SERMON XXXIX.

The Refurrection of Lazarus.

Јони хі. 43, 44.

And when he had thus spoken, he cried with a loud voice, Lazarus come forth. And he that was dead, came forth, bound hand and foot with grave-cloaths: and his face was bound about with a napkin. Jesus saith unto them, Loose him, and let him go.

THEN JESUS CHRIST, the eternal Word, was pleased to make all things by the word of his power, his last works were the best. When he looked back upon, and beheld the first products of his almighty power, he pronounced them "good;" but when that last, that lovely creature man, was formed, he pronounced them "very good." So, the fame Jesus, when he came to tabernacle among us, and to begin and carry on a new and fecond creation, though all his works were miracles of wonder, and manifested forth the giory of his eternal Godhead, yet the nearer he came to the end of his public ministrations, the greater and more noble did the miracles which he wrought appear. The refurrection of Lazarus, that is to be the subject of the following discourse, I think, is a sufficient proof of this. To an eye of fense, it seems to be one of the greatest, if not the very greatest miracle of all which our blessed Lord performed. When our Saviour bid John's disciples go and tell their Master what things they had feen and heard, he commands them to inform him, that by his divine power "the dead were raifed;" alluding no doubt to the Ruler's daughter, who was raifed immediately after her decease; and the Widow's son, who at the command of Jesus, role out of his coffin, as they were carrying his corpfe to the burial. These were pregnant proofs, G 4 proofs, that Jesus was indeed the Messiah that was to come into the world. But his raiting of Lazarus from the dead, after he had lain four days dead, and faw corruption, is still, if possible, a greater miracle; and consequently a stronger proof of his being the Anointed, the CHRIST of GOD. The evangelist John is very particular in giving us an account of this miracle; even fo particular, as to fpend a whole chapter in relating the circumstances which preceded, attended, and followed after it. And as he was undoubtedly directed herein by the all-wife, unerring Spirit of God, does it not point out unto us, that this miracle, with all its respective circumstances, cails for our particular and most ferious meditation? It appears to me in this light; and therefore, as the LORD shall be pleafed to affift, I shall go back to the beginning of this chapter, follow the evangelist step by step, and consider the particulars of this wonderous miracle, make some practical observations as I go along, and conclude with some suitable i. Aructions and exhortations, which will naturally arife from the body of the discourse.

The evangelist in the first verse, makes mention of the fickness of Lazarus. "Now, a certain man mas fick, named Lazarus of Bethany, the town of Mary, and her fifter Martha." Some think these fifters were very wealthy, so as to own good part of the town, or, as the original word feems to imply, the village.. But then it is probable the evangelist would have faid the town of Lazarus, estates usually descending, as with us, in the male line: it means therefore no more, than that Martha and Mary lived in Bethany. The Holy Ghost pointing out to us hereby, that nothing makes a town so worthy of a gracious soul's remark or esteem, as its having many of God's dear children for its inhabitants. Bethany, though a little place, is more famous because it was the town of Martha and Mary, than if Alexander had fought in it one of his greatest battles. Both these women loved Jesus in fincerity, and were as good as they were great. But Mary, though the younger fifter, seems to be the most eminent: for the evangelist in the second verse, speaks of her in a very distinguishing manner. " It was that Mary, (that never-to-be-forgotten Mary) which ancinted the LORD with ointment (expensive as it was) and wiped his feet, (after she had washed them with tears of love) with her hair," even the hair of her head. What notice is taken of this action! With what an enlogy, and in what a high fliain of commendation is it here spoken of? And such are the honours of all God's faints. Though all our good works are not recorded as Mary's are, yet God is not unmindful, that he should forget our works of faith, and labours which have proceeded of love. Every tear we fled, every figh we fetch, every alms we give, though it be only a cup of cold water, are all recorded in the Lamb's book of remembrance, and fhall be produced to our eternal honour, and rewarded with a reward of grace, though not of debt, at the great and terrible day of the LORD. "I was an hungered, and ye gave me meat, I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink, naked, and ye cloathed me, fick and in prison, and ye came unto me." What reason have we then to be " ftedfaft and unmoveable, always abounding in the of the Lord, forasmuch as we are assured, that our will not be in vain or forgotten by the LORD?" It vis that Mary that anointed the LORD with ointment, and ver this teet with her hair. And what follows? "Whose has ner Lazarus was fick." So that being related to CHRIST, er his disciples, will not exempt persons from fickness. In this life, time and chance happen to all, only with this matotal difference, those afflictions which harden the obstina ely impenitent, foften and purify the heart of a true believer. "My fon, therefore despise not the chastening of the LORD (on one hand), nor faint when thou art rebuked of him (on the other): for whom the LORD loveth he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth."

