The Potter and the Clay.

JER. XVIII. 1-6.

The word which came to Jeremiah from the Lord, saying, Arise, and go down to the potter's house, and there I will cause thee to hear my words. Then I went down to the potter's house, and behold, he wrought a work on the wheels. And the vessel that he made of clay was marred in the hands of the potter, so he made it again another vessel, as seemed good to the potter to make it. Then the word of the Lord came to me, saying, O house of Israel, cannot I do with you as this potter? saith the Lord. Behold, as the clay is in the potter's hand, so are ye in mine hand, O house of Israel.

A T fundry times, and in divers manners, God was pleased to speak to our fathers by the prophets, before he spoke to us in these last days by his Son. To Elijah, he revealed himself by a small still voice. To Jacob, by a dream. To Moses, he spake sace to sace. Sometimes he was pleased to send a savourite prophet on some especial errand; and whilst he was thus employed, vouchfased to give him a particular message, which he was ordered to deliver without reserve to all the inhabitants of the land. A very instructive instance of this kind we have recorded in the passage now read to you. The first verse informs us that it was a word, or message, which came immediately from the Lord to the prophet Seremiah. At what time, or how the prophet was employed when it came, we are not told. Perhaps, whilst he was praying for those who would not pray for themselves: Perhaps, near the morning, when he was flumbering or mufing on his bed. For the word came to him, saying, "Arise." And what must be do when risen? He must "go down to the potter's house" (the prophet knew where to find it) " and there (fays the great Jehovah) I will cause thee to hear my words." Jeremiah does not confer with fiesh and blood, he does not object that it was dark or cold, or defire that he might have his message given him there, but without the least hefitation is immediately obedient to the heavenly vision. "Then (fays he) I went down to the potter's house, and behold he wrought a work upon the wheels." Just as he was entering into the house or workshop, the potter, it seems, had a veffel upon his wheel. And was there any thing so extraordinary in this, that it should be ushered in with the word Behold? What a dreaming visionary, or superstitious enthusiast, would this Feremiah be accounted, even by many who read his prophecies with feeming respect, was he alive now? But this was not the first time Jeremiah had heard from heaven in this manner. He therefore willingly obeyed; and had you or I accompanied him to the potter's house, I believe we should have seen him filently, but intensely waiting upon his great and all-wife Commander, to know wherefore he fent him thither. Methinks I fee him all attention. He takes notice, that " the veffel was of clay;" but as he held it in his hand, and turned round the wheel, in order to work it into some particular form, "it was marred in the hands of the potter," and consequently unfit for the use he before intended to put it to. And what becomes of this marred veffel? Being thus marred, I suppose, the potter, without the least imputation of injuffice, might have thrown it aside, and taken up another piece of clay in its room. But he did not. made it again another vessel." And does the potter call a council of his domestics, to enquire of them what kind of yessel they would advise him to make of it? No, in no wife. "He made it again another veffel, as feemed good to the potger to make it."

"Then," adds Jeremiah, whilst he was in the way of duty -then-whilst he was mentally crying, Lond what wouldst thou have me to do? "Then the word of the LORD came unto me, faying, O house of Israel, cannot I do with you as this potter? faith the LORD. Behold, as the clay is in the hands of the potter (marred, and unfit for the first defigned purpose) so are ye in mine hand, O house of Isra " At length, then, Yeremiah hath his fermon given to him: short, but popular. It was to be delivered to the whole house of Israel, princes, priests, and people: short, but pungent, even sharper than a two-edged fword. What! says the sovereign LORD of heaven and earth, must I be denied the privilege of a common potter? May I not do what I will with my own? "Behold, as the clay is in the potter's hands, so are ye in mine hands, O house of Israel. I made and formed you into a people, and bleffed you above any other nation under heaven: but, O Ifrael, thou by thy backslidings hast destroyed thyself. As the potter therefore might justly have thrown afide his marred clay, fo may I justly unchurch and unpeople you. But what if I should come over the mountains of your guilt, heal your backflidings, revive my work in the midst of the years, and cause your latter end greatly to increase? Behold, as the clay is in the hands of the potter, lying at his disposal, either to be destroyed or sormed into another vessel, fo are ye in my hands, O house of Israel: I may either reject, and thereby ruin you, or I may revisit and revive you according to my own fovereign good will and pleasure, and who fhall fay unto me, what doft thou?"

