Ruth, a poor Moabitish widow, so mean an action as her gleaning corn in a neighbour's field, and the minute circumstances thereof. But all this was in order to her being gathered into the line of redemption, and taken in among his ancestors, that she might be a figure of the espousals of the Gentile church to Christ, Isa. 54. 1. And this makes the story remarkable; and many of the passages of it are instructive, and very improvable. Here is Ruth's humility and industry in gleaning corn, Providence directing her to Boaz's field, v. 1. 3. The great favour which Boaz showed to her in many instances, v. 4. 10. The return of Ruth to her mother-in-law, v. 18. 22.

1. AND Naomi had a kinsman of her husband's, a mighty man of wealth, of the family of Elimelech; and his name Boaz. 2. And Ruth the Moabitess said unto Naomi, Let me now go to the field, and glean ears of corn after him in whose sight I shall find grace. And she said unto her, Go, my daughter. 3. And she went, and came, and gleaned in the field after the reapers: and her hap was to light on a part of the field belonging unto Boaz, who was of the kindred of Elimelech.

Naomi had now gained a settlement in Bethlehem among her old friends; and here we have an account.

I. Of her rich kinsman, Boaz, a mighty man of wealth. v. 1. The Chaldee reads it, mighty in the law; If he was both, it was a most rare and excellent conjunction, to be mighty in wealth, and mighty in the scriptures too; those that are so, are mighty indeed. He was grandson of Nahshon, that was prince of the tribe of Judah in the wilderness, and son of Salmon, probably a younger son, by Rahab, the harlot of Jericho; he carries might in his name, Boaz, in him is strength; and he was of the family of Elimelech, that family which was now reduced and brought so low. Observe, 1. Boaz, though a rich and a great man, had poor relations; every branch of the tree is a top branch. Let me, those three are poor, on't to know that it is the wise providence of God that makes the difference, (in which we ought to acquiesce,) and that to be proud of our relation to such, is a great sin, and to trust it, is great folly.

II. Of her poor daughter-in-law, Ruth. 1. Her condition was very low and poor; which was a great trial to the faith and constancy of a young proselyte. The Beth-lehemites had done well, if they had helped their daughter-in-law in a proper manner, not to one good house, and then to another; (it would have been a great support to an aged widow, and a great encouragement to a new convert;) but, instead of tasting the dainties of Canaan, they have no way of getting necessary food, but by gleanings; and otherwise, for aught that appears, they might have starved. Note, God has chosen the poor of this world; and poor they are like to be, for though God has chosen them, commonly men overlook them. 2. Her character, in this condition, was very good; v. 2. She said to Naomi, not, "Let me now go to the land of Moab again, for there is no living here; here there is want, but in my father's house there is bread enough;" no, she is not mindful of the country from which she came out, otherwise she had now a fair occasion to return; the God of Israel is there, and though he be not yet, will she trust in him and never forsake him. But her request is, Let me go to the field and glean ears of corn. Those that are well born, and have been well brought up, know not what straits they may be reduced to, nor what mean employments they may be obliged to get their bread by, Lam. 4.

5. When the case is thus melancholy, let Ruth be remembered, who is a great example.

I. Of humility; for when providence had made her poor, she did not say, "To glean, which is in effect to beg, I am ashamed," but cheerfully stoops to the meanness of her circumstances, and accommodates herself to her lot. High spirits more easily starve than stoop; Ruth was none of those. She does not tell her mother she was never brought up to live upon crumbs. Though she was not brought up to it, she is brought down to it, and is not an easy at it. Nay, it is her own motion, not her mother's injunction; humility is one of the brightest ornaments of youth, and one of the best omens. Before Ruth's honour was this humility. Observe, how humbly she speaks of herself, in her expectation of leave to glean; "Let me glean after him, in whose sight I shall find grace." She does not say, "I will go glean, and surely nobody will deny me the liberty;" but, "I will go glean, in the hope that somebody will allow me the liberty." Note, Poor people must not demand kindness as a debt, but humbly ask it, and take it as a favour, though in ever so small a matter. It becomes the poor to use entertainments.

2. Of industry. She does not say to her mother-in-law, "Let me now go a visiting to the ladies of the town, or go a walking in the fields to take the air, and be merry, I cannot sit all day moping with you;" no, it is not sport, but business, that her heart is upon, "Let me go and glean ears of corn, and that will turn to some good account." She was one of those virtuous women that love not to eat the bread of idleness; she loved to take pains. This is an example to poor people, let them learn to be very wise, and to work, and let their hands find to do, it with their might; a disposition to diligence bodes well, both for this world and the other. Love not sleep, love not sport, love not sauntering, but love business. It is also an example to poor people to work for their living, and not beg that they are able to earn. We must not be shy of any honest employment, though it be mean, let us say, to劳动ers—Youth should work. Let young people take advice from the aged, but not put them upon it.

4. Of dependence upon Providence; intimated in that, I will glean after him, in whose sight I shall find grace. She knows not which way to go, nor whom to inquire for, but will trust Providence to raise her up some friend or other that will be kind to her. Let us always keep up good thoughts of the Divine Providence, and believe, that while we do well, it will do well for us, and it did well for Ruth: for when she went out alone, without guide or companion, to glean, her help was to light on the field of Boaz, v. 3. To her it seemed casual, she knew not whose field it was, nor had she any reason for going to that more than any other, and therefore it is said to be her help; but Providence directed her steps to this field. Note, God wisely orders small events; and those that seem altogether contingent, serve his own glory, and the good of his people. Many a great affair is brought about by a little turn, which seemed fortuitous to us, but was directed by Providence with design.

4. And, behold, Boaz came from Bethlehem, and said unto the reapers, The *Lord be with you. And they answered him, The Lord bless thee. 5. Then said Boaz unto his servant that was set over the reapers, Whose damsel is this? 6. And the servant that was set over the reapers answered and said, It is the Moabitish damsel that came back with Naomi out of the country of Moab: 7. And she said, I pray you, let me glean and gather after the reapers among the sheaves: so she came, and hath continued even from the morning until now, that she tarried a little in the house. 8. Then said Boaz unto Ruth, Hearest thou not, my daughter? Go not to glean in another field, neither go from hence, but abide here fast by my maidens: 9. Let thine eyes be on the field that they do reap, and go thou after them: have I not charged the young men that they shall not touch thee? and when thou art athirst, go unto the vessels, and drink of that which the young men have drawn. 10. Then she fell on her face, and bowed herself to the ground, and said unto him, Why have I found grace in thine eyes, that thou shouldest deal thus with me? 11. And Boaz answered and said unto her, It hath fully been shown me all that thou hast done unto thy mother-in-law since the death of thine husband; and how thou hast left thy father and thy mother, and the land of thy nativity, and art come unto a people which thou knewest not heretofore. 12. The Lord recompense thy work, and a full reward be given thee of the Lord God of Israel, under whose wings thou art come to trust. 13. Then she said, Let me find favour in thy sight, my lord; for that thou hast comforted me, and for that thou hast spoken friendly unto thy handmaid, though I be not like unto one of thine handmaids. 14. And Boaz said unto her, At meal-time come thou hither, and eat of the bread, and dip thy morsel in the vinegar. And she sat beside the reapers: and he reached her her parched corn, and she did eat, and was sufficed, and left. 15. And when she was risen up to glean, Boaz commanded his young men, saying, Let her glean even among the sheaves, and reproach her not: 16. And let fall also some of the handfuls of purpose for her, and leave them, that she may glean them, and rebuke her not.