Jesus loved Lazarus, and yet Lazarus was fick. And what do his fifters do for him now he is fick? No doubt they applied to a physician, for it is tempting God to neglect making use of means for the recovery of our health, when it is impaired. But then they were not guilty of Asa's crime, "who sought to the physicians, but not to the Lord." No; they knew the most skilful prescriptions would be of no effect, unless attended with a blessing from Jesus the Great and Almighty Physician; and therefore his sisters sent unto him, probably at the beginning of their brother's illness. How unlike is their conduct, to that of the generality of people, especially ofpecially the rich and great! How unfashionable is it now-adays for perfons to fend to Jesus in behalf of their fick relations! It is so very uncustomary, that in some places, if a minister be sent for to a sick person, it is a sad symptom that the patient is almost past hopes of recovery. Thus did not Martha and her fifter Mary; they fent unto Jesus, though he was now beyond Fordan, (chap. x. 40.) where he abode, or shiefly refided, for some time. Hence it was that they knew where to fend to him. But what kind of message did they fend? A very humble and fuitable one. "LORD, Behold, he whom thou lovest is fick." They might have said, LORD, he who loveth thee is fick. But they knew, that our love was not worth mentioning, and that we love Jesus only because he first loved us. Besides, here is no prescribing to our LORD what he should do, or what means he should make use of. They do not so much as say, We pray thee to come, or only theak the word, and our fick brother shall be reflored. They fimply tell Just's the case, knowing it was sufficient barely to lay it before an infinitely compaffionate Redeemer, and leave it to him to act according to his own fovereign good-will and pleasure. "Lord, Behold he whom thou lovest is fick." Oh how fweet is it when the foul is brought to this! And with what a holy confidence may we pray to, and intercede with the holy Jesus, when we have reason to hope, that those we pray and intercede for, are lovers of, and are beloved of him! For his eyes are in a peculiar manner over the righteous, and his ears always open to their prayers. This was their meffage, and it foon reached Jesus Christ. And how does he receive it? We are told, veife 4. " When I sus heard that, (that he whom he loved was fick) He faid, this fickness is not unto death, but unto the glory of God, that the Son of God may be glorified thereby." To whom thefe words were spoken is not certain. In all probability, Jesus tpake them to the persons that delivered Martha's and Mary's message. And if so, it was no doubt a comfortable answer for the present, though it must afterwards puzzle them as well as the disciples how to explain it, when they found that Lazarus was actually dead. "This fickness is not unto death," not unto an abiding death, because he intended to raise him again, foon after his deceafe. It is like that expression of our LORD

LORD in St. Mark, " The damfel is not dead, but fleepeth;" which must not be understood in a literal, but metaphorical sense. And this and such-like instances, ought to teach us to weigh carefully our bleffed LORD's words, and to wait for an explication of them, by subsequent providences; otherwise we shall be in danger of misapplying them, and thereby bring our fouls into unspeakable bondage. "This sickness is not unto death, but unto the glory of God, that the Son of God may be glorified thereby." This is the end both of the afflictions and the deaths of God's people. By all that happens to them he will be glorified one way or another, and cause every thing to work together for their good. And who then but would be content to be fick, or willing to fubmit to death itself, if so be the Son of God may be glorified thereby? This answer, no doubt, proceeded from love. For we are told.

Verse 5. that "Jesus loved Martha and her fister, and Lazarus." Oh happy family! Three in it beloved of Jesus, with a peculiar, everlasting love. "Very often it so happens, (to use the words of the pious Bishop Beveridge) that there " is but one in a city, and two in a country of this stamp." But here are two fifters and a brother, all lovers of, and beloved by the glorious Jesus. What shall we say to these things? Why, that our Saviour's grace is free and fovereign, and he may do what he will with his own. They who are thus fo highly favoured as to have fo many converted in one house, ought to be doubly thankful! Such a bleffing have not all his faints. No; many, very many, go mourning over their perverse and graceless relations all their lives long; and find, even to their dying day, that their greatest foes are these of their own houshold. Surely these three relations lived a heaven upon earth. For what can they want, what could make them miserable, who are assured of Jesu's love? But furely if Jesus loves this dear little family, the next news one might think we should hear, would be, that he went immediately and healed Lazarus; or at least cured him at a diftance. But instead of that, we are told, verse 6. "When he had heard that he was fick, he abode two days still in the fame place where he was." A strange way this, in the eye of natural reason, of expressing love; but not so strange in the the eye of faith: for the LORD JESUS very often sheweth his love, by deferring to give immediate answers to our prayers. Hereby he tries our faith and patience, and exercises all our puffive graces. We have a proof of this in the Syrophenician woman, upon whom the bleffed Jesus frowned, and spake roughly to at first, only that he might afterwards turn unto her and fay, "O woman, great is thy faith." Let not those then who believe, make too much haste; or immediately in their hearts repine against the LORD, because he may not answer their requests, in their own time and way. God's time and way is best. And we shall find it to be so in the end. Martha and Mary experienced the truth of this, though undoubtedly our LORD's scenning delay, to come and heal their brother, cost them great searchings of heart. But will the LORD JESUS forget his dear Lazarus, whom his foul loveth? " Can a woman forget her fucking child?" Indeed fhe may; but the LORD never faileth those that fear him. Neither is he flack concerning his promife, as fome men count flackness: for his very delays are answers. The vision is for an appointed time; in the end it will fpeak and not