This feems to be the genuine interpretation, and primary intention of this beautiful part of holy writ. But waving all further enquiries about its primary defign or meaning, I shall now proceed to shew, that what the glorious Jehovah here says of the house of Israel in general, is applicable to every individual of mankind in particular. And as I presume this may be done, without either wire-drawing scripture on the one hand, or wresting it from its original meaning on the other, not to detain you any longer, I shall, from the passage thus explained and paraphrased, deduce, and endeavour to enlarge on these two general heads.

First, I shall undertake to prove, that every man naturally engendered of the offspring of Adam, is in the fight of the all-sceing, heart-scarching God, only as a "piece of marred clay."

N 4

Secondly,

Secondly, That being thus marred, he must necessarily be renewed: and under this head, we shall likewise point out by whose agency this mighty change is to be brought about.

These particulars being discussed, way will naturally be made for a fhort word of application.

First, To prove that every man naturally engendered of the offspring of Adam, is in the fight of an all-feeing, heart-fearching God, only as a piece of marred clay.

Be pleafed to observe, that we say every man naturally engendered of the offspring of Adam, or every man fince the fall: for if we confider man as he first came out of the hands of his Maker, he was far from being in such melancholy circumstances. No: he was originally made upright; or as Moses, that sacred penman, declares, "God made him after his own image." Surely never was fo much expressed in fo few words; which hath often made me wonder how that great critic Longinus, who so justly admires the dignity and grandeur of Moles's account of the creation, and "GoD faid, Let there be light, and there was light;" I fay I have often wondered why he did not read a little further, and bestow as just an encomium upon this short, but withal inexpressibly august and comprehensive description of the formation of man, " fo God created man in his own image." Struck with a deep fense of such amazing goodness, and that he might impress yet a deeper sense of it upon our minds too, he immediately adds, "in the image of God made he him." A council of the most adorable Trinity was called on this important occasion: God did not say, Let there be a man, and there was a man, but God faid, "Let us make man in our image, after our likeness." This is the account which the lively oracles of God do give us of man in his first estate: but it is very remarkable, that the transition from the account of his creation to that of his mifery, is very quick, and why? For a very good reason, because he soon fell from his primeval dignity; and by that fall, the divine image is fo defaced, that he is now to be valued only as antiquarians value an ancient medal, merely for the fake of the image and fuperscription once stamped upon it; or of a second divine impress, which, through grace, it may yet receive.

Let us take a more particular furvey of him, and fee whether these things are so or not: and first, as to his understanding. As man was created originally "after God in knowledge," as well as righteousness and true holiness, we may rationally infer, that his understanding, in respect to things natural, as well as divine, was of a prodigious extent: for he was made but a little lower than the angels, and confequently being like them, excellent in his understanding, he knew much of Gon, of himself, and all about him; and in this as well as every other respect, was, as Mr. Collier expresses it in one of his essays, a persect major: but this is sar from being our case now. For in respect to natural things, our understandings are evidently darkened. It is but little that we can know, and even that little knowledge which we can acquire, is with much wearinefs of the flesh, and we are doomed to gain it as we do our daily bread, I mean by the fuezt of our brows.

Men of low and narrow minds foon commence wife in their own conceits: and having acquired a little imattering of the learned languages, and made fome fmall proficiency in the dry felences, are easily tempted to look upon themselves as a head taller than their fellow mortals, and accordingly too, too often put forth great swelling words of vanity. But persons of a more exalted, and extensive reach of thought, dare not bost. No: they know that the greatest scholars are in the dark, in respect to many even of the minutest things in life: and after all their painful refearches into the Arcano Natura, they find fuch an immense void, such an unmeasurable expanse yet to be travelled over, that they are obliged at last to conclude, almost with respect to every thing, "that they know nothing yet as they ought to know." This confideration, no doubt, led Socrates, when he was afked by one of his scholars, why the oracle pronounced him the wifest man on earth, to give him this judicious answer, "Perhaps it is, because I am most sensible of my own ignorance." Would to Gon, that all who call themselves christians, had learnt so much as this heathen! We should then no longer hear so many learned men, falfely fo called, betray their ignorance by boasting of the extent of their shallow understanding, nor by professing themselves so wite, prove themselves such arrant If pedantic fools.

