SERMON XLVI,

Of Justification by Christ.

I Cor. vi. 11.

But ye are justified.

The whole verse is: And such were some of you; but ye are washed, but ye are sanstified, but ye are justified in the name of our LORD JESUS CHRIST, and by the Spirit of our GOD.

I T has been objected by fome, who diffent from, nay, I may add, by others also, who actually are friends to the present ecclesiastical establishment, that the ministers of the Church of England preach themselves, and not CHRIST TESUS the LORD; that they entertain their people with lectures of mere morality, without declaring to them the glad tidings of falvation by Jesus Christ. How well grounded fuch an objection may be, is not my business to enquire: All I shall say at present to the point is, that whenever such a grand objection is urged against the whole body of the clergy in general, every honest minister of Jesus Christ should do his utmost to cut off all manner of occasion, from those who desire an occasion to take offence at us; that so by hearing us continually founding forth the word of truth, and declaring with all boldness and affurance of faith, "that there is no other name given under heaven, whereby they can be faved, but that of Jesus Christ," they may be ashamed of this their same confident boasting against us.

It was an eye to this objection, joined with the agreeableness and delightfulness of the subject (for who can but delight to talk of that which the bleffed angels defire to look into?) that induces me to discourse a little on that great and sundamental article of our faith; namely, our being freely justified by the precious blood of Jesus Christ. "But ye are washed, but ye are fanctified, but ye are justified, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, and by the Spirit of our God."

The words beginning with the particle but, have plainly a reference to fomething before; it may not therefore be improper, before I descend to particulars, to consider the words as they stand in relation to the confext. The apostle, in the verses immediately foregoing, had been reckoning up many notorious fins, drunkenness, adultery, fornication, and such like, the commission of which, without a true and hearty repentance, he tells the Corinthians, would entirely flut them out of the kingdom of God. But then, left they should, on the one hand, grow spiritually proud by seeing themselves differ from their unconverted brethren, and therefore be tempted to fet them at nought, and fay with the felf-conceited hypocrite in the prophet, "Come not nigh me, for I am holier than thou;" or, on the other hand, by looking back on the multitude of their past offences, should be apt to think their fins were too many and grievous to be forgiven: he first, in order to keep them humble, reminds them of their fad flate before conversion, telling them in plain terms, " fuch (or as it might be read, these things) were some of you;" not only one, but all that fad catalogue of vices I have been drawing up, some of you were once guilty of; but then, at the same time, to preserve them from despair, behold he brings them glad tidings of great joy: "But ye are washed; but ye are fanctified, but ye are justified in the name of our LORD JESUS CHRIST, and by the Spirit of our GoD."

The former part of this text, our being fantisfiel, I have in some measure treated of already; I would now enlarge on our being freely justified by the precious obedience and death of Jesus Christ: "But ye are justified in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ."

From

From which words I shall consider three things;

First, What is meant by the word justified.

Secondly, I shall endeavour to prove that all mankind in general, and every individual person in particular, stands in need of being justified.

Thirdly, That there is no possibility of obtaining this justification, which we so much want, but by the all-perfect obedience, and precious death of Jesus Christ.

First, I am to consider what is meant by the word justified.

"But ye are justified," says the apostle; which is, as though he had faid, you have your fins forgiven, and are looked upon by God as though you never had offended him at all: for that is the meaning of the word jullified, in almost all the passages of holy scripture where this word is mentioned. Thus, when this fame apostle writes to the Romans, he tells them, that "whom God called, those he also justified:" And that this word justified, implies a blotting out of all our transgressions, is manifest from what follows, "them he also glorified," which could not be if a justified person was not looked upon by GoD, as though he never had offended him at all. And again, speaking of Abraham's faith, he tells them, that " Abraham believed on Him that justifies the ungodly," who acquits and clears the ungodly man; for it is a law-term, and alludes to a judge acquitting an accused criminal of the thing laid to his charge. Which expression the apostle himself explains by a quotation out of the Pjalms: "Bleffed is the man to whom the LORD imputeth no fin." From all which proofs, and many others that might be urged, it is evident, that by being justified, we are to understand, being so acquitted in the fight of GoD as to be looked upon as though we never had offended him at all. And in this sense we are to understand that article, which we profess to believe believe in our creed, when each of us declare in his own person, I believe the sorgiveness of sins. This leads me to the Second thing proposed, to prove that all mankind in general, and every individual person in particular, stands in need of being justified.

And indeed the apostle supposes this in the words of the text: "But ye are justified," thereby implying that the Corinthians (and consequently all mankind, there being no difference, as will be shewn hereaster) stood in need of being justified.

But not to rest in bare suppositions, in my farther enlargement on this head, I shall endeavour to prove, that we all stand in need of being justified on account of the sin of our patures, and the sin of our lives.