Though our LORD abode two days where he was, to try the faith of these sisters, yet after this, he said unto his disciples, verse 7. " Let us go into Judea again." With what a holy familiarity does Jesus converse with his dear children! Our Saviour feems to speak to his disciples, as though he was only their brother, and as it were upon a level with them; "Let us go into Judea again." How gently, according to what was predicted of him, does he lead those that are with young! JESUS very well knew the weakness of his disciples, and also what a dangerous place Judea was: how gradually therefore does he make known unto them, his defign of going thither! And how does he admit his disciples to expostulate with him on this account! " Mafter, fay they, the Jews of late fought to stone thee, and goest thou thither again?" They were amazed at our LORD's boldness, and were ready to call it prefumption; as we generally are prone to cenfure and condemn other zealous and enterprizing persons, as carrying matters too far; it may be for no other reason, if we examine the bottom of our hearts, but because they go before, and excel ourselves. The disciples, no doubt, thought that they spoke out of love to their LORD, and affuredly they did; but what a deal of felf-love was there mixed and blended with it? They feem much concerned for their Master, but they were more concerned for themselves. However Jesus overlooks their weakness, and mildly replies, verse 9, and 10. "Are there not twelve hours in the day? If any man walk in the day, he flumbleth not, because he seeth the light of the world; but if any man walk in the night, he stumbleth, because there is no light in him." As though our LORD had faid, My dear disciples, I thank you for your care and concern for me. Judea is a dangerous place, and what you fav of the treatment I met with from its inhabitants, is just and true: but be not afraid of going there upon my account. For as a man walketh fafely twelve hours of the day, because he walketh in the light: fo as long as the time appointed by my Father for my public administration lasts, I shall be as fecure from the hands of my enemies, as a man that walks in broad-day is fecure from falling. But as a man stumbleth if he walketh in the night, fo when the night of my paffion cometh, then, but not till then, shall I be given up into the hands of my spiteful roes. Oh what comfort have these words, by the bleffing of GoD, frequently brought to my foul! How may all CHRIST's ministers strongthen themselves with this confideration, that so long as God hath work for them to do, they are immortal! And if after our work is over, our LORD should call us to lay down our lives for the brethren, and to feal the truth of our doctrine with our blood. it would certainly be the highest honour that can be put upon us. "To you it is given not only to believe, but also to fuffer," fays the apostle to the Philippians.

"These things (the evangelist tells us, ver. 11.) said Jesus, and after that, (to satisfy them that he was not going into Judea without a proper call) he saith unto them, Our friend Lazarus sleepeth." Our friend. Amazing! For what is a striend? As one's own soul. How dear then, and near are true believers to the most adorable Jesus! "Our friend Lazarus." Still more amazing! Here is condescension, here is unparalleled samiliarity indeed. And what of him? "He sleepeth." A figurative way of expression. For what is death to the lovers of Jasus Christ, but a fleep, and a refreshing one too? Thus it is fad of Stephen when he died, that "he tell afleep." Christ indeed died, but believers only fleep. And "those that sleep in Jesus, (fays the scripture) will Gon bring with him." " Our friend Lazarus fleepeth." For though he be dead, I shall raise him from the grave so soon, that his dving will be only like a person's taking a short sleep. "Our friend Legarus fleepeth, but I go that I may awake him cut of fleep." By this time, one would imagine, our LORD's disciples should have understood him: But how unwilling are we to believe any thing that we do not like. "Then faid his difciples, LORD, if he fleep he shall do well." Oh fearful, and flow of heart to believe! How fain would they excuse themselves from going into Judea, for fear of a few flones! By this way of talking, how do they in effect impeach their bleffed Mafter's conduct, and under a pretence of preferving his person, sester, and as it were plead for their own (though perhaps undifferend) cowardice and unbelief? That charity, which hopeth and believeth all things for the best, teacheth us to judge thus favourably of them. For, "Howbeit Jesus spake of his death: they thought that he had spoken of taking rest in sleep." The great and compasfionate High pricft knowing and remembering they were but dust, throws a veil of love over their infirmity; and at length, verse 14. " Saith unto them plainly (for if we wait on Jesus, we shall know his will plainly, one way or another) Lazarus is dead." And even then, left they flould be swallowed up with overmuch forrow, he immediately adds, verfe 15. " And I am glad for your fakes that I was not there, to the intent ye may leliev," or have nore faith, or have that faith which you already possess increased and confirmed. A plain proof this, that all JESU's delays to answer prayer, are only to flrengthen our faith.

"Nevertheless, fays our LORD, let us go unto him." This was a fufficient hint, if they knew how to improve it, that he intended to do functhing extraordinary, though he would not tell them directly what he intended. For the LORD JESUS will keep those whom he loves, at his foot, and dependant on him. "Let us go unto him." He fill speaks as though they were his equals. Oh that Christians in general, Oh that ministers in particular, would learn of him their great exemplar, to condescend to men of low degree! Well, the secret is now out. Lesus has faid unto them plainly, Lazarus is dead. And what reception does this melancholy news meet with? With great condolance, especially from Thomas; for verse 16. "Then faid Thomas, who is called Didynus, unto his fellow disciples, let us also go and die with him;" i. e. according to some, with Lazarus, with whom, it may be, Thomas had contracted an intimate acquaintance. But granting it was to; shall I commend him for this passionate expression? I commend him not. Surely he spake unadvisedly with his lips; "Let us also go and die with him." As though there was no comfort henceforward to be expelled in the world, now his friend Lazarus was gone. This was a great fault, and yet a fault that many of God's children run into daily, by mourning for their deceased relations overmuch, like persons that have no hope. But this infirmity ought not to be indulged. For if our friends and dear relatives are dead, Jesus, that friend of finners, is not dead. He will be better to us than feven fons, and will abundantly supply the place of all creature-comforts. But I am more inclined to think that the word bim, refers to Jesus his dear Master; and if fo, he is fo far from being blamed, that he spake like a good foldier of Jesus Christ. Let us also go, that we may die with him. If our dear master will go into Yudaa, and hazard his precious life, let us not any longer make fuch frivolous excuses, but let us manfully accompany him; and if the Yews should not only be permitted to stone, but also to kill him, let us also go and die with him, we cannot die in a better cause. This was a speech worthy of a christian hero, and Thomas herein hath fet us an example, that we fhould follow his fleps, by exciting and provoking one another closely to adhere to the blessed Jasus, especially when his cause and interest is in any immediate danger. I his exhortation, it feems, had a proper effect. They all went, and as far as we know, chearfully accompanied their glorious Maffer.