Now Boaz himself appears, and a great deal of decency there appears in his carriage, both toward his own servants, and toward this poor stranger.

I. Toward his own servants, and those that were employed for him in reaping and gathering in his corn. Harvest-time is a busy time; many hands must then be at work. Boaz that had much, being a mighty man of wealth, had much to do, and consequently many to work under him, and to live upon him; as great as he increased, they were increased that eat the bread of them. 1. And Boaz took him one of his servants, and set him over his servants, that were reap-her. God also inclining his heart to countenance her. Coming among his reapers, he observed this stranger among them, and got intelligence from his steward who she was, and here is a very particular account of what passed concerning her.

1. The steward gave to Boaz a very fair account of her, proper to recommend her to his favour, v. 6, 7. (1.) That she was a stranger, and therefore one of those that by the law of God were to gather the gleanings, Ruth 2. 2, 3. (2.) That she was of the Moabitish damsels. (3.) That she was a proselyte, for she came out of the country of Moab, to settle in the land of Israel. (4.) That she was very modest, and had not gleaned till she had asked leave. (5.) That she was very industrious, and went not to rest until it was full gone. (6.) That she was a tender and merciful person, and asked her master, if he could not let her lodge by his handmaids. (7.) That she was of the fittest company for her. (8.) That she was not a foreigner, but a stranger; and, in justice, but as a stranger, she was justly the fittest company for her. (9.) That she was of her own sex. (10.) That she was not her master's maid, but unlike her other handmaids. (11.) That she was not hard to be served, but her master was very tender of her. (12.) That she was very respectful and attentive to them. (13.) That she was not hard to be served, but respectful and attentive to them. (14.) That she was not a stranger, but a stranger, and respected her, who, no doubt, would be so to one whom they saw their master kind to. She was a stranger, and, it is probable, her language, dress, and manner, differed much from their's; but he charged them that they should not in any thing affront her, or be abusive to her, and her servants are too apt to be to strangers. (15.) That she bid her welcome to the entertainment he had provided for his servants. He ordered her, not only to drink of the water which was drawn for them, (for that seems to be the liquor he means, v. 9.) drawn from the famous well of Beth-lehem, which was by the gate, the water of which David longed for, 2 Sam. 24. 18.) but at mealtimes to eat from their table even until now. And the poor, that are industrious and willing to take pains, are fit to be encouraged. Now, in the heat of the day, she tarried a little in the house or booth, that was set up in the field for shelter from the weather, to repose herself, and some suggest that it is probable she retired for her devotion. But she soon came back to her work, and, except that little intermission, kept close to it all day, though she had no wish to leave her master's: Servants should be just in the characters and reports they give to their masters, and take heed they do not misrepresent any person, nor without cause discourage their masters' charity.

2. Boaz was hereupon extremely civil to her in divers instances. (1.) He ordered her to attend his reapers in every field they gathered in, and not to glean in another field, for she should not need to go any where else to mind herself; (2.) He ordered her there fast by my maidens; for those of her own sex were the fittest company for her. (2.) He charged all his servants to be very tender of her, and respectful to her, who, no doubt, would be so to one whom they saw their master kind to. She was a stranger, and, it is probable, her language, dress, and manner, differed much from their's; but he charged them that they should not in any thing affront her, or be abusive to her, and her servants are too apt to be to strangers. (3.) He bid her welcome to the entertainment he had provided for his servants. He ordered her, not only to drink of the water which was drawn for them, (for that seems to be the liquor he means, v. 9.) drawn from the famous well of Beth-lehem, which was by the gate, the water of which David longed for, 2 Sam. 24. 18.) but at mealtimes to eat from their table even until now. And the poor, that are industrious and willing to take pains, are fit to be encouraged. Now, in the heat of the day, she tarried a little in the house or booth, that was set up in the field for shelter from the weather, to repose herself, and some suggest that it is probable she retired for her devotion. But she soon came back to her work, and, except that little intermission, kept close to it all day, though she had no wish to leave her master's: Servants should be just in the characters and reports they give to their masters, and take heed they do not misrepresent any person, nor without cause discourage their masters' charity.

3. Ruth received his favours, with a great deal of humility and gratitude, and conducted herself with as much propriety in her place, as he did in his, but little thinking that she should shortly be the mistress of that field she was now gleanin in. (1.) She paid all possible respect to him, and gave him honour, according to the usage of the country; v. 10. She fell on her face, and bowed herself to the ground. Note, Good breeding is a great ornament to religion; and we must render honour to whom honour is due. (2.) She humbly owned herself unworthy of his favours; I am a stranger, and not like one of thy handmaids; v. 13. not so well dressed, nor so well taught; nor so neat, nor so handy. Note, It well becomes us all to think meanly of ourselves, and to take notice of that in ourselves, which is diminishing, esteemings others better than ourselves. (3.) She gratefully acknowledged his kindness to her; though it was not a great expense to him, nor much more than what he was obliged to by the divine law, yet she magnifies and admires it, Why have I found grace in thine eyes? v. 10. (4.) She begs the continuance of his good-will, Let me find favour in thy sight, v. 13. and owns that what he had said and done to her was such a kindness, that she hath spoken me all that thou hast done unto thy mother-in-law. Note, Those that do well, ought to have the praise of it. But that which especially he commended her for, was, that she had left her own country, and was become a proselyte to the Jewish religion; for so the Chaldee explains it: Thou art come to be proselyted, and to dwell among a people which thou knowest not. Those that leave all, to embrace the true religion, are worthy of double honour. (5.) He prayed for her; v. 12. The Lord recompense thy work. Her strong affection to the commonwealth of Israel, to which she was by birth an alien, was such a work of the divine grace in her, as would certainly be crowned with a full recompense of reward by her master, if he should offer to take her into his family; for no greater kind act can be done to those that are our poor relations, is, to assist and encourage their industry. Boaz ordered his servants to let her glean among the sheaves, where other gleaners were not allowed to come, and not to reprove her, that is, not to call her thief, or to suspect her of taking more than was allowed her, v. 15. All this shows Boaz to have been a man of a generous spirit, and one that, according to the law, considered the heart of straw the most respected of all the fruits of the field.}

17. So she gleaned in the field until even, and beat out that she had gleaned: and it was about an ephah of barley. 18. And she took it up, and went into the city; and her mother-in-law saw what she had gleaned: and she brought forth, and gave to her... that she had reserved after she was sufficed. 19. And her mother-in-law said unto her, Where hast thou gleaned to-day? and where wroughtest thou? blessed be he that did take knowledge of thee. And she showed her mother-in-law with whom she had wrought, and said, The man's name with whom I wrought to-day is Boaz. 20. And Naomi said unto her daughter-in-law, Blessed be he of the Lord, who hath not left off his kindness to the living and to the dead. And Naomi said unto her, The man is near of kin unto us, one of our next kinsmen. 21. And Ruth the Moabitess said, He said unto me also, Thou shalt keep fast by my young men, until they have ended all my harvest. 22. And Naomi said unto Ruth her daughter-in-law, It is good, my daughter, that thou go out with his maidens, that they meet thee not in any other field. 23. So she kept fast by the maidens of Boaz to glean unto the end of barley-harvest, and of wheat-harvest; and dwelt with her mother-in-law.