1. Firft, I affirm that we all fland in need of being justified, on account of the fin of our natures: for we are all chargeable with original fin, or the fin of our first parents. Which, though a proposition that may be denied by a selfjuitifying infidel, who "will not come to CHRIST that he may have life;" yet can never be denied by any one who believes that St. Paul's epiftles were written by divine infpiration; where we are told, that "in Adam all died;" that is, Adam's fin was imputed to all: and left we should forget to make a particular application, it is added in another place, "that there is none that doeth good (that is, by nature) no, not one: That we are all gone out of the way. (of original righteousness) and are by nature the children of wrath." And even David, who was a man after God's own heart, and, if any one could, might furely plead an exemption from this universal corruption, yet he confesses, that "he was shapen in iniquity, and that in fin did his mother conceive him." And, to mention but one text more, as immediately applicable to the prefent purpose, St. Paul, in his epiftle to the Romans, fays, that "Death came upon all men, for the disobedience of one, namely, of Adam, even upon those, (that is, little children) who had not sinned after the fimilitude of Adam's transgression;" who had not been guilty of actual fin, and therefore could not be punished with temporal death (which came into the world, as this fame apostle elsewhere informs us, only by fin) had not the disobedience of our first parents been imputed to them. So that what has been faid in this point feems to be excellently fummed up in that article of our church, where she declares, that "Original fin standeth not in the following of Adam, 66 but it is the fault and corruption of every man, that na-"turally is engendered of the offspring of Adam; whereby "man is very far gone from original righteousness, and is " of his own nature inclined to evil, fo that the flesh lusteth " always contrary to the spirit; and therefore in every person 66 born into this world, it deserveth God's wrath and damna-€ tion."

I have been more particular in treating of this point, because it is the very foundation of the christian religion: For I am verily perfuaded, that it is nothing but a want of being well grounded in the doctrine of original fin, and of the helpless, nay, I may say, damnable condition, each of us comes into the world in, that makes fo many infidels oppose, and fo many who call themselves christians, so very lukewarm in their love and affections to Jesus Christ. It is this, and I could almost fay, this only, that makes infidelity abound among us so much as it does. For, alas! we are mistaken if we imagine that men now commence or continue infidels, and fet up corrupted reason in opposition to divine revelation merely for want of evidence, (for I believe it might eafily be proved, that a modern unbeliever is the most credulous creature living;) no, it is only for want of an hamble mind, of a fense of their original depravity, and a willingness to own themselves so depraved, that makes them so obstinately shut their eyes against the light of the glorious gospel of Christ. Whereas, on the contrary, were they but once pricked to the heart with a due and lively fense of their natural corruption and liableness to condemnation, we should have them no more fooffing at divine revelation, and looking on it as an idle tale; but they would cry out with the trembling jaylor, "What shall I do to be saved?" It was an error in this fundamental point, that made so many resist the evidence the Son of God himself gave of his divine mission, when he tabernacled amongst us. Every word he spake, every action he did, every miracle he wrought, proved that he came from God. And why then did so many harden their hearts, and would not believe his report? Why, he himself informs us, "They will not come unto me that they may have life:" They will obstinately stand out against those means God had appointed for their salvation: And St. Paul tells us, "that if the gospel be hid, it is hid to them that are lost; in whom the God of this world hath blinded the eyes of them which believe not, lest the light of the glorious gospel of Christ, who is the image of God, should shine upon them." 2 Cor. iv. 3, 4.

If it be asked, how it suits with the divine goodness, to impute the guilt of one man's fin, to an innocent posterity? I should think it sufficient to make use of the apostle's words: "Nay, but O man, who art thou that replieft against GoD? Shall the thing formed fay to him that formed it, why half thou made me thus?" But to come to a more direct reply: Perfons would do well to confider that in the first covenant GOD made with man, Adam acted as a public person, as the common representative of all mankind, and consequently we must stand or fall with him. Had he continued in his obedience, and not eaten the forbidden fruit, the benefits of that obedience would doubtless have been imputed to us: But fince he did not perfift in it, but broke the covenant made with him, and us in him; who dares charge the righteous Judge of all the earth with injustice for imputing that to us alfo? I proceed, Secondly, To prove that we stand in need of being justified, on account of the sin of our lives.