How their thoughts were exercised on the road, we are not told. But I am apt to believe they were a little discouraged when they came to Bethany. For "When Jesus came, be found that Lazarus had lien in the grave for four days already." And what would it avail them, to come so many miles only to fee a dead man's torab? But how wifely were all things ordered by the bleffed JESUS, to manifest his glory in the most extraordinary manner, that not only his disciples might have their faith confirmed, but many also of the Jews might believe on him. This Bethany, it feems, verse 18. " was nigh unto Jerufalen, about fifteen furlongs off;" or about two miles; and Martha and Mary, being what we may call people of fashion, and devout likewise; many of the devout, and we may suppose many of the wealthy Jews came from the metropolis, as well as other adjacent places, verse 19. to Martha and Mary; not to pay an idle, trifling, but a ferious. profitable vifit, "to comfort them concerning their brother." This was kind and neighbourly. To weep with those that weep, and to visit the afficted in their diffresses, is one essential branch of true and undefiled religion. And O how tweet is it when we visit surviving friends, that we have reason to think that their departed relations died in the LORD! And we can therefore give them comfort concerning them: For " bleffed are the dead, that die in the LORD, even so faith the Spirit, for they rest from their labours." This and suchlike arguments, no doubt, these visitors made use of, to comfort Martha and Mary. And indeed they flood in much need of confolation. For we have reason to suppose, from our LORD's answer, "This fickness is not unto death, but the glory of GoD;" that they had entertained thoughts of the recovery of their brother. But who can tell what these two holy fouls must feel, when they found their brother did not recover, but was dead, laid out, and now flinking in the filent grave! What hard thoughts, without judging them, may we suppose they entertained concerning Jasus! Think ye not that they were ready to cry out in the language of the prophet, "Thou hast deceived us, and we are deceived?" But man's extremity is JESU's opportunity. In the multitude of the forrows that they had in their hearts, the news of CHRIST's coming refreshes their fouls, Somebody or another, commendably officious, privately informs Martha of it. "Who, as foon as fhe heard that Jesus was come (without making any apology to the company for her rudeness) went and-

and met him: But Mary fat still in the house." But why fo, Mary? I thought thou hadft been most forward to attend on Jesus, and thy fifter Martha more prone to be cumbered about the many things of this life. Why firtest thou fill? It may be the news was brought only privately to Afa: tha (for it is plain from verse 31st, that the Fews who were in the house knew not of it;) and Alartha knowing how our Lord had chid her once, was refolved he should have no reason on the fame account to chide her any more; therefore when the news was brought, she would not so much as stay to inform her fister, but went out to see whether it were true or not, and if fo, as the eldeft fifter, the would invite the bleffed Jesus in. How happy is it, when CHRIST's reproofs for past neglects, excite our future zeal to come out and meet him! Such reproofs are an excellent oil. Or, it may be, the news reached Mary's ears, as well as Martha's, but being overcome with forrow, she thought it too good news to be true, and therefore fat still in the house. O how careful ought believers to be, to cherish and maintain, even in the midst of tribulation, a holy confidence and joy in GoD! For the joy of the LORD is a believer's flrength. Whereas giving way to melancholy and unbelief, raifes gloom and vapours in the mind, clouds the understanding, clogs us in the way of duty, and gives the enemy, who loves to fish in troubled waters, a very great advantage over us.

Mary, perhaps, through the prevalence of this, and being also naturally of a sedentary disposition, " sat still in the house," while her fister Martha got the start of her, and went out to meet JESUS. And how does the accost him? Why, in a language bespeaking the diffress of a burdened and disordered mind. For she said unto Jesus, verse 21, "LORD, if thou hadst been here, my brother had not died." Here is a mixture of faith and unbelief. Faith made her fay, "LORD, if thou hadst been here, my brother had not died." belief made her confine CHRIST's power to his bodily presence. Besides, here was a tacit accusation of the blessed Jesus of unkindness, for not coming when they fent unto him the message, "LORD, he whom thou lovest is sick." Once she charged Jesus with want of care; "Lord, carest thou not, that my fifter hath left me to ferve alone?" Now the taxes Vol. VI.

han with want of kindness. "If thou hadft been here;" as much as to fay, if thou hadfl been fo kind as to have come when we fent for thee, " my brother had not died;" and by taying thus, the does as it were lay her brother's death to IFSUS CHRIST. O how apt are even these whom Jesus loves in a peculiar manner, to charge bim foolifhly! How often does the enmity of our desperately wicked hearts rife against CHRIST, when we are under the afflicting hand of his previdence! Are not the very best of us frequently tempted, in fuch circumstances, to fay within ourselves at least, Why does Gon thus cruelly deal with us? Why did not he keep off this floke, feeing it was in his power to have prevented it? How should we be ashamed and confounded before him upon this account? How should we pray and labour to be delivered from this remaining enmity of the heart, and long for that time, when mortality fhall be fwallowed up of life, and we shall never feel one single rising of heart, against a good and gracious, and all-wife and glorious Redeemer, any more? However, to do Martha justice, she pretty well recovers herfelf, verse 22. "But I know, that even now, whatfoever thou wilt ask of God, God will give it to thee." Whether these words imply an actual belief of our Lord's divinity, is not certain. To me they do; because we shall prefently find, that she did believe our LORD was the Son of God, and the Messiah which was to come into the world. Therefore when she said, she knew that whatsoever he asked et Gon, Gon would give it to him, she may be understood a referring to God the Father, under whom the LORD JESUS aced as Mediator, though equal to him in respect to his eternal glory and godhead. This mystery we may well suppose her acquainted with, because Jesus had been frequently preaching at her house, and consequently, had opened that my flery unto her. O what a bleffed thing must it be to have such a Mediator! fuch an high-priest and intercessor at the Father's right-hand, that whatever he asks the Father in our behalf, he will give unto us! Jesus takes this kindly at Abe that's hand, and passes over her infirmity. For if the LORD was exalt to mark every thing that we fay or do amifs, alas! who could chide? He only calmly rays unto her, verse 23. " In; brother thall rife again."