Here,

Ruth, II.

1. Ruth finishes her day's work, v. 17. 1. She took care not to lose time, for she gleaned until even. We must not be weary of well-doing, because in due season we shall reap. She did not make an excuse to sit still, or go home, till the evening; let us work the works of him that sent us, while it is day. She scarcely used, much less lost, her strength or the kind of work; for though he ordered his servants to leave handfuls for her, she continued to glean the scattered ears. 2. She took care not to lose what she had gathered, but threshed it herself, that she might the more easily carry it home, and might have it ready for use. The slothful man rosest not that which he took in hunting, and so losteth the benefit of it; but the substance of a diligent man is precious, Prov. 12. 11. 22. Ruth had gathered it ear by ear, but when she had put it all together, it was an ephah of barley, about four pecks. Many a little makes a great deal. It is an encouragement to industry, that in all labour, even that of gathering, there is profit; but the talk of the lips tendeth only to penury. When she had got her corn into as little compass as she could, she took it up herself, and carried it into the city, though, had she asked them, it is likely some of Boaz have done it for her. Let us study to be as little as possible troublesome to those that are kind to us. She did not think it either too hard or too mean a service, to carry her corn herself into the city, but was rather pleased with what she had gotten by her own industry, and careful to scarce it; and let us thus take care that we lose not those things which we have wrought, which we have gained. 2 John 8.

II. She paid her respects to her mother-in-law; went straight home to her, and did not go to converse with Boaz' servants; showed her what she had gleaned, that she might see she had not been idle.

1. She entertained her with what she had left of the good dinner Boaz had given her. She gave to her that she had reserved, after she was sufficed, v. 18, which refers to v. 14. If she had any thing better than another, her mother should have part with her. Thus, having showed industry abroad, she showed piety at home; so children's maintaining of their parents is called, (1 Tim. 5. 4.) and it is part of their duty due to them by the fifth commandment, Matt. 15. 6. 2. She gave her an account of her day's work, and how a kind providence had favoured her in it, which made it very comfortable to her; for the gleanings that a righteous man hath, are better than the harvests of many wicked, Ps. 37. 16. (1.) Naomi asked her where she had been: Where last thou gleaned to-day? Note, Parents should take care to inquire into the ways of their children, how, and where, and in what company they spend their time. This may prevent many extravagancies which children, left to themselves, run into, by which they bring both themselves and their parents to shame. If we are not our brethren's, yet surely we are our children's keepers: and we know what a son Adonijah proved, that never had been children. Parents should examine their children, not to frighten or discourage them, so as to make them hate home, or tempt them to tell a lie, but to commend them if they have done well, and with mildness to reprove and caution them if they have done otherwise. It is a good question for us to ask ourselves in the close of every day, Where have I gleaned to-day? What improvements have I made in knowledge and grace? What have I done or gotten, that will turn to a good account?

(2.) Ruth gave her a particular account of the kindness she had received from Boaz, (v. 19.) and the hopes she had of further kindness from him, he having ordered her to attend his servants throughout all the harvest, v. 21. Note, Children should look upon themselves as accountable to their parents and to those that are over them, and not to think it a disparagement to them to be examined; let them call them Father, in the name of the same. Ruth told her mother what kindness Boaz had showed her, that she might take some occasion or another to acknowledge it, and return him thanks; but she did not tell her how Boaz had commended her, v. 11. Humility teaches us, not only not to praise ourselves, but not to be forward to publish others' praises of us.

(3.) We are here told what Naomi said to it. [1.] Boaz had parted with what had been her daughter's benefactor, even before she knew who it was; (v. 19.) Blessed be he, whoever he was, that did take knowledge of thee; shooting the arrow of prayer at a venture. But more particularly, when she was told who it was; v. 20. Blessed be he of the Lord. Note, The poor must pray for those that are kind and liberal to them, and thus requite them, when they are not capable of making them as great returns to them; they must pray for those that refresh them, Job 29. 13. - 31. 20. And he that hears the cries of the poor against their oppressors, (Exod. 22. 27.) it may be hoped, will hear the prayers of the poor for their benefactors. She now remembered the former kindnesses Boaz had showed to her husband and sons, and joins those to this; he has not left off his kindness to the living, though he is dead. If we die, do we show kindness even to those that seem to have forgotten our former favours, perhaps it may help to revive the remembrance, even of those which seem buried.

[2.] She acquainted Ruth with the relation their family was in to Boaz; The man is near of kin to us. It should seem she had been so long in Moab, that she had forgotten her kindred; in the land of Moab, till this providence God brought it to her mind. At least, she had not told Ruth of it, though it might have been some encouragement to a young proselyte. Unlike to humble Naomi, are many, who, though fallen into decay themselves, are continually blessing by their good relations. Nay, observe the chain of thought here, and in it a chain of providences, bringing about what was designed concerning Ruth. Ruth names Boaz as one that had been kind to her; Naomi bethinks herself that that should be, and presently recollects herself; "The man is near of kin to us; now that I hear his name, I remember him very well." This thought brings to his mind Naomi's next kin (v. 9); our God, that has the right to redeem our estate that was mortgaged, and therefore from him we may expect further kindness. That is the likeliest man in all Beth-lehem to set us up." Thus God brings things to our mind, sometimes of a sudden, that prove to have a wonderful tendency to our good.

[3.] She appointed Ruth to continue her attendance in the fields of Boaz; (v. 22.) "Let them not meet thee in any other field, for that will be construed a contempt of his courtesy." Our blessed Saviour is our God; it is he that has a right to redeem: if we expect to receive benefit by him, let us closely adhere to him, and his fields and his family; let us not go to the world and its fields for that which is to be had with him only, and which he has encouraged us to expect from him. Has the Lord dealt with us? Let us not be found in any other field, nor seek for happiness and satisfaction in the creature. Tradesmen take it ill, if those that are in their books, go to another shop. We lose divine favours, if we slight them. Some think Naomi gave her daughter-in-law a tacit rebuke; she had spoken (v. 21.) of keeping fast by the young men; "Nay," said Naomi, (v. 22.) "it is good that thou keepest fast by them; they are fitter than thou art; but thou art fitter than the young men." But they are too critical: Ruth spake of the young men, because they were the principal labourers, and to them Boaz had given directions concerning her; and Naomi takes it for granted, while she attended the young men, her society would be with the maidens, as was fit.