That God, as he made man, has a right to demand his obedience, I suppose is a truth no one will deny: that he hath also given us both a natural and a written law, whereby we are to be judged, cannot be questioned by any one who believes believes St. Paul's epiftle to the Romans to be of divine authority: For in it we are told of a law written in the heart, and a law given by Miss; and that each of us hath broken these laws, is too evident from our fad and frequent experience. Accordingly the holy feriptures inform us that "there is no man which liveth and finneth not;" that "in many things we offend all;" that "if we fay we have no fin we deceive ourselves," and such like. And if we are thus offenders against God, it follows, that we stand in need of forgiveness for thus offending Him; unless we suppose God to enact laws, and at the same time not care whether they are obeyed or no; which is as abfurd as to suppose that a prince fhould establish laws for the proper government of his country, and yet let every violator of them come off with impunity. But God has not dealt fo foolifhly with his creatures: no, as he gave us a law, he demands our obedience to that law, and has obliged us univerfally and perfeveringly to obey it, under no lefs a penalty than incurring his curfe and eternal death for every breach of it: For thus speaks the scripture; " Curfed is he that continueth not in all things that are written in the law to do them;" as the fcripture also speaketh in another place, "The foul that finneth, it shall die." Now it has already been proved, that we have all of us finned; and therefore, unless some means can be found to fatisfy God's justice, we must perish eternally.

Let us then stand a while, and see in what a deplorable condition each of us comes into the world, and still continues, till we are translated into a state of grace. For surely nothing can well be supposed more deplorable, than to be born under the curse of God; to be charged with original guilt; and not only so, but to be convicted as actual breakers of God's law, the least breach of which justly deserves eternal damnation. Surely this can be but a melancholy prospect to view ourselves in, and must put us upon contriving some means whereby we may satisfy and appease our offended judge. But what must those means be? Shall we repent? Alas! there is not one word of repentance mentioned in the first covenant: "The day that thou eatest thereof, thou shalt smelly die." So that, if God be true, unless there be some way found out to fatisfy divine justice, we must perish; and there is no room left for us to expect a change of mind in God, though we should seek it with tears. Well then, if repentance will not do, shall we plead the law of works? Alas! "By the law shall no man living be justified: for by the law comes the knowledge of Sin." It is that which convicts and condemns, and therefore can by no means justify us; and "all our righteoufnesses (fays the prophet) are but as filthy rags." Wherewith then shall we come before the LORD, and bow down before the most high Goo? Shall we come before Him with calves of a year old, with thousands of rams, or ten thousands of rivers of oil? Alas! God has shewed thee, O man, that this will not avail: For he hath declared, "I will take no bullock out of thy house, nor he-goat out of thy fold: for all the beafts of the forests are mine, and so are the cattle upon a thousand hills." Will the LORD then be pleased to accept our first-born for our transgression, the fruit of our bodies for the fin of our fouls? Even this will not purchase our pardon: for he hath declared that "the children shall not bear the iniquities of their parents." Besides, they are finners, and therefore, being under the fame condemnation, equally stand in need of forgiveness with ourselves. They are impure, and will the LORD accept the blind and lame for facrifice? Shall fome angel then, or archangel, undertake to fulfill the covenant which we have broken, and make atonement for us? Alas! they are only creatures, though creatures of the highest order; and therefore are obliged to obey GoD as well as we; and after they have done all, must fay they have done no more than what was their duty to do. And supposing it was possible for them to die. vet how could the death of a finite creature fatisfy an infinitely offended justice? O wretched men that we are! Who shall deliver us? I thank God, our Lord Jesus Christ. Which naturally leads me to the Third thing proposed, which was to endeavour to prove, that there is no possibility of obtaining this justification, which we so much want, but by the all-perfect obedience and precious death of Jesus Christ, "But ye are justified in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ."

But this having been in some measure proved by what has been said under the foregoing head, wherein I have shewn that neither our repentance, righteousness, nor facrifice, no not the obedience and death of angels themselves, could possibly procure justification for us, nothing remains for me to do under this head, but to shew that Jesus Christ has procured it for us.

And here I shall still have recourse "to the law and to the testimony." For after all the most subtle disputations on either fide, nothing but the lively oracles of GoD can give us any fatisfaction in this momentous point: it being fuch an inconceivable mystery, that the eternal only-begotten Son of God should die for finful man, that we durst not have prefumed fo much as to have thought of it, had not GoD revealed it in his holy word. It is true, reason may shew us the wound, but revelation only can lead us to the means of our cure. And though the method God has been pleased to take to make us happy, may be to the infidel a flumblingblock, and to the wife opiniator and disputer of this world, foolifhness; yet wildom, that is, the dispensation of our redemption, will be justified, approved of, and submitted to, by all her truly wife and holy children, by every fincere and upright christian.

But to come more directly to the point before us. Two things, as was before observed, we wanted, in order to be at peace with God.

- 1. To be freed from the guilt of the fin of our nature.
- 2. From the fin of our lives.

And both these (thanks be to God for this unspeakable gift) are secured to believers by the obedience and death of Jesus Christ. For what says the scripture?