Glad

Glad tidings these of great joy. This should comfort us concerning our deceased, pious relations, that ere long they shall rife again, and soul and body be for ever with the LORD. Howbeit Issus spake here of an immediate resurrection, though he did not speak plainly: For CHRIST loves to exercife the faith and patience of his disciples, and frequently leaves them to find out his meaning by degrees. It is best for us in our present state, that it should be so. In heaven it will be otherwise. "Thy brother, (fays Christ to Martha) shall rife again." She might immediately have replied, When, LORD? But she setches a circuit as it were, and labours to find out the mind of Jesus by degrees. "I know, fays fhe, that he shall rife again at the resurrection of the last day." These words feem to imply, that she had some distant thought of our LORD's defign to raife her brother now, and that she spoke thus only to draw our Saviour to speak, and tell her plainly whether he meant to do fo or not. Those who are acquainted with Jesus, are taught an holy art by the bleffed Spirit, in dealing with their bleffed master. "I know, fays the, he shall rife again at the resurrection of the last day," (a notable proof this, by the way, that the pious Yews believed the refurrection of the body). It is just the same as though fhe had faid, LORD, dost thou mean that my brother shall rife again before that time? Our Saviour wisely keeps off from giving her a direct answer, but chuses rather to preach to her heart. " Jesus faid unto her, I am the refurrection and the life: He that believeth in me, though be were dead, yet shall he live." On this Martha's faith, if in exercise, might take hold. O glorious words! How encouraging to you poor finners lying in your blood! Though you are dead in trespasses and fine, and might justly be condemned to die the second death, yet if you believe on the LORD JESUS you shall live. He adds, " And whosoever believeth in me shall never die;" never die as to their fouls, never die eternally, and consequently never finally fail away from God. This is an encouraging foul-comforting declaration for you, O believers, who are thus kept, as it were, in a garrifon, by the mighty power of God, through faith, unto falvation ! "Believest thou this?" fays CHRIST to Martha, verse 26. What avail all the many great and precious promifes of the gospel, unless they are applied and brought home in particular to each of our

fouls? The word does not profit unless it is mixed with faith. We therefore do well, when we are reading CHRIST's words, to put this question to ourselves; O my soul, believest thou this? And well would it be for us, if upon putting this queftion to ourselves, we could with the same holy confidence, and in the fame delightful frame, fay with Martha, verse 27. "Yea, LORD: I believe that thou art the CHRIST, the Son of God, which should come into the world." This I think is a direct confession of our LORD's divinity. How full was her heart when fhe fpoke these words! I am perfuaded it burnt within her. What a divine warmth had she contracted by talking with JESUS! How does she long that her fister might share in her holy joy! For when she had so said, verse 28. " fhe went away;" full of love, no doubt, and called Mary her fifter, as all will labour to call their near relations, who have felt the LORD JESUS to be the refurrection and the life themselves. But Martha took care, in the midst of her zeal (as we should always do) to behave with prudence; and therefore " fhe called her fifter fecretly, faying, The mafter is come, and calleth for thee." The master is come. She need fay no more; Mary knew very well whom she meant. For holy fouls eafily understand one another when talking of their master Jesus. The divine Herbert used to delight (when speaking of Jesus) to say, " My Master;" perhaps he learned it of Martha, who faid here, "The Mafter is come, and calleth for thee." But what is this thou fayest, Martha? The Master is come, and calleth for thee? Surely a woman of thy exalted piety will not tell a deliberate lie, and in order to induce thy fifter to come to Jesus, acquaint her that Jesus called her, when indeed he did not. Thou needest not put thyfelf to fuch an expence, or do fo much evil, that good may come of it. Only mention Jesus to Mary, and let her know for a certainty that the Master is indeed come, and I am perfuaded she will sit no longer. Martha no doubt knew, and therefore I cannot judge her as fome do, as though in her haste she said what was not true. For Jesus might bid her to call her fifter, though it be not directly mentioned in this chapter. And it is very probable, that our LORD did enquire after Mary, because she used to take such great delight in fitting at his feet, and hearing the gracious words that proceeded out of his mouth. "The Master is come (saith Martha to her fifter) and calleth for thee." And fo fay I to all poor finners. Jesus, your Lord and Mafter, your Prince and Sasiour, is come, come unto this lower world, and is come this day in his word, and by me, who am lefs than the leaft of all his fervants, and calleth for you. O that he may also come in the demonstration of the Spirit, and by his mighty power bow your stubborn hearts and wills to obey the call, as holy Mary did.