Ruth dutifully obeyed her mother's directions; she continued to glean, to the end, not only of the barley-harvest, but of the wheat-harvest, which followed it, that she might gather in harvest to serve for winter, Prov. 6. 6-8. She also kept fast by the maidens of Boaz, with whom she afterward cultivated an acquaintance, which might do her service, v. 23. But she constantly came to her mother at night in due time, as became a virtuous woman, that was for working-days, and not for merry nights. And when the harvest was ended, (as Bishop Patrick expounds it,) she did not gad abroad, but kept her aged mother company at home. Dinah went out to see the daughters of the land, and we know what a disgrace her vanity ended in; Ruth kept at home, and helped to maintain her mother, and went out on no other errand than to get provision for her; and we shall find afterward what preferment her humility and industry ended in.

 güncel observance of these directions, v. 6, 7. III. The kind and honourable treatment Boaz gave her, v. 8. 15. IV. Her return to her mother-in-law, v. 16. 18.

1. THEN Naomi her mother-in-law said unto her, My daughter, shall I not seek rest for thee, that it may be well with thee? 2. And now is not Boaz of our kindred, with whose maidsens thou wast? behold, he winnoweth barley to-night in the threshing-floor. 3. Wash thyself, therefore, and anoint thee, and put thy raiment upon thee, and get thee down to the floor; but make not thyself known unto man, until he shall have done eating and drinking. 4. And it shall be, when he heth down, that thou shalt mark the place where he shall lie, and thou shalt go in, and uncover his feet, and lay thee down; and he will tell thee what thou shalt do. 5. And she said unto her, All that thou sayest unto me I will do.

Here, I. Naomi's care for her daughter's comfort, is, without doubt, very commendable, and is recorded for imitation. She had no thoughts of marrying herself, ch. 1. 12. But though she that was old, had resolved upon a perpetual widowhood, yet she was far from the thoughts of confining her daughter-in-law to it, that was young. Age must not make itself a standard to youth. In the contrary, she is full of compassion: she cannot but pity her daughter; Her wisdom projected that for her daughter, which her daughter's modesty forbade her to project for herself, v. 1. This she did. 1. In justice to the dead, to raise up seed to them that were gone, and to preserve the family from being extinct. 2. In kindness and gratitude to her daughter-in-law, who had conducted herself very dutifully and respectfully to her: "My daughter, thou didst not do this by me, looking upon her in all respects as her own, I shall not seek rest for thee., that is, "a settlement in the married state; shall I not get thee a good husband, that it may be well with thee," that is, "that thou mayest live plentifully and pleasantly, and not spend all thy days in the mean and melancholy condition we now live in?" Note, (1.) A married state is, or should be, a state of rest to young people; wandering affections are then fixed, and the heart must be at rest; it is at rest in the house of a husband, and in his heart, ch. 1. 9. Those are giddily indeed, that marriage does not compose. (2.) That which should be desired and designed by those that enter into a marriage state, is, that it may be well with them; in order to which it is necessary that they chuse well; otherwise, instead of being a rest to them, it may prove the greatest uneasiness. Parents, in disposing of their children, must have this in their eye, that it may be well with them. And be it always remembered, That it is best for us, which is best for our souls. (2.) It is the duty of parents to seek this rest for their children, and to do all that is fit for them to do, in due time, in order to it. And the more dutiful and respectful they are to them, though they can the worse spare them, yet they should rather prefer them, and the better. II. The care which Naomi took in order to her daughter's preferment, was very extraordinary, and looks suspicious. If there was anything improper in it, the fault must lie upon Naomi, who put her daughter upon it, and who knew, or should know, the laws and usages of Israel better than Ruth. It was true, that Boaz, being near of kin to the deceased, and (for aught that Naomi knew to the contrary) the nearest of all now alive, was obliged by the divine law to marry the widow of Mahlon, who was the eldest son of Elimelech, and was dead without issue, p. 2. "Is not Boaz our kindred, and therefore bound in conscience to take care of our affairs? Why should we not remind him of his duty? This may encourage us to lay ourselves by faith at the feet of Christ, that he is our nearest kin, having taken our nature upon him, he is bone of our bone and flesh of our flesh. It was a convenient time to remind him of it, now that he had got so much acquaintance with Ruth, by her constant attendance upon his reapers during the whole harvest, which was now ended; and he also, by the kindness he had showed to Ruth in lesser matters, had encouraged Naomi to hope that he would not be unkind, much less unjust, in greater. And she thought it was a good opportunity to apply to him, when he made a winnowing-feast at his threshing-floor, (v. 2.) then and there completing the joy of the harvest, and treating his workmen like a kind master; He winnoweth barley to-night, that is, he makes his entertainment tonight; as Naabal and Absalom had feasts at their sheep-shearing, so Boaz at his winnowing. 3. Naomi then, and not herself, perhaps it was the usage in that country, that in this case the woman should make the demand, so much is intimated by the law, Deut. 25. 7. ... 9. Naomi therefore orders her daughter-in-law to make herself clean and neat, not to make herself fine; (v. 3.) "Wash thyself and anoint thee, not paint thee, (as Jezebel,) put on thy raiment, but not the attire of the harlot, and go down to the floor, and let this Boaz wash the custom of his house, that such an appearance of evil, was such an approach towards it, and might have been such occasion of it, that we know not well how to justify it. Many expositors think it unjustifiable, particularly the excellent Mr. Poole. We must not do evil that good may come. It is dangerous bringing the spark and the tinder together; for how great a matter may a little fire kindle! All agree that it is not to be drawn into a precedent; neither our laws nor those of the same time are the same that were then; yet I am willing to make the best of it. If Boaz was, as they presumed, the next kinsman, she was his wife before God, (as we say,) and there needed but little ceremony to complete the nuptials; and Naomi did not intend that Ruth should approach to him any otherwise than as his wife; she knew Boaz to be not only an old Naught (with the most he had trusted to that alone in venturing her daughter-in-law so near him,) but a grave sober man, a virtuous and religious man, and one that feared God. She knew Ruth to be a modest woman, chaste, and a keeper at home, Tit. 2. 5. The Israelites had indeed been once debranch by the daughters of Moab, (Num. 25. 1.) but this Moabitess was none of those daughters. Naomi herself designed nothing but what was honor, and honourable, and she (which is likest all things and holiest all things) banished and forbad all suspicion that either Boaz or Ruth would offer any thing but what was likewise honest and honourable. If what she advised, had been then as indecent and inconsiderate (according to the usage of the country) as it seems now to us, we can not think that if Naomi had had so little virtue, (which yet we have no reason to suspect,) that she should have had so little wisdom, as to put her daughter upon it, since that alone might have marred the match, and have alienated the affections of so good and good a man as Boaz from her. We must therefore think that the thing did not look so ill then as it does now. Naomi referred her daughter-in-law to Boaz for further directions. When she had thus made her claim, Boaz, who was more learned in the laws, would tell her what she must do. Thus we may lay ourselves at the feet of our Redeemer, to receive from him our doom, Lord, what wilt thou have me to do? Acts 9. 6.

We may be sure, if Ruth had apprehended any evil in that which her mother advised her to, she was a woman of too much virtue, and too much sense, to promise as she did, (v. 5.) All that thy saiyest unto me I will do. Thus must the younger submit to the elder, and to their grave and prudent counsels, when they have nothing worth speaking of to object against it.