If we view our understandings in respect to spiritual things, we shall find that they are not only darkened, but become darkness itself, even "darkness that may be felt" by all who are not past feeling. And how should it be otherwise, since the infallible word of GoD affures us, that they are alienated from the light and life of God, and thereby naturally as incapable to judge of divine and spiritual things, comparatively fpeaking, as a man born blind is incapacitated to diffinguish the various colours of the rainbow. "The natural man, (favs an inspired apostle) discerneth not the things of the Spirit of God;" fo far from it, "they are foolishness unto him;" and why? Because they are only to be "spiritually discerned." Hence it was, that Nicodemus, who was blessed with an outward and divine revelation, who was a ruler of the Jews, nay a master of Israel, when our LORD told him, "he must be born again;" appeared to be quite grappled. "How (favs he) can a man be born when he is old? can he enter a tecond time into his mother's womb and be born? how can these things be?" Were three more absurd questions ever proposed by the most ignorant man alive? or can there be a clearer proof of the blindness of man's understanding, in refpect to divine, as well as natural things? Is not man then a piece of marred clay?

This will appear yet more evident, if we confider the perverse bent of his will. Being made in the very image of GoD; undoubtedly before the fall, man had no other will but his Maker's. God's will, and Adam's, were then like unifons in music. There was not the least disunion, or discord between them. But now he hath a will, as directly contrary to the will of God, as light is contrary to darkness, or heaven to hell. We all bring into the world with us a carnal mind, which is not only an enemy to Gop, but " enmity itself, and which is therefore not subject unto the law of God, neither indeed can it be." A great many shew much zeal in talking against the man of fin, and loudly (and indeed very justly) exclaim against the Pepe for fitting in the temple, I mean the church of CHRIST, and "exalting himself above all that is called GoD." But fay not within thyfelf, who shall go to Rome, to pull down this spiritual antichrist? as though there was no antichrift but what is without us. For know, O man, whoever thou art, an infinitely more dangerous antichrist, because less discerned, even self-will, fits daily in the temple of thy heart, exalting itself above all that is called God, and obliging all its votaries to fay of Christ himfelf, that Prince of peace, "we will not have this man to reign over us." God's people, whose spiritual senses are exercised about spiritual things, and whose eyes are opened to see the abominations that are in their hearts, frequently feel this to their forrow. Whether they will or not, this enmity from time to time bubbles up, and in spight of all their watchfulnels and care, when they are under the pressure of some sharp affliction, a long defertion, or tedious night of temptation, they often find fomething within rifing in rebellion against the all-wife disposals of divine Providence, and saying unto God their heavenly Father, " what dost thou i" This makes them to cry (and no wonder, fince it conftrained one of the greatest faints and apostles first to introduce the expression) " O wretched man that I am, who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" The spiritual and renewed soul groans thus. being burdened; but as for the natural and unawakened man, it is not fo with him; felf-will, as well as every other evil, either in a more latent or difcernable manner, reigns in his unrenewed foul, and proves him, even to a demonstration to others, whether he knows, or will confess it himself or not. that in respect to the disorders of his will, as well as his understanding, man is only a piece of marred clay.

A transient view of fallen man's affections will yet more firmly corroborate this melancholy truth. These, at his being sirst placed in the paradise of God, were always kept within proper bounds, sixed upon their proper objects, and, like so many gentle rivers, sweetly, spontaneously and habitually glided into their ocean, God. But now the scene is changed. For we are now naturally full of vile affections, which like a mighty and impetuous torrent carry all before them. We love what we should hate, and hate what we should love; we sear what we should hope for, and hope for what we should sear; nay, to such an ungovernable height do our affections sometimes rise, that though our judgments are convinced to the contrary, yet we will gratify our passions though it be at the expence of our present and eternal welfare.

We feel a war of our affections, warring against the law of our minds, and bringing us into captivity to the law of sin and death. So that video meliora proboque, deteriora sequor, I approve of better things but follow worse, is too, too often the practice of us all.