Martha

For we are told, verse 29. "When she heard that, she role quickly, and came to Jesus." Sinners, when will you do fo? Or why do you not do fo? How know you whether JESUS will call for you any more, before he calls you by death to judgment? Linger, O linger no longer. Fly, fly for your lives. Affice quickly, and with Mary come to JESUS. She obeyed the call fo very speedily, that her haste was taken notice of by her vifitors. "The Yerus then, who were with her in the house, and comforted her, when they faw Mary that she rose up hastily (without any ceremony at all) and went out, followed her, faying, she goeth to the grave, to weep there." How wifely does our LORD permit and order all this, to bring the Jews out to behold the wonderful miracle that he was about to perform! Little did Mary and the Tews think for what end they were thus providentially led out. But when JESUS hath work to be done, he will bring fouls to the place where he intends to call them, in spite of men or devils. But how does Mary behave when she comes to Jesus? We may be affered, not without great humility. No wonder then we are told, verfe 32, that " when the faw him, the immediately fell down at his feet (a place Mary had been used to, and in an agony of grief, says, as her fister had done before her) LORD, if thou hadst been here, my brother had not died." Poor Mary! Her concern was great indeed. Though the was a holy woman, the could not well bear the loss of her brother. She knew very well, that the world would miss him, and no doubt he had been a kind and tender brother to her. But I am afraid fhe was finfully overcome with overmuch forrow. However, had we been there, the fight must have affected us. It feems to have affected the vifitors, especially the bleffed Jasus. He, instead of blaming her, for her tacitly accufing him of unkindness, and for not coming to her brother's relief, pities and fympa-H 3 thizes thizes both with Mary and her weeping friends! "When lesus faw her weep, and the Jews also weeping, he groaned in his Spirit, and was troubled." Troubled: Not with any finful perturbation we may be affured: nothing of that nature could possibly be in his finless soul. And, therefore, fome have judiciously enough compared the trouble our LORD now felt, to some chrystal water shaken in a glass or bottle; you may shake it, but there will be no sediment: it will be chrystal water still. "He groaned in his spirit." I do not fee why this may not be understood of his praying in the spirit, which maketh intercession for the saints, with anantois orevay post, " groanings that cannot be uttered." Methinks I see the immaculate Lamb of God, secretly, but powerfully agonizing with his Father; his heart is big with sympathy! At length, out of the fulness of it, he faid, ver. 34. "Where have ve laid him? They (I suppose Mary and Martha) say unto him, LORD, come and fee." He came, he faw, "He wept," ver. 35. It is put in a verse by itself, that we might pause a while, and ask, why Jesus wept?

He wept, to shew us, that it was no sin to shed a tear of love and refignation at the grave of a deceased friend; he wept, to see what havock fin had made in the world, and how it had reduced man, who was originally little lower than the angels, (by making him subject to death) to a level with the beafts that perish: but above all, he wept at the forefight of the people's unbelief; he wept, to think how many then prefent, would not only not believe on, but would be hardened, and have their prejudices increased more and more against him, though he should raise Lazarus from the dead before their eyes. Well then may ministers be excused, who, whilst they are preaching, now and then drop a few tears, at the confideration of their fermons being, through the perverfenels and unbelief of many of their audience, a favour of death unto death, inflead of a favour of life unto life. Upon a like occafion Jesus wept. What an affecting fight was here! Let us for a while suppose ourselves placed amidst these holy mourners; let us imagine that we see the sepulchre just before us, and the Years, and Mary, and the bleffed Jesus weeping round it. Surely, the most obdurate of us all must drop a tear, or at least be affected with the fight; we find that it affected those who were really by-standers: for then said the Jews, ver. 36. "Behold, how he loved him." And did they fay, Behold, how he loved him, when Jesus only shed a few tears over the grave of his departed Lazarus? Come then, O sinners, and view Christ dying and pouring out his precious heart's blood for you upon an accurfed tree, and then surely you must needs cry out, Behold, how he loved us!

But alas, though all were affected, yet, it feems, all were not well affected at feeing Jesus weep! For we are told, ver. 37. that some of them said, " Could not this man, who opened the eyes of the blind, have caused that even this man fhould not have died?" One would imagine, that Satan himfelf could scarce have uttered a more perverse speech: every word is full of spite and rancour. Could not this man, this fellow, this deceiver, who pretends to fay, that he opened the eyes of the blind, have caused that this man, whom he feems to love so, should not have died? Is not this a sufficient proof that he is a cheat? Have we catched him at last? Is it likely that he really helped others, when he could not help his own friend? - O how patient ought the fervants of our LORD to be! And how may they expect to be cenfured, and have their good deeds questioned, and lessened, when their blessed Master has been thus treated before them! However, Tesus will do good, notwithstanding all these slights put upon him; and therefore, again groaning in himself, " he cometh to the grave; it was a cave, (or vault, as is customary in great families) and a stone lay upon it; Jesus said, ver. 39. Take ye away the stone." How gradually does our LORD proceed, in order to engage the people's attention the more! Methinks I see them all eye, all ear, and eagerly waiting to fee the iffue of this affair. But Martha now returning with the rest of the company, seems to have lost that good frame which she was in when she went to call her fister; " She faith unto him, (ver. 39.) LORD, by this time he stinketh: for he hath been either dead or buried four days." O the difmal effects of carnal reasoning! How naturally do we fall into doubts and fears, when we have not our eye fimply directed to the bleffed Jesus! Martha, instead of looking up to him, looks down into the grave, and poring upon her brother's stinking corpse, falls into a fit of unbelief: " By this time he stinketh;" and, therefore, a fight of him will only be offenfive. Perhaps the might think our LORD only wanted to take a view of her brother Lazarus; Jesus, therefore, to give her yet a further hint, that he intended to do fomething extraordinary, faith unto her, ver. 40. "Said I not unto thee, that if thou wouldst believe, thou shouldst see the glory of God?" Our Lord speaks here with some degree of warmth: for nothing displeases him more than the unbelief of his own disciples. "Said I not unto thee, if thou wouldst believe, thou shouldst see the glory of God?" When Christ sirst spoke these words unto her, we are not told; it might be, this was part of their conversation upon another occasion some time before: however, he checks her openly for her unbelief now: for these whom Jesus loves, must expect to be rebuked sharply by him, whenever they dishonour him by unbelief. The reproof is taken.