6. And she went down unto the floor, and did according to all that her mother-in-law bade her. 7. And when Boaz had eaten and drunk, and his heart was merry, he went to lie down at the end of the heap of corn: and she came softly, and uncovered his feet, and laid her head. 8. And it came to pass, at midnight, that the man was afraid, and turned himself; and behold, a woman lay at his feet. 9. And he said, Who art thou? And she answered, I am Ruth thine handmaid; spread therefore thy skirt over thine handmaid; for thou art a near kinsman. 10. And he said, Blessed be thou of the Lord, my daughter; for thou hast shewed more kindness in the latter end than at the beginning, inasmuch as thou followedst not young men, whether poor or rich. 11. And now, my daughter, fear not, I will do thee all that thou requir'st: for all the city of my people doth know that thou art a virtuous woman. 12. And now, it is true that I am thy near kinsman, howbeit, there is a kinsman nearer than I. 13. Tarry this night, and it shall be in the morning, that if he will perform unto thee the part of a kinsman, well; let him do the kinsman's part: but if he will not do the part of a kinsman to thee, then will I do the part of a kinsman to thee, as the Lord liveth: lie down until the morning.

Here is, 1. Boaz's good management of his common affairs; it is probable, according to the common usage, 1. When his servants winnowed, he was with them, and had his eye upon them, to prevent, not their stealing any of his corn, (he had no reason to fear that,) but their waste of it through carelessness in the winnowing of it. Masters may sustain great losses by servants that are heedless, though they be honest, which is a reason why men should be diligent to know the state of their own flocks, and look well to them. 2. When he had more than ordinary work to be done, he treated his servants with extraordinary entertainments, and, for their encouragement, did eat and drink with them. It well becomes those that are rich and great, to be generous to, and also to be familiar with, those that are under them, and employed for them. 3. When Boaz had supped with his workmen, and been a while pleasant with them, he went to bed in due time, so early, that by midnight he had his first sleep, (v. 8.) and thus he would be fit for the next day's work. 4. But on the morrow, as that he would not from this instance, entertain the least suspicion of her character, or seem to do so; perhaps blaming himself that he had not offered the service of a kinsman to these distressed widows, and saved her this trouble, and ready to say as Judah concerning his daughter-in-law, she is more righteous than I. 5. (v. 9.) He commended her, spoke kindly to her, called her more respectable, and spoke honourably of her, as a woman of eminent virtue. She had showed in this instance more kindness to her mother-in-law, and to the family into which she had married, than in any instance yet. It was very kind to leave her own country, and come along with her mother to the land of Israel, to dwell with her, and help to maintain her; for this had been very unphilosophical. 6. He says, Thou hast shown more kindness in the latter end, than at the beginning. (v. 10.) in that she consulted not her own fancy, but her husband's family, in marrying again. She received not the addresses of young men (much less did she seek them) whether poor or rich, but was willing to marry as the law directed, though it was to an old man, because it was for the honour and interest of the family into which she had married, and she showed an entire kindness. Young people must aim, in disposing of themselves, not so much to please their own eye, as to please God and their parents. 7. (v. 11.) "Fear not that I will slight thee, or expose thee; no, I will do all that thou requirest, for it is the same that the law requires, from the next of kin, and I have given thee reason to expect it, for all the city of my profile doth know that thou art a virtuous woman." Note, (1.) Exemplary virtue ought to have its due praise, (Phil. 4. 8.) and it will recommend both men and women to the esteem of the wisest and best. Ruth was a poor woman, and poverty often obliterates the lustre of virtue: yet Ruth's virtues, even in a mean condition, were generally taken notice of, and could not be hid; nay, her virtues took away the reproach of her poverty; if poor people be but good people, they shall have a better maintenance from God and man. Ruth had been remarkable for her humility, which paved the way to this honour; the less she proclaimed her own goodness, the more did her neighbours take notice of it. (2.) In the choice of yoke-fellows, virtue should especially be regarded, known approved virtue; let religion determine the choice, and it will certainly crown the choice; and make it acceptable to God and man.
promise he backs with a solemn oath, for it was a conditional contract of marriage; (v. 13.) As the Lord liveth. Thus keeping the matter in suspense, he bade her wait till morning. Bishop Hall thus sums up this matter in his Contemplations.

"Boaz, instead of touching her as a wanton, blesst her as a father, encourage her as a friend, promiset her as a kinsman, rewards her as a patron, and sends her away laden with hopes and gifts, no less chaste, more happy, than she came. O admirable temperance, worthy the progenitor of Him in whose lips and heart there was no guile!"

14. And she lay at his feet until the morning; and she rose up before one could know another. And he said, Let it not be known that a woman came into the floor. 15. Also he said, Bring the vail that thou hast upon thee, and hold it. And when she held it, he measured six measures of barley, and laid it on her: and she went into the city.

16. And when she came to her mother-in-law, she said, Who art thou, my daughter? And she told her all that the man had done to her. 17. And she said, These six measures of barley gave he me; for he said to me, Go not empty unto thy mother-in-law.

18. Then said she, Sit still my daughter, until thou know how the matter will fall: for the man will not be in rest, until he have finished the thing this day.

We are here told,

1. How Ruth was dismissed by Boaz. It had not been safe for her to go home in the dead of the night, therefore she lay at his feet (not by his side) until morning; but as soon as ever the day broke, that she had light to go home by, she got away, before one could know another, that if she were seen, yet she might not be known to be abroad so unseasonably. She was not shy of being known to be a gleaner in the field, nor ashamed of that mark of her poverty would not have been known to be a night-walker, for her virtue was her greatest honour, and that which she most valued.

Boaz dismissed her. 1. With a charge to keep counsel; (v. 14.) Let it not be known that a woman came into the floor, and lay all night so near to Boaz; not that they needed to care much what people said of them, while they were both conscious to themselves of an unsullied purity, but because few could come so near the fire as they did, and not have been scorched. Had it been known, it would haveoccasioned suspicion in some, and reflections from others; good people would have been troubled, and bad people would have triumphed, and therefore let it not be known. Note, We must always take care, not only to keep a good conscience but to keep a good name: eitherwe must not do that, which, though innocent, is liable to be misinterpreted, or if we do, we must not let it be known. We must avoid not only sin, but scandal. There was likewise a particular reason for concealment here; if this matter should take wind, it might prejudice the freedom of the other kinsman's choice, and he would make this reason for refusing Ruth, that Boaz and she had been together. 2. He dismissed her with a good present of corn withal; he bad been disposed to her poor mother at home, and an evidence for her, that he had not sent her away in dislike, which Naomi might have suspected, if he had sent her away empty. He gave it her in her vail, or apron, or mantle; gave it her by measure; like a prudent corn master, he kept an account of all he delivered out; it was six measures, that is, six omer, as is supposed, of a certain weight; however the measure was, it is probable that he gave her as much as she could well carry, v. 15. And the Chaldee says, Strength was given her from the Lord to carry it; and add that now it was told her by the spirit of prophecy, That from her should descend six of the most righteous men of their age, namely, David, Daniel, his three companions, and the King Messiah.