- 1. As to the first, it informs us, that " as by the disobedience of one man, (or by one transgression, namely, that of Adam) many were made finners; so by the obedience of one, JESUS CHRIST (therein including his passive as well as active obedience) many were made righteous." And again, 44 As by the disobedience of one man, judgment came upon all men unto condemnation;" or all men were condemned on having Adam's fin imputed to them; " fo by the obedience of one, that is, JESUS CHRIST, the free gift of parden and peace came upon all men, (all forts of men) unto justification of life." I fay all forts of men; for the apostle in this chapter is only drawing a parallel between the first and second Adam in this respect, that they acted both as representatives; and as the posterity of Adam had his fin imputed to them, so those for whom CHRIST died, and whose representative he is, fhall have his merits imputed to them also. Whoever run the parallel farther, in order to prove universal redemption (whatever arguments they may draw for the proof of it from other passages of scripture,) if they would draw one from this for that purpose, I think they stretch their line of interpretation beyond the limits of scripture.
- 2. Pardon for the fin of our lives was another thing, which we wanted to have secured to us, before we could be at peace with GoD.

And this the holy scriptures inform us, is abundantly done by the death of Jesus Christ. The evangelical prophet foretold that the promised Redeemer should be "wounded for our transgressions, and bruised for our iniquities; that the chastisement of our peace should be upon him; and that by his stripes we should be healed," Isiao liii. 6. The angels at his birth said, that he should "fave his people from their sins." And St. Paul declares, that "this is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Jesus Christ came into the world to save sinners." And here in the words of the text, "Such (or, as I observed before, these things) were some of you; but ye are washed, &c." and again, "Jesus Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth." And, to show us that none but Jesus Christ can do all this, the apostle St. Peter fays, "Neither is their falvation in any other; for there is no other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be faved, but the name of Jesus Christ.

How God will be pleased to deal with the Gentiles, who yet sit in darkness and under the shadow of death, and upon whom the sun of righteousness never yet arose, is not for us to enquire. "What have we to do to judge those that are without?" To God's mercy let us recommend them, and wait for a solution of this and every other difficult point, till the great day of accounts, when all God's dispensations, both of providence and grace, will be fully cleared up by methods to us, as yet unknown, because unrevealed. However, this we know, that the judge of all the earth will, most assuredly, do right.

But it is time for me to draw towards a conclusion.

I have now, brethren, by the bleffing of God, discoursed on the words of the text in the method I proposed. Many useful inferences might be drawn from what has been delivered; but as I have detained you, I fear, too long already, permit me only to make a reflection or two on what has been said, and I have done.

If then we are freely justified by the death and obedience of Jesus Christ, let us here pause a while; and as before we have reslected on the misery of a fallen, let us now turn aside and see the happiness of the believing, soul. But alas! how am I lost to think that God the Father, when we were in a state of enmity and rebellion against Him, should notwithstanding yearn in his bowels towards us his fallen, his apostate creatures: And because nothing but an infinite ransom could satisfy an infinitely offended justice, that should send his only and dear Son Jesus Christ (who is God, blessed for ever, and who had lain in his bosom from all eternity) to sulfill the covenant of works, and die a cursed, painful, ignominious death, for us and for our salvation! who can avoid crying out, at the consideration of this mystery of godliness. "Oh the depth of the riches of God's love" to us his wretched, miserable and undone creatures! "How unfearchable is his mercy, and his ways past finding out!" Now know we of a truth, O God, that thou hast loved us, "fince thou hast not with-held thy Son, thine only Son Jesus Christ," from thus doing and dying for us.

But as we admire the Father fending, let us likewise humbly and thankfully adore the Son coming, when sent to die for man. But O! what thoughts can conceive, what words express the infinite greatness of that unparalleled love, which engaged the Son of God to come down from the mansions of his Father's glory to obey and die for finful man! The Jews, when he only shed a tear at poor Lazarus's suneral, said, "Behold how he loved him." How much more justly then may we cry out, Behold how he loved us! When he not only suffilled the whole moral law, but did not spare to shed his own most precious blood for us.

And can any poor truly-convicted finner, after this, defpair of mercy? What, can they fee their Saviour hanging on a tree, with arms firetched out ready to embrace them, and yet, on their truly believing on him, doubt of finding acceptance with him? No, away with all fuch dishonourable, desponding thoughts. Look on his hands, bored with pins of iron; look on his fide, pierced with a cruel spear, to let loose the sluices of his blood, and open a fountain for fin, and for all uncleanness; and then despair of mercy if you can! No, only believe in Him, and then, though you have crucified him afresh, yet will he abundantly pardon you; "though your fins be as scarlet, yet shall they be as wool; though deeper than crimson, yet shall they be whiter than snow."

Which God of his infinite mercy grant, &c,