I am fenfible, that many are offended, when mankind are compared to beafts and devils. And they might have some shadow of reason for being so, if we afferted in a physical fense, that they were really beasts and really devils. For then, as I once heard a very learned prelate, who was objecting against this comparison, observe, " a man being a beast would be incapable, and being a devil, would be under an impossibility of being faved." But when we make use of such shocking comparisons, as he was pleased to term them, we would be understood only in a moral sense; and in so doing, we affert no more than some of the most holy men of God have said of themselves, and others, in the lively oracles many ages ago. Holy David, the man after God's own heart, speaking of himself, says, " so foolish was I, and as a beast before thee." And holy Yob, speaking of man in general, says, that "he is born as a wild ass's colt," or take away the expletive, which as some think ought to be done, and then he positively afferts, that man is a wild ass's colt. And what says our LORD, "Ye are of your father the devil;" and "the whole world is faid to lie in him, the wicked one, who now rules in the children of disobedience," that is, in all unrenewed souls. Our stupidity, proneness to fix our affections on the things of the earth, and our eagerness to make provision for the flesh, to sulfil the lusts thereof, evidence us to be earthly and brutal; and our mental passions, anger, hatred, malice, envy, and such like, prove with equal strength, that we are also devilish. Both together conspire to evince, that in respect to his affections, as well as his understanding and will, man deservedly may be termed a piece of marred clay.

The present blindness of natural conscience makes this appear in a yet more glaring light; in the soul of the first man Adam, conscience was no doubt the candle of the Lord, and enabled him rightly and instantaneously to discern between good and evil, right and wrong. And, blessed be God! some remains of this are yet left; but alas, how dimly does it burn, and how easily and quickly is it covered, or put out and extinguished. I need not send you to the heathen world, to learn the truth of this; you all know it by experience. Was there no other evidence, your own consciences are instead of a thousand witnesses, that man, as to his natural conscience, as well as understanding, will and affections, is much marred clay.

Nor does that great and boafted Diana, I mean unaffifted unenlightened reason, less demonstrate the justness of such an affertion. Far be it from me to decry or exclaim against human reason. CHRIST himself is called the "Logos, the Reafon;" and I believe it would not require much learning, or take up much time to prove, that so far and no farther than as we act agreeably to the laws of Christ Jesus, are we any way conformable to the laws of right reason. His service is therefore called "a reasonable service." And however his fervants and followers may now be looked upon as fools and madmen; yet there will come a time, when those who despise and fet themselves to oppose divine revelation, will find, that what they now call reason, is only reason depraved, and as utterly incapable, of itself, to guide us into the way of peace, or fliew the way of falvation, as the men of Sodom were to find Lot's door after they were firack with blindness by the angels, who came to lead him out of the city. The horrid and dreadful mistakes, which the most refined reasoners in the heathen world ran into, both as to the object, as well as manner of divine worship, have sufficiently demonstrated the weakness and depravity of human reason: nor do our modern boafters afford us any better proofs of the greatness of its firength, fince the best improvement they generally make of it, is only to reason themselves into downright wilful infidelity, and thereby reason themselves out of eternal salvation. Need we now any further witness, that man, fallen man, is altogether a piece of marred clay?