2. How she was welcomed by her mother-in-law. She asked her, "Who art thou, my daughter? Art thou a bride or no? Must I give thee joy?" So Ruth told her how the matter stood, v. 16, 17. Whereupon her mother, 1. Advised her to be satisfied in what was done; Sit still, my daughter, till thou know how the matter will fall, v. 18. How it is decreed in heaven, so the Chaldee reads it, for marriages are made there. She had done all that was fit for her to do, and now she must patiently wait the issue, and not be perplexed about it. Let us learn hence to cast our care upon providence, to follow that and attend the motions of it, composing ourselves into an expectation of the event, with a resolution to acquiesce in it, whatever it be; sometimes that proves best done for us, that is least our own doing: "Sit still therefore, and see how the matter will fall, and say, Let it fall how it will, I am ready for it," v. 19. 2. She assured her that Boaz, having undertaken this matter, would approve himself a faithful careful friend; He will not be at rest, till he have finished the matter. Though it was a busy time with him in the fields and the floor, yet having undertaken to serve his friend, he would not neglect the business. Naomi believes Ruth has won his heart, and therefore he will not be easy till he knows whether she be his or no. This she gives as a reason why Ruth should sit still and not perplex herself about it, that Boaz had undertaken it, and he would be sure to manage it well. Much more reason have good christians to be careful for nothing, but cast their care on God, because he has promised to care for them; and what need have we to care, if he do? "Sit still and see how the matter will fall, for the Lord will perfect that which concerneth thee, and will make it to work for good to thee," Ps. 37. 5, 7. 135. 8. Your strength is to sit still. Isa. 50. 7.

CHAP. IV.

In this chapter, we have the wedding between Boaz and Ruth, in the circumstances of which there was something uncommon, which is kept upon record, for the illustration, not only of the law concerning the marrying of a brother's widow, (Dent. 25. 5, 5c. for cases help to expand laws.) 1. out of the gospel too, for from this marriage descended David, and the Son of David, whose espousals to the Gentle church were hereby typified. We are here told, 1. How Boaz got clear of his rival, and fairly ready for his wedding. 2. How Ruth was publicly solemnized, and attended with the good wishes of his neighbours, v. 9. 12. III. The happy issue that descended from this marriage. Obed, the grandfather of David, v. 15. 17. And his posterity descends from him, v. 18. 22. Perhaps it was to oblige him, that the blessed Spirit directed the inscribing of this story into the sacred cannon, he being desirous that the virtues of his great-grandmother, Ruth, together with her Gentile excellent actions, should be transmitted to posterity, and the singular providence that attended her.

1. THEN went Boaz up to the gate, and sat him down there: and, behold, the kinsman of whom Boaz spake, came by: unto whom he said, Ho, such a one! turn aside, sit down here. And he

2. And he took ten men of the elders of the city, and said, Sit ye down here. And they sat down.
3. And he said unto the kinsman, Naomi, that is come again out of the country of Moab, selleth a parcel of land, which was our brother Elimelech's: 4. And I thought to advertise thee, saying, Buy it before the inhabitants, and before the elders of my people. If thou wilt redeem it, redeem it; but if thou wilt not redeem it, then tell me, that I may know: for there is none to redeem it besides thee; and I am after thee. And he said, I will redeem it. Then said Boaz, What day thou buyest the field of the hand of Naomi, thou must buy it also of Ruth the Moabitess, the wife of the dead, to raise up the name of the dead upon his inheritance.
6. And the kinsman said, I cannot redeem it for myself, lest I mar mine own inheritance: redeem thou my right to thyself; for I cannot redeem it. 7. Now this was the manner in former time in Israel, concerning redeeming, and concerning changing, for to confirm all things: A man plucked off his shoe, and gave it to his neighbour: and this was a testimony in Israel. 3. Therefore the kinsman said unto Boaz, Buy it for thee: So he drew off his shoe.

Here,
1. Boaz calls a court immediately. It is probable he was himself one of the elders (or aldermen) of the city, for he was a mighty man of wealth; perhaps he was father of the city, and sat chief, for he seems here to have gone up to the gate, as one having authority, and not as a common person; like Job, ch. 29. 7, &c. We cannot suppose him less than a magistrate in his city, who was grandson to Nahshon, prince of Judah; and his lying at the end of the heap of corn in the threshing-floor the night before, was not at all inconsistent, in those days of plainness, with the honour of his sitting judge in the gate. But why was Boaz so hasty, why so fond of the match? Ruth was not rich, but lived upon alms; not honourable, but a poor stranger; she was never said to be beautiful; if ever she had been so, we may suppose that weeping, and travelling, and gleaning, had withered her lilies and roses. But that which made Boaz in love with her, and solicitous to expedit a affair, was, that all her neighbours agreed she was a virtuous woman; this set her price with him far above rubies, Prov. 31. 10. And this posture, he thinks, if, by marrying her, he might do her a real kindness, he should also do himself a very great kindness; he will therefore bring it to a conclusion immediately. It was not court-day, but he got ten men of the elders of the city to meet him in the town-hall over the gate, where public business used to be transacted, v. 2. So many, it is probable, by the custom of the city, made a full court. Boaz, though a judge, would not be a judge in his own cause, but desired the concurrence of other elders. Honest intentions dread not a public cognizance.

2. He summons his rival to come and hear the matter that was to be proposed to him; (v. 1.) "Ho, such a one, sit down here." He called him by his name, no doubt, but the divine historian thought not fit to record it; for because he refused to raise up the name of the dead, he deserved not to have his name preserved for us to be delivered out of our history. Providence favoured Boaz in ordering it so, that this kinsman should come by thus opportunely, just when the matter was ready to be proposed to him. Great affairs are sometimes much furthered by small circumstances which facilitate and expedite them.
3. He proposes to the other kinsman the redemption of Naomi's land, which, it is probable, had been mortgaged for money to buy bread with, when the famine was in the land; (v. 3.) "Naomi has a parcel of land to sell, namely the equity of the redemption of it out of the hands of the mortgagee, which she is willing to part with;" or, as some think, it was her jointure for life, and wanting money, for a small matter she would sell her interest to the heir at law, who was the fittest to be a purchaser. This he gives the kinsman legal notice of, (v. 4.) that he might have the refusal of it. Whenever he had it must pay for it, and Boaz might have said, "My money is as good as my kinsman's; if I have a mind to it, why may I not buy it privately, since I had the first proposer of it, and say nothing to my kinsman?" No; Boaz, though fond enough of the purchase, would not do so mean a thing, as to take a bargain over another man's head, that was near akin to it; but he thought it was to be of such importance, be not only just and honest, but fair and honourable, in all our dealings, and to do nothing which we are unwilling should see the light, but he above-board.
4. The kinsman seemed forward to redeem the land, till he was told, that if he did that, he must marry the widow, and then he flew off. He liked the land well enough, and, probably, caught at that idea more greedily, because he hoped that the poor widow being thus set upon, he would not give her up, and have so much the better bargain; "I will redeem it" (said he) "with all my heart;" thinking it would be a fine addition to his estate, v. 4. But Boaz told him there was a young widow in the case, and if he have the land, he must take her with it, Terra transit cum onere—The estate passes with this incumbrance; either the divine law or the usage of the country, might oblige him to it, or Naomi insisted upon it that she should not be sold without this condition, v. 5. Some think this does not relate to that law of marrying the brother's widow, (for that seems to oblige only the children of the same father, (Deut. 25. 5.) unless by custom it was afterward made to extend to the next of kin,) but it refers to the law of redemption of inheritances (Lev. 25. 24, 25.) for it is a Goel, a redeemer, that might be defrauded; and if so, it was not by the law, but by Naomi's own resolution, that the purchaser was to marry the widow. However it was, this kinsman, when he heard the conditions of the bargain, refused it; (v. 6.) "I cannot redeem it for myself, I will not meddle with it upon these terms, lest I mar my own inheritance;" the land, he thought, would be an improvement of his inheritance, but not the land with the woman, that would mar it. Perhaps he thought it would be a disapperaidge to him to marry such a poor widow that was come from a strange country, and almost lived upon alms; he fancied it would be a blemish to his family, it would mar his blood, and disgrace his posterity; her eminent virtues were not sufficient in his eye to balance this. The Chaldee paraphrase makes his reason for this refusal to be, that he had another wife, and if he should take Ruth, it might occasion strife and contention in his family, and that would mar the comfort of his inheritance. Or, he thought she might bring him a great many children, and they would all expect shares out of his estate, which would scatter it into too many... hands, so that his family would make the less figure. This makes many shy of the great redemption, they are not willing to espouse religion; they have heard well of it, and have nothing to say against it; they will give it their good word, but at the same time they will give their good word with it, they are willing to part with it, and cannot be bound for it, for they will lose their own inheritance in the world. Heaven they could be without, but here they can dispense with; it will not agree with the luths they have already espoused, and therefore let who will purchase heaven at that rate, they cannot.