Without making any more objections, "They took away the stone from the place where the dead was laid." And now behold with what folemnity the holy Jesus prepares himfelf to execute his gracious defign! "And Jesus lift up his eyes, and faid, Father, I thank thee that thou haft heard me; and I knew that thou hearest me always: but because of the people which fland by, I faid it, that they may believe that thou haft fent me." Who can express with what fervor and intenseness of spirit, our glorious High-priest uttered these words! They are a thankfgiving arifing from an affurance that his Father had heard him: for CHRIST, as Mediator, was inferior to the Father. "I knew that thou hearest me always (and so may every believer in his degree say too); but because of the people which stand by, I said it."-Said what? We do not hear that Jesus faid any thing by way of prayer before; and that is true, if we mean vocally, but mentally he did fay fomething, even when he groaned in the spirit once and again, and was troubled. There is a way of praying, even when we do not, and cannot fpeak. "Why cryest thou," faid God to Moses; though we do not hear that he Spoke one fingle word: but he cried in his heart. And I observe this for the comfort of some weak, but real christians, who think they never pray, unless they can have a great flow of words; but this is a great mistake: for we often pray best, when we can speak least. There are times when the heart is too big to speak: and the spirit itself maketh intercession for the faints, and that too according to the will of God, with greanings groanings that cannot be uttered. Such was Hannah's prayer for a fon, "She spake not, only her lips moved:" and such was our LORD's way of praying at this time. And perhaps the soul is never in a better frame, than when in a holy stillness, and unspeakable serenity, it can put itself as a blank in Jesus's hand, for him to stamp on it just what he pleases.

And now the hour of our Saviour's performing this long-expected miracle, is come. Ver. 43. " When he thus had spoken, he cried with a loud voice, Lazarus, come forth." With the word there went an irrefistible power: he spake, and it was done: he cried, and behold, "He that was dead came forth bound hand and foot with grave cloaths; and his face was bound about with a napkin." What a fight was here! Methinks I fee furprize fit upon each spectator's face: as the body rifes, their wonder rifes too. See how they gaze! See how their looks bespeak the language of astonished hearts; and all with a kind of filent, but expressive oratory, ready to fay, What manner of man is this? Surely this is the Messah that was to come into the world. How did the hearts of Martha and Mary, as we may very well suppose, leap for joy! How were they ashamed of themselves, for charging Jesus foolifhly, and taxing him with unkindness, for not coming to prevent their brother's dying! It is true, CHRIST fuffered him to die, but behold he is now alive again! JESUS never denies us one thing, but he intends to give us something better in the stead of it. Think you not that Martha and Mary were now the most officious to obey our blessed LORD's command, "Loofe him, and let him go?" That same power that raised Lazarus from the dead, might have also taken the grave-cloaths from him: but JESUS CHRIST never did, and never will work a needless miracle. Others could unloose his grave-cloaths, but Jesus alone could unloose the bands of death.

And now, perhaps, some may be ready to ask, What news hath Lazarus brought from the other world! But stop, O man, thy vain curiosity! It is forbidden, and therefore useless knowledge. The scriptures are silent concerning it. Why should we desire to be wise above what is written? It becomes us rather to be wholly employed in adoring the gracious hand of that mighty Redeemer who raised him from the dead, and to see (now we have heard the history) what improvement we can make of such a remarkable and instructive transaction.

Would to God that my preaching upon the refurrection of Lazarus to-day, may have the same blessed effects upon you, as the fight of it had upon some of the standers-by: For we are told, ver. 45. " Then many of the Jews who came to Mary, and had feen the things which Jesus did, believed on him." A profitable visit this! The best, no doubt, that they ever paid in their lives. And this was in answer to our Saviour's prayer, "But because of the people who stand by, I faid it, that they may believe, that thou hast sent me." One would imagine, that all who saw this miracle, were induced thereby, really to believe on him: But alas! I could almost fav, that I can tell you of a greater miracle than raising Lazarus from the dead. And what is that? Why, that some of these very persons who were on the spot, inflead of believing on him, " went their way to the Pharifees, and told them what IESUS had done." ver. 46. It was fo far from convincing them, that it only excited their envy, flirred up the whole hell of their felf-righteous hearts, and made them, from that day forward, "take counsel together," to execute what they had long before defigned, to put the innocent Jesus to death. See how busy they are, ver. 47. "Then gathered the chief priefts and the Pharifees a council, and faid, What do we? For this man docth many miracles." Envy itself, it feems, could not deny that. And need they fay then, " What do we," or what should we do? Believe in, to be sure, and fubmit to him; take up the cross, and follow him. No; on the contrary, fay they, ver. 48. " If we let him thus alone, (which they would not have done fo long, had not Gop put a hook in the Leviathan's jaws) all men will believe on him." And suppose they did? Then all men would be bleffed indeed, and have a title to true happiness. No, say they, " then the Romans shall come and take away both our place and nation." But were not the Romans come already? Were they not at this time tributaries to Cafar? But they were afraid of the church as well as the state: " They will come and take away our place," our place of worship: and confequently, they look upon JESUS CHRIST and his proceedings, and adherents, as dangerous both to church and state.

This

This hath been always the method of Pharifees and high-priefts, when they have been taking counfel against the Lord Jesus, and his dear anointed ones. But they need not have been assaid on this account: for our Savious's kingdom neither was, nor is of this world; and the only way to have preserved their place and nation, was to have countenanced, and as much as in them lay, caused all to believe on Jesus. How miserably were they out in their politics! The death of Jesus, which they thought would save, was the grand cause of the utter destruction both of their place and nation: And so will all politics formed against Christ and his gospel end at last in the destruction of those who contrived them.