But this is not all, we have yet more evidence to call; for do the biindness of our understandings, the perverseness of our will, the rebellion of our affections, the corruption of our consciences, the depravity of our reason prove this charge; and does not the present disordered frame and constitution of our kedies consists the same also? Doubtless in this respect, man, in the most literal sense of the word, is a piece of marred clay. For God originally made him of the "dust of the earth." So that notwithstanding our boasting of our high pedigrees, and different descent, we were all originally upon a level, and a little red earth was the common substratum out of which we were all formed. Clay indeed it was, but clay wonderfully modified, even by the immediate hands of the Creator of heaven and earth. One therefore hath observed, that it is said "Gon built the man;" he did not form him rashly or hastily, but built and finished him according to the plan before laid down in his own eternal mind. And though, as the great God is without body, parts, or passions, we cannot suppose when it is faid "GoD made man after his own image," that it has any reference to his body, yet I cannot help thinking (with Doctor South) that as the eternal Logos was hereafter to appear, God manifest in the flesh, infinite wisdom was undoubtedly exerted in forming a casket into which so invaluable a pearl was in the fulness of time to be deposited. Some of the ancients are faid to have afferted, that man at the first, had what we call a glory fhining round him; but without attempting to be wife above what is written, we may venture to affirm, that he had a glorious body, which knowing no fin, knew neither fickness nor pain. But now on this, as well as other accounts, he may justly be called Ichabod; for its primitive flrength and glory are fadly departed from it, and like the ruins of fome ancient and stately fabric, only fo much left as to give us some faint idea of what it was when it first appeared in its original and perfect beauty. The apostle Paul, therefore, who knew how to call things by their proper names, as well as any man living, does not feruple to term the human body, though in its original conflitution fearfully and wonderfully made, a "vile body;" vile indeed! fince it is subject to such vile diseases, put to such vile, yea very vile uses, and at length is to come to so vile an end. "For dust we are, and to dust we must return." This among other confiderations, we may well suppose, caused the blessed JESUS to weep at the grave of Lazarus. He wept, not only because his friend Lazarus was dead, but he wept to fee human nature, through man's own default, thus laid in ruins, by being subject unto such a dissolution, made like unto the beasts that perish. Let

Let us here pause a while, and with our sympathizing LORD, see if we cannot shed a few silent tears at least, upon the same forrowful occasion. Who, who is there amongst us, that upon such a melancholy review of man's present, real, and most deplorable depravity both in body and soul, can refrain from weeping over such a piece of marred clay? Who, who can help adopting holy David's lamentation over Saul and Jonathan? "How are the mighty fallen! How are they slain in their high places!" Originally it was not so. No, "God made man after his own image: in the image of God made he man." Never was there so much expressed in so few words. He was created after God in righteousness and true holiness.

This is the account, which the facred volume gives us of this interesting point. This, this is that blessed book, that book of books, from whence, together with an appeal to the experience of our own hearts, and the testimonies of all past ages, we have thought proper to fetch our proofs. For, after all, we must be obliged to divine revelation, to know what we were, what we are, and what we are to be. In these, as in a true glass, we may see our real and proper likenefs. And from these only can we trace the source and sountain of all those innumerable evils, which like a deluge have overflowed the natural and moral world. If any should object against the authenticity of this revelation, and consequently against the doctrine this day drawn from thence, they do in my opinion thereby very much confirm it. For unless a man was very much disordered indeed, as to his understanding, will, affections, natural conscience, and his power of reasoning, he could never possibly deny such a revelation, which is founded on a multiplicity of infallible external evidences, hath so many internal evidences of a divine stamp in every page, is so suited to the common exigencies of all mankind, fo agreeable to the experience of all men, and which hath been fo wonderfully handed and preferved to us, hath been fo instrumental to the convicting, converting, and comforting fo many millions of fouls, and hath flood the test of the most severe scrutinies, and exact criticisms of the most subtle and refined, as well as of the most malicious and perfecuting enemies, that ever lived, even from the beginning of time to this very day. Persons of such a turn of mind, I think, are rather to be prayed for, than difputed with, if so be this perverse wickedness of their hearts may be forgiven them: "They are in the very gall of bitternefs, and must have "their consciences seared as it were with a red-hot iron," and must have their eyes "blinded by the God of this world," otherwise they could not but see, and feel; and affent to the truth of this doctrine, of man's being univerfally depraved; which not only in one or two, but in one or two thousands, in every page, I could almost say, is written, in such legible characters, that he that runs may read. Indeed, revelation itself is founded upon the doctrine of the fall. Had we kept our original integrity, the law of God would have yet been written in our hearts, and thereby the want of a divine revelation, at least such as ours, would have been superseded; but being fallen, instead of rising in rebellion against God, we ought to be filled with unspeakable thankfulness to our all bountiful Creator, who by a few lines in his own books hath discovered more to us, than all the philosophers and most learned men in the world could, or would, have discovered, though they had studied to all eternity.