5. The right of redemption is fairly resigned to Boaz; if this nameless kinsman lost a good bargain, a good estate, and a good wife too, he may thank himself for not considering it better, and Boaz will think of doing his way clear to that which he valued and desired above anything. In those ancient times it was not the usage to pass estates by writings, as afterwards, (Jer. 32. 10, &c.) but by some sign or ceremony, as with us by livery and seisin, as we commonly call it; that is, the delivery of seisin, seisin of a house by giving the key, of land by giving turf and a twig. The ceremony here used, was, he that surrendered, plucked off his shoe, (this Chaldee says, it was the glove of his right hand,) and gave it to him whom he made the surrender, intimating thereby, that whatever right he had to tread or go upon the land, he conveyed and transferred it, upon a valuable consideration, to the purchaser; this was a testimony in Israel; v. 7. and it was done in this case, v. 8. If this kinsman was obliged by the law to have married Ruth, and his refusal had been a contempt of that law, Ruth must have plucked off his shoe, and spit in his face. Deut. 25. 9. But though his refusal should in some measure oblige him to the duty, yet the distance of his relation might serve to excuse him from the penalty, or Ruth might very well dispense with it, since his refusal was all she desired from him. But Bishop Patrick, and the best interpreters, think this had no relation to that law, and that the drawing off of the shoe was not any disgrace, as there, but a confirmation of the surrender, and an evidence that it was not fraudulently or surreptitiously obtained. Note, Fair and open dealing in all matters of contract and commerce, is what all these must make conscience of, that would approve themselves Israelites indeed, without guile. How much more honourably and honestly does Boaz come by this purchase, than if he had secretly underminded his kinsman, and privately struck up a bargain with Naomi, unknown to him. Honesty will be found the best policy.

9. And Boaz said unto the elders, and unto all the people, Ye are witnesses this day that I have bought all that was Elimelech's, and all that was Chilion's and Mahlon's, of the hand of Naomi. 10. Moreover, Ruth the Moabitess, the wife of Mahlon, have I purchased to be my wife, to raise up the name of the dead upon his inheritance, that the name of the dead be not cut off from among his brethren, and from the gate of his place: ye are witnesses this day. 11. And all the people that were in the gate, and the elders, said, We are witnesses. The Lord make the woman that is come into thine house like Rachel and like Leah, which two did build the house of Israel: and do thou worthy in Ephratah, and be famous in Beth-lehem. 12. And let thy house be like the house of Pharez, (whom Tamar bare unto Judah,) of the seed which the Lord shall give thee of this young woman.

Boaz now sees his way clear, and therefore delays not to perform his promise made to Ruth, that he would do the kinsman's part, but, in the gate of his city, before the elders and all the people, publishes a marriage-contract between himself and Ruth the Moabitess, and therewith the purchase of all the estate that belonged to the family of Elimelech. If he had not been (ch. 2. 1.) a mighty man of wealth, he could not have compassed his resolve to do such a service to his kinsman's family. What is the name of gold for, that it enables a man to do so much the more good in his generation, and especially to those of his own household, if he have but a heart to use it so?

Now concerning this marriage, it appears,

1. That it was solemnised, or at least published, before many witnesses; (v. 9. 10.) "Ye are witnesses," I. 2. "That I have bought the estate, whose part of it, mortgaged to them, let him come to me and marry his name, fail not to give the full price of it, according to the value of the land," which was computed by the number of years to the year of jubilee, (Lev. 25. 15.) when it would have returned of course to Elimelech's family. The more public the sale of estates are, the better they are guarded against frauds. 2. "That I have purchased the widow to be my wife," he had no portion with her; what fortune she had, was incumbered, and he could not leave it without making her in her distress. And if he purchased her, and yet being a virtuous woman, he reckoned he had a good bargain. House and riches are the inheritance of fathers, but a prudent wife is more valuable, is from the Lord as a special gift. He designed, in marrying her, to preserve the memory of the dead, that the name of Mahlon, though he left no son to bear it up, might not be cut off from the gate of his place, but by this means might be preserved, that it should be inserted in the public register, that Boaz married Ruth, the widow of Mahlon, the son of Elimelech, which posterity, whenever they had occasion to consult the register, would take particular notice of. And this history being preserved for the sake of that marriage and the issue of it, that proved an effectual means to perpetuate that name, and carry it beyond the thought or intention of Boaz, to the world's end. And observe that because Boaz did this honour to the dead, as well as this kindness to the living, God did him the honour to bring him into the genealogy of the Messiah, by which his family was dignified above all the families in Israel; while the other kinsman, that was so much afraid of diminishing himself, and marrying his inheritance, by marrying the widow, has his name, his posterity, his honour, buried in oblivion and disgrace. A tender and generous concern for the honour of the dead, and the comfort of poor widows and strangers, neither of which can return the kindness, (Luke 14. 14.) is what God will be well pleased with, and will surely recompense. Our Lord Jesus is our God, our Redeemer, our everlasting Redeemer; he looked, like Boaz, with compassion on the fallen and forsaken. He did, at a vast expense, he redeemed the heavenly inheritance for us, which by sin was mortgaged, and forfeited in the hands of divine justice, and which we could never have been able to redeem. He likewise purchased a peculiar people, whom he would espouse to himself, though strangers and foreigners, like Ruth, poor, and despised, that the name of that dead and buried race might not be cut off for ever. He ventured the marrying of his own inheritance, to do this, for though he was rich, yet for our sakes he became poor; but he was abundantly recompensed for it by his Father, who, because he thus humbled himself, hath highly exalted, and given him a name above every name. Let us own our obligations to him, make sure our contract with him, and study all our days here to do him honour.