O the desperate wickedness and treachery of man's deceitful heart! Where are the scribes, where are the infidels, where are the letter-learned disputers of this world, who are daily calling for a repetition of miracles, in order to confirm and evidence the truth of the christian religion? Surely if they believe not Moses and the prophets, neither would they believe, though one rose from the dead. Here was one raised from the dead before many witnesses, and yet all those witnesses did by no means believe on Jesus. For divine faith is not wrought in the heart by moral persuasion (though moral suasion is very often made use of as a means to convey it); faith is the peculiar gift of God: no one can come to Jesus unless the Father draw him: and, therefore, that I may draw near the close of this discourse, let me shut up all with a word of exhortation.

Come, ye dead, Christless, unconverted sinners, come and see the place where they laid the body of the deceased Lazarus; behold him laid out, bound hand and foot with grave-cloaths, locked up and stinking in a dark cave, with a great stone placed on the top of it! View him again and again; go nearer to him; be not assaid; smell him, ah! how he stinketh. Stop there now, pause a while; and whilst thou art gazing upon the corpse of Lazarus, give me leave to tell thee with great plainness, but greater love, that this dead, bound, entombed, sinking carcase, is but a faint representation of thy poor soul in its natural state: for, whether thou believest it or not, thy spirit which thou bearest about with thee, sepulched in session and as struly dead in trespasses and fins, as the body of Lazarus was in the cave. Was he bound hand and foot with grave-cloaths? So art thou bound hand and foot with thy corruptions: and as a stone was laid on the fepulchre, fo is there a stone of unbelief upon thy stupid heart. Perhaps thou hast lain in this state, not only four days, but many years, slinking in Gon's nostrils. And, what is still more affecting, thou art as unable to raise thyself out of this loathsome, dead state, to a life of righteousness and true holinels, as ever Lazarus was to raife himself from the cave in which he lay fo long. Thou mayest try the power of thy own boafted free-will, and the force and energy of moral perfuation and rational arguments (which, without all doubt, have their proper place in religion); but all thy efforts, exerted with never fo much vigour, will prove quite fruitless and abortive, till that fame Jesus, who faid, " Take away the stone," and cried, " Lazerus, come forth," comes by his mighty power, removes the stone of unbelief, speaks life to thy dead foul, loofes thee from the fetters of thy fins and corruptions, and by the influences of his bleffed Spirit, enables thee to arife, and to walk in the way of his holy commandments. And O that he would now rend the heavens, and come down amongst you! O that there may be a stirring among the dry bones this day! O that whilst I am speaking, and saying, "Dead finners, come forth," a power, an almighty power might accompany the word, and cause you to emerge into new life!

If the LORD should vouchfase me such a mercy, and but one single soul in this great congregation, should arise and shake himself from the dust of his natural state; according to the present frame of my heart, I should not care if preaching this sermon here in the fields, was an occasion of hastening my death, as raising Lazarus hastened the death of my blessed Masser. For methinks death, in some respects, is more tolerable, than to see poor sinners day by day lying sepulchred, dead and stinking in sin. O that you saw how loathsome you are in the sight of God, whilst you continue in your natural state! I believe you would not so contentedly hug your chains, and resule to be set at liberty.

Methinks I see some of you affected at this part of my difcourse. What say you? Are there not some ready to complain, alas! we have fome relations prefent, who are fo notoriously wicked, that they not only hug their chains, but make a mock of fin, and stink not only in the fight of GoD. but man. Dear fouls! you are ready to urge this, as a reafon why Jesus will not raise them; and think it hard, perhaps, that Jesus does not come, in answer to your repeated groans and prayers, to convert and fave them. But what Jesus faid unto Martha, I fay unto you, " Believe, and you shall see the glory of God." Think it not a thing incredible, that God should raise their dead souls. Think not hard of Jesus for delaying an answer to your prayers: affure yourfelves he heareth you always. And who knows, but this day JESUS may visit tome of your dear relations hearts, upon whose account you have travelled in birth till CHRIST be formed in them? You have already sympathized with Martha and Mary, in their doubts and fears; who knows but you may also be partakers of that joy which their souls experienced, when they received their risen brother into their longing arms.

O Christless souls, you do not know what grief your continuance in sin occasions to your godly relations! You do not know how you grieve the heart of Jesus. I beseech you give him no fresh cause to weep over you upon account of your unbelief: let him not again groan in his spirit and be troubled. Behold how he has loved you, even so as to lay down his life for you. What could he do more? I pray you, therefore, dead sinners, come forth; arise and sup with Jesus. This was an honour conferred on Lazarus, and the same honour awaits you: Not that you shall sit down with him perfonally in this life, as Lazarus did; but you shall sit down with him at the table of his ordinances, especially at the table of the Lord's-supper, and ere long sit down with him in the kingdom of heaven.

Happy, thrice happy ye, who are already raised from spiritual death, and have an earnest of an infinitely better and more glorious resurrection in your hearts. You know a little, how delightful it must have been to Martha and Mary and Lazarus, to sit down with the blessed Jesus here below; but how

how infinitely more delightful will it be, to fit down, not only with Mary and Martha, but with Abralam, Isaac, and Jacob, and all your other dear brethren and fisters, in the kingdom of heaven. Do you not long for that time, when Jesus shall say unto you, "Come up hither?" Well! blessed be God, yet a little while, and that same Jesus, who cried with a loud voice, "Lazarus, come forth;" shall with the same voice, and with the same power, speak unto all that are in their graves, and they shall come forth. That all who hear me this day may be then enabled to list up their heads and rejoice, that the day of their compleat redemption is indeed fully come, may Jesus Christ grant, for his infinite mercy's sake. Amen, and Amen.