I am well aware, that some who pretend to own the validity of divine revelation, are notwithstanding enemies to the doctrine that hath this day been delivered; and would fain elude the force of the proofs generally urged in defence of it, by faying; they only bespeak the corruption of particular persons, or have reference only to the heathen world: but such persons err, not knowing their own hearts, or the power of Jesus Christ: for by nature there is no difference between few or Gentile, Greek or Barbarian, bond or free. We are altogether equally become abominable in God's sight, all equally fallen short of the glory of God, and consequently all alike so many pieces of marred clay.

How God came to suffer man to sall? how long man shood before he sell? and how the corruption contracted by the sall, is propagated to every individual of his species? are questions of such an abstruse and critical nature, that should I undertake to answer them, would be only gratifying a sinful curiosity, and tempting you, as Satan tempted our first parents, to eat sorbidden fruit. It will much better answer the defign of this prefent discourse, which is practical, to pass

II. To the next thing proposed, and point out to you the absolute necessity there is of this fallen nature's being renewed.

This I have had all along in my eye, and on account of this, have purposely been so explicit on the first general head: for has Archimedes once faid, "Give me a place where I may " fix my foot, and I will move the world;" fo without the least imputation of arrogance, with which, perhaps, he was justly chargeable, we may venture to fay, grant the foregoing doctrine to be true, and then deny the necessity of man's being renewed who can.

I fuppose, I may take it for granted, that all of you amongst whom I am now preaching the kingdom of God, hope after death to go to a place which we call Heaven. And my heart's defire and prayer to God for you is, that you all may have mansions prepared for you there. But give me leave to tell you, was you now to fee these heavens opened, and the angel (to use the words of the seraphic Harvey) cloathed with all his heavenly drapery, with one foot upon the earth, and another upon the sea; nay, were you to see and hear the angel of the everlasting covenant, JESUS CHRIST himfelf, proclaiming "time shall be no more," and giving you all an invitation immediately to come to heaven; heaven would be no heaven to you, nay it would be a hell to your fouls, unless you were first prepared for a proper enjoyment of it here on earth. "For what communion hath light with darkness?" Or what fellowship could unrenewed fons of Belial possibly keep up with the pure and immaculate Jesus?

The generality of people form strange ideas of heaven. And because the scriptures, in condescension to the weakness of our capacities, describe it by images taken from earthly delights and human grandeur, therefore they are apt to carry their thoughts no higher, and at the best only form to themfelves a kind of Mahometan paradife. But permit me to tell you, and God grant it may fink deep into your hearts! Heaven is rather a flate than a place; and confequently, unless Vel. V.

you are previously disposed by a suitable state of mind, you could not be happy even in heaven itsels. For what is grace but glory militant? What is glory but grace triumphant? This confideration made a pious author fay, that "holinefs, " happiness, and heaven, were only three different words for one 44 and the felf-same thing." And this made the great Preston. when he was about to die, turn to his friends, faying, "I am changing my place, but not my company." He had conversed with God and good men on earth; he was going to keep up the same, and infinitely more refined communion with God, his holy angels, and the spirits of just men made perfect, in heaven.

To make us meet to be blifsful partakers of fuch heavenly company, this "marred clay," I mean, these depraved natures of ours, must necessarily undergo an universal moral change: our understandings must be enlightened; our wills, reason, and consciences, must be renewed; our affections must be drawn toward, and fixed upon things above; and because flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of heaven, this corruptible must put on incorruption, this mortal must put on immortality. And thus old things must literally pass away, and behold all things, even the body as well as the faculties of the foul, must become new.

This moral change is what some call, repentance, some, conversion, some, regeneration; choose what name you please, I only pray God, that we all may have the thing. scriptures call it holiness, fanctification, the new creature, and our LORD calls it a "New birth, or being born again, or born from above." These are not barely figurative expresfions, or the flights of eastern language, nor do they barely denote a relative change of flate conferred on all those who are admitted into CHRIST's church by baptifm; but they denote a real, moral change of heart and life, a real participation of the divine life in the foul of man. Some indeed content themselves with a figurative interpretation; but unless they are made to experience the power and efficacy thereof, by a folid living experience in their own fouls, all their learning, all their laboured criticisms, will not exempt them from a real damnation. CHRIST hath faid it, and CHRIST will fland, " Unless a man," learned or unlearned, high or low, though he be a mafter of Ifrael as Nicodemus was, unless he "be born again, he cannot fee, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God."