Boaz, by making a public declaration of this marriage and purchase, not only secured his title against all pretenders, as it were by a fine with proclamations, but put honour upon Ruth, showed that he was not ashamed of her, and her parentage, and poverty, and left a testimony against clandestine marriages. It is only that which is evil, that hates the light, and comes not to it. Boaz called with great delight to her, to see what he could justly, and would never disown; and such regard was then had, even to the contemned crowd, that not only the elders, but all the people that were in the gate, passing and re-passing, were appealed to, (v. 9.) and heartened to, (v. 11.) when they said, We are witnesses.

II. That it was attended with many prayers. This was the case, in all the house, when they witnessed to it, wished well to it, and blessed it, v. 11, 12. Ruth, it should seem, was now sent for, for they speak of her (v. 12.) as present, this young woman; and he having taken her to wife, they look upon her as already come into his house. And very heartily they pray for the new-married couple. The senior elder, it is likely, made this prayer, and the rest of the elders, with the people, joined in it. That minister who gives himself to the word and prayer, as he is the fittest person to exhort, so he is the fittest to bless and pray for, those that enter into this relation. 2. We ought to desire and pray for the welfare and prosperity one of another so far from envying or grieving at it. Now here,

(1.) They pray for Ruth; The Lord make the woman that is come into this house like Rachel and Leah; that is, God make her a good wife, and who can be of more comfort to a man, and yet needed the prayers of her friends, that by the grace of God she might be made a blessing to the family she was come into. They pray she might be like Rachel and Leah, rather than like Sarah and Rebekah; for Sarah had but one son, and Rebekah but one that was in covenant; the other was Esau, who was rejected: but Rachel and Leah did build up the house of Israel; all their children were in the church, and their offspring was numerous. "May she be a flourishing, fruitful, faithful, vine by thy house side." (2.) They pray for Boaz, that he might continue to do worthily in the city, to which he was an ornament, and might there be more and more famous. They desire that the wife might be a blessing, in the private affairs of the house, and the husband a blessing, in the public business of the town; that she in her prosperity, and in his, might be as a virtuous and successful. Observe, The way to be famous, is to do worthily. Great reputation must be got by great merits. It is not enough not to do unworthily, to be harmless and inoffensive, but we must do worthily, be useful and serviceable to our generation; they that would be truly illustrious, must in their places shine as lights.

(3.) They pray for the family; Let thy house be like the house of Pharez; that is, "Let it be very numerous, let it greatly increase and multiply, as the house of Pharez did." The Beth-lehemites were of the house of Pharez, and knew well how numerous it was; in the distribution of the tribes, that grandson of Jacob had the honour which none of the rest bad but Manasseh and Ephraim, that his posterity was subdivided into two distinct families, Hezron and Hamul, Numb. 26. 21. Now they pray that the family of Boaz, which was one branch of that stock, might in process of time become as numerous and as great as the whole stock now was.

13. So Boaz took Ruth, and she was his wife: and, when he went in unto her, the Lord gave her conception, and she bare a son. 14. And the women said unto Naomi, Blessed be the Lord, which hath not left thee this day without a kinsman, that his name may be famous in Israel. 15. And he shall be unto thee a restorer of thy life, and a nourisher of thine old age: for thy daughter-in-law which loveth thee, which is better to thee than seven sons, hath borne him. 16. And Naomi took the child, and laid it in her bosom, and became nurse unto it. 17. And the women her neighbours gave it a name, saying, There is a son born to Naomi; and they called his name Obad: he is the father of Jesse, the father of David. 18. Now these are the generations of Pharez: Pharez begat Hezron, 19. And Hezron begat Ram, and Ram begat Amminadab, 20. And Amminadab begat Nahshon, and Nahshon begat Salmon, 21. And Salmon begat Boaz, and Boaz begat Obed, 22. And Obed begat Jesse, and Jesse begat David.

Here is,

1. Ruth a wife; Boaz took her with the usual solemnities, to his house, and she became his wife, v. 12. All the city, no doubt, congratulating the precipitation of a virtuous woman, purely for her virtues. We have reason to think that Orpah, who returned from Naomi to her people, and her gods, was never half so well preferred as Ruth was. He that forsakes all for Christ, shall find more than all with him; it shall be recompensed a hundredfold in this present time. Now Orpah wished she had gone with Naomi too; but she, like the other kinsman, stood in her own light. Boaz had prayed that this pious proselyte might receive a full reward of her courage and constancy from the God of Israel, under whose wings she was come to trust; and now he became an instrument of that kindness, which was an answer to his prayer, and helped to make his own words good. Now she had the command of those servants with whom she had associated, and of those fields in which she had gleaned. Thus sometimes, God raised up the poor out of the dust to set them with princes, Ps. 115. 7, 8.

2. Ruth a mother; The Lord gave her conception, for the fruit of the womb is his reward, Ps. 127. 3. It is one of the keys he hath in his hand; and he sometimes makes the barren woman that had been long so, to be a joyful mother of children, Ps. 113. 9. Isa. 54. 1.

5. Ruth still a daughter-in-law, and the same that she always was, to Naomi, who was so far from being forgotten, that she was a principal sharer in these new joys. The good women that were at the labour when this child was born, congratulated Naomi upon it, more than either Boaz or Ruth, because she was the match-maker; and it was the family of her husband that was hereby built up. See here, as before, what an air of devotion there was then attending the common expressions of civility among the Israelites; prayer to God attended the marriage, (v. 11.) and praise to him attended the birth of the child. What pity it is that such pious language should either be disused among christians, or degenerate into a formality. "Blessed be the Lord that has sent thee this grandson," v. 14, 15. (1.) Who was the preserver of the name of her family, and who, they hoped, would be famous, because his father was so. (2.) Who would be hereafter dutiful and kind to her; so they hoped, because his mother was so. If he would but take after her, he would be a comfort to his aged grandmother, a restorer of her life, and, if there should be occasion, would have wherewithal to be the nourisher of her old age. It is a great comfort to those that are going into years, to see of those that descend from them, growing up, that are likely, by the blessing of God, to be a stay and support to them, when the years come wherein they will need such, and of which they will say, they have no pleasure in them. Observe, They say of Ruth, that she loved Naomi, and therefore was better to her than seven sons. See how God in his providence sometimes makes up the want and loss of those relations from whom we expected most comfort, in those from whom we expected least. The bonds of love prove stronger than those of nature, and there is a friend that sticks closer than a brother; so here, there was a daughter-in-law, better than an own child. See what wisdom and grace will do.

Now here, [1.] The child is named by the neighbours, v. 17. The good woman would have it called Obed, a servant, either in remembrance of the meanness and poverty of the mother, or in prospect of his being hereafter a servant, and very serviceable, to his grandmother. It is no dishonour to those that are ever so well born, to be servants to God, their friends, and their generation. The motto of the prince of Wales, is, Ich dien—I serve. [2.] The child is nursed by the grandmother, that is, dry nursed, when the mother had weaned him from the breast, v. 16. She laid it in her bosom in token of her tender affection to it, and care of it. Grandmothers are often most fond.

4. Ruth is hereby brought in among the ancestors of David and Christ, which was the greatest honour. The genealogy is here drawn from Pharez, through Boaz and Obed, to David, and so leads toward the Messiah, and therefore not an endless genealogy.