If it be enquired, who is to be the potter? and by whose agency this marred clay is to be formed into another veffel? Or in other words, if it be asked, how this great and mighty change is to be effected? I answer, not by the mere dint and force of moral funfion. This is good in its place. And I am fo far from thinking, that christian preachers should not make use of rational arguments and motives in their fermons, that I cannot think they are fit to preach at all, who either cannot, or will not use them. We have the example of the great God himself for such a practice; "Come (fays he) and let us reason together." And St. Paul, that prince of preachers, " reasoned of temperance, and righteousness, and a judgment to come." And it is remarkable, "that whilft he was reasoning of these things, Felix trembled." Nor are the most persuasive strains of holy rhetoric less needful for a fcribe ready instructed to the kingdom of God. The scriptures both of the Old and New Testament, every where abound with them. And when can they be more properly employed, and brought forth, than when we are acting as ambaffadors of heaven, and befeeching poor finners, as in CHRIST's flead, to be reconciled unto God. All this we readily grant. But at the same time, I would as soon go to yonder church-yard, and attempt to raise the dead carcases, with a " come forth," as to preach to dead fouls, did I not hope for fome superior power to make the word effectual to the defigned end. I should only be like a founding brass for any faving purpofes, or as a tinkling cymbal. Neither is this change to be wrought by the power of our own free-will. This is an idol every where fet up, but we dare not fall down and worship it. "No man (fays CHRIST) can come to me, unless the Father draw him." Our own free-will, if improved, may restrain us from the commission of many evils, and put us in the way of conversion; but, after exerting our utmost efforts (and we are bound in duty to exert them) we shall find the words of our own church article to be true, that " man fince "the fall hath no power to turn to God." No, we might as foon attempt to ftop the ebbing and flowing of the tide, ()₂ and calm the most tempestuous sea, as to imagine that we can subdue, or bring under proper regulations, our own unruly wills and affections by any strength inherent in ourselves.

And therefore, that I may keep you no longer in suspence, I inform you, that this heavenly potter, this bleffed agent, is the Almighty Spirit of Gon, the Holy Ghost, the third person in the most adorable Prinity, coessential with the Father and the Son. This is that Spirit, which at the beginning of time moved on the face of the waters, when nature lay in one univerfal chaos. This was the Spirit that overfhadowed the Holy Virgin, before that holy thing was born of her: and this fame Spirit must come, and move upon the chaos of our fouls, before we can properly be called the fons of Gop. This is what John the baptist calls "being baptized with the Holy Ghoft," without which, his and all other baptisms, whether infant or adult, avail nothing. This is that fire, which our LORD came to fend into our earthly hearts, and which I pray the LORD of all lords to kindle in every unrenewed one this day.

As for the entraordinary operations of the Holy Ghoft, such as working of miracles, or speaking with divers kinds of tongues, they are long since ceased. But as for this miracle of miracles, turning the soul to God by the more ordinary operations of the Holy Ghoft, this abides yet, and will abide till time itself shall be no more. For it is he that sanchisteth us, and all the elect people of God. On this account, true believers are said to be "born from above, to be born not of blood, nor of the will of the sless, nor of the will of man, but of God." Their second, as well as their first creation, is truly and purely divine. It is, therefore, called "a creation;" but put ye on (says the apostle) the new man which is created"—And how? Even as the first man was, "after God in righteousness and true holiness."

These, these are the precious truths, which a scoffing world would sain rally or ridicule us out of. To produce this glorious change, this new creation, the glorious Jesus lest his Father's bosom. For this he led a persecuted life; for this he died an ignominious and accursed death; for this he rose again; and for this he now sitteth at the right hand of his Father. All the precepts of his gospel, all his ordinances, all his providences, whether of an afflictive or prosperous nature, all divine revelation from the beginning to the end, all center in these two points, so show us how we are fallen, and to begin, carry on, and compleat a glorious and bleffed change in our fouls. This is an end worthy of the coming of fo divine a personage. To deliver a multitude of souls of every nation, language and tongue, from fo many moral evils, and to reinstate them in an incomparably more excellent condition than that from whence they are fallen, is an end worthy the shedding of such precious blood. What system of resigion is there now, or was there ever exhibited to the world, any way to be compared to this? Can the deistical scheme presend in any degree to come up to it? Is it not noble, rational, and truly divine? And why then will not all that hitherto are strangers to this blefied restoration of their fallen natures. (for my heart is too full to abitain any longer from an application) why will you any longer dispute or stand out against it? Why will you not rather bring your clay to this heavenly Potter, and fay from your inmost fouls, "Turn us, O good LORD, and fo shall we be turned?" This, you may and can do: and if you go thus far, who knows but that this yerv day, yea this very hour, the heavenly Potter may take you in hand, and make you veffels of honour fit for the Redeemer's use? Others that were once as far from the kingdom of God as you are, have been partakers of this bleffedness. What a wretched creature was Mary Magdalene? And yet out of her JESUS CHRIST cast seven devils. Nay, he appeared to her first, after he rose from the dead, and she became as it were an apostle to the very apostles. What a covetous creature was Zaccheus? He was a griping cheating publican; and yet, perhaps, in one quarter of an hour's time, his heart is enlarged, and he made quite willing to give half of his goods to feed the poor. And to mention no more, what a cruel person was Paul. He was a perfecutor, a blafphemer, injurious; one that breathed out threatnings against the disciples of the LORD, and made havoc of the church of Christ. And yet what a wonderful turn did he meet with, as he was journeying to Damascus? from a persecutor, he became a preacher; was afterwards made a spiritual father to thousands, and now pro-

Indeed, it is giad tidings, even tidings of great joy. You will then no longer have any thing to fay against the doctrine of Original Sin; or charge the Almighty foolifhly, for fuffering our first parents to be prevailed on to eat fuch four grapes, and permitting thereby their children's teeth to be set on edge. You will then no longer cry out against the doctrine of the New Birth, as enthusiasm, or brand the affertors of fuch bleffed truths with the opprebrious names of fools and madmen. Having felt, you will then believe; having believed, you will therefore speak; and instead of being veffels of wrath, and growing harder and harder in hell fire, like vessels in a potter's oven, you will be made vessels of honour, and be prefented at the great day by IESUS, to his heavenly Father, and be translated to live with him as monuments of rich, free, distinguishing and fovereign grace, for ever and ever.

You, that have in some degree experienced the quickening influence (for I must not conclude without dropping a word or two to God's children) you know how to pity, and therefore, I befeech you also to pray for those, to whose circumstances this discourse is peculiarly adapted. But will you be content in praying for them? Will you not see reason to pray for yourselves also? Yes, doubtless, for yourselves also. For you, and you only know, how much there is yet lacking in your faith, and how far you are from being partakers in that degree, which you defire to be, of the whole mind that was in Christ Jesus. You know what a body of fin and death you carry about with you, and that you must necessarily expect many turns of God's providence and grace, before you will be wholly delivered from it. But thanks be to God, we are in fafe hands. He that has been the author, will also be the finisher of our faith. Yet a little while, and we like him shall fay "It is finished;" we shall bow down our heads and give up the ghost. Till then, (for to thee, O Lord, will we now direct our prayer) help us, O Almighty Father, in patience to possess our fouls. Behold, we are the clay, and thou art the Potter. Let not the thing formed fay to him that formed formed it, whatever the dispensations of thy suture Will concerning us may be, Why dost thou deal with us thus? Behold, we put ourselves as blanks in thise hands, deal with us as seemeth good in thy sight, only let every cross, every affliction, every temptation, be overruled to the stamping thy blessed image in more lively characters on our hearts; that to passing from glory to glory, by the powerful operations of thy blessed Spirit, we may be made thereby more and more meet for, and at last be translated to a full, perfect, endless, and uninterrupted enjoyment of glory hereafter, with thee O Father, thee O Son, and thee O blessed Spirit; to whom, three persons but one God, be ascribed, as is most due, all honour, power, might, majesty and dominion, now and to all eternity. Amen and Amen.
